SUBJECTS FROM HIS OWN DESIGNS.

The Bust of Michelangelo.
Susannah and the Elders.
St. Augustine in the midst of his Disciples.
St. Bernard.
Christ appearing to St. Theresa and St. John.
The Bust of Monsieur, crowned by Victory.
Apollo and Cupid; a medallion.
Apollo and Daphne; the same.
Mercury in the Air.
Diana and Calisto.

SUBJECTS AFTER THE CARRACCI.

St. John in the Wilderness; after Annibale Carracci.
Christ with the Samaritan Woman; after the same.
Two Landscapes, with St. Francis.

CORNEILLE, MICHEL, a French painter, was born at Orleans in 1601. He was a scholar of Simon Vouet, in whose style he painted several works for the churches, and was one of the twelve original members of the Royal Academy at Paris. His most celebrated work, 'St. Paul and St. Barnabas at Lystra,' was painted for the cathedral of Notre-Dame, and has been engraved by Poilly. His plates were signed with the letters M. C. He died in Paris in 1664. Corneille etched several subjects after Raphael, the Carracci, and others; among which are the following:

The Holy Family, with St. Elizabeth; after Raphael.
The Murder of the Innocents; after the same.

Christ appearing to Mary Magdalene; after the same.
The Virgin suckling the Infant Jesus; after L. Carracci.

CORNEILLE, MICHEL, (called CORNEILLE L'AÎNÉ,) a painter, was born in Paris in 1642. He was the son of Michel Corneille of Orleans, and studied under his father and under Le Brun and Mignard. He gained the pension at the Academy, which enabled him to visit Italy; but once there, he soon freed himself from the tie in order to study the antique in his own way. The works of the Carracci became eventually the model of his choice. On his return to France he became a member of the Academy in 1663, painting for his reception a picture of 'Our Lord's appearance to St. Peter after his Resurrection,' and was subsequently employed by the King at Versailles, Meudon, and Fontainebleau. He decorated with frescoes the cupola of the chapel of St. Gregory the Great in the Invalides, and painted the 'Calling of St. Peter and St. Andrew' for the cathedral of Notre-Dame. He also painted a 'Holy Family' for the Church of the Feuillants, a 'Massacre of the Innocents' for that of the Innocents, and a 'St. Francis' for the Capuchin church of the quarter of the Temple. Towards the close of his life he had apartments at the Gobelins manufactory, and is occasionally spoken of as 'Corneille des Gobelins.' The Louvre has by him a 'Repose in Egypt,' and the Bordeaux Museum a 'Baptism of Constantine.' He drew correctly, and his works are remarkable for a careful management of the half-lights: his heads are not devoid of a certain nobility. Simonneau, Tardieu, Sarabat, Jean Mariette, and Audran have engraved after him. He himself etched and engraved with a broad, free point upwards of a hundred plates, which show considerable taste. He died at the Gobelins in Paris in 1708. The following are his principal works:

SUBJECTS FROM HIS OWN DESIGNS.

The Deity appearing to Abraham.
Abraham journeying with Lot.
Abraham discomfiting the Army of the confederate Kings.
Abraham setting out with his son Isaac for the Sacrifice.

[These four plates having come into the possession of a printseller at Rome, named Rossi, he put the name of Raphael on them; they are now scarce.]

Samson and Delilah.
The Conception of the Virgin.
The Annunciation; in two plates.
The Nativity.
The Infant Jesus in the Manger.
The Flight into Egypt.
The Calling of St. Peter and St. Paul to the Apostleship.
St. Francis kneeling before the Cross.
Christ and the Virgin appearing to St. Francis.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Marriage of St. Catharine; after L. Carracci.
The Virgin and Infant Jesus in a Landscape; after Agostino Carracci.
Jacob wrestling with the Angel, in a Landscape; after Annibale Carracci.
St. John preaching in the Desert; after the same.
St. Jerome in a Landscape; after the same.
St. Francis receiving the Stigmata; after the same.
Silenus, a Satyr, and a Faun, in a Landscape; after the same.
Abraham sending away Hagar; after the same.

CORNELIS, LAMBERT, was a Dutch engraver of the latter part of the 16th century, who was chiefly employed for the booksellers in engraving portraits. He resided for a long time in France. Among others, we have by him the portrait of Tycho Brahe, the astronomer, and one of his best works is the portrait of Queen Anna of Poland, 1596.

CORNELISZ, (or CORNELISSEN,) CORNELIS, was born at Haarlem in 1562. He was at first a scholar of Pieter Pietersz, son of Pieter Ariaensz, but betook himself to France when only seventeen years of age. On being driven back by the plague he made his way to Antwerp, and worked under Frans Porbus and Gillis Congnet. He afterwards returned to Haarlem, and there, in conjunction with C. van Mander, founded an Academy, from which many excellent artists were sent out. He was Regent of the Old Men's Hospital from 1614 to 1619, and died at Haarlem in 1637. His paintings comprised allegorical, mythological, and historical scenes, together with portraits and flower-pieces. They are distinguished especially by careful drawings from the nude, and accurate foreshortening of the figures. One of his paintings, 'The Rest upon the Flight into Egypt,' he afterwards engraved; and Kilian, Goltzius, Jan Müller, and others, have reproduced many of his works. Cornelis Bega was his grandson. The following paintings by him are in public galleries:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Massacre of the Innocents. 1590.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Bathsheba. 1617.
		An Entertainment. 1618.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	The Deluge. 1592.
"	"	The Golden Age. (His chef-d'œuvre.) 1615.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Venus, Apollo, and Ceres.
"	"	An Old Man showing a full Purse to a Girl.
Hague.	Museum.	Massacre of the Innocents. 1591.
"	"	The Marriage of Peleus and Thetis.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Baptism of Christ.
		Cimon and Iphigenia.
Stockholm.	Gallery.	The Judgment of Paris.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	The Dragon devouring the Men of Cadmus.

CORNELISZ, (or CORNELISSEN,) JACOB, who was born at Oost-Zaen in North Holland about 1475-1480, was living at Amsterdam in the first quarter of the 16th century, and distinguished himself as a painter and a designer on wood. He was still painting in 1553, and died in Amsterdam at an advanced age. He was one of the masters of Jan Schoorl. Though he is sometimes defective in the nude, his compositions are spirited, his heads expressive, and there is a great variety in his figures. The greater part of his numerous pictures for the churches of Holland perished during the Reformation. Of his paintings there are preserved:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Man with a long white beard.
Cassel.	Gallery.	The Triumph of Religion. 1523. (Falsely ascribed to Jan De Mabuse.)
Hague.	Museum.	Herodias with the Head of St. John the Baptist. 1524.
London.	Nat. Gal.	Portraits of a Dutch Lady and Gentleman.
Munich.	Gallery.	A Crucifixion.

To this artist belong the wood-cuts which were during the last century ascribed to a certain Jan Werner, or Jan Walther van Assen, but which are assigned to Jacob Cornelisz in an edition of the 'Historia Christi patientis et morientis,' dated 1651. His wood-cuts, which were as much admired as the copper-plates of his contemporary, Lucas van Leyden, are, however, so numerous as to preclude the idea that he could have done more than make the designs. Among the best are:

12 plates of the Passion. 1517.

6 " of the Life of Christ.

10 " of Counts and Countesses of Holland on Horseback.

Jesus disputing with the Doctors.

St. Hubert.

His son, DIRK JACOBZ, was a good portrait painter, who died in 1567.

CORNELISZ, (or CORNELISSEN,) LUCAS, called KOCH ('the Cook'), was a Dutch painter, born at Leyden in 1493. He was the son of Cornelis Engelbrechtsen, and was instructed by his father. The little encouragement the art experienced at that time in his native country, obliged him, for the support of a numerous family, to exercise the occupation of a cook, and eventually induced him to visit England in the reign of Henry VIII., by whom he was employed, and was made painter to the king. Van Mander mentions some of the works of this master at Leyden, among others, the 'Adulteress before Christ.' Of his works in England, the sixteen portraits of the Constables of Queenborough Castle, at Penshurst, are the most considerable; and though few of them can be original paintings, they possess great merit. At Hampton Court there are four small female portraits, probably copies, attributed to him. He died in England in 1552.

CORNELIUS, PETER VON. This famous German painter was born on the 23rd of September, 1783, at Düsseldorf, where his father was Inspector of the Gallery, an appointment by no means lucrative, and scarcely sufficient for the support of his numerous family. The disposition of Cornelius for the profession of art was evinced at a very early age by his drawings in outline of single figures, groups, battles, and hunting parties, which were pronounced by those who had opportunities of seeing his untutored essays to be by no means devoid of an intuitive skill in their execution and arrangement. Yet the character of his talent was questioned, and it was against the advice of friends that he was allowed to proceed in his studies at the Academy, where he continued drawing industriously after the antique. Whilst yet a boy he lost his father, an event which immediately incited his naturally energetic temperament to extraordinary exertion, commensurate with the bereavement and its threatened consequences. In a letter to Count Raczyński, he states:—

"I was in my sixteenth year when I lost my father, and it fell to the lot of an elder brother and myself to watch over the interest of a numerous family. It was at this time that it was attempted to persuade my mother that it would be better for me to devote myself to the trade of a goldsmith than continue to pursue painting—in the first place, in consequence of the time necessary to qualify me for the art; and in the next, because there were already so many painters. My dear mother, however, rejected all this advice, and I felt myself impelled onward by an uncommon enthusiasm, to which the confidence of my mother gave new strength, which was supported by the continual fear that I should be removed from the study of the art I loved so much."

In the works of this distinguished artist it is observed that the study of nature and the technique of his art occupy him less than the care of expressing his thoughts in a powerful and characteristic manner; and it would often seem that those of his figures which are most forcible and elevated in style are deficient of vitality, insomuch that we might almost say that their life-blood had been arrested in its circulation. Force and grandeur are abundant elements in the character of his works, but we do not, perhaps, perceive in an equal degree truth and refined taste. In explanation of this it should be observed that a new era had about this time commenced in German literature. The principles of Winckelmann, which presented as the solitary rule the study of the antique, were no longer admitted as those alone which could develop skilful artists. It was perceived that an overweening love of the antique had in a great measure contributed to the unintelligible affectations of the French school; yet certain schools, and especially that of Düsseldorf, pursued the ancient method; and Cornelius distinguished himself by his faithful adherence to it for a length of time. And yet all who would essay to reconcile his particular principles with those of Winckelmann—who would endeavour to place him in opposition to Göthe,—who would pronounce him too exclusively under the influence of the revival of mediæval religious art, and opposed to the study of models and an imitation of nature;—in short, all who would seek to discover in Cornelius a constant system, are altogether ignorant of the force of the original genius by which he was continually swayed. He was, however, the fellow-labourer with Overbeck in the artistic movement which too much repudiated the charms of colour, and made fresco once more adopted. The first important works of his youth were the decorations of the church of Neuss, an attentive examination of which declares a study of the works of Raffaele. At the age of twenty-six he produced his compositions from Faust, after which, in 1811, he went to Rome, where he became one of the brotherhood of painters, amongst whom was Overbeck, whose particular friend he was, inasmuch that the King of Bavaria associated them in a comparison to St. John and St. Paul. They dwelt together in an old convent, labouring from morning to night, with a mutual understanding that each should pronounce in sincerity on the productions of the other. Cornelius was one of those artists engaged in the decoration of the Villa Bartoldi, and at the same time was busied in his illustrations of the Nibelungenlied. From Rome he was called to Düsseldorf to remodel the Academy, and to Munich to take the direction of the frescoes which the then Prince Royal of Bavaria had projected for the Glyptothek. Thus divided between Düsseldorf—where he held the appointment of Director of the Academy—and Munich, where he was charged with the execution of many works, he resigned his appointment in the former city, to devote himself exclusively, with those of his pupils who thought fit to accompany him, to his commissions at Munich, of the Academy at which place he was appointed Director on the death of Sanger. It is from this period may be dated the immense activity in the arts in Munich under the reign of King Ludwig. Of this movement Cornelius was the prime mover—as the head of the school; and from Munich his reputation extended throughout Europe. It would be vain to attempt a Catalogue Raisonné of his great works in that city; it must suffice to indicate the leading features of the principal. In the Glyptothek he decorated two large halls, one called the ‘Hall of Heroes,’ the other the ‘Hall of the Gods,’ with frescoes based upon the heathen mythology, and painted according to the genius of the antique. In the Pinakothek he painted a great work illustrative of the ‘History of Painting,’ and even whilst occupied with these he found time to decorate the Ludwigs-Kirche with four large frescoes—‘God the Father,’ ‘The Nativity,’ ‘The Crucifixion,’ and ‘The Last Judgment,’ the last of which measures 62 feet high, by 38 wide. About 1847 Frederick William IV. of Prussia invited Cornelius to Berlin, where he gave him a commission to decorate the Campo Santo, or Royal Mausoleum, destined to form one of the wings of the new cathedral, the building of which was commenced some years ago. His designs for this purpose possessed grandeur and originality, surpassing in daring all that the master had heretofore produced, ‘The Four Knights of the Apocalypse’ being especially noticed in this respect; these have been engraved by Thäfer, and published at Leipsic, in 1848. During his sojourn at Berlin the King of Prussia took the opportunity to get Cornelius to make the design for the silver shield intended as a present for his godchild, the Prince of Wales, and which will be remembered as an attractive object at the great Exhibition of 1851. Reviewing the varied works of this great master, we find that the Old Testament, Homer, Göthe, Dante, the Nibelungen, the German Troubadours, and the New Testament, have all in turn supplied him subject matter. The heroic is most in accordance with his natural disposition; he is, however, not insensible to grace, and has expressed the tender sentiments with the utmost felicity. Most of his paintings at Munich have been engraved by Amsler, Eberlé, Schoeffer, &c. When the employment of historical painters was determined upon for the decoration of our New Houses of Parliament, Cornelius was invited to this country and advised the adoption of fresco painting, an unfortunate advice, our climate being considered. He died in Berlin on the 6th March, 1867.

CORNER, JOHN, a line-engraver, published in 1825 an interesting series of twenty-five ‘Portraits of Celebrated Painters,’ beneath each of which is a small medallion containing the artist’s most celebrated work.

CORNISH, —. This name is affixed to a slightly etched portrait of Dr. Charles Rose, a Scotch clergyman. It was probably the work of an amateur, who was a member of the University of Oxford, as it is inscribed Cornish, Oxon.

CORNU, SÉBASTIEN MELCHIOR, a French historical painter, was born at Lyons in 1804. He first studied under Richard and Bonnefond, and then went to Paris and entered the studio of Ingres. There are by him at Versailles the ‘Surrender of Ascalon to Baldwin III.,’ and the ‘Battle of Oued-Halleg.’ He continued the decorative works at St. Germain-des-Près after the death of Flandrin, and died at Longpont (Seine-et-Oise) in 1870.

CORONA, JACOB LUCIUS, called JACOB LUCIUS VON CRONSTADT, and also the MASTER OF THE KEY, a wood-engraver who lived in the 16th century, was a native of Cronstadt in Transylvania. He executed many wood-cuts after the designs of Lucas Cranach, and in 1564 removed from Wittenberg to Rostock, where he engraved on wood in 1578, after the court painter Cornelius Cromeny, the ‘Genealogical Tree of the Dukes of Mecklenburg.’ His wood-cuts are also to be found in the Wittenberg Bible of 1572, although dated 1558.

His prints are signed J. L. C. T. (Jacobus Lucius Corona Transylvanus), sometimes Jacob Siebenbürgen, or with one or other of the following monograms:

CORONA, LEONARDO, the son of a miniature painter, was born at Murano in 1561, and, according to Ridolfi, was first instructed by Rocca da San Silvestro, a painter of little note, who employed him in copying; but he afterwards improved himself by studying the works of Titian and Tintoretto. He also derived the greatest benefit from his acquaintance with Alessandro Vittoria, an eminent sculptor, who, Lanzi says, gave him chalk models for the better management of the chiaroscuro, and assisted him in his much-esteemed picture of the 'Annunciation' in SS. Giovanni e Paolo, and his more admired work of the 'Assumption' in San Stefano, painted with a greatness of style that approaches to Titian. In San Fantino is his picture, so much applauded by Ridolfi, of the 'Crucifixion,' in which he treads so closely on the heels of Tintoretto as to be little short of the excellence of that master. He died at Venice in 1605. It is said that he copied the works of Titian so exactly, that connoisseurs mistook his imitations for the originals. The Brunswick Gallery contains two paintings by him—'Joseph and Potiphar's Wife,' and 'The Death of Lucretia.'

CORONATO, IL. See CALVI, GIULIO.

CORONELLI, VINCENZO MARIA, an Italian geographer and draughtsman, was born at Venice about 1650. He entered the order of the Minorites, and went to France, where he constructed the celebrated globes which are now in the National Library at Paris. On his return to Venice he was made cosmographer of the Republic, and founded the Academy of the Argonauts. In 1702 he became general of his order. He died at Venice in 1718. Among other works he published 'Ritratti de' celebri Personaggi,' 1697; 'Lo Specchio del Mare,' 1698; 'Atlante Veneto,' 1691-96; 'Roma anticomoderna,' 1716; and 'Singolarità di Venezia,' some of the plates in which he probably engraved.

COROT, JEAN BAPTISTE CAMILLE, was born in Paris, of humble parentage, in 1796. After receiving his education in the Lycée of Rouen, he was placed in a draper's shop. He did not follow his inclination till he was twenty-two, when he became a pupil of Michallon, then of Victor Bertin, and finally completed his studies in Italy. In 1827 he sent two of his works to his first exhibition, and amongst those which succeeded them may be named: 'A View in Italy,' 'A Souvenir of the Environs of Florence,' 'The Burning of Sodom,' 'Evening,' 'The Lake,' 'An Idyll,' 'The Italian Tyrol,' 'A Souvenir of Marcoussy,' &c. Besides these landscapes, he painted several figure subjects, such as: 'A Dance of Nymphs,' 'Ariadne,' 'Macbeth,' 'St. Sebastian,' 'Christ in the Garden of Olives,' 'Dante and Virgil,' and 'Hagar in the Desert;' the two last named being bequeathed by him to the Louvre. Corot's method was to work in the country in the summer, early and late, in the open air, to catch those effects only to be seen at dawn, at sunset, and by moonlight, in which he delighted. During the winter he worked in his studio on the ideas thus afforded him. His originality was great: he saw and portrayed nature with his own eyes in a manner replete with poetry and fancy, in which style he has found followers in Troyon, Diaz, and others. In his early years he had to contend with poverty, but in after life wealth flowed freely in on him, and he was never unmindful of the poor and struggling artist. It is computed that his benevolences during the siege of Paris in 1870 amounted to 25,000 francs. He received medals for his works in 1833, 1848, 1855, and 1867, and was decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour in 1846, becoming an officer of the order in 1867. As a mark of their esteem for 'le père Corot,' his brother artists presented him with a gold medal shortly before his death, which occurred in Paris on the 22nd of February, 1875. He bequeathed to the Luxembourg two views—one of the Forum, the other of the Colosseum at Rome. The pictures, sketches, etchings, &c., remaining in his studio were sold for 400,000 francs. Two Landscapes by him are in the Lille Museum, and one each in the Museums of Bordeaux, Douai, Metz, and Langres.

CORR, ERIN, a Belgian line-engraver, was born of Irish parentage at Brussels in 1803. After studying under De Meulemeester, he went to Paris and completed his training under Wedgwood and Förster. On returning home he soon acquired a name by his engravings, and became in 1832 professor of engraving at the Antwerp Academy. He died in Paris in 1862. Among his best plates are:

Hagar in the Wilderness; after Navez. 1832.

The Saviour of the World; after Leonardo da Vinci.

Christ on the Cross; after Van Dyck. (His chef-d'œuvre.)

The Elevation of the Cross; after Rubens. (Unfinished; the etching only.)

The Descent from the Cross; after Rubens. (Unfinished.)

The King of the Belgians; after Wappers. 1834.

The Queen of the Belgians; after Ary Scheffer. 1838.

Cardinal Sterckx, Archbishop of Mechlin; after Cels.

CORRADI, KONRAD, a Swiss landscape painter in water-colours, was born in the early part of the 19th century. He died at Uhwiesen in 1878.

CORRADINI, BARTOLOMMEO, who is known as Fra CARNEVALE, was a Dominican monk living in the 15th century, who painted somewhat in the manner of Piero della Francesca. He was painting in Urbino in 1456, since records remain which prove him to have been then absolved from finishing a picture for the Confraternity of Corpus Christi in that city. In 1461 he was curate at San Cassiano di Cavallino, near Urbino, and seems to have lived there up to 1468. According to Padre Pungileone he painted the altar-piece of San Bernardino in the convent of that name in Urbino, in 1472. He died in 1484. Vasari asserts that he taught Bramante the art of perspective. A 'St. Michael and the Dragon' in the National Gallery, and a 'Virgin and Child with Saints' in the Brera, Milan, are ascribed to him.

CORRADO, GIAQUINTO, a Neapolitan painter, was born at Molfetta, in 1693. He studied in his native town, and afterwards at Rome. In 1753 he was invited to Madrid by Ferdinand VI., and succeeded Amigoni as first painter to the king. He remained in Spain until 1761, and died at Naples in 1765. The Madrid Gallery has fourteen of his works—3 allegorical, 2 landscape, 2 classical, and the rest sacred historical.

CORRALES. See MARTINEZ DE LOS CORRALES.

CORREA, DIEGO, a Spanish painter, whose works are in the style of the Florentine school, flourished, according to the date on some of his pictures, in 1550. The following works, his chief productions, now in the Madrid Museum, were formerly in the convent of the Bernardines of St. Maartin at Val de Iglesias:

Pilate washing his Hands.
Christ crowned with Thorns.
Ecce Homo.
The Death of St. Bernard.
The Last Judgment.
Madonna and Child and St. Anne.
St. Benedict blessing St. Maurus.
The Martyrdom of St. Andrew.
The Resurrection.
St. Peter curing the Paralytic.
Descent of the Holy Spirit.
Descent from the Cross.

The 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in the same gallery, was formerly in the church of the Assumption at Toledo. The Dresden Gallery has a 'Christ on the Cross' said to be by him.

CORREA, MARCOS, a Spanish painter, was a scholar of Bobadilla, and a member of the Academy of Seville from 1667 to 1673. His subjects were unambitious; he painted with great care and finish small details of still life, such as papers, books, &c.

CORREGGIO, ANTONIO DA. See IBERNIERI.

CORREGGIO, ANTONIO ALLEGRI DA. See ALLEGRI.

CORREGGIO, FRANCESCO, was a native of Bologna, and flourished about the year 1652. He was a scholar of Francesco Gessi, and painted history with some reputation. His works are chiefly confined to the churches at Bologna. In San Procolo is a 'Magdalene in the Desert;' in the Nunziata, the 'Madonna di Loreto;' and in Santa Maria de Servi, the 'Virgin and Infant, with St. Luke and other Saints.'

CORRENS, ERICH, was born at Cologne in 1821, and after studying jurisprudence at Bonn, went to the Academy at Munich, and became an accomplished portrait painter and lithographer. He died at the latter city in 1877. He was well known for the elegance of his portraits, among which those of King Maximilian of Bavaria and Queen Maria, his consort, are mentioned as noteworthy.

CORSO, GIOVANNI VINCENZO, was born at Naples about the year 1490, and was instructed by Amato and Pietro Perugino. He also studied the works of Andrea Sabbatini and Polidoro da Caravaggio, and subsequently went to Rome, and assisted Pierino del Vaga. Most of the works of this artist in the churches at Naples have been damaged and retouched. The best preserved are his admired picture of 'Christ bearing his Cross,' with many figures, in the church of San Domemico Maggiore, and the 'Adoration of the Magi,' in San Lorenzo Maggiore. He died at Rome in 1545.

CORSO, NICCOLÒ, was a native of Genoa, and flourished about the year 1503, the date inscribed on some of his works. His pictures are chiefly in the cloister and refectory of the monastery of the Olivetan Fathers at Quarto, near Genoa; the most esteemed is a subject from the life of St. Benedict. Soprani extols this painter for the fecundity of his ideas, the fine expression of his heads, and, above all, for the vivacity and firmness of his colouring, which, if it could be divested of a little hardness, would cause this artist to rank among the ablest of the Genoese painters of his time.

CORT, CORNELIS, called in Italy CORNELIO FIAMMINGO, an excellent engraver, was born at Hoorn in Holland, in 1533 or 1536. He was first instructed by Hieronymus Cock, for whom, in the early part of his life, he executed several plates after Rogier van der Weyden, Michiel Coxie, Frans Floris, and H. Mostaert, which were published with the name of his master. After having earned a very considerable reputation by these plates, he went to Italy, and first settled at Venice, where he resided in the house of Titian, and engraved some of the finest works of that great painter. He afterwards removed to Rome, where he established a school of line engraving, in which he sought to graft on the simple manner of Marcantonio a more brilliant and broader style. This gave to the art a direction which it long retained, and which was adopted and extended in Italy by Agostino Carracci, and followed by Nicolaus De Bruyn of Antwerp. The art of engraving had hitherto been nearly confined to small plates; and it was Cornelis Cort that opened the way to a more important sphere of the art. Cort died at Rome in 1578. His drawing is correct and tasteful; and his backgrounds, particularly his landscapes, are managed with great skill and finesse. His plates are signed with C. C. f., Corn., or Co. f. Heineken has given a complete catalogue of the works of this esteemed artist, the merit of which will justify our giving the following ample list of the most interesting:

PORTRAITS.

Cornelis Cort; engraved by himself.
Henry II., King of France; oval.
Catharine de' Medici; Queen of France.
Don Juan of Austria; oval, with ornaments. 1578.
Marcus Antonius Moretus; oval.

CORT, HENDRIK DE. See DE CORT.

CORTBEMDE, BALTHASAR VAN, the son of a picture-dealer, was a painter of Antwerp, who was born in 1612, married Ursula, a sister of Jan van den Hoecke, the painter, and died between 1663 and 1670. He studied under Jan Blankaert, and was considered among the better class of the masters of his century. A 'Good Samaritan' in a landscape by him (1647) is in the Antwerp Museum.

CORTE, CESARE, the son of Valerio Corte, was born at Genoa in 1550, and studied under Luca Cambiaso. According to Baldinucci, he was one of the most noted portrait painters of his time: he also painted historical subjects with considerable success. He visited France, where he was much employed, and is said by Baldinucci to have been in England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, although he is not mentioned in Lord Orford's 'Anecdotes'; he, however, painted that queen, and several of her court. His best historical works are at Genoa. For the church of San Pietro he painted the titular Saint at the feet of the Virgin, coloured with great chasteness and delicacy; for San Francesco, the altar-piece of the chapel of Prince Massa, representing Mary Magdalene; and for the church of Santa Maria del Carmine two pictures of St. Simeon and St. Francis. He died in 1613. His son DAVIDE, who died in 1657, was a celebrated imitator of the old masters.

CORTE, GABRIEL and JUAN DE LA. See DE LA CORTE.

CORTE, VALERIO, was born at Pavia in 1530. He went to Venice, and under the guidance of Titian became an eminent painter of portraits. He afterwards settled at Genoa, where he met with great encouragement, but ruined himself by the folly of alchemy. He died at Genoa in 1580.

CORTELLINI, MICHELE, who painted from about 1502 to 1542, was a follower of Francia. A 'Madonna enthroned, with four Saints,' by him, formerly in Sant' Andrea, is now in the gallery at Ferrara.

CORVI, DOMENICO, an Italian painter, was born at Viterbo in 1721. He was instructed by Mancini, and showed his great talent in his chief work, 'The Family of Priam with the dead body of Hector.'

He was for some time Director of the Roman School and the instructor of Cades and Camuccini. He died in 1803.

CORVINUS, JOHANN AUGUST, a German engraver, was born in 1682. He worked chiefly for the booksellers, and principally engraved views and buildings, in a neat but stiff style. By him there is a set of ornaments for ceilings, after designs by Carlo Maria Pozzi; most of the plates for a work entitled 'Representatio Belli ob Successionem in Regno Hispanico,' published at Augsburg, are by this artist; and several for a book by Pfeffel on the churches and monasteries off Vienna, published at Augsburg, in 1724-25. He died in 1738.

COSA, DIEGO DE, a Spanish engraver, who executed some spirited plates in the French style at the commencement of the 18th century. There is by him in Luis de Salazar's 'Indice de las Glorias de la Casa Farnese,' 1716, a plate representing the arms of that house, with four allegorical figures.

COSCI. See BALDUCCI, GIOVANNI.

COSIDA, GERONIMO, a Spanish painter of good family, flourished at Saragossa early in the 16th century, and was patronized by the Archbishop Don Fernando de Aragon. His best pictures were architectural decorations. According to Cean Bermudez, his invention was fertile and his colouring soft and agreeable. He was still living in 1572.

COSMATI, were a family of mosaicists and architects, who lived at Rome during the whole of the 13th century. Their works were chiefly executed for the churches of Santa Maria sopra Minvera, and Santa Maria Maggiore in their native city.

COSME. See TURA.

COSSA, FRANCESCO, (or DEL COSSA), an Italian painter, flourished in the middle of the 15th century. His name first appears in a record of 1456, which proves that he was then an assistant to his father Christofano del Cossa, who was at that time employed in painting the carving and statues on the high altar in the chapel of the bishop's palace at Ferrara. He afterwards went to Bologna, where his two masterpieces still remain. The first is a canvas with the Virgin and Child enthroned, with two Saints, and a portrait of Alberto de' Catanei, signed and dated 1474, and now in the Gallery. The second is a fresco in the church off the 'Madonna del Barracano,' representing the Virgin and Child enthroned, beneath which are the portraits of Giovanni Bentivoglio and Maria Vimziguerra; it is dated 1472. The dates of this artist's birth and death are uncertain.

COSSALE. See COZZALE.

COSIAU, JAN JOOST VAN, (or COSZIAU), was a landscape painter, who was born near Breda in 1654, and died at Mentz in 1732, although he generally resided at Frankfort. His manner of treating his landscapes is Italian, and he endeavoured to imitate the style of Gaspard Poussin. His pictures are well composed, and are enriched with buildings and cattle. We find mention of the following:

Brunswick. Gallery. Two Landscapes with Cattle. (Both dated 1704.)

Cassel. Gallery. Egyptian Landscape.

Munich. Gallery. A large Landscape. 1716.

COSSIERS, JAN, (COTSIERS, COUSIERS, or CAUSIERS), a son of Antonis Cossiers, a painter in tempera, (who died in 1646-47,) was born at Antwerp in 1600. He was a pupil of Cornelis De Vos, the elder, entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1628-29, was dean thereof in 1639-40, and died at Antwerp in 1671. There are many of his works in the churches in Flanders; they are judiciously composed, and his attitudes are well chosen and natural. His drawing is tolerably correct, and his colouring vigorous, though a little too brown. In the back-grounds of his pictures he frequently introduced architecture, which he treated in a masterly manner. The following are among his best works. At Brussels, in the church formerly of the Jesuits, the 'Nativity'; and at the Beguinage, the 'Martyrdom of St. Ursula.' At Mechlin, a grand composition of the 'Crucifixion,' and the 'Presentation in the Temple.' In the Antwerp Museum are 'The Adoration of the Shepherds,' 'Preparation for the Flagellation,' and three other works by him; in the Hague Gallery is a 'Triumph of Silenus'; in the Madrid Gallery, 'Prometheus' and 'Narcissus'; in the Cassel Gallery, 'An Old Beggar-Couple'; in the Brussels Gallery, the 'Deluge'; and in the Lille Museum, a 'Miracle of St. Nicholas.'

COSSIN. See COQUIN.

COSSIN, LOUIS, who was born at Troyes in 1633, engraved a portrait of François Chauveau after Claude Lefèvre, and also a portrait of Valentin Conrart.

COSTA, FRANCESCO, an Italian painter, chiefly of ornaments and perspective, was born at Genoa in 1672. He was a pupil of Gregorio de' Ferrari and of A. Haffner, and worked much in conjunction with Revello. He died in 1740. A 'Landscape with the Rape of Europa,' by him, is in the Uffizi at Florence.

COSTA, IPPOLITO, who was born at Mantua in 1506, was the son of Lorenzo Costa. Although not a pupil of Giulio Romano, his style closely imitated that master. He died in 1561. He had a brother, GIROLAMO COSTA, of whom he was the instructor, as he was also of Bernardino Campi.

COSTA, LORENZO, 'the elder,' was born at Ferrara in 1460, and is supposed to have been the pupil of either Tura or Cossa. In his early life he went to Florence, and on his return painted some of the frescoes in the hall of the Schifanoia, belonging to Duke Borso of Ferrara. Probably at about this period in his life he painted the 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian,' in the Costabili Collection, which is signed in Hebrew characters. Costa's first visit to Bologna seems to have been made in 1480, and he is said to have painted scenes, drawn from the 'Iliad' and Greek history, in the Bentivoglio Palace in 1483. The picture of St. Sebastian, and the portrait of Canon Vaselli, in the Marescotti chapel in Santa Petronia at Bologna, are of about this date. In 1488 he painted a votive Madonna, with the likenesses of Giovanni Bentivoglio and his wife and their eleven children, on the walls of the Bentivoglio chapel in San Giacomo Maggiore at Bologna; he also executed on the walls of the same chapel the landscapes surrounding an equestrian figure of Annibale Bentivoglio; and in 1490 the frescoes there of the 'Triumph of Life and of Death' were completed. Between 1490 and 1495 he finished the 'Annunciation' at San Petronio, and in 1492 the great 'Madonna and Child, with SS. Sebastian, James, Jerome, and George,' over the high altar of the Baciocchi Oratory in the same church. In 1497 he painted the 'Virgin and Child, with four Saints,' in the Segni chapel in San Giovanni in Monte, and the 'Glory of the Madonna' for the high altar of the same church. In the Brera, Milan, is an 'Adoration of the Magi' of 1499; and of the same year are the lunette frescoes in the Bentivoglio Chapel, at San Giacomo Maggiore. A friendly rivalry existed between Francia and Costa during the years extending from 1480 to 1500, and their works show the mutual influences they exercised over each other. Francia, perhaps, was the better artist, and Costa, perhaps, the better workman. In 1481 Giovanni Bentivoglio founded the Oratory of St. Cecilia, Bologna, and in its decorations Costa, Francia, Chiodarolo, Aspertini, and, according to Frizzoni and Milanese, Cesare Tamaroccio, all had a share; Costa executing two frescoes—one of 'Pope Urban instructing his convert Valerian', the other of 'St. Cecilia distributing her goods to the poor.' In 1509, after the expulsion of the Bentivoglio family from Bologna, Costa was taken into the service of the Marquis Francesco Gonzaga of Mantua, where he remained until his death, his chief works being in the palace of St. Sebastian. Of other pictures which he produced at that time can be mentioned a 'Virgin and Child between two Saints,' in the Ferrara Gallery; the 'Allegory of the Court of Isabella of Este,' now in the Louvre; a small diptych formerly in the possession of Sir Charles Eastlake; and a 'Madonna and Saints,' of 1525, in the church of Sant' Andrea, Mantua. Costa probably painted some of the frescoes which adorn the Scholcheria in the castle of Mantua. By him we have also one engraving, the 'Presentation in the Temple,' from the sketch for an altar-piece by himself, dated 1502, the year in which were engraved the two Saints by Francia, by whom Costa appears to have been led to engrave the plate in question. Although much in the style of Francia, it is treated in a freer and more picturesque manner. His death took place at Mantua in 1535. Of his pictures the following may be noted:

Berlin.	Museum.	Pietà. 1504.
"	"	Presentation in the Temple. 1502.
Bologna.	S. Giacomo Maggiore.	Madonna, adored by Giovanni Bentivoglio and his Family (in tempera). 1488.

COSTA, LORENZO, 'the younger,' who was born in 1537, was the son of Girolamo Costa, and was instructed in the art of painting by his uncle Ippolito. He worked in concert with Taddeo Zuccaro in the Belvedere at Rome, about 1560, and died in 1583.

COSTA, TOMMASO, a painter of perspective views, and a pupil of Jean Boulanger, was born at Sassuolo in 1635. He resided at Reggio, and died in 1690. He is represented in the Estense Gallery, Modena, by an exterior and an interior.

COSTANZI, PLACIDO, who was born in Rome in 1688, was a pupil of B. Luti, and painted historical subjects. The most esteemed of his larger works, is his 'St. Camillus,' in Santa Maria Maddalena; in which he has aspired to the imitation of Domenichino. His 'Resuscitation of Tabitha,' in Santa Maria degli Angeli, is the original of a mosaic in St. Peter's. He also painted in fresco the ceilings of the tribunes in Santa Maria in Campo Marzo and San Gregorio, and was much employed in painting figures in the landscapes of other artists, particularly in those of Jan Frans van Bloemen, called Orizante. He died in 1759. A portrait of George Keith, Earl Marischal of Scotland, painted by him in Rome in 1752, is in the National Portrait Gallery, and 'St. Pancras and the Infant Christ,' by him, is in the Dublin National Gallery.

COSTE, JEAN, a French historical painter, who flourished in the 14th century, was the painter in ordinary and favourite of King John. He distinguished himself especially by some paintings of great merit which he executed in oil at the castle of Val-de-Rueil in 1356. He died in 1391.

COSTELLO, LOUISA STUART, the daughter of Colonel Costello, was born in France in 1799. When about twenty years of age she visited London, and from 1822 to 1839 exhibited miniature portraits at the Royal Academy. She was likewise an authoress, and published 'Specimens of the Early Poetry of France,' the 'Rose Garden of Persia,' and other successful works. She died at Boulogne in 1870.

COSTER, ADAM DE. See DE COSTER.

COSTER, ANNE. See VALLAYER.

COSTER, D., was a Flemish engraver, who flourished about the year 1700. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers; and, among other plates, engraved a portrait of Frans Hals, the painter, after Van Dyck.

COSWAY, MARIA CECILIA LOUISA, whose maiden name was HADFIELD, and whose father was an Irishman, was born at Leghorn in 1745. After studying painting at Rome, she came to England, where she executed miniature portraits (e.g. 'The Duchess of Devonshire as Cynthia'), and supplied illustrations to Boydell's 'Shakespeare Gallery' and Macklin's 'Poets'; she also drew in crayons 'The Progress of Female Virtues' and 'The Progress of Female Vices.' In 1781, the year of her first exhibition at the Academy, she married Richard Cosway, the painter, but separated from him afterwards and went to reside in Paris, where she copied works in the Louvre for engravers, and herself etched after Rubens and her husband. The loss of her daughter drove her in 1804 into a convent at Lyons, of which she became superior, and where she is believed to have died some time after 1821. She was also proficient in music, and had in early life been betrothed to Dr. Parsons, the composer.

COSWAY, RICHARD, an eminent miniature painter, was born at Tiverton in Devonshire, in 1740. He came early to London, and studied under Hudson and in Shipley's school; he soon distinguished himself by his drawings from the antique in the Duke of Richmond's gallery, which Cipriani and Bartolozzi pronounced admirable. In 1766 he was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, and in 1769 he was admitted to the Royal Academy schools. In the next year he became an Associate; in 1771 he was elected a Royal Academician; and in 1781 he married the artist Maria Hadfield. He continued to progress in public favour, and for a considerable time maintained the ascendancy in his particular branch of art, miniature, and bade defiance to all attempts at rivalry. In his oil-paintings he aimed at the manner of Correggio; and there are in existence some that for beauty of design and sweetness of expression would not discredit that honoured name. His widow retained three till the time of her death. He painted all the beauty and fashion of his day: he was particularly distinguished by the notice of the Prince of Wales, then the leader of the gay world, and Cosway painted him as a gentleman, and not as a coxcomb or an actor. Accounts of Cosway have been published abounding with scandalous and humorous anecdotes; these, however, have lost their interest, and do not merit to be recorded here. Cosway was fond of collecting pictures, drawings, prints, and other objects of art, and his house in Stratford Place was like a dealer's shop. He died in London in 1821. His portrait of General Pasquale Paoli is in the Uffizi, Florence; a portrait of himself is in the National Portrait Gallery, and four miniatures by him are in the South Kensington Museum.

COTAN, JUAN SANCHEZ. See SANCHEZ COTAN.

COTELLE, JEAN, 'the elder,' a French painter of ornament, who also etched, was born at Meaux in 1610. He studied under L. Guyot, and worked largely for Simon Vouet. He became an Academician in 1651, and died in 1676. There are engraved by him seven vignettes for a book of prayers.

COTELLE, JEAN, 'the younger,' was a painter and engraver, born in Paris in 1645. He received his early instruction from his father, Jean Cotelie, and eventually visited Italy. On his return he devoted himself to his profession, producing historical paintings, miniatures, and occasionally etchings. His chef-d'œuvre was the 'Marriage at Cana,' painted in 1681 for the cathedral of Notre-Dame. There are by him at Versailles several views in the gardens of that palace. He etched a plate representing 'Our Lord on the Mount of Olives,' and a series of seven scenes from the history of Venus. He was admitted into the Academy in 1672, and died at Villers-sur-Marne in 1708.

COTES, FRANCIS, an English portrait painter, was born in London in 1726. He was a scholar of George Knapton. Lord Orford mentions some of his works in oil and in crayons, the latter of which he compares to the portraits of Rosalba. He died in the prime of life in 1770. He was an eminent artist in crayons, and one of the first members of the Royal Academy, and also a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. At Greenwich Hospital, there is a portrait by him of Admiral Lord Hawke. A portrait group of Mr. and Mrs. Joah Bates, in the possession of the Sacred Harmonic Society, is considered one of his best works.

COTES, SAMUEL, born in 1734, a younger brother of Francis Cotes, R.A., painted miniature portraits with much success, and also worked in crayons. He died at Chelsea in 1818.

COTIGNOLA, BERNARDINO and FRANCESCO. See DE' ZAGANELLI.

COTIGNOLA, GIROLAMO MARCHESI DA. See MARCHESI.

COTMAN, JOHN JOSEPH, an English landscape painter, was the son of John Sell Cotman. He had considerable talents, but owing to his extravagant and eccentric habits, he was always in a destitute condition. He died at Norwich in 1878.

COTMAN, JOHN SELL, who was born at Norwich in 1782, was in a great measure his own instructor in art, though he owed much to the kind patronage of Dr. Munro. In 1800 he came to London, where he resided, and exhibited at the Royal Academy until 1806, when he returned to Norwich. In the following year he was made a member and secretary of the Norwich Society of Artists, and in one single year, 1808, he sent no less than sixty-seven works to the exhibition. After various journeys in Normandy, and a residence of some years in Yarmouth, Cotman was, in 1834, appointed Professor of Drawing in King's College School, London. He held this post until his death, which occurred in London in 1842. Besides his landscapes and marine pieces in oil and water-colours, he executed numerous engravings of architecture both of England and of Normandy. He published in 1812, 'Miscellaneous Etchings of Architectural Antiquities in Yorkshire'; in 1812-17, 'Architectural Antiquities of Norfolk'; and in 1813-16, 'Sepulchral Brasses in Norfolk'; all of which works were republished with large additions under the following titles—'Architectural Etchings of Old English Buildings,' 2 vols. folio, 240 plates; 'Sepulchral Brasses of Norfolk and Suffolk,' 2 vols., 170 plates; 'Liber Studiorum,' 48 plates. In 1817 he went to France, and collected the materials for his magnificent work, 'Architectural Antiquities of Normandy,' 100 plates, in 2 vols. folio, with descriptive letter-press by Dawson Turner of Yarmouth, which was published in 1822. In 1825 he was elected an Associate of the Water-colour Society, and frequently sent works to their exhibitions. Ten water-colour drawings by him are in the South Kensington Museum.

COTMAN, MILES EDMUND, born in 1811, was the eldest son of John Sell Cotman. He was brought up as an artist, exhibited landscapes in Suffolk Street and at the Academy, and in 1842 succeeded his father as drawing-master at King's College, London. He died in 1858.

COTTA, JACOPO, an Italian engraver, flourished about the year 1600. His name is affixed to an etching representing the 'Meeting of Isaac and Rebekah,' after Storer. It is executed in a poor, tasteless style, and incorrectly drawn.

COTTARD, PIERRE, according to Florent Le Comte, was an architect, who flourished in the 17th century, and etched some plates of vases and ornaments, which are executed in a bold, coarse style. We have from his hand a set of four views of Bordeaux, and a series of designs published in 1686. His prints are usually marked with the monogram .

COTTRAU, FÉLIX, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1799, and died in the same city in 1852. He painted landscapes, portraits, and Scriptural and fancy subjects.

COUASKI, ALEXANDER, a Polish portrait painter, was born in Poland in 1736. He was a page in the court of the last King of Poland, but was afterwards sent to France to study under Vien. On the outbreak of the French Revolution he was painter to the Prince de Condé. He executed portraits chiefly in pastel, and among them those of the Empress Catharine II. of Russia, the Count d'Artois, the Prince de Condé, the Princess de Lamballe, and Madame Elizabeth. Marie Antoinette, however, he portrayed in distemper, and the repetitions he made of this picture are stated to have procured him a subsistence for a lengthened period. He also sketched Louis XVII. Many of his paintings are wrongly ascribed to other masters. He died at Sainte-Périne in 1829.

COUCHÉ, JACQUES, a French line-engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1759. He became a pupil of Le Vasseur and of Aliamet, and was subsequently appointed engraver to the Duke of Orleans. The date of his death is not known. He owed much of his reputation to his having been the moving spirit in the publication of the work known as the 'Galerie du Palais Royal.' This was issued in part in 1786 under Couché's direction, but the Revolution having stopped the work, Couché some years afterwards associated himself with Laporte and Bouquet, and brought his task to a successful termination in 1808. He engraved the following eighteen plates in that collection:

The Young Martyr; after Cagnacci.
 The Death of Actæon; after Titian.
 The Holy Family; after Annibale Carracci.
 The Return from the Chase; after Wouwerman.
 Hawking; after the same.
 The Judgment of Paris; after Rubens.
 Bal Champêtre; after Watteau.
 The Lady in the Balcony; after Gerard Dou.
 The Concert of Cats; after C. Brueghel.
 The Revel; after Cerquozzi.

 A Circumcision; after Bassano.
 The Martyr; after Guido Canlassi.
 St. John preaching in the Wilderness; after Albano.

COUCHÉ, FRANÇOIS LOUIS, an engraver, the son and pupil of Jacques Couché, was born in Paris in 1782. He produced in an indifferent manner a number of plates representing the battles of the first Napoleon—on one of which is the date 1812. They were in some cases finished by Bovinet. At one period of his life he was keeping a shop as a publisher in the Rue Hautefeuille in Paris. His engravings are generally marked Couché fils—sometimes simply Couché, and in one case François Couché. He engraved some of the plates for the 'Galerie du Palais Royal,' and for Denon's great work on Egypt. He died in Paris in 1849.

COUDER, JEAN REMY ALEXANDRE, who was born in Paris in 1808, and studied under Picot, became famous for his pictures of still-life, fruit, and flowers, and also genre subjects. He died at Baran (Oise) in 1879.

COUDER, LOUIS CHARLES AUGUSTE, an historical painter, was born in Paris in 1790. He studied under David and Regnault, and brought himself prominently into notice with his prize painting in 1817, representing the 'Levite of Mount Ephraim.' But the promise then given was not redeemed by the works that immediately followed; and even his ceiling decoration in the Gallery of Apollo in the Louvre shows that he was still restrained by classical fetters. He repaired to Munich in 1833 to study the progress of fresco painting there; and on his return to Paris painted in the churches of St. Gervais, Notre-Dame-de-Lorette, St. Germain-l'Auxerrois, and in the Madeleine. These works show care and skill, but are lacking in the most necessary element,—religious feeling. His historical works, executed at Versailles, are much more successful. There he had a better field for showing his skill in drawing and as a colourist, as well as for proving that he possessed dramatic force, and the power of rendering individual characteristics. It is on the merit of these productions that his real claim to fame is based. His Francis I. is now at Fontainebleau. Amongst other paintings may be mentioned also 'The Taking of Lerida,' and 'The Opening of the States-General in 1789.' He died in Paris in 1873.

COULET, ANNE PHILIBERTE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1736, and was a pupil of Aliamet and of Lempereur. She engraved several landscapes and sea pieces, especially those of Joseph Vernet, which are charmingly etched and finished with the graver. She was received into the Academy in 1770, and became a member of the Academy of Vienna in 1771. The date of her death is not known.

We have by her the following engravings:

"Rendez-vous à la Colonne;" after Berchem.
 The Departure of the Boat; after Joseph Vernet.
 The Fortunate Passage; after the same.
 The Fine Afternoon; after the same.
 The Fishermen throwing their Nets; after the same.
 The Neapolitan Fishermen; after the same.
 Rural Pleasures; after Louthembourg.
 The Pleasure Party in the Country; after the same.
 Going to Market; after Van Goyen.

COUPÉ, ANTOINE JEAN BAPTISTE, a French line-engraver, was born in Paris in 1784. He was a pupil of Roger. He engraved 'Prayer to the Madonna,' after Mme. Haudebourt-Lescot, and many vignettes for the works of Voltaire, Rousseau, &c. It is not known when he died.

COURBE, WILBRODE MAGLOIRE NICOLAS, was a French engraver but little known, who lived at the close of the 18th century. He appears to have devoted himself chiefly to religious subjects, and was the principal engraver of the collection of portraits of the members of the National Assembly of 1789, known as the "Collection Dejabin."

COURBES, JEAN DE, was a French engraver, born about the year 1592. He was principally employed for the booksellers, but worked both in England and in Spain. We have by him the portraits of Sir Philip Sidney and Mary, Countess of Pembroke.

COURBET, GUSTAVE, a distinguished French painter, was born at Ornans (Doubs), on the 10th of June, 1819. He began the study of jurisprudence, but at the age of twenty abandoned it for painting, and repaired to Paris, where he eventually selected the school of David d'Angers. The ill-success that befell his early pictures only acted as a stimulus, and led him to a constant and close study of nature; and he selected intentionally, with a view to bring the feeling of the public more into harmony with his own conceptions, the details of every-day life as the field in which to exhibit his talents. Being really gifted he could not fail in the result to command attention. In fact it was not long before one of his works, entitled 'The Conflagration,' aroused the notice of the authorities, who condemned it as dangerous to the public welfare. His figure subjects were brilliant in colour and rich in tone, but were ill drawn and badly grouped. Other works of his again, though powerfully painted, were marred by the selection of subjects with a vicious tendency. His landscapes, however, being from the nature of their subject free from any such defects, could not fail, distinguished as they were by truth, simplicity, and very careful finish, to add considerably to his reputation. Nor were his animal pieces less pleasing, while his portraits gave proof in a still further direction of his being possessed of very remarkable talent. The unfavourable art criticisms which his early works had encountered appear to have embittered his mind to some extent against his brother artists, and at the Exhibitions of 1855 and 1867 he had a separate building constructed to display his own pictures. 'A Stormy Sea,' ('La Vague,') exhibited in the Salon of 1870, was bought for the Luxembourg, and was exhibited at the Paris Exhibition in 1878. In 1871 his democratic tendencies led him to join the Communists, who entrusted him with the charge of the Museums. He took a leading part in the destruction of the Column in the Place Vendôme. On the fall of the Commune he was condemned to six months' imprisonment, as well as to the payment of an indemnity for his share in the affair of the Place Vendôme. He eventually retired into Switzerland, where after a painful illness he died at La Tour-de-Peilz, near Vevay, on the 31st December, 1877. An exhibition of the works of the Painter of Ornans, as Courbet delighted to be called, was held in Paris in 1882. The Louvre has now the 'Interment at Ornans' (painted in 1850), the 'Combat de Cerfs' (1861), the 'Hallali du Cerf' (1867), the 'Homme à la ceinture de cuir,' the 'Homme blessé,' and 'La Vague' (1870). His other principal paintings were:

- The Woman with the Parrot. 1866.
- Afternoon at Ornans. (In the Lille Museum.) 1849.
- Landscape, near Honfleur. (In the Lille Museum.)
- The Stone-breakers. 1850.
- Stags in Spring-time. (In the Marseilles Museum.)
- La Fileuse. 1853.
- Les Baigneuses. 1853.
- The Painter's Studio. 1855.
- La Remise aux Chevreuils. 1866.
- La Sieste pendant la saison des foins. 1869.

COURT, JEAN, called VIGIER, was one of the most skilful of the enamel painters who flourished at Limoges in the 16th century. His works are very rare and bear the dates 1556 and 1557 only. Almost all are painted in grisaille on a black ground, and heightened with gold, the flesh being tinted. Some of his enamels are in the Louvre. He died about 1583, being then not less than 72 years of age. Much confusion has existed on account of the similarity of the names and monograms, and often of the works, between this artist, Jean de Court, and Jean Courteys.

COURT, JEAN DE, an enamel painter of Limoges, succeeded François Clouet as painter to the king in 1572, and was in turn succeeded by his son, CHARLES DE COURT, in 1584 or 1589. Jean de Court painted in 1574 a portrait of Henry III., then Duke of Anjou.

COURT, JOSEPH DÉSIRÉ, a painter of historical subjects and portraits, was born at Rouen in 1797. He became a pupil at the École des Beaux-Arts under Gros, and after carrying off the principal honours there pursued his studies still further at Rome. High expectations were formed of him when he exhibited in 1827 'The Death of Cæsar,' a work manifesting earnest thought, and a conscientious handling of the facts of history. This is now preserved in the Louvre. Having shown himself in this and other works a vigorous painter, capable of seizing a subject with a masterly grasp, and having also in the region of portrait painting proved himself an artist of no common merit, he eventually dissipated his talents in the production of a series of empty official pictures painted by order of Louis Philippe. He died in Paris in 1865. The Bordeaux Museum has a portrait of Henri Fonfrère by him; that of Lyons, a 'Scene in the Deluge'; that of Rouen, 'Boissy-d'Anglas saluting the head of Féraud.'

COURTEYS, JEAN, an enamel painter of Limoges, who died in 1586, was possibly a younger brother of Pierre Courteys. To him are ascribed the numerous works signed J. C., but M. Darcel is inclined to believe that these are by Jean de Court.

COURTEYS, MARTIAL, a painter in enamel, who was working at Limoges in 1579-80, was distinguished by his vivid colouring. Until lately he was known only by a round dish with 'Moses striking the Rock,' formerly in the Debruge Collection, and now in that of Mr. Addington. He belonged to the school of Jean Courteys, and was perhaps his son.

COURTEYS, PIERRE, one of the best enamel painters of Limoges, and an excellent designer and colourist, was probably a disciple of Pierre Raymond. The dates affixed to his works range from 1550 to 1568. In 1559 he executed for the façade of the château of Madrid, built by Francis I. and Henry II. in the Bois de Boulogne, near Paris, twelve oval medallions of the Virtues and the gods of Olympus, with figures the size of life. Nine of these are now in the Hôtel de Cluny, and three are in England. They are the largest enamels which have ever been made at Limoges. Courteys is supposed to have died in 1602. Many of his works are in the Louvre.

COURTIN, JACQUES FRANÇOIS, a French historical painter, was born at Sens in 1672. He was a pupil of Louis de Boullogne, and painted the 'mai' offered to the cathedral of Notre-Dame by the goldsmiths of Paris in 1707, the subject being 'St. Paul preaching at Troas.' He died in Paris in 1752. There is a 'Dead Christ' by him in the Brussels Gallery.

COURTOIS, GUILLAUME, commonly known as GUGLIELMO CORTESE, and also called BOURGUIGNON, (or IL BORGOGNONE,) was the brother of Jacques Courtois, and was born at St. Hippolyte in 1628. He went to Rome whilst he was young, and became a scholar of Pietro da Cortona. He did not however follow the style of that master, but appears to have preferred that of Carlo Maratti, in his compositions and the expression of his heads. He sometimes seems to have wished to resemble Guercino in the strength of his relief, and his azure backgrounds. His works most deserving of notice are a 'Madonna, and several Saints,' in the Trinità di Pellegrini; 'Joshua's great Battle,' in the palace of the Quirinal, in which he was assisted by his brother; and the 'Crucifixion of St. Andrew,' in Sant' Andrea a Monte Cavallo, Rome. The 'Offering of Isaac' by him is in the Dresden Gallery, and a picture of 'The Burial of the Dead during the Plague in Rome' in the Brussels Gallery. He died at Rome in 1679. His engravings are now become excessively rare. They are not so highly finished as those of his brother Jacques. We have by him the following plates:

A Burial during the Plague.
The Presentation in the Temple.
The Resurrection of Lazarus.

COURTOIS, JACQUES, commonly called by the Italians GIACOMO CORTESI, and IL BORGOGNONE, also known as BOURGUIGNON, was born at St. Hippolyte, in Franche-Comté, in 1621. He was the son of an obscure painter, Jean Courtois, who taught him the rudiments of design. At the age of fifteen he went to Milan, where he formed an intimacy with a French officer, who prevailed on him to enter the army, which he followed for some time; designing on every occasion the marches, the attacks, and skirmishes of which he was a witness. After three years' service he quitted the military profession and returned to painting. At Bologna he became acquainted with Guido and Albani, and his intimacy with those distinguished artists was of great advantage to his progress. He at length visited Rome, where his first attempts were some historical works, amongst which were 'The Magdalen at the feet of Christ,' in the church of Santa Maria; and in the Gesù, the 'Murder of the Innocents' and the 'Adoration of the Magi.' The natural bent of his genius discovered itself on his seeing the admirable 'Battle of Constantine' by Giulio Romano, in the Vatican; and from that time he devoted himself to a branch of the art which he carried to a perfection unknown before or after him. Michelangelo delle Battaglie, having seen some of his works, with a liberality not always found in a rival, was one of the most zealous publishers of his fame. Whilst he was in full possession of popular esteem, a circumstance occurred which occasioned his retirement from the world. His wife, with whom he had not lived on the best terms, died suddenly; and malevolence suspected and accused him of having poisoned her. This cruel accusation determined him to abandon society, and he took refuge with the Jesuits, of which body he soon afterwards became a member. But neither the gloom of a monastery, nor the affliction of his mind, could subdue his ardour or impoverish his talent, which he continued to exercise till his death, which occurred at Rome in 1676.

The battle-pieces of Borgognone are composed with a fire and painted with a vigour peculiar to himself. His touch is admirable and of extraordinary facility, his figures and horses are drawn with all the spirit requisite in the attacks of the fiercest combatants fighting for honour and for life; and (as Lanzi expresses it) "in beholding his pictures we seem to hear the shouts of war, the neighing of the horses, and the cries of the wounded." It is to be lamented that many of his works have blackened since they were painted. The following are some of the best of his works which are frequently met with in public galleries:

Augsburg.	Gallery.	Battle-pieces.
Berlin.	Museum.	Rocky Landscape (formerly assigned to Salvatore Rosa).
Cassel.	Gallery.	Battle-pieces.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Battle-pieces (four).
Edinburgh.	Gallery.	Battle-pieces (three).
Florence.	Uffizi.	Portrait of himself.
"	"	Battle-pieces (four).
"	Pitti Pal.	Battle-piece.
Hague.	Gallery.	Cavalry Combat.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	A Battle-field after the fight.
		A Battle-piece.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Battle-pieces (two).
Paris.	Louvre.	Cavalry Combat near a Bridge.
"	"	Troops marching.
"	"	Cavalry combat.

Paris.	Louvre.	Cavalry encounter.
"	"	Cuirassiers and Turkish Cavalry.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Studies for Battle-pieces.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Battle-pieces (three).

We have by this artist some etchings of battles, executed with uncommon spirit, and with a masterly effect of light and shadow. They are described in Robert-Dumesnil's 'Peintre-Graveur,' vol. i., and among them are the following:

A set of Eight Battles; Giac. Cortese fec.
A set of Four Battles; J. C.

COURTOIS, JEAN. See COURTEYS.

COURTOIS, MARIE, a French miniature painter of considerable ability, was a pupil of Le Brun. She was born about the year 1655, married in 1675 Marc Nattier, the portrait painter, and died in Paris in 1703.

COURTOIS, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, was a French engraver, who was born in Paris in 1736. He engraved two plates from the designs of Saint-Aubin, but died at Rochefort in 1763.

COUSE, J., was an artist who, if not a native of England, at least resided here about the year 1750. He engraved a view of Berkeley Castle, from a drawing by the Countess of Berkeley, and some other prints, which are neatly executed, and possess considerable merit.

COUSEN, JOHN, a landscape engraver, was born at Bradford in Yorkshire in 1804, and was articled to John Scott, the animal engraver. His larger works after Turner, Stanfield, and others are of great excellence, but his exquisite taste is best displayed in his smaller plates after Turner, especially those in the 'Rivers of France,' which are full of poetic feeling. He died at South Norwood in 1880, but had retired from the practice of his art some sixteen years before, in consequence of ill-health.

His more important works are:

Mercury and Herse; after Turner.
Towing the Victory into Gibraltar; after Stanfield
The Morning after the Wreck; after the same.
Calais Pier: Fishing-Boats off Calais.	After Turner: for the Turner Gallery.
Snow-Storm: Hannibal and his Army crossing the Alps.
Peace: Burial at Sea of the Body of Sir David Wilkie.
St. Michael's Mount, Cornwall.
The Battle of Trafalgar; after Stanfield.	For the Vernon Gallery.
The Canal of the Giudecca and Church of the Jesuits, Venice; after the same.
The Old Pier at Littlehampton; after Sir A. W. Callcott.
Returning from Market; after the same.
Cattle: Early Morning on the Cumberland Hills; after T. Sidney Cooper.
The Mountain Torrent; after Sir E. Landseer.
The Cover Side; after F. R. Leo.
Rest in the Desert; after W. J. Müller.
A Woodland View; after Sir D. Wilkie.

COUSIN, JEAN, may be regarded as the founder of the French school, as previous to his time the painters of his country confined themselves to portrait painting. He was born at Soucy, near Sens, in 1500 or 1501, and died about 1589, at all events before 1593. Little is known of his life, with certainty, except that his first occupation was glass-painting at Sens, and that he afterwards established himself as a goldsmith at Paris. His principal work, as a painter, is the 'Last Judgment,' which was formerly in the convent of the Minimes at Vincennes, but is now in the Louvre. It is a grand composition, and the design is more in the taste of Parmegiano than the French style. He was a sculptor as well as a painter, but he excelled especially as a painter upon glass. He was in every respect superior to his rival, Jean Duvet. As a painter on glass, the windows of the Sainte-Chapelle at Vincennes are his best works. They represent the 'Annunciation,' the 'Approach of the Last Judgment,' and full-length portraits of Francis I. and Henry II. Lenoir regards these magnificent windows as the finest monuments of painting upon glass which exist in France. He also painted windows in the Cathedral at Sens with the Legend of St. Eutropius, dated 1530, and others in the Château of Anet and elsewhere. The windows which Cousin painted for the church of St. Gervais at Paris were destroyed about 1775. A picture of the 'Descent from the Cross,' bearing date 1523, in the Museum at Mentz, and other subject pictures, are attributed to him; and there also exist records of several family portraits by him: but the painting in the Louvre is the only known authentic work by his hand. It has been engraved by Pieter De Jode the elder. Various miniatures in books, in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, and elsewhere, are said to be by Cousin, who was also an engraver on metal, and has left etchings of the 'Annunciation,' the 'Holy Family,' the 'Descent from the Cross,' the 'Conversion of St. Paul,' 'Bacchus and the Vintage,' and 'A Man holding a tablet.' But it is by his designs for woodcuts, some of which he himself engraved, that Cousin is now best known. The most important of these are the designs which he made for the Bible published by Jean Le Clerc in 1596; the 'Entrée de Henri II. à Paris,' 1549; the 'Entrée de Henri II. et Catherine de Médicis à Rouen,' 1551; the 'Éloge et Tombeau de Henri II.,' 1560; the 'Livre de Coutumes de Sens,' 1551; the 'Vsaige et description de l'Holomètre,' 1555; the 'Songe de Poliphile,' 1561; and the 'Métamorphoses' and 'Epistres' of Ovid of 1566 and 1571. In 1560 he published his 'Livre de Perspective,' and in 1571 his 'Livre de Pourtraicture,' which treats of the proportions of the human figure, and displays considerable knowledge.

M. Ambroise Firmin-Didot published in 1872 an 'Étude sur Jean Cousin,' which is very complete and full of interest, and in 1873 a folio 'Recueil des Œuvres choisies de Jean Cousin.'

COUSINET, CATHERINE É. See LEMPEREUR.

COUSSIN, HARDOUIN, was a French engraver, born at Aix in 1709, who, according to Basan, was resident at that place in 1760. He engraved at Lyons several plates after Puget, Rembrandt, and others. Nagler states that the name H. Coussin is found on some mezzotints which appear to be the work of an earlier artist.

COUSTAIN, PIERRE, was a painter and sculptor at the Court of Philip the Good. His name occurs in the records of the brotherhood of St. Luke at Bruges in the year 1450 as Painter Royal.

COUTAN, AMABLE PAUL, was a French historical painter, born in Paris in 1792. He studied under Gros, and obtaining the Academy pension was thus enabled later on to improve himself at Rome. Returning to his native country he produced works, representing chiefly classical and mythological subjects, which realized considerable prices. He took a part also in the labour of decorating with religious subjects the church of Notre-Dame-de-Lorette. He died in Paris in 1837.

COUTANT, JEAN LOUIS DENIS, a French engraver, born at Argenteuil in 1776, was a scholar of Mechel of Basle. Among his principal works are the plates for the great work on Egypt, for the travels of Baron von Humboldt in the Cordilleiras, for the fossil bones of Cuvier, for the 'Anatomy of the Brain' by Langenbeck, and for Freycinet's 'Voyage round the World.' The date of his death has not been ascertained.

COUTELLIER, —, a French engraver of the latter part of the 18th century, is known by his theatrical portraits, the best of which are those of Mdle. Olivier as Cherubino, and Mdle. Contat as Suzanne in the 'Mariage de Figaro.'

COUTURE, THOMAS, a French historical and genre painter, was born at Senlis (Oise) in 1815. He studied under Gros and Paul Delaroche, and in 1837 obtained the second 'Grand Prix de Rome.' His first appearance at the Salon was in 1840, when he exhibited 'A young Venetian after an Orgy.' In 1847 appeared the picture (now in the Luxembourg) on which his fame chiefly rests, 'The Romans in the Decadence of the Empire.' He obtained medals in 1844, 1847, and 1855, and the Legion of Honour in 1848. He decorated the Chapel of the Virgin in the church of St. Eustache, Paris. Couture did not live on terms of amity with the art world, as he became involved in disputes, carried on with considerable warmth, as to the relation of his art with that of the French classical school. He died at Villiers-le-Bel in 1879. Besides the works already named, the following are among his chief productions:

Jocunde. 1844.

The Love of Money. 1844. (Toulouse Museum.)

The Falconer. 1855.

Voluntary Enlisting.

Baptism of the Prince Imperial.

Damocles. 1872.

COUVAY, JEAN, a French engraver, was born at Arles in 1622. He worked almost entirely with the graver, with an easy but delicate touch, his style in some points resembling that of Villanena. He sometimes marked his plates

We have by him the following out of numerous cuts:

Louis XIV. on Horseback, preceded by Fame; after S. Bourdon.

The Virgin and Child; after Raphael.

St. John in the Desert; after the same.

St. Benedict, tempted by the Devil, presenting a Crucifix; after Guerchino.

The Virgin; after Blanchard.

A Magdalen; half-length; after Lebrun.

The Ascension; after J. Stella.

The Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew; after Poussin.

Mary, Queen of Scots; her execution seen through the window.

A set of small prints, called 'Les Tableaux de la Pénitence'; after J. Chauveau.

Portrait of Nicolas Sevin; after Van Mol.

COUVERCHEL, ALFRED, was born at Marseille-Petit in 1834. He studied under Picot and Horace Vernet. He made some advances in his master's footsteps, and gained a certain ease and freedom, but was unable to liberate himself from a tendency to rawness in his colouring, a fault which is apparent in his 'Battle of Magenta,' painted in 1861. He died at Croissy in 1867.

COUWENBERG, ABRAHAM JOHANNES, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Delft in 1806, and died at Arnhem in 1844.

COUWENBERG, CHRISTIAEN VAN. See KOUWENBERG.

COUWENBERG, HENRICUS WILHELMUS, a Dutch line-engraver and draughtsman, the brother of Abraham Johannes Couwenberg, was born at the Hague in 1814, and died at Amsterdam in 1845. He was a pupil of F. L. Huygens and of Taurel. Besides engraving some portraits, he began a plate of 'Mignon and her Father,' after Ary Scheffer, which was finished by Alphonse François, and another after G. Dou's 'Menagère Hollandaise,' which was completed by J. W. Kaiser.

COVYN, REINIER and ISREL, were two brothers, who were natives of Brabant, and flourished at Dordrecht about the middle of the seventeenth century. The elder, Reinier, painted market women, with dead game, vegetables, flowers, fruit, &c. A landscape, by him, is in the Brunswick Gallery. Isrel, the younger, attempted history, but was more successful in portraits. Neither of them went beyond mediocrity.

COWEN, WILLIAM, was a landscape painter, who exhibited views in Ireland at the British Institution in 1823, and sent landscape scenes in Switzerland, Italy, and France to the Academy until 1839. In 1824 he published a series of six Italian and Swiss views, and in 1848 'Six Weeks in Corsica,' with etchings by himself.

COWPER, DOUGLAS, was born at Gibraltar in 1817. When seventeen years of age he won from his parents—who were unwilling to allow him to become a painter—a reluctant consent to his leaving home, and making his way to London, he obtained admission to the Royal Academy schools, and soon carried off the silver medal for the best copy in painting. His first exhibited works, produced when only twenty years of age, were a portrait and the 'Last Interview,' followed in 1838 by 'Shylock, Antonio and Bassanio,' and in 1839 by his master-piece, 'Othello relating his Adventures.' He exhibited no more at the Academy, and he painted but five more pictures, four of which he sent to the Suffolk Street Gallery. He died in Guernsey in 1839, at the early age of twenty-two, having lived only just long enough to justify his own determination to be an artist, and to show the world what great things he might have done.

COX, DAVID, an eminent landscape painter both in water-colours and in oil, was born in Deritend, a suburb of Birmingham, on the 29th of April, 1783. As a boy, he was taught to wield the large hammer used in his father's trade, that of a whitesmith; but, as his mother feared he was too delicate for this work, he was apprenticed in 1798 to a maker of lockets and brooches, which he adorned with miniature designs. He was, however, not very long engaged in this field of industry, for his master died soon after he was apprenticed. He next obtained employment as a colour-grinder to the scene-painters of the Birmingham Theatre, then under the management of the elder Macready. From this subordinate post he very soon rose to assist in the painting of scenes, and on one occasion designed and executed the entire scenery for a new play about to be produced. On the public announcement of the piece, however, he was disappointed at seeing the whole credit of his share in its production given to an imaginary artist of London fame, and remonstrated against being thus robbed of his well-earned honours. Cox did not remain much longer connected with the management of the Birmingham and Leicester Theatres. In 1804 he came to London, and for a time obtained employment in the scenic department at Astley's Theatre, but only as a temporary resource till other arrangements more suited to his habits, which were of a homely turn, could be made. Shortly after, he retired into private life, and made a scanty income by teaching drawing, principally at schools, and by making sketches, which he sold for a few shillings each, but which are now worth more than as many pounds. At length a wealthy patron appeared who sought him out in his humble retreat at Dulwich, and from this point his fortunes began to move in advance. His pupils increased in number, and in remunerativeness, and his sketches began to command higher prices. In 1805 he took his first trip into North Wales, and visited some of the most romantic spots of the Principality, which was ever afterwards his favourite haunt.

David Cox was elected a member of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1813, and in the year following he was appointed a teacher at the Military College at Farnham. This occupation, however, did not suit him, and, probably for the sake of the surrounding scenery, he removed to Hereford in 1814, and in the same year published a 'Treatise on Landscape Painting and Effect in Water-Colours.' He returned again to London in 1827, but finally retired to Harborne, near Birmingham, in 1841, where he resided until his death, which occurred on the 7th of June, 1859.

Although best known by his water-colour drawings, David Cox painted also in oil, and in this method of treatment he derived much benefit from the lessons of William Müller. The total number of his oil pictures has been estimated by competent judges at a little over one hundred, of which fifty-seven were exhibited at Liverpool in 1875. Several of them were sold in the Gillott sale in 1872 for very large amounts. His best works in oil, and the dates at which they were executed, are as follow:

Outskirts of a Wood. 1843.
Washing Day. 1843.
Caer Cennen Castle. 1844.
Vale of Clwyd. 1846 and 1848.
Peace and War. 1846.
Lancaster Castle. 1846.
Counting the Flock. 1847.
The Old Mill at Bettws-y-coed. 1847.
Going to the Hayfield. 1849.
Collecting the Flocks. 1849.
The Skylark. 1849.
The Welsh Funeral. 1850.
The Sea-shore at Rhyl. 1854-55.

The finest among the innumerable drawings which David Cox produced in the course of his fifty years' practice of art may also here be mentioned:

Cader Idris. 1828.
Lancaster Sands. 1835.
Ulverstone Sands. 1835.
Hardwick Hall (three interior views). 1839.
The Stubble-field with Gleaners. 1843.
Bolsover Castle. 1843.
The Flood at Corwen. 1846.
The Outskirts of a Forest. 1846.
Caer Cennen Castle (the 'Rain Cloud'). 1847.
Windsor Park. 1846.
Bolton Abbey. 1847.
The Skylark. 1848.
Beeston Castle. 1849.
The Welsh Funeral. 1850.
Broom Gatherers on Chat Moss. 1854.
Peat Gatherers returning from the Moors. 1856.
The Falls of the Llugwy. 1859.

Besides several 'Hayfield' and 'Harvest' subjects, full of atmosphere and summer sunshine.

David Cox was the true child of nature. There was a native simplicity in his character, and a masculine vigour about his touch, which have never been surpassed; and his effects, whether of mountain or dell or fruitful plain, of foaming torrent or meandering stream, such as so grandly diversify the scenery of this favoured isle, were always striking, and often imposing, though they never overstepped the modesty of nature.

Wales was the country above all others which Cox loved, and in the neighbourhood of Bettws-y-coed he worked for years. "The little inn there, 'The Oak,' (writes the author of 'Our Living Painters,' in 1859,) is indeed a classic spot, and troops of painters now flock thither in the season, sit in the parlour whose wall David Cox has himself decorated in fresco, and with pipe, and jug, and talk while the long summer twilights pleasantly away." There he painted for the 'Royal Oak' the sign-board which in 1880 became the subject of a law-suit, which happily ended in the picture remaining in the inn for which it was intended.

Forty-two drawings by David Cox were bequeathed to the British Museum by Mr. John Henderson in 1878, and there are twenty-two in the South Kensington Museum, but most of them are comparatively unimportant. Eighteen examples were exhibited at the Manchester Art Treasures Exhibition in 1857, upwards of twenty in the International Exhibition of 1862, and thirty-two in the Leeds Exhibition of 1868. Special exhibitions of his works were held at Hampstead in 1858, at the German Gallery in London in 1859, at Manchester in 1870, and at the Liverpool Art Club in 1875. Out of this last gathering arose the project of a Cox 'Liber Studiorum,' in which the plates were to have been engraved by the painter's friend Edward Radclyffe, but the death of the engraver caused the work to be abandoned when only three plates—'Dudley Castle,' the 'Outskirts of a Forest,' and 'Bala Lake,'—had been completed.

A 'Memoir of David Cox' by Mr. Neal Solly was published in 1875, and a 'Biography of David Cox' by William Hall in 1881.

COXIE, MICHEL VAN, (COCKIE, COXCIE, COXIS, COXCIE or COXCYEN,) a Flemish painter, was born at Mechlin in 1499. He was first instructed by his father, Michiel van Coxie the elder, and afterwards at Brussels by Barend van Orley, with whom he visited Rome, and studied especially the works of Raphael. Indeed, his almost servile imitation of that master procured for him later the appellation of the Flemish Raphael. His talents brought him soon into notice, so that he was engaged for the execution of several important works in that city, and when he became acquainted with Vasari, he had already painted two chapels in Santa Maria dell' Anima. On his return to Flanders he was, in 1539, received a member of the Guild of St. Luke at Mechlin, and came to be much employed. There are many of his works in the churches of Brussels and Antwerp that establish the real worth of his talents. He also painted several large works for the Emperor Charles V. and for Philip II., King of Spain, by whom he was chosen court painter. He died at Mechlin in 1592. The following are his most important works:

Antwerp.	Museum.	Martyrdom of St. Sebastian. 1575.
"	"	Martyrdom of St. George.
"	"	Martyrdom of St. Margaret.
"	"	The Triumph of Christ.
Berlin.	Gallery.	The Adoration of the Lamb.

Berlin.	Gallery.	The Almighty. (Parts of the altar-piece by the Van Eycks at Ghent, which was copied by him for Philip II. of Spain. The rest of the copy is in the Munich Gallery, and in St. Bavo at Ghent.)
Bruges.	Ch. of the Jesuits.	St. Francis Xavier preaching to the Heathen.
Brussels.	Museum.	The Last Supper.
"	"	Death of the Virgin.
"	"	Christ derided by the Jews.
"	S. Gudule.	The Resurrection of Lazarus.
"	"	Christ washing the feet of the Apostles.
Ghent.	S. James.	Christ on the Mount of Olives.
"	"	The Nativity.
"	"	Christ on the Cross between the two Thieves.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Resurrection of Christ.
"	"	St. Cecilia.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Scenes from the Life of the Virgin.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	The Annunciation.
		Virgin and Child.

He also designed 32 subjects from the Fable of Cupid and Psyche, which are amongst his best works. They have been engraved by Agostino Veneziano and the Master of the Die. In conjunction with Barend van Orley, he undertook the direction of the execution of some tapestry made after Raphael's cartoons. His son, RAPHAEL VAN COXIE, who was received as a Master in the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1585, was much inferior to his father. He was born at Mechlin in 1540, and died at Brussels in 1616.

COYPEL FAMILY.

Noël (1623—1707). Married
1st, Madeleine Héroult (1635—1682)	2nd, Anne Françoise Perin (died 1728).
Antoine (1661—1722).	Noël Nicolas (1692—1734).
Charles Antoine (1694—1752).

COYPEL, ANTOINE, the son of Noël Coypel, was born in Paris in 1661. His father instructed him in the art of painting, and took him when but eleven years of age to Rome, where he had been appointed director of the French Academy. But neither the masterpieces of Rome, nor the example of his father, could inspire him with a feeling for the truly grand and beautiful. He preferred the style and counsel of Bernini to the study of Raphael and the Carracci; and the depravity of his taste was confirmed by his returning to Paris at the age of eighteen; that is to say, he left Rome precisely at the time that he should have gone there. He was only nineteen when he painted his picture of the 'Assumption' for the cathedral of Notre-Dame, and but twenty when he was received into the Academy. He was taken into the employment of the court, and became one of the most popular painters of his time. It is curious to compare the criticism of two of the most esteemed of the French biographers respecting the works of this painter. "No artist," says D'Argenville, "possessed the poetry of the art in a higher degree than Antoine Coypel. Formed by nature for the grandest compositions, the fertility of his genius displays itself through all his works. He was graceful in the airs of his heads, painted children in the greatest perfection, and was, above all, attentive in expressing with propriety the passions of the soul." A less favourable judgment is pronounced by Watelet: "Because," says that writer, "he was equal to the production of a great machine in the theatrical style, he was conceived to possess the poetry of the art; because he gave to his heads a physiognomy purely French, they are thought to be beautiful. His coquetry is called grace, a grace to be learned of the dancing-master. He consulted the comedian Baron for the attitudes of his most exalted characters, and travestied a hero of antiquity into a puppet of the theatre."

It cannot, however, be denied that Antoine Coypel possessed those qualities which are found in the artists most admired in his country, qualities which perhaps were necessary to the gratification of national feeling, and the acquisition of popularity. His principal works in Paris were, 'Christ among the Doctors,' and the 'Assumption,' in the cathedral of Notre-Dame; and 'Christ healing the Blind at Jericho,' at the Carthusians. He was much employed in decorating the royal palaces, and was made principal painter to the king in 1716, besides holding other important posts. The Louvre possesses his 'Athaliah driven from the Temple,' 'Susannah accused by the Elders,' 'Esther before Ahasuerus,' and 'Rebecca and Eliezer,' as well as between two and three hundred drawings and sketches by him. His own portrait by himself is in the Uffizi, Florence; the Lille Gallery possesses a picture of 'Athaliah et Roxane,' taken from the 'Bajazet' of Racine; and the Bordeaux Museum, a 'Triumph of Apollo.' In the Dublin National Gallery is a picture of 'Christ healing one possessed by a Devil,' dated 1717. Antoine Coypel died in Paris in 1722. We have by him several etchings, executed in a finished and masterly style, among which are the following:

Melchizedek presenting the Bread to Abraham.
Judith; half-length; finished by Simoneau.
The Baptism of Christ.
Ecce Homo; finished by Simoneau.
The Virgin and Infant, in an oval.
The Virgin suckling the Infant.
St. Cecilia.
Cupid conquering Pan.
Bacchus and Ariadne; finished by G. Audran; very fine. 1693.
The Triumph of Galatea; finished by Simoneau; fine.
The Head of Democritus. 1692.
The Portrait of La Voisin, who was broken on the wheel for poisoning; two plates, large and small.

COYPEL, CHARLES ANTOINE, a painter and etcher, who was the son of Antoine Coypel, was born in Paris in 1694. He was instructed by his father, whose style he followed, although in a very inferior manner. He quitted historical subjects to paint bambochades, but was not successful even with these, his taste for the theatre frequently betraying itself in his pictures in the artificial composition and in the forced position of his figures. There are two specimens of his work to be seen in the Louvre. He executed a portrait of himself at about the age of fifty, in which he is represented leaning against a table, and holding a porte-crayon. In fact, his best works as a painter are his portraits; that of Adrienne Le Couvreur has been admirably engraved by Pierre Imbert Drevet. C. A. Coypel etched a series of the Muses, a caricature 'Histoire d'une D  vote,' and some other subjects    la mode, which are of but little interest. He died in Paris in 1752.

COYPEL, NO  L, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1628. He was first placed under the tuition of an artist named Poncet, at Orleans; but at the age of fourteen he became a scholar of Quilrier, under whom he acquired sufficient ability to be employed by Charles Errard, who was charged with the superintendence of the works at the Louvre. It was not long before he distinguished himself, and he was received into the Academy in 1663. The picture he painted for his reception was 'Cain and Abel.' It was about the same time that he painted his celebrated picture of the 'Martyrdom of St. James,' for the cathedral of Notre-Dame. He was now regarded as one of the ablest artists of France, and was appointed by the king director of the French Academy at Rome. Thither he went in 1672, and presided over the Academy with great reputation for three years. It was during his residence there that he painted his four easel pictures for the king's cabinet, representing 'Solon explaining his laws to the Athenians,' 'Trajan giving public audience to the Romans,' 'Ptolemy Philadelphus giving liberty to the Jews,' and 'Alexander Severus distributing corn to the Roman People.' These pictures were publicly exposed at Rome in the Rotonda, and gained him great reputation. They are now placed in the gallery of the Louvre, where is also preserved his picture of 'Cain and Abel,' as well as several other paintings representing classical subjects. He appears to have imitated in these works the style of Poussin and Le Sueur. His colouring is tender, warm, and clear, and his execution careful. After his return to Paris, Coypel was employed on several fresco paintings in the Tuileries. His last work, the fresco of the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' over the high-altar of the church of the Invalides, was executed at the advanced age of 78, and may be considered as one of his best productions. A picture by him of 'Susannah accused of Adultery' is in the Madrid Gallery; and the Bordeaux Museum has an 'Allegory' by him. Many of his paintings have been engraved by Poilly, Duchange, Cochin, and others. No  l Coypel married in 1659 MADELEINE H  RAULT, the sister of Charles H  rault, the landscape painter, and herself an artist of ability. She was born in 1635, and died in Paris in 1682. In 1685 Coypel married, as his second wife, ANNE FRAN  OISE PERIN, a young artist whose works have long since been forgotten. He died in Paris in 1707. His widow married Fran  ois Bonart, a painter and engraver, and died in Paris in 1728. No  l Coypel has etched the following plates:

The Virgin caressing the Infant Jesus.
The same subject; larger.
The Holy Family.

COYPEL, NO  L NICOLAS, a painter and etcher, born in Paris in 1692, was a younger son of No  l Coypel. He received his first instruction from his father, whom he had the misfortune to lose when he was fifteen years of age. It does not appear that he had the advantage of seeing Italy; he studied from the best works of art in his own country, and became of sufficient celebrity to be received into the Academy in 1720, when he was twenty-eight years of age. His reception picture was 'Neptune carrying off Amymone.' Amongst his best works were, the ceiling of the chapel of the Virgin in the church of St. Saviour, and the altarpiece in the same chapel, representing the Assumption. His 'Triumph of Amphitrite,' painted in 1727, was considered the best work that entered the lists for the royal prize then offered. There are several other works of this artist in the churches of Paris. He died in Paris in 1734. We have the four following plates etched by him:

St. Theresa, with several Angels.

The Triumph of Amphitrite.

Jupiter and Antiope.

A young Woman caressing a Dove; afterwards finished by N. Edelinck.

COZENS, ALEXANDER, a natural son of Peter the Great and an Englishwoman from Deptford, was born in Russia at the beginning of the 18th century, but studied painting in Italy, and then proceeded, in 1746, to England, where he died, in London, in 1786. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1772 to 1781. Some tastefully-designed pen-and-ink sketches by him are in the British Museum, but he chiefly devoted himself to giving instruction and writing various books on art, adorned with numerous illustrations, among which are 'The Principles of Beauty, relative to the Human Head' (1778), and 'The Shape, Skeleton, and Foliage of Trees' (1771). The South Kensington Museum has two Landscapes by him.

COZENS, JOHN ROBERT, the son of Alexander Cozens, was born in London in 1752. He visited Italy, and after his return, in 1783, painted in water-colours with great success. He possessed great taste in representing scenes of a still, tender, or melancholy nature. In 1794 he became deranged, and died in 1799. The South Kensington Museum has five examples of his work.

COZZA, CARLO, was the son of Giovanni Battista Cozza, and was born at Ferrara about the year 1700. He was instructed by his father, in whose style he painted several pictures for the churches of his native city. In the Chiesa Nuova is a picture by him of the 'Annunciation;' in Santa Lucia of 'St. Anthony the Abbot;' and in San Matteo of 'St. Francis of Paola.' He died at Ferrara in 1769.

COZZA, FRANCESCO, a painter and etcher, was a Calabrian, born at Istilo in 1605. He went early in life to Rome, and became a scholar of Domenichino, to whom he attached himself by the most marked affection, and, according to the Abbate Titi, finished some of the works of that master after his death. He was received into the Academy at Rome in 1650, and died in that city in 1682. One of his best works is the 'Vergine del Riscatto,' in the church of Santa Francesca Romana at Rome. The Copenhagen Museum possesses a 'Landscape, with Hagar and the Angel,' by him. He etched several excellent plates in the style of Pietro del Po, as:

St. Peter. 1630.

Cimon and Pera.

Christ sleeping and adored by Angels.

St. Mary Magdalene. 1650.

COZZA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Milan in 1676. While he was yet young he settled at Ferrara, where he was much employed for the churches. Without great correctness of design, he possessed a copious invention, and an unusual facility of handling. Of his numerous works at Ferrara, the following are the principal. In the cathedral, the 'Immaculate Conception;' at the Ognissanti, the 'Holy Family;' in Santa Lucia, the 'Annunciation;' and in San Guglielmo, the 'Assumption of the Virgin.' He died at Ferrara in 1742.

COZZALE, GRAZIO, (or COSSALE,) was a native of Brescia, who flourished about the year 1605. He is said by Cozzando, in his 'Ristretto della Storia Bresciana,' to have possessed an uncommon readiness of invention, and in his larger works appears to have imitated the style of Palma without having sunk into his mannerism. His principal works are, the 'Adoration of the Magi,' in S. Maria delle Grazie, at Brescia; and the 'Presentation in the Temple,' in S. Maria de' Miracoli. This artist was assassinated by one of his sons.

CRAASBECKE. See CRAESBEECK.

CRABBE, FRANS, (or VAN ESPIEGHEM,) was a Flemish painter, who became a master of the Guild of St. Luke at Mechlin in 1501, and is supposed to be the same as FRANS MINNEBROER. He was the son of Jan Crabbe, a painter, but it is not known under whom he studied. He painted in tempera, and possessed the faculty of giving his works so much vigour that they seem to be oil paintings. His heads are in the style of Quintin Massys, but in all other respects his portraits resemble those of Lucas van Leyden. His principal work was a triptych painted over the high altar of the church of the Franciscan convent at Mechlin, the principal subject of which was the 'Saviour on the Cross,' but this perished when the church was sacked by the Gueux in the 16th century. Crabbe died at Mechlin in 1553, leaving a son, Jan Crabbe, who was also a painter, and who died at Mechlin in 1576.

Crabbe is probably identical with the engraver who is known as the 'Master of the Crab,' by whom we have 50 plates, mostly in the style of Lucas van Leyden, but in some cases in that of Jan van Mabuse. They are described in Bartsch's 'Peintre-Graveur,' vii. 527, and Passavant's 'Peintre-Graveur,' iii. 15, and among them the following are the best:

The Annunciation.

The Nativity.

Christ taking leave of His Mother.

The Passion; fourteen plates.

Christ on the Cross.

Ecce Homo.

The Four Evangelists; four plates.

Jephthah's Daughter.

Esther before Ahasuerus.

Lucretia.

CRABETH, ADRIAEN, of Gouda. Three portraits, in one picture, bearing the date 1560, attributed to him, are in the Darmstadt Gallery.

CRABETH, DIRK and WOUTER, two brothers, were natives of Gouda. They flourished about the years 1560-1620, and surpassed all their predecessors in the art. Their principal works were fourteen of the seventy-five windows of the great church of St. John at Gouda. The best are the 'Baptism of Christ,' 'Our Saviour driving the Buyers and Sellers from the Temple,' and the 'Last Supper,' all by Dirk Crabeth; and 'The Offering of Elijah before the Priests of Baal,' the 'Nativity,' and the 'Sacrilege of Heliodorus,' all by Wouter Crabeth, the last-named being his master-piece, and the finest of all the windows. Although fine compositions, they are not in the best style of the art, and are rather poor in colour. Wouter visited France and Italy, and left in every town where he resided one of his glass-paintings. He distinguished himself by the light and brilliancy of his colouring, whilst Dirk excelled more in his vigorous touch.

CRABETH, WOUTER PIETERSZON, the younger, a grandson of the artist of the same names, was a scholar of Cornelis Ketel. After visiting France and Italy, and studying the works of the best masters in Rome, he settled down in Gouda in 1628 as a portrait and historical painter. In 1628 he painted for the church of Purmerende an 'Assumption of the Virgin,' and in 1644 a 'Feast of a Shooting Club,' which is still preserved at Gouda.

CRABETJE. See ASSELIJN.

CRACO, JAN, a Dutch portrait painter, who flourished in the latter half of the 18th century, was a native of Utrecht. He afterwards resided at Amsterdam, in which city he died.

CRADOCK, LUKE, an English painter of birds, dead game, and animals, in which he particularly excelled. He was born at Somerton, near Ilchester, about the year 1660, and served an apprenticeship to a house-painter in London. Without the help of an instructor, he became a faithful delineator of birds and animals, which he painted with a freedom and a fire that entitled him to more distinction and a more liberal remuneration than he received during his life. After his death, as has but too frequently been the lot of artists, his works were sold at three or four times the price he received for them when living. He died in London in 1717.

CRADOCK, MARY. See BEALE.

CRAESBEECK, JOOST VAN, (CRAASBECKE, or GRAASBECK,) the pot companion and scholar of Adriaan Brouwer, was born at Neerlinter, in South Brabant, in 1608. He was bred a baker, and had settled at Antwerp in that capacity at the time when Brouwer visited that city. Alike in their habits of debauchery, an acquaintance sprang up between them, and Brouwer became Craesbeeck's inmate on quitting the protection of Rubens. Craesbeeck forsook his oven, and became the disciple of his friend, and it is surprising that a person who had never practised painting until he had reached the age of thirty should have arrived at a proficiency which is sufficient to rank him among the meritorious artists of his country, particularly as a colourist. He was inscribed as a citizen of Antwerp in 1631. In 1633-34 he entered the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp, and in 1651 that at Brussels, where he was still living in 1654. The date of his death is not known, but it was certainly before 1662. His paintings represent scenes in taverns, guard-room subjects, low fights, and drunken brawls. Those of his works that are of a nobler character are executed in the style of Rembrandt, and painted with a fine chiaroscuro, a delicate brush, and an excellent colouring.

Among his paintings, many of which are signed J. V. C. B., there are the following:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Portrait of Hugo de Groot.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Peasant with felt hat.
Madrid.	Gallery.	The Marriage Contract.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Artist himself painting a portrait.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Le Lever.
Schleissheim.	Aren-berg Gallery.	The Artist's Studio, with Brouwer's portrait.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Soldiers and Women talking.

CRAEYER, GASPARD DE. See DE CRAEYER.

CRAFT, WILLIAM H., an enamel painter, exhibited fancy and allegorical subjects and portraits at the Royal Academy from 1774 to 1781. He died after 1787. He was most probably a brother of Thomas Craft, who was an artist at the Bow Porcelain Works.

CRAIG, WILLIAM MARSHALL, exhibited at times at the Royal Academy, from 1788 till 1827. He first lived at Manchester, but settled in London about 1791. He was painter in water-colours to the Queen, and miniature painter to the Duke and Duchess of York. He also excelled as a draughts-man on wood, and as a book illustrator, and he published in 1821 'Lectures on Drawing, Painting, and Engraving.' He is said to have been a nephew of Thomson, the poet. 'The Wounded Soldier' by him is in the Water-Colour Gallery at the South Kensington Museum.

CRAMER, NICOLAAS, a Dutch painter, was born at Leyden in 1670. According to Van Gool, he was for some time a scholar of Willem Mieris, but afterwards studied under Karel De Moor, whose manner he followed. He painted subjects taken from private life, and portraits in small. His pictures of that description are seen in the best collections in Holland, and are deservedly admired. He died in 1710.

CRAMER, PETER, who was born at Copenhagen in 1726, was a self-taught artist who prepared the drawings for the illustration of Norden's 'Travels in Egypt,' and then became a decorative and theatrical painter. Together with this occupation he executed popular Danish scenes in the style of Teniers, and several of his pictures were engraved by Haas, Kleve, and Clemens. He died at Copenhagen in 1782.

CRANACH, HANS, appears to have been a third son of Lucas Cranach the elder. Schuchardt, who discovered his existence, credits him with an altarpiece at Weimar, signed with the monogram H. C., and dated 1537. He was still living in 1553.

CRANACH, JOHANN LUCAS, the eldest son of Lucas Cranach the elder, was born about 1503. He died at Bologna in 1536. Luther mentions his death in his 'Table Talk,' and Johann Stigel, a contemporary poet, celebrates him as a painter.

CRANACH, LUCAS, (or KRANACH). The proper name of this master is a matter of some uncertainty. Of late years it has been thought to be SUNDER, and he is to be found in most histories under that name, but Herr Warnecke ('Lucas Cranach der Aeltere,' 1879,) has recently brought forward evidence to show that it was MULLER, as formerly supposed. This evidence, however, chiefly consists in a phrase in a narrative of Valentin Sternboke, written in 1609, which runs as follows—"And the Emperor asked him how he was called, and he replied that he was called by his parents Lucas Muller, out of the town of Cranach in Franconia, but on account of his art he was styled Lucas the Painter, and the Elector of Saxony had named him, from his native land, Lucas Cranach." The evidence for the name of Sunder likewise rests on very slight foundation.

But whatever be his name, he was certainly born at Kronach in the bishopric of Bamberg on the 4th of October, 1472. He is said to have learnt his art from his father, who is supposed also to have been a painter, though none of his works remain. It is not known where his early years were spent, but it is surmised that he lived some time in Gotha, where he married a certain Barbara Brengbier, who, although affirmed by tradition to have been extremely ugly, is nevertheless celebrated as having been a most excellent wife and mother. He is stated to have accompanied the Elector Frederick the Wise to the Holy Land in 1493, but this is not certain. In 1504 we find him established at Wittenberg as court painter to Frederick the Wise, who in 1508 bestowed on him a coat of arms and patent of nobility. He was evidently a man of importance in Wittenberg, for he was twice (in 1537 and 1540) elected Burgomaster of the town, where he carried on, besides his large art workshops, a book-printing business and an apothecary's shop. His house in Wittenberg, called the "Adler," was standing till 1871, when it was unfortunately destroyed by fire.

In 1509 Cranach was sent by the Elector on an embassy to the art-loving Emperor Maximilian, but nothing is known as to their intercourse, except that he took the portrait of the young Prince, afterwards Charles V. Cranach, however, afterwards executed some of the drawings in what is called 'Maximilian's Prayer-book,' so one may imagine that some relations continued to exist between them. Cranach held the office of court painter to the House of Saxony under three successive Electors, the last being the noble but ill-fated Frederick the Magnanimous, to whom he was so much attached, that after the battle of Mühlberg in 1547, he shared and enlivened his captivity at Augsburg, being also, it is said, instrumental in procuring his release from Charles V. In 1552, when the Elector was at last set free, Cranach, then a very old man, followed his lord to Weimar, where our master died at the age of 80, on the 16th of October, 1553.

Lucas Cranach may be regarded as pre-eminently the painter of the German Reformation. Although not approaching Dürer and Holbein in intellectual power and æsthetic perfection, he was moved even more deeply than they by the religious influences of the times. The influences of the Renaissance were also at work in his art, as seen by the numerous classical subjects he has depicted so naïvely; and moreover, there may be traced in it a sort of homely humour, which no doubt caused Kugler to compare him to Hans Sachs. He was the intimate friend of Luther, whom he has several times represented in his pictures, and embracing his doctrine warmly, he endeavoured to set it forth in his art.

His reputed paintings are somewhat unequal in merit, but this is chiefly because many of those ascribed to him are merely atelier-works, done under his direction by his sons and pupils. Among the most important of his paintings may be mentioned:

- | | |
|---------------------------------|---|
| Augsburg. Rathhaus. | Samson and Delilah. |
| Berlin. Gallery. | Venus and Cupid stung by a Bee. |
| Carlsruhe.  | The Judgment of Paris. |
| Florence. Uffizi. | Adam and Eve. |
| Gotha. Gallery. | The Fall and Redemption of Man. |
| Leipsic.  | The Repose in Egypt. 1504.
(Formerly in the Sciarra Palace, Rome.) |
| " Museum. | A Dying Man. |
| London. Bering Coll. | Christ receiving Little Children. |
| Munich. Gallery. | Woman taken in Adultery. |
| Petersburg. Hermitage. | Madonna under the Apple-tree. |
| Schneeberg. Stadtkirche. | The Crucifixion, Last Supper,
&c. (an altar-piece). |
| Weimar. Stadtkirche. | Crucifixion, with portraits of Luther, Melancthon, and the painter himself. |
| Wörlitz. Gothic House. | St. George and the Dragon. |

Several of these subjects were treated frequently by Cranach, and replicas of them are to be found in many galleries. It is indeed very difficult to distinguish his works from those of the master now known as the 'Pseudo-Grünewald,' and from those of his son Lucas Cranach the younger. Lucas Cranach the elder, as he is called to distinguish him from his son, always painted in oils on wooden panels. His colouring is warm and rich, but his drawing is usually defective. He excelled in portraiture, and evidently delighted in it, for he often introduces portraits of his friends into his pictures. His female portraits have a sort of naïve grace that renders them very pleasing. There is one by him in the National Gallery of a young girl in elaborate costume, which is entirely characteristic.

He was fond also of drawing birds and animals, and often depicted hunting scenes. His art indeed may be defined as thoroughly national, homely and individual, marked by cheerful fancy and quaint invention, sometimes bordering on caricature. He had three sons, who are believed to have been painters, but only his second son, Lucas Cranach, the younger, acquired any reputation. Cranach usually signed both his paintings and engravings with the crest granted him by the Elector Frederick—a flying dragon with a crown upon its head. He is said to have painted so rapidly that on his tombstone he was described as 'celerrimus pictor.'

But it is as an engraver rather than as a painter that Cranach is best known. Heller describes more than 800 prints by him. These are mostly wood-cuts, but he executed also a few copper-plates. These are now rare, though some of his wood-engravings are often met with. Drawings also by him are to be found in most public collections.

CRANACH, LUCAS, the younger, was the second son of Lucas Cranach the elder. He was born in 1515, and received his education in art in his father's workshops. He is weaker in drawing than his father, and softer in colouring, but it is difficult to distinguish their works, for he signed with the same mark, the flying dragon, though, according to Schuchardt, the dragon of the son may be known by its wings being folded. All pictures after the date 1553, (that of his father's death,) may be safely ascribed to him, and many such exist. J. A. Crowe, in the last edition of Kugler's 'Handbook,' mentions several in the principal church at Wittenberg. One of these he describes as a singular work bearing "distinct reference to the state of the Church in his time." It represents the vineyard of the Lord, "one half of which is being destroyed by the clergy of the Romish Church, whilst the heroes of the Reformation are employed in cultivating the other," and is dated 1569. By this it is clear that he must have had the same warm Protestant sympathies as his father. Other paintings by him are:

Berlin.	Gallery.	The Fountain of Youth.	1546.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Preaching of John the Baptist.	1549.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Crucifixion.
"	"	Portraits of the Electors Maurice and Augustus.
Leipsic.	Museum.	Crucifixion.	1557.
Munich.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child with Grapes.
Nordhausen.		Raising of Lazarus.
Wittenberg.	Stadtkirche.	Nativity.
"	"	Crucifixion.

He, like his father, appears to have been a man of importance in Wittenberg, for he also filled the office of Burgomaster. He died at Wittenberg in 1586. No engravings by him are known, but it is believed that he furnished the designs for the woodcuts in Luther's translation of the Bible, printed at Leipsic in 1542, as well as for some portraits, among which is a series of the Princes of Saxony. (See Passavant's 'Peintre-Graveur,' iv. 24.)

CRANCH, JOHN, who was born at Kingsbridge, Devon, in 1751, practised historical and portrait painting as an amateur, with no great success, in London and Bath, where he died in 1821. His best work was the 'Death of Chatterton.' He excelled in so-called 'poker pictures.' The South Kensington Museum possesses a work by him, entitled 'Playing with Baby' (1795).

CRANE, THOMAS, was born at Chester in 1808. Showing early a taste for art, in 1824 he came up to London, where he joined the schools of the Academy, and remained two years, obtaining, in 1825, the medal for his drawings from the antique. Returning to Chester, he commenced his profession as a miniature painter, and not very long after, he published, in conjunction with a brother, some sketches of celebrated characters in North Wales, among whom were Lady Eleanor Butler and Miss Ponsonby, the eccentric "Ladies of Llangollen." In 1832 he made his first appearance as an exhibitor at the Liverpool Academy, and continued to contribute to that Institution for many years. In 1835 he was elected an Associate, and in 1838 a full member of that Academy. But the delicate state of his health would not permit of his remaining in that town, and he removed to Torquay, where he resided twelve years, occasionally visiting the scene of his earlier connections in the North, where he procured lucrative commissions. He died in London in 1859. Crane was most successful in portraits of females and children, both in oil and water-colours; his treatment of such subjects being so elegant and so full of fancy as almost to make them ideal works, yet without compromising their likeness. He also painted figure subjects, as: 'The First Whisper of Love,' 'The Deserted Village,' 'The Cobbler,' 'The Old Romance,' 'The Bay Window,' and 'Masquerading,' most of which were exhibited at the Royal Academy.

CRANENBURGH, HENDRIK VAN, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1754. He was a pupil of Barbiers, but at the age of thirty he abandoned painting for the counting-house. He, however, continued to make many excellent copies of the works of the old masters, and died at Amsterdam in 1832.

CRANSSE, JAN, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1480. He painted historical subjects, and was received into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1523, and became dean thereof in 1535. Van Mander speaks highly of a picture by this master which was formerly in the cathedral of Antwerp, representing 'Christ washing the Feet of His Disciples.' Two panels of coats of arms, one of the Chamber of Rhetoric of Diest, and the other of that of Turnhout, by him, are in the Antwerp Gallery.

CRAPELET, LOUIS AMABLE, a French water-colour painter, born at Auxerre in 1822, studied under Corot, Durand-Brager, and Séchan. He went to Egypt in 1852, and ascended the Nile as far as the third cataract, returning to France in 1854. Many of his drawings were the result of this expedition. He died at Marseilles in 1867.

CRASTONA, GIOSEFFO, was born at Pavia in 1664, and was a scholar of Bernardino Ciceri. He excelled in painting landscapes and views of the vicinity of Rome, from designs he had made during a long residence in that city; and these pictures, according to Orlandi, were greatly in vogue in his time. He died in 1718.

CRAWFORD, WILLIAM, a Scotch portrait and genre painter, was a native of Ayr. His father placed him at the Trustees' Academy, under S. R. William Allan, where he gained a travelling bursary, which enabled him to study in Rome for about two years. On his return he conducted the drawing classes of the Trustees' Academy for several years, and also occasionally contributed art criticisms to Edinburgh newspapers. His crayon portraits, of which a good many were exhibited at the Royal Academy in London, were much sought after. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1862. Among his genre paintings we may mention his 'Highland Keeper's Daughter' (1865), 'Waiting for the Ferry,' 'Return from Maying,' and 'Too Late,' a striking picture exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in 1869, in which year he died.

CRAYER, GASPAR DE. See DE CRAYER.

CREDI, LORENZO DI, whose surname appears to have been BARDUCCI, and not Sciarpelloni, as stated by Vasari, was born at Florence in 1459. He was a disciple of Andrea del Verrocchio at the time that Perugino and Leonardo da Vinci were studying under that master. Lorenzo displayed a preference for the style of Leonardo over that of his instructor, and copied the paintings of the former with great success; whilst the graceful and expressive manner in which he painted Madonnas and Holy Families remind one somewhat of the style of Perugino. He died at Florence in 1537. He also practised the art of sculpture, and Verrocchio in his will expressed a desire that the completion of his famous equestrian statue of Bartolommeo Colleoni should be intrusted to Lorenzo. It was, however, given by the Venetians to Alessandro Leopardi to finish. Giovanni Antonio Sogliani and Tommaso di Stefano were his pupils. The following paintings by him may be noted:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Madonna and Child.
"	"	St. Mary of Egypt.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Madonna and Child, and St. John.
"	"	Madonna and Child, with Goldfinch.
"	"	Madonna and Child, with SS. Sebastian and John the Evangelist.
Florence.	Academy.	The Nativity.

Florence.	Uffizi.	Baptism of our Lord.
"	"	Christ appearing to the Magdalen.
"	"	Portrait of Andrea del Verrocchio.
"	"	The Annunciation.
"	Pitti Pal.	Holy Family.
London.	Nat. Gall.	The Virgin and Child.
"	"	The Virgin adoring the Infant Christ.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	Holy Family.
Naples.	Museum.	The Nativity.
Paris.	Louvre.	Virgin and Child.
"	"	Christ and the Magdalen.
"	"	The Annunciation.
Rome.	Borghese Gall.	Virgin and Child, with St. John the Baptist.
Turin.	Museum.	Virgin and Child.

CREED, CAREY, was an English engraver, who published, in 1731, a set of plates of the statues and busts at Wilton House, which possess considerable merit.

CREED, ELIZABETH, a daughter of Sir Gilbert Pickering, Bart., and cousin to the poet Dryden, was born in 1642. She married a gentleman named Crede, of Oundle, in Northamptonshire, and, as an amateur, painted altar-pieces for several churches in the neighbourhood, and also portraits of her friends. She died in 1728.

CREGAN, MARTIN, a portrait painter, practised both in Dublin and London. He was born in 1788, and was a member of the Royal Hibernian Academy from its foundation in 1823, and for many years its President. From 1812 to 1821, whilst he resided in London, he exhibited yearly at the Royal Academy. His last contribution was a portrait of Miss Dance as 'Mrs. Haller.' He returned to Dublin in 1822, and was patronized by the élite of that city. He died in 1870. The Dublin National Gallery has a copy by him of Sir Joshua Reynolds's portrait of Master Crewe.

CREMONA, ANTONIO DA, an Italian engraver on wood, who flourished about the year 1560. Among other prints, he engraved a cut representing 'Mutius Scævola burning his hand in the presence of Porsena.' It is executed on a single block, without any cross-hatching. He is supposed to be identical with Antonio Campi.

CREMONA, NICCOLÒ DA, was a native of Cremona, who flourished about the year 1518. According to Masini ('Bologna perlustrata') he was a good painter of history. For Santa Maria Madalena, at Bologna, he painted a picture of the 'Descent from the Cross;' dated in 1518. In the Bologna Gallery is the 'Marriage of the Virgin' from the church of San Giuseppe.

CREMONESE, IL. See CALETTI.

CREMONESE DEI PAESI, IL. See BASSI, FRANCESCO MARIA.

CREMONINI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Cento in 1550. At Bologna he executed several frescoes and friezes in chiaroscuro for palaces and houses, and painted several pictures for the churches of San Girolamo, San Domenico, and Madonna del Monte. He excelled, however, more especially as a painter of decorations for theatres, festivities, and tournaments; many of his productions of that class are in the possession of the Duke of Mirandola. He had great talent, but was most superficial in the execution of his works. He died at Bologna in 1610.

CRÉPIN, LOUIS PHILIPPE, a French marine painter, born in Paris in 1772, was a scholar of Regnault and Hubert Robert; he also had lessons from Joseph Vernet, and followed very successfully the styles of those masters. He was fond of representing engagements between French and English vessels of war, particularly where the former fought under great disadvantage. He painted many other subjects of more general interest, which will be esteemed when the battles are forgotten. He painted in water and body colour, and etched and aquatinted in the English manner. Crépin died in Paris in 1851.

CREPU, JAN BAPTIST, (often called in error Nicolaas,) was born at Brussels in 1680. He was an officer in the Spanish service, which he quitted at about the age of forty, and devoted himself to flower-painting, in which he showed considerable talent. He composed well, and painted with a light and free pencil: his works were highly esteemed by his contemporaries. He died at Antwerp in 1742.

CRÉPY, JEAN and LOUIS, (or CRESFY,) were two indifferent French engravers and printsellers. Jean, the father, was born in Paris about 1650, and engraved some portraits, among which is a series of very small ovals of the princes of the royal family of France, remarkable for their extremely minute execution. Louis, the son, was born in Paris about 1680. Many prints, especially portraits, which bear the name of Crépy, were not engraved, but simply published by them. We have, however, the following plates by them:

Mary Magdalene; Crépy, inv. et fecit.

The Nativity; after Albani; their best print.

The Descent from the Cross; after Carlo Cignani.

The Holy Family; after Lebrun.

The Presentation in the Temple; after the same.

CRESCENZI, BARTOLOMMEO. See CAVARAZZI.

CRESCENZI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, MARQUIS DE LA TORRE, an Italian painter and architect, was born at Rome in 1595. He was a pupil of Pomerancio, and was brought to Spain by Cardinal Zapata shortly before 1617, in which year he was invited amongst others to send in his plans for the building of the Panteon in the Escorial. A well-executed flower-piece by him is said to have attracted the attention of Philip III. His plans approved, in 1619 he was sent to Italy, with an allowance of 2000 ducats, and letters were forwarded to the Spanish ambassadors at foreign courts to collect models and artisans in their respective countries. Returning in 1620 with eight Italian and Flemish assistants, he began the building of the Panteon, which occupied him 33 years, being interrupted in 1621 by the death of Philip III. By Philip IV. Crescenzi was loaded with favours, created Marquis de la Torre, and appointed head of the Board of Woods and Works, with a monthly pension of 140 ducats. He died at Madrid in 1660.

CRESCENZIO, ANTONELLO, known as ANTONELLO DA PALERMO, who, according to De Marzo, was the son of Antonio Crescenzi, was born early in the 16th century, and practised both as a sculptor and a painter. He was an assistant to the sculptor Gagnino in 1527. In 1537 he completed two copies of Raphael's 'Spasimo'; one of them is in the Carmelite Church at Palermo, and the other in the Monastery of Fazello, near Sciacca. The date of his death is uncertain.

Palermo. La Ganzia. Madonna and Child, dated 1528.

CRESCENZIO, ANTONIO, a native of Parma, the dates of whose birth and death are not known, flourished from about 1417 to 1440. He painted a fresco in the hospital of Palermo, representing 'Death on the Pale Horse smiting and threatening the rich ones of this world, whilst the poor and wretched in vain beg for their release.' The chapel of the Vanni family, close to the church of Santa Maria e Gesù, near Palermo, contains the remains of wall-paintings in monochrome representing different saints assigned to this artist. In the University Gallery of the same city there is a painting by him of the 'Enthroned Madonna and Saints,' and two panels.

CRESPI, ANTONIO, the son and pupil of Giuseppe Maria Crespi, painted much for the churches of Bologna. He died in 1781. A picture of St. Francis of Paola by him is in the Bologna Gallery.

CRESPI, BENEDETTO, called BUSTINO, a native of Busto Arsizio, near Milan, worked in Como about the middle of the 17th century. In the Pinacoteca at Milan is a 'Circumcision of Christ' by him; and the Madrid Gallery has a 'Roman Charity.' He had a son, ANTONIO MARIA, who was his pupil.

CRESPI, DANIELE, was born at Busto Arsizio, near Milan, in 1590, and was first a scholar of Giovanni Battista Crespi, called Cerano, but afterwards studied under Giulio Cesare Procaccini. Although he did not survive his fortieth year, he undoubtedly surpassed his first instructor; and, according to Lanzi, in the opinion of many, he was equal to the second. He was an able artist of the Milanese school, though little known except in his own country. To an acute and penetrating genius, and an uncommon readiness of hand, he added a judgment that enabled him to take advantage of the excellences of those who had preceded him, and to avoid their defects. Although he never frequented the school of the Carracci, he appears to have approved and adopted their principles and their practice. In the expression of his heads he is varied, yet select; and is particularly admired for the fervid devotion expressed in the character of his saints. His colouring is excellent, both in oil and in fresco, and partakes of the strength, as well as of the amenity, that we admire in Titian. The most esteemed works of this artist are the 'Taking down from the Cross,' and several portraits in fresco, in the Chiesa della Passione at Milan; and his celebrated series of pictures of the Life of St. Bruno, at the Certosa. Nine paintings by him are in the Brera, and others are to be met with in the palaces and churches of Milan and the neighbouring towns, as well as in the following galleries:

Florence.	Uffizi.	An Old Beggar.
		His own Portrait.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Pietà.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	The Angel appearing to Joseph in a Dream.

His works have been engraved by Weggers, Feroni, Longhi, and Felsing. This able painter was unfortunately carried off, in the prime of life, with all his family, by the plague which visited Milan in 1630.

CRESPI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Cerano, a small town near Novara, in the Milanese, in 1557, and is frequently called IL CERANO. He was descended from a family distinguished in the art, who educated him for the learned professions; and he was a student of great promise in literature and science. A strong attachment to painting, however, induced him to follow the art in which his family had acquired its celebrity. He attended the school of Procaccini, visited Rome and Venice, and established himself at Milan, where he was patronized by the duke and by Cardinal Federigo, made director of the Academy, and employed as an architect, sculptor, and painter. In his works as a painter are found many beauties, accompanied by unaccountable defects. His style is free and spirited, and his colouring harmonious; but his design is occasionally conceited and absurd, from an affectation of the grand and the graceful. Of these deficiencies we have evidence in his pictures in the Chiesa della Pace, where his drawing of the nude is heavy and tasteless, and the movement of his figures distorted by the violence of their attitudes. His merits, however, must be allowed to outweigh his defects, and some of his works may be compared with the best productions of the Milanese school at his time. Such is his picture of the 'Baptism of St. Augustine,' in San Marco, which disputes the palm with Giulio Cesare Procaccini, and in the judgment of some is superior. Soprani, in the 'Life of Sinibaldo Scorza,' says that this artist excelled in painting animals and birds, of a cabinet size. He died at Milan in 1633. Other paintings by him are as follow:

Berlin.	Gallery.	An Assembly of Franciscans.
Milan.	Brera.	Madonna del Rosario.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Christ appearing to the Apostles SS. Peter and Paul.

CRESPI, GIUSEPPE MARIA, called LO SPAGNUOLO, a name given to him by his fellow-students on account of the finery of his dress, was a painter and etcher, born at Bologna in 1665. He studied first under A. M. Toni, and then entered the school of D. M. Canuti, but afterwards passed some time under C. Cignani, and still later under G. A. Burini. He visited Venice, Parma, and Modena, where he painted after the style of Barocci, Guercino, and Pietro da Cortona. Desirous of discovering and establishing a new mode of working, he adopted a flimsy method of colouring, without solidity, and consisting chiefly of glazing, which has occasioned many of his works to become almost obliterated. He had a particular talent for caricature; and some of his compositions of that kind are full of humour and eccentricity. He was for some time in the employment of the Grand-Duke Ferdinand, for whom he executed several works in the Pitti Palace. He died blind at Bologna in 1747. There are many of his pictures in the churches and palaces of Bologna, besides those in the under-mentioned galleries:

Bologna.	S. Niccolò.	St. Anthony the Abbot.
	Pinacoteca.	Madonna with Saints and Angels.
Dresden	Gallery.	The Virgin and Child, and St. John.
		Also eleven others.
Ferrara.	 Gesù.	Swooning of St. Stanislaus.
Florence.	Pitti Pal.	Holy Family.
"	"	Portrait of an Old Man.
"	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
Munich.	Gallery.	A weeping Nun.
Paris.	Louvre.	A Schoolmistress.
Petersburg.	Hermilage.	Holy Family.
"	"	Death of St. Joseph.
"	"	Portrait of Himself.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	The Centaur Chiron teaching Achilles to shoot.
"	"	Aeneas and the Cumean Sibyl on Charon's Boat.

Giuseppe Maria Crespi has etched several plates, some of which bear the name of L. Mattioli, a friend of his, whom he assisted in his distress. The following are among the number:

The Massacre of the Innocents.
Two plates of the Resurrection; in the style of Rembrandt.

The Miraculous Crucifix of Pistoja.
 St. Anthony; in the manner of Rembrandt.
 St. Pascal.
 Five plates of the Trades; in the style of S. Rosa.
 A Shepherd and Shepherdess.
 The Circumcision; after L. Carracci.
 The Nurse; after Van Dyck.

Besides ANTONIO, he had two sons who were also artists: LUIGI, who held certain offices in the papal court, wrote 'Vite dei Pittori Bolognesi,' 1769, and died in 1779; and FERDINANDO, a Franciscan monk, who painted miniatures, and died in 1754.

CRESPY, JEAN and LOUIS. See CRÉPY.

CRESTI, DOMENICO, called IL PASSIGNANO, was born at Passignano, near Florence, in 1558. He was first a scholar of Macchietti and of Battista Naldini, but afterwards studied under Federigo Zuccaro, to whose style his own is more conformable. He resided some time at Venice, where he received instruction from Paolo Veronese, and became so fascinated with the works of the great masters of the Venetian school, that, according to Boschini, he used to observe, that whoever had not seen Venice could not hope to become a painter. Though neither select in his forms nor correct in his design, he is ingenious and abundant in his compositions; and in the splendour of his costumes and the richness of his architecture he resembles Paolo Veronese more than does any other of the Florentine painters. He sometimes reminds us of Tintoretto, in the strained attitudes of his figures, and, like that master, he painted many of his pictures with colours so thin and oily, that several of his works have perished. Such has been the fate of his pictures of the 'Crucifixion of St. Peter,' and the 'Presentation in the Temple,' painted for the Basilica of St. Peter, in the pontificates of Paul V. and Urban VIII. There are, however, some of his pictures remaining, which are painted with an excellent impasto of colour. Of these may be mentioned a 'Dead Christ,' in the Cappella di Mondragone, at Frascati; a 'Descent from the Cross,' in the Palazzo Borghese, at Rome; and 'Christ bearing the Cross,' in the Uffizi, at Florence. His extraordinary facility and rapidity of execution won for him the nickname 'Passa ognuno,' a play upon his surname of 'Passignano.' He died in 1638. The following are also among his paintings:

Florence. { S. Maria }	The Descent of the Holy Ghost.
" { Maggiore. }
" { Academy. }	The Assumption.
" { Uffizi. }	His own Portrait.
" { Louvre. }	Christ bearing the Cross.
Paris. { S. Andrea }	A Miracle of the true Cross.
Rome. { della Valle. }	The Assumption.
Vienna. { Belvedere. }	Feast of Ahasuerus.

CRESWICK, THOMAS, a landscape painter, was born at Sheffield in 1811. He was sent when very young to Birmingham, where he became a pupil of J. V. Barber. He went to London in 1828, and immediately commenced to exhibit at the British Institution, and at the Royal Academy, to both of which he was henceforward a constant contributor. His early works, which were chiefly Welsh scenes, had a great success, and in 1840 he began to exhibit views in the North of England. In 1842 he was awarded a premium of fifty guineas by the directors of the British Institution for his general excellence, and in the same year he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy: nine years later he became an Academician. The quiet beauties of inland scenery, and more especially scenes with rippling streams, quiet riverside nooks, and glens and dells, were his favourite subjects, although occasionally he painted coast scenes. His power in the delineation of aerial perspective and his knowledge of the effects of colour were almost equal to Turner. Some of Creswick's later pictures were painted in conjunction with Goodall, Elmore, John Phillip, Frith, and Ansdell, who introduced the figures and cattle. He was an active member of the Etching Club, and furnished many charming etchings for its publications; notably the editions of Gray's 'Elegy,' Milton's 'L'Allegro,' and Goldsmith's 'Deserted Village.' He also occasionally drew on wood blocks. He died in London in 1869, and was buried at Kensal Green Cemetery.

The following are some of his principal works:

- 1839. The Pathway to the Village Church (in the National Gallery).
- 1842. Afternoon.
- 1843. Welsh Glen.
- 1844. A Scene on the Tummel, Perthshire (in the South Kensington Museum).
- 1844. A Summer's Afternoon (in the South Kensington Museum).
- 1845. A Recollection of the Alps.
- 1845. Rain on the Hills.
- 1846. The pleasant way home.
- 1847. England.
- 1847. The London Road a hundred years ago.
- 1849. Passing Showers.
- 1850. The Wind on shore.
- 1850. First glimpse of the Sea.
- 1850. Old Trees.
- 1850. South Downs (the sheep are by Ansdell).
- 1851. The Valley Mill.
- 1851. Over the Sands.
- 1852. A Mountain Lake—Moonrise.
- 1854. The Blithe Brook.
- 1859. The Village Bridge.
- 1861. In the North Country.
- 1864. Across the Beck.
- 1865. Changeable Weather.
- A Dream of the Future (the girl is by Frith, and the dog by Ansdell).

Upwards of a hundred of Creswick's works were exhibited at the International Exhibition in London in 1873.

CRETI, DONATO, was born at Cremona in 1671, and was educated at Bologna, under Lorenzo Pasinelli, whose style he blended with an imitation of the works of Simone Cantarini, and so formed a manner which has little claim to originality. His colouring is distinguished by a hardness and crudity, occasioned by his never properly blending his tints. He resided chiefly in Bologna, where he painted several pictures for the churches—for San Pietro an altar-piece of 'St. Charles Borromeo asking Charity for the Poor;' for San Domenico, 'St. Vincent of Ferrara resuscitating a Child;' for San Luca, the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' one of his best works; and for the Mendicanti, the 'Adoration of the Magi.' In the Palazzo Pubblico, he painted four pictures of the 'Life of Achilles' and other works. He was also employed in the churches at Rimini, Bergamo, Lucca, and Palermo. The Bologna Gallery possesses a 'Coronation of Charles V. at Bologna' by him. He died at Bologna in 1749.

CREUSE, AUGUSTE DE, a French portrait painter, who was born at Montrond (Doubs) in 1806, and died in Paris in 1839. He was a pupil of Gros, and painted many of the historical portraits which are at Versailles.

CREUTZFELDER, JOHANN, a portrait painter, was born at Nuremberg in 1570. He was a scholar of N. Juvenel, and painted also historical subjects. His paintings representing Martyrdoms are beautifully executed. He died at Nuremberg in 1636. There are by him:

Nuremberg. S. Sebaldus. Adam and Eve. 1603.

Vienna. Belvedere. The Martyrdom of St. Ignatius.

He signed his portraits with this monogram J

CREVOISIER, MARIE JEANNE. See CLEMENS.

CRISCUOLO, GIOVANNI ANGELO, was the younger brother of Giovanni Filippo Criscuolo. Although he showed an early inclination for art, his father would not permit him to make it his profession, but obliged him to follow the business of a notary. On the death of his father, the reputation his brother had acquired induced him to abandon his occupation, and place himself under the tuition of Marco di Pino da Siena, by whose instruction he became a reputable artist. Dominici describes many of his works in the churches at Naples, among which is an altar-piece in the church of San Stefano, representing the 'Martyrdom of St. Stephen'; in Monte Calvario, a picture of the 'Virgin and Infant, with St. Jerome,' dated 1572; in San Severino, an 'Annunciation'; and in San Giacomo degli Spagnuoli, an 'Assumption of the Virgin.' He wrote a 'History of the Neapolitan Artists to 1569.' The exact date of his death is not known; some say about 1580.

CRISCUOLO, GIOVANNI FILIPPO, was born at Gaëta in 1495. He was instructed in painting by A. Sabbatini, but afterwards devoted his attention rather to the works of Perino del Vaga. He died at Naples in 1584. His best works are as under:

Naples. S. Patrizia. The Adoration of the Magi.

S. M. Donna. The Death, Ascension, and Coronation of the Virgin.

CRISCUOLO, MARIANGIOLA, who married Giovanni d'Amato the younger, is apparently known only by some finely-executed 'Madonnas' in two of the churches of Naples.

CRISPI, SCIPIONE, was a Piedmontese painter, born at Tortona, who flourished, according to Lanzi, from the year 1592 till 1599. It is uncertain by whom he was instructed; but he was an artist of considerable merit, as is evident from his picture of the 'Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth,' in the church of San Lorenzo, at Voghera, and an altar-piece at Tortona of 'SS. Francis and Dominic,' which is dated 1592.

CRISPINUS. See VAN DEN BROECK.

CRISTALL, JOSHUA, was born in 1767 at Cambourne in Cornwall. His father was Scotch, and was bitterly opposed to his son's artistic tastes, but his mother secretly aided him in his struggles to study art. He was first apprenticed to a china dealer at Rotherhithe, but, finding that business too irksome, he left both his master and his home, and went to the Potteries, where he found some employment as a china painter. Finding this too monotonous, he came to London, and commenced a life of great privations and hard efforts to study the fine arts. It is said that at this period of his life he seriously injured his health by trying to live for a year on nothing else but potatoes and water. Aided in secret by his mother, who shared in and had herself directed his taste for classic art, he persevered in his endeavours, and finally gained admission to the school of the Royal Academy, where he made rapid progress. He became personally known to Dr. Monro, and visited at his house, where he met the rising water-colour artists of that day. At the foundation of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1805, he first publicly exhibited his works, and continued to do so for many years. He was one of the foundation members of this society, and afterwards became its President, and was always its warm and active supporter. In 1822, finding his health much impaired, Cristall went to Goodrich on the Wye, where he had already bought a house, and where he spent many happy years until the loss of his wife, who died in 1840, drove him again to London, where he died in 1847. His body was carried to Goodrich, and buried by the side of his wife, at his own earnest request. Cristall's usual subjects in his early years were classical figures with landscapes, such as his 'Lycidas,' 'Judgment of Paris,' 'Hylas and the Nymphs,' and 'Diana and Endymion,' but he afterwards produced genre subjects and rustic groups. About 1813 he tried portrait painting, generally small full-lengths with landscape backgrounds, in which he used no body-colour. As a water-colour painter Cristall will always hold an honourable position from the freedom and simplicity of his style and manner of execution. Five of his drawings, viz. 'The Young Fisher-Boy,' 'The Fish Market on Hastings Beach,' and three others, are in the South Kensington Museum. Cristall was one of the early members of the Sketching Society; he also furnished some of the classical figures in Barret's landscapes, as well as some of the groups in Robson's 'Scotch Scenery.'

CRISTIANI, GIOVANNI DI BARTOLOMEO, who lived at Pistoja in the 14th century, is thought by Ciampi to have been employed at the Campo Santo of Pisa in 1382. He is known to have painted a 'Virgin and Child between SS. Nicholas and John the Baptist' in the Oratorio dei Nerli at Montemurlo. His last work, which is now lost, was the decoration of a church in Pistoja, which was begun in 1396 and finished in 1398. Very little remains of this artist's productions, and no exact date is known of his death. In the Sacristy of San Giovanni Evangelista at Pistoja there is a painting by him of 'St. John the Baptist enthroned with Angels' (1370).

CRISTOFANO, a painter of Bologna, aided Jacopo and Simone in the production of a series of frescoes, completed in 1404, in the church of the Madonna della Mezzaratta in that city.

CRISTOFORO, BABIO, and PIETRO PAOLO, two artists, father and son, who were the founders of the mosaic school in the Vatican during the pontificate of Clement XI. (1700—1721), are deserving of notice for the perfection to which they carried that art. They executed in the Basilica of St. Peter, from the originals, the 'Communion of St. Jerome,' after Domenichino; 'St. Petronilla,' after Guercino; the 'Baptism of Christ,' after Carlo Maratti; and other works. Pietro Paolo Cristoforo died in 1740.

CRISTUS, PETRUS, sometimes wrongly called CHRISTOPHSEN, was born at Baerle, near Tronchiennes, in Flanders, early in the 15th century, and attended the school of the Van Eycks. In his early paintings he imitated those masters, but he was inferior to Hubert in his style, and did not by far approach Jan, either in his design or colouring. His later works are more after the style of the Masters of Cologne. About 1417 he began, to paint in oil; was made a burgher of Bruges in 1444; entered the Guild of St. Luke there in 1450; worked at Cambrai in 1454, and at Bruges in 1463, where he was elected Dean of the Guild in 1471. His works are executed with great care, but the forms of the figures are clumsy and the carnations are red-brown. The following is a list of several of his paintings:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	St. Jerome (doubtful).
Berlin.	Gallery.	The Last Judgment.	Painted for a convent at Burgos. 1452.
"	"	The Annunciation, and the Nativity.
"	"	A Young Lady of the Talbot Family.
Bruges.	Academy.	The Genealogy of Christ.	Painted for the Annual Procession of the Holy Blood in that city. 1463.
Cologne.	Oppenheim Coll.	St. Elisius.	Painted for the Guild of the Goldsmiths at Antwerp. 1449.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	St. Anthony with Patron.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Portraits of a Man and a Woman (assigned erroneously to Van der Goes).
Frankfort.	Städel Inst.	The Madonna and Child, with SS. Francis and Jerome.	1417 [1447?].
Gorhambury.	Earl of Verulam.	Portrait of Edward Grimston.	1446.
London.	National Gall.	Portrait of Marco Barbarigo (ascribed in the catalogue to Gerard van der Meire, but thought by Crowe and Cavalcaselle to be by Petrus Cristus).
Madrid.	Gallery.	St. John the Baptist, St. Barbara, and the Donors (ascribed in the catalogue to Jan van Eyck, but conjectured by Crowe and Cavalcaselle to be by Petrus Cristus).	1438.
"	"	The Annunciation, Visitation, Nativity, and Adoration.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Two wings of a triptych: Christ Crucified, and Christ in Judgment.

(See 'Le Beffroi,' 1863, and Crowe and Cavalcaselle's 'Early Flemish Painters,' 1872.)

CRIVELLARI, BARTOLOMMEO, was a Venetian engraver, born in 1725. He was a pupil of Joseph Wagner, for whom he executed several plates, after Gherardini, Tiarini, and Tiepolo. We have by him the following:

- The Portrait of Christian, Electoral Prince of Saxony.
- The Portrait of the Archduchess of Austria.
- Three Portraits from the Life of St. Pietro Petronio.
- Four Plates of musical and gallant Assemblies; after Niccolò dell' Abbate.
- The Canonization of St. Alexander Saul; after M. Bartoloni.

CRIVELLI, ANGIOLO MARIA, called CRIVELONE, was a native of Milan, who, according to Orlandi, painted animals and hunting-scenes with surprising truth and spirit, and was considered one of the ablest painters of those subjects whom his country had produced. He died in 1730. Two pictures of ruins by him, with figures by Alessandrino, are in the Dresden Gallery; and the Brera, Milan, has a 'Portrait of a Huntsman' by him.

CRIVELLI, CARLO, who was probably born at Venice between 1430 and 1440, is likely to have been the pupil of Antonio and Bartolommeo da Murano. Ridolfi says that he derived his instruction from Jacobello dei Fiori, but this statement cannot be correct, as Jacobello flourished too long before. There is a 'Virgin and Child,' formerly in the convent of San Lorenzo, and now in the Museum of Verona, which is one of his earliest productions, and which much recalls the two above-named artists. For over twenty-two years he seems to have almost exclusively worked in those cities which lie in the Marches of Ancona, between Potenza and Tronto. In the sacristy of San Silvestro, Massa, is an altar-piece of his in tempera, now hanging in detached pieces, signed and dated 1468. The cathedral of Ascoli has a 'Virgin and Child between SS. Peter, John the Baptist, Emidius, and Paul,' dated 1473. In 1476 he completed the great altar-piece, in tempera, for San Domenico, at Ascoli, now in the National Gallery, London. In 1490 he was knighted by Prince Ferdinand of Capua, and immediately afterwards in a picture which he painted for the Odoni Chapel, in San Francesco of Matelica, he signed himself Crivellus, Venetus Miles, and never afterwards omitted the title on his pictures. His latest painting is the 'Coronation of the Virgin, with Saints,' dated 1493, now in the Oggioni Collection at Milan. The exact date of his death is unknown. There are many paintings by this artist in English and Continental galleries. They are all in tempera. Amongst them are:

Ancona.	Zoccolanti di S. Francesco.	Madonna.
Ascoli.	Cathedral.	The Twelve Apostles.	1473.
"	"	Pietà.
"	"	The Virgin and Child, with Saints.
Brussels.	Museum.	Madonna.
"	"	St. Francis of Assisi.
Frankfort.	Städel Inst.	The Annunciation.
London.	Nat. Gall.	The Dead Christ.
"	"	The Beato Ferretti.
"	"	Madonna and Child enthroned, with SS. Jerome and Sebastian.
"	"	The Annunciation.	1486.
"	"	Madonna and Child enthroned, surrounded by Saints (an altar-piece in three stages and thirteen compartments).	1476.
"	"	Madonna and Child enthroned	1491.
"	"	Madonna in ecstasy.	1492.
"	"	SS. Catharine and Mary Magdalene.

"	"	Pietà.
Pesth.	Esterhazy Gall.	Madonna.
Rome.	Vatican.	Madonna.
"	"	Pietà.
"	Lateran Mus.	Virgin and Saints.

There is in San Pietro ad Aram at Milan, a Madonna, dated 1497, by an obscure PROTASIO DE' CRIVELLI of that city.

CRIVELLI, JACOPO, the son of Angiolo Maria Crivelli, painted birds and fish. He worked much at the court of Parma, and died in 1760.

CRIVELLI, TADDEO, a miniature painter of Ferrara in the 15th century, was engaged from 1455 to 1461, in company with Franco de' Russi, in painting the pictures in the costly Bible of Duke Borso of Ferrara; he also illustrated a number of other works. He died about 1484.

CRIVELLI, VITTORIO, was a relation, some say a brother, of Carlo Crivelli, and learned his art from him. He lived in the 15th century, and closely imitated his namesake. At Fermo, in the possession of Cavaliere Vinci, is an altar-piece signed and dated by him in 1481. In the church of Santa Maria del Pozzo, Monte San Martino, the altar-piece representing the 'Virgin enthroned, the Child giving the keys to St. Peter,' is dated 1489; and at Alla Matrice in the same town, the altar-piece by him is dated 1490. The South Kensington Museum possesses a 'Virgin and Child,' with other subjects, painted by Vittorio Crivelli. A 'Birth of Christ,' and various Saints, by him, are in the Brera, Milan. No dates are known as to his birth or death.

CROCE, BALDASSARE, was born at Bologna in 1563. He was instructed by Bartolommeo Passarotti, and visited Rome during the pontificate of Gregory XIII., by whom he was employed in the Vatican. He painted with great power and freedom, both in oil and fresco. His principal works at Rome are the cupola of the chapel of San Francesco in the church of the Gesù; the vault of the choir in St. John Lateran; and the 'History of Susannah,' in the church of her name. He executed also some paintings in the town-hall at Viterbo. He died at Rome in 1638.

CROISEY, P., a French line-engraver and publisher, who worked at Versailles, and died at the commencement of the present century, executed a large number of maps. He also engraved an oval medallion of Queen Marie Antoinette, when Dauphiness of France, which is one of the best portraits extant of the youthful princess.

CROISIER, MARIE ANNE, a French engraver, born in 1765, was a pupil of Augustin de Saint-Aubin. She at first engraved some subjects after the old masters, but these she abandoned for political pieces in the days of the Revolution. There is by her a beautifully executed plate representing, in three small medallions, the Duke of Orleans, the Duke of Chartres (Philippe Égalité), and the Duchess of Chartres.

CROLA, GEORG HEINRICH, a German landscape painter, was born at Dresden in 1804. He went to Munich in 1830, and was until 1840 a prominent member of the group of landscape painters established in that city. In the latter year he married and settled in the Harz, where he died at Ilsenburg in 1879.

ROLL, FRANCIS, was born at Edinburgh in 1827, and was first articled to an engraver, naturalist, and excellent draughtsman of that city, named Dobbie. He was subsequently placed with R. C. Bell, with whom he remained two years. Besides his labours for Bell, Roll had found time to attend the drawing lessons given by Sir William Allan, the then director of the schools of the Scottish Academy, by which he greatly profited. Besides the portraits with which he was entrusted by the publishers of Edinburgh for their various works, Roll engraved 'The Tired Soldier,' after Goodall, for the Vernon Gallery. The Scottish Society for the Encouragement of Art commissioned him to engrave one of the series of plates from the designs of John Faed for 'The Cottar's Saturday Night,' but this unhappily he was not able to complete before his death, which took place in 1854.

CROME, JOHN—or 'Old Crome,' as he is usually styled to distinguish him from his eldest son, John Bernay Crome, who was also a painter—was born in a small public-house in Norwich, in 1769. His father was a journeyman weaver by trade, and his early surroundings were of the poorest description, and it is not likely that he received more than the mere rudiments of education. At twelve years of age he started in life for himself in the capacity of errand-boy to Dr. Rigby, a physician in Norwich; but finding the distribution of medicine an unsatisfactory employment for his youthful energies, he soon gave it up, and of his own accord apprenticed himself for seven years to a certain Frank Whisler, a house and sign painter in Norwich. Here he learnt the use of the brush, and quickly became ambitious of applying it to other subjects than the painting of cornices and coaches. After his apprenticeship was over he worked for a time as journeyman to Whisler, and is said to have been the first painter who practised graining in imitation of the natural marks in wood. During this period he formed an intimate friendship with Robert Ladbrooke, who was then an apprentice to a printer. The two youths spent all their spare time in drawing and studying together, sometimes from old prints, but more often from nature.

Among Crome's earliest patrons were Sir William Beechey, and a Mr. Harvey, who let him copy from his collection of Flemish and Dutch paintings. Whenever Crome went to London he passed a great part of his time in Beechey's painting-room, gaining all the practical instruction he could. He was also patronized by Mr. John Gurney, of Earlham, and Mr. Dawson Turner; but in spite of the help afforded by these and a few other Norfolk gentlemen, it is to be feared that Crome had a hard struggle before assuring a position. He found himself obliged to devote more and more time to teaching, which brought him for a long period far better remuneration than landscape painting. Insensibly, also, it brought him into greater local repute, for it made him known in many families of high standing around Norwich, who commissioned pictures and spread his fame at all events in his own county, and he became the founder of the only local school of painting in England of any importance. He was not even an exhibitor at the Royal Academy until 1806, and during the whole of his career the total number of his works sent for exhibition amounted only to fourteen.

After a time he achieved a large local celebrity, and his paintings were quickly sold to Norfolk purchasers without the trouble of sending them to London. He never, it is true, got a very high price for his works, fifty pounds being, it would seem, about as much as he usually got for a finely finished work, even to the end of his life; but he managed to win a comfortable independence, and to live in respectable style in his native city.

In 1803, Crome, in conjunction with several amateurs and a number of young artists whom he had by this time gathered around him, founded what was called "The Norwich Society of Artists," for the purpose of encouraging a love of the Fine Arts and promoting artistic culture.

The first exhibition of the Norwich Society was held in 1805, two years after its commencement. It contained 223 works in oil and water-colour, and several specimens of sculpture and engraving. Twenty-three of these works were contributed by Crome, who, it would seem, must have been travelling about this time, for among the subjects enumerated are 'A Scene in Cumberland,' 'Interior of Tintern Abbey,' 'View of Piercefield-on-the-Wye,' 'Part of Chepstow Castle,' 'Part of the Chapel in Chepstow Castle,' and 'Waterfall at St. Michael's-le-Flemings, Westmoreland,' against which last is noted in the catalogue "coloured on the spot." By this it would appear that the painting in question was in water-colours; for Crome, strange to say, seldom painted in oils out of doors. He made careful studies and sketches from nature, and must have been gifted with remarkable powers of observation, for he rarely misses any detail of sky, stream, or leaf; but his pictures nevertheless were painted in his studio, like those of his prototypes, the Dutch landscapists.

Crome travelled a little in England and Wales at various times, as may be seen by the places represented; and once, in 1814, he extended his journeying to Paris, going by way of Belgium, where he must have found the scenery familiar, though the only record he appears to have made of it, beyond slight sketches, is his 'View on the Ostend Canal at Bruges,' a fine moonlight effect, that was evidently noted on the spot and afterwards reproduced. About this time he painted the 'Boulevard des Italiens, Paris,' and the 'Fish-market on the Beach at Boulogne.'

Crome was now in the receipt of a good income, for although, as before said, he never, even to the last, obtained high prices for his pictures, he painted a great many, contributing generally eighteen to twenty different works to the Norwich Society's annual exhibition.

In 1810 he was elected President of the Norwich Society; John Sell Cotman, the second best artist of the school, being associated with him as Vice-President. Among the members were now to be reckoned such men as James Stark, George Vincent, Joseph Stannard, John Thistle, the etchers Edmund and Richard Girling, and John Bernay Crome, all of whom accomplished good work as landscapists under Crome's influence. In 1816, however, there came a secession from this flourishing little Society, and a separate exhibition at the Assembly Rooms Plain.

It was from the midst of society such as this, from a busy, jolly artist life, that Crome was called away on the 22nd of April, 1821, after a few days' illness. His last words are said to have been, "Hobbema, my dear Hobbema, how I have loved you!" An exhibition of his paintings was held in Norwich shortly after his death, when one hundred and eleven of his works were gathered together, including those that remained unsold in his studio. But even this exhibition, though it greatly increased his local fame, did not make him more known to the world at large, and thus it has happened that up to the present day almost all his pictures have remained as cherished possessions in Norfolk homes, very few comparatively having found their way into the market. In 1878, at the Winter Exhibition at the Royal Academy, there were no less than twenty-seven of his works exhibited. They attracted much attention and high praise.

Of his extensive landscapes, embracing generally a far-reaching view over heath and hill, with a windmill or two to give human interest to the scene, the well-known picture of 'Mousehold Heath,' in the National Gallery, may be taken as a good example. This was painted about the year 1816, and shows his powers at their full. He painted it, as he once remarked, for the sake of "air and space;" and, in truth, we feel, in looking at it, that here there is plenty of room in which to breathe.

The National Gallery also possesses a 'View at Chapel-Fields, Norwich,' wherein the chequered sunlight falling through the trees has a very delightful effect; 'The Windmill,' a pleasant country scene, painted with forcible realism and thorough understanding of light and shade; and the solemn and somewhat dreary 'Slate Quarries.'

In his etchings—for we must regard Crome as an etcher as well as a painter—he dealt chiefly with woodland and river scenes. Nothing can, in its way, be much more perfect than his rendering in etching of the little bits of picturesque beauty that he met with in his daily walks. His etchings, chiefly done for his own delight, were not published until after his death, when thirty-one were collected, and a small number worked off for the benefit of his widow, under the title of 'Norfolk Picturesque Scenery.' Another edition, in which some of the plates were re-bitten by Mr. Ninham, and others re-touched by Mr. Edwards, appeared in 1838, with an Essay by Dawson Turner. There is a fine collection of Crome's etchings in the British Museum, most of them being represented in two, or three, and sometimes in four different states.

CROME, JOHN BERNAY, the son of 'Old Crome,' was born in 1793 at Norwich, and was educated as a painter. He first exhibited in his native city, but from 1811 until the close of his life he was an occasional contributor to the Royal Academy. He died in 1842 at Yarmouth, where he had resided for some years. His works are similar in style to those of his father, but are far inferior.

CROMEK, ROBERT HARTLEY, was the son of Thomas Cromek, of Berwick-in-Elmete, Yorkshire, and was born at Hull in 1771. He was originally intended for the law, but showed so much aversion to that profession that he was permitted to follow his own strong inclinations for literature and the fine arts. He first went to Manchester, and there studied hard for some time, when, showing an evident taste and talent for engraving, he was sent to London and put under Bartolozzi's care. He engraved many of Stothard's designs for book-plates, which was then about the only work engravers could find to do. He also engraved the 'Canterbury Pilgrims,' concerning which he laboured for some time under the false imputation of having first seen Blake's design for that subject, and then induced Stothard to draw it for him as a speculation in engraving. Among Cromek's works may be mentioned the illustrations to Blair's 'Grave'; those in 'The Reliques of Robert Burns,' published in 1808; and those in 'The Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song,' published in 1810; also the plates in Gesner's works, after Stothard, and the plates in Sharpe's edition of 'The Spectator.' He died in London in 1812.

CROMEK, THOMAS HARTLEY, the son of Robert H. Cromek, was born in London in 1809. His first instructor in art was James Hunter, a portrait painter at Wakefield; but in 1826 he went to Leeds, and there studied landscape painting under Joseph Rhodes, an artist of considerable ability, and also instructed himself in anatomical drawing. In 1830 he decided to go to Italy for the purpose of perfecting himself by the study of the great masters. He passed through Belgium, the Rhine country, Switzerland, and Florence, and at length reached Rome, where he soon attracted attention by the excellence of his drawings and his careful colouring. From 1831 until 1849, with the exception of two short visits to England, Cromek passed his time in visiting and making drawings of the principal buildings and the picturesque scenery of Italy and Greece. In 1850 he was unanimously elected an Associate of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, when he retired to Wakefield, where he died, after a long and painful illness, in 1873. His drawings, which are chiefly to be found in the royal and private collections, are much esteemed for the beauty of their colouring and their truthfulness to nature.

CROMER, GIULIO, a pupil of Mona, was born in Silesia before 1570, and died at Ferrara in 1632. In the latter city he painted 'The Preaching of St. Andrew,' for the church dedicated to that saint; also 'The Calling of SS. Peter and Andrew.'

CRONE, ROBERT, was born in Dublin about the middle of the last century, and received his early instruction from Robert Hunter, the portrait painter; but he soon left that branch of the profession, and commenced painting landscapes, in which he achieved considerable success. He afterwards went to Rome and studied under Richard Wilson. From 1772 until 1778 he annually exhibited at the Royal Academy, although much hindered and tried by ill-health superinduced by frequent epileptic fits. His first exhibited pictures were two landscapes called 'Morning' and 'Evening.' Crone likewise exhibited drawings, some of which were finished after Richard Wilson's style in black and white chalk on a bluish-grey paper. His landscapes are now very scarce and much sought after; a few examples are in the Royal Collection. He died in London in 1779.

CRONENBURG, (or CRONENBURCH,) ANNA VAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Pietersbierum in 1552. She married Jan Craen, and secondly, in 1579, Jelle Sybes van Wythama, burgomaster of Leeuwarden. Four female portraits by her are in the Madrid Museum.

CROSS, JOHN, the son of the superintendent of a lace factory at Tiverton, was born in that town in 1819. Soon afterwards his father went to St. Quentin, as superintendent of an English factory, and young Cross was admitted into the School of Design, and there showed so much ability that he was sent to Paris, where he entered the atelier of Picot, a painter of some celebrity in the old classic school. In 1843 Cross sent to the competition for the decoration of the Houses of Parliament, held in Westminster Hall, a cartoon of 'The Assassination of Thomas à Becket,' which, from not fully complying with the terms of the competition, was not successful. His second attempt in 1847, with the oil-painting of 'The Clemency of Cœur-de-Lion,' gained for him the first premium of £300, and was afterwards purchased by the royal commissioners for £1000. In 1850 he first exhibited at the Royal Academy, his subject being 'The Burial of the Young Princes in the Tower.' This was followed by 'Edward the Confessor leaving his Crown to Harold,' in 1851; 'The Death of Thomas à Becket,' in 1853; 'Lucy Preston's Petition,' in 1856; and 'The Coronation of William the Conqueror,' in 1859; but none of Cross's later productions equalled his first effort, for they were all deficient alike in drawing, colour, and execution. His death occurred in London in 1861, after which his friends bought his 'Assassination of Thomas à Becket,' and placed it in Canterbury Cathedral.

CROSS, MICHAEL, was a painter employed by Charles I. to copy some of the fine pictures in Italy, and who is said to have contrived to abstract a 'Madonna' by Raphael from the church of St. Mark, at Venice, and instead thereof to leave his copy. The picture was sold with the rest of the Royal Collection, and is said to have been purchased by the Spanish Ambassador, together with the 'Twelve Cæsars' by Titian, for the King of Spain. Charles certainly knew nothing of the theft; nor can it be supposed that he mistook the original for a copy.

CROSS, THOMAS, was an English engraver, who flourished from about 1645 to 1685. He was chiefly employed in producing portraits and plates for the booksellers, mostly from his own designs. We have by him, among others, the following portraits:

King Richard III.
Francis Bacon, Viscount St. Alban's.
Sir Robert Cotton Bruce, Bart.
Joseph Hall, Bishop of Exeter.
George Webbe, Bishop of Limerick.
Richard Cromwell.

CROSSE, LEWIS, was a celebrated miniature painter in the time of Queen Anne, who enjoyed the patronage of the most distinguished personages of that period. He also highly excelled in painting copies in water-colours from the old masters. He is said to have succeeded so admirably in a portrait of 'Mary, Queen of Scots,' painted by him for the Duke of Hamilton, who wished him to make it as handsome as he could, that for many years it was considered to be a painting of the 16th century, and on that account many times copied. He formed a valuable collection of early miniatures and drawings, which he sold in 1722. He died in 1724.

CROSSE, RICHARD, a miniature painter, was born in Devonshire in 1745. He was a member of the Free Society of Artists in 1763, with whom he exhibited from 1761 to 1769. His first appearance at the exhibition of the Royal Academy was in 1770, and he continued to exhibit there up to 1795. He is said by Haydon to have been dumb, and to have made his fortune by his art in early years; also, to have retired to Wells on account of being disappointed in his hopes of marrying Haydon's mother. He was celebrated for his miniatures and small whole-lengths in water-colours. In this latter style he painted the portrait of Mrs. Billington, exhibited by him in 1778. In 1790 he was appointed painter in enamel to King George III., although he practised very little in his later years. He died at Knowle, near Cullompton, in 1810. The South Kensington Museum has by him a miniature portrait of Captain Swinburne.

CROUTELLE, LOUIS, a French line-engraver, who executed chiefly book-plates and vignettes, was born in Paris in 1765, and was a pupil of Delaunay. His most interesting work is an allegorical portrait of Voltaire, published in the Kehl edition of the philosopher's works, proofs of which are extremely rare. He died in Paris in 1829.

CROWLEY, NICHOLAS J., was born in Ireland, and was elected a member of the Royal Hibernian Academy in 1838. In that year he came to London, and his works were constantly to be seen in the Royal Academy Exhibitions. The first picture which he exhibited in London, in 1835, was 'The Eventful Consultation,' and had been sent from Belfast, where he then resided. He was highly esteemed as a portrait painter, and was especially clever in painting portrait groups. His death occurred in 1857.

CROWQUILL, ALFRED. See FORESTER, A. H.

CROZIER, J. P., was a French engraver of talent, whose history is unfortunately lost to us. We know only that he flourished about 1646, from which we may conjecture that he was born about 1620. We have by him the following plates, which are very scarce:

The Healing of the Paralytic.

St. John in the Desert.

Silenus about to make an offering at the Altar of Bacchus.

There is also a plate existing by a J. J. CROZIER, engraved in honour of the appointment of Cardinal Bicchì as Papal Nuncio.

CRUIKSHANK, GEORGE, the younger son of Isaac Cruikshank, was born in London in 1792. Very early in life he had a predilection for the sea, but his mother opposed the wish, and urged his father to instruct him in art. This, however, the father refused; saying, that if George was destined to become an artist, he would find the way without any instruction. The youth applied for admittance into the Royal Academy schools, but was unsuccessful. His father died when he was still very young; and when that event took place, he determined to do his best to support his mother. Some wood blocks which his father had on hand were finished by him, and from that time his employment was secured, and his destiny in life fixed. He was soon engaged in a variety of undertakings. He illustrated with caricatures a monthly periodical called 'The Scourge,' and also one called 'The Meteor,' which he founded in conjunction with a person named Erle. He executed a great deal of this kind of work for Hone, most of whose publications about that time bear the marks of his active pencil. And not only with his pencil did he assist Hone, for to the imagination of the young artist the origin of many of the best political squibs, such as the 'Slap for Slop,' was mainly due. Merely to enumerate the pictorial trifles which that epoch of his career produced, would be an endless task. His was 'The Queen's Matrimonial Ladder,' 'The Man in the Moon,' and 'Non mi ricordo'—all squibs referring to the infamous trial of Queen Caroline. A collection of the political caricatures which were published by Cruikshank at this time would furnish a kind of political history of the day, and would even illustrate many of the changes of opinion which prevailed. The first work of any great importance in which Cruikshank bore part was the famous 'Life in London,' the original suggestion of which was due to him alone. The original design was to publish a series of tableaux illustrating the bright side of 'life' in London, and also the reverse. He was ultimately persuaded, however, to develop the idea in collaboration with his brother Robert and Pierce Egan, and the result was that whilst the last-named gentleman derived all the glory of writing one of the most popular books of the time, the wholesome moral which was originally intended was entirely lost sight of. Disgusted with the perversion of his plan, George Cruikshank virtually left the completion of the plates to his brother Robert. After this, Cruikshank illustrated a periodical called 'The Humourist.' In 1823-26 he illustrated with some capital etchings Grimm's 'German Popular Stories,' and 'Fairy Tales'; and soon after published a very curious set of comic prints called 'Points of Humour.' From this time he was called upon to illustrate many of the most popular works of the day. In 1847, although not at that time a teetotaler, he published a series of eight woodcuts, called 'The Bottle,' which were very successful. To this he next year added 'The Drunkard's Children,' intended to show the terribly degrading effects of the immoderate use of strong drink. He also published, 'Sunday in London,' 'The Gin Trap,' and 'The Gin Juggernaut,' all of which had an immense circulation, and no doubt helped to further the cause of temperance. Whilst he was thus engaged, he was waited upon by some disciples of Father Mathew, who convinced him that 'moderate drinking' was not the best way to aid the temperance movement, and Cruikshank, entering into the movement with all the fervour of a naturally ardent temperament, became a total abstainer.

In his later years George Cruikshank tried oil-painting, but his works in this branch of art are as much caricatures as any etching he ever executed; yet they betray a marvellous power of grotesque humour and deep insight into human nature. His 'Cinderella,' painted in 1854, is in the South Kensington Museum, and the last and greatest of his efforts in oil-painting, 'The Worship of Bacchus,' painted for the National Temperance League in 1862, is now in the National Gallery.

George Cruikshank died in London in 1878, and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral. The following, arranged in chronological order, are the most important of the books which he illustrated with etchings:

Life in London; or the Day and Night Scenes of Jerry Hawthorn, Esq., Corinthian Tom, and Bob Logic, in their rambles through the metropolis. By Pierce Egan. With coloured plates by G. and R. Cruikshank. 1821.

Grimm's German Popular Stories. 1824-26.

Fuller details may be found in Mr. G. W. Reid's Descriptive Catalogue of the Works of George Cruikshank, published in 1871.

CRUIKSHANK, ISAAC, was born at Edinburgh in 1756 or 1757. His father had been one of the followers of the Pretender, and had lost his property in that hopeless cause. Isaac first came to London at the close of the last century, and, after the death of his father, tried to gain his living by drawing caricatures. He was the contemporary of Rowlandson and Gillray, and his first published print was one in defence of Pitt in 1796, who was at that time bitterly assailed by Gillray. The greater part of the humorous sketches illustrating the works of Dean Swift, Joe Miller, and John Browne, and published by Messrs. Laurie and Whittle, were by Isaac Cruikshank. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1789, 1790, and 1792, and in his water-colour drawings exhibited some talent. He died in London in 1810, or the year following. He was the father of Robert Isaac and George Cruikshank.

CRUIKSHANK, ROBERT ISAAC, the elder son of Isaac Cruikshank, was born in or about 1790, and commenced life as a midshipman on board the East India Company's ship 'Perseverance.' Probably influenced by his brother George's success as a caricaturist and artist, he left the service and practised in water-colours and made comic designs, in which, however, he rarely went beyond mediocrity. He was connected with his brother George in illustrating 'The Universal Songster,' 1828; and 'Cruikshank at Home,' which was followed by a supplementary volume, entitled 'The Odd Volume,' in illustrating which Robert Seymour was associated. Robert I. Cruikshank's best drawings were those made for the illustration of Cumberland's 'British Theatre' and 'Minor Theatre.' His designs on wood were often excellent, but generally spoilt by the engraver. His death occurred in 1856.

CRUYL, LIEVIN, a Flemish priest, who was a designer and engraver, was born at Ghent about the year 1640, and died there in 1720. He designed the views of the most interesting objects in and near Rome, enriched with figures and animals: these are touched with spirit and in a pleasing style. Several of his drawings have been engraved by Giulio Testa; and we have by him some very interesting etchings from his own designs. He generally marked his plates  Cruyl. The following are by him:

A set of Twenty-three Plates of Ancient and Modern Rome; L. Cruyl del. et scul. 1665.
A set of Views of Roman Ruins, &c. 1667.
The Triumphs of the Roman Emperors; after Andrea Mantegna; ten plates.

CTESICLES, (or CLESIDES,) was a painter of Ephesus, who was living in B.C. 294. Although this artist is not spoken of as a painter of very distinguished talents, yet he may be presumed to have possessed some merit, from the celebrity he acquired by the outrageous insult he offered to Stratonice, the queen of Antiochus. Piqued at not being treated by her with the distinction which he thought he merited, he painted a picture of her in the arms of a fisherman, whom rumour gave to her as a paramour, and placing it in the most public part of the port of Ephesus, he immediately embarked. Stratonice, however, would not suffer the picture to be destroyed, such was the exact resemblance the artist had given both to herself and the object of her affection.

CTESILOCHUS, a Greek painter of the time of Alexander, was a disciple of Apelles, and is chiefly remarkable for the singular manner in which he treated one of his principal works, representing the Birth of Bacchus.

CUERENHERT, DIRK VOLKERTSZ, (or KOORNHAERT,) a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1522. He is more distinguished as a religious controversialist than as an artist. He has, however, the credit of having been the instructor of Hendrik Goltzius. He resided at Haarlem, but died at Gouda in 1590. Heineken and Huber have given catalogues of his engravings, but they are far from being complete. His plates are signed with the initials D. V. C., or with the monogram .

Amongst them are the following:

The Creation of the World. Seven plates.
The Descent from the Cross; after L. Lombard. 1556.
Joseph explaining his Dream; after M. Heemskerk.
Joseph interpreting the Dreams of the Prisoners of Pharaoh; after the same.
Job reproached by his Wife; after the same.
Balaam and his Ass; after the same. 1554.
The Elector of Saxony appearing before Charles V.; after the same.
The Landgrave of Hesse Cassel before Charles V.; after the same.

CUEVAS, —, a Spanish painter, was a native of Huesca, who studied under and assisted Tomas Pelegret in his decorative paintings for the cathedral of that city. He flourished about the middle of the 16th century, and died at Huesca at the age of 33.

CUEVAS, EUGENIO and PEDRO DE LAS. See DE LAS CUEVAS.

CUITT, GEORGE, the elder, was born at Moulton, in Yorkshire, in 1743, and having shown a natural taste for drawing and design was sent to Italy at the expense of Sir Lawrence Dundas, whose family had already been painted by him. He studied earnestly for six years at Rome, and also pursued landscape painting, a branch of art that was more congenial to his tastes. He returned to England in 1775, and in 1776 he exhibited at the Royal Academy 'The Infant Jupiter fed with goat's milk and honey.' He afterwards exhibited portraits and landscapes, his last contribution being in 1798. Owing to frequent attacks of low fever he was unable to reside in London, and he finally settled at Richmond in Yorkshire. Here he found constant employment in the commissions given him by gentlemen whose parks and residences were in his neighbourhood. His death occurred in 1818. His portraits are elaborately finished, although very thinly painted, whilst his earlier landscapes show much ability and feeling in their execution.

CUITT, GEORGE, the younger, the only son of the painter of the same names, was born at Richmond, in Yorkshire, in 1779. He followed his father's profession from his youth, and added to it the art of etching, which he developed with great success, being induced to do so by a careful study of Piranesi's 'Roman Antiquities.' He went to Chester, where he became a teacher of drawing, and published, in 1810 and 1811, 'Six Etchings of Saxon and other Buildings remaining at Chester,' 'Six Etchings of Old Buildings in Chester,' and 'Six Etchings of Picturesque Buildings in Chester,' and, in 1815, five etchings for a 'History of Chester.' About 1820, having realized a certain competence by his labours, he retired from the more active duties of his profession, and built himself a house at Masham, near Richmond, from whence he published his 'Yorkshire Abbeys,' and in 1848 his collected works, under the title of 'Wanderings and Pencilings amongst the Ruins of Olden Times.' These etchings exhibit considerable talent, verve, originality, and truth. His death occurred at Masham in 1854.

CULMBACH, HANS VON. See FUSS.

CUMING, WILLIAM, flourished at Dublin in the early part of the 19th century, and in 1823 was one of the three artists chosen by their fellows to elect the remaining eleven who formed the nucleus of the Royal Hibernian Academy. He was chiefly esteemed for his female portraits.

CUNDIER, JACQUES, a French engraver, born in 1691, was a native of Aix. There are by him a large number of portraits which bear dates ranging between 1717 and 1727.

CUNEGO, DOMENICO, an Italian designer and engraver, was born at Verona in 1727, and died at Rome in 1794. He was instructed in the art of painting by Ferrari, but devoted himself afterwards entirely to engraving. His copies from the works of the Italian masters gained him a great reputation, and his plates are distinguished for their deep appreciation of the original, excellence of design, and beauty of execution. He engraved several portraits of the royal family of Prussia; and was employed by Mr. Hamilton to engrave some of the plates for his 'Schola Italica.' Cunego afterwards came to England, and engraved some plates for Boydell's collection. Among many others we have the following engravings by this artist:

SUBJECTS FOR HAMILTON'S 'SCHOLA ITALICA.'

Three subjects of the Creation, from the Sistine Chapel; after Michelangelo.

Raphael's Mistress, called 'La Fornarina'; after Raphael.

Galatea; from the picture in the Barberini Palace; after the same.

Ganymede; after Titian.

Head of the Magdalen; after Guido.

The Prodigal Son; after Guercino.

The Birth of St. John the Baptist; after L. Carracci.

Galatea, from the Farnese Gallery; after Agostino Carracci.

Apollo and Silenus; after Annibale Carracci.

St. Cecilia receiving the Palm of Martyrdom; after Domenichino.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

Portrait of Raphael Mengs; after Mengs. 1778.

The Virgin and Infant; after the same.

Five sheets after Paintings in the Library of the Vatican; after the same.

z 2

The History of Achilles and Hector; five plates; after G. Hamilton.

The Virgin and Infant; after Correggio.

The Entombment; after Raphael.

The Annunciation, the Visitation, the Nativity, the Circumcision, the Adoration of the Magi, and the Presentation in the Temple; six plates; after Domenichino. 1779.

Rinaldo and Armida; after Guercino.

A set of thirteen plates of Ruins; after Clérissseau.

Musical Assemblies and Conversation Pieces; after Niccolò dell' Abbate.

Portrait of Cardinal de Bernis; after A. Callet.

Portrait of Emmanuel de Rohan; after Fabré. 1776.

CUNEGO, GIUSEPPE, the younger son of Domenico Cunego, was born at Verona in 1760, and, like his brother, was instructed by his father. By this artist we have the following plates of landscapes:

Four Italian Landscapes, with figures; after F. de Capo.

Eight Landscapes; after the pictures by Gaspard Poussin, in the Colonna Palace.

CUNEGO, LUIGI, the elder son and pupil of Domenico Cunego, was born at Verona in 1750. He chiefly resided at Leghorn. We have by him a few plates, of which the following are the principal:

The Statue of the Apollo Belvedere.

St. Margaret; after Guercino.

The Persian Sibyl; after the same.

Mary Magdalene; after Guido.

CUNINGHAM, WILLIAM, was a physician, who practised at Norwich about 1559, when he published his work called 'The Cosmographical Glasse,' which contained many woodcuts, as well as a bird's-eye map of Norwich, the whole engraved by himself.

CUNNINGHAM, EDWARD FRANCIS, (sometimes called KELSO or CALZE,) was sprung from a good Scotch family, and is said to have been born at Kelso about 1742. His father, having been implicated in the attempt of the Pretender in 1745, was obliged to fly from Scotland to the Continent, and took his son with him. Cunningham studied art with much perseverance at Parma, Rome, Venice, and Paris. He is said to have assumed the cognomen of 'Calze' in Italy. Soon after his arrival in Paris he inherited the family estates, and shortly afterwards a second bequest fell to his share; but being dissipated and extravagant he speedily ran through all his money, and was then induced to follow the Duchess of Kingston to Russia. On leaving her Grace he entered the service of the Russian Court, and afterwards went to Berlin, where he found full employment as a portrait painter. Unhappily his improvident habits continued, and he finally came to London, where he died in great poverty in 1795. As a portrait painter he achieved a deserved success, and some of his portraits have been engraved. He also painted a few historical subjects.

CUQUET, PEDRO, a Spanish painter, was born at Barcelona in 1596. According to Palomino, his works were confined to the churches and convents of his native city, the principal being some pictures of the life of St. Francis of Paola, in the cloister of the convent of that name. He died at Barcelona in 1666. The industrious restorers, who for some time overran Spain, have destroyed the greater part of his works.

CUREAU, GUILLAUME, a native of Bordeaux, was principally employed in the early half of the 17th century in painting the portraits of the Mayors and Jurats of Bordeaux. A collection of his works was sold by the city in 1793, but Bordeaux still retains in its Museum a portrait of Messire de Mullet, Seigneur de Latour, by Cureau, who died in his native city in 1647.

CURIA, FRANCESCO, was born at Naples in 1538. He was instructed in painting by Leonardo di Pistoja, but afterwards visited Rome, where he studied the works of Raphael, and other distinguished masters. On his return to Naples, he painted many pictures for the public edifices. He distinguished himself by the grandeur of his compositions, the fine expression of his heads, and a vagueness of colouring that approaches to nature, but was not free from the mannered style, which was also adopted by Vasari and Zuccaro. His most admired work is that in the Chiesa della Pietà, representing the 'Circumcision.' It is an admirable composition of many figures, painted in a fine style, and is considered by Lanzi as one of the finest pictures at Naples. He was the founder of a prosperous school in that city, and died there in 1610.

CURRADO, FRANCESCO, was born near Florence in 1570, and was brought up in the school of Battista Naldini. He painted first for the churches at Florence, and afterwards visited Rome, where he stayed some time and painted several works for the King of Portugal, who gave him the Order of Christ. After his return to Florence, he was unremittingly occupied during a long life, until he reached his 91st year, in painting, and in the instruction of his numerous pupils. He painted historical subjects, and some of his large works are in the churches of Florence: the altar-piece of 'St. Francis Xavier preaching in India,' in the church of San Giovannino, is esteemed one of the best. But he chiefly excelled in historical pictures of an easel size, of which two of the finest, representing the 'Magdalen' and the 'Martyrdom of St. Thecla,' are in the gallery at Florence. His works are composed with taste and judgment, his drawing is correct, and his heads are full of expression. In his colouring, like most of the Tuscan painters, he is more to be admired for sobriety than vivacity. He died in 1661. We find of his works:

Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
"	"	The Magdalen.
"	"	Martyrdom of St. Thecla.
"	Pitti Pal.	Narcissus.
"	"	St. Catharine.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Abraham receiving the Angels.

PIETRO and COSIMO, his brothers and pupils, became his faithful followers.

CURRAN, AMELIA, who was the daughter of the famous Irish advocate and orator, the Right Hon. John Philpot Curran, practised painting only as an amateur. She died at Rome in 1847. A portrait of Percy Bysshe Shelley by her was exhibited at the National Portrait Exhibition in 1868.

CURTI, BERNARDINO, was a native of Bologna, who flourished about the year 1645. He engraved some portraits, among which is that of Lodovico Carracci. We have also by him a middle-sized plate, representing an emblematical subject after Luca Ferrari.

CURTI, FRANCESCO, an Italian engraver, was born at Bologna about the year 1603, and died there about 1670. He worked principally with the graver, in a neat, clear style, resembling the manner of Cherubino Alberti, but very unequal to that artist in drawing. Besides some portraits, we have the following by him:

Two Busts of the Virgin and St. Catharine, on the same plate.

The Virgin teaching the Infant Jesus to read; after Guercino.

The Marriage of St. Catharine; after D. Calvaert.

Venus directing Vulcan to forge Arms for Æneas; after Carracci.

Hercules combating the Hydra; after Guercino.

The Infant Christ sleeping; after Guido; etched and finished with the graver.

CURTI, GIROLAMO, called IL DENTONE, was born at Bologna in 1570, and was first a disciple of Lionello Spada, and of Baglioni, a painter of decorations, but he afterwards applied himself to study from the noble edifices erected from the plans of Giacomo Barozzi, called Vignola. He next went to Rome, where he improved his taste by contemplating the magnificent vestiges of ancient architecture in that capital. He was a perfect master of chiaroscuro, and gave to his works so surprising a relief, that they have the appearance of perfect illusion. There are many of his works in the palaces and public edifices at Bologna, in which the figures are painted by the most distinguished of his contemporaries. He died in that city in 1631.

CURTIS, CHARLES M., was born in London in 1795, and practised chiefly on natural history subjects, which he drew with much accuracy and spirit. His brother was the author of 'British Entomology.' His death occurred in 1839.

CURTIS, JOHN, was a landscape painter, and the pupil of William Marlow. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1790 to 1797, his first painting being a 'View of Netley Abbey,' and his last a sea-piece, called 'Sir Edward Pellew's Action with the French Seventy-Four, "Les Droits de l'Homme."'

CURTIS, SARAH, was born in the latter part of the 17th century, and was a pupil of Mrs. Beale. On her marriage with Dr. Hoadly, afterwards Bishop of Winchester, she quitted her profession, and died in 1743. Her productions are mediocre, and wanting in both life and colour. She painted the portraits of Whiston, Bishop Burnet, and her own husband. Bishop Burnet's portrait was engraved by William Faithorne.

CUSENS. See MONTEMAN Y CUSENS.

CUSIGHE, SIMONE DA, also known as SIMONE DAL PERON, both being the names of villages near Belluno, was living in portions of the 14th and 15th centuries, and is thought to have died close upon 1416. The altar-piece of the high altar in the cathedral of Belluno was executed by him in 1397. There also remain of his works:

Belluno. Baptistery. St. Martin dividing his Cloak: and sixteen other episodes from his life.

" Casa Pagani. Virgin of Mercy, between 16 subjects from the life of St. Bartholomew.

CUSTODIS, HIERONYMO, was a painter of Antwerp, of whom nothing is known beyond the few words he has inscribed on his portraits. Two of these, Giles Bruges, Lord Chandos, and Elizabeth Bruges, Lady Kennedy, are at Woburn Abbey, and a third, Sir John Parker, is at Hampton Court. All three were painted in England in 1589, and are very poor productions.

CUSTOS, DOMINICUS. See DE COSTER.

CUVILLIERS, FRANÇOIS, a French architect, and engraver of ornaments, was born at Soissons in 1698, and went to Paris in 1714 to study architecture under Robert de Cotte. About 1720 he was sent to Cologne to execute work for the Elector James Clement, and in 1738 he was nominated architect to the Elector of Bavaria, afterwards the Emperor Charles VII. He died about the end of 1767 or the beginning of 1768.

CUVILLIERS, FRANÇOIS, the son of the preceding, was an engineer and architect, born at Munich in 1734. He succeeded his father at the court of Munich, and there published his father's works in 1769—1772. He etched some plates of Funeral Monuments, Fountains, and Caryatides, and is supposed to have died about 1805.

CUYCK VAN MIEROP, FRANS VAN, (or CUYCK VAN MIERHOP,) was born at Bruges in 1640, and painted in Ghent historical pictures, with portraits of the persons in the events depicted, but his best productions represent animals, especially fish, and some of his works are scarcely to be distinguished from those of Snyders. He was descended from a noble family, and at first painted only for amusement; but a reverse of fortune compelled him to pursue the art as a profession. He died after 1686. The Academy of Bruges has a picture of 'Still Life' by this painter.

CUYLENBORCH, ABRAHAM VAN, (CUYLENBURG, or KUYLENBURG,) was a painter of Utrecht, who flourished in the 17th century. He was instructed by Poelenburg, in whose manner he executed landscapes with idyllic and mythological scenes; his figures, however, are but abortive imitations of that master. In 1639 he was appointed master of the Guild at Utrecht, and his name occurs in the records as late as 1660. Among his paintings we may notice:

Bruswick.	Gallery.	A Grotto.	1646.
"	"	A Grotto.	1647.
Cologne.	"	Diana.	1660.
Hague.	"	Diana.

CUYLENBURG, CS. VAN, of Utrecht, painted in Holland in the early years of the nineteenth century. He died at the Hague after 1816. A portrait of Willem Crul by him is in the Amsterdam Gallery.

CUYP, AELBERT, the son of Jacob Gerritz Cuypp, was born at Dordrecht in 1605, and studied under his father. He married in 1658, and lived chiefly on his estate, Dordwijk, near Dordrecht, in which town he was considered of some importance. His name does not occur in the records of the Guild; and it is thought by some that he may have practised art only as an amateur. But little is known of his life. He died in 1691, and was buried in the church of the Augustines at Dordrecht.

Cuypp, who has been called the Dutch Claude, acquired the chaste and exquisite style, for which he is so particularly admired, by a close and vigilant attention to nature, under all the vicissitudes of atmosphere and season. His pictures frequently represent the borders of the Maas, with shepherds and herdsmen tending their cattle. These subjects he has treated with an enchanting simplicity, that may truly be said to be peculiar to him. Whether he wished to exhibit the dewy vapour of morning, ushering in the brightness of a summer day, the glittering heat of noon, or the still radiance of evening, nature is perfectly represented. No painter, perhaps, has surpassed him in the purity of aerial tint. Cuypp did not confine himself to landscapes and figures; he painted with equal success sea-pieces and views of rivers, with boats sometimes sailing with a fresh breeze, sometimes at anchor in a sultry calm; winter-scenes, with people amusing themselves on the ice; and pictures of birds, which would have been a credit to D'Hondecoeter. He excelled also in horse-fairs and skirmishes of cavalry, which he painted with infinite spirit, in a manner equal, if not superior, to Wouwerman. He was not less happy in his pictures of moonlight; in which the works of Van der Neer are eclipsed by a superior and a more delicate degradation of light. He also painted portraits (an example is in the National Gallery), interiors of churches, fruit, and flowers; and may thus be called the most universal painter of the school to which he belonged. The pictures of Cuypp are to be met with more frequently in England than in any other country, and, with the exception of those in the Louvre, almost all his masterpieces may be found in the public galleries and private collections of this country, for it was in England that the beauty of his pictures was first appreciated. Till about the middle of the 18th century, they could be bought for as little as thirty florins a-piece; they now fetch as much as £3,000.

The following are some of his principal works, which are usually signed (in early life, A. C., and later, A. CUYPP), but rarely dated.

Aelbert Cuyp has left eight small etchings of cows, which, though not executed with much delicacy or care, evince the hand of the master. They are very scarce.

CUYP, BENJAMIN, a pupil, and apparently a nephew of Jacob Gerritsz Cuyp, was born at Dordrecht in 1608, and was received into the Guild there in 1631. He formed his style on that of Aelbert Cuyp, Rembrandt, and Teniers the elder. His subjects are taken from sacred history, coast scenery, and peasant life. His works are rarely met with in public galleries. The following are attributed to him:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Adoration of the Shepherds.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Peasants playing and singing.
Lille.	Museum.	The Resurrection.
"	"	Portrait of a Young Woman.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Peasants quarrelling.

CUYP, JACOB GERRITSZ, the father of the celebrated Aelbert Cuyp, and a pupil of Abraham Bloemaert, was born at Dordrecht in 1575. He occasionally painted views of towns, landscapes, and battle-pieces, but he is principally famous for his portraits. He was one of the four founders of the Guild of St. Luke at Dordrecht. He was still living in 1649. The following works are by him:

Amsterdam.	Gallery.	A Dutch Family.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Portrait of an Old Woman. 1624.
"	"	Portraits of a newly-married Couple.
"	"	Portrait of a Young Man.

CUYPERE, ANDRIES DE. See STEVENS.

CYDIAS, a native of Cythnus, who was living in B.C. 364, may be presumed to have been a painter of considerable ability, as one of his pictures, representing 'Jason and his followers embarking for Colchis, in search of the Golden Fleece,' was purchased at Rome by the orator Hortensius for forty-four thousand sesterces, and was afterwards bought by Marcus Agrippa, and placed in the Porticus of Neptune to commemorate his naval victories.

CYL, GERARD VAN, a painter of Amsterdam or Leyden, who, about the year 1649, produced a number of portraits and conversation pieces in the style of Van Dyck, whom he imitated with deceptive accuracy.

CZECHOWICZ, SIMON, was born at Cracow in 1689, and went when quite young to Rome, where he placed himself for improvement under Maratti, and resided during thirty years. After his return he worked principally in Warsaw, but also in Cracow, Wilna, Podhorce, and Polock. He at length entered the order of the Capuchins, and from that time devoted himself wholly to painting for them. He established the first school of painting in Poland. His death occurred at Warsaw in 1775. Some three hundred strictly religious pictures by him have been estimated to exist, of which 107 are in Podhorce Castle, and others in the Jesuits' College at Polock, and the churches of the Piarists and St. Florian at Cracow. His masterpiece is the 'Miracle of the Broken Milk-pot,' at Wilna.

CZERMAK, JAROSLAV. See ČERMAK.

D

DA, ABRAHAM, an engraver, was probably a native of Germany, as he appears to have imitated the style of Theodor De Bry. There is a plate by him of 'The Last Supper,' executed with the graver in a neat but stiff style, and inscribed Abraham Da fecit; from which it may be presumed that it is from his own design.

DA ANNUNCIAÇÃO, THOMAS JOSÉ, who was born at Ajuda near Lisbon, in 1821, learned his art in the academy of that city, and afterwards travelled through Spain and France. He was principally an animal painter, and was considered the best artist in that branch of art in the Peninsula; but he occasionally executed genre pictures. He was Director of the Academy of Fine Arts at Lisbon, where he died in 1879. The following are some of his most noteworthy works:

Lisbon.	Galeria Nacional.	View of Amora.
"	"	Two Women at a Fountain.
"	"	View of the Penha de França.
"	"	Oxen treading out Corn at Ribatejo.
"	"	After pasture—View on the Tagus.
"	"	The Shepherd's Rest. 1852.

DABOS, LAURENT, a painter of portraits and of historical and genre subjects, who was born at Toulouse in 1761, was instructed by François André Vincent, and first exhibited at the 'Exposition de la Jeunesse' in 1788. Among his works may be mentioned: 'Mary of England, Queen of France, lamenting the death of her husband, Louis XII.,' 'The Return of the Grande Armée,' and 'Louis XVI. writing his Will,' a picture painted in the Temple during the captivity of the royal family. Besides these he painted from life the portrait of the Dauphin (Louis XVII.). He died in Paris in 1835. His wife, JEANNE BERNARD, who was a pupil of Madame Guyard, also painted genre subjects. She was born at Luneville in 1763, and died in 1842.

DA CUNHA TABORDA, JOSÉ, a Portuguese painter and architect, was born at Fundão, in the diocese of Guarda, in 1766. After studying painting under Joaquim Manoel da Rocha, he went in 1788 to Rome, where he placed himself under the tuition of Antonio Cavallucci, and gained reputation by a picture of 'The Summoning of Cincinnatus to the Dictatorship.' After his return to Portugal he was in 1799 appointed professor at the Lisbon Academy, and in 1803 court painter, in which capacity he painted in the royal palace of Ajuda and the hall of the Cortes. There is no mention of the date of his death.

DADDI, BERNARDO, a Florentine painter, was the contemporary and colleague of Jacopo Landini di Casentino in the formation of the Academy of St. Luke at Florence in 1349. He was born towards the close of the 13th century, and was one of the most able of the pupils of Giotto. He painted in fresco the histories of St. Lawrence and St. Stephen in the Berardi chapel in Santa Croce, and also the gates of the old city of Florence; but the only frescoes which remain are those representing the Martyrdoms of St. Stephen and St. Lawrence. In 1346-7 he painted his best work, the miracle-working picture of the Virgin, which is still in Or San Michele at Florence. His death took place in 1350.

Besides the above-mentioned, the following works by Daddi are extant:

England.	The Crucifixion (formerly in the church of St. George at Kuballa). 1348.
Florence. Accademia.	Virgin enthroned, with two Saints (central portion of a small triptych, erroneously ascribed in the catalogue to Bernardo Orcagna). 1332?
" Ognissanti.	Virgin and Child, with St. Matthew and St. Nicholas. 1328.
Pisa. Camposanto.	Frescoes of the Triumph of Death, the Last Judgment, and the Inferno.
Siena. Istituto di Belle Arti.	Virgin and Child, with Saints (a small triptych). 1336.
" "	Virgin and Child, with a corona of Saints in adoration (central portion of a triptych).

DADDI, COSIMO, was a native of Florence, who flourished about the year 1614. He was a scholar of Battista Naldini, and painted historical subjects with much skill; but he is better known as having been the master of Volterrano. Several of his works are noticed by Baldinucci, particularly a picture of the 'Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth,' and some subjects from the Life of the Virgin, at the monastery of San Lino, at Florence. In the church of Or San Michele is an altar-piece, representing the Archangel discomfiting the rebel Angels. Daddi died of the plague in 1630. Zani says that his name was Dati, and that he painted in 1588.

DADURE, MARIE MICHEL ALPHONSE, a French portrait and historical painter, who was a pupil of Ingres, was born in Paris in 1804, and died there in 1868. His best work is the 'Pilgrimage of St. Helena, Queen of Sweden.'

DAEHLING, HEINRICH ANTON, a historical and genre painter, was born at Hanover in 1773. In 1794 he went to Berlin, where he was engaged in miniature painting and as a teacher of drawing. In 1802 he visited Paris, and the study of the galleries there first induced him to attempt painting in oil. From 1811 until his death he was a member of the Berlin Academy, and professor at the same from 1814 onwards. He died at Potsdam in 1850. One of his most famous pictures is 'The Descent from the Cross,' the altar-piece at the Garrison Church in Potsdam. In the Berlin Gallery is a 'State Entry,' painted by him.

DAEL, JAN FRANS VAN, an excellent painter of fruit and flowers, was born at Antwerp in 1764, but went early to Paris and settled there. He was self-instructed in art, but made such progress that he soon distinguished himself at the exhibitions, on one occasion obtaining the prize of 4000 francs, and on two others, the large gold medal. His style is in the manner of Van Huysum and Van Spaendonck, although he did not confine himself strictly to fruit and flowers, but painted other subjects, in which such objects might with propriety be introduced. Two of his pictures, which he painted for the Empress Joséphine, represent 'An Offering to Flora,' and 'The Tomb of Julia'; the latter is now in the Louvre. His master-piece, known as 'La Croisée,' the fruit of three years' labour, was likewise purchased by the Empress Joséphine, and is now in a private collection at Liège. He was also patronized by the Empress Marie Louise, who took one of his pictures with her to Parma. He died in Paris in 1840, and was buried in the cemetery of Père Lachaise by the side of his friend Van Spaendonck. The Louvre has also by him three pictures of 'Flowers' and one of 'Fruit.'

DAELE, JAN VAN, a Flemish landscape painter, who was born at Antwerp in 1530, and died in 1601, excelled in representing mountainous and rocky scenery. Balkema erroneously names him Cornelis.

DAELEN, DIRK VAN. See DEELEN.

DAERINGER, JOHANN GEORG, an Austrian historical painter, was born at Ried in 1759. He painted many altar pictures, and held the post of corrector of the Academy at Vienna, where he died in 1809.

DAFFINGER, MORIZ MICHAEL, a distinguished miniature painter, who has been called the Austrian Isabey, was born at Vienna in 1790. While studying at the Academy under Füger he showed considerable talent for portrait painting, which he improved at a later period by a study of the manner of Lawrence, who visited Vienna during the Congress of 1814. Daffinger painted portraits of the Duke of Reichstadt and many of the nobility of the court of Vienna, and etched four plates, one of which was his own portrait. He died at Vienna in 1849.

DA' FRUTTI, IL GOBBO. See BONZI.

DAGIÙ, FRANCESCO, called IL CAPELLA, who was born at Venice in 1714, was a scholar of Giovanni Battista Piazzetta. He painted history, and was chiefly employed for the churches at Bergamo, and by the state. One of his best pictures is 'St. George and the Dragon,' in the church of San Bonate. He died in 1784.

DAGLEY, RICHARD, an English subject painter, was born in the latter half of the 18th century. He was brought up at Christ's Hospital, and at first made designs for jewellery. From 1784 to 1806 he exhibited domestic subjects at the Royal Academy. He then turned his attention to teaching drawing, but again appeared at the Academy from 1815 to 1833. As a medallist he obtained some success, and he published works on Gems in 1804 and 1822. His life was a continued struggle against poverty. He died in London in 1841.

DAGNAN, ISIDORE, a French landscape painter, was born at Marseilles in 1794, and died in Paris in 1873. Among his pictures, which consist chiefly of views in Southern France, Italy, and Switzerland, are the following:

Fontainebleau.	Palace.	View of Lausanne. 1822.
"	"	View in Dauphiné. 1827.
Versailles.	Trianon.	Lake of Geneva. 1822.
"	"	View of Paris from the Quai de la Cité, 1831 (one of his best works).
"	"	Banks of the Vigne near Vaucluse.
"	"	Valley of the Lauterbrunnen. 1841.

DAGUERRE, LOUIS JACQUES MANDÉ, a French scene-painter, was born at Cormeilles-en-Parisis in Normandy in 1787. He studied under Degoti, and very soon surpassed all other masters in the art of theatrical decoration. In 1822, in conjunction with Bouton, he founded at Paris the Diorama, which enjoyed great popularity until its destruction by fire in 1839. But the great event of Daguerre's life was his discovery of the art of photography, or, as it was named after him, the Daguerreotype. His first experiments were made in 1826, and in 1829 he associated himself with Niepce, who had since the year 1814 been endeavouring to solve the problem of fixing the image formed in the camera obscura. The discovery was ceded to the public in 1839, when Daguerre received a pension of 6000 francs. He died suddenly at Petit-Bry-sur-Marne, near Paris, in 1851.

DAHL, JOHAN CHRISTIAN CLAUSEN, a Norwegian landscape painter, was born at Bergen in 1788. His parents wished him to enter the Church, but he speedily followed his own inclination for art. In 1811 he attended the Academy of Copenhagen, and in 1818 went to Dresden. Later on, he travelled in the Tyrol and Germany, and repeatedly visited his native country, whose coasts and fiords, lakes and towns, he painted with loving exactitude, but with a singular dryness. He likewise etched four plates. Dahl died at Dresden in 1857. His 'Storm at Sea,' in the Berlin Gallery, and his 'Winter Landscape,' in the Munich Pinakothek, are paintings worthy of mention.

DAHL, MICHAEL, a Swedish portrait painter, was born at Stockholm in 1656, and received some instruction from Ehrenstrål, an esteemed Swedish artist. At the age of twenty-two he came to England, but did not at that time remain longer than a year; he continued his travels in search of improvement through France to Italy, where he studied for some years, and whilst at Rome painted the portrait of the celebrated Queen Christina of Sweden. In 1688 he returned to England, where he found Sir Godfrey Kneller rising to the head of his profession; but Dahl possessed sufficient merit to distinguish himself as no mean competitor. Queen Anne and Prince George of Denmark both sat to him. He died in London in 1743.

DAHLEN, REINER, who was born at Cologne in 1836, was originally brought up as a saddler, but chose to devote himself to art, and studied at the Academy of Düsseldorf. He visited England, North America, and Paris. His works mostly represent horses, carriages, hunting parties, and so forth. Although there is a study of nature exhibited in his paintings, his peculiarly original style did not meet with much approbation. He died at Düsseldorf in 1874.

DAHLSTEIN, AUGUSTIN, a German painter who flourished in the middle of the 18th century, was a native of Cassel. He visited Sweden and Russia, and etched a series of 50 plates of the 'Cries of St. Petersburg and Moscow.'

DAIGREMONT, M., was a French engraver, who flourished from about 1670 to about 1700. He engraved some of the plates for Berain's 'Ornemens,' and several views of Versailles.

DAI LIBRI, FRANCESCO, the elder, born at Verona in 1452, was the son of Stefano dai Libri, an illuminator of books. He was the father of Girolamo dai Libri, and is known as an illuminator of choir books for the churches of his native city.

DAI LIBRI, FRANCESCO, the younger, the grandson of the above and son of Girolamo dai Libri, was born in 1500, and lived chiefly at Venice and at Padua. He was at first a painter of miniatures, but afterwards a painter in oil and an architect.

DAI LIBRI, GIROLAMO, the son of Francesco dai Libri, was born at Verona in 1474. He was brought up by his father to his own profession of a miniature painter and illuminator of books, but he soon abandoned its pursuit. His earlier style inclines to that of Andrea Mantegna. His first picture, painted when he was only sixteen, is in the church of Malcesine, on the Lake of Garda, and represents the 'Deposition from the Cross, with the Virgin and Saints.' In the Museum of Verona is a painting representing 'The Virgin, St. Joseph, St. John the Baptist, and St. Jerome, adoring the Infant Christ'; and at Sant' Anastasia in the same city, is a 'Madonna and Child with Saints, which is one of his earliest productions. In 1515 he and Francesco Morone painted the organ shutters of Santa Maria in Organo, which are now at Malcesine. In 1526 he finished his masterpiece, the 'Virgin and Child enthroned, between Lorenzo Giustiniani and St. Zeno,' at San Giorgio Maggiore in Verona; and of about the same period is the 'Virgin and Child, with SS. Anne and Joachim and two donors,' in the church of San Paolo in the same city. In 1530 were executed the 'Virgin and Saints,' for the church of the Vittoria Nuova, and the 'Virgin in Glory, with SS. Andrew and Peter,' for Sant Andrea; both pictures are now in the Gallery of Verona. Girolamo died at Verona in 1556. Giulio Clovio and his son, Francesco dai Libri, were his pupils. He never painted in fresco, and his works are rare out of his native city. Pictures by him are in the following collections:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child, between SS. Bartholomew and Zeno.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Madonna and Child, with Saint Anne.
Paris.	Louvre.	Virgin and Child.

DAIWAILLE, JEAN AUGUSTIN, a Dutch portrait painter, was born at Cologne in 1786, and went when young to Amsterdam where he studied under A. De Lelie, and was director of the Academy from 1820 to 1826. After that time he resided at Rotterdam, where he was very successful in painting portraits, and where he died in 1850. There is by him one etching, which is scarce.

DAL COLLE, RAFFAELLO, or RAFFAELLINO, called also RAFFAELLINO DAL BORGO SAN SEPOLCRO, was born at Borgo San Sepolcro, about the year 1490. He was first a disciple of Raphael, but after the death of that master he became the scholar of Giulio Romano, whom he assisted in his principal works at Rome, and in the Palazzo del Te, at Mantua. Of his own compositions, the principal are two pictures at Borgo San Sepolcro, one of which, representing the 'Resurrection,' in the choir of the cathedral, exhibits a grandeur not unworthy of the great school in which he had been educated. The figure of Christ is dignified and majestic, and the terror of the guards of the sepulchre is admirably expressed. The other is in the church of the Conventuali, and represents the 'Assumption of the Virgin.' It is a graceful and impressive composition; and being placed near one of the best pictures of Giorgio Vasari, establishes its merit by its decided superiority. Raffaellino dal Colle was one of the artists employed by Raphael in the decorations of the Loggie of the Vatican, and painted one of the small cupolas in the roof with a portion of the history of Moses. In Città di Castello is an 'Annunciation' by him, which is a very graceful composition. An 'Entombment,' in the Servi, is another beautiful picture. A picture of 'The Virgin attended by St. Sebastian and St. Roch,' was in the church of San Francesco at Cagli, the figures and landscape of which much resembled the manner of Raphael. In one of the chapels of the Olivet monks at Gubbio there are pictures by him, in one of which he has introduced a figure of Virtue, who seems to be a sister to Raphael's Sibyls. He assisted Bronzino and Vasari in their decorations and cartoons—the latter upon the occasion of the visit of Charles V. to Florence. He had many scholars who proved able artists, but few equalled him in grace and high finish; Cristofano Gherardi and Giovanni de' Vecchi are noticeable amongst them.

DALÉN, CORNELIS VAN, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about the year 1620. He was called 'the younger,' to distinguish him from his father, who was likewise an engraver, and whose works it is not easy to distinguish from those of his son. He was instructed in engraving by his father, and also by Cornelis Visscher, whose style he followed for some time. His prints occasionally resemble those of A. Blooteling, and at other times those of Pontius and Bolswert. He worked entirely with the graver, which he handled in a bold and free manner, and with considerable taste. He usually marked his plates with the initials C. D. We have by him several portraits, and a few historical subjects.

DALENS, DIRK, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1659. He was the son of Willem Dalens, an artist of little celebrity, who taught him the first lessons in the art. The principal works of Dalens are large landscapes, painted with a free and firm touch, and very agreeably coloured, which decorate the saloons of some of the principal houses in Amsterdam. He also painted some cabinet pictures of landscapes, with figures, which are deemed worthy of being placed in the best collections in Holland. He died in 1688.

DALENS, DIRK, called 'the younger,' the posthumous son of the preceding, was born at Amsterdam in 1688. He was instructed by Theodoor van Pee, and became a painter of landscapes with cattle and figures, enriched with ruins, in the manner of Pynacker, which are executed with great ability. He died in 1753.

DA' LIBRI. See DAI LIBRI.

DALIPHARD, EDOUARD, a French landscape painter, was born at Rouen in 1833. He studied under Gustave Morin, the Director of the Rouen Museum, and spent a considerable time in the East, where he made a good collection of water-colour sketches. His works appeared at the Salon from 1864 to 1876, and he also contributed to the French journal, 'L'Art.' He died at Rouen after a long and painful illness in 1877. Amongst his best productions are:

The Sun appearing after a Storm. 1866.

Souvenir of the Forest of Eu. 1873.

The flooded Farm, Poissy. 1873.

Melancholy. 1875.

DALL, NICHOLAS THOMAS, was a native of Denmark, who settled in London as a landscape painter, about the year 1760. He painted some excellent scenes for Covent Garden Theatre, and his engagements in that branch of art prevented him from painting many pictures. In 1768 he obtained the first premium given by the Society for the Encouragement of Arts for the best landscape. He was chosen an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1771, and died in London in 1777.

DALL' ACQUA, CRISTOFORO, who was born at Vicenza in 1734, engraved, principally for the booksellers, plates of various subjects, portraits, history, genre, landscapes, and architecture. Among his works may be noticed a portrait of Frederick the Great, King of Prussia, and an allegory of 'Merit crowned by Apollo,' after Andrea Sacchi, as well as numerous plates after the works of Cipriani, Houel, Joseph Vernet, and others. He died at Vicenza in 1787.

DALLAMANO, GIUSEPPE, born at Modena in 1679, is a remarkable instance of the progress that untutored genius has sometimes made in the art without the help of a master. Dallamano is stated by Lanzi to have been hardly removed from an idiot; ignorant even of the alphabet, and unaided by professional instruction, he nevertheless reached an excellence in painting architectural views which surprised the most intelligent judges. His best works are in the royal palace at Turin. He died in 1758.

DALL' AQUILA, POMPEO, is stated in the 'Abecedario Pittorico' of Orlandi, to have been a good historical painter, both in oil and in fresco. He flourished in the latter part of the 16th century. There is a fine picture by him in the church of Santo Spirito in Sassia at Rome, representing the 'Descent from the Cross,' which was engraved by Orazio de Santis in 1572. Several considerable works by him in fresco are to be seen at Aquila, where he was born.

DALL' ARGENTO, ANTONIO. See ALEOTTI.

DALL' ARZERE, STEFANO, who, according to Ridolfi and others, was a native of Padua, painted numerous altar-pieces for the churches and convents of that city. In the Chiesa degli Eremitani, he painted some subjects from the Old Testament, and two pictures of 'St. Peter' and 'St. Paul,' and in the church of the Servite monastery the principal altar-piece is by him. He flourished in the 16th century.

DALLE MADONNE, LIPPO. See SCANNABECCHI.

DALLEMAGNE, VIRGINIE POLYXÈNE AUGUSTINE PHILIPPE, a French miniature painter, whose maiden name was Decagny, was a native of Beauvais. She was a pupil of Madame de Mirbel, and showed much talent in the execution of portraits in miniature and in crayons. She married Adolphe Dallemagne, a landscape painter, and died at Corbeil in 1875.

DALLE MUSE, BERNARDINO. See BARBATELLI.

DALLE NINFE, CESARE, who flourished from about 1590 to 1600, was a Venetian, whom we find mentioned by Zanetti among the imitators of Tintoretto. He possessed the readiness of invention, and the facility of hand, for which that painter was remarkable, and was an excellent colourist, though deficient in drawing. There is no accurate account of his birth or death.

DALLEVIA, A., was an Italian engraver, who resided at Venice about the year 1686. Among other prints, he engraved a set of plates representing triumphal processions, entitled, 'Giuochi Festivi e Militari,' and published at Venice in 1686. They are executed in a coarse, indifferent style.

DALLIKER, JOHANN RUDOLPH, a Swiss portrait painter, was born at Zurich in 1694. He visited successively Magdeburg, Brunswick, Cassel, Leipsic, Berne, and Paris, where he made the acquaintance of Largillière and Rigaud. He resided at St. Gall, but died at Schaffhausen in 1769. Most of the celebrated persons of his country sat to him.

DALLINGER, FRANZ THEODOR, an Austrian painter of landscapes, fruit, and animals, was born at Linz in 1710, and died at Prague in 1771.

DALLINGER VON DALLING, ALEXANDER JOHANN, a son of Johann Dallinger von Dalling, the elder, was born at Vienna in 1783. He studied under his father, and became a landscape and animal painter, as well as an engraver and a restorer of old pictures. In the Belvedere, at Vienna, there is a picture by him representing 'A Herdsman driving Cows across a Brook.' He died at Vienna in 1844.

DALLINGER VON DALLING, JOHANN, an Austrian painter, was born at Vienna in 1741, and distinguished himself as director of the Liechtenstein Gallery. He painted animals, historical subjects, and large altar-pieces, most of which are in Russia and Poland. He died in 1806.

DALLINGER VON DALLING, JOHANN, a son of the preceding, was born in Vienna in 1782, and painted landscapes and animals in the old Dutch style, as well as portraits and conversation-pieces. Some of his works are in the Belvedere and Liechtenstein Galleries. He died at Vienna in 1868.

DALLWIG, HEINRICH, a landscape painter, was born at Cassel in 1811, and died at Munich in 1857. He had been settled in the latter city since 1839, but undertook frequent tours in search of scenery for his brush.

DALMASIO, LIPPO DI. See SCANNABECCHI.

DALMATIA, IL FEDERIGHETTO DI. See BENCOVICH.

DALMAU, LODOVICO. A 'Virgin and Child' by this artist is in the church of San Miguel at Barcelona; it is painted in the style of Van Eyck, and dated 1445.

DAL PERON, SIMONE. See CUSIGHE.

DAL POZZO, ISABELLA. In the 'Nuova Guida di Torino,' this lady is mentioned as having painted a picture in the church of San Francesco at Turin, representing the 'Virgin and Child, with St. Blaise and other Saints,' which is signed, and dated 1666. According to Lanzi, few of her contemporaries in that city could have produced a more creditable performance.

DAL SOLE, GIOVANNI ANTONIO MARIA, was born at Bologna in 1606, and was brought up in the school of Francesco Albani. He excelled in painting landscapes, which he decorated with groups of figures, gracefully designed in the style of Albani. He always worked with his left hand, and thus acquired the appellation of 'Il Monchino dai Paesi.' He died in 1684.

DAL SOLE, GIOVANNI GIUSEPPE, the son of Antonio dal Sole, was born at Bologna in 1654, and was instructed in the first principles of design by his father, but he afterwards became a disciple of Domenico Maria Canuti, and ultimately studied under Lorenzo Pasinelli. Following the example of his last instructor, he based his system of colouring upon the study of the works of the best masters of the Venetian School. He imitated the agreeable style of Pasinelli with great success, and his compositions are embellished with landscape and architecture, which he introduced with admirable taste. In many particulars, as in the hair and plumes of the angels, and in the accessories, such as veils, bracelets, crowns, and armour, he displays exquisite grace. He seems to have been inclined to treat lofty themes, and was more observant of costume, more methodical in composition, and better informed in architecture and landscape, than his master, Pasinelli. In these, indeed, he is almost unique. The most beautiful specimens, perhaps, are to be seen at the Casa Zappi in Imola, representing Evening, Night, and Morning, all harmonized with the sober tints belonging to the subjects. There are several of the works of this eminent artist in the public edifices at Bologna. Among the most esteemed are 'The Incredulity of St. Thomas,' in the church of La Madonna di Galiera; 'The Annunciation,' in San Gabrielle; and some frescoes in San Biagio, which are accounted his finest works. For the Giusti family at Verona he executed several Scriptural and mythological subjects, truly beautiful. One, of 'Bacchus and Ariadne,' which occupied but a week of his time, was pronounced by artists excellent; yet he cancelled almost the whole, to remodel it according to his own idea, declaring that it was enough to have shown his rapidity of hand to satisfy others, but that it became his duty, by additional accuracy, to satisfy himself also. For executing his altar-pieces, which are few and valuable, as well as his pictures for private collections, which are very numerous, he demanded high remuneration, persevering in his determination to paint only with care. In his works two manners are observable; the second partakes of that of Guido. A large portion of his pictures nearly approach the style of that master; so that the surname of 'The Modern Guido,' conferred on him by so many, has not been granted as a favour, but as his desert. Bartsch describes three etchings by him; an allegorical representation of Envy, a Group of Angels, after a design for a ceiling by Pasinelli, and another of Olympus, after the same. Gori mentions one of St. Francis Xavier confuting, or rather confounding, by his holy doctrine, the satraps of Japan, also after Pasinelli. Several portraits were etched by him in 1674, which were intended for the 'Felsina Pittrice,' but are not found in that work. He died at Bologna in 1719.

DALTON, RICHARD, an engraver and draughtsman, was born in Cumberland about 1720. After passing some time in Italy and Greece, he became librarian to the Prince of Wales, then keeper of the royal drawings and medals, and finally, in 1778, surveyor of the royal pictures. He made some engravings from the Holbein drawings, and after antique statues. He also published 'Manners and Customs of the Present Inhabitants of Egypt,' 1781. His name is to be found in connection with some of the art societies which preceded the Royal Academy. He died at St. James's Palace in 1791.

DAM, ANTHONY VAN, born at Middelburg, painted marine subjects of large dimensions. He flourished in the latter half of the last century.

DAM, WOUTER, born at Dort in 1726, was a scholar of Aart Schouman, whose manner he followed for some time, but ultimately became an imitator and copyist of Cuyp and Bakhuisen. He died at Dort in 1785 or 1786.

DAMAME DEMARTRAIS, MICHEL FRANÇOIS, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1763. After having studied in the school of David, he went to Russia, where he resided for some years. On his return to France he engraved and published 'Vues des principales villes de Russie, costumes et usages des habitants de cet empire,' 1813-14; 'Collection de Costumes du royaume de Naples,' 1818; 'Paris et ses alentours,' 1819. His most important picture was 'The Great Sanhedrim of the Jews of France and Italy,' exhibited at the Salon of 1810. He died in Paris in 1827.

DAMBRUN, JEAN, a French line-engraver, was born in Paris in 1741. He was one of the small band of artists to whom are due the vignettes which adorn many of the books issued towards the close of the last century which have of late become of such fabulous value. His best works are 'La Partie de Wisch,' after Moreau, for the 'Monument de Costume,' and 'Le Calendrier des Vieillards,' after Fragonard, for the 'Contes' of La Fontaine. He also engraved with much delicacy Quéverdo's illustrations to the remarkable series of Almanacs which appeared in Paris just before the outbreak of the French Revolution. There is no record of Dambrun after 1808.

DAME, GILES LA. See LA DAME.

DAMERY, JACOB, the brother of Walter Damery, was a good painter of flowers, of fruit, and especially of vases. He was born at Liège in 1619, but went to Rome when young, and remained there until his death, which occurred in 1685. He executed some etchings, among them a series of twelve vases, dated 1657.

DAMERY, SIMON, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Liège in 1604. He was a pupil of Jean Taulier, who married his sister, but while yet very young he ran away from his master and went to Italy. He afterwards settled at Milan, where he died of the plague in 1640.

DAMERY, WALTER, the brother of Jacob Damery, was born at Liège in 1614. He learned the rudiments of art in his native city, but in 1636 he came to England, and remained here several years, during which he painted a large number of portraits. He afterwards went to France and then to Italy, where he became a scholar of Pietro da Cortona. Subsequently he returned to Paris, where he painted for the Carmelite church his masterpiece, 'The Ascension of Elijah.' His productions are distinguished for their beautiful backgrounds and also for the nude figures of the children, in the depicting of which he exhibited great skill. He died at Liège in 1678.

DAMIANI, FELICE, was a native of Gubbio, who flourished from the year 1584 until 1606. He is by some supposed to have been educated in the Venetian school, and his picture of the 'Circumcision,' in San Domenico, partakes of that style: but in general his works evince more of the Roman taste, which he probably acquired under Benedetto Nucci. One of his best works is 'The Decollation of St. Paul,' at the Castel Nuovo in Recanati; the expression in the head of the martyr is admirable, the drawing correct, and the colouring brilliant and harmonious. It is dated 1584. About twelve years afterwards he decorated two chapels in the church of La Madonna de' Lumi, at San Severino, with pictures representing the Life of the Virgin and the Infancy of Christ. But his most admired production is the 'Baptism of St. Augustine,' painted in 1594 for the church dedicated to that saint at Gubbio; a grand composition of many figures, finely grouped, with an admirable expression of piety in the heads, and enriched with noble architecture. He was still living in 1616.

DAMINI, GIORGIO, a brother of Pietro Damini, was an excellent painter of portraits, and of historical subjects of a small size. Like his brother, he was carried off by the plague at Venice in 1631.

DAMINI, PIETRO, was born at Castelfranco in 1592, and, according to Ridolfi, was a scholar of Giovanni Battista Novelli, who had been educated in the school of Palma. Such was the extraordinary expectation occasioned by the early display of his talents, that some writers have not hesitated to affirm that he would have equalled Titian if he had not died young, an assertion, which, as Lanzi observes, may be regarded as a hyperbole. There are many of his works at Castelfranco, Vicenza, Crema, and particularly at Padua, where, in the church of San Clemente, is his picture of 'Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter,' and in the church of Il Santo, his most celebrated work, 'The Crucifixion, with the Virgin Mary and St. John,' a picture of extraordinary beauty, and of the most harmonious colour. In the cloister of the Padri Serviti, at Vicenza, he painted several pictures of the Life of St. Philip, the founder of their order. The style of Damini is vague and elegant, but he is by no means uniform. He appears to have frequently changed his manner, in search of greater perfection; and his last works are evidently his best. He had acquired a distinguished reputation when he fell a victim to the plague in Venice in 1631.

DAMINI, VINCENZO, was an excellent portrait painter who resided in London from 1720 to 1730. He is said to have been a native of Venice and a pupil of Pellegrini.

DAMIS, AMÉDÉE GUSTAVE FRANÇOIS, a Belgian painter of flowers and fruit, was born at Bruges in 1811. While still young he went to Paris and became a pupil of Redouté. He was likewise a sculptor, and he decorated many of the ecclesiastical edifices of Paris. In 1848 he returned to Bruges, and died there in 1851.

DAMISSEN, LUCAS. See DE HOEY.

DAMOPHILOS, a Greek painter and modeller in terra-cotta, worked in conjunction with Gorgasos in the Temple of Ceres at Rome in B.C. 493. Zeuxis is said to have been his pupil.

DANBY, FRANCIS, who was born near Wexford, Ireland, in 1793, learned the first principles of his art under a landscape painter named O'Connor, in Dublin, where his first picture, a landscape view called 'Evening,' was exhibited in 1812. In the following year, master and pupil, accompanied by George Petrie, set off together to seek their fortunes in London, but their funds becoming exhausted before they reached the metropolis, they stopped at Bristol. Here Danby managed to sell some drawings, and with the proceeds paid O'Connor's expenses to Dublin, but he himself remained in Bristol, and for a few years supported himself by giving lessons in water-colour painting, now and then sending a picture to the Royal Academy. In 1825 his 'Delivery of Israel out of Egypt' gained him the Associateship of the Academy, and he then went to live in London. In 1830, a quarrel with that body drove him from England, and for the next eleven years he lived in Switzerland, giving up his time to boat-building, yachting, and the painting of unimportant pictures on commission. Two works only appeared at the annual London Exhibitions during this long interval, the 'Golden Age' and 'Rich and Rare were the Gems she wore.' In 1841 he returned to England, took up his residence at Lewisham, and began painting large subjects for exhibition at the British Institution and the Royal Academy with all his old enthusiasm. He died in 1861 at Exmouth, where he had resided since 1847. The following are some of his best works:

The Upas, or Poison-tree of Java (Brit. Inst. 1820).
In the South Kensington Museum.

Disappointed Love (Royal Academy, 1821).

Sunset at Sea after a Storm (R. A. 1824).

The Delivery of Israel out of Egypt (R. A. 1825). Now in Stafford House.

The Opening of the Sixth Seal (Brit. Inst. 1828).

The Golden Age (R. A. 1831).

Rich and Rare were the Gems she wore (R. A. 1837).

The Fisherman's Home, Sunrise. 1846. In the National Gallery.

The Evening Gun (R. A. 1848).

DANBY, JAMES FRANCIS, an English landscape painter, the son of Francis Danby, A.R.A., was born at Bristol in 1816. His works appeared at the Royal Academy, and at the Society of British Artists, of which latter he was a member. He died of apoplexy in London in 1875. He excelled in depicting sunrise and sunset. Amongst his best works are:—

Loch Lomond.

Dover, from the Canterbury Road. 1849.

Dumbarton Rock. 1854.

Morning on the Thames. 1860.

Wreck on Exmouth Bar. 1861.

Carrickfergus Castle. 1867.

North Shields: Sunrise. 1869.

DANCE, NATHANIEL. See HOLLAND.

DANCKERTS, DANCKERT, the son of Cornelis Danckerts de Ry, was born at Antwerp about the year 1600. He succeeded his father in his business as a printseller, and surpassed him in his talent as an engraver. His plates are sometimes only etched, but more frequently finished with the graver. We have by him a considerable number of plates after Berchem, Wouwerman, and other painters. He also engraved some portraits and other subjects, from various masters, among which are:

The Portrait of Charles II., King of England.

The Departure of Charles II. for England at the Restoration.

Venus and Cupid, with a Satyr; after Titian.

VARIOUS PRINTS AFTER BERCHEM.

Hawking, called Het Vinkebaantje.

A Stag Hunt, called De Hartenjagt.

Four, of Landscapes and Figures, in one of which is a Man passing a Bridge; after Berchem. These are considered his best prints.

Four smaller plates, of Landscapes and Figures.

Six middle-sized plates, the title print having a Shepherd riding on an Ox and playing on the Flute, and a Shepherdess dancing.

Four large plates of Landscapes; on the title print is inscribed, Danckert Danckerts fec. et exc.

A set of fine Etchings; after Wouwerman.

DANCKERTS, HENDRIK, a son of Justus Danckerts, was born at the Hague about the year 1630. He was brought up as an engraver, and made copies of the works of Titian and Palma, but afterwards was recommended to study painting, and went to Italy for improvement. On his return to Holland he acquired some reputation as a landscape painter, and was invited to England by Charles II., who employed him in painting views of the royal palaces, and of the sea-ports of England and Wales. In the collection of James II. there were twenty-eight landscapes and views by this master. He died at Amsterdam about 1678. He engraved a few plates, as follow:

Charles II.; after A. Hanneman.

A large View of Amsterdam and the Y, with Shipping; in three sheets.

A set of Views of Palaces and Sea-ports in England.

DANCKERTS, JOHANNES, a son of Justus Danckerts, resided at Amsterdam about the year 1660.

He painted historical subjects with some skill, and etched a few plates, among which is one after Titian, representing 'Venus reclining on a Couch.'

DANCKERTS, JUSTUS, was a Dutch engraver who worked at Amsterdam. We have the following plates by him:

William III., Prince of Orange, afterwards King of England.
Casimir, King of Poland.
Seven plates of the Gates of Amsterdam.

DANCKERTS DE RY, CORNELIS, a Dutch architect and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1561. He established himself at Antwerp as a printseller, where he engraved several plates of portraits and other subjects, which are not without considerable merit. He was still living in 1634. Among others, we have the following by him:

PORTRAITS.

Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden.
Jacob Wassenaer, Lord of Obsdam.
Cornelis de Wit, with a battle in the background.
Jean Calvin; oval.
John Casimir, Count of Nassau.

SUBJECTS FROM HIS OWN DESIGNS.

Four Figures on Horseback, called the Monarchies; representing Ninus, Cyrus, Alexander, and Cæsar, with emblematical ornaments.
Seven, of the Planets, with Emblems.
The Seven Wonders of the World, with the same.
Twelve, of the Sibyls; full-length.
Twelve, of Animals and Birds.
Sixteen Views in Holland.
One hundred Subjects from the Old Testament; four on each plate.
A set of Views of the Ruins of Rome.
Meleager and Atalanta; an etching; after R. Picou.

DANCKERTS DE RY, PIETER, a celebrated portrait and genre painter, who is supposed to have been the son of Cornelis Danckerts de Ry, was born at Amsterdam in 1605. Several of his paintings have been engraved by W. Hondius. He went to Sweden, and died at Stockholm in 1659. There are by him in the Brussels Gallery portraits of Cornelis Danckerts de Ry and his wife.

DANDINI, CESARE, was born at Florence about the year 1595. He was first a scholar of Francesco Curradi, but afterwards studied under Domenico Cresti, called Passignano, and Cristofano Allori. Under these masters he acquired a tolerable correctness of design, and an agreeable tone of colouring. One of his best works is a picture of St. Charles, with other Saints, in one of the churches at Ancona. He also painted easel and cabinet pictures, which were admired for their neatness and finish. He died in 1658.

DANDINI, OTTAVIANO, was the son of Pietro Dandini, and painted history in the style of his father. Some fresco paintings in the cloister of San Spirito, a picture of several Saints in San Lorenzo, and his works in the church of the Magdalene at Pescia, evince the respectability of his talent. He afterwards entered the Society of Jesus, and died about 1750.

DANDINI, PIETRO, the nephew of Vincenzo Dandini, was born about 1646. Having lost his father when he was only four years of age, he was taken under the protection of his uncle, who instructed him in the principles he had himself adopted of the style of Cortona. He afterwards travelled through great part of Italy, and improved himself by studying the great masters of the Venetian and Lombard schools. On his return to Florence he was patronized by the Grand Duke Cosmo III., for whom he painted many works in oil and in fresco. It is to be lamented that the avarice of this artist led him into a slight and negligent manner of finishing his works; a habit to which he was the more easily tempted by the possession of uncommon facility of execution. Lanzi mentions, as one of his most important works, the cupola of Santa Maria Maddalena, at Florence. In the church of Santa Maria Maggiore is a picture of St. Francis; and in the church of the Servites is an altar-piece representing a saint of that order officiating at the altar. He died in 1712.

DANDINI, VINCENZO, the brother of Cesare Dandini, was born at Florence in 1607. After receiving some instruction from his brother, he went to Rome, where he studied some time under Pietro da Cortona, whose style he followed. He was an eminent painter of history, and, according to Orlandi, was made principal of the Academy at Rome, on succeeding to which appointment he painted a large picture which gained him great reputation. He returned to Florence, where he executed several works for the churches. In the church of Ognisanti is an admired picture of 'The Conception.' He was employed in the palaces of the Grand-Duke; in one of which he painted a ceiling, representing 'Aurora with the Hours,' much in the style of Pietro da Cortona. He died at Florence in 1675.

DANDRÉ-BARDON, MICHEL FRANÇOIS. See ANDRÉ-BARDON.

DANDRIDGE, BARTHOLOMEW, a portrait painter, was born in the early part of the 18th century. He obtained a considerable practice in the reign of George II., but died young, soon after the middle of the century. His portrait of Hook, the historian, is in the National Portrait Gallery.

DANDRILLON, PIERRE CHARLES, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1757. He was a pupil of De Machy, and in 1807 became professor of perspective in the École des Beaux-Arts. He died in Paris in 1812.

DANEDI, GIOSEFFO, or GIUSEPPE, called MONTALTO, was the younger brother of Stefano Danedi, and was born at Treviglio in 1618. When young he went to Bologna, where he entered the school of Guido Reni. On leaving that master he settled at Turin, where he executed some works for the public edifices. Towards the latter part of his life he joined his brother at Milan, where he was much employed. In the church of San Sebastiano is a fine picture by this master of 'The Massacre of the Innocents,' and in the Dresden Gallery is one of 'St. Anthony of Padua caressing the Infant Jesus.' He died in 1688.

DANEDI, STEFANO, called MONTALTO, was born at Treviglio, in the Milanese, in 1608, and was a scholar of Cavaliere Morazzone. During a long residence at Milan, he painted a great number of pictures for the churches of that city, and in the State. One of his best works is 'The Martyrdom of St. Justina,' in Santa Maria in Pedone. He died at Milan 1689.

DANET, JEAN. See DUVET.

DANHAEUER, —, (or DONAUER,) a German miniature painter, was a native of Swabia. He was the son of a watchmaker, and was brought up to his father's trade; he afterwards went to Italy and studied painting under S. Bombelli, but this art he in turn abandoned for that of sculpture. He resided for many years in Russia, and died at St. Petersburg in 1733.

DANHAUSER, JOSEPH, born at Vienna in 1805, followed the principles of Peter Krafft. He visited Venice, and after his return painted genre pieces, which he executed in a pleasing and popular manner. From 1838 to 1844 he was corrector at the Academy at Vienna, where he died in 1845. Among his works the following are worthy of mention:

The Rioter.
Franz Liszt at the Piano.
The Little Virtuoso.
The Oculist.
The Reasoner in the Public-house.

DANIELE, BATTISTA DA SAN. See SAN DANIELE.

DANIELE, IL CAVALIERE. See SYDER.

DANIELE, PELLEGRINO DA SAN. See SAN DANIELE.

DANIELL, ABRAHAM, a miniature painter, was a native of Bath. He possessed considerable ability, and died in 1803.

DANIELL, JAMES, a mezzotint engraver, flourished in England towards the close of the 18th and the beginning of the 19th century. The following works are by him:

Nelson at the Battle of Cape St. Vincent; after Singleton.
The Death of Captain Alexander Hood; after Singleton.
The Capture of Admiral Winter; after Singleton.
Samuel and Eli; after Copley.

DANIELL, SAMUEL, a landscape painter, the brother of William, and the nephew of Thomas Daniell, was born in 1775. He studied under Medland, and first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1792. He passed several years in Africa, returning to England in 1804. About a year after, he went to Ceylon, where he died in 1811. He made numerous drawings of tropical scenery, and published works on 'African Scenery and Animals,' 1804-5, and 'The Scenery, Animals, and Native Inhabitants of Ceylon,' 1808. At the South Kensington Museum is a water-colour drawing by him: 'Deer and Birds in a Tropical Landscape.'

DANIELL, THOMAS, was born at Kingston-upon-Thames in 1749, and commenced his artistic career as a painter of English landscape scenery, with some attempts at poetical composition. In 1784 he went to India with his nephew, William Daniell; they were absent about ten years, gathering materials for their great work on 'Oriental Scenery,' which was published between the years 1795 and 1815, in six volumes, the whole of which, with the exception of the volume of 'Excavations,' was executed by William. He seldom painted any but Indian subjects. In 1796 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1799 an Academician. He died in London in 1840. The works of William Daniell are so blended with those of his uncle Thomas, that they may be considered, artistically, as one, though some give the preference to the latter.

DANIELL, WILLIAM, a landscape painter, was born in 1769. In 1784 he went to India with his uncle, Thomas Daniell, and assisted him in his drawings and sketches; he also engraved the views for the greater part of their 'Oriental Scenery.' He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1795, and entered the Academy Schools in 1799. He was elected an Associate in 1807, and an Academician in 1822. The British Institution awarded him a prize of £100 in 1826 for his 'Battle of Trafalgar.' In his later years he painted several panoramic views of India. He died in London in 1837. Amongst the works which he published are:

A Picturesque Voyage to India. 1810.
Animated Nature. 1809.
Views of London. 1812.
Views of Windsor Castle, Eton, and Virginia Water.
A Voyage round Great Britain. 1814-25.
Illustrations of the Island of Staffa. 1818.
The Oriental Annual. 1834-39.

Mention should also be made of the following pictures by him:

View of the Long Walk, Windsor (Royal Collection).
Castel Nuovo (South Kensington Museum).
Durham Cathedral. 1805. (South Kensington Museum).
Benares (South Kensington Museum).

DANIELSKI, JAN NEPOMUCEN, a Polish painter of portraits in oil and in miniature, was a native of Cracow. He was a pupil of Dominik Estreicher, and also painted some frescoes. He died at Cracow in 1844.

DANKERTS. See DANCKERTS.

DANKS, FRANS, surnamed 'the Tortoise,' was born about 1650 at Amsterdam, where he died in 1703. He painted historical subjects and portraits, and showed considerable talent in modelling and sculpture.

DANLOUX, HENRI PIERRE, a French painter, born in Paris in 1753, was a pupil of J. B. Lépicié and of Vien. On the outbreak of the French Revolution he came to England and remained here for ten years, gaining a high reputation for his portraits, many of which were in chalk. The Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge has by him the portrait of Louis XVIII. After his return to France, he exhibited at the Salon of 1802 'Le Supplice d'une Vestale,' a picture which met with much praise. His best work is a full-length portrait of the Abbé Delille, now at Versailles. Danloux died in Paris in 1809.

DANNECKER (or DANNEKER). See DE NECKER.

DANNOOT, PIETER, was a Flemish engraver, who flourished about the year 1690. He engraved a plate representing the 'Head of Christ crowned with Thorns,' after Rubens, and a 'Portrait of Père Mastrille.'

DANTE, GIROLAMO, called GIROLAMO DI TIZIANO (from having been a scholar of Titian and an assistant to him in some of his less important works), flourished at Venice from 1550 to 1580. It is said that in copying the originals of his master, he attained so high a degree of excellence, that such of his pieces as were retouched by Titian bid defiance often to the judgment of the most expert connoisseurs. He also produced works of his own design; the altar-piece attributed to him at San Giovanni Nuovo, representing 'SS. Cosmo and Damianus,' reflects credit on the school to which he belonged.

DANTI, GIROLAMO, the younger brother of Vincenzo and Ignazio Danti, was born at Perugia in 1547. He painted frescoes in the style of Vasari, and gave promise of becoming a great painter when his career was prematurely terminated by his death at Perugia in 1580.

DANTI, IGNAZIO, Bishop of Alatri, whose secular name was PELLEGRINO, a Dominican monk and cosmographer, was born at Perugia in 1536. He was a brother of Vincenzo Danti, the sculptor, and was instructed by his father, Giulio Danti, a goldsmith, and his aunt Teodora. At Florence he painted the 'Tables of Ptolemy,' in 57 oil-pictures, and also produced a number of maps. Subsequently he was employed by Pope Gregory XIII. to decorate the walls of the Vatican with geographical delineations of ancient and modern Italy. The Pope having determined to complete the continuation of the Gallery of Raphael in conformity with the original plan, and to paint four subjects in every arcade of the gallery, all from the New Testament, Danti was employed by him to superintend the work; the entire abandonment of a design to the direction of practical artists being found by experience to be injurious to its execution, owing to the choice of their inferior assistants being liable to be governed by influence, avarice, or jealousy. The selection, therefore, was reserved to Danti, who, to an excellent practical knowledge of the art of design, united moral qualities that ensured success; and under his direction the whole work was regulated and conducted in such a manner that the spirit of Raphael seemed to be resuscitated in the precincts of the Vatican. He was consecrated Bishop of Alatri in 1583, and died at Rome in 1586.

DANTI, TEODORA, the aunt of Vincenzio and Ignazio Danti, is mentioned in the 'Vite de' Pittori Perugini,' by Lione Pascoli, who states that she was born at Perugia in 1498. She painted small pictures, in imitation of the style of Pietro Perugino, and died in 1573.

DANTI, VINCENZIO, an Italian sculptor, architect, and poet, was born at Perugia in 1530. In 1555 he cast in bronze the statue of Pope Julius III., which is still to be seen at Perugia, and is considered to be his masterpiece. He afterwards went to Florence, where he was employed by the Grand-Duke Cosmo, and made many designs for the Escorial which were sent to Spain. He also painted historical subjects, which are but seldom mentioned, and died in 1576.

DANUS, MIGUEL, a Spanish historical painter, who flourished about 1700, was a native of Majorca. He studied first at Valencia, and afterwards in Italy in the school of Carlo Maratti. After an absence of several years he returned to his own country, where he painted, in the manner of his master, the pictures in the cloisters of the convent of the Socorro at Palma; and others which are to be found in private collections in the island of Majorca.

DANVIN, VICTOR MARIE FÉLIX, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1802. He studied successively under Lethière, Guérin, Watelet, and Rémond, and died in Paris in 1842. His wife, whose maiden name was CONSTANCE AMÉLIE LAMBERT, was born at Lille in 1810, and also painted landscapes.

DÄNZEL, JACQUES CLAUDE, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1735. He was a pupil of Beauvarlet, and engraved several plates in a firm, neat style. He died at Abbeville in 1809. We have by him the following prints:

An old Man, half-length; after Rembrandt.

Corneas sacrificing himself for love of Callirrhoe; after Fragonard; his chef-d'œuvre.

Le Roi boit, Le Gateau des Rois; two plates; after Tilborgh.

Venus and Adonis; after J. Bethon.

Venus and Æneas; after A. Boizot.

Alexander giving Campaspe to Apelles; after Lagrenée.

Socrates pronouncing his Discourse on the Immortality of the Soul; after Sané.

Roman Charity; after N. N. Coypel.

Vulcan presenting to Venus the arms of Æneas; after Boucher.

Neptune and Amymone; after the same.

The Washerwoman; after Greuze.

The Rape of Proserpine; after Vien.

DANZICA, SALOMONE DI, is known by works which are finely and laboriously executed, and generally represent jocose subjects. His portrait by C. Gregori is in the 'Museo Fiorentino.' He is said to have been brought up in Dantzie, from whence in 1695 he went to Italy. He died in Milan.

DAPPER. See TAMM, FRANZ WERNER.

DARCIS, J. LOUIS, was a French engraver, who died in Paris in 1801. His best works are:

Les Incroyables; after Carle Vernet.

Les Merveilleuses; after the same.

L'Anglomane; after the same.

La Course de Chevaux; after the same.

Marius at Minturnæ; after Drouais the younger.

La Brouille; after Guérin.

Le Raccommodement; after the same.

DARDANI, ANTONIO, an Italian historical painter, was born at Bologna in 1677, and was a pupil of M. A. Toni and of J. Viani. He died in 1735.

DARDEL, ROBERT GUILLAUME, a French sculptor, and pupil of Pajon, was born in Paris in 1749, and died there in 1821. He engraved a 'Diana' and an 'Endymion.' His wife engraved after him 'La Danse' and 'La Musique.'

DARET, JACOB, a Flemish painter, who flourished in the middle of the 15th century, was a native of Tournai. He was a pupil of Robert Campin, and enjoyed so great a reputation that he was made provost of the Guild of St. Luke at Tournai on the same day that he was admitted into that confraternity. His brother, DANIEL DARET, who was his pupil, became in 1449 painter to Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy.

DARET, JEAN, a Flemish painter, was born at Brussels in 1613. He went to Italy, whence he returned in 1638, and settled at Aix in Provence, where he painted many Scriptural subjects for the churches and convents of that city. He also painted portraits, and engraved a set of plates representing the Virtues. He died at Aix in 1668. There is an excellent portrait of a Magistrate by him in the Museum of Marseilles. His sons, MICHEL and JEAN BAPTISTE, were painters who worked together.

DARET DE CAZENEUVE, PIERRE, a French portrait painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1604. After receiving some instruction in engraving, he went to Rome in search of improvement, and there passed a considerable time. He was received into the Academy of Painting in 1663, and died at the château of La Luque, near Dax (Landes) in 1678. Mariette says that this artist began and finished his career with painting. He engraved upwards of four hundred plates, not without merit, but very deficient in taste and correctness of drawing. They are frequently marked and among them are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Bust of Alexander the Great.

Pope Alexander VII.

Charles I., King of Great Britain.

Henri de Bourbon, Prince of Condé.

Charlotte Marguerite de Montmorency, Princess of Condé.

Marguerite Gaston, Duchess of Orleans.

Vladislas IV., King of Poland.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

St. John sitting in the Desert with his Lamb; after Guido.

The Virgin suckling the Infant; after A. Carracci.

St. Peter delivered from Prison; after Domenichino.

The Entombment of Christ; after Barocci.

A Holy Family, with Angel presenting fruit to the Infant Jesus; after S. Vouet.

The Dead Christ, with the Marys; after the same.

St. Jerome; half-length; after Blanchard.

Thetis ordering Vulcan to forge arms for Achilles; after the same.

A Charity with five Children; after the same.

The Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth; after Corneille.

The Virgin and Infant; after Sarazin.

He also engraved one hundred small plates for a work entitled, 'La Doctrine des Mœurs,' after the designs of Otto van Veen, 1646; and a great number of portraits for a publication entitled, 'Tableaux historiques, où sont gravés les illustres François et Etrangers de l'un et l'autre sexe; par Pierre Daret, Louis Boissevin, et B. Moncornet,' published in 1652 and 1656.

There was also a PIERRE DARET, a painter upon vellum and in water-colours, who was living in 1664.

DARGENT, MICHEL, a Flemish miniature painter, was born at Liège in 1751, and died in 1824. He possessed talent which was still more remarkable in his son, who was born at Liège in 1794, and died in the flower of youth in 1812. His daughter, MARIE JOSÈPHE, who was born at Liège in 1789 and died in 1863, likewise painted miniatures.

D'ARGENVILLE, ANTOINE JOSEPH DESALLIER. See DESALLIER D'ARGENVILLE.

DARIO DA TREVIGI. See TREVIGI.

DARJOU, HENRI ALFRED, a French painter and draughtsman, born in Paris in 1832, was the son of Victor Darjou, a portrait painter of some ability. He studied under his father and under Léon Cogniet, and exhibited first at the Salon of 1853, from which time onwards he almost every year sent pictures which were for the most part of genre subjects. The paintings of Darjou have, however, done less for his reputation than the numerous designs which he made for the 'Illustration' and the 'Monde illustré.' He died in Paris in 1874.

DARLY, JEAN BAPTISTE, was a French portrait painter, who flourished at Tours about 1530. He had a great reputation, and many persons came from distant parts in order to have their portraits painted by him.

DARNSTÄDT, JOHANN ADOLF, a German line-engraver, who was born at Auma, near Dippoldiswalda in Saxony, in 1768, was a scholar of Schulze and of Zingg. Amongst his works are an engraving of Dresden after Hammer and Thurmayer, and some book illustrations. For his plates of 'The Magi' and 'The Magi among the Shepherds,' after Dietrich, he obtained the gold medal at Milan. He resided at Dresden, and died there in 1844.

DASSONNEVILLE, JACQUES, a French engraver, was born in the harbour of St. Ouen near Rouen, in 1619. We have by this artist about fifty etchings, in the style of A. van Ostade, which, although by no means equal to the playful point of that master, are not without considerable merit.

DASSY, JEAN JOSEPH, a French historical and portrait painter, and lithographer, was born at Marseilles in 1796. He studied under Goubaud and Girodet-Trioson, and commenced exhibiting at the Paris Salon in 1819. There are several pictures by him at Versailles, among which are 'The Battle of Saucourt' and 'Charibert.' He died at Marseilles in 1865.

DASVELT, JAN, a Dutch landscape painter, 352

was born at Amsterdam in 1770. He was a pupil of Hendrik Stokvisch, and, although at first only an amateur, he soon acquired the reputation of being a good artist. He excelled especially in the manner in which he painted the dogs which he introduced into his pictures. He died at Amsterdam in 1855.

DATHAN, GEORG, was born at Mannheim in 1703. He excelled in painting portraits and historical subjects. One of his best works, an 'Allegory upon the marriage of the Dauphin, son of Louis XV., with the Princess Marie Joséphine of Poland,' is in the Dresden Gallery.

DATI, COSIMO. See DADDI.

DATI, NATALE, was an Italian engraver, who flourished at Ravenna in the early part of the 16th century, to whom Zani, without giving any proof, assigns the very few plates which bear the signature NA. DATI, and the device of a rat-trap, on account of which the artist is often called, THE MASTER OF THE RAT-TRAP. The prints thus marked are small and executed entirely with the graver. From the resemblance of the style of Dati to that afterwards adopted by Theodor De Bry, it is probable that the latter was his pupil. Bartsch and Passavant mention the following prints by him:

The Virgin and Child, with St. Anne; in an arch to the right is the Angel appearing to St. Joseph, and to the left an Angel appearing to St. Joachim.
The Battle of Ravenna. 1512.

Two Monstrous Children joined back to back.

DAUBIGNY, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, one of the most distinguished French landscape painters and etchers of recent years, was born in Paris in 1817. He was the son of Edme François Daubigny, under whose tuition he painted boxes, clock-cases, and other articles of commerce. At the age of eighteen he visited Italy, and on his return to France in the following year he entered the studio of Paul Delaroche. He first exhibited at the Salon of 1838, and obtained medals in 1848 and 1853, besides medals at the Paris Universal Exhibitions of 1855 and 1867. His etchings are characterized by their purity and effect. Several of them appeared in Curmer's 'Jardin des Plantes' and 'Beaux Arts,' and in the 'Artiste;' but the best are 'Le Buisson' and 'Le Coup de Soleil,' after the pictures of Ruissdael in the Louvre. Daubigny died in Paris in 1878. He excelled in river scenes, which he often painted from a barge fitted up as a floating studio. Amongst his best works are:

The Seine at Bezons. 1840.

The Harvest. 1852.

Sunrise. (In the Lille Museum.)

The Pool of Gylen. 1853.

Sluice in the Valley of Optevoz. 1855. (In the Luxembourg Gallery.)

The Banks of the Oise. 1861.

The Vintage. 1863. (In the Luxembourg Gallery.)

Windmills at Dordrecht. 1872.

Moonrise. 1877.

Fuller details respecting this artist may be found in Henriet's 'C. Daubigny et son œuvre gravé,' Paris, 1875, 8vo.

DAUBIGNY, EDMÉ FRANÇOIS, a French landscape painter, was a pupil of Victor Bertin. He was born in Paris in 1789, and died there in 1843. His favourite subjects were views in Italy and in the environs of Paris.

DAUBIGNY, PIERRE, a French miniature painter, was the brother of Edme François Daubigny, and a pupil of Aubry. He was born in Paris in 1793, and died there in 1858. His wife, AMÉLIE DAUTEL, was likewise a miniature painter, and a pupil of Aubry and of Granger. She was born in 1796 in Paris, where she died in 1861.

DAUDET, ROBERT, a French engraver of landscapes in line, was born at Lyons in 1737. He was the son of Robert Daudet, an engraver and printseller, who in 1766 sent him to Paris, where he studied under Baléchou, and afterwards became the favourite pupil of J. G. Wille. He died in 1824. His best works are as follow:

Two Landscapes, with Figures and Cattle; after Berchem.
An Italian Landscape, with Figures and Cattle; after Both and Berchem.

Going out to the Chase; after A. van Ostade and Hackert.

A Stag-Hunt; after Wouwerman.

Italian Ruins; after C. Poelenburg.

Ruins of Palmyra; after Cassas.

Combat of Horsemen; after Van der Meulen.

The Corsican Fishermen; after Joseph Vernet.

The Young Washerwomen; after the same.

Roman Ruins; two plates, after Dietrich.

Evening; after the same.

Two Views of Pirna, in Saxony.

DAULLÉ, JEAN, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1703. He received his first lessons in engraving from Dom Robart, a monk of the priory of St. Peter at Abbeville, and afterwards went to Paris, where his fellow-citizen, Robert Hecquet, taught him what little he himself knew. His merit did not remain long unnoticed, and he was received into the Academy in 1742. He died in Paris in 1763. After his death some of his engravings were published by his widow as his 'Œuvre.' He engraved several portraits and plates of historical and other subjects, which are chiefly executed with the graver in a clear and firm style, which entitles him to rank with the ablest artists of his time. He marked his works J. D. The following are his principal plates:

PORTRAITS.

Catherine, Countess of Feuquières, daughter of Pierre Mignard; after Mignard.

Hyacinthe Rigaud, painter; after Rigaud; engraved for his reception at the Academy in 1742.

Marguerite de Valois, Countess of Caylus; after the same.

Charles Edward Stuart, son of the Pretender.

Clementina, Princess of Poland, his consort; after David.

Madame Favart, in the part of 'Bastienne'; after Carle van Loo.

Claude Deshayes Gendron, oculist; after Rigaud.

Jean Baptiste Rousseau; after Aved.

Jean Mariette, engraver; after Pesne.

l'Œuvre gravé de Jean Daullé d'Abbeville,' 1872, 8vo.

DAUMIER, HONORÉ, a French caricaturist and painter, was born at Marseilles in 1808. His most celebrated work was the series of 'Robert Macaire,' published in the 'Charivari.' No one ever represented with greater truth the varied types of Parisian character. He became blind in 1877, and died in 1879 at Valmondois (Seine-et-Oise) in a house given him by Corot, the landscape painter.

DAUPHIN, CHARLES CLAUDE, (or DOFIN,) called in Italian DELFINO, a French painter of historical subjects and portraits, was the son of Olivier Dauphin. He went to Turin about the year 1664, and worked there for the Prince of Carignano. He was also employed for the churches, but his works are in no great estimation, abounding as they do with the most ridiculous absurdities. In the church of San Carlo is an altar-piece by him, described by Lanzi as a most ludicrous composition. He died in 1677.

DAUPHIN, FRANÇOIS GUSTAVE, a French historical painter, was born at Belfort in 1804. He was a pupil of Hersent, and executed Scriptural subjects, and occasionally portraits. He died in Paris in 1859.

DAUPHIN, OLIVIER, (or DOFIN,) called in Italian DELFINO, a French painter and engraver, was born in Lorraine in the early part of the 17th century. He was instructed by Simon Vouet, and worked, in particular, at the court of Modena. He etched several plates after the Carracci and other masters, but nothing is known of his works as a painter. He died at Bologna in 1693.

DAUPHIN DE BEAUVAIS, CHARLES NICOLAS, the son of Nicolas Dauphin de Beauvais, was born in Paris in 1730, and was instructed in the art of engraving by his father. He died in 1783. Amongst other plates he engraved the following:

Portrait of Just Aurèle Meissonnier, architect.

Le Sommeil interrompu; after F. Boucher.

Map of the Empire of Alexander.

DAUPHIN DE BEAUVAIS, JACQUES PHILIPPE, the eldest son of Nicolas Dauphin de Beauvais, was a sculptor, who engraved three 'Livres de Vases' and some views of Venice. He was born in 1738, and died in Paris in 1781.

DAUPHIN DE BEAUVAIS, NICOLAS, was born in Paris in 1687. He learned the art of engraving under Jean Audran, and his works are held in considerable estimation. It is probable that he passed some time in England, as he engraved a part of the frescoes of the dome of St. Paul's, after Sir James Thornhill. He died in Paris in 1753. We have also by him:

The Descent of the Holy Ghost; after J. André.

All Saints; after the same.

The Resurrection; after P. J. Cazes.

The Four Seasons; after the same; four plates, engraved conjointly with Desplaces.

The Madonna of St. George; after Correggio; for the Dresden Gallery.

St. Jerome; after Van Dyck; for the same.

The Burning of Æneas's Ships, and their Metamorphosis into Nymphs; after Coypel.

The Companion, a subject from the Life of Æneas; after the same.

Monument of William, Earl Cowper.

Cupid stealing Jupiter's Thunderbolts; after Le Sueur.

St. Mary Magdalen in the Desert; after B. Luti; for the Crozat Collection.

The Triumph of Bacchus and Ariadne; after N. Poussin.

DAUTEL, AMÉLIE. See DAUBIGNY.

DAUZATS, ADRIEN, a French landscape and genre painter, was born at Bordeaux in 1804. He became a pupil of Gué, and afterwards travelled in France, Spain, Egypt, and Palestine, for the purpose of making illustrations for Baron Taylor's 'Voyages pittoresques et romantiques de l'ancienne France,' 1820-63; 'Voyage pittoresque en Espagne, en Portugal, et sur la côte d'Afrique, de Tanger à Tétouan,' 1826-32; 'La Syrie, l'Egypte, la Palestine et la Judée,' 1835-39, and other books. He was a frequent exhibitor at the Salon of genre subjects and interiors of churches, and was also a lithographer. He died in Paris in 1868.

DAVENPORT, SAMUEL, an English engraver, was born at Bedford in 1783. He was articled to Charles Warren, and worked much at book illustration, after Shenton, Corbould, and others. He also engraved many portraits, and was one of the first to practise engraving on steel. He died in 1867.

DAVENT, LEONARD. See THIRY.

DAVID, CHARLES, a French engraver, was born in Paris about 1600. It is not ascertained by whom he was instructed, but he ranks as an estimable artist among the engravers of his time. The exact date of his death is not known, but it was neither earlier than 1636, nor later than 1638. His plates are executed with the graver in a clear, firm manner, and his drawing is tolerably correct. His prints are held in considerable estimation. He usually marked his plates C. D. or C. D. F. The following are by him:

Ece Homo, or Christ shown to the People by Pilate.

The Virgin and Infant with Angels; after J. B. de Champaigne.

The Virgin with St. Bernard; after P. de Champaigne.

Wisdom awaking a Man sleeping; after the same.

A Nurse carrying a Child; with six verses.

The Roman Charity.

Twelve plates of the Labours of Hercules; after Frans Floris.

Sixteen plates of the Cries of Rome; after Villamena; copied with such exactness that they may easily be mistaken for the originals.

A set of Landscapes; after M. and P. Bril.

A Man with a Snail on his Finger, with a Goat wearing a Crown of Snails on its Head; after Callot.

DAVID, CHARLES, a French miniature painter, was born at Avignon in 1798. He was the brother of the eminent composer Félicien David, and was also a musician. He died at Avignon in 1869.

DAVID, CLAUDE, a French sculptor and engraver, was a native of Franche-Comté. He was in England in 1720, and is noticed by Vertue as having engraved a plate from a model of a fountain intended to have been erected at the conduit in Cheapside, and comprising statues of Queen Anne and the Duke of Marlborough on horseback, with River Gods.

DAVID, FRANÇOIS ANNE, a French line-engraver, was born in Paris in 1741, and died in the same city in 1824. He was a pupil of Le Bas, and engraved several portraits and other subjects in a neat, finished style; among them are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Louis Stanislas Xavier, Monsieur, afterwards Louis XVIII.; after Drouais.

Louis XVIII.; full-length, in his robes; after himself.

Denis Diderot; after L. M. van Loo.

César Gabriel de Choiseul, Duc de Praslin; after Roslin.

Catharine II., Empress of Russia; after Mlle. Durameau.

Gaspard Netscher, painter, his Wife and Son; after Netscher.

Charles I. of England with his Family; after Van Dyck.

DAVID, GHEERARDT. Although the name of this painter appears to have been known to Guicciardini, Sanderus, and other early writers, it was completely lost in later times until Mr. Weale lighted upon it in the archives of Bruges, and discovered that a triptych in the Museum at Rouen was painted by this master in 1509, and presented by him to the Carmelites of Sion at Bruges. This gave a clue to the discovery of other works by David, many of which had been long known to critics, though they could not be assigned definitely to any particular master. From further researches it appeared that this Gheerardt, 'the son of John, son of David,' was a native of Oudewater in Holland, who settled in Bruges in 1483, and paid the dues of the Bruges Guild of Painters as a stranger on the 14th of January, 1484. David must soon have acquired a good position in Bruges in spite of his being 'a stranger,' for in 1488 we find him fourth 'vinder' of his guild, in 1495 and 1498 first 'vinder,' and in 1501 'dean,' a proof that he then stood at the top of his profession in Bruges. He married in 1496 the daughter of a Bruges goldsmith named Cnoop, and would seem to have been a man in good circumstances by his being able to make a gift of the Rouen altar-piece, before-mentioned, to the sisterhood of the Carmelites of Sion. This beautiful altar-piece represents the Virgin and Child seated in the midst of an adoring company of virgin saints. In the background to the right the painter has introduced his own figure, while his wife stands similarly placed on the left. This altar-piece was sold by the Carmelites in 1785, and afterwards passed into the Rouen Museum. In 1508 David became a member of the brotherhood of the 'Arbre sec,' and died on the 13th of August, 1523, as certified by the register of his burial in Notre-Dame at Bruges, where he was laid beneath the tower, his grave-stone bearing his own and his wife's coats-of-arms.

In his style and mode of execution David resembles Memlinc, to whom his pictures were formerly often attributed, but there is also an analogy in his early works to those of Dierick Bouts, which would make it probable that he learnt his art in the same early school in Holland. He lived in Bruges, however, for forty years, received many commissions from the magistrates and citizens of that city, and is reckoned among the most esteemed Flemish painters, remarkable among other qualities for his careful and truthful painting of landscape. Some critics suppose indeed that some of his landscape backgrounds were executed by Patenier. His best authenticated works are as follow:

1. The Judgment of Cambyzes, and the Punishment of Sisamnes; commissioned by the Magistracy of Bruges in 1488. (Now in the Academy at Bruges.)

2. The Baptism of Christ; a fine altar-piece, containing portraits of the donor's family. 1508. (In the Academy at Bruges.)

3. The Virgin and Child, with Saints. (Altar-piece in the Rouen Museum.)

4. The Deposition from the Cross; a triptych in the church of St. Basil at Bruges.

5. A Canon and his Patron Saints. (Now in the National Gallery.) This painting formerly formed the right wing of an altar-piece in the church of St. Donatian at Bruges. It was painted in 1501-2 for a certain Bernardino de Salvatis, the illegitimate son of a rich Florentine merchant, who held the office of Canon in the church, and is represented with three patron saints—SS. Donatian, Bernardino of Siena, and Martin of Tours. The landscape background in this picture is a good example of his treatment; indeed, the picture altogether affords English students an excellent opportunity of judging this master, for it is a characteristic work and well preserved.

These are about the only paintings that can with certainty be attributed to David, although many others are now assigned to him by critics.

DAVID, JACQUES LOUIS, an eminent French historical painter, was born at Paris in 1748. His father lost his life in a duel, and the care of his early years devolved on his mother, who intended that he should follow the profession of an architect. By the advice, however, of his uncle Boucher, from whom he received his first instruction, he became a pupil of Vien at the age of twenty-one. His master does not appear to have behaved altogether well to him, for, owing to pique, he prevented his obtaining the 'prix de Rome' in 1771. In the two following years he competed unsuccessfully, and it was not till 1774 that he obtained the blue ribbon of French art. In the next year he set out for Rome, accompanying Vien, who had just been appointed director of the French Academy in that city. While in Italy he painted but few pictures, directing his attention sedulously to drawing from the antique. He returned to France in 1780, and his 'Belisarius' procured his election at the Academy, for his admission into which, in 1783, he painted the 'Death of Hector.' Shortly afterwards he married, and again visited Italy, and also Flanders. It was during this period that he painted 'The Oath of the Horatii,' 'Brutus,' and other works of a similar character, which were the first steps in the classic movement of which he was the prophet, and which exercised an influence, not only on the politics, but even on the furniture and passing fashions of the day. He entered with ardour into the conflicts of the Revolution. Elected in 1792 a representative of Paris in the Convention, he sided with the extreme party of Robespierre, after whose fall he was twice thrown into prison, and narrowly escaped with his life. On his release, in 1795, he considered it prudent to abandon politics, and to devote himself to art. He was one of the original members of the Institute, in connection with which he became acquainted with the first Napoleon, who ever proved himself his warm friend and patron. He made David his first painter, and gave him many important commissions, such as the pictures of his 'Coronation,' the 'Distribution of the Eagles,' &c. This friendship effected a strange metamorphosis in the politics of the painter, for from an ardent republican he became an equally staunch imperialist, so that, on the restoration of the Bourbons, he sought refuge at Brussels. In this city he remained, notwithstanding an offer from the King of Prussia of the directorship of Fine Arts at Berlin, until his death in 1825. The influence of David on the French school was very great. He rescued it from the littleness and trivialities to which it had been reduced by the followers of the Watteau school; but, on the other hand, he established a despotism, which in several respects was baneful to the progress of art. For many years he reigned with an absolute supremacy, and amongst his pupils and disciples were Girodet, Gros, Gérard, the elder Isabey, Léopold Robert, Abel de Pujol, and Ingres. It was not until the rise of the Romantic school, under the leadership of Géricault and Delacroix, that any real opposition was offered to the all-prevalent classicism. David's chief excellence is in the correctness of his drawing, which, however, it must be said, frequently becomes hard and statuesque, whilst his weakness is most apparent in his treatment of light and in his colouring, which is monotonous and frequently unpleasant. The following is a list of his chief works:

DAVID, JEAN LOUIS, a French painter in water-colours, was born in Paris in 1791. He executed chiefly military subjects and landscapes, and died in Paris in 1868.

DAVID, JÉRÔME, a French engraver, brother to Charles David, was born in Paris about the year 1608, and died in Rome about 1670. He engraved a considerable number of plates in the same style as his brother, many of them being portraits. The work of the two brothers consists of about two hundred and twenty prints. Jérôme marked his plates either with the letters H. D. F., or with the cipher HE or HD. We have by him:

PORTRAITS.

Charles I., King of England, on horseback.
 Henrietta Maria, his Queen, on horseback.
 Anne, Queen of France.
 Gaston, Duke of Orleans.
 Cardinal Richelieu.
 Giovanni Battista Montano, sculptor. 1621.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Heads of the Philosophers, thirty-six plates from his own designs.
 Adam and Eve driven from Paradise; after himself.
 Christ bearing the Cross; after Ercole Ferrata. 1630.
 Ecce Homo; after Guercino.
 The Virgin of the Rosary; after Guido. 1633.
 The Assumption of the Virgin; after Camillo Procaccini.
 St. Francis of Paola; after Robert Picou.

He also etched forty-two plates of churches, tombs, and altars at Rome, from the designs of Montano, which were published by Soria.

DAVID, LODOVICO ANTONIO, was born at Lugano in 1648. After studying for some time at Milan, under the Cavaliere Cairo and Ercole Procaccini, he went to Bologna, where he entered the school of Carlo Cignani. He was a painter of some eminence, and gave proof of his ability in the churches and convents of Milan and of Venice. In the church of San Silvestro, in the latter city, is a picture of the Nativity, more resembling the finished style of Camillo than that of Ercole Procaccini. He also painted the portraits of many of the distinguished persons of his time.

DAVID, LOUIS, a French engraver, was a native of Avignon, who worked there and at Rome from 1665 to 1706. We have by him an upright plate of the 'Descent from the Cross,' marked with the cipher

DAVID, MAXIME, a French miniature painter, was born at Châlons-sur-Marne in 1798. He was a pupil of Madame de Mirbel, and died at Passy in 1870. Three portraits of Abd-el-Kader by him are in the Luxembourg.

DAVIDSON, JEREMIAH, a Scottish portrait painter, was born in England, of Scotch parentage, about 1695. He had a large practice both in Edinburgh and in London, and died in 1745. A portrait of Richard Cooper, the engraver, by him, is in the National Gallery of Scotland, and a portrait of Admiral Byng is in Greenwich Hospital. Roubiliac's statue of President Forbes in the Parliament House, Edinburgh, is after a portrait by him.

DAVIN, CÉSARINE HENRIETTE FLORE, a French painter of portraits and miniatures, whose maiden name was Mirvault, was born in Paris in 1773. She studied under Suvée, David, and Augustin, and afterwards established a school of drawing and painting, in which she had many pupils. Madame Davin died in Paris in 1844.

DAVIS, EDWARD LE. See LE DAVIS.

DAVIS, J. P., a portrait and subject painter, first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1811. In 1824 he went to Rome, and painted 'The Talbot Family receiving the Papal Benediction:' whence his cognomen of 'Pope Davis.' He next year received a prize of £50 from the British Institution. With his friend Haydon, he was a great opponent of the Academy, where he did not exhibit after 1843. He died in 1862, and after his death was published his 'Thoughts on Great Painters.' His best-known work is 'The Love-Letter,' exhibited at the British Institution in 1826.

DAVIS, JOHN SCARLETT, a subject painter, was born at Hereford in the beginning of the 19th century. He studied and spent much time abroad. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1825 with 'My Den,' and his views of the interiors of public buildings had considerable success; but he fell into dissipated habits, and died soon after 1841. At the South Kensington Museum is a water-colour drawing by him of the 'Porte St. Martin, Paris.'

DAVIS, RICHARD BARRETT, an animal and landscape painter, was born at Watford in 1782. He studied under Evans of Eton, under Beechey, and in the schools of the Royal Academy, where he first exhibited in 1802. He joined the Society of British Artists in 1829, and was appointed animal painter to William IV. in 1831. He died in 1854. Amongst his works are:

Mares and Foals from the Royal Stud. 1806.
 Going to Market. 1814.
 Horse Fair. 1821.
 Travellers attacked by Wolves. 1831.
 Near Virginia Water. (South Kensington Museum.)

DAVIS, WILLIAM, a landscape painter, was born at Dublin in 1812. Having studied at the Dublin Academy of Arts, he afterwards came to Liverpool, where he at first practised as a portrait-painter. After some time he was elected a member of the Liverpool Academy, in which institution he was appointed Professor of Painting, having by this date almost entirely devoted himself to landscape. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1851, and was from that time an occasional contributor. A picture by him called 'Harrowing' was also in the International Exhibition of 1862. His landscapes show a truthful feeling for nature, and are highly finished, though somewhat varying in merit. He died in London in 1873.

DAWE, GEORGE, a portrait painter, was born in London in 1781. He was the son of Philip Dawe, the mezzotint-engraver, by whom he was brought up to his own branch of art, but he abandoned it for painting, after having executed a few plates of great merit. In 1819 he went to Russia, where, it is said, he painted for the Emperor about 400 portraits of the chiefs of the Russian army, who had, with the assistance of the snow, vanquished Napoleon. Before leaving England, he painted some pictures of a higher grade, one of which, 'A Mother seeking her Child in an Eagle's Eyrie,' attracted great attention. He became an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1809, and an Academician in 1814. He made much money by his expedition to Russia, but did not live to enjoy it; for he died six weeks after his return to England in 1829, and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral. His portraits are reckoned good likenesses of the persons, but not expressive of character.

DAWE, HENRY, an engraver and subject painter, was born at Kentish Town, near London, in 1790. He was taught by his father, Philip Dawe, the engraver, and he also studied in the schools of the Royal Academy. He assisted Turner in the 'Liber Studiorum,' and mezzotinted many of his brother's portraits. As a painter, he exhibited at the Society of British Artists, of which he was elected a member in 1830. He died at Windsor in 1848.

DAWE, PHILIP, an engraver in mezzotint, worked under Hogarth about 1760, and must have died about the end of the century. He engraved several subjects after George Henry Morland, and among other portraits by him we have those of Mrs. Yates, in the character of Electra, after Cotes, and Admiral Sir Charles Hardy, after Hudson.

DAWSON, HENRY, a landscape painter, was born in Hull in 1811, but came with his parents to Nottingham when an infant, so that he always regarded the latter as his native town. His parents were poor, and he began life in a Nottingham lace factory. But even while engaged in lace-making he continued to find time for art, and used to paint small pictures, which he sold at first for about half-a-crown each. In 1835 he gave up the lace trade and set up as an artist, his earliest patron being a hairdresser in Nottingham, who possessed a taste for art. In 1844 he moved to Liverpool, where after a time he got into greater repute, and received higher prices for his works. In 1849 he came with his family to London, and settled at Croydon, where some of his best pictures were painted. Among these may be reckoned 'The Wooden Walls of Old England,' exhibited at the British Institution in 1853, 'The Rainbow,' 'The Rainbow at Sea,' 'London Bridge,' and 'London at Sunrise.' With the exception of six lessons from Pyne received in 1838, Henry Dawson was entirely a self-taught artist, and his art shows much originality and careful realism. He studied nature for himself, but he seems in later life to have been moved by Turner's influence to try more brilliant effects than he had before dared. Many of his works indeed are very Turner-esque in treatment, though he can scarcely be called an imitator of Turner, for he had a distinct style of his own. Henry Dawson, though painting much, and selling his pictures for high prices in his later life, remained, strange to say, very little known except to artists and connoisseurs until the large and very interesting collection of his works that was made for the Nottingham Exhibition in 1878 brought him wider fame. This exhibition showed him to be a genuine English landscape painter, of no great imaginative or intellectual power, but who delighted in nature, and represented her faithfully to the best of his ability. He died in December, 1878, at Chiswick, where he had for some time resided. M.M.H.

DAX, PAUL, was born in 1503, in the Tyrol. He led a very unsteady life, and after having gained reputation as a painter, he gave up art, and entered the army, engaging in several campaigns and the sieges of Naples, Florence, and Vienna. In 1530 he devoted himself to glass-painting, and his works, which are of considerable merit, are now in the court-house of Innsbruck, and in the town-hall at Ensisheim, Alsace. He also published several maps of his country. His death occurred in 1561.

DAY, ALEXANDER, a miniature painter, was born in 1772. He resided for several years in Rome, whence he brought with him on his return to England in 1800 many fine works by the old masters, which passed into the Angerstein and other collections. Among these were Titian's 'Rape of Gany-mede' and 'Venus and Adonis,' Raphael's 'St. Catharine' and 'Madonna, Infant Christ, and St. John' (the Garvagh Raphael), Leonardo da Vinci's 'Christ disputing with the Doctors,' Domenichino's 'St. Jerome and the Angel,' Annibale Carracci's 'Christ appearing to Simon Peter after his Resurrection,' and Gaspard Poussin's 'Landscape with Abraham and Isaac,' which are now in the National Gallery. His miniatures of ladies are particularly graceful. He died at Chelsea in 1841.

DAY, THOMAS, a miniature painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy between the years 1772 and 1778. He also painted water-colour landscapes and drew crayon portraits.

DAYES, EDWARD, a water-colour painter, was born in 1763. He studied under W. Pether, and first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1786. His works are topographical, drawn in Indian ink, and tinted, with figures introduced. He also painted miniatures, and engraved in mezzotint. He died by his own hand in 1804. Amongst his works are:

The Royal Procession to St. Paul's in 1789.
The Trial of Warren Hastings.
Buckingham House, 1790 (South Kensington Museum)
Ely Cathedral, 1792 (South Kensington Museum).
Windermere (South Kensington Museum).
Kew Lake (South Kensington Museum).
View of Bath (South Kensington Museum).

His wife, who exhibited repeatedly at the Royal Academy, was also a painter of miniatures.

DEAN, HUGH PRIMROSE, a landscape painter, was born in Ireland towards the middle of the 18th century, and was known as the 'Irish Claude.' Assisted by Lord Palmerston, he spent several years in Italy, returning in 1779. He was of unprincipled character, and in his latter years his art failed him. He died about 1784. Amongst the works he exhibited at the Spring Gardens' Exhibition and at the Royal Academy were:

View of the Danube. 1768.
View of Naples. 1775.
Morning. 1778.
Evening. 1778.
Eruption of Mount Vesuvius. 1779.
The Banks of the Tiber. 1780.

DEAN, JOHN, an engraver in mezzotint, was a pupil of Valentine Green. He scraped several plates of portraits and other subjects in a very respectable style, and died in London in 1798. The following are among his best works:

PORTRAITS.

James, Earl of Abercorn; after Gainsborough.
George, Lord Vernon; after the same.
James Caulfield, Earl of Charlemont; after Livesey.
The Son of Sir Watkin Williams Wynne, when a child, as St. John; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
Lady Elizabeth Herbert, afterwards Countess of Carnarvon, with her Son; after the same.
Lady Gertrude Fitzpatrick; after the same.
Elizabeth Hamilton, Countess of Derby; after Romney.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Four Evangelists; after Rubens and Jordaens.
St. Anthony of Padua; after Murillo.

DEANE, WILLIAM WOOD, an architectural water-colour painter, was born at Islington in 1825. He entered the schools of the Royal Academy in 1844, where he gained the silver medal of that year. He was at the same time a member of the Institute of British Architects, from which association he received two premiums. Having travelled in Italy, he exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1853 a view of 'St. Peter's, Rome,' and continued for many years an occasional contributor of architectural subjects treated in a pictorial manner. In 1863 he relinquished the profession of an architect, which he had pursued, not very successfully, and became an Associate of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, of which in 1867 he was made a member. Here he exhibited until 1870, when he resigned, and in the following year became an Associate of the old 'Society of Painters in Water-Colours.' He died in 1873. His pictures display individuality and sympathetic blending of colours.

DEARMAN, THOMAS, a landscape and cattle painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1842 and 1856. He lived at Shere, near Guildford, and died young about 1857.

DE BAAN. See DE BAEN.

DE BACKER, FRANS, was a painter of historical subjects and portraits, who practised in Italy and Germany as a portrait painter and engraver from about 1704 to 1752, but it is uncertain whether he belonged to the Dutch or Flemish families of this name. There are a 'Death of Abel,' after Schoonjans, and a portrait of William V., Prince of Orange, after A. Rotterdam, engraved by him. His own Portrait, painted by himself at Rome in 1721, is in the Uffizi at Florence.

DE BACKER, JACQUES, a Flemish historical painter, who was born at Antwerp in 1530, was the son of an artist of no great celebrity, from whom he received his instruction in art. His father dying when he was young, he was taken into the employment of a dealer in pictures, named Palermo; on which account he was sometimes called Jacopo Palermo. Whilst in the employment of this person, he gained a great facility of handling, and, from the practice of copying the works of the great masters, became an excellent colourist. He, however, painted several historical pictures from his own designs, which are highly praised by Van Mander, who states him to have been one of the most promising young painters of his time. Three works, which he particularly commends, represent 'Adam and Eve,' a 'Charity,' and the 'Crucifixion.' The altar-piece of the chapel of the Plantin family, in the cathedral at Antwerp, was painted by this artist: it represents the 'Last Judgment,' and is a grand composition, correctly drawn, and finely coloured. He died at Antwerp in 1560.

DE BACKER, NICOLAAS, who was born at Antwerp in 1648, came to England, and was employed by Kneller as an assistant. He also painted perspective views of English churches. He died in London in 1689.

DEBACQ, CHARLES ALEXANDRE, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1804. He became a pupil of Gros, and was greatly appreciated in his own country. There are several pictures by him at Versailles. He died in Paris in 1853.

DE BAEN, JACOBUS, the son and scholar of Jan De Baen, was born at the Hague in 1673. When he was twenty years of age he came to England, amongst the attendants of King William. The celebrity of his father, and the favour of the court, procured him immediate employment, and he painted the portraits of the Duke of Gloucester and several of the nobility. Notwithstanding this flattering encouragement, his desire of seeing Italy induced him to leave England; and on his way to Rome he visited Florence, and was favoured with the patronage of the grand-duke. On his arrival at Rome he applied himself with much diligence to the study of the works of the great masters, and painted some portraits and conversation pieces, which were much esteemed. He gave promise of surpassing his father in the art, but died at Vienna at the early age of twenty-seven, in 1700. From his gigantic build he was called by his comrades 'Gladiator.'

DE BAEN, JAN, a Dutch portrait painter, was born at Haarlem in 1633. After receiving some instruction from an uncle named Piemans, he was sent to Amsterdam, and placed under the care of Jacob Backer, with whom he remained until he was eighteen years of age. His success in portrait painting was so great that he paid but little attention to the other branches of the art. King Charles II., who had become acquainted with his talents during his residence on the Continent, invited him to England, where he had the honour of painting that monarch, and several of the nobility. He died at the Hague in 1702. Jan De Baen was a great admirer of the works of Van Dyck, whose style he imitated in his pictures. He painted many portraits of distinguished persons of the time, some of which are not inferior to those of Van Dyck. One of his best is that of John Maurice, Prince of Nassau, in the Gallery of the Hague. Louis XIV., after conquering part of Holland, was desirous of having his portrait painted by De Baen, and sent for him to Utrecht for that purpose; but the painter excused himself by observing, that while his country was in mourning, he could not think it proper for him to trace the features of her conqueror.

DE BAETS, ENGEL, a Belgian painter of portraits and architectural subjects, was born at Everghem in 1794. He executed a great number of pictures, most of them views in Ghent and its environs, which are much esteemed. He died at Ghent in 1855.

DE BAILLIU, BAREND, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about the year 1625. He spent some time in Rome, but returned to Flanders, where he died, although the place and the date are not recorded. His plates, which consist chiefly of portraits, with some historical subjects, are entirely executed with the graver. He engraved four of the plates for the collection of portraits of Cardinals created by Innocent XI. (1676-1689), entitled 'Effigies Cardinalium nunc viventium,' published at Rome; as well as the following prints, on which his name occurs spelled in various ways:

The Saviour between St. Peter of Alcantara and St. Mary Magdalen of Pazzi; after Lazzaro Baldi.

St. Peter of Alcantara visited in his cell by the Virgin and Child; after the same.

St. Mary Magdalen of Pazzi, with the Virgin raising her Veil; after the same.

St. Louis Bertrand; after G. B. Gauilli.

Pope Clement X.

The Five Saints canonized by Clement X. in 1671; after Ciro Ferri.

DE BAILLIU, PIETER, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1613. After having learned the first principles of engraving in his own country, he visited Italy for improvement, and there engraved some plates. He returned to Antwerp after 1637, and from 1640 to 1660 engraved several of the works of the most celebrated of the Flemish masters, particularly Rubens and Van Dyck. Although by no means equal to Vorsterman, Bolswert, or Pontius, his prints are held in considerable estimation. Meyer's 'Künstler-Lexikon' gives a list of 103 of his engravings, on which his name is found spelled in a variety of ways. The following are his principal works:

PORTRAITS.

Lodovico Pereira de Castro, Envoy at the Peace of Münster.

Claude de Chabot, Envoy to Münster.

Johann Leuber, Envoy to Münster.
 Pope Urban VIII.
 Jacob Backer, Dutch painter; after Backer.
 Jan Bylert, painter, of Utrecht; after Bylert.
 Albert, Prince of Arenberg; after Van Dyck.
 Lucy, Countess of Carlisle; after the same.
 Antoine de Bourbon, Comte de Morel, after the same.
 Honoré d'Urfé, Comte de Châteauneuf; after the same.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

 St. Anastasius reading; after Rembrandt.

DE BAST, DOMINICUS, a Belgian amateur marine painter, was born at Ghent in 1781, and died there in 1842. Although not an artist by profession, his works are highly appreciated by connoisseurs.

DEBAY, AUGUSTE HYACINTHE, a son of the eminent sculptor Jean Baptiste Joseph Debay, though really a sculptor, began life as an historical painter. He was born at Nantes in 1804, and in 1817, when only thirteen years of age, sent his first portraits to the Salon. After studying under Gros, he obtained the 'Prix de Rome' in 1823. Soon after this he gave up painting for sculpture, which he studied under his father, and in which he was very successful. His death occurred in Paris in 1865. Some of his historical paintings are at Versailles.

DE BEER, AART, a Flemish painter of historical subjects and portraits, was a son of Jan De Beer. He was born at Antwerp in 1490, and admitted into the Guild of St. Luke in 1529. Religious subjects and designs for glass-painting were his special pursuits. He died at Antwerp in 1542.

DE BEER, CORNELIS, was a Flemish painter, who went to Spain about 1630, and who painted easel pictures of considerable merit. In the Capuchin church at Murcia is preserved his 'Triumph of the Holy Sacrament,' a composition of many figures with a landscape background. His daughter, MARIA EUGENIA, practised the art of engraving at Madrid, in the middle of the 17th century, with considerable success. Besides an excellent frontispiece for Basilio Varen's 'Guerra de Flandes,' she executed a good portrait of Prince Baltasar Carlos, and the plates for the work of Don Gregorio de Tapia y Salcedo on 'Horsemanship.'

DE BEER, JOOST, was a native of Utrecht, who studied under Frans Floris. He painted historical pictures with some success, and was patronized by the Bishop of Tournai. He entered the Utrecht Guild in 1550, and died in 1596.

DE BEIJER, JAN, who was born at Aarau in Switzerland in 1705, went whilst young to Amsterdam and studied under C. Pronk and J. M. Quink-hard. He painted many excellent pictures of Dutch towns, some of which have been engraved by H. Spilman, P. van Liender, and others. He was still living in 1768.

DE BIE, ADRIAEN, a Flemish painter, was born at Lierre, near Antwerp, in 1594. He received his first instruction in art from an obscure artist named Wouter Abts. At eighteen years of age he went to Paris, where he studied for some time under Rudolf Schoof, a Fleming, who was painter to Louis XIII. He afterwards visited Rome, where he remained eight years. In 1623, he returned to Flanders, and was much employed for the churches and in painting portraits. His most esteemed work was a picture of St. Eloy, in the collegiate church of St. Gomar at Lierre. He died after 1661. He was the father of Cornelis De Bie, who has celebrated the works of the painters of his country in Flemish verse, under the title of 'Het Gulden Kabinet van de edele vrye Schilderkonst.' His works are usually marked with one or other of the accompanying DE BIE, JACOB and MARCUS. See DE BYE.

DE BISSCHOP, JAN, a designer and engraver, who was born at the Hague, in 1646, was brought up to the law; and, according to Houbraken, practised in the courts in Holland. His favourite amusement was drawing, and his performances excited the admiration of the artists of his time. He excelled in copying the pictures of the most esteemed masters, in small coloured drawings, very well drawn and highly finished. As an engraver, he is more deserving of notice, and he has left a great number of plates, principally etched, and harmonized with the graver, in a free and pleasing manner. There is great relief and richness of effect in his prints. His most important work was a series of 157 engravings from celebrated antique statues and sketches by eminent painters, entitled, 'Paradigmata graphices variorum Artificum,' published at the Hague in 1671. This engraver Latinized his name into Episcopus, for which reason he marked his plates with the cipher .

He died at Amsterdam, in 1686. Other good prints by him are:

A Bacchanalian subject.

Christ and the Samaritan Woman; after Annibale Carracci.

Joseph distributing Corn to the Egyptians; after B. Breenbergh.

The Martyrdom of St. Lawrence; after the same.

DE BLOIS, ABRAHAM, a Dutch engraver, who flourished from the year 1690 to 1720. He worked chiefly for the booksellers, by whom he was much employed. Among other portraits, he engraved that of Anthony van Leeuwenhoek, the celebrated physician, which was prefixed to his works published in 1695, and which is executed in a neat but formal style. He also executed part of the plates for the 'Figures de la Bible,' from the designs of Picart and others, published at Amsterdam in 1720.

DE BLOOT, PIETER, a native of Holland, flourished about 1650. He painted droll scenes, drunken frolics, and the quarrels of the peasantry, with much truth to nature. His works, which are somewhat rare, are much prized in Holland. De Bloot died at Antwerp in 1667.

DEBON, FRANÇOIS HIPPOLYTE, a French historical painter, was the son of Madame Sophie Debon, an artist upon porcelain, who was born in Paris in 1787, and died there in 1838. He was born in Paris in 1807, and studied first under Gros and afterwards under Abel de Pujol. One of his most important works was 'The Entrance of William the Conqueror into London,' which was exhibited at the Salon of 1855, and afterwards placed in the Luxembourg Gallery. His death occurred in Paris in 1872.

DE BRAUWERE, PASCHATIUS, was an engraver of whom little is known. Brulliot describes the only etching by him known; it is, he says, in the manner of Guido, and represents the executioner placing the head of John the Baptist in a dish held by the servant of Herodias; these two figures occupy the foreground, and Herodias is behind them speaking to the servant. It bears the date 1631.

DE BRAY, DIRK, a painter and wood-engraver, was born at Haarlem in 1640, and specially depicted flowers, birds, and portraits. There is a small woodcut of the portrait of his father, Salomon De Bray, by this artist, dated 1664, which is very spiritedly executed. He also engraved 12 prints of fishes, poultry, hogs, &c., dated 1672, and 16 of birds, flowers, and figures, dated 1660. He was still living in 1675.

DE BRAY, JACOB, a Dutch painter, was born at Haarlem about the year 1625. He was the son of Salomon De Bray, an obscure portrait painter, by whom he was instructed. Van Mander mentions him as a reputable historical painter, and extols a picture by him at Amsterdam, representing 'David playing on the Harp, with a number of Priests and Levites.' He excelled in drawing on paper with black and red chalk, and his works of that description were much esteemed by collectors. They are often signed with this monogram, . Jacob De Bray died in 1680. Writers, however, differ very much respecting the dates in the lives of this artist and of his son of the same names.

DE BRAY, JAN, an historical painter and etcher, was a brother of Dirk De Bray, and, like him, born at Haarlem. Two pictures by him, the 'Reception of the Orphans' and 'Prince Frederick Henry in the Town Hall,' are preserved at the Haarlem Orphanage, and others are in the Museums of that city and of Amsterdam. Of his etchings, mention is made of 'John the Baptist in the Wilderness.' He died in 1697.

DE BRAY, SALOMON, a poet and architect as well as a painter, was born at Haarlem in 1597, and died at the same place in 1664. He has left some paintings in the Orange Hall of the palace called the 'House in the Wood,' at the Hague.

DEBRET, JEAN BAPTISTE, was born in Paris in 1768, and was instructed by David. He painted historical subjects, and completed his studies at Rome. He then returned to France, where he lived some years, and afterwards went to Brazil and became professor at the Academy at Rio de Janeiro. His works chiefly represent scenes in the life of Napoleon. In 1836 he published a 'Voyage pittoresque et historique du Brésil.' He died in Paris in 1848.

DE BRIE. See DE BRY.

DE BROEN, GERRIT, a Dutch engraver, flourished about the year 1720. He was principally employed in engraving portraits for the booksellers. Among others, we have the portrait of Pieter Poicet, after Nicolaas Verkolje.

DE BRUIN, CORNELIS, called at Rome ADONIS, a 360

Dutch portrait painter, was born at the Hague in 1652, and was instructed by Theodoor van der Schuur. His passion for travelling led him when he was young to Italy, where he passed some time at Rome with Robert Duval; he afterwards went to Venice, where he studied for some years under Johann Karl Loth. He painted portraits with success; but is more distinguished by the publication of his travels through Persia, India, and other countries, with plates from his own designs. He died at Zijde-Balen, near Utrecht, in 1726 or 1727.

DE BRUYN, ABRAHAM, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1538. He established himself at Cologne about the year 1577, and died there very old. He is ranked among the Little Masters, on account of his plates being usually very small. He engraved in the manner of Wierix, and worked entirely with the graver, in a neat and formal style, but his drawing is far from correct. It is believed that he worked also as a goldsmith. He usually marked his plates with one of these ciphers,   or . Among his portraits, and prints of small friezes of hunting, hawking, &c., which are esteemed for their neatness, may be mentioned:

PORTRAITS.

Philip Louis, Elector Palatine.
Anne, his consort.
Albert Frederick, Duke of Prussia.
Eleonora, his Duchess.
William, Duke of Juliers.
Mary, his Duchess.
John Sambucus, physician; a woodcut.
Charles IX., King of France.
Anna, daughter of the Emperor Charles V.

Seventy-six plates of Horsemen. 1575.
A set of small friezes of Hunting and Hawking. 1565.
A set of twelve plates of Animals. 1583.
A set of Arabesque Patterns.
Pyramus and Thisbe; after Frans Floris.
The Resurrection of Lazarus; after Crispin van den Broeck.

DE BRUYN, NICOLAES, was the son of Abraham De Bruyn, and was born at Antwerp about 1570. Although he was instructed by his father in engraving, he did not follow his example, either in the style of his execution, or in the size of his plates. He appears to have studied and to have formed his manner from the works of Lucas van Leyden. His compositions are abundant, but he wanted taste in the selection of his forms. He finished his plates very neatly with the graver; but there is not much effect in his prints, from his ignorance of the management of the chiaroscuro. Notwithstanding this defect, which was very general at the time in which he lived, his works possess considerable merit. He died at Amsterdam in 1656. He signed his plates sometimes with his initials

N. de B., and sometimes with one of the following monograms, AD PINX. AGD. NB.

AB, NB

The following are his principal works :

SUBJECTS FROM HIS OWN DESIGNS.

Adam and Eve in Paradise. 1600.
Adam and Eve standing under the Tree of the Forbidden Fruit. 1631.

DE BRY, DIRK, or THEODORUS, a German engraver, was born at Liège in 1528. He resided chiefly at Frankfort, where he carried on the business of a print and bookseller. It is not known by whom he was instructed in the art of engraving, but from his style he appears to have paid particular attention to the works of Hans Sebald Beham. About the year 1587 he visited England, and at the suggestion of the great cosmographer Richard Hakluyt, who procured him many designs after nature, he published a large collection of voyages and travels in French, German, and Latin. He died at Frankfort in 1598. This laborious artist worked almost wholly with the graver, in a neat, free style, well adapted to the subjects of which he made choice, such as processions and ceremonials, containing a great number of figures, which he drew correctly, and to which he gave great spirit and expression. He usually marked his plates T. B., or with the cipher B. He engraved the plates for the four first volumes of Boissard's 'Romanæ urbis Topographia et Antiquitates,' 1597-98; the two last volumes were completed by his sons, Johannes Theodorus and Johannes Israel De Bry. We have also the following prints by him:

St. John in the Wilderness; an etching; very scarce.
A Dance of Cavaliers and Ladies.
A Dance of Men and Women Peasants.
A Design for a Saucer, a Head representing Pride and Folly, surrounded with grotesque subjects; a circular plate; scarce.
Another Design for a Saucer, a Head of the Duke of Alva, with the Mask of Folly, with grotesque subjects; circular; scarce.
Another Design for a Saucer, the Head of William of Nassau, with grotesque figures, indicative of Prudence; circular; scarce.
A Medallion of Scanderbeg.
The companion; Donice Scanderbegi Uxor.
The Nine Muses.
'The Procession at the Obsequies of Sir Philip Sidney; drawn and invented by Thomas [aut], Gent., and engraven on copper by Derick Theodore de Brie, in the city of London,' 1587; thirty-four plates.
The Procession of the Knights of the Garter in 1570; twelve plates, dated 1578.
A set of Portraits, entitled 'Icones Virorum illustrium,' 1597-99.
The plates for Hariot's 'A briefe and true report of the new found land of Virginia,' published at Frankfort in 1590.
The plates for Las Casas' narrative of the cruelties of the Spaniards in America; entitled 'Narratio Regionum Indicarum per Hispanos quosdam devastatarum verissima,' 1598.
The plates for his great work, entitled 'Collectiones Peregrinationum in Indiam Orientalem et Indiam Occidentalem,' in twenty-five parts, folio. 1590-1634. Eighty-five plates of 'Emblemata,' 1592.

DE BRY, JOHANNES THEODORUS, the elder son and pupil of Dirk De Bry, was born at Liège in 1561. He greatly assisted his father in the important works in which he was engaged, as, for instance, the 'Florilegium novum,' which was published at Frankfort in 1612, and with the assistance of his brother Johannes Israel, he completed the two volumes of Boissard's 'Romanæ urbis Topographia et Antiquitates,' which were left unfinished at his father's death. He also published 'Emblemata secularia,' 1596, and added considerably to the collection of Portraits of Illustrious Persons, begun by his father. He died at Frankfort in 1623. His prints are signed with the initials J. T. B., or with one of these monograms, ITB, JB, VB.

We have also the following prints by him:

Portrait of Gerard Mercator, geographer.
Portrait of Daniel Specklin.
Four plates of the Elements; J. T. de Bry, inv. et fec.
The Marriage of Rebekah; after Baldassare Peruzzi.
A March of Soldiers; a frieze; after Titian.
Another March of Soldiers, conducting Prisoners, with Death riding on a Horse; a frieze, called the Triumph of Death; after the same.
The Little Village Fair; after H. S. Beham.
The Fountain of Youth; after the same.
The Triumph of Bacchus; after Giulio Romano.

The Venetian Ball; after Theodore Bernard; a circular plate.

The Golden Age; from the print engraved by N. De Bruyn; after A. Bloemaert.

JOHANNES ISRAEL DE BRY, of whom mention is made in the two preceding articles, is recorded as having died in 1611.

DE BUYTENWEG, WILLEM, (or BUYTEWECH,) a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Rotterdam about the year 1600, but lived at Haarlem, and was instructed by H. Maartensz. He painted conversation-pieces and landscapes in a style which gained him much reputation. Houbraken designates him 'Geestige Willem' (William the Gay), and under this appellation he is to be found in the collection of Catalogues of Pictures by Hoet and Terwesten, as a painter of conversations and familiar scenes. He died in 1640. Some of his pictures have been engraved by G. H. Scheyndel and E. van de Velde. His principal work, as a painter, was 'The Triumph of William, Prince of Orange,' 1623, engraved by C. Kittenstein. He etched some plates from his own designs, in a pleasing style, among which are the following:

Two of Women going to Market, one with Vegetables, the other with Fowls.

Seven of Dresses of Noblemen.

Six of Dresses of Ladies.

Ten of Landscapes, with Ruins and Figures.

DE BYE, JACOB, (or DE BIE,) a Flemish engraver, was born in 1581 at Antwerp, where he followed the profession of a picture-dealer and antiquary. From the style of his plates, it is not improbable that he learned the art of engraving in the school of the Collaerts. He worked wholly with the graver; his execution is neat and firm, and his drawing tolerably correct. In conjunction with the Collaerts, he engraved some of the set of fifty plates of the 'Life, Passion, and Resurrection of Christ,' after the designs of Martin De Vos. Several of the plates in the 'Life of the Virgin,' from the designs of the same painter, were executed by this artist, together with Philip and Theodoor Galle. He died in Paris about 1650. The following are his principal prints:

The Medals of the Roman Emperors, in the collection of the Duke d'Archoth. 1617.

The Portraits of the Kings of France, for Mezeray's History; fifty-eight plates.

The Descendants of the House of De Croy; about sixty plates.

Portrait of Francis I.; after M. De Vos.

Christ healing Peter's Wife's Mother; fine; for Collaert's set.

The Resurrection of Lazarus; fine; for the same set.

DE BYE, MARCUS, (or DE BIE,) a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at the Hague in 1612. He was instructed in painting by J. van der Does, and produced some landscapes, with animals, in the style of that master, which are not without merit; but he is chiefly deserving of notice for the excellent etchings he has left us of animals, after the designs of Paulus Potter and Markus Gerard. He died in 1670. We have by him:

The fat Spitzhund.

The Mule-driver.

Three sets, of eight each, of Cows and Oxen; after Potter.

A set of sixteen of Sheep; after the same.

A set of sixteen of Goats; after the same.

A set of sixteen of Lions, Leopards, Wolves, Bears, &c.; after the same.

362

A set of sixteen of the Natural History of the Bear; after Markus Gerard. 1664.

DECAGNY, VIRGINIE POLYXÈNE AUGUSTINE PHILIPPE. See DALLEMAGNE.

DE CAISNE, HENRI, a Belgian historical and portrait painter, was born at Brussels in 1799. As early as 1814 he began to study painting under François, and in 1818 upon the advice of David he went to Paris and entered the studio of Girodet, whence he removed to that of Gros. Several pictures by him are at Versailles; among them are the 'Entry of Charles VII. into Rouen' (1838), and the 'Institution of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem' (1842). In 1839 he completed his colossal work, 'Les Belges Illustres.' He died in Paris in 1852. Among his best works are:

PORTRAITS.

The Queen of the Belgians. 1835.

The Duke of Orleans. 1833.

The Princess Clementina of Orleans. 1833.

Madame Malibran as Desdemona. 1831.

DECAMPS, ALEXANDRE GABRIEL, a French historical, landscape, animal, and genre painter, was born in Paris in 1803. When a child, he was sent into a retired part of Picardy, and for three years ran wild in the society of peasants. He thus acquired a distaste for serious study, which subsequently proved a great hindrance to his artistic development, and he contracted an aversion to discipline and to the ordinary habits of polite society. He subsequently studied desultorily in the studios of Bouchot, Abel de Pujol, David, and Ingres, and about this period produced many small genre works, pictures of dogs, horses, cattle, &c. To a man of his disposition, travel had a great charm, and he spent some years in the south of France, in Switzerland, in Italy, and in the Levant. It was in the East that he found the subjects most suited to his genius, and his oriental pictures were the first of a class in which there have been many followers. Decamps' constant aim, however, was to obtain fame by historical painting. In 1834 he produced a 'Defeat of the Cimbri by Marius,' and in 1845 a series of designs illustrating the life of Samson. But he met with no encouragement, and he complained bitterly of his disappointment. He was awarded medals at the Salon in 1831 and again in 1834; but his works were subsequently seldom exhibited, and they were generally sold without appearing in public. He died in 1860, through a fall from his horse while hunting at Fontainebleau. Decamps was a thorough member of the Romantic school. His rebellion against systematic training in his youth precluded him from obtaining success in historic art. The representation of wild scenery and objects was his forte, and in this he was aided in a marked degree by his great mastery of light and shade. Amongst his chief works are:

Soldier of the Vizier's Guard. 1827. (Sir R. Wallace.)
 Turkish Patrol, Smyrna. 1831. (Sir R. Wallace.)
 Turkish Children near a fountain. 1833. (Duke d'Aumale.)

DE CAUWER, EMIL, was a painter of architectural subjects, born at Ghent in 1828. He was a pupil of his father, Joseph De Cauwer. His pictures are characterized by truth and very careful execution, but they are lacking in artistic effect. Amongst them may be noted the 'Church of St. Martin at Oudenarde,' the 'Town Hall at Oudenarde,' and the 'New Synagogue at Berlin.' He died at Berlin in 1873.

DE CAUWER, JOSEPH, a Belgian painter, was born at Beveren-Waes in 1779. He studied at the Academies of Antwerp and Ghent, at the latter of which he became eventually a professor. He painted portraits and historical subjects, and many of his pupils rose to eminence. His 'Prometheus,' dated 1832, is in the gallery at Ghent, his 'Death of Our Lord,' in the church of St. Bavon, and a 'Descent from the Cross,' in that of St. Nicolas. He died at Ghent in 1854.

DECKER, C., was a German engraver, who, about the middle of the 17th century, went from Nuremberg to Amsterdam, and there learned the art from Romeyn De Hooghe. He appears to have been much employed by the booksellers, and his plates are often executed in a coarse, harsh style. They are principally executed from his own designs; and among his best are those engraved for Kircher's 'Turris Babel,' published at Amsterdam in 1679. He marked his plates with his name or with the cipher D.

DECKER, I. DE. See DE DECKER.

DECKER, JOHANN STEPHAN, a French painter, was born at Colmar in 1784. At the age of twenty he went to Paris, where he studied under David and Krapf, but at the end of seven years he returned to his native city. In 1821 he settled at Vienna, and was much employed at the court in teaching drawing and in the execution of miniatures and water-colour paintings. He died at Vienna in 1844.

DECKER, PAUL, an architect and engraver, who was born at Nuremberg in 1677, designed and engraved for Andreas Schlüter in Berlin, and was by him instructed in architecture. He died in 1713. His son, PAUL DECKER, excelled in painting history and portraits, and was for three years director of the Academy at Nuremberg. He died in 1742.

DE CLÉ, CORNELIS, a Flemish historical painter, who was a native of Antwerp, was received into the guild of St. Luke in that city in 1660-1661.

In 1690 he painted for the 'Sodalité des Hommes mariés,' a picture representing the 'Mount of Olives,' as well as the figures of Christ and Pilate. He died in 1724.

DE CLERCK, HENDRIK, who was born at Brussels about 1570, was a pupil of Marten De Vos, and imitated that master. He painted historical subjects, of which there are several in the churches of the Netherlands; but his small pictures, in which he may be compared to Rottenhammer and Van Balen, are more esteemed. He died about 1629. Among his best works are:

Brussels. Museum.	Holy Family (triptych).
" "	Christ calling little Children to Him.
" St. James.	Crucifixion.
" Notre-Dame.	Holy Family.
" "	Resurrection.
Vienna. Belvedere.	Cephalus and Procris (in a Forest Landscape by Alstoot). 1608.

DE COCK, FRANS, a Flemish ecclesiastic, was born at Antwerp in 1643. His love for art led him to visit Rome, and after his return to Antwerp in 1662, all his leisure time was devoted to drawing and painting. Although but an amateur, his portraits were very successful. He died in 1709.

DE COCK, JAN CLAUS, a Flemish engraver, flourished about the year 1660. His name is affixed to an etching representing the 'Martyrdom of a Saint.' It is executed in a bold masterly style, and appears to be the production of a painter.

DE COCKQ, PAUL JOSEPH, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Bruges in 1724. He was a pupil of Matthias De Visch, and became Director of the Academy at Bruges in 1775. He died in his native city in 1801. The following works by him are in the Bruges Academy:

The Holy Trinity.
 Apollo crowning Poetry and Music.
 Landscape with old Monuments; after Canaletto.

DE COENE, JEAN HENRI, a Belgian painter of genre and historical subjects, was born at Nederbrakel in 1798. He was a pupil of David and of Paelinck, and became professor in the Brussels Academy. He died in that city in 1866. His picture of the 'Incredulity of St. Thomas' gained him the prize in 1827.

DE CONINCK (or CONINGH). See DE KONINCK.

DE' CONTI, BERNARDINO. See DEI CONTI.

DE CORT, HENDRIK, a Flemish landscape painter, was born in 1742 at Antwerp, where he studied. He settled in England, and, from 1790, exhibited many works at the Royal Academy. He died in London in 1810. His landscapes, previous to his settling in England, were embellished with figures and animals painted by Ommeganck and P. van Regemorter. They are much in the Italian taste, with views of cities and ancient ruins, pleasingly coloured and neatly finished. In the Belvedere at Vienna there is by him a 'View of the old Castle of Tersch on the Scheldt at Antwerp' (1774).

DE COSTER, ADAM, was a native of Antwerp, and is supposed to have been a disciple of Theodoor Rombouts. He painted historical subjects and portraits with considerable skill; but he particularly excelled in depicting gallant assemblies and festivals, which are ingeniously composed, and coloured with great force and vigour. We have a fine print of a 'Concert,' engraved by L. Vorsterman, after a painting by this artist.

DE COSTER, DOMINICUS, the son of the painter and poet Pieter Balten, was born at Antwerp in 1560. At an early period of his life he settled at Augsburg, where he assumed the name of De Coster or Custos, and formed a considerable establishment as a print-seller. He died in that city in 1612. He engraved several plates in a neat but somewhat formal style. Among them are:

- A set of the effigies of the German Emperors. 1601.
- Fourteen Plates, entitled 'Effigies piorum ac doctorum aliquot virorum.' 1594.
- Twenty-eight Plates, entitled 'Tirolensium principum comitum genuinæ Icones.' 1599.
- Sixty-four Portraits of the Fugger Family. 1593.
- Edward VI.
- Marco Bragadini; after J. von Aachen. 1591.
- Charles III., Duke of Lorraine. 1597.
- Dorothea, Duchess of Lorraine.
- Pope Sixtus V.
- Bust of Sigismund, Prince of Moldavia; after J. von Aachen.
- Maria Christina Carolina, his consort.
- Cosmo de' Medici. 1609.
- Rudolph II., Emperor of Germany.
- Four Plates of the Prodigal Son; D. Custodis inv. et fec.
- Judith with the Head of Holofernes; after J. von Aachen.
- Christoph Fugger; after the same.
- Georg Basta; after the same.

His three sons, RAPHAEL, DAVID, and JAKOB, were also engravers; but the first only obtained any celebrity.

DE COSTER, PIETER, a painter and engraver of Antwerp, is usually known as BALTHAZAR, or BALTEN, or BALTENS (the shortened form of Baltenssone, i. e. the son of Balten, Balthazar). His father was Balten Janssone de Coster, a painter. Pieter entered the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1540, and became its Dean in 1569. He died about 1598. He painted landscapes, village festivals, and fairs, in the style of Pieter Brueghel. His small figures are correctly drawn and neatly touched, and his landscapes are painted with great precision. He engraved portraits, and also a sacred piece, 'Suffer Little Children to come unto Me,' after Ambrosius Francken.

DE CRAEYER, GASPAR, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1582. He was first instructed in the art by Raphael van Coxie of Brussels, an artist of little repute, whom he soon surpassed. Taking for his guide the works of the able artists of his country, and indefatigable in his study of nature, he gave early proof of his ability in some public works, so that he was received a member of the Guild in 1607. His paintings also attracted the notice of the court of Brussels, and he was engaged to paint the portrait of the Cardinal-Infant Don Ferdinand, the Governor of the Low-Countries, to be sent to his brother, the King of Spain. This work gave so much satisfaction, that he was appointed painter to the court, with a considerable pension, and was also employed in the churches and public edifices. If De Craeyer had only looked for emolument, this flattering patronage, and the applause of the great, would have satisfied his ambition, and secured his fortune by fixing him at the court. But intent solely on excelling in his art, and desirous of that repose and tranquillity so essential to his work, he resigned his situation at Brussels, and sought the retirement he longed for, by removing to Ghent. This retreat did not diminish the reputation he had acquired, and he continued to receive commissions from every part of the country. It was at this time that he painted his fine picture for the refectory of the abbey of Affleghem, which is one of his most celebrated works. It represents the 'Centurion dismounting from his horse to prostrate himself before Christ.' It was this admirable picture that procured for him the flattering homage of Rubens, who, on beholding it, exclaimed aloud, "Craeyer, nobody will surpass you." The churches of the principal cities in Flanders and Brabant are decorated with a surprising number of the works of this master, who spent a long life in unremitting labour. The biographers of the Flemish painters have not hesitated to place De Craeyer on a level with Rubens and Van Dyck. Although this high compliment may be rather strained, he is undoubtedly entitled to rank next after them among the ablest artists of that school.

His compositions are learned and judicious; rejecting all superfluity and ostentation, he aimed at the higher qualities of correctness and simplicity. Less daring than Rubens, he is always correct; and, although he never soared to the height of that aspiring genius, his works possess both grandeur and dignity. His colouring is chaste and tender, resembling in its carnations the clear tinting of Van Dyck. He died at Ghent in 1669. The following are the principal among his numerous works, in which the landscapes are painted by De Vadder and L. Achtschellinck:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	The Taking down from the Cross.
Antwerp.	Museum.	Elijah in the Desert.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Christ at Emmaus.
Brussels.	Museum.	The Miraculous Draught of Fishes.
"	"	St. Paul and St. Anthony as Hermits.
"	"	The Blessed Virgin as Protectress of the 'Grand-Seorment de l'Arbalète.'
Ghent.	S. Michael.	Ascension of St. Catharine.
"	Museum.	Judgment of Solomon.
"	"	Martyrdom of St. Blaise.
Lille.	Museum.	Martyrdom of a Man by burying alive.
Madrid.	Gallery.	The Death of the Virgin. (His principal work.)
Munich.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child with Saints.
Nancy.	Museum.	The Plague at Milan.
Paris.	Louvre.	Virgin and Child adored by Saints.
"	"	St. Augustine.
"	"	Portrait of the Cardinal-Infant Don Ferdinand of Spain, on horseback.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Pan and Syrinx.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	The Descent from the Cross.
Valenciennes.	Gallery.	The Penitent Magdalen.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	The Holy Family.

Some recent writers ascribe to him a woodcut representing St. Sebastian. Van Dyck painted his portrait, which Paulus Pontius engraved. His monogram is annexed:

DE CRITZ, JOHN, EMMANUEL, and THOMAS, were decorative painters in England in the first half of the 17th century. John, who had the greatest reputation of the three brothers, was serjeant-painter to James I. and Charles I., in which office he was succeeded by Emmanuel. They painted scenery, ceilings, &c. John bought many pictures at the sale of the collection of Charles I. He died after 1657.

DE CROOCK, HUBERT, a Flemish typographer and engraver on wood, was born at Bruges in 1490. His name is affixed to a large cut, representing the Trinity, which is neatly executed, but in a stiff, formal style. Albrecht Dürer engraved the same subject, but in so superior a manner, that the print by De Croock may be presumed to be a copy coeval with the original. Besides the name, it is marked with the monogram .

DE CUYPERE, ANDRIES. See STEVENS.

DE DECKER, I., is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a small copy of the print representing the 'Treaty of Münster,' engraved by Suyderhoef, after Terburg, in which he attempted to imitate the style of the original, but with no great success.

DE DEYSTER, LODEWYK, a painter of history and an engraver, born at Bruges in 1656, was a scholar of Jan Maes. He distinguished himself by his happy compositions, the expression of the heads, and the vigour of the chiaroscuro. The 'Death of the Virgin,' in the church of St. Jacques at Bruges, is considered his best work; with it are his pictures of the 'Crucifixion' and the 'Resurrection,' whilst in the church of St. Anne, in the same city, there is another esteemed work by him of the 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian.' His engraved plates are rare. In 1688 he was admitted a member of the Guild in his native city. He died at Lisbon in 1711. His daughter, ANNA DE DEYSTER, who was born at Bruges in 1696, acquired some reputation in painting landscapes, and executed some historical works for the churches in the style of her father, whose pictures she copied to deception. She died in 1747.

DEBREUX, ALFRED, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1812. He was the son of the architect Pierre Anne Dedreux, and nephew of P. J. Dedreux-Dorcy. He studied under Léon Cogniet, and painted animals as well as portraits. He died in Paris in 1860.

DEBREUX-DORCY, PIERRE JOSEPH, a French genre painter, was born in Paris in 1789. He studied for some time under Guérin. His paintings, one of which, called 'Bajazet et le Berger,' is in the Museum of Bordeaux, are in the style of Greuze. He also painted, together with Géricault, a picture called 'La Baigneuse.' He died at Bellevue in 1874. His surname was Dedreux, but he was usually called Dorcy.

DEELEN, DIRK VAN, (or DELEN,) a Dutch painter, was born at Heusden in 1605. He afterwards settled at Arnemuïden in Zeeland, of which town he became burgomaster. He possessed not only an extraordinary talent in representing Italian architecture, but was also thoroughly acquainted with linear and aerial perspective. He particularly devoted himself to the production of views of churches and other buildings, and the figures in his paintings are mostly by Van Herp, Palamedes, Stevens, and Wouwerman. He died at Arnemuïden in 1671. The following are his most important works:

Antwerp.	Museum.	An Allegory.
Berlin.	Gallery.	The Court of a Palace.
Hague.	Museum.	The Hall of the Binnenhof at the Hague.
Lille.	Museum.	The Interior of a Castle.
Paris.	Louvre.	Players at Ball.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	A Musical Party.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	A building with columns.

DE FOUR, PIETER, called DE SALZEA, a native of Liège, who flourished at the end of the 16th and beginning of the 17th centuries, was a scholar of Lambert Lombardus. There were by him in the cathedral at Liège two excellent altar-pieces dated 1578 and 1580, and in the church of St. Bartholomew, a 'St. Michael,' and a 'Descent from the Cross,' dated 1610.

DEFrance, LEONARD, born at Liège in 1735, was a scholar of J. B. Cooclers. He painted historical pieces of large and small dimensions, also landscapes, game, fruit, flowers, and architecture. He was the first professor of design at the Academy of Liège, established by the Prince Velbruck, and afterwards filled the same post in the school of the central department of Ourthe. He died at Liège in 1805.

DE' FRANCESCHI. See DEI FRANCESCHI.

DE FREY, ANNA, a sister of Johannes De Frey, executed a large number of drawings from paintings by old masters, such as Jan Steen, Metsu, and Mieris. She was instructed by her brother-in-law, Jacobus Johannes Lauwers, and afterwards became herself a teacher of drawing at Mannheim, in which town she was married, and where she died in 1808. She also painted in oil.

DE FREY, JOHANNES, an engraver and etcher of distinction, was born at Amsterdam about 1760, and was instructed in the art by Jacobus Johannes Lauwers. Deprived by nature of the use of his right hand, he had the courage to pursue the art with his left, and by industrious application surmounted every difficulty. He became distinguished in his profession as an able designer, and for the boldness of his graver. He engraved many prints after Rembrandt, Flink, G. Dou, and other masters of that school, which are held in estimation. He settled in Paris in 1814, and died there in 1834. Among his best plates are:

The Anatomical Demonstration of Tulp; after Rembrandt. 1798.

The Magistrates; after the same. 1799.

The Ship-builder and his Wife; after the same.

The Family of Tobias; after the same.

Portrait of Rembrandt; after the same.

Portrait of Rembrandt's Mother; after the same.

The Presentation in the Temple; after the same.

Isaac blessing his son Jacob; after G. Flink. 1798.

The Family of G. Dou; after G. Dou. 1798.

The Philosopher; after Breckelenkamp. 1796.

The Hermit in a Cavern reading; after the same.

Portrait of Admiral Marten Harpertz Tromp; after Lievens. 1801.

Portrait of G. A. Brederode; after Baillie.

DE FROMANTIOU, HENDRIK, was a painter who excelled in flowers, birds, and objects of still-life. He was born at Nymegen in 1630, and was living in 1680. In the Gallery at Salzthalen is a beautiful flower-piece by him. It is also said that he painted in the manner of Rembrandt; and that Wouwerman gave him his daughter in marriage, with a large dowry. This last circumstance, if authentic, would be confirmatory of his artistic talent; but the fact may be doubted, as Wouwerman never became rich by his profession, and died of chagrin at finding his works so much neglected.

DE GAST, MICHEL, a Flemish landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1509, and became a member of the Guild of St. Luke in 1558. He appears to have passed the greater part of his life in Italy, and most of his pictures represent the ruins of ancient Rome and its environs. He died in 1564.

DE GEEST, WYBRAND, called 'De Friesche Adelaar' (The Frisian Eagle), was born, probably at Antwerp, about the year 1591. He travelled to Italy when young, and resided there several years, chiefly at Rome, where he made drawings from the principal statues and pictures; and on his return to Holland painted historical subjects with considerable skill. He died at Antwerp in 1643. The plates in the book entitled 'Cabinet des Statues,' published at Amsterdam in 1702, are from the designs of his grandson, who bore the same names.

DE GELDER, ARENT, or AART, a Dutch painter, was born at Dordrecht in 1645. After studying for some time in his native town, under Samuel van Hoogstraeten, he went to Amsterdam, where he entered the school of Rembrandt, and became one of the ablest imitators of the style of that master. Like him he painted portraits and historical subjects, in which he exhibits the same uncouth choice of forms, with the same fascinating charm of colour; the same eccentricities and defects, with his admirable conduct of light and shade, and the richness and spirit of his brush. In his historical pictures, he also equally set at nought propriety of costume, and elevation of sentiment. His works still captivate by their surprising effects. He painted from nature all the accompanying objects in his pictures, and his painting-room, crowded with armour, old draperies, flags, and sabres, resembled rather the interior of a broker's shop than the studio of an artist. He was most successful in his portraits, some of which are not unworthy of Rembrandt, and have been frequently attributed to that master. He died at Amsterdam in 1727. Among his portraits is that of 'Peter the Great of Russia,' while his principal historical works are 'Simeon in the Temple,' 'Pilate binding Christ,' and 'Judah and Tamar.'

DE GEMPT, B., a Dutch animal painter, who died by his own hand in 1879. Amongst his works are 'A Congress of Dogs,' and 'The Miser's Death-bed.'

DE GHENDT, EMMANUEL JEAN NEPOMUCÈNE, a French engraver, was born at St. Nicholas in Flanders in 1738. He was a pupil of J. Aliamet, and has engraved several plates in a neat, pleasing style. He executed many of the prints and vignettes for the 'Voyage d'Italie' of the Abbé de Saint-Non. He died in Paris in 1815. We have also, among others, the following prints by him:

L'Amour Asiatique; after Ch. Eisen.

Les Moissonneurs dans les Champs; after the same.

La pleine Moisson; after Isaac Moucheron.

A View of the Fountain of Arethusa at Syracuse; after Chatelet.

The Four Times of the Day; after Baudouin.

DE GHEYN, JAKOB, (or DE GHEIN,) 'the elder,' a Flemish designer and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1565. He was instructed in drawing by his father, who was a glass-painter, and learned engraving under Hendrik Goltzius. He imitated the style of that master, and his plates evince a great command of the graver. They are executed in a bold, free style, and his drawing is correct, and not without taste. He died at Antwerp, or elsewhere, about 1625. He engraved a great number of plates, both from his own designs and after other masters, and his prints are highly esteemed. He generally used the cipher . The following are his principal works:

PORTRAITS.

Tycho Brahe, the Astronomer.

Abraham Gokevius, antiquary, of Amsterdam.

Hugo Grotius.

Philip de Marnix, the disciple of Calvin.

366

Cosmo de' Medici.

Sigismondo Malatesta; circular.

Ivan IV. Vasilevich, Czar of Muscovy; circular.

SUBJECTS AFTER HIS OWN DESIGNS.

Vanity; represented as a Woman at her toilet.

The Penitent Magdalen; a small oval.

Mars and Venus; two small medallions.

A Gipsy telling a Girl her fortune.

The Statue of the Laocoon.

A Lion, in a landscape; very scarce.

A set of ten plates, called the Masks; very scarce.

The Twelve Roman Emperors; circular; fine.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS AUTHORS.

The Life and Passion of Christ; fourteen plates; engraved by J. De Gheyn and Z. Dolendo, after C. van Mander.

The Twelve Tribes of Israel; twelve plates; after the same.

The Four Evangelists; after Hendrik Goltzius.

The Confusion of Tongues at the building of the Tower of Babel; after C. van Mander.

The Adoration of the Trinity; after the same.

The Judgment of Midas; after the same.

The Prodigal Son; in two sheets; after the same.

The Crucifixion; after Crispin van den Broeck.

The Assembly of the Gods; after the same. 1589.

The Empire of Neptune; after W. Telrho. 1587.

Twelve plates of Soldiers of the Guard of Rudolph II.; after H. Goltzius.

The Annunciation; after A. Bloemaert.

A Repose in Egypt; after the same.

Christ preaching to the Jews; after the same.

The Miracle of the Loaves; after the same.

Daniel in the Lions' Den; after T. Bernard.

Diana and Actæon; after the same.

Polyphemus, with Acis and Galatea; after C. van Haarlem.

A small Landscape; an etching; after J. Brueghel.

DE GHEYN, JAKOB, (or DE GHEIN,) 'the younger,' son of the elder Jakob De Gheyn, was born at Antwerp about the year 1595. He is supposed to have studied in Italy, under A. Tempesta, from the resemblance in their style. In conjunction with Cornelis Boel, he executed eight plates for 'Les Exploits de Charles-Quint pendant la Guerre d'Italie,' from designs by Tempesta.

DE GHEYN, WILLEM, (or DE GHEIN,) a Flemish engraver, probably related to Jakob De Gheyn, was born at Antwerp, and worked in the middle of the 17th century in Holland and in Paris. Jointly with Jeremiah Falck, he engraved the Four Seasons, represented by French ladies, attired in the costume of the time of Louis XII. We have also by him the following plates:

The Visitation; after Guido Reni.

Louis XIV., when a boy, on horseback.

Bernard, Duke of Weimar, on horseback.

DEGL' AVANZI. See DEGLI AVANZI.

DE GLEN, JAN, was a printer and wood-engraver, who was born in the middle of the 16th century. He cut the blocks for the portraits of the Popes in the 'Vitæ Romanorum Pontificum' of his brother J. B. De Glen, which was printed in 1597; and also prepared, from his own designs, the cuts to a work published at Liège in 1601, entitled 'Des Habits, Mœurs, Cérémonies et Façons de faire anciennes et modernes,' and to 'Les Merveilles de la Ville de Rome' (Liège, 1631), and 'Europa, sive Primarium Europæ Provinciarum Ritibus, Cæremoniis et Vestibus.' He was still living in 1631.

DEGLER, FRANZ, an Austrian historical and portrait painter, was born at Klausen in the Tyrol in 1705. Among his works may be mentioned the portraits of the Emperor Charles VII. and his Empress, and of other high personages who were at Frankfort-on-the-Main at the time of their coronation, and the ten pictures of the Passion painted for the Capuchin church in that city, where he died in 1736.

DEGLER, JOHANN, an Austrian painter, was born at Lazfons in the Tyrol about the year 1800. He was a pupil of Denifle, and had already given evidence of the possession of great talent when he died at Brixen in 1829. In the Ferdinandeum at Innsbruck there are by him two pictures, and a chalk drawing of the 'Raising of Lazarus.'

DEGLI AFFLITTI, NUNZIO. See FERRAJUOLI.

DEGLI AMBROSI, MARCO, commonly called MELOZZO DA FORLÌ, was born at Forlì in 1438. He is said to have been first instructed by Ansovino of Forlì, who assisted Mantegna in several works, but he afterwards adopted much of the style of Piero della Francesca and Giovanni Santi of Urbino. Such was his desire of learning the best principles of the art, that, though of a noble and affluent family, he submitted to the menial duties of a domestic servant and colour-grinder to some of the principal painters of his time. To this venerable artist is attributed the first invention of foreshortening, which was afterwards carried to such perfection by Correggio. In the study of perspective, considerable progress had been made by Piero della Francesca, since its alleged invention by Paolo Uccello, the Florentine; but the merit of first painting figures in perspective, on vaults and ceilings, by which the illusion is rendered completely effective, was reserved for Melozzo. He was patronized by the Count Girolamo Riario, with whom he visited Rome in 1472, and painted the tribune of SS. Apostoli with the 'Ascension' in fresco, the perspective of which was of surprising effect. In 1711, when the chapel was taken down and rebuilt, the greater part of this painting disappeared, but the figure of Christ is still preserved in the Quirinal. Melozzo was a member of the Academy of St. Luke at Rome. He died at Forlì in 1494. Other paintings by him are:

London.	Nat. Gall.	Two Allegorical Figures: Rhetoric, and Music.
Paris.	Louvre.	Fourteen Portraits, painted for the Duke of Urbino. (Ascribed also to Justus van Ghent.)
Rome.	Barberini Palace.	Fourteen Portraits belonging to the same series as those in the Louvre.
"	Vatican.	Sixtus IV. giving the custody of the Vatican Library to Platina.

DEGLI ANTONJ, ANTONELLO. See ANTONIO.

DEGLI AVANZI, JACOPO, a Bolognese painter of the later years of the 14th century, is chiefly known by a 'Crucifixion,' in the Colonna Gallery at Rome. There are three pictures in the Bologna Gallery also by this master. He painted, in conjunction with artists of no great importance, frescoes in the church of the Madonna di Mezzarata, near Bologna, which Malvasia says were praised by Michelangelo and the Carracci; they have, however, been whitewashed and afterwards restored, and only fragments of them remain. Vasari says they were completed in 1404.

DEGLI AVANZI, SIMONE. See BOLOGNA.

DEGLI INNOCENTI, BATTISTA. See NALDINI.

DEGLI STEFANI, TOMMASO. Dominici, in his 'Lives of the Neapolitan Painters,' attempts to prove that the art was practised at Naples by this master before the time of Cimabue, and that it had, at that early period, reached a more improved state at Naples than it had at Florence. Whatever may be allowed for the partiality with which the Italian writers speak of their particular countrymen, Dominici appears to have established the authenticity of his statement. This venerable artist was born at Naples in 1231. He grounded himself upon the remains of Grecian art which had been preserved in the temples and public edifices at Naples, and had painted several pictures for the churches of San Francesco and Santa Maria delle Grazie previous to the year 1260, at which time he was employed by the Archbishop of Naples to ornament the chapel of his palace. Several other works by him are particularly described by Dominici. He died in 1310. He had a brother, PIETRO DEGLI STEFANI, who also was a painter, but was more celebrated as a sculptor.

DE GRAEF, TIMOTHEUS, was a Dutch landscape painter, who flourished at the close of the 17th century. The dates of his birth and death are not recorded; but Jacob Appel, of Amsterdam, was his pupil. The Sale Catalogues of Hoet and Terwesten mention many of his pictures, particularly landscapes and views in the vicinity of Amsterdam.

DE GREBBER, FRANS PIETERSZ, was born at Haarlem in 1579; he was a scholar of Roland Savery, and obtained honourable mention as an artist. He also made copies of his master's works, and those of Velvet Brueghel. He died in 1649.

DE GREBBER, PIETER FRANZ, a Dutch painter, was born at Haarlem in 1600. He was the son of Frans Pietersz De Grebber, who instructed him in the elements of design; but he afterwards became a scholar of Hendrik Goltzius. He died after 1665. He chiefly painted easel pictures, of which there are many in the collections in Holland. The Museum at Haarlem has, amongst others, 'The Emperor Barbarossa' and 'The Patriarch of Haarlem,' which are quite in Rubens's style; also 'Jacob's Sons bringing to him Joseph's Coat.' The Dresden Gallery also contains examples of his art. He has also left several engravings, and an etching in Rembrandt's style of 'Christ and the Woman of Samaria.' He had a sister, MARIA DE GREBBER, who excelled in painting perspective and architectural views.

DE GROOS, GERHARD and GEORG, probably two brothers, were working together as engravers at Prague about the year 1647. They produced a large number of portraits and pictures of Saints.

DE GROOT, JAN, a painter and engraver in mezzotint, was born at Flushing in 1650. He was first instructed by Adriaan Verdoel, and after 1666 by Adriaan van Ostade. The date of his death is not recorded. Some of his plates are marked J. G. fec. or I. G. inc. The best of those in mezzotint are:

Portrait of Desiderius Erasmus; after Holbein.
Boy singing, with a cup of wine; after Van Dyck.

DE HAAN, DAVID, was born at Rotterdam in 1602. He studied in Italy, and became a good historical painter, excelling especially in battle-pieces. He also painted game with great truthfulness to nature. He died at Rome in 1659.

DE HAAS, WILLIAM FREDERICK, who was born at Rotterdam in 1830, studied in the Academy of his native city, and at the Hague under Johannes Bosboom. He went in 1854 to New York, where he became known as a painter of coast scenery. He died at Fayal in 1880. The following are some of his best works:

Sunrise on the Susquehanna. 1867.

Fishing Boats off Mount Desert. 1874.

Midsummer Noon, Bideford Beach, Coast of Maine. 1875.

Narragansett Pier. 1877.

DE HAEN, ABRAHAM, a Dutch painter, born at Amsterdam in 1710, was a disciple of Cornelis Pronk. He painted portraits and architectural subjects, and a picture of 'Game' by him is in the Gallery at Christiania. He died in 1750.

DE HANGEST, EGBERT MARINUS FREDERIK, (or D'HANGEST,) an amateur painter, was born at Utrecht in 1746. While studying the law he took lessons in painting of Versteegh. After finishing his legal studies, he set out on his travels as an artist, painting landscapes in the manner of Zaftleven; views on the Rhine, and rocky scenery; landscapes, with lakes and rivers; and sunsets and moonlights, in which he was very successful. His pencilling is vigorous and free, and his pictures would not discredit a professional artist. He died in 1810.

DE HEEM, CORNELIS, the son and scholar of Jan Davidsz De Heem, was born at Utrecht in 1630. Like his father he painted still-life, but his productions are inferior. He died at the Hague after 1692.

DE HEEM, DAVID, who was born at Utrecht in 1570, was an excellent painter of fruit, flowers, plate, crystal vessels, and other objects of still-life. There is a 'Group of Flowers' by him in the Museum at Brussels. He died at Utrecht in 1632.

DE HEEM, DAVID DAVIDSZ, a son and pupil of David De Heem, was a fruit painter of Utrecht in the 17th century. A picture by him, dated 1668, is in the gallery of that city, and one dated 1649 is at Amsterdam.

DE HEEM, JAN, a supposed nephew of David De Heem, is stated to have been born at Amsterdam in 1603. He studied under his uncle and followed his manner exactly. There is a picture of still-life ascribed to him in the Museum at Amsterdam. His death is set down in 1650. There is, however, some confusion between this artist and Jan Davidsz De Heem, to whom the catalogues of Berlin, Brunswick, Munich, and Vienna assign the pictures marked J. De Heem.

DE HEEM, JAN DAVIDSZ, was born at Utrecht after 1600. He was the son of David De Heem, the flower painter, by whom he was instructed. His pictures bear date from 1640 to 1669, and represent fruit, flowers, vases and ornaments of gold and silver, musical instruments, and similar objects of still-life. He was a perfect master of chiaroscuro. He particularly excelled in imitating the transparent clearness of glass and crystal, which he was fond of introducing into his pictures. His paintings were so superior to those of every artist that had preceded him, in similar subjects, that they were anxiously sought after by the most distinguished persons of his time, and were purchased at large prices. They are still held in high estimation. Being obliged to leave Utrecht during the troubles which took place in Holland in 1671, he took refuge at Antwerp, where he died in 1674.

DE HEERE, LUCAS, a Flemish historical and portrait painter, who was born at Ghent in 1534, was the son of Jan De Heere, a sculptor and architect, and of Anna De Smytere, an excellent painter of miniatures. He studied for some time under his parents, and afterwards under Frans Floris at Antwerp. On leaving the studio of the latter he went to France, and was employed at Fontainebleau by the Queen-Mother, Catharine de' Medici, in making designs for tapestries for the royal residences. The time of his first visit to England is uncertain, but he must have been here in 1554, when he painted the fine portrait of Queen Mary which is in the collection of the Society of Antiquaries. On his return to Ghent he painted, among other portraits, that of a wealthy young Protestant lady, named Eleonora Carboniers, the daughter of the burgomaster of Vere, in Zealand. Her beauty and learning captivated the painter, but it was only after great perseverance that he won her as his wife. To her he addressed many amorous verses, for Lucas De Heere was a poet as well as a painter, and these he published in 1565, under the title, 'Den Hof en de Boomgaard der Poë sien.' His marriage led to a change in his religion, and when the Duke of Alva arrived in the Netherlands in 1567, and Ghent was occupied by a Spanish garrison, the adherents of the new faith had to flee from their homes. De Heere fled to England, and appears to have remained here until 1577, when the edict known as the Pacification of Ghent enabled him to return to his native city. During this second visit he painted, in 1569, the remarkable allegorical portrait of Queen Elizabeth, with Juno, Venus, and Pallas apparently fleeing before her, which is now at Hampton Court. Other fine examples of his art which exist in England are the portraits of Lord Darnley and his brother, Charles Stuart, dated 1563, also at Hampton Court, and the small full-length portrait of Queen Elizabeth, in the possession of the Duke of Portland, one of his most charming works. His abilities as an historical painter are best represented by a 'Crucifixion,' painted by him in 1565 for the church of the village of Saint-Paul, in the Pays de Waes. This altar-piece fully justifies the renown which his portraits have gained for him in England. Besides his paintings in oil, he completed, in 1576, a large collection of water-colour drawings of costumes, which he entitled 'Théâtre de tous les Peuples et Nations de la Terre.' This valuable work is now among the archives of Ghent. He also translated into Flemish verse the Psalms of David, and wrote, or at least began to write, the lives of the Flemish painters, in rhyme. Lucas De Heere died in 1584 in Paris, where he had taken refuge after the assassination of William the Taciturn. R.E.G.

DE HEUR, CORNELIS JOSEPH, (or D'HEUR,) a Flemish painter of historical subjects and interiors, was born at Antwerp in 1707. He studied successively under Gaspard van Opstal the younger, J. J. Hormans the elder, and Peeter Snyers. In 1730, he went to Paris, and on his return to Antwerp became one of the directors of the Academy. He died in 1762 at Antwerp, where there are in the Museum several works by him in grisaille.

DE HEUSCH, ABRAHAM, was born at Utrecht in 1650, and was probably related to Jakob and Willem De Heusch. He excelled in painting plants, insects, and reptiles; which he designed and executed with surprising patience and labour. His pictures of that description are not inferior, in the delicate polish of their finishing, to the highly-wrought productions of Gerard Dou or Mieris. There are a few etchings of landscapes by Abraham De Heusch, from his own designs.

DE HEUSCH, JAKOB, called AFFDRUCK, the nephew of Willem De Heusch, was born at Utrecht in 1657. He was instructed in art by his uncle, and acquired his surname from his faithful imitation of his uncle's style. Having made considerable progress, he was recommended to visit Italy, where he passed several years. He met with very flattering encouragement at Rome, his pictures being much admired. He particularly attached himself to the study of the works of Salvator Rosa, whose picturesque style he imitated with considerable success. His pictures represent the most select views in the environs of Rome, enriched with groups of charming figures, correctly drawn and vigorously touched. We have a few etchings by him of landscapes, from his own designs, executed in a neat but slight style. He died at Amsterdam in 1701.

DE HEUSCH, WILLEM, was born at Utrecht in 1638. In 1656, or 1659, he was in Italy as a pupil of Jan Both, whose style he copied. He died at Utrecht in 1712. One of his landscapes in the Louvre is very finely executed, but a better specimen of his art is in the Belvedere at Vienna, a 'Landscape at Sunset.' Landscapes from his brush are in the galleries of Stockholm, Copenhagen, Frankfort, Brunswick, Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and the Hague. He also engraved several Landscapes, which have become very rare.

DEHNE, J. C., was a German engraver, who flourished in the first half of the 18th century. He engraved several portraits for the work entitled 'Icones Bibliopolarum et Typographorum,' published at Nuremberg in 1726-42. We have also by him a great number of plates, representing, in the most ludicrous manner, the gods and heroes of antiquity.

DEHODENCQ, EDMÉ ALEXIS ALFRED, a French genre painter, was born in Paris in 1822. He was a pupil of Léon Cogniet, and first attracted notice by his picture of 'St. Cecilia' at the Salon of 1844. He travelled much in Spain and Northern Africa, and from these countries derived many of his subjects, which are painted with great truthfulness and richness of colour. He died in 1882. Among his best works are:

Virginia found dead on the sea-shore. 1849.
A Spanish Bull-Fight. 1850. (Lucembourg Gallery.)
The Arrest of Charlotte Corday. 1868.
Othello. 1873.
A Moorish Story-Teller. 1877.

DE HOEY, JAN, (or DE HOOY,) a Dutch painter, was born at Leyden in 1545. Van Mander says that he was a grandson of Lucas van Leyden and brother of Lucas Damissen, under whom he studied painting. He travelled in Italy and France, and made himself so acceptable at the court of Henry IV. that he was appointed keeper of the royal collections. He died at Fontainebleau in 1615. LUCAS DE HOEY, or DAMISSEN, his brother, who was born at Leyden in 1533, resided at Utrecht, and died there in 1604. CLAUDE DE HOEY, or DOUÉ, the son of Jan, who was also a painter, died in 1660. He had the care of the pictures at Fontainebleau from the time of his father's death until 1635, when he resigned in favour of his nephew, Jean Dubois.

DE HOND, (or DE HONDT.) See HOND.

DE HONDECOETER, MELCHIOR, (or D'HONDECOETER, as he invariably signed his name,) a member of a noble family of Brabant, was born at Utrecht in 1636. He first studied under his father, Gysbert D'Hondecoeter, and then with his uncle, Jan Baptista Weenix, and became famous for his pictures of birds of rare plumage, live fowl, game, and similar subjects. In this branch of art he stands unrivalled. He also painted a few marine pieces, and engraved a few prints.

From 1659 to 1663 he is mentioned in the 'Pictura' Society of the Hague. He then removed (in what year is not known) to Amsterdam, where he received the rights of citizenship in 1688, and where he died in 1695. His works are frequently met with in public galleries; the following are some of the principal:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Dead Birds.
"	"	Animals and Plants.
"	"	The Philosophical Magpie.
"	"	The Menagerie.
"	"	The Floating Feather.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Foreign Water-fowl in a Park.

"	Liechtenstein Collection.	Poultry.

DE HONT, H., (or DE HONDT,) is said to have been a scholar of David Teniers. His pictures represent similar scenes to those of that master, and sometimes approach very closely to his manner.

DE HOOCH, PIETER, was born at Rotterdam, probably in 1632. His style was formed from a study of the works of Karel Fabritius and of Rembrandt. He worked at Delft and at Haarlem, where he died, it is said, in 1681. He painted interiors and portraits; and his works are distinguished for their brilliant effects of light, and admirable colour. His name has been written in a variety of ways—De Hooche, Hoogh, Hooghe, and Hooge. Out of Holland, De Hooch's paintings are extremely scarce; and even in that country they are among the rarest art-treasures in the public and private galleries. The following are the principal:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Portrait of Himself at the age of 19.
"	"	The Buttery-hatch.
"	Van der Hoop Coll.	Morning Toilet.
"	Stw Coll.	The Linen-Press.
Berlin.	Gallery.	A Dutch Interior.

"	"	The Lace-maker.
Vienna.	Czermin Coll.	A Painter in his Studio.

DE HOOGE, ROMEYN, a Dutch designer and engraver, born at the Hague about the year 1646, was a nephew of Pieter De Hooch. Several of his compositions show him to have been a man of great genius and readiness of invention. Few artists have handled the point with more spirit and facility than Romeyn De Hooghe, and his small figures and distances are executed with great delicacy and neatness. His foregrounds and principal figures are less happy, and there is a want of harmony in the effect, and in the management of the chiaroscuro. He founded a school of design at Haarlem, where he died in 1708. The number of his prints is very considerable, but the following are the principal:

The Portrait of Michael Adriaensz De Ruyter, Admiral-General of Holland; very fine.
 An Allegorical Subject, in honour of Leopold II.
 Another, in honour of William, Prince of Orange.
 The Marriage of William, Prince of Orange, with the Princess Mary of England.
 The Entry of the Prince of Orange into London.
 The Coronation of William and Mary.
 The Army of William III. in order of battle, on the banks of the Boyne; with medallions of King William and Queen Mary.
 The Siege of Vienna by the Turks. 1683.
 The Triumphal Entry of John III., King of Poland, into Warsaw, after raising the siege of Vienna.
 Constantinople taken by the Turks.
 A set of plates representing the Excesses committed by the French in Holland. 1672, 1673.
 The Deluge of Coerverden.
 The Massacre of the two De Witts. 1672.

DE HULST, FRANS, a Dutch landscape painter, was admitted in 1631 into the Guild of St. Luke at Haarlem, where he died in 1661. There is by him in the Berlin Gallery a view of a town in Holland. He painted in the style of Ruysdael and Van Goyen, but his works are seldom met with.

DEI, MATTEO DI GIOVANNI, was one of the most celebrated of the goldsmiths and workers in niello who flourished at Florence in the middle of the 15th century. He executed in 1455 for the church of San Giovanni a pax which represented the 'Crucifixion of Our Lord.' He also engraved for a pax for the confraternity of St. Paul a silver plate, representing the 'Conversion of St. Paul,' which is preserved in the Florence Gallery. It has never been filled in with enamel, and modern impressions have been taken from it.

DEI BUONI, BUONO, was born at Naples, and, according to Dominici, flourished about the year 1430. He was a disciple of an old Neapolitan painter called Colantonio del Fiore, whom he assisted in several of his works, and after whose death he became one of the most reputable artists of his time. There are many of his works in the churches at Naples; one of the most esteemed is a painting in the church of the Restituta representing 'St. Francis receiving the Stigmata.' He died about the year 1465.

DEI BUONI, SILVESTRO, the son of Buono de' Buoni, was born at Naples about the year 1420. After studying for some time under his father, he had the advantage of being instructed by Antonio Solario. Under that master he became an eminent painter of historical subjects, and was employed in some considerable works for the churches and public edifices of Naples. He died about 1480. The following are his best works:

Naples.	S. Caterina.	Christ appearing after his Resurrection.
"	S. Restituta.	Virgin and Child, with SS. Restituta and Michael.
"	S. Pietro Martire.	Death of the Virgin.
"	"	Virgin and Child between two Saints.
"	Monte Oliveto.	Ascension.

DEI CONTI, BERNARDINO, an Italian painter, is said to have been born at Pavia in the latter part of the 15th century. He died in 1525. He was a follower of Zenale, but little is known of his life or works. The following paintings, however, are preserved:

Bergamo.	Lochis-Carrara Gallery.	Madonna and Child (signed). 1501.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Profile of a Prelate. 1499.

DEI CROCIFISSI, SIMONE. See BOLOGNA.

DEI FASOLI, LORENZO. See FASOLO.

DEI FERRARI, GIOVANNI ANDREA, was born at Genoa in 1598. He was first a scholar of Bernardo Castello, but he afterwards studied under Bernardo Strozzi. His principal historical works are his picture of 'Theodosius,' in the style of Castello, in the Jesuit church at Genoa; 'The Nativity,' in the cathedral of the same city; and in a church at Voltri, the 'Birth of the Virgin,' his most esteemed production, a composition of many figures; the two last pictures are in the style of Strozzi. He died at Genoa in 1669.

DEI FERRARI, GREGORIO, a Genoese painter, was born at Porto Maurizio in 1644. He was a disciple of Domenico Fiasella, called Il Sarzana, whose manner was not conformable to the genius of his scholar, which aimed at a style more grand and free. He went to Parma, where he studied with attention the works of Correggio, and made a faithful copy of the great cupola. He was also much employed at Turin and Marseilles. He died at Genoa in 1726. Of his works the most esteemed are his 'St. Michael,' in the Madonna delle Vigne at Genoa, and his 'Apollo and the Muses' and 'Plato and Aristotle' in the University. The Palazzo Balbi, also in the same city, contains some pictures by him.

DEI FERRARI, LORENZO, the son of Gregorio de' Ferrari, was born at Genoa in 1680. He was instructed by his father, and, like him, he imitated the grace and suavity of Correggio. He assisted his father in some of his works, but surpassed him in foreshortening and correctness of drawing. He excelled in painting in fresco, but he also painted many pictures in oil for churches. In his works in the Doria Palace, he has emulated the vigour of the Carloni, and is little inferior to them. In the Carega Palace is a gallery of subjects from the Aeneid, which were his last works. He died at Genoa in 1744.

DEI FERRARI, ORAZIO, was born at Voltri in 1606, and was a scholar of Andrea Ansaldi, under whom he became an able painter of historical subjects in oil and fresco. His merit recommended him to the patronage of the Prince of Monaco, who employed him for some years. His 'Last Supper,' in the Oratory of the church of San Siro at Genoa, is alone sufficient to establish his reputation. This artist was high in the public esteem when Genoa was visited in 1657 by the plague, which carried off a great number of the inhabitants, with this painter and all his family.

DEI FIORI, GASPARO. See LOPEZ.

DEI FIORI, MARIO. See NUZZI.

DEI FRANCESCHI, DOMENICO, who flourished at Venice in the latter half of the 16th century, was a type-cutter and printseller. The following two excellent prints are by him:

The Procession of Corpus Christi at Venice. 1565.

The Parade of the Emperor Solyman I. at Constantinople. 1565. A very rare plate.

DEI FRANCESCHI, PIETRO DI BENEDETTO, called PIERO DELLA FRANCESCA, and also PIERO BORGHESE, was born at Borgo San Sepolcro in Umbria about the year 1416. It is not known by whom he was instructed in the art of painting, but in 1438 he made the acquaintance of Domenico Veneziano, and was employed by him on the frescoes of Sant' Egidio at Florence, which were executed between the years 1439 and 1450. He was a complete master of linear perspective and thoroughly understood all its laws, as also the true art of projecting shadows, and thus giving an additional charm to his pictures. The majority of his pictures were painted in oil, then a comparatively new medium for colours, and he carried out many improvements in the usage of this vehicle. Between the years 1447 and 1452 it is thought that both Domenico and Piero were at Loretto, where the ceiling of the sacristy was commenced by them; and it was probably at about this period that Piero left Domenico and went to Rome, where, in conjunction with Bramantino, he painted two frescoes in the Vatican by order of Pope Nicholas V. These frescoes were afterwards removed by command of Julius II. in order to make room for Raphael's frescoes of the 'Deliverance of St. Peter from Prison,' and the 'Mass of Bolsena.' After 1451

Piero entered the service of Sigismondo Pandolfo Malatesta, Duke of Rimini, and adorned for him the chapel of the Relic in the church of San Francesco with a picture representing 'Malatesta kneeling before the enthroned St. Sigismund of Burgundy.' Soon afterwards he commenced the cycle of frescoes illustrating the Legend of the Cross in the church of San Francesco at Arezzo. This immense series commences with the Death and Burial of Adam, and follows the legend up to the Finding of the Cross by St. Helena. They are wonderful alike by the reality of their effects of light and shade, and their harmony of colour. They were finished about 1454, when he painted for the Compagnia della Misericordia the altarpiece of the 'Virgin of Mercy,' with Saints and scenes from the Passion, now in the Hospital at Borgo San Sepolcro. Whilst in his native city he executed many commissions for altarpieces and banners, some of which still remain in its gallery and churches. From there he went to Urbino, where in 1469 he entered the service of the Duke Federigo, and also made the acquaintance of Giovanni Santi, the father of Raphael. He painted for the duke a 'Flagellation,' which is preserved in the sacristy of the cathedral, and an 'Apotheosis' containing the portraits of Federigo da Montefeltro, and Batista Sforza, his wife. The last-mentioned picture is now in the Gallery of the Uffizi at Florence. An 'Assumption of the Virgin,' which was probably painted by Piero at this period, can be seen in the church of Santa Chiara at Urbino. He is also known to have gone to Ferrara, where he was employed by Duke Borso in the decorations of his palace called "Schifanoja," which means "Be gone, dull care." The frescoes executed there by Piero have been destroyed, but the remains of others have been recovered, which clearly indicate the great influence possessed by this artist over other painters of his time. The statement that he became blind in 1458 is clearly incorrect, for he was still working in 1478, and it is probable that age alone at last incapacitated him from further work. Piero della Francesca died at Borgo San Sepolcro in 1492. Luca Signorelli, Bartolommeo della Gatta, and Perugino were among his pupils. He wrote a treatise on Perspective, of which there are copies in the Vatican Library and in the Ambrosian Library at Milan. Amongst his paintings may be mentioned:

Arezzo. S. Francesco.	The Legend of the Holy Cross, with the Vision of Constantine.
London. Nat. Gall.	Portrait, supposed to be that of Isotta da Rimini. (Doubtful.)
" "	The Baptism of Christ.
" "	Portrait, said to be that of the Contessa Palma.
" "	The Nativity.
Perugia. Academy.	Virgin and Child enthroned, with Saints.
Rimini. S. Francesco.	St. Sigismund.
Urbino. Cathedral.	The Flagellation.
Venice. Academy.	St. Jerome in the Desert.

DEI GIANNUZZI, GIULIO, often called GIULIO PIPPI, but more commonly GIULIO ROMANO, was born at Rome in 1492. He was apprenticed to Raphael when quite young, and assisted him in the Vatican; and he is generally considered Raphael's best pupil. He copied several of his master's Madonnas, and executed some few from his designs. While in Rome he painted mythical frescoes in the Villa Lanti, the Villa Madama, the Farnese Palace, and the church of Santa Trinità de' Monti. By his will, Raphael bequeathed his implements and works of art to his joint-executors, Giulio Romano and Gianfrancesco Penni, and entrusted to them the completion of his unfinished frescoes in the Sala di Costantino in the Vatican. In 1524 Giulio went to Mantua and entered the service of Duke Federigo Gonzaga. He was there architect for the Palazzo del Tè, and, assisted by numerous pupils (of whom the chief were Benedetto Pagni, Rinaldo Mantuano, and Primaticcio), decorated the interior with frescoes representing the 'Defeat of the Giants,' his greatest work, and with scenes from the 'History of Cupid and Psyche.' He also painted at Mantua, in the Ducal Palace, frescoes representing 'Diana hunting,' and the 'History of the Trojan War,' as well as frescoes in the cathedral and other churches. Those in the cathedral, however, he was not able to complete, for having accepted the post of architect to St. Peter's at Rome, in succession to San Gallo, he was about to set out for that city when he died at Mantua in 1546. Of his easel pictures the following are the most famous :

Dresden.	Gallery.	La Madonna del Catino.
Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
"	"	Madonna and Child.
"	"	Portrait of Cardinal Accolti.
"	Pitti Palace.	Dance of Apollo and the Muses.
"	"	The Virgin with the Lizard.
Genoa.	San Stefano.	Martyrdom of St. Stephen (one of his best works).
London.	Nat. Gallery.	The Infancy of Jupiter.
Naples.	Museum.	La Madonna della Gatta (a variation of Raphael's 'Perla').
Paris.	Louvre.	The Nativity.
"	"	The Holy Family.
"	"	Triumph of Titus and Vespasian.
"	"	Venus and Vulcan.
"	"	Portrait of a Man.
Rome.	S. Peter's (Sacristy).	Madonna.
"	S. Prassede (Sacristy).	The Flagellation.
"	S. Maria dell' Anima.	Madonna and Saints.
"	Borghese Pal.	Madonna and Child.
"	Colonna Pal.	Madonna and Child.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Allegory.
"	"	St. Margaret and the Dragon.

His son and pupil, RAFFAELLO PIPPI DE' GIANNUZZI, died in 1562, at the age of thirty.

DEI INGANNATI, PIERO. See BISSOLO.

DEI MEDICI, MARIA. See MARY.

DEI MICHELI, ANDREA, known as ANDREA VICENTINO, or simply VICENTINO, was born at Venice in 1539, and was a scholar of the elder Palma. He painted historical subjects in the style of his instructor, and was employed in several works, representing subjects from the history of the Republic, in the Sala del Gran Consiglio, in the Palace of St. Mark. He also painted easel pictures for private collections, of which there is one in the Florence Gallery, representing the 'Anointing of Solomon, King of Israel.' He died in 1614.

DEI MOTTI, JACOPO, was a Milanese painter in oil, in fresco, and on glass, who, between 1485 and 1490, painted several windows in the Certosa at Pavia, and in the succeeding years decorated with frescoes several of its chapels. He died at Milan in 1505.

CRISTOFORO DE' MOTTI also practised as a painter in fresco and on glass at Genoa, Milan, and Pavia, between the years 1468 and 1514.

DEI PAESI, GIROLAMO. See MUZIANO.

DEI PICCINELLI, RAFFAELLO and ANDREA, known as the BRESCIANINI of Siena, were the sons of a dancing-master at Siena, where they flourished from 1507 to 1525. They were the pupils of a Siennese painter, named Giovan Battista Giusi, and they together painted an altar-piece, representing the 'Virgin and Child, with Saints,' which is in the Siena Academy, and in 1524 the 'Baptism of Christ,' for the baptistery of the cathedral of the same city. In 1525 they went to Florence, and in the same year Andrea, and probably Raffaello also, was registered in the Painters' Guild. A 'Holy Family' by Andrea, who was the better artist of the two, is in the Uffizi Gallery at Florence, and another 'Holy Family,' ascribed to him, is in the Berlin Gallery. The beautiful altar-piece, a 'Holy Family,' of the church of Torre di Bibiano, long attributed to Baldassare Peruzzi, is also supposed to be by him. The brothers appear to have worked under the influence of Fra Bartolommeo. Raffaello died at Florence in 1545.

DEI RITRATTI, FRANCESCO. See NEGRI.

DEI ROSSI, BERNARDINO, who worked at Pavia, was one of the artists called to Milan in 1490 to decorate the Porta Giovia Palace of Lodovico Sforza. In the church of Santa Maria della Pusterla, Pavia, is a picture of the 'Virgin, with Saints and Donors,' signed and dated by him in 1491. Between the years 1498 and 1508 he decorated the Certosa of Pavia with wall paintings, of which the frescoes of the 'Eternal,' the 'Prophets,' and the 'Virgin Annunciate' still remain. In 1511 he executed some frescoes for the church at Vigano, belonging to the Carthusians of Pavia, which have now disappeared. No certain dates can be given of his birth or death.

DEI ROSSI, FRANCESCO, called IL CECCHINO DEL SALVIATI, or IL SALVIATI, (which appellation he acquired from the favour and protection he experienced from the cardinal of that name,) and also FRÄNZCHEN, was the son of Michelangelo de' Rossi, a weaver of velvets, and was born at Florence in 1510. He was a fellow-student with Giorgio Vasari, first under Andrea del Sarto, and afterwards under Baccio Bandinelli. The two young friends pursued their studies at Rome with the same intimacy, and in the church of Santa Maria della Pace Salviati painted the 'Annunciation' and 'Christ speaking to St. Philip,' by which he gained considerable reputation. He also embellished the chapel of his patron, Cardinal Salviati, with a series of frescoes, representing the 'Life of St. John the Baptist.' He was employed by Pier Luigi Farnese to make designs for Flemish tapestries for his palace, in which he represented the 'History of Alexander.' In conjunction with Vasari he ornamented the apartments of the Cancelleria with several paintings in fresco. From Rome he went to Venice, where he painted several pictures for the public edifices and private collections, particularly the 'History of Psyche,' in a saloon of the Palazzo Grimaldi, which Vasari, with marked partiality for his fellow-countryman and co-disciple, calls the finest painting in all Venice. He afterwards visited Florence, and was employed by the Grand-Duke Cosmo to ornament one of the saloons of the Palazzo Vecchio, where he represented the 'Triumph and Exploits of Furius Camillus,' composed and painted with great genius and spirit, and with an accuracy in the delineation of the arms, habiliments, and costume of ancient Rome, which is worthy of the most learned antiquary.

The restless and unsettled disposition of Salviati did not permit him to reside long in one place, and he readily complied with the invitation of the Cardinal de Lorraine to accompany him to France, where Francis I. had engaged some of the ablest artists of Italy in the decoration of the palace of Fontainebleau. He was received with distinction, and was treated with great kindness by Primaticcio, the superintendent of the works; but the jealousy and turbulence of his nature returned these good offices with ingratitude and malevolence. During his stay in France he painted for the church of the Celestines at Paris a fine picture, representing the 'Taking down from the Cross.' The 'Incredulity of St. Thomas,' by him, is now in the Louvre. Dissatisfied with his situation in France, he returned to Rome, where he fell into new difficulties and disputes with Daniele da Volterra and Pietro Ligorio. The continual agitation of his mind brought on a fever, of which he died, at Florence, in 1563.

DEI ROSSI, GIOVAMBATTISTA, called IL ROSSO, and in France MAÎTRE ROUX, was born at Florence in 1494. Although he was not a disciple of Andrea del Sarto, he was at first an admirer of his manner, and afterwards improved his powers by studying the works of Michelangelo and Parmigiano. Endowed with a ready and inventive genius, he scorned to be the servile imitator even of Buonarroti, and at an early age he ventured to compete with the ablest of his contemporaries in the cloister of the Annunziata, where he painted a large fresco of the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in which he displayed both originality and taste. After painting several other pictures for the churches at Florence, particularly the 'Marriage of the Virgin,' in San Lorenzo, he went to Rome, where his talents were already known. There, among other works, he painted an altar-piece for Santa Maria della Pace; and had acquired considerable celebrity when Rome was taken and plundered in 1527. Rosso was taken prisoner by the Germans, and very badly treated, but he at length escaped, and took refuge at Volterra, where he painted for the cathedral a fine picture of the 'Deposition from the Cross.' He afterwards went to Venice, but not meeting with the success he expected in Italy, he resolved, about 1530, on visiting the court of Francis I. of France, who was at that time the great encourager of art. He was very favourably received by that monarch, who immediately engaged him in his service, and appointed him superintendent of the great works upon which he was then engaged at the palace of Fontainebleau. As Rosso was not less eminent as an architect than as a painter, he undertook the building of the great gallery in that palace, which was executed from his design, and which he decorated with several paintings and with ornaments in stucco, some of which were afterwards destroyed by his rival and competitor, Primaticcio, to make way for his own works. Thirteen frescoes, allusive to the life of Francis I., still remain, but have been restored by MM. Couder and Alaux.

The style of Rosso, though singular, is grand. He displayed a dignity of character, a lively expression in his heads, a tasteful arrangement of his draperies, an effective management of his light and shadow, and a daring execution; though these excellences were accompanied by a wildness and extravagance, too frequently attached to a fertile and exuberant imagination. This able artist was well versed in literature, and had a taste for poetry and music. His conversation was agreeable, and his manners polished. The possession of such accomplishments secured him the regard and good graces of Francis I. He was in the full possession of royal favour, and of the public estimation, when he sacrificed these advantages to a mean and unfounded suspicion. He had contracted a friendship with Francesco Pellegrini, a Florentine painter, who was in the habit of visiting him frequently, when his house was robbed of a considerable sum. He rashly suspected Pellegrini to be the robber, and brought a formal accusation against him. Pellegrini was in consequence of the charge put to the torture, and, after suffering the most horrible torments, was declared innocent. The remorse of having so unjustly exposed an innocent person to so dreadful a trial, preyed upon his mind, and he put an end to his existence by poison, at Fontainebleau, in 1541. The principal works of Rosso which exist are as follow:

Berlin	Gallery.	The Four Seasons.
Città di Castello.	Cathedral.	The Transfiguration.
Florence.	SS. Annunziata.	The Assumption of the Virgin (fresco).
"	S. Lorenzo.	The Marriage of the Virgin.
"	Pitti Palace.	The Virgin enthroned, with St. Sebastian, St. Mary Magdalen, and other Saints.
"	Uffizi.	Moses driving away the Madianite Shepherds.
"	"	The Virgin enthroned, with the Infant Jesus, and SS. Jerome and Francis.
Fontainebleau.	Palace.	Francis I. crowned by Victory. A Sacrifice and Thanksgiving for the King.
"	"	Jupiter and Europa.
"	"	Neptune and Amphitrite.
"	"	Alexander cutting the Gordian Knot.
"	"	Francis I. in Roman costume, holding a grenade.
"	"	The Burning of Troy.
"	"	A Hurricane, in allusion to the Battle of Pavia.
"	"	The Triumph of Venus.
"	"	Chiron and Achilles.
"	"	Æsculapius at Rome.
"	"	Cupid and Psyche.
"	"	The Battle of the Lapithæ and the Centaurs.
Paris.	Louvre.	A Pietà.
"	"	The Challenge of the Pierides.
"	"	Mars and Venus (pen-and-ink drawing).
"	"	Design for a Coffin (pen-and-ink drawing).
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	The Virgin and Child, with St. John the Baptist.
"	"	The Madonna in glory.

DEI ROTARI, Conte PIETRO, who was of a noble family of Verona, was born in 1707. For some time he merely practised painting as an amusement, but his progress was so flattering, that he at length resolved to adopt it as a profession, and he became a scholar of Antonio Balestra, under whom he studied until he was eighteen years of age. He afterwards visited Venice, where he passed two years in studying the works of the best masters of that distinguished school of colouring. In 1727 he went to Rome, where he entered the school of Francesco Trevisani, and spent four years in studying the great works of art in that city. By the advantages of travel, and an assiduous application to his pursuit, he became a correct and graceful designer, and joined to the expressive airs of his heads an elegance of contour, and a tasteful disposition of his draperies, in which he was not surpassed by any artist of his time. His principal works in Italy are his picture of the 'Annunciation,' at Guastalla; and the 'Birth of the Virgin,' in the church of San Giovanni, at Padua. He afterwards visited the courts of Vienna and Dresden, where he met with the most flattering encouragement; and in 1756 was invited to St. Petersburg by the Empress of Russia, who appointed him her principal painter, in which capacity he died, in 1762. We have several slight but spirited etchings by this artist, some of which are from his own compositions, and others after the works of Balestra. Among them are the following:

The Portrait of Filippo Baldinucci. 1726.
St. Francis kneeling before a Crucifix; from his own design.
The Education of the Virgin; the same.
Abraham and the Angels; after A. Balestra.
David with the Head of Goliath; after the same.
St. Jerome; half-length; after the same.
Venus and Aeneas; after the same.

DEI SALVIATI, IL CECCHINO. See DEI ROSSI, FRANCESCO.

DEI SERAFINI, SERAFINO, who was living in Modena in the 14th century, is known by a 'Coronation of the Virgin' and other subjects in the cathedral of that city. It bears the inscription "Seraphinus de Seraphinis pinxit 1385 die Jovis x.x.l.l.l. Marci." Although there is but little recorded of this artist, we may conclude that he was probably of some importance in his time, from the following inscription in a chapel, not named, painted by him:

Mille trecento con septanta sei
Erano corso gli anni del Signore
E'l quarto entrava quando a so honore
Questa Capella al nobel fin minei.
Et io, che tutta in si la storiei
Fui Serafin da Mutina Pittore.

DEI SERVI, CONSTANTINO, was an architect and painter who was living at Florence at the beginning of the 17th century. After studying awhile under Santi di Tito, he went to Germany, where he painted in the manner of Pourbus. His Florentine mosaics earned him much renown, and he also worked as an architect and engineer for the Shah of Persia, the Prince of Wales, and the Emperor Rudolph II. He died in 1622.

DEI VECCHI, GIOVANNI, was born at Borgo San Sepolero about the year 1536. He went to Rome when he was young, where he first became a disciple of Raffaellino dal Colle, but he afterwards studied under Taddeo Zuccheri, who was at that time employed by Cardinal Alessandro Farnese in the embellishment of his palace of Caprarola, where, in conjunction with his instructor, he executed several considerable works. There are many of his pictures in the churches at Rome, of which a particular description is given by Baglione. In San Lorenzo in Damaso is one of his most esteemed productions, representing the 'Martyrdom of St. Lawrence'; in the cupola of the Chiesa del Gesù is a fresco of the 'Four Doctors of the Church'; and in Santa Maria in Araceli are several pictures from the life of St. Jerome. He died at Rome in 1614.

DEI ZAGANELLI, FRANCESCO, called FRANCESCO DA COTIGNOLA, was born in the latter part of the 15th century at Cotignola, in the Duchy of Ferrara. He afterwards lived at Ravenna, and learned his art under Rondinello. At the Brera, Milan, is a 'Virgin and Child, between SS. Francis and Nicholas, and a kneeling patron,' signed by him in 1505; another similar subject, in which his brother Bernardino is said to have assisted him, is in the same gallery. In 1509 he painted the 'Infant Christ,' now in the Dublin National Gallery. The Costabili Collection, in Ferrara, possesses a 'St. Sebastian,' painted in 1513; and of about that time is the altar-piece now in the gallery of Forli, representing the 'Eternal in Glory, adored by the Saints on earth.' His celebrated picture of the 'Resurrection,' at Classe, and his esteemed work of the 'Baptism of Christ,' at Faenza, are productions that do honour to his country. He also painted, in 1518, an admirable picture of the 'Madonna surrounded by Saints,' at the Osservanti at Parma, in which he was assisted by his brother Bernardino, who was an artist of considerable ability. Others of his most important works are the 'Virgin and Child, with SS. John the Baptist, John the Evangelist, and Bernardino'; and the two portraits of the Pallavicini family, painted in 1518, in the church of the Nunziata, outside the Porta Nuova of Parma. Signor Federico Mylius, of Genoa, possesses a bust of the Saviour executed by Francesco and his brother Bernardino. Of the latter's own work only a single example is known, viz., a 'St. Sebastian,' belonging to Signor Frizzoni, of Bellaggio. Many other paintings by Francesco are to be met with in the galleries and churches of Ravenna. The date of his death is uncertain, but after 1518 all traces of him are lost.

DE JAGER, GERARD, a native of Dordrecht, flourished about 1646. He painted marine subjects, and particularly excelled in the representation of still water. He was still living in 1663.

DE JODE, ARNOLD, the son of Pieter De Jode, the younger, was born at Antwerp in 1638. He was instructed in engraving by his father, but he never rose above mediocrity. He worked in the Netherlands and in Spain, and was in England in 1666, the year of the great fire in London, and in 1667. His best prints are portraits, though they are but indifferent. Among other plates, the following are by him:

PORTRAITS.

Cardinal Pallavicini; after Titian.
Catharine Howard, Duchess of Lennox; after Van Dyck.
Sir Peter Lely; after Lely.
Alexander Browne; prefixed to his 'Ars Pictoria'; after Huysmans.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The Education of Cupid; after Correggio. 1667.
The Magdalen; oval; after Van Dyck.
The Infant Christ embracing St. John; after the same; inscribed Arnoldus de Jode, sculp. Londini, tempore incendii maximi.
A Landscape; after L. De Vadder. 1658.
Some other Landscapes; after Jacques Fouquières.

DE JODE, GERRIT, a Flemish engraver and printseller, appears to have been born at Antwerp in 1521. He was the head of a family greatly distinguished in the art of engraving. He executed several plates of historical and geographical subjects, in which his style appears to have been an imitation of that of Cornelis Cort. He died at Antwerp in 1591. The following are some of his principal prints:

A set of twenty-nine Portraits of the Popes. 1585.

A Roman Triumph, in twelve sheets; after M. Heemkerk.

The Crucifixion; a large print, in three sheets; after Michelangelo Buonarroti, but without the name of the painter.

St. Jerome in meditation; after Titian. 1565.

DE JODE, PIETER, 'the elder,' the son of Gerrit De Jode, was born at Antwerp in 1570. After being taught the rudiments of design by his father, he was instructed in engraving by Hendrik Goltzius. He afterwards went to Italy for improvement, particularly in drawing, and engraved several plates from the works of the great masters. About the year 1601 he returned to Antwerp, where he distinguished himself by producing various prints after the principal Flemish painters. He and his son were in 1631 in Paris, where they worked for some time. His drawing is very correct; and though his command of the graver is less daring and bold than that of his instructor, he is less mannered and extravagant. He died at Antwerp in 1634. He engraved about a hundred plates, of which the following are the principal:

PORTRAITS.

Erycius Puteanus, (Hendrik van der Putte,) a Dutch savant.

Giovanni Boccaccio; after Titian.

Ferdinand, Count Palatine of the Rhine; oval; after Rubens.

Philip III., King of Spain; oval; after the same.

Francisco de Mello, Count d'Azumar.

Ambrogio Spinola.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The Five Senses; apparently from his own designs.

The Life and Miracles of St. Catharine of Siena; twelve plates; after Francesco Vanni. 1606.

The Life of Christ; thirty-six plates.

Costumes of the People of Europe; after S. Francken.

The Virgin and Child; after Titian.

The Marriage of St. Catharine; after the same.

The Holy Family; after the same.

DE JODE, PIETER, 'the younger,' the son of the elder artist of the same names, was born at Antwerp in 1606, and was instructed by his father, whom he surpassed in the taste and facility with which he handled the graver. He engraved upwards of three hundred plates, but they are very unequal. His best works are his portraits, several of which he engraved after Van Dyck. The date of his death is unknown. The following are his most esteemed prints:

PORTRAITS AFTER VAN DYCK.

St. John the Baptist in the Desert; after P. van Mol.

DE JONG, LUDOLF, (DE JONGH, or DE JONGE,) was born at Overschie, a village near Rotterdam, in 1616. He was the son of a shoemaker, who intended bringing him up to the same business, but from his aversion to the work and strong disposition for art, he was placed under Cornelis Sachtleven, with whom he passed two years. He afterwards studied successively under Anthony Palamedes of Delft, and Jan Bijlert of Utrecht. He subsequently went to France, and passed seven years at Paris, where he met with encouragement as a portrait painter, in which branch of art he chiefly excelled. He also painted easel pictures of hunting-parties and battles, which are ingeniously composed and touched with spirit and vigour. On his return to Holland he settled at Rotterdam, where he was much employed. His most considerable work is a large picture in the 'Salle des Princes' in that city, containing the portraits of the officers of the Company of Burghers. He died at Hillegersberg in 1697.

DE JONGHE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Belgian landscape painter, was born at Courtrai in 1785. He studied under Ommeganck, and travelled in Holland, France, and England. He finally settled at Brussels, where he had many pupils and followers. He exhibited his works at Paris, Lyons, Brussels, Amsterdam, the Hague, Vienna, &c., and obtained various medals. He died at Antwerp in 1844. Amongst his best productions are:

Environs of Tournai (Brussels Museum).

Stream with Cattle (Ghent Academy).

View near Courtrai (Ghent Academy).

Interior of a Farm (Haarlem Museum).

Travellers Resting (Haarlem Museum).

Flock of Sheep; sandy road (Tournai Museum).

DEJUINNE, FRANÇOIS LOUIS, was born in Paris in 1786, and learned the art of painting under Girodet. He visited Rome, where he studied the works of Titian, Paolo Veronese, and other great masters. He died in Paris in 1844. His paintings were mostly historical; among them are the 'Ascension of the Virgin' and 'St. Geneviève' for Notre-Dame de Lorette, and 'The Four Seasons' for the Trianon Palace.

DE KEMPENEER, PIETER, better known by his Spanish name of PEDRO CAMPAÑA, which has been translated into French as CHAMPAIGNE, and into Flemish as VAN DE VELDE, was a painter born at Brussels in 1503, although from the character of his works and his subsequent life he should be classed with the Spanish school. He visited Italy early in life, and there studied the masterpieces of Raphael and Michelangelo. On his journey to Rome in 1530 he painted the triumphal arch which was erected at Bologna for the coronation of Charles V. He afterwards went to Spain, and subsequently to 1548 painted numerous devotional pictures for the churches of Seville. His masterpiece is the 'Descent from the Cross,' which he painted about 1548 for the church of Santa Cruz, and which, when that church fell into ruins, was removed to the cathedral of Seville. This work was designed from the engraving of Marc Antonio after Raphael, and is one that in colouring, in the expression of the countenances, and in unity and simplicity of composition, compares favourably with the productions of Albrecht Dürer. Such was at one time its life-like awful character that Murillo used to stand watching, as he said, until those holy men should have finished taking down the Saviour. A 'Purification of the Virgin' and a 'Resurrection' by him, also in the cathedral, by the beauty of their design and the luminous character of their colouring are suggestive of the highest period of Italian art. The parish churches of Triana and of Santa Maria at Carmona possess paintings by this master. De Kempeneer returned to Brussels not later than 1563, and died in that city in 1580. Besides the above-named works he has left the following:

Seville. S. Isidoro.	St. Paul the Hermit.
" S. Pedro.	St. Anthony, Abbot.
" "	Christ bound to the Pillar.
" "	St. Sebastian.
" "	St. Jerome enthroned.
	(These three pictures have been repainted.)
" S. Catalina.	St. Jerome enthroned, with Saints.
" S. Juan de la Palma.	Crucifixion, with the Virgin and St. John. (An early work.)

DE KEYSER, THOMAS, (until recently, named in error Theodoor,) was born at Amsterdam about the year 1595. In the Gallery at the Hague is a fine picture by this Dutch painter, representing the Four Burgomasters of Amsterdam deliberating on the honours to be paid to Marie de Médicis, on her entrance into that city in 1638. The heads are admirably painted, and with a richness of colouring nearly approaching to Rembrandt. The portraits of Rombout Hoogerbeets, his wife, and family, and two other pictures, now in the Museum at Amsterdam, were also painted by him. There is also a picture by him in the National Gallery, representing 'A Merchant and his Clerk.' He died at Amsterdam in 1679. Some of his works are signed with the accompanying monogram:

DE KEYSER, WILLEM, (or DE KEYSAR,) was born at Antwerp about the year 1647. He was brought up as a jeweller, in which profession he became very eminent, but having been well educated, and taught to draw, he had a strong inclination for painting, and employed all his leisure hours in practising in miniature, enamel, and oil-colours. Having painted some altar-pieces at Antwerp, his business called him to Dunkirk, where he painted a picture for the chapel of the English nuns, who were so pleased with it, that they persuaded De Keyser to go to England, and gave him letters of recommendation to Lord Melfort, then in favour with James II. The enthusiastic painter could not resist the proposal; he embarked on board an English vessel, and, unknown to his wife or family, sailed for England. His reception was equal to his wishes. He was introduced to the king, who promised to countenance him, and several persons of rank, who had known him at Antwerp, encouraged him in his new vocation. Transported with this prospect he sent for his wife, ordering her to dismiss his workmen, and convert his effects into money. Within half a year the bubble burst; the Revolution happened, De Keyser's friends could no longer be his protectors, his business decreased, and the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, to which he had recourse in his despair, completed his ruin. He died at the age of forty-five, about the year 1692. He left a daughter, whom he had taken great pains to instruct, and with success. She painted small portraits in oil, and copied well.

DEKKER (or DECKER). There are several artists of this name, either German or Dutch, enumerated by different writers, with admirable confusion in apportioning their respective works. Some call Cornelis Gerrits, the landscape painter, Coenraet, others Karel, or Hendrik, each saying that his pictures resemble those of Ruisdael; Custos, like Frans, is said to have painted grotesque subjects; Adriaen, to have been a scholar of Everdingen; Jan, a painter of interiors, conversations, and landscapes in the manner of Murant; Hans was a sculptor; the others occur in the following articles. The Dekker whose works are best known in England is Frans, who painted views, similar to Ruisdael's, on a small scale, and also weavers' workshops. Brulliot, following Heineken, says that Karel was an engraver, who flourished about the commencement of the 18th century.

DEKKER, CORNELIS GERRITS (often incorrectly called COENRAET DECKER), who was born in the earlier half of the 17th century, is supposed to have studied under Solomon Ruisdael. He died in poverty at Haarlem in 1678. A good example of his style is a 'Wooded Landscape,' in the Rotterdam Museum. There are likewise two Landscapes by him in the Louvre. He was of the same period and of the same school of landscape art as Ruisdael, to whom his works were for a long time attributed. Adriaan van Ostade and Adriaan van de Velde painted figures of men and animals in his pictures.

DEKKER, FRANS, is a painter of whom but little is known, although his pictures possess great merit, and are to be met with in almost every collection. He is stated to have been born at Haarlem in 1684, and to have died at the same place in 1751, having been a pupil of Romeyn De Hooghe and of Bartholomeus Engels. He painted landscapes in a very pleasing and natural style, resembling the charming productions of Ruisdael, but without the servility of an imitator. He also excelled in caricature.

DE KONINCK, DAVID, (DE KONING, DE KONINGH, or DE CONINCK,) called RAMMELAAR, was born at Antwerp in 1636. After studying for some time in his native country under Jan Fyt, he travelled in Germany, France, and subsequently in Italy. He settled at Rome, and eventually died there in 1687. His works, which are not numerous, represent chiefly landscapes ornamented with animals of all descriptions, and in every respect are nearly as good as those of his master, Jan Fyt. At Ghent there is a 'Garden with domestic animals' by De Koninck; and in the Museum of Amsterdam there are a 'Stag-hunt' and a 'Bear-hunt.'

DE KONINCK, PHILIP, (DE KONING, DE KONINGH, or DE CONINCK,) was born at Amsterdam in 1619, and was one of the ablest scholars of Rembrandt. He painted historical subjects and portraits, but was particularly eminent in the latter, in which he was one of the most distinguished artists of his time. His colouring, though rich and harmonious, is clearer than that of Rembrandt, and partakes of the chaste and tender tinting of Van Dyck. There is an uncommon appearance of truth and nature in his heads, with a more tasteful arrangement of the attitudes and habiliments than is usual in the portraiture of the artists of his country. There is a fine portrait of De Koninck, by himself, in the Uffizi at Florence. He died at Amsterdam in 1689. In the Museum of that city there is a 'Landscape with Animals' by him; another landscape is in the Museum at the Hague, a replica of which is in the National Gallery; another is in the Rotterdam Museum; and another, which is assigned to Rembrandt, is in the Uffizi at Florence. A 'View in the Environs of Scheveningen' is in the Brussels Gallery.

DE KONINGH, LEENDERT, a Dutch marine and landscape painter, was born at Dordrecht in 1777. He was instructed by A. Vermeulen and M. Versteeg, and in 1801 came to England, but was soon compelled to leave this country on account of the war. He then went to Paris, and studied under David. Thence he returned home by way of Germany, and afterwards paid a second visit to England, where he remained till after the fall of Napoleon. He died at Dordrecht in 1849.

DE LA BAER, JOHANNES, (or DE LA BARRE,) a Flemish painter upon glass, who has been often confounded with Jan Barra, a Dutch engraver, was a native of Bois-le-Duc, and was received as a master into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1625. He was an artist of real merit, and belonged entirely to the school of Rubens. The windows of the chapel of the Virgin in the church of St. Gudule at Brussels, which were for a long time attributed to Rubens, are known now to have been executed from his designs. He also engraved a plate of the façade of the Jesuit church at Antwerp.

DE LA BERGE, CHARLES AUGUSTE, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1805. In 1824 he entered the studio of Bertin, the landscape painter, and in 1827 that of Picot, the historical painter. He first exhibited at the Salon of 1831, and in the years 1837-39 painted entirely from nature, and at the time of day which it represents, a 'Landscape at sunset,' which is in the Louvre. He died in Paris in 1842.

DE LA BOISSIÈRE, SIMON, was a French engineer, who also distinguished himself as an engraver. He was born in Paris about 1637, and executed several plates from his own designs, and after Sébastien Le Clerc. There are by him:

The Death of a Prince, surrounded by his Court.

Several plates of Medals for Molinet's 'Historia Pontificum,' 1679.

A View of the Palais Royal; in two sheets.

Several plates for Desgodets' 'Traité des Edifices Antiques de Rome,' Paris, 1682.

DE LA CALLEJA, ANDREAS, a Spanish painter, was born at Rioja in 1705. He was a pupil of G. A. Ezquerro, and was so successful in his early efforts that he was soon appointed by King Philip V. to a post of honour. Philip VI. in 1752 made him first Director of the newly-founded Academy at Madrid, and he established a school of some repute. But we are told that the principal occupation of his latter years was that of restoring the ancient pictures belonging to the king! It would be unjust to visit on him all the iniquities that have been perpetrated on pictures in Spain by the process of restoring; for to such an extent has it been carried, that very few of them, really worth preserving, have escaped. His best works are in the churches of Santa Cruz and of San Felipe el Real at Madrid. He died in that city in 1785.

DELACAZETTE, SOPHIE CLÉMENTE, a French miniature painter, was born at Lyons in 1774. She was a pupil of Regnault and of Augustin, and exhibited annually at the Salon from 1806 to 1838. In 1808 she sent a portrait of Mlle. Barilli, which has been engraved by Masquelier. She died in Paris in 1854.

DE LA CHAPELLE, GEORGE, a painter born at Caen, visited the Levant in the early part of the 17th century. His work is known to us by a series of engravings executed probably by Nicolas Cochin.

DE LA CORTE, GABRIEL, the son of Juan de La Corte, was born at Madrid in 1648. Without the aid of a master he practised flower-painting by copying the works of Mario and Arellano. He arrived at such a degree of excellence that Antonio de Castrejon and Matias de Torres employed him to paint garlands of flowers to surround their mythological subjects. He died at Madrid in 1694.

DE LA CORTE, JUAN, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid in 1597. He was instructed by Velazquez, and painted portraits and history, but chiefly excelled in battle-pieces and perspective views. He also painted small pictures of subjects from sacred history. He was painter to Philip III., and was continued in that situation by his successor, Philip IV. There are several of his pictures in the palace of Buen Retiro. He died at Madrid in 1660.

DE LA CROCE, JOHANN NEPOMUK, an Austrian painter, was born at Pressano, in the Tyrol, in 1736. He studied under Lorenzoni, and after travelling in Italy, Germany, Hungary, and France, he settled at Burghausen. The portraits which he painted are estimated by Lipowski at the immense number of 5000, and his historical pictures at 200. There are many altar-pieces by him in the churches of Bavaria. He died in 1819. His son, CLEMENS DE LA CROCE, who was also a painter, was born at Burghausen in 1783, and died in 1823.

DELACROIX, AUGUSTE, a French marine painter, was born at Boulogne in 1809, and died there in 1868. He produced some elegant sea-pieces taken on the French and North African coasts, and also painted some African genre pictures.

DELACROIX, FERDINAND VICTOR EUGÈNE, a French historical painter, was born at Charenton St. Maurice, near Paris, in 1798. His father held high office under the Republic and First Empire, being successively deputy in the Convention, minister under the Directory, and prefect of Marseilles, and subsequently of Bordeaux. Young Delacroix received his first instruction in the Lycée Impérial; but on the death of his father, he had to make his own way in life, almost unaided. In 1817 he entered the studio of Guérin, where amongst his fellow-pupils were Géricault, Ary Scheffer, Henriquel-Dupont, and Cogniet. His first exhibited work, 'Dante and Virgil,' appeared in 1822, and achieved a great success. Through it he spent some time in the studio of Baron Gros, and might have obtained great academic honours but for his divergence from the prevalent classicism. This breach widened, and Delacroix, Géricault, and others, became the recognized leaders of the Romantic School. The conflict between the rival schools was very bitter, and it was not till after the Revolution of 1830 that Delacroix and the Romanticists began to receive a share of the state patronage which exercises so great an influence on art in France. In 1831 he visited Spain, Morocco, and Algiers, and several important works were the result of this journey. In 1832, through the influence of Thiers, although not without great opposition, he received his first public commission. Between that year and 1855 he executed decorative works for the Chamber of Deputies, the Library of the Luxembourg, the Galerie d'Apollon in the Louvre, the Salon de la Paix in the Hôtel de Ville, and the Church of St. Sulpice. He was elected at the Academy in 1857. He last exhibited at the Salon in 1859, and died in Paris in 1863. Personally, Delacroix was a nervous man, objecting to visitors in his studio, although he was not deficient in those traits which render a man agreeable in society. His works show the attraction which the darker side of human nature had for him, and it was in the depiction of scenes of passion and of blood that he achieved his greatest successes, to which his excellence as a colourist no little contributed. Besides the decorative works already mentioned, the following are amongst his chief productions:

Arras. Museum.	Martyrdom of St. Stephen. 1853.
Bordeaux. Museum.	Greece expiring on the ruins of Missolonghi. 1827.
" "	Lion Hunting. 1854. (Destroyed by fire in 1870.)

O.J.D.

Delacroix also executed a considerable number of etchings, engravings, and lithographs, a list of which is to be found in Moreau's 'E. Delacroix et son œuvre,' Paris, 1873, 8vo. He likewise wrote some articles on painters and sculptors in the 'Revue des Deux-Mondes.' His 'Lettres' were published by M. Burty in 1878, and again, with additions, in 1880.

DE LA CRUZ, JUAN PANTOJA. See PANTOJA DE LA CRUZ.

DE LA CRUZ, MANUEL, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid in 1750, and died in the same city in 1792. He distinguished himself by his pictures in the cathedral of Cartagena and in the monastery of San Francisco el Grande at Madrid. In the Gallery of the latter city there is a painting by him of 'The Annual Fair at Madrid.' He also etched a few plates of Heads of strongly-marked character.

DE LA CRUZ, MIGUEL, a Spanish painter of promise who died young, was employed in 1633 by Charles I. of England to make copies of the remarkable pictures in the Alcazar of Madrid.

DE LA FAGE, NICOLAS, a French painter and etcher of the first half of the 17th century, was a native of Arles in Provence. Robert-Dumesnil mentions nine plates by him, among which are:

The Virgin and Child; after Annibale Carracci.

Anne of Austria, Queen of France. 1648.

Louisa Mary Gonzaga, Queen of Poland.

François de Vendôme, Duke of Beaufort. 1649.

DE LA FAGE, RAYMOND, a French draughtsman, was born at L'Isle en Albigeois in 1656. He studied under Jean Pierre Rivalz at Toulouse, but soon left his master and went to Rome, where he resided three years. He afterwards went to Paris, where his wonderfully facile pen-and-ink sketches found many admirers. Crozat possessed no less than three hundred of them, and the Louvre has now about seventy. He died at Lyons in 1684. Robert-Dumesnil mentions twenty-five etchings by him.

DE LA FERTÉ, M., was a French amateur, who, according to Basan, etched several small plates of landscapes, from the designs of Boucher and other masters.

DE LA FLEUR, NICOLAS GUILLAUME, who was born in Lorraine about 1608, was a painter of flowers in miniature and an etcher. He was working at Rome in 1638, and in Paris in 1644. He died in Rome in 1670. His etchings, which are very rare, are executed with the point, and are very effective and tasteful. The principal of them are:

Thirteen plates of Flowers; copied by Danckerts. 1638.

Twelve plates of Flowers. 1639.

DE LA FOSSE, CHARLES, an eminent French painter, was born in Paris in 1636. He was educated under François Chauveau and afterwards under Charles Le Brun. At the age of twenty-two he went to Italy, where he made such satisfactory progress that Colbert obtained for him the pension of the King, in order that he might be able to continue his studies. He passed two years at Rome, and then went for three years to Venice to study the works of the great colourists. He appears to have been less sensible to the sublime beauties of the Roman School, than to the seductive colouring of the Venetian, and he returned to Paris one of the most accomplished colourists of the French School. He was immediately taken into the service of Louis XIV., and was first employed in painting four pictures for the apartments in the Tuileries. His next work was the marriage chapel in St. Eustache, where he painted in fresco 'Adam and Eve' and the 'Marriage of the Virgin.' He painted for Versailles the 'Sacrifice of Iphigenia' and 'Moses saved from the Waters'; in the chapel of the palace the 'Resurrection'; and at the Trianon, 'Apollo and Thetis.' At Marly, he painted a picture of 'Bacchus and Ariadne.' These works brought him into great repute; and he was received into the Academy in 1673, on which occasion he painted the 'Rape of Proserpine,' which is now in the Louvre. La Fosse visited England in 1689, and again in 1690, when he remained upwards of two years, during which time he was employed in decorating the mansion of the Duke of Montagu, afterwards the British Museum, in which he painted two ceilings, representing the 'Apotheosis of Isis' and an 'Assembly of the Gods.' His principal work at Paris is the fresco in the dome of the Invalides, which is fifty-six feet in diameter, and represents 'St. Louis placing his crown and sword in the hands of Christ, who is accompanied by the Virgin, and by Angels who bear the instruments of the Passion': in the angles are the Four Evangelists. This immense work was finished in 1705, and did great honour to the artist. In the choir of Notre-Dame he painted the 'Nativity' and the 'Adoration of the Magi.' Although the genius of La Fosse was equal to great and copious compositions, his drawing was neither elegant nor correct; and though he is considered to be one of the best colourists among his countrymen, he is very far distant from Titian or Paolo Veronese. He died in Paris in 1716. Besides the 'Rape of Proserpine,' the Louvre has by him 'Moses saved from the Waters,' the 'Annunciation of the Virgin,' the 'Marriage of the Virgin,' the 'Triumph of Bacchus,' and the 'Sacrifice of Iphigenia.'

DE LA FOSSE, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1721. He was a pupil of Etienne Fessard, and engraved a large number of book-plates and vignettes after Eisen and Gravelot. He died in Paris about 1775. We have also several portraits by him after the drawings of Carmontelle, among which are the following:

The Duke of Orleans on horseback.
The same, with his Son, the Duke of Chartres.
M. Rameau.
The Abbé de Chauvelin.
The unfortunate Calas Family.

DE LA FOSSE, JEAN CHARLES, a French architect and draughtsman, was one of the best designers of ornaments, decorations, and furniture of the reign of Louis XVI. In 1768 was published his 'Iconologie Historique,' in which many of the plates were engraved by himself.

DE LA FUENTE, JUAN LEANDRO, was a Spanish painter, who flourished at Granada from 1630 to 1640. Although not mentioned by Palomino or by Pons, he was an artist of distinguished merit. He followed the manner of Bassano both in subject and treatment, and his colouring is quite of the Venetian School. His pictures are to be found at Granada, Seville, and Madrid.

DE LA FUENTE DEL SAZ, JULIAN, was a Hieronymite monk, who painted miniatures at the Escorial. He is known to have been living from 1527 to 1598.

DE LA GOURDAINE, JEAN PIERRE NORBLIN. See NORBLIN DE LA GOURDAINE.

DE LA GUERTIERE, FRANÇOIS, a French historical painter, was born in 1624. He etched seventeen plates of the Grotesques by Raphael in the Vatican.

DEL AGUILA, FRANCISCO, was a Spanish fresco painter, who resided at Murcia in the latter part of the 16th century. In 1570 he painted and gilded the beautiful tomb of Alfonso the Wise, in the cathedral of that city.

DEL AGUILA, MIGUEL, a Spanish historical painter, was a native of Seville, where he died in 1736. His pictures are valued for their near approach to the style of Murillo.

DE LA HAYE, CHARLES, a French engraver, was born at Fontainebleau in 1641. He went to Italy, where he engraved, with C. Bloemaert, Spierre, Blondeau, and others, the paintings by Pietro da Cortona in the Palazzo Pitti at Florence. His style of engraving resembles that of Cornelis Bloemaert; and though his plates want harmony, they possess considerable merit. The following are among the best:

The Virgin and Child, with St. Catharine and other Saints; after Ciro Ferri.
St. Philip Neri kneeling before the Virgin; after the same.
Coriolanus refusing to see the Roman Ambassadors; after the same.
The Grecian Philosophers in the Gardens of Academus; after Romanelli.

DE LA HAYE, CLAUDE, was a French portrait painter, who flourished at Lyons in 1564, and was patronized by Charles IX. Catharine de' Medici visited his studio, and sat to him for her portrait.

DE LA HAYE, REYNIER, a Dutch painter, was a native of the Hague, and there entered the Guild named 'Pictura' in 1662. In 1669 he removed to Utrecht, and was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke. He painted scenes of private life, in the manner of Terborch and of Metsu; but his style is not so large or so light, his colouring is less vigorous, and his chiaroscuro defective.

DE LA HÈLE, ISAAK, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Antwerp about 1536. He was the younger son of Ysbrant de La Hèle, a sculptor, and left his native city early in life, but whether he went to Italy and studied under Michelangelo is uncertain. From 1562 to 1568 he was employed upon work for the cathedral of Toledo, and painted a capital picture of 'St. Nicasius,' which Pons mistook for the work of Berruguete, a certain proof of its merits. He returned to Antwerp probably in 1571, and was still living there in 1573. ABRAHAM DE LA HÈLE, his elder brother, was likewise a painter. He was born in 1534 at Antwerp, where he was still living in 1564, but in 1572 we lose sight of him in Augsburg.

DE LA HIRE, LAURENT, (or DE LA HYRE,) a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1606. He was the son of Etienne de La Hire, an historical painter, who had acquired some reputation in Poland. He studied under him, and from the pictures at Fontainebleau, aiming especially at the style of Primaticcio. On his return to Paris he spent some time in the school of Lallemant, then in great reputation. His colouring was somewhat cloudy, but otherwise his execution was good, although he inclined to mannerism. One of his earliest and best pictures, 'The Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew,' is in the church of St. Jacques. In the Louvre are ten of his works, including 'St. Peter healing the Sick,' a 'mai' painted for the cathedral of Notre-Dame in 1635, and in the Belvedere is an 'Ascension of the Virgin.' In 1637 he painted another 'mai' for the cathedral of Notre-Dame, the 'Conversion of St. Paul.' He painted also a large number of portraits, but in the later years of his life he confined himself to landscapes and small easel pictures. La Hire was one of the twelve artists who in 1648 founded the Royal Academy of Painting and Sculpture. He died in Paris in 1656. He engraved forty-six religious and mythological subjects and landscapes, many of which were from pictures by himself which perished during the troubles of 1793 and 1794. Among them are the following:

The Holy Family, with St. John kissing the foot of the Infant Jesus.
 The Holy Family reposing, surrounded by Angels.
 The Holy Family, with the Palm-branch.
 The Repose in Egypt.
 The Crucifixion, with the Virgin, Magdalen, and St. John. 1639.
 The Conversion of St. Paul.
 The Judgment of Paris.
 Venus and Adonis.

DE LA HIRE, PHILIPPE, the son of Laurent de La Hire, was born in Paris in 1640. He at first devoted himself to landscape painting, and painted several pictures in the style of Watteau, but afterwards studied astronomy, and attained some eminence in that branch of science. He died in 1719.

DE LA HUERTA, GASPARD, was born at Campillo de Altobuey in Cuenca in 1645. At an early age, seeking instruction in Valencia, he fell into the hands of Jesualda Sanchez, the bustling widow of Pedro Infant, a third-rate painter, who continued on her own account her husband's school for the manufacture of religious pictures. La Huerta, nevertheless, attained some skill as a draughtsman and colourist, and married the widow's well-dowered daughter. Working for moderate prices he found abundant employment in the neighbouring churches and convents. For the Franciscans he painted the 'Jubilee of the Porciuncula,' and for the Dominicans the picture which long served as a veil to the wondrous image of 'Our Lady of the Forsaken.' He died at Valencia in 1714. The Museum of Valencia possesses a pleasing picture of 'Christ and the Virgin enthroned,' the latter with the bright complexion peculiar to Valencian beauty.

DE LA HUERTA, MANUEL, a Spanish monk, who flourished at the beginning of the 18th century, produced some excellent miniature paintings in the monastery of La Merced Calzada at Valladolid.

DE LA IGLESIA, FRANCISCO IGNACIO RUIZ. See RUIZ DE LA IGLESIA.

DE LA JOUE, JACQUES, a French architectural painter, was born in 1687. He became a member of the Academy in 1721, and is noticed for a 'Perspective' which he executed in 1732 at the Library of St. Geneviève. He also designed the title-page to the works of Wouwerman. Etchings have been made after him by Cochin, Tardieu, and others. He died in Paris in 1761.

DE LA LIVE DE JULY, ANGE LAURENT, MARQUIS DE RÉMOVILLE, a French amateur engraver, etched several subjects after Boucher and Greuze; a set of caricatures, after Saly; and some portraits. He was born in Paris in 1725, and died in the same city in 1779. He formed a fine collection of works of art of the French School, but this was dispersed in 1770, in consequence of its owner having lost his reason.

DELAMAIN, PAUL, a French painter of Algerian subjects, was born in Paris in 1821. He was a pupil of Leblanc and of Drolling, but, fascinated with a desire to visit the East, he left the studio of the latter to enlist in the cavalry for service in Algeria. In after years, when he could escape for a time from Paris, he went for a year or two to his favourite haunts, and lived on horseback and under canvas. Algeria has inspired many painters, but not one of them has represented the sentiment of Arab life more faithfully than Delamain. He died at Orans in 1882.

DE LA MAISON, NICOLAS. See DELLA CASA.

DE LA MARE-RICHART, FLORENT I., a French portrait painter and engraver, was born at Bayeux in 1638, became an academician in 1677, and died at Versailles in 1718. His prints have a resemblance to those of Lutma and Morin. Robert-Dumesnil has described twenty-one prints by him, including 'St. Jerome,' after L. de La Hire; and two, an 'Ecce Homo,' and the Virgin, after his own designs. The rest are fancy heads in the style of Livens, the scholar of Rembrandt.

DE LA MONCE, RAIMOND FERDINAND, an architect and designer, was born at Munich in 1678, and died at Lyons in 1753. He is chiefly known by his architectural works, but he also designed the plates for the beautiful French edition of Pope's 'Essay on Man.'

DELAMOTTE, WILLIAM, a landscape painter in water-colours, was born in 1780. He studied for a time in the schools of the Academy, and under West. His works appeared at the Academy from 1796 to 1848, and also at the Water-Colour Society from 1806 to 1808. In 1803 he became drawing-master at the military school at Great Marlow. He died in 1863 at Oxford, where he spent the greater part of his life. His works are chiefly outlined with the pen and tinted. At the South Kensington Museum there are by him:

Bruges. 1819.
 On the Scheldt, Antwerp in the distance. 1819.
 Liège, the Bridge of Arches.
 Christ Church, Oxford, from Hinksey Meadows.
 Canterbury. 1844.

DE LANE, SOLOMON, a Scotch landscape painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1727. He was self-taught, and travelled much in France, Italy, and Germany. Several of his pictures appeared at the Royal Academy between 1771 and 1784, after which date there is no further trace of him.

DELANY, MARY. See GRANVILLE.

DE LA PEIGNE, HYACINTHE, (H. PEGNA, or PEIGNA,) a painter of battles and an etcher, was born at Brussels about the year 1700. He was at first engaged in the French service as an engineer's artist and military painter, but subsequently he served the Sardinian, and lastly the Austrian Government. He was living at Rome when in advanced years, and died later than 1766. The Imperial Gallery at Vienna possesses two 'Views of the Pont-Neuf at Paris' by him. He also engraved an 'Attack of the French upon Col d'Assiette in Piedmont;' and pictures of his have been engraved by C. François and A. Tischler.

DE LA PEÑA, JUAN FERNANDEZ. See FERNANDEZ DE LA PEÑA.

DE LA PEÑA, NARCISSE VIRGILE DIAZ. See DIAZ DE LA PEÑA.

DE LA POINTE, F., was a native of France, who flourished about the year 1678. He engraved a plan of the environs of Paris, in nine sheets, as well as some views of the palace of Versailles, the latter in conjunction with Israel Silvestre.

DE LA PORTE, HENRI HORACE ROLLAND. See ROLLAND DE LA PORTE.

DE LA QUEWELLERIE, GUILLAUME, a native of France, was probably a goldsmith. He engraved a set of very small plates, representing ornamental crosses, and other designs for jewellery. They are neatly executed with dark backgrounds, and dated 1680.

DELARAM, FRANCIS, an English engraver, was born in 1590, and died in 1627. He was contemporary with Elstracke and the Van de Passes, and engraved several plates in the neat but formal style which was prevalent at that time. His portraits are his best works, and among them are the following:

King Henry VIII.

Queen Mary.

Queen Elizabeth.

James I., on horseback, with a view of London.

Charles I., when Prince of Wales, with Richmond

Palace in the background.

Henry, Prince of Wales.

Frances, Duchess of Richmond and Lennox.

Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland.

James Montagu, Bishop of Winchester.

John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln (afterwards Archbishop of York), with Angels playing on Musical Instruments.

Sir Henry Montagu, Chief Justice of the King's Bench.

Sir Horatio Vere, with an armed Soldier on each side.

Robert Abbot, Bishop of Salisbury.

Sir William Segar, Garter King at Arms.

Sir Thomas Gresham, holding a Globe.

George Withers, poet. 1622.

DEL ARCO, ALONSO, born at Madrid in 1625, was a disciple of Antonio Pereda. He was deaf and dumb from his birth, and was called 'El Sordillo de Pereda.' He was an eminent painter, both of history and portraits. Several of his pictures are mentioned by Palomino, particularly the 'Miraculous Conception,' and the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in the cloister of the Trinitarios Descalzos at Madrid, and in the church of San Salvador is a fine picture of Santa Teresa. Cean Bermudez enumerates a great number of his works in the churches at Madrid, and in other public buildings throughout Spain. He died at Madrid in 1700.

DE LA RIVIÈRE, CHARLES PHILIPPE AUGUSTE. See LARIVIERE.

DELAROCHE, HIPPOLYTE, (or, as he usually called himself, PAUL,) an eminent French painter, was born in Paris, on the 17th of July, 1797. He devoted himself first to landscape painting under Watelet, but afterwards took to history, and entered the studio of Gros, under whom for four years he applied himself to the human figure, and soon became distinguished by the rapid progress which he made. He soon began to evince the possession of original views, declaring his dissent from the hitherto prevalent "classicism" of the French School, which was then yielding to the Renaissance, but taking up a position between the classic and the romantic, and labouring to create a style in harmony with the temper and habits of his time. It was in 1819 that Delaroche exhibited his first picture, 'Naphthali in the Desert,' which he painted at the age of twenty-two, but it attracted no attention; another, exhibited in 1822, the subject of which was 'Jehoash rescued by Jehoshabeath,' was more fortunate, and sufficiently indicated those powers which Delaroche subsequently developed and so judiciously tempered. In 1824 he produced three pictures, which won for him a gold medal. The first represented 'St. Vincent de Paul preaching in the presence of the Court of Louis XIII.'; the second, 'Joan of Arc examined in Prison by the Cardinal of Winchester'; the third, 'Saint Sebastian.' The first and second of these works have been engraved, the second being almost as well known in England as in France. In 1827 'The Capture of the Trocadero' appeared, in a work which had been commissioned by the Government, and for which he received the cross of the Legion of Honour. During some years after this period, Delaroche painted only what our neighbours call "moyenâge" subjects, although the term is scarcely suitable, as comprehending even those that come within a century or two of our own time. In 1830 he produced 'The Princes in the Tower,' which has been so often engraved and lithographed, and which induced M. Delavigne to compose his tragedy on the same subject. Another highly successful picture was 'Richelieu on the Rhone, with Cinq-Mars and De Thou;' as also was that representing 'Cardinal Mazarin presiding, while dying, at a game of lansquenet.' In 1831 he exhibited the most impressive, perhaps, of all his works, 'Cromwell contemplating the remains of Charles I.,' a subject well known by the engraving. In 1832 he became a member of the Institute. In 1833, under the ministry of M. Thiers, Delaroche was commissioned to decorate the church of the Madeleine, for which a vote of public money had been passed, but on hearing that the Administration had confided part of the work to another artist he, thinking that it should be by one hand only, returned the money advanced and resigned the task. In the same year he was appointed a professor at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts. In 1834, Delaroche proceeded to Italy, and at Rome, in 1835, he married Anne Elisabeth Louise, the only daughter of Horace Vernet, who was then director of the French Academy in that city. This lady died in 1843. Delaroche was amply compensated for his disappointment with respect to the Madeleine, by having confided to him the adornment of the Amphitheatre of the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, a task to which he devoted four years of assiduous labour, and completed in 1841. In this work he displayed great originality of conception, and obtained a great and imposing result by very simple means. Dramatic in his general tendencies, with a mind forming images the most vividly true of the stirring incidents of the past, and embodying them by his art with an utter independence of preconceived systems of painting, though with a practical perfection arising from earnest study of previous works, we are not surprised that, where others would have rushed into allegory, he seized upon the real. How has he accomplished his mission? By summoning, at his potent will, the chiefs of the arts in past ages, to witness the triumphs of the labourers in this. How engrossingly the artist's heart was in this work may be judged by some circumstances related of it. Delaroche, it is said, received the order from the Minister of the Interior to paint a work consisting of twenty-four figures, for which he was to receive the sum of £3000. He supplied the sketch, in conformity with this agreement: it was approved, and it was arranged that he should finish the picture in a year. Subsequently he so completely altered, or rather enlarged, his plan, that he introduced into the work no fewer than seventy-five figures: and in executing it he occupied no less than four years of his life. It would have been only just and reasonable that his pecuniary recompense should have been augmented in proportion; but upon a proposal to that effect being intimated to the painter, it was immediately declined. "No," said he, "of my own will I did what I have done; and I will receive nothing beyond the stipulated sum." He added, "and I shall be amply paid for my labour, inasmuch as I have learned more from the execution of this work, than by all my studies that preceded it." This was, indeed, true patriotism—the example of a great mind. This work may be divided into three portions. In the centre, elevated on a throne, are the three great artists of antiquity—Apelles, Ictinus, and Pheidias. Beneath and around them are the Genius of the Arts, and allegoric figures of Gothic Art (said to be a portrait of the painter's wife), Greek Art, Roman Art, and the Renaissance. Upon their right are grouped the sculptors and the colourists,—Claude Lorrain, Ruisdael, Potter, Titian, Velazquez, Rubens, and Rembrandt, and further on, Paolo Veronese, Correggio, Murillo, and Antonello da Messina. Upon their left are the architects and the greatest masters of Italian and German Art,—Michelangelo, Raphael, Leonardo, Holbein, and Dürer, with Poussin at the extreme edge. All branches of art find representatives in this mighty work. It is a mass of picturesque groups and yet a uniform whole. It may not be uninteresting to give a complete list of all the figures which go to make up this work: they are named in order, beginning at the spectator's left.

Correggio	Jean Goujon

The 'Hemicycle' has been finely engraved by Henriquel-Dupont. During its painting, Delaroche made a rapid journey to Rome, which he visited again for the last time in 1843, when he passed a twelvemonth there. After the Revolution of 1848, he declined, from generous scruples, to accept commissions on liberal terms for certain proposed works at Versailles, the Louvre, the Invalides, the Palais de Justice, and other public edifices, refusing alone to enjoy the emoluments of his profession, whilst his comrades in art were neglected and starving. On the 16th of December, 1855, a disaster occurred, which nearly obliterated for ever the greatest work of this noble painter. On the day appointed for the distribution of the medals in the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, the stage erected for the ceremony took fire, and the famous 'Hemicycle' was, it seemed at first, hopelessly destroyed. Delaroche contemplated restoring it himself, but he was prevented by his death, which occurred in Paris on the 4th of November, 1856. It was afterwards restored by Robert-Fleury. Besides historical subjects Delaroche executed many portraits of great merit. During his life-time two only (the Duke of Angoulême and Mdle. Sontag) had been publicly shown. When, after his death, his collected works were exhibited, none excited more praise than his portraits. The most famous are those of M. de Rémusat, the Duke of Noailles, Prince Adam Czartoryski, M. de Salvandy, and M. Thiers. As the head of a school Delaroche exercised an important influence on art—not only in his own country, but likewise abroad. He numbered among his pupils several Englishmen, including Mr. Edward Armitage, R.A., and other foreigners.

Delaroche did not exhibit at the Salon after 1837. The following is a list of his principal works arranged in the chronological order of their execution:

- 1822. Jehoash saved by Jehoshabeath. (Louvre, but not exhibited.)
- " Filippo Lippi.
- 1823. St. Vincent de Paul preaching before Louis XIII.
- 1824. Joan of Arc.
- 1825. Children surprised by a Storm.
- 1826. The Death of Agostino Carracci.
- " The Massacre of St. Bartholomew: Young Caumont de La Force saved by Du Verdelet. (Königsberg Museum.)
- " Flora Macdonald.
- 1827. The Death of President Duranti. (Painted for the Conseil d'Etat.)
- " The Death of Queen Elizabeth. (Louvre.)
- " The Capture of the Trocadero.
- 1829. Cardinal Richelieu on the Rhone, with Cinq-Mars and De Thou. (Sir Richard Wallace.)

 " The Virgin in Contemplation.
 1857. The Virgin with the Holy Women.

The 'Œuvre de Paul Delaroche,' published in folio in 1868, with a biographical notice by the Vicomte Henri Delaborde, consists of a series of eighty-six photographs from his chief paintings and drawings, with a descriptive account of them by Jules Goddé. An exhibition of his works was held in the Palais des Beaux-Arts in 1858.

DE LA ROSE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a native probably of Aix in Provence, was a marine painter who in his day enjoyed a considerable reputation. He was master-painter at the port of Toulon from about the year 1665 until his death, which appears to have taken place in 1687. He was succeeded as master-painter by his son, PASCAL DE LA ROSE, who died at Toulon in 1746, at about eighty years of age, after having resigned his office in 1731 to his son, JEAN BAPTISTE DE LA ROSE, who died before him at Toulon in 1740.

DE LA ROUSIERE, FRANÇOIS, was a French engraver, who flourished about the middle of the 17th century. A portrait of Michel de Castelnau, Ambassador from France to England in the reign of Elizabeth, is attributed to him by Le Long.

DE LA RUE, PHILIBERT BENOÎT, a French painter and etcher, who was born in Paris in 1718, was a pupil of Charles Parrocel. His subjects were battles, landscapes, genre pictures, and portraits of the chief persons of his day. He also etched a large number of plates, principally of military scenes. His brother, LOUIS FÉLIX DE LA RUE, who was born in Paris in 1720, and died in the same city in 1765, was a sculptor, who also designed and etched six plates of Bacchanalian subjects. The two brothers are often confounded. Both signed their works D. L.

DE LA RUE, CLAUDE, was a painter and designer, who lived at Nancy about 1611, and was court-painter to the Dukes of Lorraine. He is best known by his drawings, with groups of figures, for the engravings illustrative of the funeral ceremonies of Charles III. and the accession of Henry II.

DE LAS CUEVAS, EUGENIO, the son and scholar of Pedro de Las Cuevas, and the half-brother of Francisco Camilo, was born at Madrid in 1613. He was chiefly employed in painting small portraits, by which he gained great reputation at the Court of Spain, and was appointed by Philip IV. to instruct his son Don John of Austria in drawing. He died at Madrid in 1667. He was not only a painter, but also a poet and a musician.

DE LAS CUEVAS, PEDRO, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid in 1568. According to Palomino, he painted several pictures for private collections, for which he was more employed than for public edifices. He gained, however, more celebrity by his academy than by his own works. Some of the most distinguished painters of the time, such as Josef Leonardo, Antonio Pereda, Antonio Anias, and Juan Careño, were educated in his school, called the School of Madrid, which was distinguished for its extraordinary and masterly colouring. He died at Madrid in 1635.

DE LAS MARINAS, HENRIQUE, a Spanish marine painter, whose family name is unknown, was born at Cadiz in 1620. He was celebrated for his representations of scenes of embarkation in the bay of his native city, which he executed with so much truth and beauty that he pleased both artists and seamen. He is praised for the transparency of his water and his aerial gradations. He realized a large fortune, and indulged himself in travelling; but having arrived at Rome he never quitted it, dying there in 1680. His pictures are still sought after by amateurs, but it is uncertain under what name they are sold in Italy.

DE LAS ROELAS, JUAN, called EL CLERIGO ROELAS and EL LICENCIADO JUAN, and by Palomino DOCTOR PABLO, was descended from a noble family, of Flemish origin. He was born at Seville between the years 1558 and 1560, and was brought up to the profession of physic, in which he had already taken a degree, when an inclination for the art of painting, which he had manifested in the early part of his life, induced him to devote himself to its study, and he travelled to Italy for the purpose of improvement. He went to Venice, where he studied for some years. Palomino says that he was a scholar of Titian, but as Titian died in 1576, when Roelas was only sixteen years of age, it is more probable that he received his instruction from a disciple of that great master. On his return to Seville, he was much employed in the churches of that city, where there are many pictures by him, which have been compared to the works of Palma and Tintoretto. To rich and harmonious colouring, which he had acquired in the Venetian School, he added correct drawing and perfect acquaintance with the anatomy of the human figure. One of his most admired works is the 'Martyrdom of St. Andrew,' in the College of St. Thomas. He went as a canon to Olivares in 1624, but whether he ever practised as a physician is not stated. His pictures are very numerous in Seville. His masterpiece is the 'Death of St. Isidore,' in the church of San Isidoro; another fine picture by him is the 'St. James,' in the chapel of that saint in the cathedral, in which the saint is represented riding over the Moors. Cean Bermudez says it is full of fire, majesty, and decorum. Ford, however, says that it is surpassed by the picture of the 'Conception,' in the Academy, and by three in the chapel of the University at Seville. Roelas has been compared with Tintoretto and Carracci, and is certainly the best of the Andalusian painters. It is a subject of regret that none of his fine works have been engraved, as he excelled in design and composition, and displayed a grandeur of form and character which belong only to the greatest masters. He died at Olivares in 1625.

DE LATOUCHE, JACQUES IGNACE, a French painter of miniatures and portraits, was born at Châlons-sur-Marne about the commencement of the 18th century. The beautifully executed canons for the altar of the church of Notre-Dame at Châlons are almost the only examples of his work which have not disappeared. The Chevalier Delatouche, who was also a poet, died at Châlons in 1781.

DE LA TOUR, ELISABETH M. (née SIMONS), was born at Brussels in 1780. She painted portraits and scenes from popular life, and in 1817 received the prize of the Antwerp Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts. She was still living in 1830.

DE LA TOUR, MAURICE QUENTIN, the best of French artists in crayons, was born at St. Quentin in 1704. He became a pupil of Spoëde, but he soon abandoned painting in oil for drawing in crayons. Early in his career he visited London, and upon his return to Paris he set up as an English portrait painter. The first works "en pastel" which he sent to the Salon were the portraits of Madame Boucher and of himself, in 1737. These created a great sensation, and the reputation of the artist increased with each succeeding Salon. Joseph Vernet alone shared with him the favour of the public. Diderot styled him a magician, and MM. de Goncourt call his work a magic mirror, in which is seen all the talent and all the glory, all the wit and all the grace, of the reign of Louis XV. But his genius shines more brilliantly in the Museum of his native town than in the Louvre. He acquired by the exercise of his profession a large fortune, which he employed chiefly in the advancement of art. La Tour became an academician in 1746, when he presented a portrait of Restout, and subsequently one of Dumont le Romain. That of Restout he afterwards retouched and ruined. Some of his best works shared a like fate when age had dimmed his sight and enfeebled his hand. He exhibited for the last time at the Salon of 1773. Towards the close of his life his reason left him, and he returned in 1784 to St. Quentin, where he died in 1788. La Tour executed several portraits of Louis XV. and of his Queen, Marie Leszczyńska, of the Dauphin at different ages, and, at a later period, of the Dauphiness. His likenesses were considered to be so true that when Carle van Loo painted in 1747 the fine portrait of Marie Leszczyńska, which is now in the Louvre, he consented to spare the Queen the trouble of sitting by painting the head from a drawing by La Tour. Some of his works were of large dimensions, but his masterpiece was the magnificent drawing of Madame de Pompadour, which adorned the Salon of 1755, and is now the chief ornament of the collection of crayon drawings in the Louvre. He received for it the large sum of 24,000 francs.

The Museum of St. Quentin possesses eighty-five of La Tour's works, among which are some of the highest quality. There are fifteen of his drawings in the Louvre, and others in the Dresden Gallery, and in the Museums of Dijon and Valenciennes. An excellent monograph on him is contained in MM. de Goncourt's 'Art du XVIII^e siècle. A statue by Langlet has been erected in his honour at St. Quentin. R.E.G.

DE LA TRAVERSE, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French painter, born in Paris, was a scholar of Boucher. He was sent to Rome with a pension from the Crown to pursue his studies for six years, and afterwards went to Naples to explore the excavations at Herculaneum. From thence he went with the Marquis of Osuna to Madrid, and resided there for many years. He was not employed on any public work, but painted many small pictures for individuals. These consisted of landscapes and flower-pieces, which he painted more in accordance with the style of the Flemish than of the Spanish School, especially in colour. He painted an allegory in honour of the birth of an Infanta of Spain, which was engraved by Carmona, but it did not procure him any royal favour. He returned to Paris, where he died in 1778.

DELÂTRE, JEAN MARIE, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1746. He came to England in 1770, and worked under Bartolozzi. He engraved in the chalk style after Angelica Kauffmann, Wheatley, Stothard, and Hamilton. He also furnished illustrations for Bell's 'British Poets,' and there is a good plate by him after Guercino's 'St. Cecilia.' He went to law with Copley in 1801, and gained a verdict for 600 guineas. He died in reduced circumstances at Fulham in 1845, within a few months of completing his hundredth year.

DELAUNAY, NICOLAS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1739. He was a scholar and skilful imitator of Lempeur, and engraved after Rubens, Weenix, Raoux, and Jordaens. He also engraved the designs of Cochin and Moreau for the works of Rousseau, Molière, and Ariosto. He died in Paris in 1792. His best works are:

The March of Silenus; after Rubens.
The Pleasure Party; after Weenix.
The Good Mother; after Fragonard.

DELAUNAY, ROBERT, a French line-engraver, was born in Paris in 1754, and died there in 1814. He was the brother of Nicolas Delaunay, by whom he was instructed. Among his best works are:

Le Mariage conclu; after A. Borel.
Le Mariage rompu; after Aubry.
Le Malheur imprévu; after Greux.
Les Vendeurs d'œufs; after Van der Werft.

DELAUNE, ÉTIENNE, (DELAULNE, or DE LAUNE,) a French engraver, was born in Paris, or more probably at Orleans, in 1518. He commenced his career as an engraver of medals, and is said to have been helped by Benvenuto Cellini, who was at that time living in Paris. He afterwards engraved many prints after Raphael, and the Italian masters of Fontainebleau, and still more after the designs of his son Jean, with whom he passed the greater part of his life at Strassburg. His style was formed upon that of the Little Masters of Germany. He died at Strassburg in 1595. Étienne Delaune was one of the most famous designers of goldsmith's work of his time. There are six of his designs in the Louvre; two of them are for circular dishes representing the Histories of Moses and of Samson. His prints, which are generally small, are very numerous; they are executed entirely with the graver, with great dexterity of handling, and are very highly finished. He copied some of the prints of Marc Antonio with success. He usually marked his prints with the initial of his Christian name, S., or S. F., or S. fecit, but sometimes Stephanus, fecit. His works are described in Robert-Dumesnil's 'Peintre-Graveur,' vol. ix. The following are the principal:

- A set of thirty Subjects from the Old Testament.
- A set of eighteen Mythological Subjects; oval, very small.
- The Twelve Months of the Year; circular.
- Jupiter, Neptune, Mercury, and Ceres; four circular plates.
- Four Subjects from Ancient History; oval.
- The Four Monarchies; oval.
- Four plates of Rural Occupations; oval.
- The Three Graces.
- David and Goliath; after Marc Antonio.
- The Murder of the Innocents; after the same.
- The Martyrdom of St. Felicitas; after the same.
- The Rape of Helen; after the same.
- The Brazen Serpent; after Jean Cousin. This is one of his largest prints.

DE LA VALLÉE, ÉTIENNE, a French historical painter, was born at Rouen in 1740, and became at Paris a pupil of Descamps and of Pierre. He went to Rome, where he assumed the name of LAVALLÉE-POUSSIN, and produced landscapes in Poussin's style. He became a member of the Academy in 1789, and died in Paris in 1793. Some of his works are in the Museum of Alençon. Guyot engraved after him some plates of Arabesques for the decoration of rooms.

DE LA VILLA-AMIL, GERONIMO PEREZ. See PEREZ DE LA VILLA-AMIL.

DEL BARBIERE, ALESSANDRO. See FEI.

DEL BARBIERE, DOMENICO, called DOMENICO FIORENTINO, a painter, sculptor, and engraver, was born at Florence, about the year 1506. French documents mention him by the surname of Ricoveri. He was a disciple of Rosso, whom he followed to France, when that master was invited by Francis I. to decorate the palaces of Fontainebleau and Meudon, in which works Domenico gave him much assistance. Vasari says that he was the best of all the pupils of Rosso. He was also employed after the death of Primaticcio to execute some frescoes after the designs of that master. Subsequently to 1562 he retired to Troyes, where he painted works for the churches, and there he was buried in St. Pantaléon. Domenico del Barbieri has also left us some excellent engravings. He has sometimes been confounded with the French engraver Dominique Barrière, who lived about a century later; but the style of the latter is so different from that of Barbieri, that the mistake will easily be discovered. He sometimes signed his plates with his name, Domenico del Barbieri; sometimes with Domenico Fiorentino; and sometimes marked them with the initials D. F. We have the following prints by him:

- 'Gloria,' standing on a Globe, and holding two Trumpets; after Rosso.
- The Holy Family.
- The Penitent Magdalen; after Titian.
- Cleopatra.
- The Martyrdom of St. Stephen.
- Amphiarus with his horses and chariot swallowed up in the earth; after Rosso.
- Venus, Mars, and Cupid; after the same.
- An ornamental Cartouche, in which is represented Soldiers leaving a camp; an etching; after the same.
- Two Anatomical Figures, and two Skeletons; after the same.
- A Banquet; after Primaticcio.
- A Group of Saints; from the 'Last Judgment' of Michelangelo.
- A Group of Angels; from the same.

DEL BARCO, ALONSO, a Spanish landscape painter, was born at Madrid in 1645. He was a scholar of Antolinez, and, according to Palomino, painted landscapes with great success. Many of his works were in the palaces and private collections at Madrid, in which city he died in 1685.

DEL BARCO, GARCIA, a Spanish painter of Avila, was employed in 1476, with Juan Rodriguez, by the Duke of Alva, to execute 'Obra Morisca,' or Moorish stucco-work, in his palace of Barco de Avila.

DEL BARRANCO, BERNARDO MARTINEZ. See MARTINEZ DEL BARRANCO.

DEL BASTARO, GIUSEPPE, was a native of Rome, who, according to Baglione, flourished during the pontificate of Urban VIII. (1623—1644). He painted for the church of Santa Maria Maggiore an 'Assumption of the Virgin,' and for San Girolamo, a 'Descent from the Cross,' and the 'Death of St. Jerome.'

DEL CASTAGNO, ANDREA. See CASTAGNO.

DEL CASTILLO, AGUSTIN, a Spanish painter in oil and fresco, was born at Seville in 1565. He was instructed there by Luis Fernandez, but afterwards took up his residence at Cordova, where he died in 1626. In the cathedral at Cadiz is his 'Adoration of the Kings,' which is said to be his finest work.

DEL CASTILLO, FERNANDO, the younger brother of Josef del Castillo, was born at Madrid in 1740, and studied sculpture with Felipe de Castro. He afterwards studied painting in the school of Corrado Giacinto, and gained a prize in the Academy in 1757. Subsequently he was appointed painter to the royal porcelain manufactory at Buenretiro. He died at Madrid in 1777.

DEL CASTILLO, JOSEF, a Spanish painter and engraver, was born at Madrid in 1737. His early promise of excellence in the art of painting, under Josef Romeo, induced the Minister of State, Josef Carvajal, to send him to Rome, at his own expense, to study the great masters there under Corrado Giacinto, with whom he returned to Madrid in 1753. He visited Rome a second time in 1758, and became a disciple of Preciado. On his return to his native city in 1764, the king ordered his principal painter, Mengs, to give work to the young artist. Mengs did so, by employing him on designs for the royal tapestries, and in painting devotional pictures for the cells of the Royal Convent of Salesas, as well as two portraits of Charles III. Castillo made drawings for the edition of 'Don Quixote,' published by the Madrid Academy; he etched the 'Supper at Emmaus,' after Cerezo, the 'Flight into Egypt,' and other works, after Luca Giordano, and made for the engravers small copies of the frescoes in the Retiro. His productions are to be met with in Madrid, at the Escorial, and in various churches, convents, and hospitals. He died at Madrid in 1793.

DEL CASTILLO, JUAN, the brother of Agustin del Castillo, was born at Seville in 1584. He had the advantage of being educated under Luis de Vargas, by whose instructions, joined to his own natural ability, he rose to be a distinguished historical painter. His principal works are at Seville and Granada. He enjoys the reputation of having been the instructor of Murillo, Alonso Cano, and Pedro de Moya. He died at Cadiz in 1640.

DEL CASTILLO Y SAAVEDRA, ANTONIO, a Spanish portrait painter, was born at Cordova in 1603. He was the son of Agustin del Castillo, from whom he received his first instruction in art. At his father's death he became the pupil of Francisco Zurbaran, who was at that time in high repute. The cathedral of Cordova possesses many paintings by him, which bear ample testimony to his merit; and had his colouring been equal to his composition and design, few artists of his own country would have surpassed him, as may be judged from his paintings of the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' and 'SS. Peter and Paul.' The convent of St. Francis at Cordova possesses a painting taken from the life of that saint, which Castillo painted in competition with Juan de Alfaro, under whose name in this work will be found the story of the incident which led to its execution. In 1666 he revisited Seville at the time when Murillo was at the zenith of his fame. On seeing the pictures of that great master Castillo was so struck with their excellence and his own inferiority, that he cried "Ya murió Castillo!" and from that time sank into a state of despondency that hastened his death, which took place at Cordova in 1667.

DEL CERAJUOLO, ANTONIO, a painter of Florence, who flourished in the early part of the 16th century, was a pupil of Lorenzo di Credi, and subsequently an assistant of Ridolfo Ghirlandajo. He executed church pictures, amongst which was a 'Crucifixion,' with St. Mary Magdalen and St. Francis, now in the Pitti Palace; but he was especially celebrated for his portraits.

DELCLOCHE, PAUL JOSEPH, a Flemish painter of interiors and battle-pieces, was born at Namur in 1716. He was the son of Pierre Delcloche, an almost unknown painter, from whom he received his first lessons in art. Whilst still very young he went to Paris, but returned in 1747 to Liège, where he painted some pictures for the Salle des États and the churches. His small pictures are full of life and spirit, but his larger works are much less successful. He died about 1752.

DEL CONTE, JACOPO, a Florentine painter, was born in 1510. He was brought up in the school of Andrea del Sarto. Few of his works are to be met with in Florence, as he went to Rome when he was young, and resided there until his death. He was a respectable painter of history; but is more distinguished for his excellence in portraits, of which he painted a greater number, and of more distinguished personages, than any artist of his time. He visited Rome during the time of Paul III., and he painted his portrait, and that of each succeeding pontiff until Clement VIII., in whose pontificate he died. His principal historical works at Rome are, 'St. John preaching,' and the 'Deposition from the Cross,' in San Giovanni Decollato, the church of the Florentines; the 'Dead Christ,' with several figures, in the Madonna del Popolo; and at the Cappuccini on Monte Cavallo, a 'Pietà,' and 'St. Francis receiving the Stigmata.' He also painted a portrait of Michelangelo. He died at Rome in 1598.

DELCOUR, JAN GILLIS, a Flemish painter of religious subjects, was born at Hamoir, near Liège, in 1632. He was a scholar of Geraert Douffet, but went to Rome and there studied for a long time under Andrea Sacchi and Carlo Maratti. He made excellent copies of some of Raphael's most celebrated works, which still exist at Liège, where there are also some original pictures by him in the churches. He died at Liège in 1694.

DEL CROCIFISSAJO, GIROLAMO. See MACCHETTI.

DE LEEUW, JAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at the Hague in 1660. In conjunction with Jan Lamsveld, he engraved the portraits for Le Vassor's 'Histoire du Règne de Louis XIII.,' published at Amsterdam in 1701. We have also by him the following portraits:

Carolus Niellius, D. Theol.
Jacob Wilhelm Imhof, Senator of Nuremberg.
Joseph Justus Scaliger.
John, Duke of Marlborough.
Abraham Cowley; for the edition of his works published in 1700.

DE LEEUW, THOMAS, (or DE LEU.) a native of Flanders, was in France from 1560 to 1612. He was a pupil of Jean Rabel, and afterwards of Antoine Caron, whose daughter he married. He engraved at first after Cornelis Cort, Sadeler, and Wierix, in a dry manner, but devoted himself afterwards to portraiture, in which he became one of the most distinguished artists of his time. He is supposed to have died about 1620. M. Duplessis has described the works of this engraver in vols. x. and xi. of Robert-Dumesnil's 'Peintre-Graveur.' They amount in number to 512, of which 213 are portraits, and are generally signed with his name. Among others are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Henry III., King of France and Poland.
Louise de Lorraine, his Queen.
Henri de Bourbon, Prince of Condé, at the age of nine years.
César, Duke of Vendôme, aged four years.
Bust of Henry IV.; after Bunel.
Henry IV.; after Quesnel.
Marie de Médicis; after the same.
Mary, Queen of Scotland and France.
Charles de Bourbon, Count of Soissons.
François de Bourbon, Prince of Conti.
Charles de Lorraine, Duke of Mayenne.
Henri de Savoie, Duke of Nemours.
Henri de Montmorency, Constable of France.
Anne, Duke of Joyeuse, Admiral of France.
Charles de Gontaut, Duke of Biron, Marshal of France.

SUBJECTS.

The Ecce Homo, with Angels bearing the Instruments of the Passion.
Eighteen plates of the Life of the Virgin.
The Twelve Sibyls; from his own designs.
Justice rewarding the Labours of the Husbandman; after F. Zuccheri.
The Coronation of Louis XIII.; after Quesnel.

DE LEEUW, WILLEM, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1610. He was a disciple of Pieter Soutman, but instead of following the neat, finished style of that artist, his etching is bold and free. There is a coarseness and want of harmony in his prints, except in those after Nieulant, where he handled the point with the greatest fineness; otherwise his manner is well adapted to some of the subjects he engraved, particularly his hunting pieces after Rubens. He died about 1665. The following are his most esteemed prints, which are sometimes signed with his name, and sometimes marked with the cipher W^L.

Lot and his Daughters; after Rubens.
Daniel in the Lions' Den; after the same.

The Virgin, supported by Angels; called 'Mater Dolorosa'; after the same.

The Martyrdom of St. Catharine; after the same; fine and scarce.

Four large plates of Hunting scenes; after the same. The same subjects, viz. the Lion-hunt, the Boar-hunt, Hunting the Wolf, and the Crocodile and Hippopotamus, have been engraved by P. Soutman.

Tobit and his Wife; after Rembrandt.

David playing on the Harp before Saul; after the same. Rembrandt's Wife; after the same.

A Female with a Veil; inscribed 'Marianne'; half-length; after the same.

St. Francis in Meditation; after J. Lievens.

A set of four large Landscapes; after Adriaen Nieulant.

These prints are in a more finished style than is usual with De Leeuw, and are scarce.

DELEGORGUE-CORDIER, JOHN, a French line-engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1781. He engraved the 'Toilet of Venus' after Albano, 'Æneas and Anchises,' after Domenichino, and portraits of Napoleon and Joséphine after Lebel, and Madame de Sévigné after Nanteuil.

DELEIDI, LUIGI, an Italian painter, who was born in the Bergamese in 1774, painted landscapes and ornaments which are particularly happy in their grouping and colouring. He died at Bergamo in 1853.

DE LELIE, ADRIAAN, was born at Tilburg in 1755, and was a scholar of Peeters, a painter of tapestries and ornaments, and afterwards of Quertenmont at Antwerp. He made copies of many of the portraits by Rubens and Van Dyck at Düsseldorf, and also of historical pictures by Italian and Dutch masters. By the advice of Professor Camper, he established himself at Amsterdam, where he painted a great number of portraits and cabinet pictures; among the latter is one of the celebrated amateur Jan Gildemeester showing his collection to a party of ladies and gentlemen, in which the principal pictures are readily recognised. One of his best works is that representing the 'Drawing Academy' of the Felix Meritis Society at Amsterdam. His pictures are highly esteemed in Holland and Germany, where they are to be met with in the best collections. He died at Amsterdam in 1820.

DE LELIE, JAN ADRIAAN ANTONIE, who was born at Amsterdam in 1788, was instructed in art by his father, Adriaan De Lelie, and by Haan. He excelled in painting fruit-pieces and genre pictures; and also practised picture restoring. He died at Amsterdam in 1845.

DELESTRE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French artist and writer upon art, was born at Lyons in 1800. He was a pupil of Gros, and studied also water-colour painting and sculpture, but after a time he forsook the practice of art, and devoted himself to its history and criticism. He was a radical in politics, and took an active part in the revolution of 1848. He died in Paris in 1871. A 'Scene during the eruption of Vesuvius,' by him, is in the Museum of Nantes. His principal writings were 'Études progressives des têtes du Cénacle peint à Milan par Léonard de Vinci,' 1827, and 'Gros et ses ouvrages,' 1867.

DE LETH, HENDRIK, was a Dutch engraver, who lived at Amsterdam, where he published in 1729 a series of views of Kennemerland, which are very poorly executed.

DELFF, COPPIN, a French historical painter, who flourished in the 15th century, and became painter in ordinary to King René and King Louis XI. He executed the mural paintings in the churches of St. Martin at Tours, St. Maurice at Angers, and St. Peter at Saumur, between 1456 and 1482.

DELFF, JACOB WILLEMSZON, 'the elder,' a portrait painter of Delft, is known by a picture of an 'Archery-feast' in the Hôtel de Ville at Delft, dated 1592; and by a 'Reconciliation of Esau and Jacob,' in the Belvedere at Vienna, bearing the date 1584. He also painted 'The Sportsman's Dinner,' and a portrait group of his family. Delff died at Delft in 1611. His works display good conception and execution, but are somewhat heavy in colouring.

Jacob Delff had three sons, Cornelis, Rochus, and Willem. CORNELIS DELFF, born in 1571, was a pupil of Cornelis van Haarlem, and distinguished himself by very fine pictures of still life. He died in 1645. ROCHUS DELFF was a portrait painter, and a pupil of his father. WILLEM DELFF is noticed below.

DELFF, JACOB WILLEMSZON, 'the younger,' the son of Willem Jacobszoon Delff, and grandson of the elder artist of the same names, was born in 1619 at Delft, where he afterwards resided. He was highly esteemed and much patronized by many celebrated personages of his country. He also held, with great credit to himself, several important civic posts, and at his death, which occurred at Delft in 1661, a marble monument was erected to his memory. He followed the style of Rembrandt. A Man's Portrait, by him, is in the Rotterdam Museum; a Female Portrait is in the Städel Institute at Frankfurt; and the figure of a Boy is in the Liechtenstein Gallery at Vienna.

DELFF, WILLEM JACOBZON, was a Dutch portrait painter, but was more celebrated as an engraver. He was born at Delft in 1580, and received his instruction in design from his father, Jacob Willemszoon Delff. He practised for some time in the style of his father, but having attempted to engrave some plates after the portraits of Miereveld, whose daughter he married in 1618, his success was such as to induce him to abandon painting, and devote himself entirely to the graver, which he handled with uncommon freedom and precision. The plates he executed in the earlier part of his life are more neatly finished than those he afterwards produced, but the latter are engraved in a bold open style, producing a fine effect, and the heads are finely drawn. His plates are sometimes signed with his name, but at other times are marked with the cipher  or .

Delff died at Delft in 1638. A full account of his works will be found in Franken's 'Œuvre de Willem Jacobszoon Delff,' published at Amsterdam in 1872. The following are his principal portraits:

Charles I. of England; after D. Mytens.
Henrietta Maria, his Queen; after the same.
Michiel Miereveld, painter; after Van Dyck.

PORTRAITS AFTER MIEREVELD.

George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham.
Jacob Cats, poet and philosopher.
Hugo Grotius, Syndic of Rotterdam; fine.
Three fine Heads of William, Maurice, and Henry, Princes of Orange.
Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden.
Frederick, King of Bohemia, Elector Palatine. 1632.
Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia. 1630.

Wolfgang William, Duke of Bavaria.
 Gaspar, Count de Coligni. 1631.
 Louise, Countess de Coligni. 1627.
 Florent, Count of Culenborch. 1627.
 Catharine, Countess of Culenborch. 1636.
 Philip William, Prince of Orange. 1628.
 Marco Antonio de Dominis, Archbishop of Spalatro.
 Sir Dudley Carleton, Ambassador at the Hague.
 Jan Olden Barnevelt. 1617.
 Abraham van der Meer.
 Hans De Ries.
 Jacobus Triglandus, Professor at Leyden. 1636.
 Felix De Sambix, writing-master of Antwerp.

DELFINO, CARLO CLAUDIO. See DAUPHIN.

DEL FIORE, COLANTONIO. See TOMASI, NICCOLA.

DEL FIORE, JACOBELLO or JACOMELLO, flourished between 1385 and 1439. He was the son of Francesco del Fiore, the president of the Venetian Guild of Painters. His early paintings have disappeared from the churches of Pesaro. Jacobello was elected president of his Guild in 1415, and held that position until 1436. In 1415 he painted the 'Winged Lion of St. Mark,' now in the Ducal Palace; and in 1421 he was commissioned to paint for the Tribunal of the 'Proprio' the subject of 'Justice, between SS. Michael and Gabriel.' The 'Coronation of the Virgin,' ordered in 1438 for the cathedral of Ceneda, is still there, and in the church of the Hospital of San Lorenzo, at Sarravalle, are frescoes representing scenes from the lives of SS. Lawrence and Stephen, though now much injured by time. The Venice Academy possesses a 'Virgin,' signed by Jacobello in 1436, and many other paintings by him exist in the private and public galleries of Venice.

DEL FOS, ABRAHAM, a Dutch engraver, was born at Leyden in 1731. He engraved after Berchem, Teniers, and Brouwer, but his works are very scarce. We have by him:

A Landscape, with Figures and Animals; after Berchem.
 A Sea-port, with Shipping; after the same.
 Several Views in Flanders, with Boors; after D. Teniers.

DEL FRATE, CECCHINO, was a disciple of Fra Bartolommeo, but no painting can with certainty be attributed to him.

DELGADO, JUAN, a Spanish painter, was established at Madrid about the commencement of the 18th century. He painted a picture of 'St. Francis Xavier,' in the Hermitage of Our Lady, near the bridge of Segovia, which was well coloured, but somewhat mannered.

DELGADO, PEDRO, a Spanish painter, was born at Orgaz, where he painted in 1529 for the Hermitage of the Conception two large pictures, the one representing the 'Virgin surrounded by Saints,' and the other the 'Descent from the Cross': they are both in the style of the 15th century.

DEL GARBO, RAFFAELLINO. See CAPPONI.

DEL GESSI, ERCOLINO. See RUGGIERI.

DEL GOBBO, ANDREA. See SOLARIO.

DEL GRANO, GIORGIO. See GANDINI.

DEL GUASTA, BENVENUTO, called BENVENUTO DA SIENA, who was born at Siena in 1436, painted much in that city. His earliest known work is an 'Annunciation' signed 'Opus Benvenuti Joannis de Senis.' It was painted in 1466, and is in the church of St. Girolamo at Volterra. Frescoes by Benvenuto are in the Baptistery of Siena, and there are in the Gallery of that city three paintings by him. The National Gallery has a 'Madonna and Child enthroned,' with side panels. The date of his death is not recorded, but he was still living in 1517, for in that year he painted the baldacchino of the cathedral of Siena, on the occasion of a visit of Pope Leo X. to that city.

DEL GUASTA, GIROLAMO, the son of Benvenuto del Guasta, was born in 1470. He painted in 1508 a 'Virgin of the Snow,' which is now in the Oratory of St. Catharine in San Domenico at Siena, and in the Academy of that city are two or three other pictures by him. But little else remains of this artist, who died in 1524.

DEL HELE, ISAAK. See DE LA HELE.

DE LIEMAKER, NICOLAES, (or De LIEMAECKERE,) surnamed ROOSE, and sometimes called NICOLAES ROOSE, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Ghent in 1601. He was the son of Jacob De Liemaker, a painter upon glass, and is said by Descamps to have been a pupil of Markus Geeraerts the younger, but as the latter joined his father in London in 1580, it is most likely that he studied under Otto van Veen at Antwerp. He attained a high rank in his profession, and in 1625 returned to Ghent, where he died in 1646. The Museum of Ghent and the churches of that city and of other towns of Flanders possess a great number of his works. His best picture is the 'Consecration of St. Nicholas, Bishop of Myra,' which is above the high altar of the church of St. Nicholas at Ghent.

DELIGNON, JEAN LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in 1755. He executed a considerable number of book-plates after Moreau and others, as well as some plates for the 'Galerie du Palais-Royal.' His best work, 'Le Seigneur chez son Fermier,' is to be found in the 'Monument du Costume.' He died in 1804.

DELIN, JOANNES JOSEPHUS, a Flemish historical and portrait painter, was born at Antwerp in 1774. He first visited the Academies of Brussels and Antwerp, and afterwards continued his studies under Vincent in Paris. In the old church of the Jesuits at Antwerp there is a picture by him representing the 'Purification of the Virgin,' and in the church of St. Charles Borromeo, 'Simeon in the Temple.' He died in Paris in 1811.

DELL' ABBATE FAMILY.

DELL' ABBATE, ERCOLE, the eldest son of Giulio Camillo dell' Abbate, and grandson of Niccolò, was born at Modena about the year 1563. He possessed an extraordinary genius for the arts, which he disgraced by the depravity and intemperance of his conduct. Like most artists of that character, his works were the productions of negligence and haste. He painted, in concurrence with Bartolommeo Schedone, some pictures representing scenes in the Life of Hercules, in the Council-hall at Modena. He died at Modena in 1613. The Modena Gallery has three works by this artist—an 'Annunciation,' a 'Presentation in the Temple,' and a 'Birth of St. John the Baptist.' A 'Marriage of the Virgin,' in the same gallery, is by some attributed to Ercole dell' Abbate, and by others to his son, Pietro Paolo, the younger.

DELL' ABBATE, NICCOLÒ, was called by the Italians MESSER NICCOLÒ or NICCOLINO. He was born at Modena in 1512, and is said to have studied under his father, Giovanni dell' Abbate, who was a modeller in stucco, as well as a painter, and in the school of Antonio Begarelli, an able sculptor, but these statements are destitute of any proof; it is, however, supposed by many that he had the advantage of being instructed by Correggio, which supposition is supported by his superior knowledge of foreshortening, and the boldness of his relief. Certain it is that the works of Correggio and Parmigiano produced a great effect on his style. One of the first performances which brought him into notice was his picture of the 'Martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul,' painted in 1547 for San Pietro at Modena, of which celebrated work Vasari takes no further notice than to remark, that one of the executioners is taken from a picture of Correggio at Parma (the 'Martyrdom of SS. Placidus and Flavia,' now in the Gallery of that city). Dell' Abbate's 'Martyrdom' is now in the Dresden Gallery, and has been engraved by Folkema. He afterwards painted twelve pictures from the twelve books of the Æneid, formerly in the castle of Scandiano, nine of which are now in the Modena Gallery, three having perished by fire in 1815, and they are alone sufficient to establish his reputation. Lanzi, who was well acquainted with their merit, says "that in the correctness of the figures, the beauty of the landscapes, the architecture, and the animals, they merit every praise that can be bestowed on a distinguished follower of the style of Raphael." Whilst in the prime of life, Dell' Abbate went to Bologna, where he painted in a portico of the Leoni Palace, now the Marchesino, in fresco, an 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' and in the Poggi Palace, now the Istituto, a frieze, representing an 'Assembly of young Men and Women,' which was perhaps more suited to his genius. This was composed and drawn with admirable taste and elegance, and has been engraved by Crivellari. These works were the admiration, and became the models, of the Carracci; and Agostino wrote a sonnet in honour of the painter, in which, in the flowery language of poetry, he attributes to him "the symmetry of Raphael, the sublimity of Michelangelo, the truth of Titian, the greatness of Correggio, and the grace of Parmigiano." Such was the excellence of his work in fresco-painting, that he is said never to have had occasion to retouch it when dry; this gave an uncommon splendour and purity to his colouring. In 1552 Primaticcio prevailed on Dell' Abbate to accompany him to the court of France, as the most efficient coadjutor he could find to assist in the important works he was about to undertake. Dell' Abbate, in fact, painted most of the frescoes from the designs of Primaticcio in the magnificent gallery at Fontainebleau, of which more particular notice will be found in the account of that master. After the death of Primaticcio, he continued to be employed by the court of France, and died in Paris in 1571. Of his numerous fresco paintings, but few, comparatively, are extant. His oil pictures also are extremely rare. The 'Rape of Proserpine,' formerly in the Orleans Gallery, but now in the collection of the Duke of Sutherland, is a favourable specimen of his skill in landscape painting. A 'Holy Family' is in the possession of Lord Scarsdale at Kedleston Hall.

Niccolò dell' Abbate had three sons, GIULIO CAMILLO, CRISTOFORO, and CAMILLO, all of whom followed him to France, and assisted him in his work at Fontainebleau. The first-mentioned worked about 1560-61; the second from 1568 to 1570; and Camillo, who was the principal assistant of his father, about 1570.

DELL' ABBATE, PIETRO PAOLO, 'the elder,' the brother of Niccolò, was a native of Modena, where he lived all his life and died about 1575. He excelled in painting battle pieces, and was considered unequalled, in his time, for the spirit and animation with which he designed horses and the attacks of combatants. Some of the works of this painter are in the Gallery at Modena.

DELL' ABBATE, PIETRO PAOLO, 'the younger,' the son of Ercole, was born at Modena in 1592, and died there in 1630. He painted for the churches at Modena several pictures, which are spoken of with commendation. The Modena Gallery has a 'Christ in the Temple' by him.

DELLA BELLA, STEFANO, an Italian engraver, called in France ETIENNE DE LA BELLE, was born at Florence in 1610. He was the son of a goldsmith, and is said to have been intended for his father's profession, but having shown a genius for drawing, he was placed under Cesare Dandini to learn painting. Subsequently, a decided inclination for the art of engraving induced his father to permit him to become a pupil of Canta Gallina, who was also the master of Callot. He at first imitated the manner of Callot, but soon abandoned it, and adopted a style of his own. No artist has handled the point with more facility and finesse than Della Bella. His execution is admirable, and his touch spirited and picturesque. He designed his subjects with infinite taste, and his plates produce a clear and brilliant effect. It is not surprising that some of his prints are but slightly etched, when we consider that the number of them exceeded one thousand four hundred. He visited Paris in 1640, where he engraved some plates for Henriette, the uncle of Israel Silvestre. Cardinal Richelieu employed him to make drawings of the siege and taking of the towns of Arras and La Rochelle, which he afterwards engraved. On his return to Florence, about 1650, he was appointed by the Grand-Duke instructor in drawing to his son Cosmo. He died at Florence in 1664. The following is a list of his principal works:

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

- Portrait of Stefano della Bella, in a Persian costume; after his own design.
- Sigismondo Boldoni, of Milan.
- Mont-Joie St. Denis, King at Arms; very scarce.

 Twenty-two sketches, &c., by Stefano della Bella.
 The Five Deaths; ovals. (His last works.)
 The Sixth Death, plate begun by Della Bella, and finished after his death by G. B. Galestrucci, his scholar.

DELLA CASA, NICCOLÒ, (or NICOLAS DE LA MAISON,) was an engraver who flourished towards the end of the 16th century. From an inscription on one of his plates, he appears to have been a native of Lorraine. He worked entirely with the graver, his productions being after the style of the school of Marc Antonio, but they are not of a high class. We have by him:

Portrait of the Emperor Charles V.; oval, with a border copied from Enea Vico; inscribed N. D. la Casa Lotaringus, fecit.
 Portrait of Baccio Bandinelli.
 Portrait of Henry II. of France. 1547.
 Portrait of Cosmo de' Medici.
 A plate in eleven pieces of the 'Last Judgment' by Michelangelo. 1543. This plate is supposed to be copied from a work of Beatrizet, an artist of Lorraine, who was engraving at Rome at that time.

DELLA CASA, PIER ANTONIO. See BERNABEI.

DELLA CHIESE, GIOVANNI, who was living at Lodi in the 15th century, was one of the artists called by Lodovico Sforza in 1490 to decorate his palace of the Porta Giovia at Milan. No dates are known of his birth or death. He and his brother Matteo are the authors of the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' the organ screen, and other paintings in the church of the Incononata, Lodi. The church of San Lorenzo, in the same town, also possesses some fragments of frescoes by Giovanni representing the 'Nativity,' &c.

DELLA CORNA, ANTONIO, who lived in the 15th and 16th centuries, was one of the artists called by Lodovico Sforza to decorate the Porta Giovia Palace at Milan in 1490. No dates are known of his birth or death. The Bignami Collection, near Cassal Maggiore, contains a picture representing a murder taken from the Legend of St. Julian, signed by Antonio in 1478.

DELL' ACQUA, BERNARDINO, commonly known as DEL AGUA, a painter of Venice, went in 1587 with Pellegrino Tibaldi to Spain, and executed under his direction frescoes in the Convent of the Escorial. Carducho mentions Dell' Acqua as an excellent designer and a clever fresco painter.

DELLA CROCE, TEODORO. See VERKRUYS.

DELLA FRANCESCA, PIERO. See DEI FRANCESCHI.

DELLA FRATTA, FLORI, who flourished about 1540, and died young, is said to have painted the 'Last Supper' in San Bernardino at Fratta, which is executed in the style of the best masters.

DELLA GATTA, BARTOLOMMEO, was probably born at Florence in 1408, and died in 1481. He was a friar of the Camaldolese Convent of the Angeli, at Florence, and afterwards became abbot at Arezzo, where he covered the walls of the monastery with frescoes, and also invented an organ of pasteboard, which yielded soft and perfect tones. He assisted Signorelli and Perugino in their paintings in the Sistine Chapel between 1479 and 1486. His miniatures on vellum are considered valuable, but his paintings show want of skill as a colourist, although clever in details and in landscape. The following paintings by him still exist:

Arezzo.	Town Hall.	Two panels representing scenes from the Life of St. Roch.
Castiglione Fiorentino.	Colle- giata.	A Virgin and Child, with SS. Peter, Paul, Julian, and Michael.
Cortona.	S. Domenico.	The Assumption of the Virgin.

DELL' ALTISSIMO, CRISTOFANO. See PAPI.

DELLA MARCA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, called also LOMBARDELLI and IL MONTANO, was born at Montenuovo in 1532. He was first a scholar of Marco da Faenza, and, according to Baglione, visited Rome in the Pontificate of Gregory XIII., and there devoted himself to an imitation of the works of Raffaellino da Reggio, whom he assisted in some fresco paintings in the Vatican. In the church of San Pietro Montorio he painted a series of pictures of the 'Life of St. Francis'; and in Santa Maria de' Monti, the 'Resurrection.' There are several of his works in the churches at Montenuovo. He died in 1587.

DELL' AMATRICE, COLA. See FILOTESIO.

DELLA PORTA, BARTOLOMMEO. See BARTOLOMMEO.

DELL' ARCA, LEONARDO, was an Italian engraver, who flourished about the year 1600. He engraved some plates of ornaments and grotesque figures.

DELL' ASTA, ANDREA, was born at Bagnuoli, near Naples, in 1673, and was brought up in the school of Francesco Solimena. After passing several years under that master he went to Rome, where he studied for some time, and introduced into the style of his country somewhat of an imitation of the works of Raphael. Amongst his best pictures, executed on his return to Naples, were the 'Nativity,' and the 'Adoration of the Magi,' in the church of Sant' Agostino de' Scalzi. He died at Naples in 1721.

DELLA STRADA, GIOVANNI. See VAN DER STRAET.

DELLA VECCHIA, PIETRO, was born at Venice in 1605, and was brought up in the school of Alessandro Varotari, called Il Padovanino. He did not, however, adopt the style of that master, but applied himself to an imitation of the works of Giorgione and Pordenone, in which he was so successful, that some of his pictures have been mistaken for the productions of those masters. His powers were better adapted to familiar and fancy subjects than to the dignity of history, and his best pictures represent armed soldiers, banditti, and corps-de-garde, which he painted with great vigour and effect. His talent in imitating the works of the old masters induced the doge and senate of Venice to employ him to copy in oil the historical works in mosaic which are in the church of St. Mark, which he did with great ability. He also painted for the same church two altar-pieces of his own composition, representing the 'Crucifixion,' and 'Our Saviour driving the Money-Changers out of the Temple.' His colouring was warm and tender, and he was well versed in the principles of chiaroscuro. He died in 1678.

DELLA VIA, ALESSANDRO, was an Italian engraver, who resided at Venice about the year 1730. He engraved several portraits, which are very differently executed, and a plate, representing the 'Virgin and Infant Christ, with St. Sebastian and other Saints,' after Paolo Veronese.

DELLA VITE, GIOVANNI. See MIEL.

DELLA VITE, TIMOTEO, called by Vasari TIMOTEO DA URBINO, was the son of Bartolommeo della Vite and Calliope, the daughter of the painter Antonio Alberti of Ferrara, in which city he was born in 1469, and was brought up as a goldsmith. From 1490 to 1495 he was in Francia's workshop, where he also learned to paint, and then returned as master to Urbino, where he practised his art for fifteen years. In 1504, at the instance of Giampietro Arrivabene, Bishop of Urbino, he painted the altar-piece for the chapel of St. Martin in the cathedral of that city. It represents Bishop Arrivabene and Guidobaldo II., Duke of Urbino, kneeling at an altar, and above them St. Thomas à Becket and St. Martin. For the cathedral he also painted, about the year 1508, a 'Magdalen,' which is now in the Pinacoteca of Bologna; and for the church of Sant' Agata the 'Virgin Annunciate, between SS. John the Baptist and Sebastian,' now in the Brera, Milan. In 1518 he painted the 'Noli me tangere,' for the Brotherhood of Sant' Angelo Minore, at Cagli. About 1519 he went to Rome, where he became the assistant of Raphael, and is thought by Passavant to have executed the frescoes of the prophets Daniel, Jonah, and Hosea, above the Sybils, in the church of Santa Maria della Pace, and is said by Vasari to have assisted even with the Sybils. In the Academy of St. Luke at Rome is a panel representing 'St. Luke painting the Virgin and Child in the presence of a Youth,' that has been assigned by Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcasse to Timoteo. The Berlin Gallery possesses a 'Madonna and Child, with Saints,' and a 'St. Jerome' by him. He died at Urbino in 1523, leaving a son, PIETRO DELLA VITE, who was a painter of some note.

DELLERA, GIOVANNI, an Italian historical painter, was born at Treviglio in 1765. He was the son of a brazier, but his predilection for art induced him to go to Bergamo and become a pupil of Francesco Dagù, called Capella. In 1785 he went to Rome, and there became intimate with Angelica Kauffmann, with whom he painted several pictures. He also copied for the Empress Catharine seven of the best pictures in the galleries of Rome. He died at Florence in 1798. His best work is the 'Fainting of Queen Esther,' in the church of Alzano Maggiore, near Bergamo.

DELLE VITI, GIOVANNI. See MIEL.

DELLI, DELLO, (an abbreviation of Daniello,) the son of Niccolò Delli, a doublet-maker, was born at Florence about 1404. In 1424 his father was condemned to death for high treason, and fled with his sons to Siena, from whence, about 1427, they went to Venice, where they remained for some time. Dello's name was registered at the Painters' Guild of Florence in 1433, in which year he went to Spain, where he acquired so great a reputation by the practice of sculpture and painting that he attained to great wealth and honour. In 1446 he returned to Florence, and obtained the recognition of his title of Cavaliere, and in the following year painted some of the stories from Genesis in the cloister of Santa Maria Novella. About 1448 he went back to Spain, and is known to have been still living between the years 1464 and 1466. He was a personal friend of Paolo Uccello, who painted his portrait as Shem in the fresco of the 'Inebriety of Noah,' in the cloister of Santa Maria Novella.

DELL' ORTOLANO, GIOVANNI. See BENVENUTO.

DEL MAGRO, GUGLIELMO. See GIRALDI.

DEL MAZO MARTINEZ, JUAN BAUTISTA, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid about 1610.

He was educated in the school of Velazquez, whose daughter he afterwards married, and whom he succeeded as court painter to Philip IV. He is said by Palomino to have excelled equally in history, portraits, and landscapes; he also painted sea pieces and views of towns, but hunting pieces and landscapes were his best works. He possessed extraordinary talent in copying the works of his master, as well as those of Raphael, Titian, Tintoretto, and Paolo Veronese: and was much employed by Philip IV. in copying the celebrated Venetian pictures in the royal collection, which task he so skilfully executed that his copies could with difficulty be distinguished from the originals. He died at Madrid in 1687. There are two portraits, a view of Saragossa, and several landscapes by him in the Madrid Gallery.

DE LOOSE, JOANNES JOSEPHUS, a Belgian painter and writer on art, who was born at Zele in 1770, was a scholar at the Ghent Academy, where in 1794 he obtained the first prize for drawing from the model. He afterwards studied under Herreyns at Mechlin, and painted Scriptural scenes for the churches of Ghent and other places. He has also left a number of portraits. In 1812 the Literary Society at Ghent awarded him a prize for his writings, and in 1820 he received a medal from the Royal Society of the Fine Arts in the same city for his 'Treatise on the present Position of Painting.' He died at St. Nicolas in 1849.

DELORME, ANTOINE, a French designer and etcher of free subjects, was born in Paris in 1653, and died miserably in prison in 1723.

DE LORME, ANTON, who was born at Rotterdam in the 17th century, and was still living in 1660, was an architectural painter, who specially devoted himself to the interiors of churches and other public edifices, in some of which Terborch painted the figures. His works are very rare, and excel for the perspective and the illumination. A 'Church Interior by candlelight' (1645) is in Warwick Castle, and other 'Church Interiors' are in the Berlin, Munich, and Stuttgart Galleries, and in the New York Museum.

DELORME, PIERRE CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, who was born in Paris in 1783, studied in the school of Girodet, and afterwards at Rome. He distinguished himself as a painter of history, and finished the paintings in the chapel of the Virgin in St. Gervais, as well as those in Notre-Dame de Lorette, in Paris. He painted in the style of Girodet. He died in Paris in 1859.

DELORME DU RONCERAY, MARGUERITE LOUISE AMÉLIE, a French amateur engraver, was born in Paris in 1730. We have some neat and spirited etchings by her, after Bouchardon and other French painters; among them the following:

Venus rising from the Sea; after Bouchardon; finished with the graver by St. Aubin.

The Fountain of Grenelle, at Paris; six plates; after the same. These were afterwards finished with the graver by Tilliard and St. Aubin.

Head of St. Paul; larger than life; after the cartoon by Pierre, for the church of St. Roch at Paris.

View of the Tower of Palmaroux; after Cochin.

A Sultan and Sultana; after B. Picart.

DEL PACCHIA, GIROLAMO, who was born at Siena in 1477, was the son of a Croatian cannon-founder, Giovanni 'delle Bombarde.' After studying in his native city and in Florence, he went about 1500 to Rome, and a few years afterwards painted an altar-piece, which has since perished, for the Pontignano Monastery. He returned to Siena about 1508, and executed a 'Coronation of the Virgin,' in the style of Raphael, for Santo Spirito, and a 'Virgin and Child, between SS. Paul and Bernard' in San Cristoforo. In 1518 he executed an 'Annunciation' in Santo Spirito, as well as frescoes in the manner of Bigi for the Brotherhood of San Bernardino, and three scenes from the 'Life of St. Catharine' in the Oratorio dell' Oca. He worked much in conjunction with Pacchiarotti, with whom he produced the 'Ascension' at the Academy of Siena; but he was induced by him to enter the dangerous club of the Bardotti, which in 1535 was dispersed, upon which the two artists betook themselves to France, and painted for Charles VIII. in the castle of Gaillon. The date of Del Pacchia's death is not known. Among his existing paintings are the following:

London. Nat. Gallery.	Virgin and Child (assigned to Pacchiarotti).
" Duke of West-	Holy Family (assigned to Fra
minster.	Bartolommeo).
Munich. Gallery.	St. Bernard.
" "	Virgin and Child (assigned to Pacchiarotti).
Siena. Academy.	Holy Family, with St. Anthony of Padua.

DEL PELLICCIAIO, GIACOMO, (or GIACOMO DI MINO,) a Siennese who lived in the 14th century, was the contemporary of Lippo Vanni and Luca Thomé, being in 1373 appointed to value one of the latter's pictures. His name appears in the Siennese records from 1362 to 1389. In 1367 he aided Bartolo di Maestro Fredi at Siena cathedral. He is known to have painted book-covers for the Biccherna, and was several times a member of the Grand Council of Siena. The dates of his birth and death are alike uncertain. There exist the following works by him:

Siena. Academy.	Coronation of St. Catharine. 1362.
" Chiesa dei Servi.	Virgin and Child, known as the 'Madonna del Verde.' 1363.

DEL PIOMBO, SEBASTIANO. See LUCIANI.

DEL PO, GIACOMO, the son of Pietro del Po, was born in 1654, according to some accounts at Palermo, but according to others at Rome or at Naples, and was first instructed in art by his father, but afterwards by Nicolas Poussin. He was chiefly occupied in decorating the mansions of the Neapolitan nobility with emblematical and allegorical subjects, for which his inventive genius and extraordinary facility particularly qualified him. As is usual with the majority of mechanists, despatch and confidence led him into the negligence and incorrectness of a mannerist. Rome possesses only two of his pictures, one in the church of Sant' Angelo in Pescheria, and the other in Santa Marta; but his talents are seen to greater advantage in his frescoes in the gallery of the Marquis of Genzano, and particularly in the palace of the Prince of Avellino at Naples. He died at Naples in 1726.

DEL PO, PIETRO, was born at Palermo in 1610, and studied under Domenichino at Naples, during that celebrated painter's residence in that city. He painted some pictures for the churches at Palermo, and afterwards visited Rome, where, among other works, he painted a picture of St. Leo, for La Madonna di Costantinopoli. He was, however, more successful in easel pictures than in those of larger dimensions, and he was more distinguished as an engraver than as a painter. He died at Naples in 1692. There are several etchings by this artist, some of which are finished with the graver. They are not so correctly designed as might have been expected from the school in which he was educated. Among others are the following:

St. John in the Wilderness; after Annibale Carracci.
 The Woman of Canaan before Christ; after the same.
 The Dead Christ on the Lap of the Virgin; after the same.
 The Virgin seated on a Throne with the Infant, and a choir of Angels; after Domenichino.
 The four Cardinal Virtues, with their attributes; after the same.
 St. Jerome kneeling, with an Angel; after the same.
 The Annunciation; after N. Poussin.
 The Flight into Egypt; after the same.

DEL PO, TERESA, was the daughter of Pietro del Po. She is said to have painted in oil and in miniature, and has etched a few plates in the style of her father; among which is 'Susannah and the Elders,' after Carracci. Bartsch says she engraved in the manner of her father so closely, that it is difficult to distinguish their works. He describes sixteen prints by her, and enumerates six more mentioned by Füssli. The date of her birth is not known; but she was a member of the Academy of St. Luke at Rome, and died at Naples in 1716.

DEL POGGIO, GIOVANNI. See GIOVANNI DI PAOLO.

DEL POLLAJUOLO, ANTONIO, an Italian goldsmith and painter, born at Florence in 1429, was the son of Jacopo d'Antonio de' Benci, a poulterer, for which reason Antonio and his brother Piero and their descendants took the name of 'Del Pollajuolo.' He was apprenticed to Bartoluccio Ghiberti, a goldsmith, whom he left in 1459 and opened a shop of his own as goldsmith, sculptor, and engraver. He was considered one of the most eminent goldsmiths of his time, and excelled in all the branches of that art. Soon after 1489 he went to Rome, where he cast and carved the Funeral Monuments of the Popes Sixtus IV. and Innocent VIII., and executed several commissions for the Cardinals Benevento and Ascanio. He next turned his attention to painting, and, in conjunction with his younger brother Piero, produced many paintings celebrated for their design, knowledge of anatomy, and power of colour. He also executed in niello several paxes for the church of San Giovanni at Florence. One only of these now remains: it represents the 'Deposition from the Cross,' and is in the Florence Gallery. Antonio died at Rome in 1498.

Vasari states that Antonio was the better artist of the two Pollajuoli; but, judging from their early education, Piero had gained the greater experience in painting, before they entered into partnership.

The following are their best works: Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle are of opinion that the two 'Hercules' pictures in the Uffizi are by Antonio, and the others by Piero: other authorities differ.

Berlin.	Museum.	The Annunciation.
"	"	St. Sebastian.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Hercules and Antæus.
"	"	Hercules and the Hydra.
"	"	Prudence (one of the 'Virtues' painted for the Mercanzia, Florence: the others are not exhibited.)

Florence.	Uffizi.	St. James with SS. Eustace and Vincent (formerly in San Miniato al Monte, Florence.)
"	Pitti Pal.	St. Sebastian.
"	Torrigiani Gall.	Bust portrait of a Man.
London.	Nat. Gall.	The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian (a master-piece, 1475, formerly in San Sebastiano de' Servi, Florence.)
		The other examples in this gallery are doubtful.
S. Gemignano. Church.		Coronation of the Virgin. 1483.
Turin.	Gallery.	The Archangel and Tobit.

Vasari states that this artist executed several engravings, but Bartsch mentions only three, and these are now very rare. They are as follow:

The Gladiators.
 Hercules strangling Antæus.
 Hercules fighting the Giants.

DEL POLLAJUOLO, PIERO, who was born at Florence in 1443, was a younger brother of Antonio del Pollajuolo. He studied painting for a short time under Andrea del Castagno, and then entered the workshop of his brother, in conjunction with whom he worked much. It is very difficult to assign to each his share in these jointly-executed productions, but it is thought that those in which traces of the sculptor's art are plainly discernible are by the hand of Antonio, and that those of greater pictorial excellence owe their origin to Piero. Piero was dead when his elder brother made his will in 1496.

DEL PORTO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was an engraver who flourished about the year 1503, and was commonly known by the name of 'The Master of the Bird,' from his practice of marking his prints with a bird after the initials J. B. Amongst them there are:

St. Sebastian on the Tree.
 Leda with the Swan.
 The Rape of Europa.

He also executed the designs for the following woodcuts:

St. Jerome with the Lions.
 Diana and Actæon.
 The Three Graces.
 The Rape of Ganymede.

DEL POZZO, MATTEO, was a pupil of Squarcione, who lived in the middle of the 15th century. He worked during the years 1469 to 1471 at the decorations of the Cappella Gattamelata in the Santo of Padua, where he painted a 'St. Francis.' He died in 1472.

DEL PRADO, BLAS, (or DE PRADO,) was a Spanish painter, who was born in the vicinity of Toledo, about 1540, and was a scholar of Alonso Berruguete. There are some of his works in the chapel of St. Blas at Toledo, but they are much injured by time and the dampness of the situation. At Madrid there are also some pictures by this artist, particularly an altar-piece in the church of San Pedro, representing the 'Descent from the Cross,' which is evidently the work of a great master. In the early part of his life Prado was invited to visit the court of the Emperor of Morocco, to paint a portrait of his daughter, and returned to Spain amply rewarded for his labour. Whilst at Fez he painted the portraits of the Princesses of the Harem. He died at Madrid about 1600.

DEL RICCIO, DOMENICO, called BRUSASORCI, was born at Verona in 1494, and was a disciple of Giulio Romano. His greatest improvement, however, was derived from an attentive study of the works of Giorgione and Titian, at Venice. His picture of 'St. Roch,' in the church of the Augustinians at Verona, is entirely in the style of the latter, as well as some pictures of fabulous subjects in private collections. His genius did not confine itself to the style of any individual master; and his works at Mantua partake of the depth of colouring of Giorgione, and of the graceful design of Parmigiano. His picture of 'Phaëton,' in the ducal palace, though somewhat damaged by time, still charms by the ingenuity of the composition, the harmony of the colour, and the admirable fore-shortening. Brusasorci's greatest merit was in fresco painting; and in the many admirable works with which he embellished the public edifices and palaces, he united the erudition of the poet to the skill of the painter. His best historical work was the 'Cavalcade of Clement VIII. and Charles V. on their entry into Bologna,' in the saloon of the Casa Ridolfi, a grand composition, which is spoken of by Lanzi in terms of the highest praise. He died in 1567. 'Brusasorci,' which signifies a 'burner of rats,' was a nickname given to his father because of his inflicting that cruel punishment on all the rats caught in his house.

DEL RICCIO, FELICE, called BRUSASORCI 'the younger,' the son of Domenico del Riccio, was born at Verona about the year 1540, and was first instructed by his father, after whose death he continued his studies at Florence, under Jacopo Ligozzi. He painted for the private collections at Verona several pictures of Holy Families and Madonnas, with angels, which were admired for their grace and beauty of expression. His picture of the 'Forge of Vulcan, with the Cyclops,' in the collection of Count Gazzola, is designed in the best style of the Florentine school, and vigorously coloured. There are also some altar-pieces by him in the churches at Verona, of which the most admired is his picture of 'St. Helena,' in the church dedicated to that saint. He died in 1605.

DEL RINCON, ANTONIO, was born at Guadaluza in 1446, and may be considered as the father of the Spanish School. He studied at Rome, and on his return to Spain was taken into the service of Ferdinand the Catholic, who appointed him his painter, bestowed on him the order of Santiago, and made him groom of his chamber. Among the few of his works that remain are the altar-piece in the church of Robledo de Chabela, a town in the archbishopric of Toledo, and two portraits of Ferdinand and Isabella, in the church of San Juan de los Reyes, at Toledo. Several of his works perished in the fire that destroyed the palace of the Pardo in 1608. He died in 1500.

DEL RINCON, FERNANDO, was the son and scholar of Antonio del Rincon. He assisted Juan de Borgoña in various works in Toledo Cathedral, about 1511-14, and his name appears in the archives of the College of St. Ildefonso at Alcalá in 1518, when he received 500 maravedis for polishing the medallion of Cardinal Cisneros.

DELSENBACH, JOHANN ADAM, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1687. He worked for some years in Vienna, but died in his native city in 1765. He engraved a series of forty-nine views in Nuremberg, between the years 1713 and 1716, and several portraits for Roth-Scholtz's 'Icones Bibliopolarum et Typographorum,' published at Nuremberg in 1726-42. He also engraved some plates for Scheuchzer's Bible, as well as twenty-eight views in Vienna.

DEL SERO, GUCCIO. See AGHINETTI.

DEL SIGNORACCIO, PAOLO, called FRA PAOLINO DA PISTOJA, and IL PISTOJESE, was born at Pistoja in 1490, and died there from the effects of a sunstroke in 1547. He received his first instructions from his father, Bernardino d'Antonio Detti, called Signoraccio, an inferior artist, by whom some works still remain at Pistoja. Fra Paolino entered the Dominican Order at an early age, and studied under Fra Bartolommeo, after whose death he finished many of his pictures. A 'Virgin and Child enthroned, with Saints,' by him, dated 1528, is in San Paolo at Pistoja; a 'Crucifixion,' dated 1516, is in Santo Spirito in Siena; and in the Belvedere in Vienna is a 'Virgin and Child enthroned, surrounded by six Saints,' dated 1510.

DELVAUX, EDOUARD, a Flemish landscape painter, was born at Brussels in 1806. He studied under Van Assche, and afterwards became director of the Academy at Spa, where he died in 1862. He loved to represent wooded scenery, and delighted particularly in enormous trees. Amongst his works are:

View on the Senne near Fozest.

Hilly Country; Windy Weather (Brussels Museum).

View near the Sambre (Haarlem Museum).

DELVAUX, FERDINAND MARIE, a Belgian historical and genre painter, was born at Brussels in 1782. He studied under Andries Lens, and twice visited Italy. On his way back to his native country he was seized with fever, and died at Bologna in 1815. Amongst his best works are:

Brussels. Franciscan } Martyrdom of St. Stephen.

DELVAUX, REMI HENRI JOSEPH, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1748, according to some authorities, or at Lille in 1750, according to others. He engraved several plates for the 'Cabinet Choiseul' and the 'Galerie du Palais-Royal,' but the chief occupation of his life was to reproduce the designs of Moreau, whose illustrations to 'Les Amours de Psyché et de Cupidon' are Delvaux's most important work. He also engraved 'The Miraculous Draught of Fishes,' after Rubens; 'The Hunter,' after Metsu, and several portraits. He died in Paris in 1823. MARIE AUGUSTE DELVAUX, his daughter, born in 1786, learned the art of engraving from him.

DEL VERROCCHIO, ANDREA, was the son of Domenico di Michele de' Cioni, and was born at Florence in 1432. He is said to have been a pupil of Donatello, and like his contemporaries the Pollajuoli kept a goldsmith's shop. Vasari says of him, "He was a goldsmith, a master of perspective, a sculptor and carver, a painter, and a musician." He is chiefly celebrated for his works in bronze, and notably for the 'David' now in the Uffizi

Gallery at Florence; for the 'St. Thomas examining the Wounds of Christ' in Or San Michele in the same city; and for the model for the equestrian statue of Colleoni, at Venice. He has left but one authentic example of his powers as a painter—namely, the 'Baptism of Christ,' now in the Florence Academy, in respect to which Vasari states that he received the aid of his pupil, Leonardo da Vinci. Verrocchio has also the credit of having taught Pietro Perugino. He died at Venice in 1488.

DEL VISO, CRISTOBAL, a painter, and a monk of the order of St. Francis, died at the end of the 17th century at Madrid, where he resided in quality of commissary-general of the Indies. All the Saints of his order which are to be seen in the chapter-house of the convent of San Francisco at Cordova, are by him, and show his talent.

DEL ZUCCA, JACOPO, (or JACOPO ZUCCHI,) was born at Florence about the year 1541. He was a disciple of Giorgio Vasari, and assisted that master in several of his works. According to Baglione, he visited Rome when young, in the pontificate of Gregory XIII., where he was favoured with the patronage of Cardinal Ferdinando de' Medici, who employed him in some considerable fresco works for his palace. There are also several altar-pieces by him in the public edifices at Rome, of which the most worthy of notice are the 'Nativity of St. John,' in the church of San Giovanni Decollato, and the 'Descent of the Holy Ghost,' in San Spirito in Borgo. He died about 1604.

DE MAN, CORNELIS, a Dutch painter, was born at Delft in 1621. He was instructed in the rudiments of the art by an obscure painter, but, having a strong inclination for travel, he went to Paris whilst he was very young, and there met with sufficient encouragement to supply him with the means of extending his journey to Italy, which was the ultimate object of his desire. He travelled through Lyons to Lombardy, and stayed two years at Florence and three in Rome. He afterwards went to Venice, where the works of Titian, particularly his portraits, were the chief objects of his attention. After an absence of nine years, he returned to Holland, and established himself in his native city, where he distinguished himself as a painter of historical subjects and portraits, in the latter of which he particularly excelled. One of the most admired paintings at Delft is a large picture by him, containing the portraits of the most eminent medical men of his time, painted for the hall of the surgeons, which has more of the attributes of the Venetian than of the Dutch school. De Man died at Delft in 1706. There is by him in the Rotterdam Museum a 'Village Interior'; in the Darmstadt Gallery an 'Interior of a Gothic Church'; and in the Cassel Gallery another 'Church Interior.' There exist also four portraits etched by him.

DE MAN, J., was a Dutch painter who flourished in the 17th century. The Hague Gallery has a 'Peasant Wedding' signed with his name.

DE MARE, PIETER, a Dutch engraver, was born at Leyden in 1757, and died in the same town in 1796. He was a pupil of Abraham Delfos. Besides the 'Great Fire of Rotterdam,' after Haasbroek, the 'Last Judgment,' after Lucas van Leyden, and some Heads after Teniers, he executed a large number of plates after the works of Berchem, Frans van Mieris, and Cornelis de Visscher.

DEMER, JACOB. See DOMER.

DE MEULEMEESTER, JOSEPH KAREL, a Belgian engraver, was born at Bruges in 1771. He was a pupil of Bervic in Paris, and afterwards studied in the French school of engraving at Rome. After twenty-two years' absence he returned to Belgium in 1820, and settled at Antwerp, where he died in 1836. His most important work was the series of drawings which he made from the fifty-two compositions which form the 'Bible of Raphael' in the Loggie of the Vatican. These copies of the frescoes occupied his whole time for twelve years, and after his return home he undertook their reproduction, both by means of engraving and of water-colour, on a scale of one-ninth of the originals. Thirty-six were completed in water-colours, but twelve plates only were engraved at the time of his death. All, however, existed in outline, and these were finished, and the entire work published with text by the Baron de Reiffenberg, between the years 1844 and 1853. He also engraved the 'Virgin and Child,' after Andrea Solario, 'Cupid triumphant,' after Domenichino, and the portraits of Rubens and Michelangelo.

DE MEYER, H., was a Dutch landscape painter, who flourished about the middle of the 17th century. There are by him in the Amsterdam Museum, the 'Surrender of the town of Hulst,' and the 'Departure of Charles II. of England from Scheveningen.'

DE' MICHIELI. See DEI MICHIELI.

DE MOMPER, FRANS, a Flemish landscape painter, who was a native of Antwerp, is inscribed in the 'Liggere' of the Guild of St. Luke in that city in 1629-30. He died at Antwerp in 1660-61. There are by him in the Augsburg Gallery, 'St. Philip baptizing the Eunuch,' and a 'Rocky Scene,' in which the figures are by F. Francken and the animals by J. Brueghel.

DE MOMPER, JODOCUS, called at Rome EERVRUGHT, a painter and etcher, was born at Antwerp about 1559. He was the son of Bartholomeus De Momper, a dealer in pictures, who is believed also to have painted landscapes, and to have instructed his son in the rudiments of the art. He entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1581, and became its dean in 1611. He painted mountainous landscapes in a bold, free style, and appears to have taken his views from the romantic scenery of Switzerland, rather than the confined prospects in his own country. Contrary to the usual style of the Flemish artists, his works have nothing of the precise finishing which was so much admired in the pictures of Brueghel and Savery. His pictures are frequently decorated with figures by the elder Teniers, Jan Brueghel, F. Francken, and H. van Balen. Van Dyck painted his portrait among the celebrated artists of his country, and etched a plate of it himself. De Momper etched a few plates of landscapes from his own designs, which are scarce. He died at Antwerp in 1634 or 1635. J. Visscher, E. van Panderen, and Th. Galle have engraved landscapes after him. His works are to be seen in the galleries of Amsterdam, Bordeaux, Brunswick, Copenhagen, Darmstadt, Dresden, Madrid, and Venice, and as follow:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	The Archduke Maximilian of Austria hunting.
"	Cathedral.	The Repose in Egypt.
Berlin.	Museum.	Rocky Landscape.
"	"	Forest of Oaks.
"	"	Hermits.
"	"	A Flemish Village.

Vienna.	Belvedere.	Rocky Landscape, with St. Gothard.

DE MONI, LUDOWYCK, who was born at Breda in 1698, was a scholar of Van Kessel, of J. B. Biset, and of Philip van Dyk at the Hague. He studied the works of Gerard Dou, and imitated the manner of Mieris. He accompanied Philip van Dyk to Cassel, and afterwards settled at Leyden, where he died in 1771. His paintings consist of portraits and genre pieces of a simple and pleasing character, though cold in colouring. There are by him :

Amsterdam.	Museum.	A Woman watering Flowers.
Hague.	Gallery.	The Lacemaker.	1742.
Lille.	Museum.	Scène galante.
Paris.	Louvre.	A Family Scene.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	A Fish-Woman.
"	"	The Bon Vivant.	1723.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	A Fish-Seller.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	A Girl at a Window.

DE MOOR, KAREL, the elder, a Dutch painter and etcher, was born at Leyden in 1656. He was intended by his parents for one of the learned professions, but a decided inclination for art induced his father to place him under the care of Gerard Dou. His progress was considerable, but being desirous of distinguishing himself on a larger scale than was practised by that master, he was sent to Amsterdam, where he became a scholar of Abraham van den Tempel. The death of that painter, when De Moor was only sixteen years of age, obliged him to attach himself to other artists, and it was by Frans van Mieris and Godfried Schalcken that he was chiefly influenced. His first productions were portraits and domestic subjects, which were generally admired. The States of Holland commissioned him to paint a picture for their council chamber, leaving to him the choice of the subject, provided that it related to the administration of justice. On this occasion, De Moor proved himself capable of nobler work than that which had hitherto engaged his pencil. He painted in the town-hall at Leyden the terrible subject of ' Brutus condemning his two Sons to Death,' which he represented in the most awful and impressive manner. The celebrity of Karel De Moor reached Italy, and the Grand-Duke of Tuscany expressed a desire to place his portrait, painted by himself, among the illustrious artists in the Uffizi Gallery. It was accordingly sent to Florence in 1702, and the painter was honoured in return with a gold medal and chain. He was also commissioned by the Emperor of Germany to paint the portraits of Prince Eugene and the Duke of Marlborough, and these he executed so much to the satisfaction of that monarch, that he conferred on the artist the order of knighthood. One of his best works is in the hall of the magistrates at the Hague, representing the Burgomasters and Eschevins in the year 1719. The pictures of De Moor are cleverly composed, his figures are correctly drawn, and his colouring is clear and transparent. In some of his larger portraits he seems to have aimed at a style combining the chaste delicacy of Van Dyck with somewhat of the vigour of Rembrandt. Although his works are always very highly finished, his touch is firm and free. De Moor died at Warmond in 1738. He etched a few portraits, from his own designs, among which are those of Gerard Dou, Jan van Goyen, Frans van Mieris, and himself. The following are some of his principal works:

Antwerp.	Gallerij.	A Lady with a Bouquet. (This picture bears the forged signature of G. Metsu.)
Dresden.	Gallerij.	A Hermit praying.
Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Ecce Homo.
"	"	A Hermit. 1730.

DENANTO, FRANCESCO, of Savoy, a painter and engraver on wood, worked at Venice from 1440 to 1450, and is said to have been a disciple of Titian. Among other wood-cuts by him, there is a large one representing 'Christ healing the Lame Man.' It is executed in a spirited, tasteful style, and, being inscribed, Franciscus Denanto de Sabaudia, f., is probably from a design of his own. The annexed monogram is stated to be his:

DENBY, WILLIAM, an English painter, was born at Great Bookham, in Surrey, in 1819. He studied under Dyce in the School of Design at Somerset House, of which he became an assistant master in 1847. He subsequently superintended the Antique Department in the South Kensington School till his death in 1875, which was occasioned by illness contracted at Rome a few years previously. Amongst the few works which he exhibited at the Royal Academy may be mentioned: 'The Infant St. John,' 'A Girl reading,' and 'St. Peter and Rhoda.'

DE NECKER, JOBST, who also signed his name DE NECKER and DIENECKER, a most skilful wood-engraver, was a native of Antwerp. He settled at Augsburg about 1510, and, in conjunction with several other artists, executed the wood-cuts of Burgkmair's and Schläuflein's designs. He engraved the designs which the latter made to illustrate the allegorical poem of 'Theuerdank,' and also some of those which Burgkmair made for the 'Triumph' of the Emperor Maximilian. He was the inventor of chiaroscuro in three tints, of which the best example is the fine portrait of Hans Baumgartner, dated 1512, after the design of Burgkmair. His chief work is the 'Prodigal Son,' which appears to be likewise after Burgkmair. There is also by him an enlarged copy of Holbein's 'Dance of Death,' dated 1544. He died probably before 1561.

DAVID DE NECKER and SAMSON DE NECKER, who were wood-engravers and natives of Augsburg, were probably his sons, and HERCULES DE NECKER, another engraver on wood, is said to have been a son of David De Necker.

DE NEVE, FRANS, was born at Antwerp about the year 1627, and for some time studied the works of Rubens and Van Dyck. He afterwards visited Rome, where he resided for some years, and on his return to his native country gave proof of considerable ability as a painter of historical subjects; but he afterwards distinguished himself more as a painter of what are called heroic landscapes, with subjects from history or fable, in which he exhibited the fertility of his genius and the refinement of his taste. There are the following paintings by him :

Vienna.	Gallery.	The Archduke Leopold William of the Netherlands.
"	"	Charles II. of Spain.
"	Liechtenstein Gal.	The Judgment of Solomon.
"	"	The Murder of the Innocents.

De Neve likewise executed several etchings in a slight but very masterly style. They are embellished with figures, correctly drawn and cleverly grouped. Among them are :

Narcissus.

A Shepherdess playing the Tambourine.

DE NEYN, PIETER, who was born at Leyden in 1597, studied for some time under Esajas van de Velde, and gave promise of becoming a good landscape painter, in the manner of his master; but he afterwards applied his talents to architecture, in which he succeeded so well that he was appointed architect to his native city, Leyden, where he died in 1639.

DENIS, SIMON ALEXANDRE CLÉMENT, called 'den Schelen,' was born at Antwerp in 1755. After studying for some time under Antonissen, he went, in 1786, to Italy, and there married a Roman lady. He afterwards settled at Naples, where he became painter to the king, and died in 1813. Denis's pictures, which are for the most part landscapes, are executed in an Italian manner, and, with the exception of colour, are good in every respect. The Antwerp Museum contains three specimens of his art, and the Louvre one.

DENNEL, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, possibly a brother of Louis Dennel, was a pupil of Wille. He worked in Paris from 1760 to 1815, and engraved several plates for Filhol's 'Musée Français,' but his best works are the 'Essai du Corset,' and the 'Dédicace d'un Poème épique,' after P. A. Wille.

DENNEL, LOUIS, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1741, and died in Paris in 1806. He was a pupil of Beauvarlet, in whose style he engraved several plates, among which are the following :

The Triumph of Galatea; after Luca Giordano.

Pygmalion enamoured of his Statue; after Lagrenée.

The Triumph of Painting; after the same.

Painting cherished by the Graces; after the same.

DENNER, BALTHASAR, a German painter, whose works surprise by the toilsome servility of their finish, as much as they disgust by a total absence of all that is estimable in the art, was born at Hamburg in 1685. After being instructed in drawing by an obscure painter of that town, he went to Berlin in 1707, where his works were admired by Frederick II. The Duchess of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel invited him to her court in 1720, where he painted her portrait; and from thence he went to Hanover, where he met with so much encouragement that he came to London in 1721, and remained here until 1728. The only productions of this mechanic in the art, that have any claim to notice, are his heads of old men and women, which still find collectors among the admirers of patient and persevering precision. There are examples of these at Hampton Court and in the Louvre, as well as in the Galleries of Berlin, Cassel, Copenhagen, Dresden, Florence, Munich, St. Petersburg, and Vienna. He died at Rostock in 1749.

Brulliot mentions a B. DENNER, an engraver, who executed some views on the Tiber after Cornelis Meyer for a work published in 1683, but he gives no particulars of the artist.

DENNING, STEPHEN POYNTZ, an English miniature and portrait painter, was born in 1795. He was a pupil of John Wright, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1814 to 1851, but he employed himself chiefly in copying the works of other artists. In 1821, he became curator of the Dulwich Gallery, and resided at the college until his death in 1864. There is in the National Portrait Gallery a vignette sketch in water-colours by him of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He also painted portraits of Isaac D'Israeli and Sir Matthew Wood, Lord Mayor of London.

DENON, Baron DOMINIQUE VIVANT, (or DE NON,) born at Chalons on the Saône in 1747, was one of the train of artists and literary and scientific men who accompanied Napoleon Bonaparte to Egypt; where he wielded alternately the pen and the sword, it is said with equal dexterity. His great work on the Egyptian expedition, the 'Voyage de la Haute et Basse Égypte,' the numerous drawings for which were made by himself, is alone sufficient to immortalize his name. Napoleon was warmly attached to him, made him Director-General of the Museums, and consulted him on all matters connected with the fine arts. He took but little interest in politics, his thoughts being principally occupied by engraving, and by the fair sex, many of whose portraits he drew and etched during his diplomatic travels. He also etched the celebrated collection of painters' portraits in the Uffizi Gallery at Florence, but his most remarkable works were his reproductions of Rembrandt's etchings, especially those of the 'Resurrection of Lazarus,' the 'Death of the Virgin,' and the painter's own portrait. His large etching of Luca Giordano's 'Adoration of the Shepherds' opened to him in 1787 the doors of the Academy. One of his best-known portraits is that of Benjamin de La Borde, which was engraved by Masquelier and published in his 'Chansons.' Denon died in Paris in 1825, universally beloved for his good qualities, and admired for his talents and the purity of his taste. He resembled Voltaire, as well in his wit as in his features.

DE NOTER, HERMANUS AUGUST, the son of Pieter François De Noter, was born at Ghent in 1806. He was instructed by his father, and gave early promise of success. He painted landscapes, winter scenes, marine views, and subjects in the manner of Wouwerman. He died at Ghent in 1837.

DE NOTER, PIETER FRANÇOIS, a Flemish painter of landscapes and interiors, was born at Waellem, near Mechlin, in 1779. He became a professor in the Academy of Ghent and developed into an eminent painter of landscapes, marine subjects, winter scenes, views of the interiors of cities, and cathedrals. His most esteemed pictures are his views of cities and winter scenes; and during the latter part of his career he confined his talents almost exclusively to the representation of such subjects. His pencilling was delicate; and in this respect he may be considered as belonging to the Dutch school. His pictures are numerous and varied, and are to be found in the cabinets of Belgium, Holland, and the north of France. He also engraved a collection of landscapes, several of which are after Hobbema. He died at Ghent in 1842. Amongst his works, which show great minuteness of detail, are :

Brussels.	Museum.	View at Bruges.
"	"	View from Pont Neuf, Ghent.
Ghent.	Academy.	Abbey of St. Pierre, Ghent.
"	"	Winter view of Ghent.

DENTE, MARCO, called MARCO DA RAVENNA, an Italian engraver, born in the latter part of the 15th century, was one of the most eminent pupils of Marc-Antonio's school. His best works, remarkable for their purity and care of execution, are copies after Baccio Bandinelli, Giulio Romano, Raphael, and more especially Marc-Antonio, whom he imitated in a most deceptive manner. He generally used the accompanying monogram:

DENTONE, IL. See CURTI, GIROLAMO.

DEN TYN, LAMBERTUS, was born at Antwerp in 1770. He was a scholar of P. van Regemorter, and painted interiors by candle-light, and landscapes by moonlight. He died in 1816.

DENUËLLE, ALEXANDRE DOMINIQUE, a French decorative painter and architect, was born in Paris in 1818. He studied under Delaroche, and afterwards served on the Commission for Historical Monuments. He died at Florence in 1879. He was largely engaged in mural paintings for churches, and specimens of his art will be found in the Abbey of St. Denis, in St. Paul at Nîmes, St. Polycarp at Lyons, the Oratory at Birmingham, the Church of the Celestines at Avignon, and in Strassburg Cathedral.

DEN UYL, JAN (UIL, or VYL), is probably the artist by whom there are many drawings to be found in Holland, signed I. den Uyl, or I. den Uyl. There are only five of his etchings described: an Ox and a Sheep, a Bull, two Oxen, a Dog, and a Buffalo. In style they approach those of Nicolaes Moojaert, but do not equal them in merit. They appear to have been executed about the end of the 16th century.

DENY, JEANNE, was a French engraver of merit, who flourished in the last quarter of the 18th century. She executed some of Monnet's and Marillier's illustrations to the 'Contes' of Voltaire, of Desrais's designs for the 'Contes' of La Fontaine, and several of the plates for the 'Cabinet Choiseul' and the 'Costumes Français.'

MARTIAL DENY, her brother, likewise engraved subjects for the same works. The one or the other engraved also 'Le Restaurant' after Lavreince.

DENYS, FRANS, a Flemish painter of portraits, who may be ranked amongst the first artists of his time, is very often confounded with his son Jacob, a painter of less account. Frans was a native of Antwerp, and was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1631, but the dates of his birth and death are not known.

DENYS, JACOB, a Flemish painter, the son of Frans Denys, was born at Antwerp in 1644, and received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1664. He was a scholar of Erasmus Quellinus, the elder, but at an early age he went to Italy, where he passed the greater part of his life. His merit recommended him to the patronage of the Duke of Mantua, in whose employment he passed several years. He afterwards was invited to Florence, where he painted for the Palazzo Pitti several historical pictures, and the portrait of the Grand-Duke, with those of the principal personages of the court. After fourteen years' absence, he returned to his native country, and died at Antwerp in 1708. The style of Denys, both in his historical works and in his portraits, resembles that of Van Dyck, with something more of the Italian taste, though with less purity of colouring. There are in the Antwerp Gallery two works by him, a portrait of Gregorius Martens, head-man of the corporation of St. Luke (dated 1694), and a 'Study from the Living Model.'

DE PAPE, ABRAHAM, a Dutch painter, who lived probably at Leyden in the middle of the 17th century, is said to have been a scholar of Gerard Dou. Balkema, who is the only writer who notices him, says that in the sale of Cornelis van Dyck's collection of pictures in 1713, there was a picture by De Pape representing a 'Kitchen with a Woman paring Turnips'; and in Gerrit Muller's collection sold at Amsterdam in 1827, another of a 'Kitchen with a Woman plucking a Fowl.' The latter, he says, is more in the manner of Brekelenkam than of Gerard Dou. It is now in the Hague Gallery. He gives no particulars relative to his birth, place of residence, or death, though he says he was worthy of the school whence he proceeded. In the Marquis of Bute's collection is a picture signed by him of a 'Woman paring Apples,' and in the 'Exposition rétrospective' held at Brussels in 1873, was a painting by him, dated 1648, lent by the Comte G. Du Chastel.

DE PASSE. See VAN DE PASSE.

DE PATINIR, JOACHIM, (or DE PATENIER,) was born at Dinant about the year 1490. He resided chiefly at Antwerp, where he acquired considerable reputation as a landscape painter, and was admitted a master of the Guild of St. Luke in 1515. He was one of the earliest Flemish painters who painted landscapes independent of history. Many of his works exist, and, considering them as the earliest productions of their class, they fully justify the praise of Van Mander. In most of them is found a small clownish figure indecently exhibited. He also painted hunting scenes and battles, which, at that early period, were held in considerable estimation. Some historical pictures also are attributed to him. Those which are, perhaps, least liable to doubt are in the Gallery at Vienna. Albrecht Dürer found De Patinir to be the most agreeable of all the Flemish artists, and formed with him a close intimacy; he also painted his portrait. De Patinir died at Antwerp in 1524. The following paintings by him may be mentioned:

Antwerp.	Museum.	The Flight into Egypt.
		The Adoration of the Magi.
Berlin	Gallery.	The Conversion of St. Hubert.
"	"	The Rest on the Flight into Egypt.
Brussels.	Museum.	Mater Dolorosa.
London.	Nat. Gall.	The Crucifixion.
"	"	St. John the Evangelist.

DEPAULIS, ALEXIS JOSEPH, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1792, and died there in 1867.

DE PAULIS, ANDREAS. See PAULI.

DE PAY, JOHANN, was born at Riedlingen in Swabia in 1609, and died at Munich in 1660. His own portrait, by himself, dated 1655, is in the Munich Gallery.

DE PETERS, ANTON, a painter and etcher, was born at Cologne in 1723, and studied in Paris under Greuze. He was raised to the rank of a noble by the king of France, and appointed court painter by the Danish king, Christian IV., as well as by Prince Charles of Lorraine. The Revolution drove him back to his native country, where he lived in poverty, and died at Cologne in 1795. There are by him:

PAINTINGS.

Death of Cleopatra (in miniature upon ivory).
A Girl leaving the Bath (Herr Merlo, Cologne).
The Girl with the Carp.

ETCHINGS.

Virgin and Child, in a landscape.
Holy Family on the Flight to Egypt (after Rembrandt).

DE POORTER, WILLEM, a native of Haarlem, who flourished from 1630 to 1645, was a pupil of Rembrandt, and his works, executed after that master, display considerable merit, and are somewhat rare. He usually painted historical subjects, but sometimes undertook interiors. His chef-d'œuvre is 'Solomon worshipping false Gods,' in the possession of M. Coster in Paris. Besides this, there are in public galleries the following works by him:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Samson and Delilah.
Brussels.	Arenberg Coll.	An Interior.
Cassel.	Gallery.	The Circumcision.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	Mercury and Proserpine.
		Peace. 1643.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Ahasuerus and Esther. 1645.

"	"	The Virgin and Child, with St. Joseph and St. Simeon; after Rembrandt .
Rotterdam.	Museum.	An Allegory of Human Instability. 1630.

DEQUEVAUVILLER, FRANÇOIS JACQUES, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1783. He was a pupil of his father, N. B. F. Dequevauviller, and of Boucher-Desnoyers. His principal works were portraits, among which may be mentioned:

M. Daigrefeuille; after Rigaud.
Cardinal de Beausset.
The Duke de Berry.
Portrait of Erasmus; after Holbein.
Portrait of De Kratzer; after the same.

DEQUEVAUVILLER, NICOLAS BARTHÉLEMI FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, born at Abbeville in 1745, was one of the best pupils of J. Daullé. He died in Paris in 1807. His best works are 'L'Assemblée au Salon' and 'L'Assemblée au Concert,' both after Lavreince. He also engraved some landscapes in a neat, pleasing manner, including the following:

Two French Naval Battles; after Rossel.
A Landscape; after Wynants.
Noon, a Landscape with figures; after Berchem.
Evening, the etching by Weisbrod; after the same.
View on the Tiber; after Asselyn.
View of Tivoli; after A. van der Werff.
A Landscape, with Cattle; after D. van Bergen.
A View of Landeck; after C. Brand.
A View on the Adige; after the same.
A Landscape, with Ruins; after F. Decker.
The Bathers; after C. Poelenburg.

DE RAM, JAN, a Dutch engraver, was born about 1680. He was a scholar of Romeyn De Hooghe, but was more free and correct than his instructor. He worked for the booksellers, and also engraved in mezzotint, of which style there is a specimen in a portrait of Christian V., King of Denmark. The date of his death is not known.

DERBY, ALFRED THOMAS, a water-colour painter, was born in 1821. He was the eldest son of the miniature painter, William Derby. After having studied at the Royal Academy, his first attempts were in oil, but he afterwards painted in water-colour, assisting his father in his copies of pictures by well-known modern artists. After his father's death he still continued in the same line, painting many exact and carefully-finished copies, besides some original works. He frequently exhibited portraits at the Royal Academy. He died at Hammsmith in 1873.

DERBY, WILLIAM, an English miniature painter and copyist, was born in 1786, at Birmingham, where he received instruction from Joseph Barker. In 1808 he came to London and executed drawings for the 'Stafford Gallery,' and in 1825 for Lodge's 'Portraits.' He also made copies of ancestral portraits for Lord Derby. In 1838 he was struck with paralysis, but was able to pursue his avocations till his death in 1847. There are two water-colour drawings by him in the South Kensington Museum: 'A Fisherman,' and 'A Man holding a book.'

DE REYN, JAN, was born at Dunkirk about the year 1610, and went when he was young to Antwerp, where he became a scholar of Van Dyck. Such was his progress under that master, that he was invited to accompany him to England, where he continued to assist him until the death of his illustrious instructor. He afterwards established himself in his native town, where he painted several admirable pictures for the churches, and was much employed as a portrait painter. His principal works for the churches at Dunkirk were the 'Death of the four Royal Martyrs,' for the church of St. Eloi; and the 'Baptism of Totila,' for the church of the English convent. There are many of his portraits in private collections, which are little inferior to those of Van Dyck. The principal altar-piece in the parochial church of St. Martin, at Bergues St. Vinox, near Dunkirk, is by this master: it represents 'Herodias bringing the Head of St. John to Herod.' De Reyn died at Dunkirk in 1678. The Brussels Museum has a Female Portrait by him, dated 1637.

DE RITRATTI, FRANCESCO. See NEGRI.

DE ROORE, JACQUES, was born at Antwerp in 1686. He was the son of a goldsmith, who intended to bring him up to his own profession, but his father died when he was very young, and his mother permitted him to indulge the inclination he had shown for art. He was at first placed under the care of Louis van der Bosch, under whom he studied for two years, and then entered the school of Caspar Jacobus van Opstal. He painted historical subjects and conversations; in the former, he adopted the style of Richard van Orley, and in the latter imitated that of the younger Teniers. His works were held in the highest estimation, and he was loaded with commissions, not only for the collections of Brabant and Flanders, but also for those of Holland. When not more than twenty years of age he was received into the Academy at Antwerp, and was considered one of the ablest artists of his time. He was much employed in embellishing the saloons of the principal mansions, and in painting the ceilings of the public edifices. One of his most admired performances was a saloon and ceiling, representing the 'History of Pandora,' painted for the family of Hasselaer, in 1740. He died at Antwerp in 1747.

DE' ROTARI, PIETRO. See DEI ROTARI.

DERSON, N., a French engraver, appears from the inscription on one of his prints to have been of Reims in Champagne. We have by this artist a plate of the stately façade of the cathedral of Notre-Dame at Reims, neatly etched and finished with the graver, with several figures spiritedly touched in the style of Callot, and dated 1625.

DE RTINGER, ERNST, who was born in 1816, engraved after Von der Embde, T. Schütz, W. Kaulbach, and other artists. He died at Stuttgart in 1865.

DE RUEL, JOHAN BAPTIST, was born at Antwerp in 1634. He was introduced as a singer to the court of the Elector of Mayence, and was there instructed in painting by Jan Thomas. He afterwards settled at Würzburg, where he executed altar-pieces and portraits. A portrait by him is in the Munich Gallery. He died in 1685, or, according to others, in 1715.

DERUET, CLAUDE, a painter and engraver, was born at Nancy, in Lorraine, in 1588, and died in the same town in 1660. He was a scholar of Claude Henriet, and living in habits of intimacy with his fellow-citizen Callot, he adopted the style of that master, and engraved in it a few plates, of which the best are:

Charles IV., Duke of Lorraine, on Horseback. 1628.
The Carrière, or Rue Neuve, at Nancy.
The Ducal Palace at Nancy.

DE RUYTER, JAN, was a Dutch painter of scenes from every-day life, who was still living in 1822. A 'Cook in a Kitchen' by him, in the Amsterdam Gallery, is dated 1820.

DE RUYTER, N., was a Flemish engraver, who flourished about the year 1688. He appears to have imitated the style of Paulus Pontius, but without much success. Among others, we have a plate by him representing 'Diana reposing after the Chase,' after Gerard Valk.

DE RY, DANCKERTS. See DANCKERTS DE RY.

DE RYCKE, DANIEL, a Flemish painter, was a native of Ghent, who flourished there and at Bruges between the years 1462 and 1469. His mural and decorative paintings and portraits caused him to be thought one of the most distinguished painters of his time, but his works have unfortunately perished by the hands of the Iconoclasts.

DE RYCKE, WILLEM, (DE RYCK, or DE RYKE.) a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1635. He was brought up a goldsmith, but quitted that business to study painting, and made some proficiency in history and portraits, though he never reached any eminence. He visited England in the reign of King William III., and died in London in 1697. He is also known as an engraver, and among his plates are the following:

Susanna surprised by the Elders.
St. Catharine before her Judges.
Mars and Venus. 1683.

His daughter, CATHARINA DE RYCKE, was a talented artist.

DE RYCKER, A., was a Flemish painter, who in 1591 executed for the church of St. Jacques at Antwerp a triptych, the centre panel of which, representing 'Christ on the Cross, between the two Thieves,' has since disappeared. The wings, however, which contain the portraits of the donor, Jan Doncker, and his wife, are sufficient to place the painter among the most distinguished masters of his time. There are in the Antwerp Gallery the two wings of another triptych which are ascribed to him, but the archives of the Guild of St. Luke fail to afford any information about this artist.

DE RYE, AEGIDIUS, was a painter who flourished in the Netherlands about 1597, which date is on a 'Burial of St. Catharine' by him in the Vienna Gallery.

DE RYNG, PIETER, a Flemish painter of subjects of still-life, flourished about the middle of the 17th century. In the Museum at Amsterdam there is a picture by him, representing a table covered with blue velvet, on which are various kinds of fruit, oysters, and other shell-fish. There is in the Antwerp Museum a fruit piece by him, dated 1651, and in the Dresden Gallery is a picture of shell-fish and fruit with his monogram—a ring with a diamond. Some twenty or thirty years ago several of his works were brought to England by dealers; but it is apprehended that they have changed their name, and assumed that of Jan Davidsz De Heem.

DESALLIER-D'ARGENVILLE, ANTOINE JOSEPH, a French amateur and writer on art, was born in Paris in 1680. He etched several plates of subjects and landscapes from his own designs, and was the author of the well-known 'Abrégé de la Vie des plus fameux Peintres,' published first in 1745-52. He died in Paris in 1765.

DE SALZEA, PIETER. See DE FOUR.

DE SAN, GERARD, was born at Bruges in 1754, and studied under Légillon at the Academy of that city. In 1781 he travelled about France and to Rome, where he painted for four years, and received in 1782 a silver medal from the Papal Academy for drawing from the nude. He further received two gold medals from the Academy of Parma. On returning home he devoted himself to the painting of portraits, and in 1790 was made director of the Bruges Academy. After five years, however, the Revolution caused him to proceed to Gröningen, and in 1798 he became president of the newly-founded Academy in that town. He died at Gröningen in 1829.

DESANGIVES, NICOLAS, a French painter on glass, who acquired a great reputation early in the 16th century for his windows in the church of St. Geneviève, and in the charnel-house of the church of St. Paul, in Paris.

DESANI, PIETRO, was born at Bologna, according to Malvasia, in 1595, and was a disciple of Lionello Spada, under whom he became a very fair painter of history. He resided chiefly at Reggio, where there was scarcely a church or a public edifice that did not contain some of his works. Among the most esteemed were the 'Crucifixion,' with the Virgin Mary, the Magdalen, and St. John, in the Chiesa del Corpo di Christo, and 'St. Francis receiving the Stigmata,' in the church of the Padri Zoccolanti. The compositions of Desani are masterly, and his drawing correct; but there is a crudity and hardness in his colouring that give to his pictures a disagreeable effect. He died in 1657.

DES BATAILLES, MARTIN. See MARTIN, JEAN BAPTISTE.

DESBOIS, MARTIAL, who was born in Paris in 1630, and died there in 1700, was an excellent engraver in mezzotint. He engraved 'Moses striking the Rock,' after Ciro Ferri, and other plates after Paolo Veronese, Guercino, N. Poussin, &c.

DESCAMPS, GUILLAUME DESIRÉ JOSEPH, a painter and engraver, was born at Lille in 1779. He was a pupil of Vincent, but, obtaining the "prix de Rome," he improved himself by travelling in Italy, and became court-painter of Murat in Naples. He died in Paris in 1858. The following paintings were executed by him:

- The Women of Sparta (in the Lille Museum). 1808.
- The Martyrdom of St. Andrew (in St. André, Lille).
- Murat on board the Ceres distributing Rewards (engraved by himself).
- The Conversion of St. Augustine (in St. Eustache, Paris).
- The Apotheosis of Cardinal Tommasi (in San Martino di Monti, Rome).
- The Neapolitan Troops marching out against Capri.

As an engraver he also produced six plates from the 'Fable of Psyche.'

DESCAMPS, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French historical and subject painter, was born at Dunkirk in 1706. He studied under D'Ulin and Largillière, and painted several pictures for Louis XV., illustrating that monarch's coronation and visits to Havre. In 1764 he was received into the Academy, on which occasion he painted his best known work, 'A Mother in a Kitchen with her two Children,' which is now in the Louvre. His latter years were chiefly spent at Rouen, where he was director of a School of Design, which he had been instrumental in founding. In 1753-64 he published, 'La Vie des Peintres Flamands, Allemands, et Hollandois,' and in 1769 his 'Voyage pittoresque de la Flandre et du Brabant.' He died at Rouen in 1791.

DESCOMBES, Le Chevalier, a French painter, was a disciple of Largillière, of whom he painted a portrait, which has been engraved by Petit.

DES COUDRES, LUDWIG, an historical, portrait, and genre painter, was born at Cassel in 1820, and pursued his first studies under J. von Schnorr, at the Academy of Munich. He travelled in Italy in 1844-5, and placed himself in 1848-9 under Karl Sohn at Düsseldorf, where for a time he settled, but in 1855 he was appointed professor in the School of Arts at Carlsruhe, in which city he died in 1878. Among his best pictures we find:

- Francesca da Rimini. 1850.
- The Weeping Magdalen. 1852.
- The Lamentation before the Burial (Carlsruhe Gallery). 1855.
- The Adoration of the Shepherds (in possession of the Grand-Duke of Baden). 1857.
- The Holy Women before the Cross (in St. Nicholas, Hamburg). 1863.
- Iphigenia (in possession of the Grand-Duke of Baden). 1865.
- Under the Red Cross. 1872.
- Psyche and Pan.
- Happy Existence—a child's picture.

DESCOURTIS, CHARLES MELCHIOR, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1753, and died in the same city in 1820. He was a pupil of Janinet, and engraved in colour after his style. He executed views in Paris and in Rome after De Machy, but his best works are a 'Village Fair,' a 'Village Wedding,' 'The Quarrel,' and 'The Tambourine,' after Taunay.

DE SEEÛW, MARINUS. See ROYMERSWALEN.

DESENNE, ALEXANDRE JOSEPH, was born in Paris in 1785, and showed at an early age a taste for art. He was in his time the most celebrated designer of vignettes, and illustrated the works of no less than twenty-seven authors. He died in Paris in 1827.

DE' SERAFINI, SERAFINO. See DEI SERAFINI.

DES GODETS, ANTOINE, a French designer and engraver, as well as architect, was born in Paris in 1653, and died in the same city in 1728. He published in 1682 a folio volume of plates, entitled, 'Les Edifices antiques de Rome,' engraved from his own designs; and he etched the frontispiece himself.

D D

DESGOFFE, ALEXANDRE, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1805. He studied under Ingres, and travelled in Italy from 1837 to 1842. He usually introduced into his landscapes historical or mythological incidents, and he also painted some Biblical subjects. The Luxembourg Gallery has his 'Fury of Orestes,' and the Museum of Lyons his 'Cyclops.' He decorated the Salle des Etudes of the Bibliothèque Nationale in 1868, and died in Paris in 1882.

DES GRANGES, D., was an obscure artist, who is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of some very indifferent frontispieces and book-plates; among others, the ornamental title to a book called 'Bethel, or a Form for Families,' 1634.

DESHAYS DE COLLEVILLE, JEAN BAPTISTE HENRI, a French historical painter, was born at Rouen in 1729. He was first instructed by his father, and afterwards became a pupil of Boucher, whose daughter he married. He also visited Italy, and was received into the Academy in 1759. He excelled particularly in painting altar-pieces, one of the best of which is a 'St. Jerome,' in the church of Le Plessis-Piquet (Seine). Deshays died in Paris in 1765. He had a younger brother, FRANÇOIS BRUNO DESHAYS DE COLLEVILLE, who painted portraits, but had not a spark of genius.

DESJOBERT, LOUIS REMY EUGÈNE, a French landscape painter, was born at Chateauroux in 1817, and died in Paris in 1863. As a specimen of his painting may be mentioned 'St. Ouen's Bay, Jersey.'

DESMAISONS, PIERRE ÉMILE, a French lithographer, died in 1880, aged 68, at Montlignon (Seine-et-Oise). Amongst his most successful works are his reproductions of paintings by Vidal and Edouard Frère.

DESMARAIS, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in the latter part of the 18th century. He studied at Rome from 1786 to 1790, and subsequently became professor and vice-president of the Academy at Carrara, where he died in 1814.

DESMARÉES, GEORG, (or DES MARÉES,) a portrait painter, was born in 1697 at Stockholm, where he was instructed in painting by Peter Martin van Meytens, whose assistant he afterwards became. In 1724 he made a stay in Amsterdam, and in the following year in Nuremberg and then in Venice, where he received further tuition from Piazzetta. In 1731 he settled in Munich, where he became court painter, and where he continued to reside till his death in 1776. A portrait of himself and one of his daughter are, with a third in the Munich Gallery, and other portraits by him are at Augsburg.

DESMARQUETS, PAULINE. See AUZOU.

DESMOLES, ARNAUD, a French painter on glass, flourished about 1510. He executed some windows in the cathedral at Auch, between the years 1509 and 1513, by order of the Cardinal de Sourdis.

DESNOYERS, AUGUSTE GASPARD LOUIS BOUCHER, BARON. See BOUCHER-DESNOYERS.

DESPERRIÈRES, Madame, a French portrait painter, exhibited at the Salon from 1812 to 1819. A portrait of the Duchess of Angoulême by her is in the Bordeaux Museum.

DESPLACES, LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1682. He engraved a considerable number of plates, possessing great merit, some of which are in the style of Gérard Audran, and though he was unequal to that distinguished artist, his drawing is correct, and his works evince excellent taste. His best prints are those after Jouvenet. He worked with the point and the graver. He died in Paris in 1739. The following are his principal works:

SUBJECTS ENGRAVED FOR THE CROZAT COLLECTION.

Jupiter and Danaë; after Titian.
 Paolo Veronese between Virtue and Vice; after Paolo Veronese.
 Wisdom accompanying Hercules; after the same.
 Christ washing the Disciples' Feet; after G. Muziano.
 The Adoration of the Magi; after Giulio Romano.
 The Triumph of Titus and Vespasian; after the same.

 The Abbé de Rancé; after Rigaud.
 Charles François Silvestre; after Hérault.

DESPORTES, ALEXANDRE FRANÇOIS, a French painter of hunting scenes and animals, was born at Champigneul, in Champagne, in 1661. He was a scholar of Nicasiaus Bernaert, a Flemish painter then resident in Paris, who had studied under Snyder, but who died before his pupil had made any great progress in the art. Without further instruction, he applied himself with great assiduity to the study of nature, not only in animals and landscape, but in perfecting himself in the drawing of the figure after the Academy model. Desportes was not satisfied, as is frequently the case with artists in that branch, with painting the animals, and leaving to others the more important part of the picture. He painted the hunters, as well as their game, and his figures are well drawn and full of character. He was much employed by Louis XIV. in the palaces of Versailles, Fontainebleau, and Meudon, and was made painter to the king. In 1699 he became a member of the Academy in Paris. Walpole does not mention him in the 'Anecdotes,' but in 1713 he accompanied the Duke of Aumont in his embassy to England, and here painted several pictures. He died in Paris in 1743. There are twenty-seven of his works in the Louvre. Among them is his own portrait, painted for his reception at the Academy in 1699.

DESPORTES, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, an animal painter, and the son of Alexandre François Desportes, was born in Paris in 1695, and died there in 1774. A large picture of 'Still Life' by him is in the Louvre; it constituted his reception painting on his entry into the Academy in 1723.

DESPORTES, NICOLAS, a nephew and pupil of Alexandre François Desportes, was born in 1718. He at first painted animals, but afterwards, under the tuition of H. Rigaud, devoted himself to portrait painting. He was received into the Academy in 1757 with a picture of 'A Wild Boar pursued by a Dog.' He died in 1787.

DES PREZ, F., was a French engraver on wood, who resided in Paris about the year 1573. He executed a large plan of the town of Rochelle, with the additional fortifications made at the time it was besieged in the civil wars in 1573. It is inscribed, A Paris, par F. des Prez, rue Montorgueil au bon pasteur.

DESPREZ, LOUIS JEAN, a French historical painter and architect, was born at Lyons in 1740. He produced some works in Paris, and then went to Rome, where he assisted in the production of the 'Voyage pittoresque de Naples.' He was patronized by Gustavus III., with whom he went to Sweden, and for whom he painted decorations, battle-pieces, &c. He died at Stockholm in 1804. His 'Costumes of Sweden' have been published.

DESROCHERS, ETIENNE JOHANDIER, a French engraver, was born at Lyons about 1661. He engraved and published upwards of 600 portraits, which must have had in their day some popularity, for in 1723 he was elected a member of the Academy. He died in Paris in 1741.

DES RUINES, ROBERT. See ROBERT, HUBERT.

DESTOUCHES, PAUL ÉMILE. See DETOUCHE.

DES TUILERIES, BERNARD. See PALISSY.

DE SUBLEO, MICHELE, (or DE SOBLEO,) was a native of Flanders, who went when young to Bologna. He was educated in the school of Guido Reni. He painted some pictures for the churches at Bologna, especially for that of Gesù e Maria, which partake of the style of his master, with something of the vigour of Guercino. He resided during a great part of his life at Venice, where there are several of his works, the most esteemed of which is an altar-piece in the church of the Carmelites, representing some Saints of that order. In the Bologna Gallery are four works by him: a 'St. Agnes,' a 'Virgin,' 'The Apparition of the Virgin to St. Augustine and others' (from the church of Gesù e Maria), and 'St. John the Baptist preaching.'

DETOUCHE, PAUL ÉMILE, called DESTOUCHES, a pupil of David, Guérin, Gros, and Girodet, was born at Dampierre in 1794, and was a painter of history and portraits, but distinguished himself more in genre pieces. His pleasing scenes of family life are spirited and carefully executed. 'The Orphan,' 'The Young Conscript,' and 'The Wounded Student' are considered his best paintings. He died in Paris in 1874.

DÉTREZ, AMBROISE, who was born in Paris in 1811, studied at Lille, and subsequently became Director of the Painting School at Valenciennes, where he died in 1863. In the Lille Museum are a 'Presentation in the Temple' and two Landscapes by him.

DETROY. See TROY.

DEUERLEIN, JOHANN HIERONYMUS, was a painter of Würzburg, who in 1619 became a pupil of Büler, and was admitted in 1624 into the Brotherhood of St. Luke. He painted the 'Triumph of Death' in the choir of St. Peter's Church at Würzburg, and a votive picture in the cloister of the Cathedral.

DEUREN, O. VAN, is only known by his signature, and the date 1624, on a picture of a 'Hermit' now in the Dresden Gallery.

DEURER, LUDWIG, a son of Peter F. Deurer, was born at Mannheim in 1806, and studied at Nuremberg, Munich, and Rome. He was an excellent painter of historical subjects, and painted 'The Knights of Malta before Jerusalem.' He died in 1847.

DEURER, PETER FERDINAND, a painter of history and portraits, who was born at Mannheim in 1779, studied art at Düsseldorf and Cassel. For saving the pictures of the gallery of his native town, during the siege by the French, he was made director of it and professor at the Academy. In 1826 he went to Rome and made a copy of Raphael's 'Burial of Christ,' which copy is now in the Art Hall at Karlsruhe. He died at Kissingen in 1844.

DEUTSCH, MANUEL. See MANUEL.

DE VADDER, LODEWIJK, was born at Brussels about 1560. It is not known by whom he was instructed, but he may be ranked amongst the ablest landscape painters of his country. From the grandeur of his style, and the picturesque beauty of his scenery, it is probable that he resided some time in Italy, where he appears to have made the works of Titian the particular objects of his study, as his best productions bear a striking resemblance to the landscapes of that master. The forms of his rocks and trees are noble and select, and his distances are distinguished by a vapoury degradation. The pictures of De Vadder are deservedly esteemed in his native country, where they are found in the choicest collections. His merit would have been more generally known in England, had not his works been frequently imposed upon the public under borrowed names. He is said to have died at Brussels about 1623, but his death occurred probably earlier. A 'Landscape' by him is in the Darmstadt Gallery. There are a few spirited etchings of landscapes by this artist, executed in the style of Lucas van Uden.

DE VALCK. See VALCK.

DE' VECCHI, GIOVANNI. See DEI VECCHI.

DEVEMY, LOUIS, who was born at Lille in 1808, first practised as an advocate. He adopted art as a profession in 1845, and established himself in Paris in 1852. He died there in 1874. A picture of 'Still Life' by him is in the Museum of his native city.

DEVERIA, EUGÈNE FRANÇOIS MARIE JOSEPH, who was born in Paris in 1805, was a brother of Achille Deveria; he frequented the school of Girodet. Besides several historical pieces, he painted for the Museum at Versailles, the ceilings in the Louvre, the Palais Royal, and Notre-Dame de Lorette. His portraits of Marshals Brissac and Crèvecœur are at Versailles. His own is in the Uffizi; and the Louvre possesses his 'Birth of Henri IV.' (1827). His 'Death of Joan of Arc' is in the Museum at Angers. He died at Pau in 1865.

DEVERIA, JACQUES JEAN MARIE ACHILLE, born in Paris in 1810, was a painter and lithographer. He was a pupil of Lafitte and of Girodet. His subjects were mostly of a religious character, and painted in a pleasing manner. He died in Paris in 1857. His best claim to notice, however, rests upon his successful administration of the department of engravings in the Bibliothèque Nationale, to the direction of which he was appointed in 1849. Before that date chaos had reigned supreme, and it was due to his patient labour, as well as to his refined taste and sound learning, that order by degrees took its place.

DEVIGNE. See VIGNE.

DEVIS, ANTHONY T., an English landscape painter, the brother of Arthur Devis, was born in 1729. He exhibited a few times at the Society of Arts and at the Royal Academy. During the latter part of his life he lived at Albury, in Surrey, where he died in 1817. His works are in the early manner of water-colour drawings. There is a Landscape by him, dated 1772, in the South Kensington Museum.

DEVIS, ARTHUR, was born at Preston in Lancashire, about the year 1711, and was the pupil of Peter Tillemans. He painted in a variety of ways, sometimes portraits, but mostly small whole-lengths and conversation pieces. He was an exhibitor at the Society's Rooms, in the Strand, in 1761, but never joined either the Chartered Society or the Royal Academy. He died at Brighton in 1787.

DEVIS, ARTHUR WILLIAM, a portrait and historical painter, was born in London in 1763, and received his first instruction in art from his father, Arthur Devis. He made rapid progress, and obtained, at an earlier age than is usual, a silver medal from the Royal Academy, and, what was of more importance, the good opinion of Sir Joshua Reynolds. In his twentieth year he was appointed by the East India Company draughtsman to accompany Captain Wilson in the 'Antelope' in a voyage round the world. The vessel was wrecked, and he sustained many hardships. He afterwards went to Bengal, where he continued the exercise of his art, and painted the picture of 'Lord Cornwallis receiving the two sons of Tippoo Saib as hostages.' He returned to England in 1795, and painted for Mr. Alexander Davison two historical pictures; the one representing the 'Detection of Babington's Conspiracy, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth'; and the other 'Archbishop Langton showing Magna Charta to the Barons, at Bury St. Edmund's.' The portraits in this picture are not those of the actual descendants of the barons, but of noblemen of distinction who were desirous of being so represented. He painted for the same gentleman an excellent portrait of Nelson. He also painted the 'Death of Nelson' on board the Victory. His last picture was one commemorative of the death of the Princess Charlotte. His life was one of vicissitudes and difficulties, and was terminated by a stroke of apoplexy in 1822. Devis, as an historical painter, was equal, if not superior, to any of his day, but circumstances did not conduce to bring his powers into action. His picture of the 'Detection of Babington's Conspiracy' was painted in competition with some of the most eminent members of the Royal Academy, West, Northcote, Copley, Smirke, Wilkie, and others; and, unquestionably, was the best in composition, delineation of character, truth of colour, and management of chiaroscuro. His own portrait is in the composition. The National Portrait Gallery possesses his portrait of Governor Herbert, painted at Calcutta in 1791.

DE VISCH, MATTHIAS, was born at the village of Reningen, in 1702. He studied under Joseph van den Kerkhove at Bruges, became a student of the Academy, and obtained the first prize in 1721. He went to Paris in 1723; thence to Italy, where he remained nine years. On his return to Bruges he painted the picture of 'Hagar and Ishmael in the Desert' for the church of St. James, and opened a school of design; and he is remembered more for his zeal in furthering the knowledge of painting among the youth of Bruges than for any superior talent shown by him in the practice of it. He painted the portrait of Maria Theresa for the city of Bruges, and several for other communities of Flanders. He collected materials for a history of painting in Belgium, which he gave to Descamps, who made use of them for his 'Lives of the Flemish Painters.' De Visch died in 1765, it is said from over-exertion in endeavouring to make the students of his own Academy rival those of that of Antwerp, upon the restoration of the former after its destruction by fire in 1755.

DE VLAMYNCK, PIERRE JEAN, a Belgian engraver, was born at Bruges in 1795. He received his first instruction in drawing in the studio of Odevaere, after whose 'Narcisse' he executed in 1820 his first plate. Having obtained from the King of the Netherlands a pension for four years, he went to Paris, and there, under the supervision of Dien, he engraved the 'Battle of Nieuport.' His chief work was the 'Ascension,' after Rubens, upon which he was engaged for many years. He also engraved portraits of Raphael, Rembrandt, Odevaere (after Diez), and Count Frédéric de Mérode. There are likewise many drawings in black chalk and several lithographic portraits by him. Besides these he executed in lithography some of the masterpieces of Flemish art which adorn his native city—Memlinc's 'Shrine of St. Ursula,' the triptych of the 'Mystic Marriage of St. Catharine,' the 'Adoration of the Magi,' and the 'Vierge à la pomme.' He died at Bruges in 1850.

DE VLIEGER, SIMON, was born at Rotterdam about 1600, and acquired a considerable reputation as a painter of sea-pieces and landscapes, although it is not known by whom he was instructed. He had the credit of being the master of Willem van de Velde, the younger, and, though his merit was eclipsed by the brilliant talents of his disciple, his pictures are deservedly placed in the choicest collections. In 1634 he entered the Guild at Delft, and in 1643 became a citizen of Amsterdam. He was still living in 1656, but died probably at Amsterdam shortly before 1660. This painter deserves more notice than has been bestowed on him. Like Van Goyen, he is judged by his inferior productions, or by pictures that have been injured by time, or by injudicious cleaning. His selections are picturesque, his compositions are not crowded with unnecessary objects, his execution is remarkably free, and in the representation of the effects of a gale, or fresh breeze, he approaches the grandeur of Ruysdael. Unfortunately his colours, in many instances, have faded, or vanished altogether, particularly in the sky, so that his pictures appear cold or murky; still a master mind and hand may be discerned. He etched about twenty plates of landscapes, rivers, canals, and animals; some of which resemble in style those of Waterloo. The following are some of his principal works:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	The Regatta. 1655.
"	"	Naval Combat on the Slaak. 1633.
Antwerp.	Museum.	A Calm Sea.
Berlin.	Gallery.	A Sea-piece.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Storm at Sea.
Munich.	Gallery.	Storm at Sea.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	The Arrival of the Prince of Orange at Flushing.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Calm Sea, with many ships (a master-piece).

DEVLIEGHER, SERAFYN, a Belgian painter, was born at Eecloo in 1806. He was at first a pupil of Antoon De Poorter, afterwards of Geirnaert, and finally a student of the Academy at Ghent. He painted genre subjects and portraits, and became director of the Academy at Alost, where he died in 1848.

DE VOIS, ADRIAAN, or ARY, was born at Leyden in 1641. His father was a celebrated organist, and was desirous of bringing his son up to the same profession; but the latter had so little taste for music, and so decided a disposition for painting, that he was induced to place him under the tuition of Nicolaes Knupfer, a painter of some repute at Utrecht, with whom he continued two years, when he returned to Leyden, and there became a disciple of Abraham van den Tempel. De Vois, however, did not adopt the manner of either of his instructors; he formed an intimacy with Pieter van Slingeland, who had been a disciple of Gerard Dou, whose highly-finished style he followed with the greatest success. Although he occasionally attempted history on a small scale, his best productions are portraits, conversations, and domestic subjects, which are little inferior to the works of Metsu or of Mieris. His drawing is very correct, and his colouring clear and transparent, with a perfect intelligence of the chiaroscuro. The pictures of this artist are extremely scarce, as they were very carefully finished, and therefore few; and he is said to have passed several years of his life in idleness and dissipation, in consequence of his having married a lady of considerable fortune. He died at Leyden; Balkema says in 1698. The following are some of his principal works:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	The Fish Merchant.
"	"	The Violin Player.
"	"	A Lady.
Antwerp.	Museum.	An Old Woman.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Venus and Adonis. 1678.
Cassel.	Gallery.	A Man smoking and drinking.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Landscape with Women bathing. 1666.
"	"	A Man in a grey hat.
"	"	A Shepherdess.
Frankfort.	Städel.	Head of an old Man.
Hague.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Huntsman.
Munich.	Gallery.	A Drinker.
"	"	A Smoker.
Paris.	Louvre.	Portrait of a Man seated at his bureau.

DE VOLLER, AERTGEN. See CLAESSON.

DE VOS. There were several painters of this name, nearly contemporaries, but of different families. As most of them painted landscapes, portraits, and animals, their names and works have been confounded. Among them, in addition to those in the following articles, are, a second Pieter, a second Willem, a Hendrik, and other baptismal names, but there is very little information to enable the inquirer to distinguish their works. A race of painters of the name continues in Holland to this day.

DE VOS, CORNELIS, was born at Hulst about 1585, and became master in the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1608, having been mentioned in 1599 in the 'Liggeren' as a pupil of Remeeus; he was dean of the Guild in 1619-20. He painted historical pictures and portraits, the latter somewhat in the style of Rubens. He died in 1651. He was a friend of Van Dyck, who painted his portrait. The following are some of his principal works:

- Antwerp. Museum. Portrait of Abraham Grapheus, Messenger of the Corporation of St. Luke. 1620.
- " " Triptych—Adoration of the Magi. (From the Cathedral, Antwerp.)
- Berlin. Gallery. Portrait of a Gentleman and his Wife. 1629.
- " " Portrait of his Daughter.
- Brussels. Museum. Portrait of the Artist and his Family.
- Cassel. Gallery. Portrait of a Man.
- Madrid. Gallery. Portrait of Salomon Cock.
- " " Venus rising from the Sea.
- " " Triumph of Bacchus.
- Munich. Gallery. Apollo and the Python.
- Petersburg. Hermitage. Family Picture.
- Rotterdam. Museum. Family Picture.
- Vienna. Gallery. An Allegory.
- " " Baptism of Cloris.

DE VOS, CORNELIS, a painter of accessories in other artists' productions, was, in 1633-34, received into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp, as a master's son. He is no relation to the celebrated Cornelis De Vos.

DE VOS, JAN, lived at Antwerp in the middle of the 17th century. A portrait of a Man by him is in the Rotterdam Museum.

DE VOS, LAMBERTUS, a native of Mechlin, who entered the Guild of St. Luke in that city in 1563, went to Constantinople, and there executed in 1574 a volume of drawings of 'Oriental Costumes,' which is preserved in the Library at Bremen.

DE VOS, MARTEN, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1531. He was the son of Pieter De Vos, an artist of sufficient ability to be received into the Academy at Antwerp in 1519, and from whom he received his first instruction in painting. He had afterwards the advantage of frequenting the school of Frans Floris, under whom he studied until he was twenty-three years of age, when he determined to visit Italy, and passed some years at Rome, where he improved his style of design by studying with attention the works of the great painters of the Roman school. The charm of Venetian colouring led him to visit Venice, where he had the good fortune to win the esteem and friendship of Tintoretto, who not only instructed him in the best principles of colouring, but employed him as a coadjutor to paint the landscapes in his pictures. With the aid of such advice and assistance, De Vos became an admirable colourist, and gained such reputation, that he was employed in painting the portraits of several of the illustrious family of the Medici, as well as some historical subjects which added to his fame.

After an absence of eight years, De Vos returned to Flanders, where the celebrity he had acquired in Italy excited public curiosity, and he was commissioned to paint several altar-pieces for the churches at Antwerp and other cities of the Netherlands. He was also much employed as a portrait painter, and there is an appearance of nature in his heads which was unequalled at the period at which he lived. He was received into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1559, and died in his native city in 1603. The following are some of his principal works:

- Antwerp. Mus. Christ on the Cross.
- " " A Triptych:—The Triumph of Christ. 1590.
- " " A Triptych:—Incredulity of St. Thomas. 1574. Formerly in the Cathedral.

- Antwerp. Mus. Birth of Christ. (From the church of the Capuchins at Mechlin.)
- " " A Triptych:—The Tribute Money, &c. 1601. (From the church of St. Andrew at Antwerp.)
- " " A Triptych:—St. Luke painting the portrait of the Virgin, &c. 1602. (Parts of the wings are by Otho van Veen and Marten Pepyn. From the altar of the Guild of St. Luke in the cathedral.)
- " " Polyptych:—St. Francis of Assisi receiving the Stigmata, &c. (From the church of the Récollets, Antwerp.)
- " " Temptation of St. Anthony. 1591. (Formerly the centre-piece of a triptych over the altar of St. Anthony in the cathedral.)
- Brussels. Mus. The Wings of a Triptych. (Portraits of the Donor and his Wife.)
- Florence. Uffizi. His own Portrait.
- " " Crucifixion.
- Madrid. Gall. Raising of Lazarus.
- " " Samson and Delilah.
- Seville. Mus. The Last Judgment.

The works of Marten De Vos had considerable influence on art in his time; but many of them were destroyed by the Iconoclasts.

His son, MARTEN DE VOS, who was also a painter, was born at Antwerp in 1576. He was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1607, and died in 1613.

DE VOS, PAULUS, the brother of Cornelis De Vos, was born at Hulst, about the year 1600, and studied under Remeus. From the subjects and style of his pictures, it is probable that he was a disciple of Frans Snyders. He painted animals and hunting scenes with great ability, and his works are little, if at all, inferior to those of that distinguished artist. His animals, particularly his dogs, are drawn with correctness and spirit, and his colouring is clear and harmonious. He died in 1654. There are in the Madrid Gallery no less than fifteen of his works, and in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg there are five.

DE VOS, PIETER, the elder, a Flemish painter, went to Antwerp from Holland, but whether from Gouda or Leyden is uncertain. His name occurs in the archives of the Guild of St. Luke in 1519, and he was dean of the Guild in 1536. He is believed to have died in 1566. He was the father of Marten De Vos.

DE VOS, PIETER, the younger, the brother of Marten De Vos, was a native of Antwerp. He entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1554, and is said to have been still living in 1590. He painted historical subjects, but his works are little known.

DE VOS, SIMON, was born at Antwerp in 1603, and entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1620. He had the advantage of studying in the school of Rubens, under whom he became a very eminent painter of history and portraits. There are some altar-pieces by him in the churches at Antwerp, which have been sometimes mistaken for the works of his illustrious instructor. Such are his picture of the 'Resurrection,' in the cathedral; the 'Descent from the Cross,' in the church of St. Andrew; and 'St. Norbert receiving the Sacrament,' in the abbey of St. Michael. Sir Joshua Reynolds commends this picture, and speaks of him as a portrait painter in the following terms: "De Vos was particularly excellent in portraits. There is at Antwerp his own portrait, painted by himself, in black, leaning on the back of a chair, with a scroll of blue paper in his hand, so highly finished, in the broad style of Correggio, that nothing can exceed it." He died in 1676. Besides the above works the following may be noticed :

Berlin.	Gallery.	The Chastisement of Love.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	Portrait of a Man. 1640.
"	"	Portrait of a Man. 1645.

DE VOS, WILLEM, the son of Pieter De Vos, the younger, and nephew and scholar of Marten De Vos, painted historical subjects in the style of his instructor, acquiring therein considerable reputation. He was born probably at Antwerp, and in 1593 entered the Guild of St. Luke, of which he became dean in 1600. His portrait was painted and etched by Van Dyck among those of the distinguished artists of his time.

DEVOSGE, ANATOLE, the son of François Devosge, was born at Dijon in 1770, and painted, after the manner of his master, David, several pictures, the subjects of which were taken from the Old Testament, and from mythology and Greek and Roman history. He succeeded his father as director of the School of Art at Dijon, where he died in 1850.

DEVOSGE, FRANÇOIS, was a French historical painter, founder of the School of Design, Painting, and Sculpture at Dijon. He was born at Gray in 1732, and taught by his father, Coustou, and Deshayes, the painter; his principal works are, 'The Nativity,' 'St. Angela,' 'St. Peter, kneeling,' 'The Assumption of the Virgin,' 'The Martyrdom of St. Marcel,' &c. He died at Dijon in 1811.

DE VOUW, JOHANNES, was a Dutch landscape painter, of whom nothing more is known than that he lived in Rotterdam, and died not later than 1691. He painted landscapes with trees and buildings, and also drew maps and plans.

DE VREE, NICOLAAS, a flower painter, born at Utrecht about the year 1650, was celebrated in his day for the lightness of his pencil, and the fresh and natural brilliancy of his colours; his works, however, are but little known out of Holland. He died at Alkmaar in 1702. In the Hermitage at St. Petersburg is a 'Park,' by him, dated 1677.

DE VRIENT, FRANS, commonly known as FRANS FLORIS (the name of Floris having been borne by his great-grandfather, re-assumed by his father, and used by himself in signing his paintings), was born at Antwerp about 1517, and, until he was twenty years of age, studied sculpture under his uncle Claudius De Vrient. His love of painting induced him to change the chisel for the palette, and he became a scholar of Lambert Lombard, from whose instruction he derived great advantage. He afterwards visited Italy, where he studied attentively the works of Michelangelo and the antique. After passing some years at Rome, he returned to Flanders, with an ample collection of drawings he had made from the objects most worthy of admiration. His first productions exhibited a grander and more correct design, and a superior style of composition to what had before been witnessed by his countrymen, and he acquired the appellation of the 'Flemish Raphael.' He was patronized by the Counts of Hoorn and Egmont, and was received as a master into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1540. When the Emperor Charles V. made his entry into Antwerp, in 1549, Floris was engaged to paint the triumphal arches; and he is said to have finished seven figures as large as life, with different attributes, in one day. On a similar occasion, when Philip II. visited the Low Countries, he painted in a few hours a large picture representing 'Victory,' with several figures of slaves, and the attributes of War and Peace.

Of this subject he etched a plate, dated 1552. His death occurred at Antwerp in 1570.

Frans Floris was the founder of a large school. He usually signed his paintings in full, or with a monogram composed of three Fs (Frans Floris Fecit). Among his extant works are the following :

Amsterdam.	Museum.	The Nine Muses.
"	"	Christ and the Little Children.
"	"	A Water Wedding at Middelburg.
Antwerp.	Museum.	The Fall of Lucifer (painted in 1554 for the altar of the Fencers in the cathedral of Antwerp; his best work).
"	"	The Adoration of the Shepherds.
"	"	Ryckaert Aertsz, the painter, as St. Luke.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Vulcan ensnaring Mars and Venus. 1547.
"	"	Venus and Cupid.
"	"	Lot and his Daughters.
Brussels.	Museum.	The Last Judgment (painted for Notre-Dame des Victoires au Sablon at Brussels). 1566.
"	"	The Adoration of the Magi. (A triptych, which was probably his last work, and was finished by Hieronymus Francken in 1571.)
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	Cain and Abel.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Adoration of the Shepherds.
"	"	The Emperor Vitellius.
"	"	The Laughing Maiden.
"	"	Lot and his Daughters.
"	"	Christ carrying his Cross.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Adam and Eve. 1560.
Hague.	Gallery.	Venus and Adonis.
Madrid.	Gallery.	The Deluge.
"	"	Two Portraits.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	The Three Ages of Man.
Vienna.	Belvedere.	Adam and Eve under the Tree of Knowledge.
"	"	Adam and Eve driven out of Paradise.
"	"	The Holy Family.

As an etcher Frans Floris executed, among other plates, 'Victory,' and 'Christ washing the Disciples' Feet': both from his own designs. His two sons, JAN BAPTISTA and FRANS DE VRIENT, were both painters. The first was assassinated at Brussels by the Spaniards; the second, who was born at Antwerp about 1545, settled at Rome, and became noted for his easel pictures. They were both living in 1579.

DE VRIES, ADRIAAN, a Flemish portrait painter, was admitted as a master into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1634-35. His works possess considerable merit, and have been attributed to Ferdinand Bol, to Van Dyck, and to Rembrandt. He died subsequently to 1650. In the Dresden Gallery is a male portrait by him, dated 1639. In the Rotterdam Museum is his portrait of Adriaen Adriaensz Vroesen of Rotterdam, dated 1639, and in the Berlin Gallery is a Man's portrait ascribed to him.

Some confusion appears to exist between the works of this artist and those of ABRAHAM DE VRIES, who was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at the Hague in 1644, and died before 1662.

DE VRIES, JAN (or HANS) VREDEMAN, was born at Leeuwarden, in East Friesland, in 1527. He was sent, when young, to Amsterdam, where he became a scholar of Reyer Gerritsz, under whom he continued five years, and applied himself with great assiduity to the study of perspective. In 1549 he went to Antwerp, where he was employed, with others, in painting the triumphal arches which were erected on the public entry of the Emperor Charles V. and his son Philip into that city; on which occasion he proved himself an artist of considerable ability. He was much employed in decorating the saloons of the principal mansions with perspective views, which he designed with such truth and effect that the illusion was complete. He travelled through Germany and Italy, and he everywhere met with encouragement and employment. After his return to Antwerp, the latter part of his life was principally occupied in making designs of architectural and other subjects for the print-sellers, particularly Hieronimus Cock, who published a great variety of prints from his designs. We have a book of monuments by him, entitled 'Cænotaphiorum, tumulorum et mortuorum monumentorum variæ formæ,' published at Antwerp in 1563. The plates are etched and finished with the graver, with considerable intelligence. In the Vienna Gallery is the 'Interior of a Church' by him; and the Bordeaux Museum has a Landscape.

DE VRIES, PAULUS, the eldest son of Jan Vredeman De Vries, was born at Antwerp in 1554, and died in 1598. He was specially employed at Prague in the service of the Emperor.

DE VRIES, ROELOF, was a Dutch landscape painter, who flourished at Haarlem from about 1643 to about 1669. Buildings are often seen in his works. There are by him:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Three Landscapes.
Frankfort.	Städel Inst.	Four Landscapes.
Vienna.	Liechtenstein Gall.	Landscape.
"	Czernin Gall.	Landscape.

DE VRIES, SALOMON, born at Antwerp in 1556, was the second son of Jan Vredeman De Vries, by whom he was instructed. He painted landscapes ornamented with ruins, which are not badly composed, but their colouring has become dark, producing an unpleasant effect, and diminishing their value. He died at the Hague in 1604. His son, PIETER DE VRIES, who was born in 1587, was also a landscape painter.

DE VRIES, SIMON, (or SIMON FRISIUS,) a Dutch engraver, was apparently of the same family as Jan Vredeman De Vries. He was born at Leeuwarden, in 1580, and is regarded as one of the first who brought etching to perfection. Abraham Bosse, in his treatise on the art of engraving, observes, that the first artist to whom he was indebted for intelligence was Simon Frisius, whom he thinks entitled to great credit, as being one of the first that handled the point with freedom and facility. His etchings are bold and masterly; and in his hatchings he approaches the neatness and strength of the graver. The prints of De Vries are scarce, and are much esteemed. The small figures which he occasionally introduces into his landscapes are correctly drawn. He frequently marked his plates S. F. fecit, but sometimes with the word fecit only. The following are his principal works:

A set of twelve small heads of female Saints and Sibyls; after his own designs.

A set of Portraits; after Hendrik Hondius.

A set of twelve plates of Birds and Butterflies; after Marcus Geerarts.

Twenty-five Views and Landscapes; entitled, Typographia variarum Regionum; after Matthys Bril. 1611.

A mountainous Landscape on the Sea-coast, with figures; after Hendrik Goltzius.

A Landscape, with a Tower; after the same. 1608.

A Landscape, with the story of Tobit and the Angel; after P. Lastman.

A Landscape, with the Flight into Egypt; after H. Hondius.

A Landscape, with two pastoral figures; highly finished, and very scarce.

DE WAAL. See DE WAEL.

DE WAARD, ANTONIE, born at the Hague in 1689, was a scholar of Simon van der Does; he afterwards studied in Paris. He is mentioned as a painter of historical subjects, portraits, landscapes, and animals, and also as a decorator of the interiors of apartments. Of his life nothing further is recorded, and his works are scarcely known out of Holland, but it is said that they are esteemed there, and obtain high prices. He died at the Hague in 1751.

DE WAEL, CORNELIS, (or DE WAAL,) a younger son of the elder Jan Baptist De Wael, was born at Antwerp in 1594. He received his first instruction in the art from his father; but he afterwards accompanied his brother, Lucas De Wael, to Italy, and resided some time at Genoa, where he painted some pictures for the churches, but he chiefly excelled in painting battles, marches, skirmishes of cavalry, and processions, in which he gained a distinguished reputation. He was much employed by the Duke of Arschot, and painted several of his best pictures for Philip III., King of Spain, by whom they were held in the highest estimation. He died at Genoa in 1662. In the Vienna Gallery is a 'Passage of the Red Sea' by him, and in the Cassel Gallery is a 'Venetian Market Crier.' We have by this artist several very spirited etchings from his own compositions, among which are the following:

The Blind; 12 plates.

The Market Sellers; 16 plates.

Domestic Interiors; 20 plates.

The Four Seasons.

The Five Senses; 5 plates.

The Slaves; 12 plates.

DE WAEL, JAN BAPTIST, (or DE WAAL,) was born at Antwerp in 1557, and was a disciple of Frans Francken the elder. He painted historical subjects in the style of his master, and acquired sufficient celebrity to be received a member of the Academy in his native city, where he died in 1633. Van Dyck painted his portrait. His pictures are very rare.

DE WAEL, JAN BAPTIST, (or DE WAAL,) a younger artist of the name, is stated to have been either the son or nephew of Cornelis De Wael. We have by him some slight etchings, among which is a set of eight prints, representing the 'History of the Prodigal Son,' from the designs of Cornelis De Wael, executed in 1658.

DE WAEL, LUCAS JANSZEN, (or DE WAAL,) the son of the elder Jan Baptist De Wael, was born at Antwerp in 1591, and first instructed in art by his father; but, as his genius led him to landscape, he was afterwards placed under the tuition of Jan Brueghel. He followed the style of his preceptor with great success, and, on leaving that master, he travelled to Italy, and passed some time at Genoa, where his works were highly esteemed, and he met with very flattering encouragement. Although his pictures occasionally represent battles and attacks of cavalry, which are well composed, and touched with great spirit and animation, his most esteemed works are his mountainous landscapes and waterfalls, in which the scenery is extremely picturesque. He died at Antwerp in 1676.

DE WEDIG, GOTTHARDT, a painter of still-life subjects, flourished at Cologne about 1630. An example of his art is in the Darmstadt Gallery.

DE WEERT, ADRIAEN, was born, according to Descamps, at Brussels about 1536, and studied at Antwerp under Christiaan van de Queborn, a landscape painter little known. He afterwards visited Italy, where he passed some years, and applied himself especially to the study of the works of Parmigiano. On his return to Flanders, he executed several pictures in the graceful style of that master, particularly a series of the 'Life of the Virgin,' and had acquired great reputation, when the troubles in the Low Countries obliged him, in 1566, to quit Brussels and take refuge at Cologne, where he died soon afterwards. All the notices of this artist are however unsatisfactory.

DE WEERT, JACOB, who flourished about the year 1605, was probably a native of the Low Countries, though he chiefly resided in Paris. He was principally employed by the booksellers, and engraved several frontispieces and other book ornaments in a neat, though tasteless style. We have also by him a set of prints from his own designs, representing the 'Life and Passion of Christ,' published by Jean Le Clerc, with French verses to each print.

DE WETT. See also DŰWETT.

DE WETT, JACOB, was a Dutch painter, who worked at Holyrood Palace between 1674 and 1686, and there painted the series of apocryphal portraits of the Scottish kings.

DE WETTE, FRANS, to whom are assigned, in Dr. Waagen's edition of Kugler, two pictures in the Schleiheim Gallery,—'The Three Young Men in the Fiery Furnace' and 'The Raising of Lazarus,'—may perhaps be identical with Jacob Willemsz De Wet, who was established at Haarlem in 1636, was master in the Guild at Alkmaar in 1637, and was living in that town as late as 1671. He executed Biblical and mythological scenes in the manner of Rembrandt, among which are:

The Adulteress before Christ (Augsburg Gallery).
Christ in the Temple. 1635. (Brunswick Museum).
The Burning of Troy.

DE WILDE, FRANS, was a Dutch engraver, who was born about the year 1680. He resided at Amsterdam, where he etched a few very small plates, which are executed with great neatness and spirit, apparently from his own designs. Among others are the following:

The Angel appearing to Abraham. 1705.
Venus rising from the Sea.
The Fable of the Wolf and the Dog; circular. 1704.
A View of the City of Chalons.
A View of a Sea-port.
A Landscape, with figures.

DE WILDE, MARIA, was probably a relation of Frans De Wilde. She engraved a set of fifty plates from antique gems, which were published at Amsterdam in 1703.

DE WILDE, SAMUEL, an English portrait painter, was born in 1747. He painted both in oil and water-colour, and exhibited dramatic portraits at the Royal Academy between 1788 and 1821. He died in 1832. Several of his portraits are at the Garrick Club, and amongst his other works are:

William Farren.
John Emery.
Harley as Kent in 'King Lear.' 1794. (South Kensington Museum.)

DE WINT, PETER, a water-colour painter, was born at Stone, in Staffordshire, in 1784. He was descended from a Dutch family which had settled in America. Although intended for his father's profession—that of a physician—he preferred to follow art, and studied under John Raphael Smith, the engraver, in whose studio he became friendly with Hilton, the historical painter, and brother of his future wife. In 1807 he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he occasionally exhibited up to 1828. He joined the Water-Colour Society as an Associate in 1810, becoming a full member in 1812, and it was here that most of his works appeared. He rarely quitted his native country, which furnished the subjects of the greater portion of his works, and the level country of Lincolnshire had a great charm for him. He occasionally painted in oils, and four specimens of his work in this medium, besides a large collection of his water-colour drawings, are in the South Kensington Museum. He died in London in 1849, and was buried at the Savoy Chapel.

Twenty-three drawings by De Wint were bequeathed to the National Gallery by Mr. Henderson in 1880, and among them are:

Lincoln Cathedral.
Bray on the Thames.
Ruins of Lincoln Castle.
Harvest Time, Lancashire.

The water-colour drawings in the South Kensington Museum include:

Thornbury Castle.
Gateway at Lincoln.
The Cricketers.
Nottingham.
Walton-on-Thames.
Hay Harvest.
Mountain Tarn.
Ferry on the Severn. 1840.
Haddon Hall. 1839.
Shap Fells, Westmoreland.
Wilsford, Lincolnshire.
Rick Making, near Lincoln.
Tutbury Castle.
View near Salt Hill, Bucks.
Lincoln Cathedral.
Torksey Castle.
Cowes Castle.

DE WINTER, JILLIS, was born at Leeuwarden in 1650, and was a scholar of Richard Brakenburg, whose style he imitated with considerable success. He painted subjects similar to those of his master, representing Dutch boors regaling, and the recreations of the cabaret. His pictures are little known, except in Holland, and even there are not held in much estimation. He died at Amsterdam in 1720.

DE WIT, JAKOB, was born at Amsterdam in 1695, and when fourteen years of age was placed under the tuition of Albert van Spiers, an historical painter of some eminence, under whom he studied three years. The desire of contemplating the productions of Rubens and Van Dyck, and the other distinguished masters of the Flemish school, which embellished the public edifices at Antwerp, induced him to visit that city, where he became a scholar of Jacob van Hal, a painter of little celebrity, under whom he did not continue longer than two years, when he devoted himself entirely to the study of the works of Rubens and Van Dyck. In 1712 and 1713 he made drawings from the paintings by Rubens in the four ceilings of the Jesuits' church, in thirty-six compartments, which were destroyed by lightning in 1718, and we are indebted to De Wit for the preservation of these admirable compositions, which were afterwards engraved from his copies by Jan Punt. He was principally employed in painting ceilings, and the decorations of splendid apartments, consisting of emblematical and allegorical subjects, which he composed with great ingenuity. He was particularly successful in the representation of children, whom he was fond of introducing into his pictures, generally at their play, and painted in chiaroscuro.

In 1736 he was employed by the magistrates of Amsterdam in the embellishment of their great Council-chamber with subjects from the Old Testament. He likewise painted several altar-pieces for the catholic churches in Holland, which are very creditable performances, and are held in considerable estimation. He died at Amsterdam in 1754. In the Cassel Gallery are four pictures of the 'Four Seasons' (represented by Children) signed and dated 1751 and 1752, and also two decorative subjects of children. In the Dresden Gallery is a painting (in imitation of bas-relief) of 'Children with the attributes of the chase,' dated 1753. The Rotterdam Museum possesses two pictures by him, 'Minerva and four Children' and 'Faith, Hope, and Charity,' in grisaille, dated 1743.

DE WITTE. There are several other artists of this name, in addition to those cited below, such as FRANS, and ANTHONIE, who were painters; and others who were engravers: but the accounts are much confused.

DE WITTE, CORNELIS, (or DE WIT,) a landscape painter of the 16th century, was a brother of Pieter De Witte, called Pietro Candido.

DE WITTE, EMANUEL, was born at Alkmaar in 1607, and was a scholar of Evert van Aelst, a painter of still-life. He did not, however, adopt the style of his instructor, but for some time applied himself to portrait painting. Not meeting with the encouragement he expected, he studied perspective and architecture, and became one of the most eminent artists of his country in painting interior views of churches and temples, which he embellished with figures correctly drawn, and touched with great spirit. His best pictures represent the interiors of churches at Amsterdam, with groups of figures, habited in the dresses of the time. He died at Amsterdam in 1692. The following works are by him:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Interior of a Church.
Berlin.	Museum.	Interior of a Church. 1667.
"	"	Interior of the Nieuwekerk, Amsterdam.
"	"	Interior of the Synagogue, Amsterdam. 1680.
Brussels.	Museum.	Interior of the Church at Delft.
"	"	Interior of a Church. 1685.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	The Fish Merchant. 1672.

DE WITTE, GASPAR, was born at Antwerp in 1618. He visited Italy, where he remained several years, and on his return acquired considerable reputation in painting small landscapes very highly finished, in which he generally introduced architectural ruins, of which he had made sketches during his residence in Italy. He died at Antwerp in 1680 or 1681. In the Antwerp Museum are two Landscapes by him—one with a 'Fortune-telling' for subject, dated 1667, and another with 'Christ healing the Blind Man,' dated 1671. In the Vienna Gallery is a 'Landscape with Ruins of an Aqueduct.'

DE WITTE, LIEVEN, known also as LIVIENO DA ANVERSA, was a painter and architect, who practised at Ghent in the 15th century. He devoted himself to buildings and other perspective subjects, but also produced historical pictures. The windows of the cathedral of St. Bavon in Ghent were painted from his designs, and he is said to have worked at the miniatures in the Grimani Breviary now in the library of St. Mark at Venice.

DE WITTE, PIETER, called PIETER CANDID, or PIETRO CANDIDO, was born at Bruges in 1548. It is not known under whom he studied, but he travelled to Italy when he was young, and there formed an intimacy with Giorgio Vasari, whom he assisted in the works upon which he was employed in the Vatican. He painted with equal success in oil and in fresco, and was employed by the Grand-Duke of Tuscany in several considerable works in the palace at Florence, and designed some cartoons for tapestry. Maximilian, Elector of Bavaria, invited him to Munich, where he passed the remainder of his life. Jan Sadeler has engraved several prints from the works of this master, among which are the 'Annunciation,' 'Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus,' the 'Holy Women at the Tomb of the Saviour,' and the 'Last Supper.' He died at Munich in 1628. In the Vienna Gallery are the 'Death of St. Ursula,' and a 'Holy Family and St. Stephen,' by him.

DE WITTE, PIETER, who was well known in Rome as PETRUS ALBUS, was born at Antwerp in 1620, and died at Rome in 1669. He painted landscapes in the style of Claude Lorrain.

DEYNUM, J. B. VAN, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1620, and died in 1669. He excelled in painting historical subjects and landscapes in distemper, and was an eminent miniature portrait painter.

DE ZE, —, is the name affixed to a small print representing 'Christ dead in the Tomb, attended by an Angel.' It is executed entirely with the graver, in a style resembling that of Jan Sadeler, and is apparently from the artist's own design.

DE ZEEUW, MARINUS. See ROYMERSWALEN.

DE ZETTER, PAUL, was a native of Hanover, who flourished about the year 1630. He was chiefly employed in engraving portraits, from his own designs, which are executed with sufficient neatness, but in a stiff, tasteless style. He engraved several plates for Boissard's collection of portraits. His prints are sometimes marked D. Z. fec., and sometimes with the accompanying monogram: P.

DIAMAER, HENDRIK FRANS, was a Flemish engraver, who flourished in the early part of the 18th century. There are by him a set of Biblical subjects etched in the manner of Sebastian Le Clerc, and also a few portraits, among which is that of Aubert Lemire, after Van Dyck.

DIAMANTE, Fra, was the pupil and assistant of Fra Filippo Lippi, and like him had been a novice in the Carmine of Florence. He survived his master, and became the guardian of Filippino Lippi. He seems to have been at Prato with Fra Filippo, and is said to have aided him in the decorations of the choir of its cathedral. In 1463 he was confined in his convent at Florence by order of his superior, and letters remain to prove that the 'comune' of Prato demanded his liberty. He afterwards went to Spoleto, and assisted Fra Filippo in the frescoes of the Duomo, and received two hundred ducats for their completion in 1470 after his master's death. From there he returned to Prato, where in 1470 he executed the portrait of the Podestà, Cesare Petrucci, in the portico of the palace. This work has now been destroyed, and it is very difficult to tell where Fra Diamante's work begins in any of the frescoes still remaining where the two friars worked together. The dates of his birth and death are unknown.

DIAMANTINI, GIUSEPPE, a painter who was more eminent as an engraver, was born at Fossombrone in 1660. He resided chiefly at Venice, where he distinguished himself both as a painter and as an engraver. In the church of San Moise is a picture by him of the 'Adoration of the Magi,' but he was more employed for private collections than for the churches, and must have devoted a great part of his time to engraving, as he has left a considerable number of plates, of which the greater part are etchings. They are executed in a free style, with considerable taste, and his design is graceful, and tolerably correct. He died at Venice in 1708. The following are his principal prints, which are frequently marked Eques Diamantinus, in. f.

The Holy Family, with St. John holding a Cross.
Hagar in the Desert; oval.
The Marriage at Cana; after Paolo Veronese.
The Dead Christ, supported by an Angel.
The Death of Dido; octagon.
Venus, Ceres, and Apollo.
Mercury and Flora.
The Fall of Phaeton.
Mercury and Argus; octagon.
Venus and Adonis; the same.
Venus and Adonis; a different composition.
Mars and Venus.
Diana and Endymion.
The Sacrifice of Iphigenia.
Boreas carrying off Oreithyia.
Justice and Peace.
Eight emblematical subjects of different sizes.

DIANA. See GHISI, DIANA.

DIANA, BENEDETTO, was a companion of Carpaccio and Mansueti, who lived in the latter part of the 15th and early part of the 16th centuries. He was an inferior artist, and worked both in tempera and oils. He painted 'The Brethren distributing Alms,' in San Giovanni Evangelista, Venice; and he assisted Lazzaro Bastiani in painting the standards on the Piazza of San Marco. Many galleries in Venice possess paintings by him. In the Academy, besides other paintings, are the 'Virgin and Child,' formerly in Santa Lucia at Padua, and a 'Transfiguration.' The church of Santa Maria della Croce, Crema, has an altar-piece representing the 'Gift of the Miraculous Girdle to St. Thomas.' No dates can be given of his birth or death.

DIAS, GASPAS, a Portuguese painter, studied at Rome under Raphael and Michelangelo, and on his return home devoted himself to the production of church pictures. He died at Lisbon in 1571.

DIAS, MANOEL, an historical painter, was born at San Sebastian in Brazil, and studied at Rome under Cavallucci towards the end of the 18th century. After his return to South America he became professor of drawing at Rio Janeiro.

DIAZ, DIEGO VALENTIN, a Spanish historical painter, and a familiar of the Holy Office, was a native of Valladolid. He painted many important pictures for churches and monasteries, especially for the church of San Benito, now a barrack, and the convents of St. Jerome and of St. Francis, of which the 'Jubilee of the Porciuncula' in the latter house was one of the most esteemed. His 'Holy Family,' painted for San Benito, is now in the Museum at Valladolid; but his best work was the altar-piece representing the 'Annunciation of the Virgin,' painted for the Hospital for Orphan Girls which he founded at Valladolid. The architecture and perspective are in the finest style, and the statues introduced are admirably executed. Diaz died at Valladolid in 1660. He accumulated considerable wealth, the greater part of which he left for the support of this hospital, where he was buried, and where are preserved the portraits of the munificent artist and of his wife—"he a grey-haired sharp old man, she a dark-eyed dame."

DIAZ, GONZALO, a Spanish painter, was a scholar of Sanchez Castro. He executed in 1499 some small paintings for the altar of the Magdalen in the cathedral of Seville.

DIAZ DE LA PEÑA, NARCISSE VIRGILE, a French landscape painter, was born in 1809, at Bordeaux, where his parents, who were of Spanish extraction, had taken up their abode. Having been left an orphan at the age of ten, he was adopted by a Protestant clergyman at Bellevue, and from his earliest years he studied nature in the woods, the loss of his left leg being caused by sleeping on the grass. At the age of fifteen he was placed with a porcelain manufacturer, but left him in order to study under Sigalon. He then tried historical and genre subjects, but without success, and for several years endured great poverty. At length his landscapes won for him fame. He last exhibited at the Salon in 1859, and died at Mentone from the bite of a viper in 1876. Amongst his chief works are:

The Nymphs in the Grotto of Calypso. 1840.
The Dream. 1841.
Gipsies going to a Fête. 1844.
Interior of a Forest. 1846.
Dogs in a Forest. 1847.
The Promenade. 1848.
Diana setting out for the Chase. 1848.
A Bather tormented by Cupids. 1851.
The Last Tears. 1855.
The Close of a fine Day. 1855.
La Rivale. 1855.
Galatea. 1859.

The following works by him are in public galleries:

Girl with Dogs (South Kensington Museum).
The Forest of Fontainebleau (Bordeaux Museum).
Four Studies (Luxembourg Gallery).

His eldest son, ÉMILE DIAZ, who was also a painter, died in 1860, at the early age of 25.

DIBDIN, CHARLES, the well-known song-writer, who was born at Southampton in 1745, and died in London in 1814, occasionally practised art as an amateur. John Hill engraved in aquatint some views of Lake Scenery after him. Dibdin also, it is said, executed some scene-painting.

DICHTL, MARTIN, (or DÜCHTL), a German painter and engraver in mezzotint, practised at Nuremberg from 1623 to 1680. In the Gallery at Stockholm is a work by him called 'A Kitchen.'

DICKINSON, WILLIAM, an English engraver, was born in London in 1746. He obtained a premium from the Society of Arts in 1767. His works were published by a firm of which he was a member. In his later years he lived in France, still pursuing his profession, and he died in Paris in 1823. Amongst his engravings are:

Sir Joseph Banks; after Sir Joshua Reynolds. 1774.
 Dr. Percy, Dean of Carlisle; after the same. 1775.
 Viscountess Crosbie; after the same. 1779.
 Elizabeth Hamilton, Countess of Derby; after the same. 1780.
 Lady Taylor; after the same. 1783.
 Miss Ramus, afterwards Lady Day; after Romney. 1779.
 Admiral Lord Keppel; after the same. 1779.
 Sir Charles Hardy; after the same. 1781.
 Lord Grantham; after the same. 1783.
 John, Duke of Argyll; after Gainsborough.
 Lord Auckland; after Sir T. Lawrence. 1796.
 Napoleon I.; after Gérard. 1815.
 Sir R. Peel; after Northcote. 1818.

DICKSON, J., an English engraver, resided at Oxford about the year 1660. He engraved a portrait of Edward Parry, Bishop of Killaloe, prefixed to his 'Antidote against the Prosperity of the Wicked, and the Afflictions of the Just,' published in 1660.

DIDAY, FRANÇOIS, a Swiss landscape painter, was born at Geneva in 1812. He studied in Paris and travelled in Italy, but chiefly lived in his native country. He, however, frequently exhibited in the Paris Salon, where he obtained medals in 1840 and 1841. He died in 1877, at Geneva, to which city he bequeathed his property, valued at 400,000 francs. The following are among his best works:

Glacier of Rosenthal. (Lausanne Museum.)
 The Oak and the Reed. (Geneva Museum.)
 The Faulhorn in Switzerland. (Neue Pinakothek, Munich.)
 Mont Salève. } (London International Exhibition, Storm in a Forest. } 1862.)

DIEGO, —, a Spanish engraver, who in 1548 executed at Saragossa the frontispiece for Zurita's 'Anales de Aragon,' printed in 1562.

DIELAI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO. See SURCHI.

DIEN, CLAUDE MARIE FRANÇOIS, a French engraver and painter, was born in Paris in 1787. He was instructed by Reboul and by Audouin, and died in Paris in 1865. The following works by him may be mentioned:

The Sibyls; after Raphael.
 Raphael and Perugino; after the same.
 The Holy Family; after the same.
 The Madonna; after Murillo.
 The Death of Demosthenes; after Boisselier.
 St. Scolastica; after Lesueur.
 The Battle of Austerlitz; after Gérard.

DIEPENBEECK, ABRAHAM VAN, was born at Bois-le-Duc in 1599, but most likely went to Antwerp about 1629. With the advantage of a classical education, and the tuition of Rubens, he was nurtured in a genial soil, and, like his great instructor, he treated with equal success subjects of history and fable. His first pursuit in art was painting on glass, and he produced some works in that branch which are highly esteemed, particularly the windows in a chapel in the cathedral of Antwerp, where he represented the 'Acts of Mercy,' and some others in the church of the Dominicans, in which he depicted the 'Life of St. Paul.' He abandoned glass painting soon after his return from Italy, whither he had been for improvement, and devoted himself to oil painting and designing. His inventive genius, and his rare facility of execution, caused him to be much employed in designs for the publications of his time, particularly for the Abbé de Marolles's 'Tableaux du Temple des Muses,' published at Paris in 1655, the plates for which were engraved by Cornelis Bloemaert. In the church of the Carmelites at Antwerp is a fine picture by this master, representing the 'Virgin in the Clouds, with St. Ely'; and at the Recollets there were some pictures by him which are said by Descamps to be equal to those of Van Dyck. This painter was in England in the reign of Charles I., and was much employed by the Duke of Newcastle, for whom he made the designs for his book on 'Horsemanship.' He died at Antwerp in 1675. The following are some of his best works:

Antwerp.	Museum.	The Ecstasy of St. Bonaventura.
	Cathedral.	St. Norbert.
Berlin.	Gallery.	The Marriage of St. Catharine.
		The Flight of Cloelia.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	The Rape of Ganymede.
Brussels.	Museum.	St. Francis adoring the Holy Sacrament.
Deurne.	Church.	St. Norbert and the first Abbot of St. Michel.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Neptune and Amphitrite.
Frankfort.	Städel.	Portrait of a Young Man. 1665.
		Portrait of a Young Woman.
Munich.	Gallery.	Abraham and the three Angels.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Flight of Cloelia.
		Portraits of a Man and Woman.
Vienna.	Gallery.	An Allegory of Mortality.
"	"	A Pietà.

There is an etching of a 'Peasant and his Ass,' by Van Diepenbeeck, which is very rare.

DIEPRAAM, ABRAHAM, a Dutch painter of the 17th century, painted drolleries and drunken frolics. He was a scholar of Hendrik Martin Rokes, called Sorgh, although he did not follow the style of that master, but imitated the works of Adriaan Brouwer, in which he was not very successful.

DIERIX, ADRIAEN, known as Broeder ADRIAEN RODRIGUEZ, of the Society of Jesus, was born at Antwerp in 1618, and died at Madrid in 1669. He went to Spain when he was about thirty, and entered the Imperial College at Madrid, where he entered the Society of Jesus, and changed his name from Dierix to Rodriguez, for the sake of euphony. He painted in the Flemish manner, for the refectory of the above-mentioned college, 'Abraham entertaining the three Angels,' the 'Marriage at Cana,' the 'Holy Family,' 'Christ at Emmaus,' and the 'Banquet at the house of the Pharisee, with the Magdalen anointing Christ.'

DIES, ALBERT CHRISTOPH, born at Hanover in 1755, acquired the rudiments of art under a painter in that town. He afterwards studied under Pigage at Mannheim and under Mechel at Basle, and then visited Rome and Naples. At Rome he executed some landscapes in water-colour for Volpato. Among his works may be mentioned the twenty-four etchings of Italy, contributed to the 'Collection de Vues pittoresques de l'Italie' (1799), of which those of Tivoli are very fine. In the Belvedere at Vienna there are by him two landscapes in oil, both views near Salzburg, dated 1796 and 1797; these, however, are of less importance than his water-colours. He died at Vienna in 1822.

DIEST, ADRIAAN VAN, was born at the Hague in 1655. He was the son of a painter of sea-pieces, by whom he was instructed in the art. When he was seventeen years of age he came to London, and was employed by Granville, Earl of Bath, for whom he painted several views and ruins in the west of England. He also painted portraits, but did not meet with much encouragement, although his pictures, particularly his landscapes, possess considerable merit; as a proof of which Horace Walpole states that there were seven pictures by Van Diest in Sir Peter Lely's collection. He etched several landscapes from his own designs, in a slight, masterly style. Van Diest died in London in 1704. Unfortunately for his reputation, he is generally known by his worst pictures, which are frequently found in old houses, on wainscots, or over doors, and are executed in a hasty manner, with much mountainous background. His better pictures have changed their name.

DIETEL, CHRISTOPH and FRANZ AMBROS. These artists, who were brothers, resided at Vienna in the early part of the 18th century. They engraved conjointly a set of plates, representing the principal fountains at Rome. Franz Ambros Dietel died at Vienna in 1730.

DIETLER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, was born at Solothurn, in Switzerland, in 1804, and was instructed in the rudiments of art by German, a drawing-master of that town. He distinguished himself as a portrait painter, and visited Paris and Italy, remaining also some time at Geneva; but he finally settled at Berne, where he died in 1874. He painted for the town of Solothurn 'The Burgo-master Wengi before the Cannon.'

DIETRICH, CHRISTIAN WILHELM ERNST, (afterwards called DIETRICH, or DIETRICY,) a German artist, was born at Weimar in 1712. He learnt the principles of art from his father, Johann Georg Dietrich, who was court-painter at Weimar, and was afterwards a scholar of Thiele, the landscape painter. He established himself at Dresden, where he was patronized by the court, and was in 1729 appointed court-painter to Augustus II., king of Poland; and in 1741 he received the same appointment with a yearly salary of 400 thalers, for which he was to produce yearly four cabinet pictures, for Augustus III., who sent him in 1742 to Italy, where he passed some time at Rome and Venice. His studies in Italy do not appear to have had much influence on his style, which remained entirely German. His chief talent consisted in a successful imitation of the works of Rembrandt, Ostade, Poelenborch, Salvator Rosa, &c., particularly as a colourist, in which he greatly excelled. In 1746 he became keeper of the Dresden Gallery, in which he is very fully represented. He was also Professor in the Academy of Arts at Dresden, and Director of the Painting School at the Meissen Porcelain Factory. Dietrich also executed, after his own compositions, a large number of etchings, in which he imitated successfully the manner of Rembrandt and of Ostade. He died at Dresden in 1774. The following are some of the best of his paintings:

Bordeaux.	Museum.	Holy Family.
"	"	Landscapes (five).
Brussels.	Museum.	His own Portrait.
Cassel.	Gallery.	Two Landscapes.
Darmstadt.	Gallery.	The Parable of the Woman and the Lost Penny.
"	"	The Parable of the Blind leading the Blind.
"	"	Evening Landscape.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Fifty-four Pictures (bearing dates from 1739 to 1766).

Hampton Court.	Pal.	Nymphs in a landscape bathing.
"	"	The Woman taken in Adultery.
"	"	The Tribute Money.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	The Itinerant Musicians. 1745.
Milan.	Brera.	Landscape.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Woman taken in Adultery. 1753.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Repose in Egypt. 1757.
"	"	The Entombment. 1759.
"	"	The Squirrel.
"	"	A Camera Obscura.
"	"	Views in Italy (two).
Vienna.	Gallery.	Angel appearing to the Shepherds.
"	"	Adoration of the Shepherds. 1760.

Dietrich's etched work extends to nearly two hundred prints, several of which are very scarce, as he frequently destroyed the plate, after having taken off a certain number of impressions. His earlier works are marked with a monogram, composed of a C. and a D., but he afterwards signed them with his name, or with his initials, C. W. E. D., or with D. only. The following are his principal prints:

SACRED SUBJECTS.

Lot and his Daughters; scarce.
 Abraham going to sacrifice Isaac; scarce. 1730.
 The same subject differently composed; very scarce.
 The Nativity. 1740.
 St. Philip baptizing the Eunuch.
 The Adoration of the Shepherds; in the style of Rembrandt.
 The Circumcision.
 The Flight into Egypt.
 Another of the same subject, differently composed.
 The Repose in Egypt; scarce. 1732.
 Another Repose in Egypt. 1734.
 The Return from Egypt.
 Christ found disputing with the Doctors. 1731.
 Our Saviour healing the Sick.
 The Prodigal Son.
 The Resurrection of Lazarus; in the style of Rembrandt.
 The Descent from the Cross; in the same style; scarce. 1730.
 Another of the same subject, differently treated; also in the style of Rembrandt. 1742.
 The Disciples at Emmaus; extremely rare; the plate destroyed.
 Christ appearing to the Magdalen; unfinished. 1760.
 The Preaching of St. James. 1740.
 St. Jerome writing. 1731.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

Famine and Pestilence; very scarce. 1731.
 Nero on his Death-bed, tormented by Furies and the Shade of his Mother; scarce.
 Jupiter and Antiope; one of his best etchings; scarce. 1735.
 The Artist in his Painting Room. 1730.
 The same subject with variations. 1732.
 The Quack Doctor; in the style of Teniers. 1732.
 The Hungarian Quack Doctor. 1757.
 The Itinerant Musicians; in the style of Ostade. The picture by Dietrich is in the National Gallery.
 The Alchemist in his Laboratory; in the style of Rembrandt; scarce. 1731.
 Twenty plates of Busts and Heads; chiefly in the manner of Rembrandt.
 About thirty-six plates of Landscapes, in the styles of Borchem, Breenberg, Claude Lorrain, Ruisdael, and Salvator Rosa, and in his own manner.

DIETRICH, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a painter of historical subjects, was born at Biberach in 1789, and learned painting of Seele and Heideloff at Stuttgart. In 1820 he went to Rome, where he studied the works of the great masters, and executed several paintings, as well as copies, of considerable merit. After his return home, he was employed in the Hall of the Estates at Rosenstein, and painted in fresco for several churches. He was Professor in the Academy at Stuttgart, where he died in 1846. His best works are :

The Resurrection of Christ (in Stuttgart Cathedral).
 The Visitation, the Nativity, the Adoration of the Magi, Christ on the Mount of Olives, the Crucifixion, the Entombment, and the Resurrection (in the Church at Bulach, near Carlsruhe).
 Abraham entering the Promised Land (in the Royal Palace, Stuttgart).
 An Adoration of the Shepherds. } (Stuttgart Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus. } Gallery.)
 The Madonna di Foligno; after Raphael (in the Church at Dotternhausen).
 Helios with the Hours. } (in the Landhaus of Rosenstein).
 Luna with Herse. }
 Christ on the Mount of Olives (in the Church of Ravensburg). His last and best work.

DIETTERLIN, BARTHOLOMÄUS, (or DIETERLEIN,) a painter and engraver, who flourished in the early part of the 17th century, was the son of a painter named HILARIUS DIETTERLIN, of Strassburg. By him are known a very scarce plate—the 'Ascension of Christ'—and a Landscape.

DIETTERLIN, WENDEL, (DIETERLEIN, or DIT-TERLEIN,) who was born at Strassburg in 1550, was the grandfather of Bartholomäus Dietterlin. On the ceilings of the Lusthaus at Stuttgart there are paintings by him representing the 'Creation,' the 'Fall of Man,' and the 'Last Judgment,' and in the Belvedere at Vienna is the 'Calling of Matthew.' He also etched several portraits, and twelve spirited grotesques, and published a work on Architectural Design, with 209 engravings. There are 176 original designs by him in the Academy at Dresden. He died in 1599. Some of his works have the monogram annexed :

DIETZ, FEODOR, a German historical painter, born at Neunstetten, near Krautheim, Baden, in 1813, was instructed in the principles of art by Kuntz at Carlsruhe. After studying in the Academy at Munich, and at Paris under Horace Vernet and Alaux, he returned to Germany and there commenced his career. In 1839 he became painter at the court of Baden, in 1862 professor at the Academy at Carlsruhe, and later on President of the German Artistic Society. He made several tours, and died in the course of one in 1870 at Gray, France. The following are some of his best paintings:

The Destruction of Heidelberg by Melac (Carlsruhe Gallery).
 The Death of Piccolomini.
 The Death of Pappenheim.
 Gustavus Adolphus at Lützen.
 The Night Review of Napoleon.
 The Guard of Baden before Paris.
 Napoleon at Wagram.
 Blücher crossing the Rhine.
 Blücher at La Rothière.
 Blücher's March on Paris. 1814. (Berlin Museum).
 The Elector Max Emanuel of Bavaria storming Belgrade in 1688 (Neue Pinakothek, Munich).

DIETZSCH, JOHANN ALBERT, the younger brother of Johann Christoph Dietzsch, was born in 1720, and died in 1782. He engraved about twenty plates of views of Nuremberg and its vicinity, published in 1760. He also painted battle-pieces, landscapes, fruit, flowers, and portraits. Some of his landscapes have been engraved by Prestel.

DIETZSCH, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a German painter in water-colours, especially of landscapes, flowers, and fruit, was born at Nuremberg in 1710. He has left some plates of landscapes etched in the style of Waterloo, which, though more finished, are very inferior to the works of that master in picturesque simplicity. He died in his native city in 1769. There are by him the following plates:

Portrait of Correggio.
 Portrait of Raphael.
 Sixteen Landscapes in the manner of Ruisdael and Waterloo.

DIEU, ANTOINE, a French painter, born in Paris about 1661, was a son of Édouard Dieu, an engraver, who died in Paris in 1703. He was instructed by Lebrun, and painted historical subjects and portraits in the style of his master, and not without merit. The 'Duke of Burgundy before the King,' and the 'Marriage of the Duke of Burgundy,' are in the Museum at Versailles, but his best work is the portrait of 'Louis XIV. on his Throne,' which was engraved by Nicolas Arnoult. He was received at the Academy in 1722, and died in Paris in 1727. His brothers, JEAN DIEU and JEAN BAPTISTE DIEU, were engravers; the former was born about 1658, and died in Paris in 1714.

DIEU, JEAN, called DIEU DE SAINT-JEAN, father and son, were French painters who flourished in the 17th century. Jean Dieu, the elder, was also an etcher. Jean Dieu, the younger, who was a portrait painter, was born about the year 1655, and died in Paris in 1695.

DIGHTON, DENIS, an English painter of battle scenes, the son of Dighton the caricaturist, was born in London in 1792. He studied in the Royal Academy, but obtained through the Prince of Wales a commission in the army. Resigning this, however, and marrying, he settled in London, and devoted himself to art, exhibiting at the Royal Academy from 1811 to 1825. Loss of the royal patronage, together with other causes, affected his reason, and he retired to Brittany, where he died at St. Servan in 1827. Amongst his works are:

Death of Nelson (Bridgewater Collection).
 Defeat of the Turks at Klissura.
 Cavalry skirmishing (South Kensington Museum).
 Battle of Waterloo (Her Majesty's Collection).

His wife was Fruit and Flower Painter to Queen Adelaide, and exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1824 and 1835.

DIGHTON, ROBERT, an English portrait painter and caricaturist, was born in 1752. He exhibited occasionally at the Free Society of Artists and at the Royal Academy. In 1799 he brought out a 'Book of Heads,' and thenceforth devoted himself chiefly to caricature. He died in London in 1814.

DIGHTON, WILLIAM EDWARD, a landscape painter, was a pupil of William Müller, and afterwards of Frederick Goodall. He exhibited English landscape scenery at the British Institution and Royal Academy from 1844 to 1851, after which he visited the East, and in 1853 sent to the Royal Academy two pictures, 'The Ruins of the Temple of Luxor' and 'Bethany.' Dighton died at Hampstead in 1853, aged 31. Had he lived, he would doubtless have made a name in the world of art. He left behind him many fine works, which are for the most part in private collections in Liverpool.

DILLENS, ADOLF, a Belgian genre-painter, was born at Ghent in 1821, and received instruction from his elder brother Hendrik Dillens. His first works were of an historical nature, but he afterwards devoted himself to pictures illustrating Zealand peasant life. He died in 1877. Amongst his best works are :

The Gossip at the Window.

Taking Toll at the Bridge (of this picture he painted three versions).

Asking in Marriage.

A Fair at West Capelle (at Paris International Exhibition, 1855).

A Ball at Goes (at the same).

The Juggler (at London International Exhibition, 1862).

Skaters (in Brussels Museum).

Recruiting: Austrian Soldiers halting at a Tavern (in the same).

DILLENS, HENDRIK, a Belgian genre painter, was born at Ghent in 1812, and died at Brussels in 1872. He executed several pleasing and spirited paintings, among the best of which are :

The French Trooper caressing his Child.

The Capture of the Maid of Orleans.

An Old Man giving Counsel to Two Youths.

Consecration of a Church (with over 200 figures).

DILLIS, IGNAZ, a brother and pupil of Johann Georg von Dillis, was born at Grüngiebing in 1772, and died at Munich in 1808. He etched some landscapes containing figures and animals, but abandoned art for the science of forestry.

DILLIS, JOHANN CANTIUS, a Bavarian landscape painter and etcher, was born at Grüngiebing in 1779. He was the youngest brother of Johann Georg von Dillis, by whom he was instructed, and with whom he went, in 1805, to Italy, where he stayed two years. His best pictures are a 'View in the Environs of Grotta Ferrata,' dated 1809, in the Schleissheim Gallery, and a 'View of the Alps near Reselau,' and 'Stone Bridges near the Mills at Audorf,' in the Leuchtenberg Gallery. He died at Munich in 1856. He etched twelve plates, among which may be mentioned, a 'View of the Castle of Harlaching,' 'A Rocky Country with Mills,' and 'A Farm Cottage hidden in Trees.'

DILLIS, JOHANN GEORG VON, a Bavarian painter, was born at Grüngiebing in 1759, and studied at the Academy of Munich and under Oefele. He afterwards paid frequent visits to Switzerland, Italy, Sicily, France, and Spain. He painted portraits and landscapes, but his engagements as director of several picture galleries in Germany occupied the greater part of his time, so that his works are not numerous. He died at Munich in 1841. In the Modern Gallery of that city there are by him a 'Landscape at Grotta Ferrata,' and a 'View of the Tegernsee,' and in the Schleissheim Gallery is an 'Autumnal Picnic.' He also etched 52 landscapes.

DINGLINGER, SOPHIE FRIEDERIKE, who was born in 1736 at Dresden, and died in the same city in 1791, practised as a miniature painter. The Dresden Gallery possesses seven portraits by her of members of the Dinglinger family—amongst them her own.

DIOLAI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO. See SURCHI.

DIONISIO FIAMMINGO. See CALVAERT.

DIONYSIUS, of Colophon, who flourished about the middle of the 5th century B.C., was a contemporary of Polygnotus, whom he in part imitated and almost rivalled. The subjects which he chose to treat were less important; but, according to Ælian, "his works exhibited the same expressive character, the same choice of attitudes, a similar attention to propriety, and the same elegant arrangement of his draperies; but he represented the objects in a smaller proportion." By these expressions Ælian has been supposed to explain more clearly a passage in the 'Poetics' of Aristotle; and it has been thought to result from his suggestion, that Polygnotus designed his figures larger than life, Dionysius the size of life, and Pauson smaller than life. Winckelmann, however, interprets this in another manner. According to that writer, Polygnotus painted his figures better, that is to say, he stamped them with grandeur above the scale and conformation of man, and as he usually chose his subjects from mythology, or from heroic history, his figures resembled heroes, and represented nature in the most perfect form of ideal beauty. Pauson gave to his figures a more common and familiar air. In the opinion of Winckelmann, Aristotle meant to say that the pictures of Polygnotus were in painting what tragedy is in poetry, and that the figures of Pauson resembled the characters in a comedy, which are represented more than ordinarily ridiculous, to render the effect more ludicrous. Dionysius, whom Pliny places amongst the most famous painters, held a sober medium between Polygnotus and Pauson, and may be said to have been, with respect to Polygnotus, what Euripides was to Sophocles; the latter represented his heroines as they ought to be, the former as they were. This characteristic procured for Dionysius the appellation of ἀνθρωπογράφος, or the 'painter of mankind.'

DIOTISALVI, (or DIETISALVI,) was a contemporary of Duccio, who from 1259 painted miniatures at Siena, some of which are still preserved in the Academy of that city. He also produced some larger pictures, among which is a 'Madonna' in the church of the Servi, dated 1281.

DIOTTI, GIUSEPPE, who was born at Casal Maggiore in 1779, was instructed in the Academy at Parma, and later by Camuccini at Rome. He painted in fresco as well as in oil, distinguishing himself as a painter of historical subjects, and became a professor in the Academy at Carrara, and also in that at Bergamo, where he died in 1846. In the Belvedere at Vienna is a picture by him representing 'The Kiss of Judas,' and in the Milan Gallery is the 'Congress of Pontida.' Other noteworthy works by him are, 'Leonardo da Vinci and Lodovico Sforza,' and 'Tobias receiving his Sight.' His own portrait, dated 1821, is in the Uffizi.

DIRCKS, AUGUST, a German painter of genre pieces and a lithographer, was born at Emden in East Friesland in 1806, and studied at the Academy of Düsseldorf. 'The Decorated Schoolmaster,' a creditable work by him, is in the Gallery of that town. He died at Düsseldorf in 1871.

DIRICKSEN, DIRICK, a German engraver, worked at Hamburg in the earlier part of the 17th century, and was still living in 1647. He was principally employed by the booksellers, and engraved some portraits in a neat style, resembling that of the Van de Passes.

DISCEPOLI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Lugano in 1590. He was usually called 'Lo Zoppo di Lugano,' from his being a cripple. Although he was for some time a scholar of Camillo Procaccini, he did not adopt the style of that master. Lanzi states that he was one of the best and most chaste colourists of his time. Several of his works are in the churches at Milan; his picture of 'Purgatory' in San Carlo is particularly esteemed. In the Brera is an 'Adoration of the Magi' from San Marcellino in Milan. Lugano and Como also possess some of his works; in the church of Santa Teresa, in the latter place, is a picture of that Saint, which is much admired. He died in 1660.

DISTELLI, MARTIN, was born at Olten, in Switzerland, in 1802. In early life he studied art, intending to become a painter, but afterwards gained some celebrity by drawing caricatures, which were published in the 'Distelikalendar.' His Swiss battle-pieces indicate a strong patriotic feeling. He died at Solothurn in 1844.

DITMAR, HENRIK, (or DITTMARZ,) was a German portrait painter who flourished in Hamburg and in Denmark in the latter half of the seventeenth century. In the Copenhagen gallery there is by him a 'Hermit in his Cell,' dated 1665. He died in Denmark late in 1677 or early in 1678.

DITMAR, JAN, (or DITMER,) a Flemish engraver, was born in the Netherlands about 1538, and was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1574. He engraved some plates after Martin De Vos, and other Flemish masters, among which is a print after Michiel Coxcie, representing 'Christ seated in the Clouds, surrounded by Angels holding the Instruments of the Passion and the Symbols of the Four Evangelists,' dated 1574.

DITTENBERGER, JOHANN GUSTAV, an historical and portrait painter, was born at Neuenweg, in Baden, in 1799. He was at first a pupil of Rottmann and Roux at Heidelberg, but in 1821 he entered the Munich Academy. After this he worked for a while in the studio of Baron Gros at Paris, and then removed to Rome. He returned to Vienna in 1831, and died in 1879. He executed a number of church pictures, among which we find 'The Annunciation,' 'St. Andrew converting the Russians,' 'St. Severinus blessing the Land of Austria,' 'The Angelic Salutation' (for Olmütz Cathedral), and two allegorical pictures of 'Germany' and 'Schleswig-Holstein' (1850). He also etched a number of illustrations to Schiller's poems. He frequently marked his works with the annexed monogram: .

DIXON, JOHN, an English miniature, crayon, and water-colour painter, was a pupil of Lely. He excelled in nymphs, satyrs, cupids, &c. He was under William III. keeper of the King's picture closet, but in his later years he became impoverished, and retired to Bungay, where he died in 1715.

DIXON, JOHN, an engraver in mezzotint, was born at Dublin about 1740, and died in London in 1780. He studied under West in his native city, and became in 1766 a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. There are several fine portraits engraved by him after Sir Joshua Reynolds and other masters, among which are the following:

PORTRAITS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

William Beckford, Lord Mayor of London; ad vivum del. 1771.

Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, with Lady Mary Scott fondling a Dog; after Gainsborough. 1771.

Garrick in the character of Richard III.; after N. Dance.

PORTRAITS AFTER SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS.

Mary, Duchess of Ancaster.

Francis, Earl of Hertford.

William, Duke of Leinster. 1775.

Henry, Earl of Pembroke.

The Countess of Pembroke, with her son, Lord Herbert. Charles Townshend, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

DIXON, ROBERT, a landscape painter, was born in 1780. He published, in 1810-11, thirty-six views of 'Norfolk Scenery.' Some of his works appeared at the Norwich Exhibitions. At the South Kensington Museum is a 'Farm Yard' by him in water-colours. He died in 1815.

DIZIANI, GASPARO, an Italian caricaturist, was a pupil of Bastiano Ricci. He died at Venice in 1767. In the Dresden Gallery is a 'Painter painting a portrait from life,' by him.

DOBIASCHOFKY, FRANZ, was born at Vienna in 1818, and was instructed by Führich and Kuppelwieser. He excelled in painting historical subjects and portraits, which have been praised for their good design and poetic feeling. He was a professor at the Academy at Vienna, where he died in 1867. Among his best works may be mentioned two in the Belvedere at Vienna, viz., 'A young Man and Woman in a Garden,' and 'Cimburgis saved from the bear by Duke Ernest Ironside' (1850).

DOBROVOLSKY, VASILY STEFANOVITCH, a Russian painter, was born in 1786. He was a member of the Academy of Arts, and one of the founders of the School for Painting and Sculpture at Moscow, in which city he died in 1855.

DOBSON, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, was born in London in 1610. He was placed as an apprentice to Robert Peake, a portrait painter and picture dealer, who was afterwards knighted by Charles I. From this master's instruction he was not likely to profit much, but he procured him the means of copying some pictures by Titian and Van Dyck, by which he acquired an excellent principle of colouring, and great freedom of hand. On leaving his master, Dobson appears to have lived in indigence and obscurity, until Van Dyck, passing a shop on Snow Hill, perceived a picture exposed in the window for sale, which had sufficient merit to excite his curiosity to discover the painter, whom he found at work in a miserable garret. The well-known liberality of Van Dyck soon released him from his wretched situation; he afterwards introduced him to the king, and zealously recommended him to his Majesty's protection. On the death of Van Dyck, Dobson was appointed serjeant-painter to the king, whom he accompanied to Oxford, where he painted his portrait, as well as those of Prince Rupert and several of the nobility. The melancholy fate of the king was followed by the overthrow of the arts and elegance, and Dobson, who was imprudent and extravagant, became involved in debt, and was thrown into prison. He was released by a patron, but not long afterwards he died in London in 1646. Of the painters of his time, Dobson appears to have approached nearest to the excellence of Van Dyck. His portraits are faithful transcripts of nature, and although he was not equally successful in his historical pictures, the few which he painted are not without considerable merit. One of his best works in history is 'The Decollation of St. John,' at Wilton. King Charles I. styled Dobson the 'English Tintoretto,' but very absurdly, as his manner of painting bears no resemblance to that of the Venetian master. There are in the National Portrait Gallery paintings by Dobson of Himself, Sir Harry Vane the younger, Francis Quarles the poet, and Endymion Porter; and at Hampton Court there are a picture of Himself and his Wife, and portraits of two Gentlemen.

DOCENO. See GHERARDI, CRISTOFANO.

DOCHARTY, JAMES, a Scotch landscape painter, was born at Bonhill, near Dumbarton, in 1829. He was at first engaged with his father in calico manufacture, and did not turn to art till 1862. His works appeared at the Edinburgh Academy, the Glasgow Institution, and the Royal Academy. In 1876 failing health caused him to visit the Continent and the East, but he died on his return to Glasgow in 1878. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1877. Amongst his best works are:

The Haunt of the Red Deer. 1869.

The Head of Loch Lomond. 1873.

Glencoe. 1874.

The River Achray. 1876.

A Good Fishing Day. 1877.

DODD, DANIEL, was an English miniature and subject painter in the latter half of the 18th century. He was a member of the Free Society of Artists in 1763, where he exhibited. His chief works are:

The Royal Procession to St. Paul's.

Representation of the Royal Academy.

DODD, ROBERT, a marine painter, flourished in the latter part of the 18th century. His pictures are chiefly illustrative of the doings of the British navy. He also represented storms at sea very successfully. Redgrave has been unable to trace his name later than 1809 in the books of the Royal Academy. Among his works are:

Admiral Parker's Victory. 1781.

The Loss of the 'Centaur.' 1785.

Lord Rodney's Victory. 1785.

The British Fleet at Spithead escaping from the burning 'Boyle.' 1796.

Commencement of the Battle of Trafalgar. 1806.

DODGSON, GEORGE HAYDOCK, who was born at Liverpool in 1811, was at first apprenticed to George Stephenson, the engineer. His duties in that capacity increased an innate love of art, and in 1836 was published a volume, illustrated by him, descriptive of the scenery of the Whitby and Pickering Railway. Giving up engineering, Dodgson went to London, where he was for some time employed by architects and several illustrated newspapers to make drawings. After a connection of some years with the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, he was elected in 1848 an Associate-Exhibitor of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and became a full member four years later. His contributions to that society were usually landscapes. He was especially fond of painting beech trees. Dodgson died in London in 1880.

DOERBECK, FRANZ BURCHARD. See BURCHARD DOERBECK.

DOERR, OTTO ERICH FRIEDRICH AUGUST, was born at Ludwigslust in Mecklenburg-Schwerin in 1831, and died at Dresden in 1868. In the Dresden Gallery is the 'Interior of a Parisian Studio' by him.

DOES. See VAN DER DOES.

DOESBURGH, F., a Dutch engraver, flourished from about 1680 to 1714. He engraved a plate representing 'Admiral van Tromp engaging the English Fleet.' We have also by him several prints of the old Roman customs; they are etched and finished with the graver in a very indifferent style.

DOIX, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH ALOYSE, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1777. The Museum of Tours possesses some works by this artist, the date of whose death is unknown.

DOLCE, LUZIO, (or DOLCI,) of Castel Durante in the state of Urbino, who flourished in 1589, is commended for his altar-pieces and other pictures in the churches there. It is said that he was employed by the Duke of Urbino to paint at the Imperiale. He executed many works at Rome, as well as at Castel Durante, and resided in the former city for some time. There are few particulars recorded of him, though he is often mentioned with high commendation.

DOLCI, AGNESE, was the daughter of Carlo Dolci, and arrived at some degree of excellence in copying the works of her father. She also painted some pictures of her own composition, but never approached the merit of Carlo. She died in 1686. Among her own works are:

Modena. Gallery. The Virgin adoring the Infant Jesus.
Paris. Louvre. The Consecration of the Bread and Wine.

Siena. Institute. Virgin and Child, with St. Joseph.

DOLCI, CARLO, or CARLINO, who was born at Florence in 1616, was a scholar of Jacopo Vignali. Without the possession of much genius or invention, he excited considerable interest by a number of pleasing and highly-finished pictures, chiefly confined to devout subjects, and most frequently representing heads of our Saviour, and of the Virgin. These are not so much admired for particular beauty of character, as for a soft and tranquil expression of devotion in the patient suffering of Christ, the plaintive sorrow of the Mater Dolorosa, or the compunction of a Saint in penitence. Subjects of that description he treated with great delicacy and tenderness. The general tone of his colouring is well appropriated to the character of his subjects, nothing is harsh or obtrusive, all is modest, placid, and harmonious. He generally painted in a small size, though there are at Florence some pictures by him as large as life. His small pictures of heads of the Madonna are more numerous, and are highly valued by the admirers of polished and laborious finishing. He died at Florence in 1686. There are many repetitions of his small pictures by his pupils, Loma and Mancini, and his daughter Agnese. Many of his pictures are in England. The following are some of his best works:

DOLEND, BARTHOLOMEUS, a Dutch engraver, was born at Leyden about the year 1560, and is presumed to have been instructed in engraving by Hendrik Goltzius. He worked entirely with the graver, in an open, clear style. There are by him several plates, some of which are from his own designs. He occasionally marked his prints with his name, but more frequently with one of these ciphers,

B.D.

B

Among other engravings by him are the following:

Jonah in the Sea, swallowed by the Whale; circular.

Jonah thrown back on the Sea-shore; the same.

A Dutch Merry-making; after his own design.

Adam and Eve taking the Forbidden Fruit; after C. van Mander.

Christ appearing to the Magdalen; B. Dolendo, inv. et fec.

The Holy Family; after M. Coxie.

St. John preaching in the Wilderness.

Pyramus and Thisbe; after Crispin van den Broeck.

Jupiter and Ceres; an allegorical subject; after B. Spranger.

The Assumption of the Virgin.

DOLEND, ZACHARIAS, was a brother of Bartholomeus Dolendo, whom he surpassed both in style and in correctness. He was born at Leyden in 1561, and is said by Huber to have been a disciple of Jacob De Ghein. There are some portraits by this master, which are not inferior in neatness to those by J. Wierix; his plates are frequently marked with this cipher D. There are by him:

William, Prince of Orange; half-length, in armour. 1581.

Andromeda chained to the Rock; finely drawn; after his own design.

Adam and Eve embracing, whilst Eve receives the Apple from the Serpent; after B. Spranger.

St. Martin dividing his Cloak with two Beggars; after the same.

The Continence of Scipio; after A. Bloemaert.

The Virgin and Infant, with two Angels; after J. De Ghein.

The Crucifixion; after the same.

A Set of small Plates of the Gods and Goddesses; copied from the larger ones by H. Goltzius.

DOLIVAR, JUAN, is said by Huber to have been born at Saragossa in 1641. He studied engraving in Paris, and engraved some of the plates of ornamental and decorative subjects for Berain's 'Ornemens.' He was also employed in the set of the 'Little Conquests' of Louis XIV. His works are inferior to those of Le Pautre and Chauveau.

DOLLE, WILLIAM, an English engraver, was born in London about 1600. He was chiefly employed on portraits for the booksellers. These are sought after rather on account of their scarcity than their merit as engravings. Among them are the following:

Sir Henry Wotton, Provost of Eton.

Mark Frank, Master of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge.

John Cosin, Bishop of Durham.

George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham.

Robert Sanderson, Bishop of Lincoln.

John Milton.

Robert, Earl of Essex.

Samuel Botley, Short-hand Writer.

DOLOBELLA, TOMMASO, a native of Belluno, who was born about the year 1580, and flourished about 1630, was according to Ridolfi a scholar of Antonio Vassilacchi, called Aliense. He excelled in painting portraits, and was invited to the court of Poland by Sigismund III., where he painted the royal family and several of the nobility, and was favoured with the particular protection of that monarch. He painted a few historical subjects, but is more celebrated as a portrait painter. In the Sala del Senato in the Ducal Palace, Venice, is a representation by him of 'The Doge and Procurators adoring the Host.'

DOMENCHIN DE CHAVANNE, PIERRE SALOMON, a French landscape painter, who was born in Paris, in 1672. He was received into the Academy in 1709, the picture which he painted upon the occasion, 'Les Pasteurs,' being now in the Louvre. He was an artist of moderate ability, and was employed in the Gobelins manufactory, where he died in 1744.

DOMENECH, ANTONIO, a painter of Valencia, who flourished in the latter half of the 16th century and devoted himself to Scriptural subjects, was a scholar of Nicolas Borrás, whom he assisted in several of his works, and whose manner he so closely imitated, that even at Valencia, where the productions of Borrás may be supposed to be well known, the works of Domenech are attributed to him.

DOMENICHINO. See ZAMPIERI.

DOMENICO, FRANCESCO, who was born at Treviso in 1488, studied under Giorgione. His own portrait, dated 1512, is in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg.

DOMENICO, SANO DI. See SANO DI PIETRO.

DOMENICO DI BARTOLO. See GHERZO.

DOMENICO DI MICHELINO, who lived in the 15th century, was the pupil of Fra Angelico. He painted the portrait of Dante from a design by Baldov'netti, in the Church of Santa Maria dei Fiore at Florence. The dates of his birth and death are alike unknown.

DOMENICO DI PACE. See BECCAFUMI.

DOMENICO FIORENTINO. See DEL BARBIERE.

DOMENICO VENEZIANO. See VENEZIANO.

DOMENIQUE, JEAN, was a native of France, who resided chiefly at Rome, where he died in 1684. He was a scholar of Claude Lorrain, and was a successful copyist and imitator of the works of that master.

DOMER, JAKUES, (DOOMER, or DEMER,) a Dutch artist, was born in 1647, and flourished about 1680. He is better known by his drawings than by his pictures in oil. His manner approximates to that of Rembrandt, and it may be believed that his dark landscapes have been ascribed to the latter. His compositions are simple, but strikingly true.

DOMINGO, LUIS, a Spanish painter and sculptor, born at Valencia in 1718, was a scholar of Hipolito Robira in painting, and of Bautista Balaguer in sculpture. The Dominican convent at Valencia possessed several pictures by him, among which was one of St. Louis Bertran. Domingo died at Valencia in 1767. His works in sculpture are to be seen in several churches of that city.

DOMINICI, BERNARDO, a Neapolitan painter and writer on art, flourished about the year 1740. He studied landscape painting under Joachim Franz Beisch, a German artist, who passed some time at Naples, and attached himself to the clear and finished style of that master. He also painted what are called 'bambocciate.' In 1742 and 1743, he published at Naples, in two volumes, 'Vite de' Pittori, Scultori, ed Architetti Napolitani.'

DOMINICI, FRANCESCO, a native of Treviso, was a pupil of Paris Bordone. Ridolfi commends a work by him in the dome of the Banca della Compagnia della Madonna at Treviso, representing a 'Procession of a Bishop and several Canons,' which is dated 1572. Dominici also excelled as a portrait painter, but did not survive his thirty-fifth year.

DONADO, ADRIANO, a Spanish monk of the order of Barefooted Carmelites at Cordova, painted some excellent works for his convent. He died at a great age in 1630. The Lille Museum has a 'Flagellation of Christ' by him.

DONALDSON, ANDREW, a Scotch landscape painter in water-colours, was born at Comber, near Belfast. Taken by his father, an operative weaver, to Glasgow, he met with an accident, which eventually led to his devoting himself entirely to art, in the pursuit of which he visited many parts of the United Kingdom. He died in 1846 at Glasgow, where he had obtained a large teaching connection. In the Glasgow Corporation Galleries there are by him the 'Old Theatre Royal, Glasgow, after the fire in 1829,' and a 'Scotch Highland Village.'

DONALDSON, JOHN, was born at Edinburgh in 1737, and distinguished himself as a miniature painter, both in enamel and water-colours. In the year 1764, and again in 1768, he obtained the premium given by the Society of Arts for the best picture in enamel. He occasionally amused himself with the point, and etched several plates of beggars, after Rembrandt, which possess considerable merit. He died in London in 1801.

DONATO, of Pavia, flourished at the close of the fifteenth century, and is the author of a 'Christ crucified, between the Virgin and St. John,' in the hospital of Savona; also of a 'Virgin in Glory with Saints' (signed in 1507), in the Louvre at Paris.

DONATO VENEZIANO. See VENEZIANO.

DONAUER, LORENZ, was an obscure German engraver, by whom there is only known a work representing 'St. Anthony,' after Albrecht Dürer, which he executed about the year 1539.

DONDUCCI, GIOVANNI ANDREA, called IL MAS-TELLETTA, was born at Bologna in 1575. He was at first a scholar of the Carracci, but did not long remain under their tuition. His impetuous disposition disdaining the control of academic precision, he attempted to establish a new style, founded on a spirited and graceful design, in imitation of the works of Parmigiano and Tiarini, which he particularly admired, and a promptness of execution which was natural to him. The novel manner of Donducci was not without its admirers; and he was employed in a great number of works for the public edifices at Bologna, where are his principal works. He also painted landscapes, which were entirely in the style of the Carracci, and were much esteemed, particularly at Rome. Annibale advised him to establish himself in that city, and to devote himself to those subjects; a counsel by no means agreeable to Donducci. His most admired performance is his 'St. Irene drawing the Arrow from the Breast of St. Sebastian,' at the church of the Celestines. He died at Bologna in 1655. The following of his works are also preserved:

Bologna.	S. Domenico.	St. Dominic restoring to life the Man killed by the furious Horse.
"	S. Salvatore.	The Storm.
"	S. Francesco.	The Resurrection of Christ.
"	I Mendicanti.	The Last Supper.
"	S. Paolo.	The Flight into Egypt.
"		Christ in the Garden.
"		Christ bearing the Cross.
"	Pinacoteca.	Christ surrounded by Angels.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Charity.
Modena.	Museum.	Abraham and the Three Angels.
"	"	Elias sleeping.
"	"	Portrait of a Painter.
"	"	Finding of Moses.
"	"	St. John baptizing.
Paris.	Louvre.	Christ and the Virgin appearing to St. Francis of Assisi.

DONELLI, CARLO, called CARLO VIMERCATI, who was born at Milan in 1660, was a scholar of the Procaccini. He exhibited but few of his pictures at Milan; he painted more at Codogno, and in his best manner. He died in 1715.

DONGEN, DIONYS VAN, born at Dort in 1748, was a scholar of J. Xavery, at the Hague. He painted landscapes and cattle in the manner of his master for some time; but having removed with his parents to Rotterdam, he studied the works of Paul Potter, Cuyp, Wynants, and other masters, which, with a constant attention to nature, caused a sensible alteration in his style. His works found ready purchasers among the English, French, and Germans, as well as among his own countrymen. He died at Rotterdam in 1819. In the Städel Gallery at Frankfurt is a 'Cattle-piece' by him.

DONI, ADONE, (or DONO DEI DONI,) who was born at Assisi, early in the 16th century, is said to have been a disciple of Pietro Perugino. His style retained but little of the Gothic manner of that master, and in his later years he abandoned the style of the school of Raphael, and adopted that of Michelangelo. He worked chiefly at Assisi, and after that city most at Fuligno, but all trace of his work at the latter place has disappeared. He also painted in Perugia, and throughout Umbria. In the church of San Francesco, at Perugia, is a picture by this master of the 'Last Judgment;' and one of the 'Adoration of the Kings' is in San Pietro in the same city. There are in the Lower Church of the Franciscan Convent at Assisi frescoes by him representing the 'Preaching and Martyrdom of St. Stephen,' and in the small refectory is the 'Last Supper,' painted in 1573, which was probably his last work. Doni died at Assisi in 1575. Vasari is wrong in stating that he was a nephew of Taddeo Bartoli. In the Berlin Gallery there is by him a 'Madonna with the Infant Jesus,' who is represented as reaching after a book which is in the Virgin's hand.

DONNE, W., a Dutch engraver, flourished about the year 1680. Among other prints, he engraved a plate representing 'Venus and Cupid,' in a landscape, with other figures in the distance, after A. Elsheimer. It is etched in a slight, poor style.

DONNEKER. See DE NECKER.

DONNET, S. This artist is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a very indifferent print representing a 'Man seated, reading a book.'

DONNINI, GIROLAMO, was born at Correggio in 1681, and studied first at Modena under Francesco Stringa, afterwards under Giovanni Giuseppe dal Sole at Bologna, and ultimately at Forlì, under Carlo Cignani. He was chiefly employed in easel pictures, although he occasionally painted larger works for churches. In the Madonna di Galiera, at Bologna, is an altar-piece representing 'St. Anthony of Padua.' There are some of his works in the churches of the Romagna, and at Turin, which are not unworthy of a scholar of Cignani. In the Modena Gallery are two pictures by him of the 'Birth of Christ.'

DONO, PAOLO DI, called PAOLO UCCELLO, from his love of painting birds, was born at Florence in 1397, and in early youth was apprenticed to Lorenzo Ghiberti, the founder of the famous bronze gates of the Baptistery of that city. It is doubtful from whom he learned to paint, or from whom he acquired the laws of perspective for which he became so famous, although it is known that Manetti taught him geometry. Vasari says that he wasted so much of his time over the study of perspective "that he became more needy than famous." Four paintings of battle-scenes executed by him for the Bartolini family, at Guelfonda, near Florence, are wonderful specimens of this artist's thorough knowledge of foreshortening and perspective. Of these designs one is in the National Gallery, another is in the Uffizi, a third is in the Louvre, and the fourth is still in private hands in Florence. The Louvre also possesses a panel by this artist which contains the portraits of Giotto, Donatello, Brunelleschi, Giovanni Manetti, and himself, as the representatives of painting, sculpture, architecture, mathematics, and perspective. It is certain that he lived in Florence nearly all his life, although during some short period in it he may have been at Padua, since Morelli states that the frescoes of the palace of the Vitaliani were executed by him. About the year 1436 he painted in the cathedral at Florence the colossal equestrian portrait of Sir John Hawkwood, the adventurer and soldier. This chiaroscuro painting, which is in terra verde, displays a wonderful power of foreshortening and proportion, and is intended to imitate a stone statue seen aloft standing out from the wall of the church. His masterpieces are the series of frescoes imitating bas-reliefs painted from about 1446 to 1448 in the cloisters of Santa Maria Novella. These paintings represent the 'Creation of Animals,' the 'Creation of Man,' the 'Temptation of Eve,' the 'Expulsion from Eden,' 'Adam and Eve labouring by the sweat of their brow,' the 'Sacrifice and Death of Abel,' the 'Building of the Ark,' the 'Entry of the Animals,' the 'Deluge,' 'Noah's Sacrifice,' and the 'Inebriety of Noah.' Genuine paintings by this master are very rare, although records prove that he executed several altar-pieces for churches in Florence and in Urbino. Paolo died at Florence in 1475. The Scolopi College, near the church of Sant' Agata, at Urbino, possesses a predella with six subjects relating to the theft of a pax, which Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle consider to be a genuine production by Paolo Uccello. His principal paintings are:

Florence.	Cathedral.	Equestrian Statue of Sir John Hawkwood (Captain-General of the Florentines, known in Italy as Giovanni Acuto).—Fresco executed in terra verde.
"	S. Maria Novella.	Subjects from the Book of Genesis: the Creation, the Fall, the Deluge, Noah's Sacrifice, &c.—Frescoes in terra verde in the cloister; most of them in part destroyed.
"	Uffizi.	Battle-piece.
London.	Nat. Gall.	Battle of Sant' Egidio.
Paris.	Louvre.	Bust portraits of Giotto, Donatello, Brunelleschi, Giovanni Manetti, and himself.
		Battle-piece.
Urbino.	Scolopi College.	Legend of the Theft of a Pax.

DONOSO, JOSEF XIMENEZ. See XIMENEZ DONOSO.

DONVÉ, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French painter, was born at Saint-Amand in 1736. He was a pupil of Louis Watteau, and of Greuze, and so closely imitated the style of the latter that many of his pictures have been sold as those of his master. The Museum of Lille has three portraits by him, one being that of Sauvage, the enamel painter, and the other two portraits of himself. He died at Lille in 1799.

DONZELLO, PIERO and IPPOLITO, (or DEL DONZELLO,) were two brothers, the sons by different mothers of Francesco d'Antonio di Jacopo, bailiff ('donzello') of the Signoria of Florence, and were both born in that city—Piero in 1451, and Ippolito in 1455. The teacher of Piero is unknown. Ippolito was the pupil of Neri di Bicci from 1469 to 1471, and the brothers were companions in the 'Studio' at Florence up to 1480. In 1481, or soon after, they went to Naples to decorate the palace of Poggio Reale, which was then being built for Alfonso I., from the designs of Giuliano da Majano, and it is not unlikely that Ippolito died in that city. Piero died at Florence in 1509; but the death of Ippolito is not registered. They both assisted Antonio Solario, called Il Zingaro, in the frescoes in the cloisters of the monastery of San Severino at Naples, and in the Museum of that city may be seen two 'Crucifixions,' a 'Virgin and Child with Saints,' and other paintings assigned to them.

DOOMER, JACQUES. See DOMER.

DOOMS, CASPAR, an engraver in mezzotint, worked at Prague from 1644 to 1675, and afterwards at Vienna and Mayence. His best known plate is an 'Ecce Homo,' after Albrecht Dürer, now very rare.

DOORNIK, JAN VAN, a painter of Leyden, is said to have produced pictures in the manner of Wouwerman. He also painted historical subjects and portraits. It is not known exactly at what period he lived.

DOORT, P. VAN, was a Dutch engraver, who worked entirely with the graver, and was a humble imitator of the style of Cornelis Cort. Among other prints by him, is one after Bernardino Passari, representing the 'Holy Family,' in which St. Elizabeth is presenting an apple to the Infant Christ.

DORBAY, —, a French engraver, flourished towards the end of the 17th century. He engraved, among other plates, some views of the Royal Palaces in France.

DORCY, PIERRE JOSEPH DEDREUX. See DEDREUX-DORCY.

DORÉ, LOUIS CHRISTOPHE GUSTAVE PAUL, a French historical painter and illustrator of books, was born at Strassburg in 1833. His name was originally DORER, a not unfrequent German name, which he modified into the French equivalent by which he became so widely known. In 1848, when but fifteen years of age, he began to exhibit at the Salon landscape sketches in pen and ink which showed considerable ability, and in the same year he became one of the regular contributors to the 'Journal pour rire.' He also contributed a large number of designs to the 'Journal pour tous.' His earliest exhibited works were the 'Battle of the Alma,' in the Salon of 1855, and the 'Battle of Inkermann,' in the Salon of 1857, but his best picture, and that which first brought him into notice as a painter, was 'Paolo and Francesca da Rimini,' exhibited in 1863. This was followed, among others, by 'The Titans,' a drawing heightened with white, in 1866, and 'The Neophyte' in 1868. Doré's ambition was to win fame as an historical painter, but in this he failed. Although gifted with marvellous fertility of imagination and wonderful facility of execution, he nevertheless possessed grave defects. Nowhere are his faults of composition and drawing more manifest than on the enormous canvases exhibited in the Doré Gallery in London. 'Christ leaving the Prætorium' (1867-72) and 'Christ's Entry into Jerusalem' (1876), each measuring twenty feet in height and thirty feet in length, are works to which he devoted his utmost energy, but which add nothing to his reputation. Besides these his most ambitious works were his 'Ecce Homo!' (1877), and 'Moses before Pharaoh' (1878-80). His 'Tobit and the Angel,' painted in 1865, is in the Luxembourg Gallery.

It is, however, as a designer of illustrations for books that the wonderful versatility of his genius becomes most apparent. The designs for the 'Contes drolatiques' of Balzac, published in 1856, are masterpieces of caricature, which breathe the true mediæval spirit. They were preceded by the illustrations to 'Rabelais,' issued in 1854, among which that of the 'Monks of Seville' is inimitable in its humour, and by those to the 'Legend of the Wandering Jew,' issued in 1856. The 'Contes drolatiques' and 'Rabelais' are unsurpassed even by the designs for Dante's 'Inferno,' terrible as are the latter in their weird imagination. These were published in 1861, accompanied by a blank-verse translation of the text by W. M. Rossetti, and were followed in the same year by the illustrations to the 'Contes' of Perrault, and in 1863 by a series of designs for 'Don Quixote,' which are careful studies of Spanish life. The 'Purgatorio' and 'Paradiso' of Dante, completing the 'Divina Commedia,' were not published until 1868. The designs for the 'Bible' (1865-66), Milton's 'Paradise Lost' (1866), Tennyson's 'Idyls of the King' (1867-68), La Fontaine's 'Fables' (1867), Hood's 'Poems' (1870), Baron Davillier's 'Espagne' (1873), Coleridge's 'Ancient Mariner' (1876), Louis Enault's 'Londres' (1877), the 'Orlando Furioso' of Ariosto (1879), and Poe's 'Raven' (1883)—the last work on which he was engaged—marked the grades in a constantly descending scale of genius and of power.

Doré's reputation as an artist does not rest exclusively on his paintings and designs. He possessed also considerable ability as a sculptor, and was engaged upon the monument to the elder Dumas when death struck him down. A colossal vase decorated with groups of figures was sent by him to the Exposition Universelle at Paris in 1878.

Gustave Doré died in Paris in 1883. He left unfinished a series of illustrations to Shakespeare, and unaccomplished the intention to execute a statue of the great dramatist. The following are his most important pictures:

The Battle of the Alma. (Salon, 1855.)
 The Battle of Inkermann. (Salon, 1857.)
 Paolo and Francesca da Rimini. (Salon, 1863.)
 Tobit and the Angel. 1865. (Lucembourg Gallery.)
 The Neophyte. (Salon, 1868.)
 The Mountebank's Family. (Salon, 1868.)
 Andromeda. 1868.
 The Triumph of Christianity over Paganism. 1868.
 Christian Martyrs. 1871.
 Christ leaving the Prætorium. 1867-72.
 The Massacre of the Innocents. 1869-72.
 The Night of the Crucifixion. 1872-73.
 The Dream of Pilate's Wife. 1873-74.
 Christ's Entry into Jerusalem. 1876.
 Ecce Homo! 1877.
 The Ascension. 1879.
 Moses before Pharaoh. 1878-80.
 A Day Dream. 1882.
 The Vale of Tears. 1882. R.E.G.

DORFMEISTER, JOHANN EVANGELIST, an Austrian landscape painter, was born in 1741, and died in 1765. A 'Forest Party' by him is in the Vienna Gallery.

DORIGNY, LOUIS, a French historical painter and engraver, was a son of Michel Dorigny, and was born in Paris in 1654. His father died when he was only ten years of age, and he was placed under the tuition of Charles Le Brun. On leaving that master he studied for four years at Rome, visited Gubbio and Foligno, and from thence went to Venice, where he resided for ten years, and executed many decorative paintings. He then went to Verona, where he passed the rest of his life, and gave proof of his ability as a painter both in oil and in fresco. In 1704 he visited Paris and became a candidate for admission into the Academy, but was excluded through the influence of the architect Mansard. In 1711 he was summoned to Vienna by Prince Eugene, in whose palace he painted the ceilings of the grand staircase and of some other apartments. He died at Verona in 1742. His 'Susannah and the Elders' is in the Bordeaux Museum. He executed some etchings in a free, painter-like style, among which are the following:

A set of thirty-two vignettes, with the title, from his own designs, for an Italian edition of the 'Pensées Chrétiennes' of Père Bouhours.
 Six subjects from Ovid's Metamorphoses.
 Five Emblems of Horace; the designs for three of these are in the Louvre.
 A View of the Amphitheatre at Verona.
 The Descent of the Saracens at the Port of Ostia; after Raphael.

DORIGNY, MICHEL, a French painter and engraver, was born at St. Quentin in 1617, and was brought up under Simon Vouet, whose daughter he married. He painted historical subjects in the style of his master; and some of his pictures are in the château of Vincennes. His 'Flora and Zephyr' is now in the Louvre, and an 'Allegory' by him is in the Madrid Gallery. He is, however, better known as the engraver of several plates etched in a bold, spirited style, but with a considerable degree of harshness in the effect which is very disagreeable. Dorigny died in Paris in 1665. The following are his principal plates, all of which are after the pictures of Simon Vouet:

The Holy Family. 1649.

The Nativity.

The Adoration of the Magi; in four sheets, in the manner of a frieze.

Jupiter giving Apollo the conduct of the Chariot of the Sun.

Apollo killing the Python.

Peace descending on the Earth.

Venus at her Toilet.

Venus, Cupid, and Hope, plucking Feathers from the Wings of Time.

Mercury and the Graces.

Iris cutting the hair of Dido.

The Rape of Europa.

He also engraved from his own designs:

A set of Six Bacchanalian subjects.

A Caricature of the architect Mansard, entitled 'La Mansarde.'

DORIGNY, Sir NICOLAS, a French engraver, was the youngest son of Michel Dorigny, and was born in Paris in 1658. He was brought up to the bar, and followed that profession until he was thirty years of age, when, in consequence of deafness, he turned his thoughts to the arts, and visited Italy, where he remained twenty-eight years. His first plates were executed with the point; and if we were to judge of his talent by his early prints, his reputation would be very short of that which he acquired by a union of the point and the graver in his later productions. He took for his model the admirable works of Gérard Audran; and although he by no means equalled that celebrated artist, either in the style of his drawing, or in the picturesque effect of his light and shade, his prints will always be esteemed both for their merit as engravings and for the importance of the subjects of which he made choice. In 1711 he was invited to England by Queen Anne to engrave the Cartoons of Raphael at Hampton Court, which he finished in 1719, and in the following year he was knighted by King George I. Whilst he was in England he painted some portraits of the nobility, but with no great success. He returned to France in 1725, and was received into the Academy in the same year. He exhibited some pictures of sacred subjects at the Salon from 1739 to 1743, and died in Paris in 1746. The following are his principal prints:

Nine plates of the Seven Planets, and the Creation of the Sun and Moon; after the paintings by Raphael in the Chigi Chapel in La Madonna del Popolo.

The Cartoons at Hampton Court; after the same; eight plates, including the title.

The Transfiguration; after the same.

The History of Cupid and Psyche, and the Triumph of Galatea, twelve plates, including the title; after the paintings from the designs of Raphael, in the Farnesina.

The Descent from the Cross; after Danielle da Volterra. St. Peter and St. John healing the Lame Man at the Gate of the Temple; after L. Cigoli.

The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian; after Domenichino.

The Martyrdom of St. Petronilla; after Guercino.

St. Francis kneeling before the Virgin and Child; after A. Carracci.

St. Catharine in Meditation; after Carlo Cignani.

St. Peter walking on the Sea; after Lanfranco.

The Virgin and Child, with St. Charles Borromeo and St. Liborius; after B. Lambertini.

The Trinity; after Guido Reni.

The Birth of the Virgin; after Carlo Maratti.

The Adoration of the Magi; after the same.

The Virgin and Child, with St. Charles Borromeo and St. Ignatius; after the same.

Eight plates of the paintings in the Cupola of St. Agnes; after Ciro Ferri.

DORN, JOSEPH, was born at Gratz-Sambach, near Pommersfelden in 1759, and studied in the galleries of Munich, Vienna, and Düsseldorf. He copied to deception the cabinet pictures of Frans van Mieris, Gerard Dou, Terborch, Van der Werff, and others, and was particularly celebrated for his skill in restoring old paintings. He died at Bamberg in 1841. His wife, ROSALIE DORN, excelled in portrait painting; she was the daughter of the historical painter Treu.

DORNER, JOHANN JAKOB, the elder, who was born at Ehrenstetten, near Freiburg in Breisgau, in 1741, was at first a pupil of Rösch at Freiburg and of Ignaz Bauer at Augsburg. He afterwards visited Italy, the Netherlands, and Paris; and excelled as a painter of historical and genre subjects. He was a professor and director of the Gallery at Munich in 1770, and died in that city in 1813. In the Darmstadt Gallery is a picture of 'Two Soldiers and a Maiden' by him; and in the Pinakothek at Munich, a 'Linen Draper,' which is a portrait of his wife, dated 1775.

DORNER, JOHANN JAKOB, a Bavarian landscape painter, the son of Johann Jakob Dorner the elder, was born at Munich in 1775. He was instructed in art by his father and by Mannlich, but he afterwards studied the works of Claude Lorrain and Karel Du Jardin. He travelled by himself through the picturesque regions of Bavaria, Switzerland, and France. His works are distinguished for spirited composition and taste in their execution. In 1803 he became Restorer, and in 1808 Inspector of the Royal Gallery at Munich, and was subsequently elected a member of the Academies of Hanau, Vienna, Berlin, and Munich. He died at Munich in 1852. The following works by him are in public collections:

Berlin.	Gallery.	A Forest Road. 1817.
Cassel.	Gallery.	Two Waterfalls.
Munich.	Pinakothek.	View of the Walchensee, in the Mountains of Upper Bavaria.
"	"	Waterfall, with a Huntsman.
"	"	Landscape and Mill near Pasing.
"	"	Landscape in the Tyrol during a Thunderstorm.

DORNER, JOHANN KONRAD, an Austrian painter, was born at Egg, near Bregenz, in 1810, and studied historical painting under Cornelius. In 1835 he went to St. Petersburg, and there painted many portraits and altarpieces. He afterwards returned to Munich, and in 1860 went to Rome, where he died in 1866. He executed his best works whilst in Rome; they are mostly of a religious character. A 'Madonna and Child, with St. John,' and the 'Infant Christ' are in the Pinakothek at Munich.

DORRELL, EDMUND, an English water-colour landscape painter, was born at Warwick in 1778.

He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1807 to 1828, and at the Water-Colour Society from 1809 to 1818. He died in London in 1857. There are by him at the South Kensington Museum:

On the Thames.
Landscape, with cottage, church, figures, &c.
Fisherman and Boats, Mount Edgumbe.
Crowhurst, near Hastings.
View from Box Hill.

DORSTE, I. V. This signature appears on a profile portrait of a Man, in the Dresden Gallery, which by Vosmaer is ascribed to Geraert Drost.

DOSSI, BATTISTA, was an Italian painter of landscapes and caricatures, who was a scholar of Lorenzo Costa, and worked mostly in conjunction with his brother Giovanni. In the Costabili Gallery at Ferrara are four landscapes by him; and in San Pietro at Modena are other works by him. He also executed two fantastic landscapes which are in the Palazzo Borghese at Rome, and assisted Raphael for a short time in 1520. He died in 1548. The Uffizi, Florence, has a 'Female Saint' by him.

DOSSI, GIOVANNI, commonly called Dosso Dossi, and sometimes GIOVANNI DI NICOLÒ DI LUTERO, appears to have been born about the year 1479 in the vicinity of Ferrara. His surname is supposed to have been derived from the village of Dosso, in the province of Ferrara. He was in 1512 a disciple of Lorenzo Costa in Mantua. He afterwards, with his brother Battista, visited Rome and Venice, and they there passed eleven years, studying the works of Giorgione and Titian, till they formed a style which may be called their own, and which, although not totally divested of the Gothic, is distinguished by originality of invention, and great harmony of colour. Giovanni excelled in painting figures, in which Battista was less successful; but Battista distinguished himself as a painter of landscape, in which Lomazzo considers him little inferior to Gaudenzio Ferrari, Pordenone, and even Titian. The brothers were much employed by Alfonso I., Duke of Ferrara, and by his successor, Ercole II. They painted the cartoons for the tapestries in the cathedral at Ferrara, and for those in the church of San Francesco, and in the ducal palace at Modena. Several of Dosso Dossi's frescoes are still to be seen in the ducal palace at Ferrara, but others were destroyed by fire in 1718. He excelled in portraits as well as historical subjects, and painted that of Ariosto, who employed him to make designs for his 'Orlando Furioso.' The poet has celebrated the names of the Dossi by enrolling them with those of Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo, Raphael, and Titian. Dosso Dossi died at Ferrara in 1542. The following paintings by him are known:

Berlin.	Gallery.	The Fathers of the Church in meditation on the Mystery of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin.
Bergamo.	Museum.	Portrait of a Man.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Virgin and God the Father in one Glory, with the Four Doctors of the Church below.
Ferrara.	Certosa.	The Virgin and Child, with St. John and two other Saints.
"	S. Agostino.	The Crucifixion, with the Virgin, St. John, and St. Augustine.
"	Museum.	The Virgin enthroned, crowned by Angels.
"	"	St. John at Patmos.
"	"	The Annunciation.

Ferrara.	Museum.	Madonna with Saints. (A very large picture in five compartments, from S. Andrea.)
"	Ducal Pal.	Decorative paintings with three Bacchanals.
"	"	The Hours of the Day.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Massacre of the Innocents.
"	"	His own Portrait.

DOSSIER, MICHEL, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1684, and died in the same city in 1750. He was a pupil of Pierre Drevet, and engraved but a very few plates, the best known of which is 'Vertumnus and Pomona,' after Rigaud, the figure of Pomona being a portrait of Anne Varice de Vallière, wife of Jean Neyret de La Ravoye. The following may also be mentioned:

The Marriage of the Virgin; after Jouvenet
Christ healing the two Blind Men at Jericho; after Colombel.
Christ driving the Money-Changers out of the Temple; after the same.
The Supper at the house of Simon the Pharisee; after the same.
Jean Baptiste Colbert, Marquis of Torey; after Rigaud.

DOU, GERARD, was born at Leyden in 1613, in the same year and the same city which had the glory of claiming Rembrandt as citizen. His father, Douwe Janszoon de Vries van Arentsveldt, who was a glazier, allowed his son to follow the path to which the boy's instincts led him, and apprenticed him, in 1622, to the studio of the engraver, Bartholomeus Dolendo. Here young Gerard spent some time in mastering the art of drawing. After quitting the engraver's desk he went, in 1624, into the workshop of Pieter Kouwenhoven, a painter on glass, and in 1628 he entered the studio of the great Rembrandt van Ryn, but he borrowed little of his master's style and manner. Dou's talent was all his own; his pictures, though small, are superb specimens of the art, finished with care, and true to nature.

After setting up for himself, Dou is reported to have worked at portrait painting; but his manner was too slow and laboured to please his sitters, and he then took as subjects for his paintings the scenes of humble industry that the neighbouring market-place afforded, and interiors graced by buxom maids.

No details have been handed down to us of Dou's life. It was probably passed happily and quietly at his work. He resided—with the exception of two gaps, from 1651 to 1657, and again from 1668 to 1672—in his native city. That he was a prosperous man is to be inferred from the large sums for which he sold his paintings. The wealthy connoisseur Van Spiring gave Dou an annual donation of a thousand florins merely to be allowed to have the first choice of the pictures that the artist had completed at the close of every year. Besides this annual grant, Van Spiring paid the ordinary price like any other purchaser for the pictures which he chose.

Gerard Dou died at Leyden in 1675, and was buried in the church of St. Peter. Among his pupils and followers were Frans van Mieris, Schalcken, Gabriel Metsu, and Van Slingeland. The following are his principal works:

DOUDYNS, WILLEM, a Dutch painter, was born at the Hague in 1630. He was of a distinguished family, and followed the art rather as an amateur than a professor; but with a zeal that enabled him to reach a reputable rank among the painters of his country. After receiving some instruction from an obscure artist, named Alexander Petit, he travelled to Italy, where he passed twelve years studying the best productions of the art, and acquired a correctness of design and an elevation of taste, which distinguish his works. On his return to Holland, he executed several fresco paintings, particularly decorations for ceilings, in which, from his perfect knowledge of foreshortening, he excelled. Some of his works of that description are in the town-hall at the Hague. Two of his most admired easel pictures were in the possession of M. Van Heteren, representing 'Time discovering Truth,' and 'Wisdom triumphing over Vice and Intemperance.' Doudyns was one of the founders of the Academy at the Hague, of which he was appointed the director. He died in 1697.

DOUE, CLAUDE and JEAN. See DE HOEY.

DOUET, —, a French engraver on wood, flourished about the year 1530. Papillon notices a woodcut executed by him, representing the 'Virgin Mary and the Infant Christ,' after Andrea del Sarto.

DOUFFET, GERAERT, (DOUFET, or DUFFEIT,) was born at Liège in 1594, and studied for some time at Antwerp in the school of Rubens, and afterwards in Italy. He composed and designed with good taste, and his historical pictures are much esteemed. 'Pope Nicholas V. at the Tomb of St. Francis of Assisi' (painted in 1627), 'St. Helena and the true Cross' (painted for the Abbey of St. Lawrence, Liège), and two male portraits (one dated 1624), are in the Munich Gallery. He died at Liège in 1660.

DOUGHTY, THOMAS, one of the earliest native landscape painters of America, was born at Philadelphia in 1793. He abandoned mercantile pursuits for art in 1820, worked also in London and Paris, and died in New York in 1856. In the Edinburgh Museum is a 'View on the Schuylkill' by him.

DOUGHTY, WILLIAM, a painter and engraver, was a native of York. In 1775 he became a pupil of Sir Joshua Reynolds, and after an unsuccessful attempt as a portrait painter in Ireland, he in 1779 settled down in London; but in the following year he set sail for Bengal, having just married a servant girl from Reynolds's house. His ship, however, was captured by the French and Spaniards, by whom he was brought to Lisbon, where he died in 1782. Two paintings which he exhibited were a 'Circe' and a portrait of Sir Joshua Reynolds; but he was more successful with his etchings and mezzotint portraits, among which are the following:

Thomas Beckwith, the Antiquary of York.
 Thomas Gray, the Poet.
 Admiral Keppel; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
 William Mason, the Poet; after the same.
 Mary Palmer, the niece of Sir Joshua Reynolds, afterwards Marchioness of Thomond; after the same.
 Dr. Samuel Johnson; after the same.

DOUVEN, JOHANNES FRANCISCUS VAN, was born at Roermond, in the Duchy of Guelders, in 1656. His father dying when he was young, he was placed under the care of a painter of Liège, named Gabriel Lambertin, who had studied in Italy, and had formed a collection of studies and drawings, which were of great utility to the progress of his pupil. On leaving that master he was taken into favour by a Spanish nobleman residing at Roermond, who possessed a valuable collection of the Italian school. He was permitted to copy and study these, and they were a mine of instruction to the young artist. His first essays were in historical painting; and he would probably have distinguished himself in that branch, had not the flattering invitation he received from the Elector induced him to visit Düsseldorf, where he painted the portraits of that prince and the principal personages of his court, and was appointed principal painter to the elector. This success seems to have inclined his future course chiefly to portrait painting; and his talents were employed at almost every court in Germany, where he received many honourable marks of favour and distinction. He was also patronized at the court of Tuscany, where the Grand Duke placed his portrait in the Florentine Gallery. He occasionally painted easel pictures of historical subjects, which were correctly drawn and well composed. Douven died at Düsseldorf in 1727. The following pictures are by him:

Cassel.	Gallery.	Susannah and the Elders. 1725.
"	"	Bathsheba bathing.
"	"	Clement Augustus, Elector of Cologne.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Portrait of Elizabeth Haurey.
"	"	Portrait of Himself.
"	"	St. Anne teaching the Virgin.
"	"	Portrait of Maria Luisa de' Medici.
Munich.	Gallery.	Portrait of the Elector Palatine, John William.
"	"	Portrait of a young Elector Palatine.

His son, BARTHOLOMEUS VAN DOUVEN, born at Düsseldorf in 1688, painted in the manner of A. van der Werff. He was employed at the court of the Elector of Cologne, and excelled in the execution of portraits. The Cassel Gallery has a picture of the 'Three Graces' by him, and in the palace at Cassel is a 'Holy Family,' known as 'La Vierge aux cerises,' which was taken to Paris by the French, but returned in 1815. There is by him in the Uffizi Gallery at Florence a picture containing medallion portraits of the Elector Palatine John William, and his wife Maria Luisa de' Medici, copied from the original by Van der Werff in the Munich Gallery.

DOUW, SIMON VAN, flourished at Antwerp, where he was free of the Guild of St. Luke in 1653-54. In the Lille Museum is a 'Landscape with figures' by him, signed and dated 1677.

DOW, GERARD. See Dou.

DOWNES, BERNARD, an English portrait painter, flourished in the latter half of the 18th century. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1770 to 1775, and at the Incorporated Society of Artists, of which he was a member. He died before 1780.

DOWNMAN, JOHN, an English portrait and historical painter, was born in Devonshire in the middle of the 18th century. He studied under West, and in the schools of the Academy, of which he became an Associate in 1795. He practised his profession successively at Cambridge, London, Plymouth, Exeter, Chester, and at Wrexham, where he died in 1824. Amongst his works are:

A Lady at work. 1770.
 The Death of Lucretia. 1773.
 Rosalind (painted for the "Shakespeare Gallery").
 The Priestess of Bacchus.
 The Return of Orestes.
 Tobias.
 Miss Farren and Mr. King in character.

DOYEN, GABRIEL FRANÇOIS, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1726. Before he had attained his twelfth year he entered the studio of Carle van Loo, and in 1746 obtained the 'grand prix de Rome.' On his return to Paris in 1755, he at once established his reputation by his 'Death of Virginia,' exhibited at the Salon of 1759, in which year he was received into the Academy upon his picture of 'Jupiter attended by Hebe.' He became a professor in 1776, and about this time he was employed to decorate the chapel of St. Grégoire at the Invalides. In 1791 he went to Russia, where he was greatly honoured by Catharine II. and Paul I., for whom he executed many ceilings and other works. He was also appointed director of the Academy at St. Petersburg, in which city he died in 1806. His best works are 'The Triumph of Amphitrite,' now in the Louvre, and 'The Descent of the Holy Spirit,' in the chapel of St. Geneviève in the church of St. Roch in Paris. The sketch for the latter is in the Louvre. The Darmstadt Gallery possesses his 'Adoration of the Kings.'

DOYEN, LE. See LE DOYEN.

DOYEN, PIERRE GABRIEL, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1723, and died there in 1799. He was a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and may therefore be presumed to have been not entirely devoid of talent.

DOYLE, JOHN, a caricaturist, well-known as 'H.B.,' was born in Dublin in 1797. At an early age he studied under an Italian landscape painter named Gabrielli, and also became a student in the Dublin Society's Drawing Academy and a pupil of Comerford. About 1822 he came to London, where, not succeeding very well as a portrait painter, he produced by lithography, and published, likenesses of the leading men of the day; among others the Duke of Wellington on a white charger, and the Duke of York. From this time he chiefly employed himself in producing caricatures of leading members of Parliament, under the initials 'H.B.' His death occurred in London in 1868. His political portraits, though caricatures, were always treated with a gentlemanly feeling, never descending to coarseness or vulgarity. The original sketches for 610 out of the 917 to which they amounted are in the British Museum. A portrait of Christopher Moore by Doyle is in the National Gallery of Ireland.

DRAEGER, JOSEPH ANTON, an historical painter, was born at Trèves in 1800, and died at Rome in 1833. He studied under Kügelgen in Dresden, but went in 1823 to Italy and took up his quarters in Rome, where he followed, as a nondescript in life and art, his own peculiar style of colouring. In his desire to attain the charm of the colours of the great Venetians, a very faded picture of that school led him to the conviction that they painted their pictures entirely in grey before putting on the bright colours. Working in this way he obtained an extraordinary clearness of colour, a good example of which is seen in his 'Moses protecting the Daughters of Jethro,' in the Berlin Gallery.

DRAGHI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Genoa in 1657. He was a scholar of Domenico Piola, whose promptness and facility he imitated and acquired. He resided at Parma and Piacenza, where there are several of his works. They evince something of the design of the Bolognese school, with the taste of Parmigiano. In the church of San Francesco il Grande at Piacenza, is a picture by him of the 'Martyrdom of St. James.' The dome of Sant' Agnese, in the same city, is by this master; and in the church of San Lorenzo, a picture of the titular Saint. At Genoa there are some of his easel pictures in private collections. He died at Piacenza in 1712.

DRAKE, NATHAN, a portrait painter, flourished at York and Lincoln in the middle of the 18th century. He occasionally painted views, and was a member of the Society of Artists, with whom he exhibited from 1760 to 1780.

DRAPENTIERE, JOHN, an engraver, was probably from his name a native of France. He was in England about the year 1691, and was employed by the publishers in some plates of portraits and frontispieces, which are executed with the graver in a neat, but tasteless style. The following portraits are by him:

William and Mary, when Prince and Princess of Orange.
John Graham, Viscount Dundee.
Thomas White, Bishop of Peterborough.
Benjamin Calamy, Prebendary of St. Paul's.
Henry Cuttes, of the Middle Temple.
Sir James Dyer, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas.
Peter Perkins, Mathematician.
Daniel Burgess, Dissenting Minister. 1691.
Benjamin Keach, Anabaptist Minister.
Elias Keach.
John Todd, A.M.

He also engraved a satirical print of a lady shaving a gentleman; inscribed, 'Le Beau Service.'

DREBER, HEINRICH, (called FRANZ-DREBER), a German landscape painter, was born at Dresden in 1822. Living in the house of a relation whose name Franz he adopted, he frequented the Academy of his native city, and afterwards the studio of Ludwig Richter. After he had gained the gold medal, he resided for some time in Munich, and in the spring of 1843 went as exhibitor of the Dresden Academy to Rome, where he became a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and spent almost the entire remainder of his life. His study of Italian nature had the greatest influence on his works, and at the same time the impression made upon him by modern French landscape painters increased his desire to obtain a soft fusion of colours. He died in Anticoli di Campagna, near Rome, in 1875. His pictures, which were exhibited together in 1876 in the National Gallery at Berlin, are with few exceptions in the hands of private persons; there are two in the Berlin Gallery—a 'Landscape, with the Hunting of Diana,' and 'An Autumn Morning in the Sabine Mountains.'

DRECHSLER, JOHANN, a painter of flowers, was born at Vienna in 1756, and became a professor at the Academy of that city. He died at Vienna in 1811. He painted fruit and flower pieces in imitation of Van Huysum. There are examples of his work in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg, and in the Vienna Gallery.

DREVER, ADRIAAN VAN, a Dutch landscape and marine painter, flourished about 1673, and passed the greater part of his artistic life in England. In the Vienna Gallery there is a 'Winter Landscape' by him.

DREVET, CLAUDE, a French engraver, the nephew of Pierre Drevet, was born probably at Lyons about 1705. He was instructed by his uncle, and engraved some portraits in a highly finished style, which renders them of considerable merit. He died in Paris in 1781. The following portraits are by him:

Henri Oswald, Cardinal d'Auvergne; after Rigaud.
Charles Gaspard Guillaume de Vintimille, Archbishop of Paris; after the same.
Philippe Louis, Count de Zinzendorf; after the same.
Mme. Le Bret, in the character of Ceres; after the same.
Pierre Calvairac, Abbot of Pontignac; after A. Le Prieur.

DREVET, PIERRE, an eminent French engraver, was born at Loire in the Lyonnais in 1663. He was first a pupil of Germain Audran at Lyons, but afterwards finished his studies in Paris under Gérard Audran. In 1696 he became court engraver, and in 1707 was made an Academician, and for his reception he engraved, although not until 1722, the portrait of Robert de Cotte. He died in Paris in 1738. His works, which are chiefly portraits, are well drawn and very highly finished. The following prints are by him:

SACRED SUBJECTS.

Abraham's Sacrifice; after A. Coypel.
The Annunciation; after the same.
The same subject; smaller.
The Crucifixion; in two sheets; after the same.
The Adoration of the Shepherds; after H. Rigaud.

PORTRAITS.

Charles II., King of Great Britain.
James Francis Edward Stuart, called the Old Pretender.
James Fitzjames, Duke of Berwick.
Oliver Cromwell.
Louis XIV., full-length; after Rigaud.
Louis XV., seated on his Throne; after the same.
Philip V., King of Spain; after the same.
Louis, Dauphin of France; after the same.
Frederick Augustus, King of Poland; after F. de Troy.
François Louis, Prince of Condé; after Rigaud.
Louis Alexandre, Count of Toulouse, with the Glove.
The same Portrait, without the Glove.
René François de Beauveau, Archbishop of Narbonne; after Rigaud.
André Hercule, Cardinal de Fleury; after the same.
Marie de Neufchâtel, Duchess de Nemours; after the same.
Louis Antoine, Duke de Noailles; after the same.
Louis Hector, Duke de Villars, Marshal of France; after the same.
Ernest Augustus, Duke of Brunswick-Luneburg.
André Félibien; after Le Brun.
Nicolas Boileau Despréaux; after De Piles.
Hyacinthe Rigaud; from a picture by himself.
Marie de Serre, mother of Rigaud; after Rigaud.
Robert de Cotte, architect; after the same.
Nicolas Pierre Camus de Pontcarré, first President of the Parliament of Rouen; after Jouvenet.
Jean Forest, painter; after N. de Largillière.

DREVET, PIERRE IMBERT, the son of Pierre Drevet, was born in Paris in 1697. He had the advantage of his father's instruction, and at a very early age was distinguished by the talent which he displayed. The works of this excellent artist may have been surpassed in boldness and freedom, but have hardly been equalled in the exquisite finish and clearness of his stroke. His celebrated portrait of Bossuet, engraved in 1723, is one of the finest line-engravings which has ever been executed, whilst that of Samuel Bernard is scarcely less admirable. About 1730 he became insane, but engraved until the year of his death, in which he executed the portrait of René Pucelle. He died in Paris in 1739. The following are his principal works:

SACRED SUBJECTS.

Adam and Eve after their Transgression; after A. Coypel.
The same subject; smaller; very highly finished.
Rebekah receiving from Eliezer Abraham's presents; after the same.
The Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple; after Le Brun. The first work of the engraver.
The Holy Family; after Antoine Dieu.
The Presentation in the Temple; after Louis de Boullogne. The engraver's chef-d'œuvre.
Christ in the Garden of Olives, with Angels; after J. Restout.
The Resurrection; after J. André.
St. Theresa; after J. Lingre.

PORTRAITS.

Louis XIV., when young, conducted by Minerva to the Temple of Glory; after A. Coypel.
Louis, Duke of Orleans; after Charles Coypel.
Mary Clementina Sobieska, wife of the Old Pretender; after Davids.
François de La Mothe Fénelon, Archbishop of Cambrai; after Vivien.
François Paul de Villory, Archbishop of Lyons; after Sauterre.
Claude Le Blanc, Minister of War; after Le Prieur.
Cardinal Dubois, Archbishop of Cambrai; after Rigaud.
J. B. Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux; full-length; after the same.
Samuel Bernard; after the same.
Isaac Jacques de Vertamont, Bishop of Conferans; after De Troy.
René Pucelle, Abbé and Counsellor of the Parliament; after Rigaud. His last work. 1739.
Adrienne Lecouvreur, in the character of Cornelia; after Charles Coypel.

Full particulars of the works of Pierre, Pierre Imbert, and Claude Drevet, are to be found in M. A. Firmin-Didot's work 'Les Drevet,' Paris, 1876, 8vo.

DREW, J. P., a portrait and figure painter, worked in London during the first half of the 19th century. He exhibited at the Royal Academy until 1852.

DREYER, DANKVART CHRISTIAN MAGNUS, a Danish landscape painter, was born in 1816 at Assens, where he died in 1852. The Copenhagen Gallery has a 'Landscape' by him, dated 1839.

DRIELST, EGBERT VAN, born at Groningen in 1746, practised under several masters; the last were H. Meyer of Haarlem, and J. Cats of Amsterdam. He particularly studied the works of Hobbema, Ruisdael, and Wynants, and compared them with nature. By this course his pictures approached nearer to the manner and taste of the great masters of the preceding century than to those of his own time. The subjects he represented were well-wooded landscapes, with farms and cottages, which he ornamented with figures and animals, correctly designed. He was fond of the picturesque effects of ruined hovels, old broken and uprooted trees, and barren heaths. These he depicted with a thorough knowledge of light and shade, and with a colour suited to the objects. Sometimes, however, there is a certain degree of negligence or inattention to be observed in his pictures; and here and there he appears to be a mannerist. He died in 1818. His son, JAN VUURING VAN DRIELST, an artist of much promise, was born in 1790, and studied under his father, but died in 1813.

DRILLENBURG, WILLEM, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Utrecht in 1625. He was for some time a scholar of Abraham Bloemaert, but abandoned the style of that painter in order to imitate the charming landscapes of Jan Both. Although he never approached the excellence of that master, his pictures are said by Houbraken, who was his scholar, to possess great merit.

DROECH SLOOT, JOOST CORNELISZ. See DROOCH SLOOT.

DROESHOUT, JAN, an engraver, was perhaps, from the date at which he flourished, a relation of Marten Droeshout. There are by him a few portraits, frontispieces, and other works for the booksellers, among which are:

The Portrait of Richard Elton; prefixed to his 'Compleat Body of the Art Military,' 1650.
The Portrait of John Danes; engraved for his 'Paralipomena Orthographiæ,' 1638.
Two plates for Heywood's 'Hierarchie of the blessed Angels,' 1635.

DROESHOUT, MARTEN, an engraver, who was probably a Dutchman, resided in England about the year 1623. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, and engraved some portraits, which, if they cannot be admired for the beauty of their execution, are valued for their scarcity. His best known portrait is that prefixed to the first folio edition of 'Mr. William Shakespeares Comedies, Histories, & Tragedies,' published in 1623. The excellence of this likeness of the great dramatist is attested by the following verses of Ben Jonson, which are printed opposite to it:

To the Reader.

This Figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Grauer had a strife
With Nature, to out-doo the life:
O, could he but haue drawne his wit
As well in brasse, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpasse
All, that was euer writ in brasse.
But, since he cannot, Reader, looke
Not on his Picture, but his Booke.

B. I.

Other portraits by Droeshout are:

James, Marquis of Hamilton.
Thomas, Lord Coventry.
John Donne, Dean of St. Paul's.
Helkiah Crooke, M.D.
John Fox, the Martyrologist.
John Howson, Bishop of Durham.
Lord Mountjoy Blount, afterwards Earl of Newport.

DROLLING, MARTIN, a native of Oberberghheim, near Colmar, was born in 1752. He received his first lessons in art from an obscure painter of Schlestadt, but afterwards went to Paris and entered the Ecole des Beaux-Arts. He gained a momentary celebrity by his 'Interior of a Kitchen,' painted in 1815, exhibited at the Salon of 1817, and now in the Louvre. He usually painted interiors and familiar subjects of general interest. Although faulty in drawing and never above mediocrity, his works were popular during his lifetime, and many of them were engraved and lithographed. He died in Paris in 1827. The Louvre has by him a 'Woman at a window' and a 'Violin-Player.'

DROLLING, MICHEL MARTIN, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1786. He studied under his father, Martin Drolling, and under David, and obtained the 'grand prix de Rome' in 1810. In 1833 he was elected a member of the Institute, and in 1837 became a professor of the École des Beaux-Arts. He died in Paris in 1851. Amongst his best works, which are all conceived in the classical spirit in which he was brought up, are:

Orpheus and Eurydice. 1817.

Ulysses carrying off Polyxena. 1827.

The Good Samaritan. 1822. In the Lyons Museum.

The Death of Cardinal Richelieu. 1831.

Christ disputing with the Doctors: in the church of Notre-Dame de Lorette, Paris.

The Communion of Marie Antoinette: in the chapel of the Conciergerie.

DROOCH SLOOT, JOOST CORNELISZ, (DROOG-SLOOT or DROECH SLOOT,) a landscape and historical painter of Utrecht, flourished from 1616 to 1660. In 1616 he was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Utrecht, and in 1623-24 he became its dean. He gave to the hospital of St. Job, at Utrecht, in 1628, a picture of 'Job and his Friends,' the landscape part of which is said to be very beautiful: in 1638 he was named regent of the hospital. There is a portrait of him, painted by himself, in the manner of old Teniers; he is seated at his easel, and his studio is furnished with pictures: it bears date 1630, and he appears about 50 years of age. Some of his works are signed with the annexed monogram: JS

As he is classed with very respectable painters of the period, by writers on whose judgment reliance may be placed, he must not be confounded with Nicolaas Drooch Sloodt, whose works of a like nature are known in England, and rank among the lowest of his country. The following pictures by Joost Drooch Sloodt are in public galleries:

Cassel.	Gallery.	View of a Village.
Dresden.	Gallery.	View of a Village Street.
Hague.	Museum.	A Kermesse. 1652.
		A Dutch Village. 1652.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Skaters.
Modena.	Gallery.	Peasants.
Paris.	Louvre.	Troops passing through a Village. 1645.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	A frozen Canal in Holland.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	A Village Fête. 1649.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Duel between the Dutch Gerhards and the French Briantès, 1600. (Painted in 1630.)

DROOCH SLOOT, NICOLAAS, was born at Dordrecht in 1650, and is supposed to have been a scholar of Hendrik Mommers. He painted village wakes and rural assemblies, which are distinguished by a disgusting vulgarity of character, which is not compensated by the agreeable tone of his colouring, or the spirit of his pencil. He died in 1702.

DROSSAART, —, a Dutch painter of landscapes with ruins and stag-hunts, lived in the 17th century.

DROST, GERAERT, a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1638. He was brought up in the school of Rembrandt, and afterwards visited Italy, where he improved his style of design, by studying the works of the great masters of the Roman school. He died in 1690. The Cassel Gallery possesses a 'Christ and the Magdalen after the Resurrection,' by him; and the Amsterdam Museum has a 'Daughter of Herodias receiving the Head of John the Baptist.' His works have occasionally been mistaken for those of Rembrandt. In the Dresden Gallery there is a profile portrait of a man in a large hat, signed 'I. V. DORSTÆ,' supposed to be by Drost; there are also in the same gallery, an 'Old Man teaching a Boy to read,' and 'Argus and Mercury'—both of which are ascribed to the same master.

DROUAIS, FRANÇOIS HUBERT, a French portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1727. He studied at first under his father, Hubert Drouais, and then became a pupil successively of Nonotte, Carle Van Loo, Natoire, and Boucher. He was received as an Academician in 1758 upon his portraits of the sculptors Coustou and Bouchardon, the former of which is now at Versailles, and the latter in the École des Beaux-Arts. These led to his introduction to the court, where he painted portraits of the whole of the Royal Family, and of most of the celebrities and beauties of the period. He exhibited at the Salon from 1755 to 1775, in which year he died in Paris. The Louvre has by him a picture containing the portraits of the Comte d'Artois, afterwards Charles X., and his sister, Madame Clotilde, afterwards Queen of Sardinia, when children. The Museum of Orleans possesses his charming portrait of Madame de Pompadour.

DROUAIS, HUBERT, a French portrait painter, was born at La Roque, near Pont-Audemer in Normandy, in 1699. He at first studied at Rouen, but subsequently came to Paris, and entered the studio of De Troy, after whose death he was employed by J. B. Van Loo, A. S. Belle, Oudry, and Nattier. Besides painting portraits in oil, and in water-colours, he gained much celebrity by his miniatures. He was received into the Academy in 1730, and died in Paris in 1767.

DROUAIS, JEAN GERMAIN, the younger son of François Hubert Drouais, was born in Paris in 1763. He studied under his father and under Brenet, and then entered the school of David. In 1784 he astonished the Academy by his picture of 'Christ and the Woman of Canaan,' which gained the first prize, and is now in the Louvre. The next year he accompanied David to Rome, where he studied the works of Raphael and the antique, sending to Paris a study of a 'Wounded Gladiator,' 'Marius at Minturnæ,' now in the Louvre, and 'Philoctetes breathing forth imprecations against the Gods,' which was his last work. He died of fever at Rome in 1788.

DRUEFKEN, —, a German engraver on wood, who usually marked his prints with a cluster of grapes, is mentioned by Evelyn in his 'Sculptura.' Among other cuts, he executed one representing the King of the Boors in Hungary eaten alive by the rebels whom he had duped.

DRUIVESTYEN, AART JANSZ, an amateur Dutch painter, was born at Haarlem in 1564. Van Mander speaks in very favourable terms of his talent as a painter of landscapes with figures, although, being of an opulent and distinguished family, he practised the art only for his amusement. He died in 1617.

DRUMMOND, JAMES, a Scotch historical and genre painter, was born in Edinburgh in 1816. He studied under Sir William Allan, and first exhibited at the Scottish Academy in 1835, of which body he became an Associate in 1846, and an Academician in 1852. He became curator of the Edinburgh

National Gallery in 1868, and died at Edinburgh in 1877. He studied archæology closely, and his works show great care for antiquarian details. Amongst the best are:

The Return of Mary, Queen of Scots, to Edinburgh after her surrender at Carberry Hill.	} (In National Gallery of Scotland.)
King James I. of Scotland seeing his future wife at Windsor.
The Porteous Mob.
Montrose on his way to execution.	} (Belonging to the Queen.)
Peace.
War.
Old Mortality.
Cromwell in Edinburgh.

DRUMMOND, SAMUEL, an English portrait and historical painter, was born in London in 1763. He studied in the Royal Academy, of which he became an Associate in 1808, and afterwards curator of the Painting School. He died in 1844. Amongst his works are:

Battle of Trafalgar.
Death of Nelson.
Admiral Duncan receiving the sword of Admiral De Winter (Greenwich Hospital).
Charles Mathews, the elder.
Richard Parker, leader of the Nore Mutiny.
Sir Isambard Brunel (National Portrait Gallery).
Mrs. Fry (National Portrait Gallery).

DUBBELS, HENDRIK and DIRK, are mentioned by Balkema, as being found in the catalogues of Hoet and Terwesten, but without any information as to their family, or the time at which they lived. He speaks of a 'River-scene' painted in the manner of Willem van de Velde, of a 'Winter-piece with Skaters,' which was sold in 1773 under the name of Pieter Dubbels, and of another, sold in Van der Linden Slingelandt's sale, by Hendrik Dubbels. This is all he could collect among his countrymen, respecting artists who may claim rank with the best of their school as marine painters. In the incidental notices that occur of Hendrik Dubbels, he is by some called the master of Bakhuizen; by others, the scholar; the probability is in favour of the former. His works bear little or no resemblance to those of Bakhuizen or Van de Velde, except in their subjects; they are more analogous to those of Van de Capelle. In the Van der Hoop Collection at Amsterdam is one of great excellence, and many others are to be found in rich collections in this country, which fact proves that his merit has been appreciated, though, unfortunately for his reputation, it has been under a different name. There is by him in the Amsterdam Museum a 'River Scene,' and in the Copenhagen Gallery is a 'Sea-piece.'

DUBBELS, JAN, a scholar of Bakhuizen, painted marine subjects in the manner of his master; he was living in 1715. A 'Sea-piece' in the Pitti Palace, Florence, and a 'Calm Sea' in the Cassel Gallery are ascribed to him. It is not unlikely that he is identical with Hendrik Dubbels.

DUBOIS, AMBROISE, was born at Antwerp in 1543. Going in 1568 to Paris, he was employed at Fontainebleau and in the Louvre, made painter in ordinary and 'varlet de chambre' to the king, and naturalized in 1601. Having been appointed painter to Mary de' Medici in 1606, he worked at the Luxembourg during her regency. Of his numerous works at Fontainebleau, only those in the chapel of St. Saturnin, the series of fifteen pictures of the 'Loves of Theagenes and Chariclea' (one of which is now in the Louvre), some of the eight subjects of 'Tancred and Clorinda,' painted for the bed-chamber of Mary de' Medici (one of which, the 'Baptism of Clorinda,' is now in the Louvre), and a few fragments on canvas, re-painted in the time of Louis Philippe, now remain. He died at Fontainebleau in 1614. Among his pupils were his two sons, Jean and Louis.

DUBOIS, B., (or DU BOIS,) a French painter of landscapes and an etcher, was born about 1620, and from his etchings is supposed to have been a scholar of Claude Lorrain. Of his works, which are rare, may be mentioned, a 'Landscape with cattle,' another with a storm, and a third with a shepherd and a shepherdess.

DUBOIS, CHARLES, a French painter of historical landscapes, flourished in the early part of the 18th century. He was a native of Valenciennes, and executed some works for the church of St. Gery in that city. In 1734 he sent two landscapes to the 'Exposition de la Jeunesse' at Paris.

DUBOIS, EDUARD, born at Antwerp in 1622, was a scholar of an obscure artist named Groenewegen. He afterwards went to Italy, and was for some time in the employment of Charles Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy. In the reign of William III, he came to England, and painted landscapes and portraits, with little success. He died in London in 1699.

DU BOIS, ELIAS, a native of France, was chiefly employed in engraving portraits. Among others, he engraved one of the Duke of Sully, which bears the date of 1614.

DUBOIS, ÉTIENNE JEAN, a French painter of historical subjects and portraits, was a native of Paris. He was a brother of François Dubois, and like him a pupil of Regnault. He died in Paris in 1854.

DUBOIS, FRANÇOIS, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1790. He studied under Regnault, and at the École des Beaux-Arts, and obtained in 1819 the 'grand prix de Rome.' Among his works may be noted the 'Annunciation' in the church of Notre-Dame de Lorette at Paris, and the 'Coronation of Pepin the Short,' and the 'Distribution of Colours to the National Guard, August 29th, 1830,' in the galleries of Versailles, the latter painted in conjunction with his brother, Étienne Dubois. There are also paintings by him in the Museums of Amiens and Angers. He died in Paris in 1871.

DUBOIS, GUILLAM, whose name has been erroneously given as CORNELIS, was born about 1622, and was registered in the Guild at Haarlem in 1646. In 1652-53 he visited Switzerland, accompanied by Cornelis Bega and others. He died at Haarlem in 1680. His pictures, which are landscapes, generally of the Rhine country, executed after the manner of Ruysdael, may be seen in several private galleries on the Continent. The Berlin Gallery and the Dulwich Gallery have each a 'View on the Rhine.'

DUBOIS, JEAN, born at Fontainebleau in 1604, a landscape painter and painter to the king, succeeded in 1635 to the office of keeper of the pictures at Fontainebleau before held by his uncle, Claude de Hoëy. This office he resigned to his son in 1674, and died at Fontainebleau in 1679. LOUIS DUBOIS, his brother, also was keeper of the pictures at Fontainebleau from 1644 to 1651, but resigned on receiving a grant of the pension of 2000 livres which had been enjoyed by Fréminet the younger, his half-brother. Jean Dubois had two sons, JEAN and LOUIS DUBOIS, born respectively in 1645 and 1646, the elder of whom succeeded to the office of keeper of the pictures which his father resigned in his favour in 1674. Jean died at Fontainebleau in 1694, and Louis at the same place in 1702.

DU BOIS, JULES CHARLES THÉODORE, a French marine painter, was born in Paris in 1804, and studied under Ary Scheffer and Eugène Isabey. There are three naval battle-pieces by him at Versailles. He was attached to the manufactory of Sèvres, and painted on porcelain and on glass. He executed nearly all the windows of the chapel at Dreux, and died in Paris in 1879.

DUBOIS, LOUIS, a Belgian painter, was born in 1830. He painted both landscapes and portraits, and occasionally genre and still-life subjects. In his style he was naturalistic in the extreme, his portraits having much of the vigorous life and colour of Frans Hals. His works are, however, very defective in drawing. He died at Brussels in 1880. The Brussels Museum possesses his picture of 'The Storks.'

DU BOIS, MARTIN, a French engraver, resided in Paris towards the close of the 17th century. He executed some of the plates for the collection of prints from the works of the Italian painters, published by C. Paten, in 1691. He also engraved frontispieces for books, after Dorigny and others.

DU BOIS, PIERRE, probably a relation of Martin Du Bois, engraved, according to Florent Le Comte, some plates of funeral processions, monuments, &c.

DUBOIS, SIMON, was the younger brother of Eduard Dubois. After studying some time in Holland, under Philips Wouwerman, he came to England, where he painted a few pictures of battles and landscapes with cattle; but portrait painting being the only branch which was encouraged at that time, he was under the necessity of adopting it, though it was by no means suited to his genius or inclination. He painted the portrait of Lord Chancellor Somers, by whose recommendation he was employed by several of the nobility. He married the daughter of Van de Velde. His death occurred in 1708. A 'Corn-field' by him, with the forged signature of Ruisdael, is in the Lille Museum.

DUBOIS-D'AISSCHE, LOUIS, Count, was born at Edegheem near Antwerp in 1822. He was a pupil of Leys, and painted genre subjects, portraits, and landscapes. His chief works are, 'The Reader,' 'The Spinner,' and 'The Modern Eve.' He died in 1864.

DUBOIS DRAHONET, ALEXANDRE JEAN, a French portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1791. He also executed a great number of sketches of various national and military costumes, some of which are at Windsor. He died at Versailles in 1834. His portrait of the Duke of Bordeaux is in the Bordeaux Museum.

DUBOIS DUPERRAY, HONORÉ JEAN, a French historical painter, who also painted miniatures, was born at Chartres in 1770. He died at Grogneul (Eure-et-Loir) in 1857.

DUBORDIEU, PIERRE, who lived about 1650, painted portraits in the manner of Mireveldt, several of which have been engraved by Suyderhoef, Natalas, and Matham.

DUBOS, MARIE JEANNE, a French engraver, whose maiden name was Renard, was born in Paris in 1700. She was a pupil of C. Dupin, whose style she imitated, and she engraved several plates after Watteau, the younger Cochin, Robert de Séri, Rosalba, Mlle. Basseporte, and other artists. Her most popular work was 'A young Girl caressing a Rabbit,' after Mlle. Basseporte. There are several plates by her in 'Versailles immortalisé,' which appeared in 1720.

DU BOSC, CLAUDE, a French engraver, came to England about the year 1712, by the invitation of N. Dorigny, to assist him in engraving the cartoons of Raphael; but on account of some dispute, he left Dorigny, and engaged to engrave the cartoons for the printsellers. He also undertook the Duke of Marlborough's battles, and sent to Paris for Baron and Beauvais, to assist him in that undertaking, which occupied him two years. He published an English translation of Picart's 'Religious Ceremonies,' in which part of the plates were engraved by himself, and the others by Scotin and Gravelot. He engraved a plate of the 'Continnence of Scipio,' after Nicolas Poussin, and others after some of the most eminent masters. His manner is coarse and heavy, and his drawing incorrect.

DU BOSC, J., was a native of France, and flourished about the year 1749. Among other prints, he engraved some plates of flowers, which are executed with the graver in a very neat style.

DUBOST, ANTOINE, a French historical painter and lithographer, who was born at Lyons in 1769, was killed in a duel in Paris in 1825.

DU BOUCHET, LOUIS FRANÇOIS. See SOURCHES.

DUBOULEAU, JEAN AUGUSTE, called DUBOULOZ, a French historical painter, born in Paris in 1800, was a pupil of Baron Gros. He also painted some portraits, and made designs for the illustration of the novels of Sir Walter Scott, and of several other works. He died in Paris in 1870.

DUBOURG, LODEWYK FABRICIUS, an historical painter, and an engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1693, and died there in 1745. He was a scholar of De Lairese and Jacob van Huysum. After producing several beautiful pictures, some of which may be seen at the Westerkerk, and the New Church at Amsterdam, he exchanged the brush for the graver, and executed some pretty vignettes and other small compositions, and also etched a number of plates from his own designs. His collection of pictures and drawings was sold at Amsterdam in 1776.

DU BOYS, HEINRICH, an historical painter of the school of Rubens, was working at Cologne up till his death in 1628. Several of the churches in that city possess pictures from his hand, as the 'Ascension of the Virgin,' 'St. Mary at the Capitol,' together with four smaller ones fixed to the pillars opposite the high altar; the 'Angel of the Annunciation,' and two small Saints, in the church of the Holy Virgin; and the 'Taking down from the Cross' (1623) in that of the Greater St. Martin.

DU BREUIL, TOUSSAINT, a French painter and pupil of Fréminet the elder, was born in Paris in 1561. He painted at Fontainebleau in the Pavillon des Poesles, 'Mars and Venus,' and fourteen pictures representing the 'History of Hercules,' and in the Galerie des Cerfs, thirteen bird's-eye views of royal residences. He likewise decorated the Galerie des Rois in the Louvre, but this was destroyed by fire in 1661. There are many drawings by Du Breuil in the Louvre, but all his pictures seem to have perished. He died in Paris in 1602.

DUBUFE, CLAUDE MARIE, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1790, and studied under David. His subjects were at first classical, and then scriptural, but his reputation rests chiefly on his portraits, of which he produced a large number. Dubufe, who was the last representative of the school of David, died at Selle-Saint-Cloud in 1864. Amongst his chief works are:

- A Roman suffering starvation with his family rather than touch a sum of money entrusted to him. 1810.
- Christ allaying the tempest. 1819.
- Apollo and Cyparissa. 1822.
- The Birth of the Duke of Bordeaux. 1824. (Orleans Museum.)
- The Passage of the Bidassoa. 1824.
- Four frescoes representing 'Egypt,' &c. (Conseil d'État, Paris.)
- The Surprise. 1828. (National Gallery, London.)
- Portrait of Louis Philippe.
- " " General Montesquiou-Fezenzac (Versailles).
- " " Nicholas Koechlin. 1841.
- " " the Queen of the Belgians.

DUBUFE, LOUIS ÉDOUARD, a French portrait painter, the son of Claude Marie Dubufe, was born in Paris in 1820. He was a pupil of his father and of Paul Delaroche, and made his début at the Salon of 1839, with an 'Annunciation,' and a 'Huntress.' His earlier works were mostly of a religious character, the chief of them being 'Christ's Entry into Jerusalem' (1845), and two scenes from 'Clarissa Harlowe' (1847), but from 1848 he devoted himself almost exclusively to portraiture, for which he possessed a talent like that of his father. Among his best known portraits are those of the Empress Eugénie, the Princess Mathilde, Madame Rouher, the Princess Glika, General Fleury, the Count of Nieuwerkerke, M. Gounod, Jules Janin, Alexandre Dumas the younger, Émile Augier, and Philippe Rousseau, the painter. His large picture of the 'Congress of Paris in 1856,' now at Versailles, the 'Prodigal Son,' exhibited in the Salon of 1866, and the 'Death of Adonis,' in that of 1877, are the most important of his other works. He died at Versailles in 1883.

DUC, ANTON, who flourished in the middle of the 17th century, would, but for two or three works by him which are known, have remained in obscurity. One signed A. Duc is in the Vienna Gallery; it represents a 'Lady and Gentleman asking mercy of some infantry officers, who are plundering their house.' Another, of a similar character, is in the Dresden Gallery; it bears the monogram L. D. (interlaced), and represents a 'Peasant and his Wife begging for mercy of a soldier who threatens the life of the husband.' The Marquis of Bute possesses a third: a 'Guard-Room, with ladies and officers playing tric-trac.' These works are well executed in the style of Palamedes.

DUC, JACOB. See DUCK.

DUCOI, VIRGILIO, a scholar of Albani, flourished about 1660; he imitated the manner of his master, and painted in the cathedral of Città di Castello two pictures of Tobias, which are said to be executed in an elegant style.

DUCCIO, the son of Buoninsegna, was the first of the Sienese painters who abandoned the Byzantine manner. He is said to have been born about 1260, but the earliest mention of him is in 1282. He is also reported to have been a pupil of Segna di Buonaventura, but the works of the latter, and their dates, which are between 1305 and 1326, show him to have been, on the contrary, Duccio's scholar. In 1285 he made a contract with the Fraternity of Santa Maria in Florence to paint an altar-piece of the 'Virgin and Child, with Saints,' for their chapel in Santa Maria Novella, but this picture and the 'Annunciation,' which he painted for Santa Trinità in Florence, no longer exist.

In 1302 he painted a 'Madonna' for the chapel of the Palazzo Pubblico of Siena which is now lost. In 1308 he commenced his famous altar-piece for the high altar of the cathedral of Siena, which was finished and carried to its place with great ceremony in 1311. For this immense painting he had agreed to be paid at the daily rate of sixteen soldi, but, owing to the enormous amount of gold and ultramarine expended on it, the cost mounted up to 2000, or as others say, 3000 golden florins. This picture was fourteen feet long, by seven feet high, and was painted on both sides—the front showing the 'Virgin and Child, surrounded by various Saints and Angels'; and the back twenty-seven subjects from the life of Christ. These latter designs were paid for by a separate contract, which is likewise preserved, at the rate of two and a half gold florins each. It has now been moved from its original position, and the two portions of which it consisted have been separated and hung in the transepts of the cathedral. It is the only undoubted work by Duccio which remains. The date of Duccio's death is unknown, but it was probably soon after 1339. His pupils were Segna, Martini, the two Lorenzetti, and perhaps Ugolino. The following paintings are also ascribed to him:

- Cologne. Ramboux Coll. St. John the Baptist preaching.
- " " Two panels: St. Peter and St. Paul.
- London. National Gall. The Madonna and Child, with Angels; and David with Six Prophets above: SS. Dominic and Catharine on the doors. (A triptych.)
- Siena. Academy. Triptych—The Virgin, Child, and Saints.
- " " Virgin and Child, with four Saints.
- " Hospital of Santa Maria della Scala. Triptych—The Flagellation, The Crucifixion, The Entombment (spoiled by restoration.)
- Windsor. Castle. An Altar-piece: the Virgin and Child, the Crucifixion, and other subjects.

DUCCERCEAU, JACQUES ANDROUET. See ANDROUET-DUCERCEAU.

DUCHANGE, GASPARD, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1662. He was a pupil first of Guillaume Vallet and afterwards of Jean Audran, and was received into the Academy in 1707. He died in Paris in 1757. Duchange may be ranked among the ablest artists of his country, particularly for the mellowness and harmony with which he has combined his etching with a tasteful management of the graver. His plates after Correggio are peculiarly expressive of the admirable style of that painter. The number of his works is considerable; the following are the most esteemed:

PORTRAITS.

- François Girardon; after Rigaud; presented for his reception into the Academy in 1707.
- Charles de La Fosse, painter; after the same; presented upon the same occasion.
- Antoine Coypel, with his Son; after a picture by himself.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

- Jupiter and Io; after Correggio.
- Jupiter and Danaë; after the same.
- Jupiter and Leda; after the same.
- [The best impressions of the above fine prints are before the name of Sornique, who retouched the plates, and added draperies.]
- The Entombment of Christ; after Paolo Veronese.

Mary Magdalen washing the Feet of Christ after Jouvenet.
 Christ driving the Buyers and Sellers from the Temple; after the same.
 The Sacrifice of Jephtha; after A. Coypel.
 Tobit recovering his Sight; after the same.
 Venus sleeping, with three Loves and a Satyr; after the same.
 The Death of Dido; after the same.
 The Bath of Diana; after the same.
 Solon explaining his Laws to the Athenians; after N. Coypel.
 Trajan dispensing Justice to the People; after the same.
 Diana disarming Cupid; after Désormeau.
 The Birth of Mary de' Medici; after Rubens.
 The Landing of Mary de' Medici at Marseilles; after the same.
 The Marriage of Henry IV. and Mary de' Medici; after the same.
 The Apotheosis of Henry IV. and Regency of Mary de' Medici; after the same.
 The Interview of Mary de' Medici and her son, Louis XIII.; after the same.
 The five last plates were engraved for the Luxembourg Gallery.

DUCHATTEL, FRANÇOIS, (or DU CHASTEL,) a Flemish painter, born at Brussels in 1616, is said to have been a pupil of David Teniers the younger, whose style he followed in some of his pictures, representing village festivals; but he is more known for his small family portraits and conversations in the manner of Gonzales Coques, and his pictures are not unfrequently taken for those of that master. He is said to have worked also in Paris in conjunction with Van der Meulen. His most considerable work is a large picture in the Museum at Ghent, representing 'The Inauguration of Charles II., King of Spain, as Count of Flanders, in 1666, in the Marché au Vendredi at Ghent;' it is dated 1668, and has been engraved by Lucas Vorsterman. Duchattel's works are very rare: there is in the Louvre 'A Cavalier and two other persons;' in the Museum at Avignon, 'The Interior of a Guard-House;' in the Brussels Gallery, 'Portraits of two little Girls;' and in the Copenhagen Gallery, 'Tric-Trac Players.' The 'Panorama of Valenciennes,' in the Antwerp Gallery, though ascribed to Teniers, is set down by some critics to Duchattel. He died in 1694.

DUCHEMIN, CATHERINE, a French flower and fruit painter, was born in Paris in 1630, and died there in 1698. She married, in 1657, the sculptor Girardon, and in 1663 was received into the Academy, being the first lady on whom this honour had been conferred.

DUCHESNE, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH, known as DUCHESNE DE GISORS, a French painter of miniatures and enamels, was born at Gisors in 1770. He was the son of Jean Baptiste Duchesne, a sculptor, and a pupil of Vincent. He exhibited at first under the name of DUCHESNE, afterwards under that of DUCHESNE DES ARGILLERS, and finally, from 1833 until his death, under that of DUCHESNE DE GISORS. He died at Gisors in 1856.

DUCHESNE, NICOLAS, who was first painter to the Queen Mother, Mary de' Medici, was a mediocre painter in all but the direction of others. He was superintendent of the decorative works at Fontainebleau, where he maltreated all the artists in his charge. He died in 1627.

DUCHINO. See LANDRIANI.

DÜCHTL, MARTIN. See DICHTL.

DUCIS, LOUIS, born in Paris in 1773, was instructed by David, whom he partly imitated in his historical pieces, besides which he devoted himself also to genre and portrait painting. His 'Mary Stuart' and 'The Début of Talma' were formerly in the Luxembourg Gallery. He died in 1847.

DUCK, JACOB, a Dutch genre painter, entered the Guild of St. Luke at Utrecht in 1626. He gave a picture, representing a musical reunion, to the hospital of St. Job in that city. He painted military conversation pieces in the taste of Jan Le Ducq, but with less delicacy of touch and finish; they are nevertheless of great beauty. His paintings are to be met with at Vienna, at Dresden, and at Christiania, where there is also an etching by him of the 'Adoration of the Kings.' Many writers state that this artist was the father of Jan Le Ducq, but this is extremely doubtful, as well by reason of the variation in the name, as by the fact that Jan Le Ducq is known to have been born at Haarlem in 1636, whereas Jacob Duck resided constantly at Utrecht from 1626 to 1646.

DUCORNET, LOUIS CÉSAR JOSEPH, a French historical painter, was born of poor parentage at Lille, in 1806. He was deformed from his birth, having neither arms nor thighs, and only four toes to his right foot. While still a child, he used to pick up pieces of charcoal from the floor with his toes, and the rough sketches he thus made evinced so much promise that he received some local instruction. By the help of the municipality of Lille, he was sent to Paris, where he studied under Lethière and Gérard, and for a short time received a government pension. He died in Paris in 1856. Amongst his chief pictures are:

Repentance. 1828.

The Parting of Hector and Andromache. (Lille Museum.)

St. Louis administering Justice. (Lille Museum.)

Death of Mary Magdalen. 1840. (St. André, Lille.)

The Repose in Egypt. 1841.

Christ in the Sepulchre. 1843.

Edith finding the body of Harold. 1855.

DUCORRON, JULES, a Belgian landscape painter, was born at Ath in 1770. At the age of thirty-two, he devoted himself to the art of painting under the direction of Ommeganck, and made marvellous progress as a landscape painter, obtaining several gold medals. He was afterwards director of the Academy at Ath, where he died in 1848. The Brussels Museum has by him a 'View in the neighbourhood of Irchonwelz, near Chièvres, Hainault,' and a 'Gale of Wind at Sunset.'

DUCQ, JAN LE. See LE DUCQ.

DUCQ, JOSEPHUS FRANCISCUS, a Flemish historical and portrait painter, was born at Ledeghem in 1763. He studied at Bruges, and then under Suvée in Paris, where he obtained the second grand prize in 1800, and a medal in 1810. He also spent a considerable time in Italy, but returned to Bruges in 1815, and became a professor in the Academy. He died at Bruges in 1829. Amongst his chief works are:

Meleager. 1804.

Devotion of a Scythian. 1810.

Marriage of Angelica and Medora. 1812.

Venus emerging from the Sea. (Brussels Museum.)

William I., King of the Netherlands. (Bruges Academy.)

Van Gierdergom. (Bruges Academy.)

DUCREUX, JOSEPH, a French portrait painter, was born at Nancy in 1737. He engraved his own portrait in three different characters, which were published in London in 1791, but he died in Paris in the same year.

DUCROS, PIERRE, a Swiss landscape painter in oil and water-colours, and an engraver, was born in 1748. He lived for a considerable time at Rome, and painted views of that city and its environs. He executed in a masterly manner twenty-four views of Sicily and Malta, besides numerous drawings made during his sojourn in Italy, some of which are of large dimensions. He died at Lausanne in 1810.

DUDERSTADT, HEINRICH VON, is said to have painted in the church of the Paulines at Göttingen, in 1424, the large altar-piece which is now in the library of that church. It represents scenes from the life of the Virgin and the Passion, and is signed, frater Hs. Dudstadens.

DUDLEY, THOMAS, an English engraver, was born about the year 1634. He was a pupil of Hollar, and though greatly inferior to that celebrated artist, his prints are not without considerable merit. He engraved a set of twenty-seven plates for Barlow's 'Life of Æsop,' published in 1687, as well as the following portraits:

Richard Russell, Bishop of Portalegre.
James Sharpe, Bishop of St. Andrew's.
Titus Oates.

DUETECUM, BAPTISTA, (or DOETECHUM,) who flourished from about 1614 to 1646, was probably a son of either Joannes or Lucas van Duetecum. He engraved a set of plates representing the various habits and manners of the Indians. They are executed entirely with the graver, in a stiff, indifferent style.

DUETECUM, JOANNES and LUCAS VAN, (or DOETECHUM,) who flourished respectively from about 1559 to 1585 and 1596, were natives of Holland, and are supposed to have been brothers. They etched conjointly, in a bold masterly manner, several large prints, representing the pompous funeral of the Emperor Charles V.

DU FAUR, CHRISTIAN WILHELM VON FABER. See FABER DU FAUR.

DUFFEIT, GERAERT. See DOUFFET.

DUFFIELD, WILLIAM, a painter of flowers, fruit, and still-life, was born at Bath in 1817. He studied under George Lance, and afterwards in the schools of the Royal Academy, and under Wappers at Antwerp. His early works were portraits, but in 1849 he sent to the Royal Academy a fruit-piece, his first exhibited work, and continued to exhibit there and at the Society of British Artists a number of pictures of a very high degree of excellence. He settled in London in 1857, and died there in 1863. He married, in 1850, MARY ELIZABETH ROSENBERG, of Bath, who is well known as a water-colour painter of flowers, birds' nests, and fish.

DUFLOS, CLAUDE, a French engraver, was born in Paris about 1662, and died in the same city in 1727. It is not known by whom he was instructed, but his style resembles that of François Poilly. We have by this artist a great number of plates, executed principally with the graver, and very neatly finished. The following are the most deserving of notice:

PORTRAITS.

Philip, Duke of Orleans; after R. Tournières.
Jean François Paul de Gondy, Cardinal de Retz.
Denis François de Chavigny, Bishop of Troyes.
Nicolas Lyon, Procureur du Roi; after Herluyson.

Bacchus and Ariadne; after the same.

The Triumph of Bacchus; after C. Natoire.

The Triumph of Amphitrite; after the same.

DUFLOS, CLAUDE AUGUSTIN, the son of Claude Duflos, and, like his father, an engraver, was born in 1700. He is supposed to have died in 1784 or 1785.

DUFLOS, FRANÇOIS PHILOTHÉE, a painter and engraver, was born in Paris about 1710. He studied under De Troy, gained the 'prix de Rome' in 1729, lived for some time in Italy, and in 1740 painted his own portrait for the Uffizi. He died at Lyons in 1746.

DU FOUR, N., was a native of France, who flourished about the year 1760. Among other prints, he engraved several small plates after Weirrotter and other masters.

DU FRESNE, CHARLES, a French engraver, executed some copies of the works of Callot and Albrecht Dürer, besides a few other plates, among which was 'The Interview between St. Nilus and the Emperor Otho III.' after Domenichino. He flourished from about 1791 to the early years of the 19th century.

DU FRESNOY, CHARLES ALPHONSE, is perhaps more celebrated for his poem on the art, than for his merit as a painter. Born in Paris in 1611, he was destined by his father, who was an apothecary, to the practice of physic, and, with that intention, he received the best education possible. His progress in his studies was more than usually promising; he soon became well versed in the classics, and at an early period of his life showed a marked genius for poetry. His love of painting was not less conspicuous; and when he was eighteen years of age he placed himself under the tuition of François Perrier, and afterwards entered the school of Simon Vouet. After studying under these masters for about three years, he formed the project of visiting Italy, although without any other resources than what he could derive from the exercise of his talent. On his arrival at Rome, his first attempts were views of the buildings and architectural ruins in the vicinity of that city, which, though not without merit, he had great difficulty in introducing to public notice. He languished at Rome for two years, in indigence and obscurity, when Pierre Mignard, who had been his fellow-student under Vouet, arrived there. The meeting of the young friends was most cordial, and from that moment an attachment sprang up which existed during the remainder of their lives. Mignard, who was the more successful, divided with his friend his earnings; and although he possessed greater facility than Du Fresnoy, he was frequently assisted by the counsels of his friend, and his perfect acquaintance with the theory of the art, of which he has given ample proof in his poem, 'De Arte Graphica.' The Cardinal of Lyons employed them in copying the works of Annibale Carracci, in the Farnese gallery; and they were most assiduous in their studies after Raphael and the antique. Félibien has given a particular account of his works at Rome, of which the following are the principal: 'The Ruins of Campo Vaccino;' 'A young Athenian visiting the Tomb of her Lover;' 'The filial Piety of Æneas;' 'Mars finding Lavinia sleeping on the Banks of the Tiber,' one of his best pictures; 'The Birth of Venus,' and 'The Birth of Cupid.' In 1653 he left Rome to return to France, by way of Venice, where he was so struck with the works of Titian, that he wrote to his friend to rejoin him in that city, and there he remained eighteen months, profiting greatly by his studies. In 1656 he returned to Paris, where he painted, among other works, a picture of 'St. Margaret,' for the church dedicated to that saint, a saloon in the Château Raincy, and four landscapes in the Hôtel d'Hervart, afterwards the Hôtel des Postes, in which the figures were painted by Mignard. The remainder of his life was employed in preparing for publication his poem, which, however, did not appear until three years after his death. He died at Villiers-le-Bel, near Paris, in 1665. There are in public galleries the following paintings by him:

Paris. Louvre. St. Margaret.
Naiads.

Vienna. Czernin Coll. The Vision of Alcmena.

DUGGAN, PETER PAUL, a native of Ireland, went while quite young to America. He afterwards returned to England, and resided for some years near London, but died in Paris in 1861. He painted portraits in oil, but more often worked in crayons.

DUGHET, GASPARD, (commonly called GASPARD POUSSIN, or LE GUASPREE,) was born at Rome in 1613. His parents were French subjects, who had settled in the Eternal City. They appear to have been people of a kindly disposition, for about 1629 they received into their house their fellow-countryman, Nicolas Poussin, then a lonely and friendless student in Rome, and nursed him tenderly through a dangerous illness. This friendship brought about the great painter's marriage with a daughter of his hosts. Nay more, Poussin, seeing the inclination of the young Gaspard towards art, took him as his pupil, and for three years carefully superintended his instruction. Dughet owed much to the solid foundation thus laid by his brother-in-law, and he ever proved himself a most devoted disciple. He was fond of hunting, fishing; and out-door sports, and did not fail to profit by the opportunities thus afforded him of studying nature, and enriching his knowledge of her ever-changing aspects. After leaving Poussin's studio, his independent nature led him, though scarcely yet twenty, to set up for himself; and the progress he made in his art soon brought patronage.

He spent a year at Perugia and Castiglione with the Duke della Cornia, who treated him with great consideration, and escorted him back to Rome at the conclusion of his visit. With another patron he made a trip to Milan, and after a severe illness the Duke della Cornia took him away again for the recovery of his health, and procured him many commissions. This trip was followed by visits to Florence, where he painted some decorative works at the Pitti Palace, and to Naples, before he once more settled down in Rome.

This point may be said to mark the conclusion of the first period of Dughet's art, during which the works produced by him are to be distinguished by a coldness and certain want of freedom. He now came under the influence of Claude Lorrain, at this time in the zenith of his fame at Rome. The study of his works had a most beneficial effect on Dughet, and to it is due the warmth and mastery over light and air observable in the works of his maturer period. He never married, and with the exception of time given to sport and social pleasures—he was not a hermit-bachelor, but loved the society of genial spirits—his life was devoted to the pursuit of his art. The better to enable him to study the scenery of Rome and his loved Campagna, from which the subjects of the majority of his pictures were taken, he had four houses at which he spent his time: two in elevated situations in Rome itself, one at Tivoli, and another at Frascati. The facility of execution which he acquired was marvellous, and he is said to have required only one day to finish a large picture. Hence his works are almost innumerable, and specimens are found in nearly all the public and private collections of Europe. Besides easel works, he found time also to execute in fresco subjects from the life of the prophet Elias at the Carmelite Church of San Martino ai Monti at Rome. His finest works are in the Doria Palace, and others are in the Colonna and Borghese Palaces. It should not be forgotten that he received much assistance from his brother-in-law, from Pietro da Cortona, from Filippo Lauri, and from many others, in the figures introduced into his compositions; but this consideration is in no way sufficient to remove the feeling of surprise at his wonderful fertility. Amongst his pupils, the chief names are those of Crescenzo di Onofrio, Vincentio, and Jacques De Rooster of Mechlin. During his life he had saved 30,000 Roman crowns; but his generous habits, and an illness of two years before his death, which took place at Rome in 1675, did not leave more than sufficient to provide for his honourable burial.

In a brief summary of Dughet's characteristics, his partiality for quiet lights should first be mentioned. He excels in the representation of effects before sunrise, and in the reproduction of the peaceful tones of evening. But his great strength lies in the portrayal of tempests. D'Argenville observes that no painter before him had been able to reproduce the effects of wind and storm in his pictures: the leaves seem to move, and the trees cease to be inanimate objects under his brush. His works now convey an impression of great grandeur and solemnity, and this sombreness has probably increased in the course of years by his predilection for painting on a dark ground.

The drawings which he left are very finished in execution: some are outlined with the pen, and tinted with bistre or Indian ink: others are drawn with the pencil and touched up with white, or occasionally with black. There are also eight etchings by him, four of which are oval, inscribed with the Italian form of his name, Gasparo Duche inv. sc. Romae, or G.D.s., or Gasp. Dughet sculpsit.

The following is a list of some of the pictures by which he is represented in the chief collections of Europe:

O.J.D.

DUGHET, JEAN, a brother of Gaspard Dughet, was born at Rome in 1614, and studied under Nicolas Poussin, after whose works he engraved. He died in 1676. Of his prints the following are the most worthy of notice:

The Seven Sacraments; from the pictures painted by Nicolas Poussin for the Cavaliere del Pozzo, differing from those formerly in the Orleans collection.
Mount Parnassus; after the same.
The Birth of Bacchus; after the same.
The Judgment of Solomon; after the same.

DU GUERNIER FAMILY.

Louis (1550—ab. 1620).

Alexandre (fl. ab. 1600).

Louis (1614—1659). Alexandre (d. 1655). Pierre (1624—1674).

DU GUERNIER, ALEXANDRE, the elder, son of Louis Du Guernier the elder, and like him a painter of portraits and miniatures, flourished about the year 1600. His portraits, equal to those of his father, are rare and much sought after. Being a Protestant, he went abroad in consequence of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and died in exile.

DU GUERNIER, ALEXANDRE, the younger, a landscape painter, was a younger son of Alexandre Du Guernier the elder. He died in Paris in 1655, being cut short in a career of great promise.

DU GUERNIER, LOUIS, the elder, a French miniature painter, born in 1550, executed numerous drawings for books of hours and breviaries, as well as portraits of many of the most noted persons of his time. He painted for the Duke of Guise a book of prayers, in which the ladies of the court were represented with the attributes usually given to the saints. He ordinarily worked on vellum, stippling without making use of white. He died about 1620.

DU GUERNIER, LOUIS, the younger, the eldest son of Alexandre Du Guernier the elder, was born in Paris in 1614. He was added to the foundation members of the Royal Academy of Painting in 1651, became professor in 1655, and died in Paris in 1659. His sister, Susanne, married the celebrated historical painter, Sébastien Bourdon.

DU GUERNIER, LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1677, and came to England in 1708. He assisted Du Bosc in engraving the battles of the Duke of Marlborough, and executed some illustrations to the works of Spenser and Gay. He died in 1716.

DU GUERNIER, PIERRE, who was considered the best enamel painter of his day, was a younger son of Alexandre Du Guernier the elder. He was born in Paris in 1624, became an academician in 1663, and died in Paris in 1674. His portraits are distinguished by a freshness and brilliancy of colour, afterwards surpassed by Petitot alone.

DUGY, —, a French engraver, flourished about the year 1760. He engraved several slight prints, after the works of François Boucher and other masters.

DU HAMEEL, ALART, a goldsmith and engraver of the 15th century, is known by a plate of 'The Last Judgment,' after Jerom Bosch, and a 'Church Tabernacle.'

DU HAMEL, A. B., a French engraver, flourished about 1760. He resided in Paris, and was employed chiefly by the booksellers in engraving book-plates and portraits, among the latter being those of Jolyot de Crébillon and Jean Jacques Rousseau.

DUIVEN, JAN, born at Gouda in 1600, was a scholar of Wouter Crabeth, and had a great reputation as a portrait painter. He died in 1640.

DU JARDIN, KAREL, was born probably at Amsterdam about 1625. He was a pupil of Nicolaas Berchem, and was unquestionably the ablest scholar of that celebrated master. His progress was extraordinary, and to perfect himself he travelled to Italy when he was still very young. On his arrival at Rome he was received into the Bentevogel Society, where the title of 'Barbe de Bouc' was conferred on him. His studies were assiduous and constant, and his pictures acquired estimation in Rome, where they were admired beyond those of any artist of his country. After a residence of several years at Rome he returned to Holland, where his pictures were not less admired than they had been in Italy, and he met with great success. Notwithstanding this flattering encouragement, his desire of revisiting Italy was so great that he left home for Venice, where he died in 1678. The pictures of Du Jardin are more conformable to the taste of Italy than to that of Holland, and they generally exhibit a warmth and brilliancy of atmosphere, with clear and sparkling skies. His landscapes are always pleasing in their scenery, and they are decorated with charming figures and animals, in which, to the truth and finish of Paul Potter, he unites a taste which is not found in the works of that celebrated cattle painter. As he died young, and his pictures are highly wrought up, they are scarce, and very valuable. The following are some of the best:

"	"	Landscape and Animals. 1660.
"	"	Portrait of a Man. 1657.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Seven Landscapes.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Herdsman and Cattle.

He left about fifty-two admirable etchings of landscapes, figures, and animals, which are executed with uncommon taste and spirit. They are sometimes signed with his name at length, at other times with his initials or with a monogram.

DUJARDIN, LOUIS, a French engraver on wood, was born at Rouen in 1808, and died in Paris in 1859. He executed some of the illustrations to Charles Blanc's 'Histoire des Peintres.'

DULIN, PIERRE. See ULIN, PIERRE D'.

DULLAERT, HEINMAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1636. He was the son of a dealer in pictures, and having shown an early inclination for art, he was placed in the school of Rembrandt. Under that able instructor his progress was such, that in a few years some of his small pictures were painted so much in the style of his master as to be mistaken for Rembrandt's own. He generally painted cabinet pictures of historical subjects and portraits, which were deservedly admired for harmony of colour, a vigorous touch, and a masterly effect of light and shade. He died at Rotterdam in 1684.

DULONG, JEAN LOUIS, a French historical and portrait painter, was born at Astaffort (Lot-et-Garonne) in 1800. He was a pupil of Gros and of Abel de Pujol, and died in Paris in 1868, in which year he exhibited at the Salon 'Marie Antoinette in the Conciergerie.'

DU MESNIL, LOUIS MICHEL, a French historical painter, became in 1750 professor at the Academy of St. Luke at Rome. He painted the 'Visitation of the Virgin' for the church of St. Jean-en-Grève at Paris, and one of the 'Beatitudes' in the chapel of M. Turgot. A picture of his, 'Belle, quel est votre dessein?' was engraved by C. Dupuis. His son, PIERRE LOUIS DU MESNIL, who was born in 1698, and died in Paris in 1781, was also professor at the Academy of St. Luke, of which he became rector. He usually painted subjects of every-day life, some of which have been engraved.

DU MONSTIER, DANIEL, (DU MOUSTIER, or DU MOUTIER), the best known of his family, was born in Paris in 1574. He was the son of Cosme and grandson of Geoffroy Du Monstier, and worked in crayons and pastels at the courts of Francis I., Henry IV., and Louis XIII., executing portraits of all the most distinguished personages of his time. His master is unknown, but as his style resembles that of Primaticcio, he probably studied under one of the Italians at the court of Francis I. He died in Paris in 1646. NICOLAS DU MONSTIER, a son of Daniel, followed in his father's footsteps. He was born in Paris in 1612, was received into the Academy in 1665, and died in 1667.

DU MONSTIER, GEOFFROY, a French miniature painter, born early in the 16th century, and still living in 1547, was much employed at Fontainebleau by Il Rosso. He likewise painted upon glass, and etched several plates which are described in Robert-Dumesnil's 'Peintre-Graveur Français,' vol. v. He is supposed to have painted in grisaille the following miniatures in manuscripts: 'Francis I. conversing with Julius Cæsar,' in the British Museum, and 'The Triumph of Petrarch,' in the Library of the Arsenal at Paris.

DUMONT, JACQUES, called LE ROMAIN, on account of a long sojourn which he made at Rome, was born about 1700. He was an historical and genre painter, whose best work was his picture of 'Hercules and Omphale,' which he painted for his reception at the Academy in 1728, but he had more reputation than talent. Some of his works were engraved by his contemporaries. His drawing and composition are good, but his colour is mediocre. He died in Paris in 1781.

DU MOUSTIER. See DU MONSTIER.

DUNCAN, EDWARD, a water-colour painter, was born in London in 1803. He was articled to Robert Havell, the aquatint engraver, and was thus afforded frequent opportunities of studying, and occasionally of copying, the works of William Havell. These developed his taste for drawing and the use of colour, and in 1831 he became a member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, but he afterwards withdrew, and in 1849 was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and a full member in the following year. He died in London in 1882. His drawings comprise a wide range of subjects, treated with much grace and great truthfulness to nature, but his larger and more important works are chiefly coast scenery, with shipping and craft admirably characterized. Among the best of them are the following:

The Shipwreck. 1859.
The Life-Boat. 1860.
Blue Lights.
Oyster Dredgers—Swansea Bay.
Landing Fish on the Sands at Whitby.
Fishing Boats making for the Harbour of Boulogne—early morning.

DUNCAN, THOMAS, was born in 1807, at Kinclaven, in Perthshire, but was educated at Perth, whither his parents had removed shortly after his birth. He showed very early signs of a peculiar faculty by employing every moment in drawing such objects as struck his fancy, especially the portraits of his young companions; and while still at school he painted the whole of the scenery for a dramatic representation of 'Rob Roy,' which he and his schoolfellows performed in a stable-loft. His parents, however, considered this use of his pencil an unprofitable waste of time, and placed him in the office of a law-writer. Released in time from the drudgery of the desk, and more than ever desirous of accomplishing his favourite object, he at length procured the consent of his father to his visiting Edinburgh, where he was placed under the able instruction of Sir William Allan, then master of the Trustees' Academy for the study of art, an establishment endowed by Government. Duncan's talent, fostered and directed by such a master, speedily developed itself, and he made rapid progress in the drawing of the human figure. The first picture which brought him into general notice was his 'Milkmaid'; and shortly after he exhibited his 'Old Mortality' and 'The Bra' Wooser.' He was appointed, at an unusually early age, to one of the professorships—that of colour—at the newly-established Royal Scottish Academy, and subsequently, on the death of Allan, to the well-endowed mastership of the Trustees' Academy. In 1840 he sent to the Royal Academy his fine work, 'Prince Charles Edward and the Highlanders entering Edinburgh after the Battle of Preston Pans.' This picture brought the painter at once into most favourable notice. In 1841 Duncan exhibited a most touching picture from the ballad of 'Auld Robin Gray,' termed 'The Waefu' Heart' (now in the Sheepshanks Collection in the South Kensington Museum); in the following year, 'Deer-stalking'; and in 1843, 'Charles Edward asleep after the Battle of Culloden, protected by Flora MacDonald.' In 1844 Duncan exhibited 'Cupid,' and 'The Martyrdom of John Brown of Priesthill, in 1685.' This, which is now in the Corporation Galleries at Glasgow, was the last picture by the artist exhibited in London, excepting a portrait of himself, which, to the honour of his Scottish professional brethren, was purchased by subscription, and presented by them to the Royal Scottish Academy. Duncan was elected an Academician of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1830, and an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1843, but he did not long survive the latter honour, as he died at Edinburgh in 1845. Had his life been prolonged, there is no question but that he would have achieved a lofty position in historical painting; as a colourist, indeed, he had few superiors. His portraits deserve mention as being faithfully and skilfully rendered.

The following works by him are in the National Gallery of Scotland:

Thomas Duncan.
Anne Page inviting Slender to dinner.
Jeannie Deans and the Robbers.
Portrait of Lady Stuart of Allanbank.
John McNeill of Colonsay.
Lord Colonsay.
Bran—a celebrated Scottish Deerhound.
The two Friends, Child and Dog.

DUNKARTON, ROBERT, a mezzotint engraver, was born in London in 1744. He was a pupil of Pether, and painted a few portraits, some of which, as also some portraits in crayons, were exhibited at the Royal Academy and at Spring Gardens until 1779. But his greatest success was gained as a mezzotint engraver. His plates are dated from 1770 to 1811, after which year there is no record of him. He engraved in a clear, finished style several portraits and historical subjects, of which the following are the principal:

PORTRAITS.

George, Lord Lyttelton; after West.
Jonas Hanway; after E. Edwards.

Dr. Arne; after W. Humphrey.
 Miss Horneck; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
 John Elliot; after N. Dance.
 Miss Bamfylde; after W. Peters.
 James Brindley, engineer; after Parsons.
 Miss Catley, in the character of Euphrosyne; after Lawrence.

 Christ and the Disciples at Emmaus; after Guercino.
 Four subjects from the Life of Joseph; after the same.

DUNKER, BALTHASAR ANTON, a landscape painter and etcher, was born at Saal, near Stralsund, in 1746. He was a pupil of Jakob Philipp Hackert and of Vien, and was more distinguished as an etcher than as a painter. His works are after Roos, Van der Does, Hackert, and Schutz, and consist of costumes and manners of the French before the Revolution, illustrations of books, and other miscellaneous subjects. Among them were some excellent landscapes, as the 'Environs of Berne,' and views of Leghorn. He died at Berne in 1807.

DUNKER, PHILIP HEINRICH, son of Balthasar A. Dunker, was also an engraver, and a painter in water-colours. In both pursuits it seems that he was a copyist, as his drawings are after Kobell, Roos, Weenix, and others, and his engraving after a picture by Demarne is traced to one by Geisler. He died in 1836.

D'UNKER-HENNING-LÜTZOW, KARL HINDRICK, a genre-painter, was born at Stockholm in 1829. Up to 1851 he was an officer in the Swedish Guards; he afterwards studied at the Düsseldorf Academy under K. Sohn, and visited Paris and Amsterdam. Having by an accident lost the use of his right arm, he quickly learnt to paint with his left, but he soon after succumbed to a chest disease, and died at Düsseldorf in 1866. He was Swedish court painter, and a professor and honorary member of the Royal Academy at Stockholm. The Berlin National Gallery possesses an 'Announcement of Arrest' by him.

DUNLAP, WILLIAM, an American painter, was born at Perth Amboy, in New Jersey, in 1766. When only seventeen he painted a portrait of Washington. A group of himself and his parents, done in 1788, is in the collection of the New York Historical Society. He published in 1834 his 'History of the Arts of Design in the United States,' and died in New York in 1839.

DUNOUY, ALEXANDRE HYACINTHE, a landscape painter, born in Paris in 1757, was a pupil of Briand. He exhibited at the Musée Royal in 1800 'Plusieurs études d'après la nature prises à Villers-Paul et Hyères,' and during succeeding years many landscapes and views; in 1830 at the Luxembourg he exhibited 'Études d'après nature à Montmorency: Autres prises à Jouy.' He also engraved a series of thirty landscapes from his own compositions, and some views in Italy and in the environs of Paris. He died in 1843.

DUNSTALL, JOHN, who lived in London about the year 1660, engraved a few portraits and other plates, which are etched and finished with the graver in imitation of the style of Hollar. In 1662 he published a book of birds, beasts, flowers, fruit, &c., from his own designs. Among other portraits we have the following by him:

Mary, Queen of James II.
 King William and Queen Mary.
 Samuel Clarke, prefixed to his 'Puritan Divines.'
 James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh.

DUNTHORNE, JOHN, father and son, were two painters who practised at Colchester in the latter part of the 18th century. The father painted portraits, whilst the son painted genre subjects, several of which appeared at the Royal Academy between 1783 and 1794.

DÜNWEGE, VICTOR and HEINRICH, who were brothers, and painters of the school of Westphalia, executed conjointly a large altar-piece for the parish church of Dortmund. Though painted in the year 1523, it recalls the art of the 15th century, having a gold background, and being symmetrical in composition, but somewhat crude in colouring. It represents, in the centre, 'The Crucifixion'; on the interior of the wings, 'The Adoration of the Kings,' the 'Infant Jesus,' the 'Virgin and several of her kindred;' and on the exterior 'The Donor kneeling before Christ,' who is surrounded by Saints. Similar in character to this altar-piece are a 'Holy Family' in the Antwerp Gallery (formerly in the church of Calcar), and a 'Crucifixion' in the Berlin Gallery (not now exhibited), which are ascribed to the brothers Dünwege. The 'Adoration of the Kings,' dated 1512, in the Naples Museum, is by a Westphalian master, resembling these artists in style.

DUPÉRAC, ÉTIENNE, (or DU PÉRAC), a French painter, architect, and engraver, was born at Bordeaux about 1525. He studied at Rome, and engraved the 'Last Judgment,' after Michelangelo, and the 'Judgment of Paris,' after Raphael. He etched in the manner of Fontana forty plates, entitled 'I Vestigj dell' Antichità di Roma,' and published in Rome in 1575. Henry IV. appointed Dupérac architect at Fontainebleau, where he painted the bath-room with 'Marine Deities' and the 'Loves of Jupiter and Calisto,' but these works were destroyed by fire in 1697. He died in Paris in 1604.

DUPERREUX, ALEXANDRE LOUIS ROBERT MILLIN. See MILLIN DUPERREUX.

DUPLESSI-BERTAUX, JEAN, a French draughtsman and engraver, was born in Paris in 1747. He engraved many plates for the 'Voyage à Naples et dans les Deux-Siciles' of the Abbé de Saint-Non, and for the 'Voyage en Grèce' of Choiseul-Gouffier, and etched some of the plates of the 'Galerie du Palais-Royal.' His best-known works, however, are those which he executed for the 'Tableaux historiques de la Révolution,' some of which are from his own designs, and the 'Campagnes d'Italie,' after the drawings of Carle Vernet. There are also plates by him in Denon's 'Voyage en Égypte,' the 'Musée Français,' and the 'Musée Filhol.' He died in 1818 or 1819.

DUPLESSIS, JOSEPH SIFRÈDE, a French portrait painter, was born at Carpentras, near Avignon, in 1725. He was destined for the priesthood, but at an early age he showed his inclination for the arts. He was taught by his father, Duplessis the elder, and afterwards by Frère Imbert. He visited Rome in 1745, and studied there under Sibleyras; and on his return home, after a short stay at Lyons, he established himself in Paris, and was received into the Academy in 1774. Losing his fortune in the Revolution, he accepted the post of conservator of the Museum of Versailles, where he died in 1802. He possessed a high reputation for his portraits, among which are those of Gluck (now in the Vienna Gallery), Franklin, Marmontel, the Abbé Bossuet, and M. and Mme. Necker.

DUPLOINICH, VEDASTUS, a Dutch engraver, flourished about the year 1660. Among other prints, we have a few plates by him representing views in Holland, which are neatly engraved.

DUPONCHEL, CHARLES EUGÈNE, a French engraver, born at Abbeville in 1748, was a scholar of Jacques Tardieu. He resided in England about the year 1779, and among other prints engraved a view of Waterford, from a drawing by Paul Sandby, the 'Madonna della Seggiola' of Raphael, a 'Holy Family' after Andrea del Sarto, and several other historical subjects and portraits. He was living in 1804.

DUPONT, FRANÇOIS LÉONARD, called DUPONT WATTEAU, a French painter, was born at Moorsel in 1756, and studied at Lille under Louis Watteau, whose daughter he married in 1782. In 1798 he gave up art for mechanics, with the study of which he had begun life. He died at Lille in 1824. During the years devoted to art, Dupont painted in all mediums and all subjects—portraits, genre subjects, &c. In the Lille Museum is a picture by him, dated 1785, of the 'Attributes of the Fine Arts,' and in the Glasgow Corporation Galleries is 'The Vintage.'

DUPONT, GAINSBOROUGH, the nephew and pupil of Thomas Gainsborough, R.A., was born in 1767. He painted portraits and landscapes in imitation of the style of his uncle, and also landscapes with architectural ruins, in which he imitated Nicolas Poussin. His principal work is a large picture containing the portraits of the Trinity Masters, which is in their court-room on Tower Hill. He is, however, more distinguished as an engraver in mezzotinto, and his engravings of some of Gainsborough's portraits are imbued with the very spirit of the painter. He died in London in 1797. The following are his best plates:

George III., full length; after Gainsborough.
Queen Charlotte, full length; after the same.
The Princess Royal, and the Princesses Augusta and Elizabeth, full length; after the same.
George, Lord Rodney, full length; after the same.
General Conway, full length; after the same.
Colonel St. Leger, full length; after the same.
Rev. Sir Henry Bate Dudley, Bart., full length; after the same.
Rev. Richard Graves, half-length, oval; after the same.

DU PONT, NICOLAS, who was born at Brussels in 1660, painted landscapes and architecture. The figures in his landscapes are attributed to Pieter Bout, the coadjutor of Bodewyns, in conjunction with whom he painted the perspective of a grand palace, now in the Museum at Ghent. He died at Brussels in 1712.

DU PONT, PAULUS (better known as PAULUS PONTIUS), an eminent Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1603, and was instructed in the art of engraving by Lucas Vorsterman; but he improved his designs by the advice and friendship of Rubens, from whose works he engraved many admirable plates. Few artists have equalled him in the correct and faithful delineation of his model; and in the character and expression of his figures he appears to have possessed himself of the mind of Rubens. He was not less successful in the fine portraits he engraved after Van Dyck, in which he seems to have adapted his style to the particular character of the person represented. His plates are executed with the graver in a clear, bold style; and, though he did not possess the facility of Bolswert, or the delicacy of Vorsterman, his plates will ever be esteemed among the ablest productions of Flemish art. He died in 1658. The following are his principal works:

PORTRAITS AFTER VAN DYCK.

DUPONT, PIERRE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1730. He is often confounded with Gainsborough Dupont.

DUPPA, RICHARD, was an English copyist, who flourished in the latter half of the 18th and in the beginning of the 19th century. He studied for some time in Rome, and published two works containing copies of heads by Michelangelo and Raphael; but he is chiefly known by his lives of these two painters, published in 1807 and 1816 respectively.

DUPRAT, —, a French painter of the 18th century, is known by a portrait of the Princess of Asturias, Doña Maria Barbara, wife of Ferdinand VI., in the Madrid Gallery. No dates are known in connection with his life.

DUPRÉ, LÉON VICTOR, a French landscape painter, was born at Limoges in 1816, and studied under his brother, Jules Dupré. He died in 1879, after a long and painful illness. Amongst his works are:

Meadows in Berry.
Environs of St. Junien.
Cows Drinking. 1855. (South Kensington Museum.)
View at Argentan. 1861.
Landscape in the Indre. 1864.

DUPRÉEL, —, was a French engraver of whom no particulars are related, but whose works are to be found in the 'Musée Français,' the 'Galerie de Florence,' and other publications of the close of the 18th and commencement of the 19th centuries.

DUPRESSOIR, JOSEPH FRANÇOIS, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1800. He painted chiefly views in the south of France, but sometimes ventured on historical subjects, as the 'Battle of Rethel' in the galleries at Versailles. He died in Paris in 1859.

DUPUIS, CHARLES, (or DU PUIS,) a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1685. He was a pupil of Gaspard Duchange, and engraved several plates of portraits and historical subjects. They are etched with taste, and finished with the graver in a free, masterly style. His drawing is correct, and his heads are full of expression and character. He was a member of the French Academy, and died in Paris in 1742. The following are his plates most worthy of notice:

PORTRAITS.

Louis XV.; after Ranc.
Henry of Lorraine, Duke of Guise; after Du Monstier.
Nicolas Coustou, sculptor; after Le Gros.
Nicolas de Largillière, painter; after Gueulain.

Cupid triumphing over Pan; after Antoine Coypel.
Diana reposing, with her Nymphs; after the same.
Rinaldo and Armida; after the same.
The Passage of the Rhine; after Le Brun.

DUPUIS, NICOLAS GABRIEL, the younger brother of Charles Dupuis, was born in Paris in 1696, and was instructed in the art of engraving by Gaspard Duchange. Although not equal to his brother, he possessed great merit, and was admitted a member of the Academy in 1754. He engraved several portraits and historical subjects, in the style of his brother. He died in Paris in 1771. There are by him the following prints:

PORTRAITS.

The Equestrian Statue of Louis XV. erected at Bordeaux; after Le Moine.
The same, from that erected at Rennes; after the same.
C. F. Paul de Normand de Tournehem, Director General of the Arts; after L. Tocqué.

DUPUIS, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, an etcher and engraver in mezzotint, worked in Paris in the early part of the 18th century. His best plate is the portrait of his grandfather, PIERRE DUPUIS, the flower painter, who was born in 1610, and died in 1682.

DUQUE CORNEJO, PEDRO, a Spanish sculptor and painter, was born at Seville in 1677. He was a pupil of Pedro Roldan for sculpture, but it is not known by whom he was instructed in painting. The pictures which he painted in oil for the Carthusian priory of Santa Maria de las Cuevas, representing St. Bruno and other monks of the order, and those which he painted in fresco for the monastery of San Geronimo de Buenavista, are not without merit. He had a ready invention, and produced numerous designs, which are much esteemed at Seville. He died at Cordova in 1757, and was buried with great pomp in the cathedral of that city. His works, as a sculptor and carver in wood, are to be seen in the cathedrals and churches of Seville, Cordova, Granada, and elsewhere.

DUQUEYLAR, PAUL, a French historical painter, born at Digne in 1771, was a scholar of David. Most of the subjects painted by him are taken from the classic poets and ancient historians, and are of an elevated character. The 'Judgment of Minos,' and 'Belisarius,' both painted at Rome in 1804, are described by Kotzebue in his 'Souvenirs d'Italie.' He was still living in 1831.

DURAMEAU, LOUIS JACQUES, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1733. He was painter to the king, and keeper of the pictures at Versailles, and was received into the Academy in 1774 upon his painting of 'Summer' on the ceiling of the Gallery of Apollo in the Louvre. He also painted the ceiling of the theatre in the palace of Versailles with the subject of 'Apollo.' There are pictures by him in the Museums of Alençon and Besançon, and some of his historical subjects have been engraved by Levasseur. He died at Versailles in 1796.

DURAND, CYRILE, a French genre painter, was born at Bordeaux in 1790, and died there in 1840. An 'Interior' by him is in the Museum of his native city.

DURAND-BRAGER, JEAN BAPTISTE HENRI, a French marine painter, was born at Dol in 1814.

He studied under Gudin and Eugène Isabey, and in 1840 accompanied the fleet which brought Napoleon's remains from St. Helena, which island afforded him subjects for various pictures. He spent much of his time in travelling; he went to Buenos Ayres with the squadron, and explored Uruguay and Brazil; he accompanied the expeditions to Tangiers and Mogador, and to Madagascar, and he was in the Crimea during the war with Russia. He painted views of the places he visited, and also naval combats and sea-pieces. He died in 1879. There are several of his works in the galleries of Versailles.

DURANT, JEAN LOUIS, a French portrait painter and engraver, was a native of Orleans. He worked at Geneva about 1670, but came to London about the year 1690. He was a very indifferent engraver, and was chiefly employed by the booksellers, for whom he engraved a variety of book ornaments and portraits. Among the latter is that of Queen Mary II., after Kneller.

DURANTE, Conte GIORGIO, an Italian painter of flowers and birds, was born at Brescia in 1683, and died in 1755. His works were eagerly sought after, no less for their exact imitation than for their tasteful composition. They are rarely met with out of Brescia, though several noble Venetian families possess a few specimens, and the best are to be seen in the royal collection at Turin.

DURELLO, SIMON, a German engraver, executed some of the portraits for the work entitled, 'Istoria di Leopoldo Cesare,' published at Vienna in 1674.

DÜRER, ALBRECHT, the great representative artist of Germany, was of Hungarian descent, it having been lately proved almost beyond doubt that his father belonged to a Hungarian family of the name of Ajtos, who had lived for many generations in a little village of the same name, near Gzula. This name of Ajtos, derived from 'aito' (a door), signifies the same as the German Thürer or Dürer, which was probably a translation of it, and it is significant that Dürer bore the same arms—viz., the open door under a pent-house roof—that were borne by this family, who probably ranked among the lesser nobility of Hungary, although they lived, as Dürer himself tells us, "by tending oxen and horses." Albrecht Dürer, the elder, however, deserted this patriarchal calling, and became a goldsmith, and after passing some time with the great masters of that craft in the Netherlands, he came to Nuremberg in 1455, where he engaged himself to a master goldsmith, named Hieronymus Holper, (not Haller, as has been stated erroneously,) whose young daughter Barbara he married in 1467, taking up about the same time his rights as burgher and master goldsmith in the city. Albrecht Dürer was the third of eighteen children who were born to this worthy goldsmith, most of whom died in infancy. His birth took place on May 21st, 1471, and Anton Koburger, the celebrated printer, was his godfather. "When I had learnt to write and read," says Dürer, in a brief family chronicle of his own compiling, "my father took me from school and taught me the goldsmith's work." But he continues, "my inclination carried me more towards painting." Therefore, his father, giving in to his desire, bound him apprentice in 1486 to the best Nuremberg painter of his time—Michel Wolgemut—to serve with him for three years. "During this time," writes Dürer, "God gave me diligence so that I learnt well. And when I had served my time, my father sent me away, and I was absent four years, until my father required me back, and as I set out in 1490 after Easter, so I returned in 1494 after Whitsuntide." This is all Dürer tells us concerning his 'Lehr- und Wanderjahre,' nor have we much other record concerning them. A portrait he drew of himself in the looking-glass in his thirteenth year is, however, still preserved in the Albertina at Vienna, and a careful pen-drawing of the 'Virgin and two Angels,' dated 1485, is to be found in the Berlin Museum; but this is more probably a copy from some earlier master than an original composition. Where Dürer went during his four 'Wanderjahre' is not certain. Christoph Scheurl expressly states in one place that he made a tour through Germany, and both he and Neudörffer affirm that he was in Colmar in 1492, where he was entertained by Martin Schongauer's three brothers, as also by a fourth brother at Basle. He would also seem to have been at Strassburg in 1494, judging from an old inscription on two portraits supposed to have been executed by him. But many writers are of opinion that he crossed the Alps at this period, and passed some time in Italy, and this view has recently been supported by Prof. Thausing, though it cannot be said that the evidence he brings forward in favour of it is strong enough to establish it in face of many difficulties. Wherever Dürer went during his 'Wanderjahre,' it is certain he returned to Nuremberg in May, 1494. "And when I reached home," he writes in his usual laconic style, "Hans Frey treated with my father, and gave me his daughter Agnes, and he gave me with her two hundred florins, and the marriage was celebrated on the Monday before St. Margaret's Day, in the year 1494." This is all Dürer tells us concerning his marriage, nor does he afterwards in any of his writings mention his wife except incidentally in the briefest manner.

But Dürer's silence has not prevented his biographers from indulging in endless conjectures concerning his domestic relations. The tradition that his marriage was unhappy is a very old one, but its foundation seems to rest entirely on a letter written by Pirkheimer to Johann Tscherte of Vienna, architect to Charles V. This long letter, which deals chiefly with the politics of the time, was written, not in 1528, as has been supposed, but in 1530, two years after Dürer's death, and in it Pirkheimer accuses Dürer's wife of having worried and tormented her husband to such a degree that in the end she caused his death. The language is strong—"She so gnawed into his heart that he went from hence the quicker"—"in short, she alone is the cause of his death." This bitter accusation is, however, regarded by Prof. Thausing, and several modern critics, to be merely the result of an overflow of spite on the part of the learned writer. He had never liked his friend's wife, and had recently been annoyed by her selling some stag-horns belonging to Dürer, which he especially desired. Hence, according to Prof. Thausing, his vile misrepresentations, which have blackened the character of Frau Agnes for centuries. It is of course possible that Pirkheimer's resentment towards Agnes Frey made him take a harsher view of her conduct than was justifiable, but it is difficult in the face of this letter to believe with her modern champions that her conduct was irreproachable. The letter itself seems never to have been sent to its destination, but a rough draft of it in Pirkheimer's own handwriting is preserved in the Stadtbibliothek at Nuremberg, and was printed in full in the 'Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft,' vol. ii. 1879.

After his marriage Dürer lived for some years with his young wife in his father's house, 'Unter der Vesten,' and his father dying in 1502, he appears from that time to have taken charge of his mother until her death in 1514, and of his young brother Hans, whom he educated as a painter. During this period, viz., from 1494 to 1505, he executed several of his larger copper-plates, such as the magnificent 'Adam and Eve' (1504), 'The Nativity' (1504), 'The Great Horse' and 'The Little Horse' (1505), besides a good many others considered to have been copied from Wolgemut. The beautiful conception of the 'Prodigal Son' is also referred to this period. But by far the greatest work that he executed at this time was the magnificent series of fifteen large wood-engravings illustrating the 'Apocalypse,' of which editions in German and in Latin were published in Nuremberg in 1498, under the respective titles of 'Die heinliche Offenbarung Johannis,' and 'Apocalipsis cum Figuris.' The sixteenth cut, representing the 'Vision of the Virgin and Child beheld by St. John as he is writing his Revelation,' was added on the title-page to the second Latin edition published in 1511. These cuts mark an epoch in the history of wood-engraving. It is not only that in their conception and design they are grander than any that had previously appeared, but also that they are far more skilfully executed. It was long a disputed point whether Dürer did not himself cut the blocks for these surprising works, but most authorities now agree that he could not have done so. Dürer's first painting of importance, 'The Adoration of the Magi,' now in the Uffizi at Florence, was likewise executed at this period. It is dated 1504.

In the autumn of 1505 Dürer undertook a journey to Venice, a city that had a large traffic with Nuremberg. It is stated by Vasari that he went there to defend his rights against Marc Antonio, who was copying his plates and monogram. But that wholesale piracy of his works which was carried on to a great extent by Marc Antonio and others at a later period had scarcely begun at this time, though it is possible that Dürer while in Venice suffered from it, and made some complaint to the Signory. The most probable reason that has been stated for his journey is, that he had already, before starting, received a commission from the German merchants in Venice for a picture to adorn their new Hall of Exchange—the Fondaco dei Tedeschi—upon the decoration of which Titian and Giorgione were also employed. If he had not received it before, it is certain that soon after his arrival in Venice he received his commission, and began to work on the magnificent picture known as 'The Feast of the Rosary (or Rose-Garlands),' now in the monastery of Strahow near Prague. During Dürer's sojourn in Venice, which lasted from the end of 1505 to the beginning of 1507, he wrote nine letters to his friend the learned counsellor of Nuremberg, Wilibald Pirkheimer, with whom, as we see by these same letters, he was upon terms of intimacy.

On Dürer's return to Nuremberg in 1507 he painted several large altar-pieces: viz., in 1507, the two single figures of 'Adam' and 'Eve' on panels of which the originals are generally supposed to be those in the Pitti Palace at Florence; in 1508, 'The Martyrdom of the ten thousand Christians,' now in the Vienna Gallery; in 1509, 'The Assumption of the Virgin,' painted for the merchant Jacob Heller of Frankfort, as an altar-piece in the church of the Dominicans, but removed by the Elector Maximilian of Bavaria to Munich, where it was burnt in 1674; and in 1511 the splendid painting of the 'Adoration of the Trinity,' in the Imperial Gallery at Vienna. Besides painting these works, Dürer was busily engaged at this period upon various series of wood-cuts. The year 1511, in which the great picture of the 'Trinity' was accomplished, was especially fruitful. In this year were published the first edition of the 'Life of the Virgin,' a series of twenty folio cuts; the series known as the 'Great Passion,' consisting of twelve folio cuts; and the 'Little Passion,' containing thirty-seven small cuts. This is perhaps the best known of all the series of wood-engravings. Thirty-five of the original blocks are now in the British Museum. Numerous other cuts of single subjects belong to the same period. But it is by his copper-plate engravings more than by his paintings or wood-cuts that Dürer is now known to the world. The earliest copper-plates which Dürer is known certainly to have executed are, according to Prof. Thausing, the 'Holy Family with the Locust' (Bartsch, 44), and the 'Love Offer' (Bartsch, 93); both these bear his monogram, but were probably copies from some older master. His noble original conceptions belong to a later date. Among the finest of these may be named, 'Death's Coat of Arms' (1503); 'The Prodigal Son'; 'Adam and Eve' (1504); 'The Nativity' (1504); 'The Knight, Death, and the Devil' (1513); 'Melancholia' (1514); 'St. Jerome in his chamber' (1514); 'The Great Fortune,' and the 'St. Eustace' (or 'St. Hubert'). The two last are large plates of uncertain date, but are referred by Prof. Thausing to Dürer's early time. Other writers date them later. The plates of the beautiful series known as the 'Passion in Copper,' date from 1508 to 1513.

In 1518 Dürer went to Augsburg at the time of the Imperial Diet, and there drew a portrait of the Emperor Maximilian, for whom he afterwards executed two immense works in wood-engraving, viz. 'The Triumphal Arch of the Emperor Maximilian,' composed of ninety-two blocks, and the allegory called 'The Triumphal Car of the Emperor Maximilian.'

In 1520-21 Dürer, accompanied by his wife, undertook a journey to the Netherlands, of which he has left us a detailed account in a journal he kept during his travels. This journal, with the letters written from Venice, was first published in Von Murr's 'Journal zur Kunstgeschichte' in 1779-1781. It is translated into English in Mr. W. B. Scott's and in Mrs. Heaton's lives of Dürer. After his return from this journey, which appears to have been chiefly undertaken in order to get a ratification from the Emperor Charles V. of a pension that had been granted him by Maximilian, Dürer remained quietly working in Nuremberg until his death, which took place on the 6th of April, 1528. His last great work had been the painting of the 'Four Evangelists,' grandly-conceived figures, which he presented to his native city. They are now in the Munich Gallery.

Besides his artistic works Dürer wrote several treatises — the most important being, 'The Art of Mensuration' (1525); 'Instruction on the Fortification of Towns, Castles, and Places' (1527); and the 'Treatise on Proportion,' published after his death in 1528. He is also believed to have executed some plastic works, one of which, a carving in hone-stone of 'The Birth of St. John the Baptist,' is in the British Museum.

Dürer's art is essentially German in character, and those who only admire the Italian ideal find nothing in it to desire. It is the lament of many writers that he did not receive Italian training; but those who truly appreciate his art rejoice that, in spite of various influences that might have affected it, his style remained thoroughly individual and German. "In creative richness of fancy, in extensive power of thought, and in moral energy and earnest striving, Dürer," writes Lübke, "must be called the first of all German masters; and as regards artistic gifts, need fear no comparison with any master in the world, not even with Raphael and Michelangelo. Notwithstanding, in all that concerns the true means of expression—the clothing of the idea in the garment of exquisite form—he lies so deeply fettered within the bonds of his own limited world that he rarely rises to the same height of thought or expression."

This is no doubt true to some extent. We do not find in Dürer's art the classic ideal of the perfection of man's physical nature, nor the spiritual ideal of the early religious painters, nor the calm dignity and rich sensuous beauty of the great masters of the Italian Renaissance, but in it we find a noble expression of the German mind, with its high intellectual powers, its daring speculative philosophy, its deep-seated reverence, its patient laboriousness, and above all its strange love for the weird and grotesque. Dürer was the companion of some of the most learned and thoughtful men of his day. Luther and Melancthon were among the number of his friends, and there is no doubt but the reforming spirit of the age was powerfully at work within him, affecting his thought and art. Melancthon bears testimony to his rare worth as a man by saying, "his least merit was his art."

DÜRER, HANS, a younger brother of the celebrated Albrecht Dürer, was born at Nuremberg in 1490. When, in 1502, they lost their father, Albrecht took the young Hans, a boy of twelve, under his protection, and gave him instruction in art. He afterwards became court painter to the King of Poland, at Cracow. His death is not recorded, though it is thought that he may have been dead in 1538, for in that year his brother Andreas went from Nuremberg to Cracow to collect debts. A few old German paintings with the initials H. D. are attributed to Hans Dürer, but nothing certain is known of his works.

DURET, PIERRE, a French engraver, who was living in Paris in 1767. He engraved several plates of landscapes, principally after the Dutch masters, among which are the following:

- A View in Holland; after Ruisdael.
 Two Moonlight subjects; after Van der Neer.
 The Country Blacksmith; after Ph. Wouwerman.
 An Italian Sea-port; after Vernet.

DÜRINGER, DANIEL, a Swiss painter, born at Steckborn, in Thurgau, in 1720, studied at Zurich, and distinguished himself as an excellent painter and etcher of animals. He died in 1786.

DURMER, FRANZ VALENTIN, an Austrian engraver and draughtsman, was born at Vienna in 1766. He studied at the Academy of that city, and executed after Guido Reni the 'Four Seasons,' and after Poelenborch the 'Nativity,' which are two of his best plates. He was still living in 1835.

DURNO, JAMES, an historical painter, was born about the year 1752. He studied first under Andrea Casali, and afterwards under West, and painted two pictures for Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery. The early productions of this artist gave promise of great ability, which was not, however, fulfilled. He went to Italy in 1774, and died there in 1795.

DU RONCERAY, MARGUERITE LOUISE AMÉLIE DELOREME. See DELOREME DU RONCERAY.

DURR, JOHN, a native of Germany, flourished about the year 1625. He was an engraver of little repute, and worked chiefly for the booksellers, for whom, among other book-plates, he engraved some portraits, particularly those of H. J. Ernest and his family, and J. Zimmer.

DUSART, CORNELIS, the elder, flourished in Holland in the 17th century. In the Amsterdam Museum is a 'Fish Market' by him, signed and dated 1653.

DUSART, CORNELIS, (or DU SART,) a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Haarlem in 1660. He entered the guild of that city in 1679, and died there in 1704. He was a pupil of Adriaan van Ostade, whose style he imitated with considerable success. His works, like those of Ostade, represent Dutch peasants regaling and merry-making. Although not equal to his master in the richness of his tones and the harmony of his effect, his colouring is clear and agreeable, his compositions are ingenious, and his touch very spirited. There is great inequality in the works of Dusart; but some of his best pictures are in the following galleries:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Fish Market. 1683.
"	"	The Ambulant Musicians.
"	"	A Village Fair.
"	"	A Village Inn.
Antwerp.	Museum.	Interior with Peasants.

Dusart executed some very spirited etchings, and a few plates in mezzotint, which are full of humorous character. The following are his best prints:

PLATES IN MEZZOTINT.

An old Man playing on the Violin.
A Girl confessing to a Monk.
A Dutch Boor reading a Paper, and holding a Bottle.
Monkeys regaling.
An Indian dancing with a Girl.
A Girl dancing with a Tea-Pot in her Hand.

DUSCHER. See TUSCHER.

DUSIGN, —, a portrait painter, was a son of Colonel Dusign. He was a pupil of Sir Joshua Reynolds, and practised for a few years at Bath, where his family resided. He died at Rome in 1770.

DUTILLEUX, HENRI JOSEPH CONSTANT, a French landscape painter, who painted also a few portraits, was born at Douai in 1807. He studied under Hersent and at the École des Beaux-Arts, and worked at Arras from 1830 until 1860, in which year he removed to Paris, where he died in 1865. There are Landscapes by him in the Museums of Lille and of Douai.

DUTTENHOFER, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, a German engraver, was born at Gronau in Wurtemberg in 1778. He studied under Klengel at Dresden, and is chiefly known by his landscapes after Claude, Poussin, Annibale Carracci, P. Bril, and various views in the Tyrol. He also copied Woollett's print of 'Solitude,' after Wilson, and was one of the artists employed on the 'Musée Napoléon.' He died at Heilbronn in 1846. His son, ANTON DUTTENHOFER, who was likewise an engraver, and was a pupil of his father, died at Stuttgart in 1843, at the age of 31.

DU VAL, CHARLES ALLEN, a portrait and subject painter, was born in 1808. He practised at Manchester, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1836 till his death in 1872. Among his works are:

The Giaour. 1842.
Columbus in chains. 1855.
The Dedication of Samuel. 1858.
The Morning Walk. 1861.

DUVAL, MARC, called BERTIN, after his brother-in-law, and also 'Le Sourd de Charles IX.,' a painter and wood-engraver, was born at Le Mans, and became court painter of Charles IX. of France. Among his engravings, which are very rare, may be mentioned the Brothers Coligni and Catharine de' Medici. He died in Paris in 1581.

DUVAL, NICOLAAS. See DU VAL, ROBERT.

DUVAL, PHILIPPE, a French painter, flourished about the year 1672. He was first a scholar of Charles Le Brun, and afterwards studied at Venice. He came to England in the reign of Charles II., and painted some historical and mythological subjects, one of which, dated 1672, represented 'Venus receiving from Vulcan the Arms of Æneas.' He died in London in 1709.

DU VAL, ROBERT, a Dutch painter, who has often been called in error Nicolaas Duval, was born at the Hague in 1644. After studying under Nicolaas Wiering he went to Italy, and became an imitator of Pietro da Cortona. On his return to Holland he was employed by William, Prince of Orange, afterwards king of England. It is said that he was sent to Hampton Court to put in order the Cartoons of Raphael; but whether to repaint, or, in modern phrase, to restore them, is not stated. He was appointed director of the Academy at the Hague, and died there in 1732.

DU VAL, S. This artist is mentioned by Pajon as an engraver on wood, who flourished about the year 1650, and was remarkable for the neatness and delicacy of his execution. There are twenty cuts by him for the 'Histoire miraculeuse de Notre-Dame de Liesse.' His other prints are chiefly from the designs of Jacques Stella and N. Cochin. S. Du Val is sometimes mentioned as SEBASTIANO, and sometimes as STEFANO DU VAL; but there is a degree of mystification about him which requires elucidation. He must not be confounded with SEBASTIANO D'VL, or D'VAL, who lived a century earlier.

DUVAL-LE-CAMUS, JULES ALEXANDRE, a French historical and scriptural painter, the son of Pierre Duval-le-Camus, was born in Paris in 1817. He studied under his father, to whose style his own has considerable affinity, and under Drolling and Delaroche. He died in 1878. Amongst his chief works are:

Tobit and the Angel.
Petits Déjeuners de Marly.
Rousseau writing 'Héloïse.' 1846.
The Bear-Hunters. 1853.
Macbeth and the Witches. 1855.
The Flight into Egypt. 1857.
Jacques Clément. 1861. (Luxembourg Gallery).
St. Elizabeth of Hungary. 1863.
Martyrdom of St. Laurence. 1867.

DUVAL-LE-CAMUS, PIERRE, a French genre and portrait painter, was born at Lisieux in 1790. He studied under David, and became painter-in-ordinary to the Duchess of Berry. He died at St. Cloud in 1854. Amongst his works are:

The Baptism. 1819.
The Brothers of the Christian Doctrine. 1822.
Interior of a Kitchen. 1824.
Ennui. 1827.
Labourer's Family returning from school. 1827.
Halt of Huntsmen. 1837.
Wolf-Hunting. 1838.
The Blessing of Orphans. (Louvre.)
The First Gatherings of Harvest. (Louvre.)
Pifferaro teaching his Son. (Louvre.)
An Interior. (Bordeaux Museum.)

DUVEAU, LOUIS JEAN NOËL, a French painter, who was born at St. Malo in 1818, studied history and genre painting under Léon Cogniet in Paris, and afterwards visited Italy. He was successful in representing scenes of fisher-life in his native country. He died in Paris in 1867. In the Lille Museum is his 'Perseus and Andromeda,' painted in 1865.

DUVENEDE, MARCUS VAN, a Flemish painter, was born at Bruges about 1674. He went to Rome when he was very young, and became a scholar of Carlo Maratti, in whose academy he studied four years. There are several of his pictures in the churches and convents of his native city, of which the most esteemed is the 'Martyrdom of St. Laurence' in the chapel of St. Christopher. He died at Bruges in 1730.

DUVET, JEAN, (often incorrectly called DANET,) a French engraver, was born at Langres in 1485. He is sometimes called the 'MASTER OF THE UNICORN,' from his having sometimes engraved that animal in his allegorical subjects. He flourished in Paris in the reign of Henry II. of France, and died after 1561. Bartsch enumerates forty-five prints by this artist; his plates are generally marked I. D. or with one of these ciphers, D, or

The following are among his works:

The God Mars; I. D. 1530.
The Marriage of Adam and Eve.
Moses with the Patriarchs.
The Manifestation of St. John the Baptist.
The Crucifixion.
A set of twenty-four plates of subjects from the Apocalypse (the first of them marked Joh. Duvet aurifab. Lingon. annor. 70. has historias perficit, 1555).

DU VIVIER, G. See VIVIER, G. DE.

DU VIVIER, IGNAZ, a painter born at Rians in 1758, was instructed by Casanova, and executed battle-scenes in the style of his master. He afterwards removed to Vienna and turned his attention chiefly to landscapes; a 'Waterfall' by him is in the Vienna Gallery. He also etched a large number of landscapes and genre pictures. He died in Paris in 1832.

DUVIVIER, JEAN BERNARD, a native of Bruges, was a painter of historical subjects and professor at the Normal School in Paris. After having been instructed by Hubert, Paul de Kock, and Suvée, he studied for six years in Italy, and his style is distinguished for beautiful composition, correct drawing, and bright colouring. He died in Paris in 1837.

DU VIVIER, LOUISE. See under TARDIEU, JACQUES NICOLAS.

DÜWETT, GERRIT, (often called DE WETT, DE WET, DE WETH, or DE WEET,) was born at Amsterdam in 1616, and died there in 1679. He was a scholar of Rembrandt, whose manner he imitated; he also painted landscapes, and was accounted a good colourist. There is in the Copenhagen Gallery 'Jephthah's Daughter' by him.

DÜWETT, JACOB, (or DE WET,) was probably a son of Jan Düwett. In 1677 he entered the Guild of St. Luke at Cologne, where he flourished for many years.

DÜWETT, JAN, (DE WET, DE WETTE, or DE WETH,) is said to have been born at Hamburg in 1617, but the date of his birth was probably earlier. While quite young he entered the school of Rembrandt at Amsterdam, and his style partakes of that of his master and also of that of Gerard Dou. He produced a large number of biblical and mythological pictures, many of which have been sold as Rembrandt's. He afterwards settled in Hamburg, but the date of his death is not recorded. The 'Raising of Lazarus' by him, dated 1633, is in the Darmstadt Gallery, and 'Christ in the Temple' (1635) and the 'Burning of Troy' are at Brunswick: other pictures by him are at Kiel and Copenhagen. His brother, EMANUEL DÜWETT, (or DE WETT,) a native of Hamburg, who was likewise a pupil of Rembrandt, painted landscapes in the style of Uytenbrouck.

DUYNEN, ISAAC VAN, was a native of Antwerp, who went in 1664 to the Hague, where he became a pupil of Van Beyerem, and painted sea and river fish very successfully. He died at the Hague in 1688 or 1689. There is a picture of 'Cod-fish' by him in the Lille Museum.

DUYSTER, W. C., a Netherlandish painter, was the author of a painting representing 'Soldiers playing at Tric-trac' in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg.

DYCE, WILLIAM, a Scottish historical painter, was born at Aberdeen in 1806, and educated at Marischal College, where he graduated at the age of sixteen. He then studied art at the Royal Academies of Edinburgh and London. After two prolonged visits to Rome, which may be said to have formed his style, he settled at Edinburgh in 1830. Here, for the next few years, he painted portraits, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1835. The year 1837 saw the publication of his pamphlet on art education, which led to his being placed at the head of the government Schools of Design throughout the country. He entered into the Westminster Hall competitions, and produced for the decoration of the Houses of Parliament 'The Baptism of Ethelbert,' and the series of frescoes illustrating the history of King Arthur. He also painted frescoes for the church of All Saints, Margaret Street, London, and executed decorative works for the Queen at Osborne and Buckingham Palace. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1844, and an Academician in 1848. He died in London in 1864. The following are some of the chief works exhibited by him:

Bacchus nursed by the Nymphs. 1827.	} National Gallery of Scotland.
The Infant Hercules. 1830.
The Judgment of Solomon. (A cartoon.) 1836.
Francesca da Rimini. 1837.

Piety and Faith. Sir Galahad and his Companions. Mercy.

The Descent of Venus. 1836.
 St. Dunstan separating Edwy and Elgiva. 1839.
 The Christian Yoke. 1841.
 Joash shooting the Arrow of Deliverance. 1844.
 Jacob and Rachel. 1853.
 Titian's First Essay in Colour. 1857.
 St. John leading home the Virgin. 1860.
 George Herbert at Bemerton. 1861.

DYCK, ANTHONIUS VAN, the eminent portrait painter, was born of good family at Antwerp, on the 22nd of March, 1599. He was the seventh child of a family of twelve; his father, Frans van Dyck, was a silk-merchant, and his mother, Maria Cuyppers, was famous as an amateur flower painter and an embroiderer. Van Dyck was apprenticed to Hendrik van Balen when he was but ten years old, and in 1615 entered the academy of the great painter Rubens, with whom he remained as a pupil till 1620, when he was engaged as his assistant. In 1618, Van Dyck was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp. In the beginning of 1621, he paid a short and unimportant visit to England, and worked in the service of James I., from whom he received £100 for special services. Towards the close of 1622 he was back in Antwerp; and in 1623, by the advice of Rubens, set out for Italy. After a short visit to Brussels, occasioned by his love for a peasant girl of Saventhem—for the church of which town he painted a 'Holy Family' and a 'St. Martin'—Van Dyck arrived in Italy, where he executed many important works. He stayed chiefly at Genoa, but also visited Rome, Venice, and Palermo. On his return, through Paris, to Antwerp in 1626, Van Dyck at once became famous as a painter both of historical subjects and of portraits. The chief historical works which he then executed were a 'Crucifixion' for the church of St. Michael at Ghent, and a 'St. Augustine' for the church of the Augustines at Antwerp. He was now loaded with commissions, and the principal public edifices at Antwerp, Brussels, Mechlin, and Ghent were embellished with the productions of his pencil. It was about this time that he painted the series of inimitable portraits of the eminent artists of his time, which have perhaps never been equalled for the admirable variety of attitudes, and the characteristic expression of the heads. They were engraved by the most eminent artists of the time, Vorsterman, Bolswert, Pontius, and others, and several of them were etched by Van Dyck himself.

In 1630 Van Dyck went from the Hague—whither he had been invited by the Prince of Orange—to London, but as he did not meet with the encouragement which he had been led to believe he should receive from the English monarch, he returned to Antwerp. Charles I., on seeing a portrait of his chapel-master, Nicholas Lanier, which Van Dyck had executed on his visit to England, discovered what a treasure he had lost, and early in 1632 despatched Sir Kenelm Digby to request the painter to return. Van Dyck was most graciously received by Charles, who gave him apartments at Blackfriars, where he was often honoured with a visit from the king, who frequently sat to him. He was styled 'Principal Painter of their Majesties at St. James's,' and on the 5th of July, 1632, he received the honour of knighthood. In the same month he received £280 for "diverse pictures by him made for his Majesty," and in the following year he was granted an annual salary of £200. From this time Van Dyck became the favourite painter in England: not only the monarch, and his wife and children, but all the court sat to him. He was wont to receive, Walpole tells us, £60 for a full-length, and £40 for a half-length portrait. "He was indefatigable," adds that author, "and, keeping a great table, often detained the persons who sat to him, for an opportunity of studying their countenances, and of retouching their pictures again in the afternoon." In the State Paper Office there is preserved a document which shows that Van Dyck charged Charles I. on an average about £50 for a portrait; but the prices were frequently reduced. He lived in a grand and almost regal manner, in the summer at Eltham, and in the winter at Blackfriars. In 1640 Van Dyck visited Antwerp, but he returned to England by way of Paris early in the following year.

Van Dyck died in Blackfriars, London, December 9, 1641. Two days afterwards he was buried in the old cathedral of St. Paul, near the tomb of John of Gaunt. He bequeathed to his wife, Mary Ruthven, a grand-daughter of William, first Earl of Gowrie, and to his daughter Justiniana, all his goods, effects, and moneys due to him in England from King Charles, the nobility, and all other persons whatever, to be equally divided between them. He also left other legacies to his executors, to his trustees, to his daughter, to his sisters, to his natural daughter Maria Theresa, to his servants, and to the poor of St. Paul's and St. Anne's, Blackfriars. Lady Van Dyck married, as her second husband, Sir Richard Pryse, Bart.

In the Museum of Antwerp the precious tables are still preserved in which the names of the Deans of the Corporation of Painters were successively inscribed from its foundation in 1454 until its extinction in 1778. Two names only in this long list are inscribed in capital letters—that of Rubens, under the date 1631, and that of Van Dyck, under the date 1634.

It is, perhaps, without example in the history of the art, that a painter, cut off in the vigour of his life, should have left such a multiplicity of works, the number of which is perhaps not exceeded by those of Rubens. If we cannot, in a general view, place him on an equality with Rubens as an historical painter, it will be allowed that he surpassed him in the correctness of his design, in the delicate expression of his heads, in the truth and purity of his colouring, and in the tender blending of his tones. If he had less boldness of conception, and less fecundity of invention, his compositions are regulated by judgment and propriety, and it may be reasonably presumed, that if, like his illustrious instructor, he had devoted himself to that branch, and had not been chiefly engaged in portrait-painting, he possessed the genius, as well as every other requisite, to have reached the highest rank among the painters of history.

In portraiture Van Dyck will not be denied the most honourable place after Titian, and it will even then be admitted that Titian is superior only in the heads of his portraits, but that in the hands and accessories he is inferior to Van Dyck, both in correctness and in elegance. Van Dyck's attitudes are easy and natural, and they captivate by an air of unaffected simplicity for which his portraits are singularly remarkable. His heads are full of life and expression, without anything of the coldness and insipidity which are frequently found in the productions of the portrait painter. The pictures which he painted in Italy have more of the Venetian colouring than those of a subsequent period; but some of those painted at Genoa are deficient in this respect. On his return to Antwerp he recurred to the Flemish mode, although he occasionally blended the two. The earlier portraits which he painted in England are brilliantly coloured and carefully finished in all their parts; but as business increased they were executed with more despatch, and much of the subordinate portion was left to be completed by his pupils or assistants, the head and the hands only being painted by the master. Besides the many admirable pictures which he painted of the king and the royal family, there are in England many fine portraits of distinguished personages, which are among the chief ornaments of the mansions of the nobility.

There were no less than seventy-two portraits of the English nobility by Van Dyck exhibited in the National Portrait Exhibition of 1866, and Smith, in his 'Catalogue Raisonné,' gives a list of upwards of nine hundred and fifty works by this painter. There are many unnamed portraits in the public galleries of Europe as well as in private collections which are not mentioned in the following list.

This distinguished painter occasionally occupied himself with the point, and has etched several plates, which are executed with a spirit and fire bordering on enthusiasm. They consist chiefly of portraits of the most eminent artists of his time, from his own designs, and are sometimes marked with this monogram:  Little attentive to the neatness or minuteness of his execution, his point is animated with a vigour and energy which are perhaps without example. The following are his principal works:

Christ crowned with Thorns; A. Van Dyck, inv.
 A Holy Family.
 A Bust of Seneca.

DYCK, DANIEL VAN DEN. See VAN DEN DYCK.

DYCK, HERMANN, a Bavarian painter, born at Würzburg in 1812, studied architectural and genre painting at Munich. His works are original and of great humour, and are neatly and carefully executed. The satirical designs for the 'Fliegende Blätter,' in reference to the rage for monuments, are incomparable. He was director of the Art Schools at Munich, where he died in 1874.

DYK, FLORIS VAN, (or DIJK,) a Dutch painter, was born probably in 1577. After residing some time in Italy, he entered the Guild at Haarlem in 1610, and became its dean in 1637. His death occurred probably in 1651. He executed historical pictures, but is better known as a painter of fruit and flowers, in which he excelled.

DYK, PHILIP VAN, (or DIJK,) called 'The Little Van Dyck,' a Dutch portrait painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1680. He was instructed by Arnold Boonen, and painted small portraits in the style of his master, but was more successfully employed in painting subjects similar to those of Mieris and Metsu, representing conversations, ladies at their toilets, and gallant assemblies. In 1710 he established himself at Middleburg, but was afterwards invited to the Hague, where he painted some of his best pictures. The reputation he had acquired recommended him to the notice of Prince William, afterwards Landgrave of Hesse, who not only engaged him to paint several pictures, but commissioned him to purchase the choicest works of art he could meet with in Holland and Flanders, for the rich collection he was then forming at Cassel. On his return to the Hague he painted the portraits of the Stadtholder and his family, as well as several pictures for the cabinet of that prince. He died at the Hague in 1752. The following works by him are in public galleries:

Berlin.	Gallery.	The Lute-player.
"	"	The Drawing Lesson.
Brussels.	Gallery.	A Young Woman at her toilet.
		1726.
Cassel.	Gallery.	The Landgrave Charles of Hesse and his Family.
		The Penitent Magdalen.
Hague.	Gallery.	Judith. 1726.
"	"	A Young Woman playing the lute.
"	"	A Young Woman at her toilet.
"	"	The Book-keeper.
Paris.	Louvre.	Sarah presenting Hagar to Abraham.
"	"	Abraham sending away Hagar and Ishmael.

DYXHOORN, PIETER ARNOUT, a Dutch marine painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1810. He was a scholar of M. Schouman and of J. C. Schotel, and painted marine subjects and river scenes in an able manner. He died at Rotterdam in 1839.

EARLE, AUGUSTUS, a painter of historical and marine subjects, who, on account of his roving disposition, was known as "the wandering artist," was the son of Ralph Earle, the American portrait painter, who married when studying in London, and left his wife and children here when he returned home. Augustus Earle was the intimate friend of Leslie and of Morse, and their fellow-student at the Royal Academy in 1813. Many years afterwards, Morse inquired of Leslie for their old companion Earle. "He had visited every part of the Mediterranean," said Leslie, "roamed in Africa—rambled in the United States—sketched in South America—attempted to go to the Cape of Good Hope in a worn-out Margate hoy, and was shipwrecked on Tristan d'Acunha, where he passed six months with some old tars who hutted there—at length a vessel touched the desolate place and released him. He then visited Van Diemen's Land, New South Wales, and New Zealand, where he drew from the naked figure, and saw the finest forms in the world addicted to cannibalism. Returning to Sydney, he, by way of variety, proceeded to the Caroline Islands—stopped at the Ladrões—looked in upon Manilla, and finally settled himself at Madras, and made money as a portrait painter. Not content, he went to Pondicherry, and there embarked for France, but stopped at the Mauritius, and after some few more calls at various places, found his way home." Besides a series of views in New South Wales, he published with illustrations in 1832, 'A Narrative of a nine months' residence in New Zealand, in 1827; together with a Journal of a residence in Tristan d'Acunha.' He exhibited at the Royal Academy between the years 1806 and 1815, and again in 1837 and 1838, after having accompanied Captain Fitzroy in the 'Beagle' to South America. The following were among his exhibited works:

The Judgment of Midas. 1806.

The Battle of Poitiers. 1803.

Banditti. 1811 and 1812.

A Man-of-war's Boats cutting out a French Barque. 1814.

View of the Harbour and Town of Calais. 1815.

Life on the Ocean. 1837.

Divine Service on board a Man-of-war. 1837.

A Bivouac of Travellers in Australia. 1838.

EARLE, JAMES, an American portrait painter, was probably a brother of Ralph Earle. He was a native of Leicester, Massachusetts, and died of yellow fever at Charleston in 1796.

EARLE, RALPH, an American portrait and historical painter, was born at Leicester, Massachusetts, in 1751. He painted in 1775 four scenes in the battle of Lexington, which are believed to be the first historical paintings ever executed by an American artist. After the peace he came over to England and studied under West, but he returned to America in 1786, and died at Bolton, Connecticut, in 1801. He was of intemperate habits, and left his wife and children in London when he returned to his native country. Among his works are a large picture of the 'Falls of Niagara,' and portraits of King George III., Dr. Dwight, President of Yale College, and Governor Strong.

EARLOM, RICHARD, a mezzotint engraver, was born in London in 1743. He was a pupil of Cipriani, and was the first artist who made use of the point in mezzotint work. He first engraved for Boydell, who in 1777 brought out the 'Liber Veritatis,' comprising two hundred plates, executed by Earlom in the style of the original drawings by Claude Lorrain, which are for the most part in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire. He is especially known for his groups of flowers after Van Huysum and Van Os. He also executed some etchings, as well as some plates in the chalk style. Earlom died in London in 1822. The following are his principal plates:

WILLIAM EARLOM, his son, who was evincing decided talent as an artist, was cut off in 1789, when only seventeen years of age.

EASTLAKE, Sir CHARLES LOCK, the youngest son of George Eastlake, solicitor to the Admiralty and Judge-Advocate at Plymouth, was born in that town, November 17, 1793. He was educated at the Plympton Grammar School, where Sir Joshua Reynolds had previously studied, and he was one of the first pupils of Prout, also a native of Plymouth, whom he occasionally accompanied on his excursions into the country to study nature. When fourteen years of age, he was sent to the Charterhouse School, London, but he left in 1808 in order to study art under Haydon, his fellow-townsmen. In 1809 he became a student in the Royal Academy Schools, and in 1814 visited Paris for a few months. In 1815, while Eastlake was employed painting portraits in his native town, Napoleon arrived there on board the 'Bellerophon,' and the young artist took advantage of every glimpse he could obtain of the ex-Emperor to make studies of him, by the aid of which he painted a life-size picture of Napoleon, standing at the gangway of the ship, attended by his officers. This work, which is now the property of the Marquis of Lansdowne, attracted great attention, and was so well sold as to enable the painter to visit Italy in 1817. He then, in 1819, proceeded to Greece, on a commission from Mr. Harman, his first patron, to make sketches of the architectural remains and the scenery of that classic soil. In some of these journeys he was accompanied by Brockedon, the painter, and Sir Charles Barry, the architect. On his return, after nearly a year's absence, and having visited Malta and Sicily in the course of his tour, Eastlake painted a life-size picture of 'Mercury bringing the Golden Apple to Paris.' Shortly after the death of his father, which had brought him back to England in 1820, he returned to Rome, and became much occupied in painting subjects illustrative of the local features, inhabitants, and customs of modern Italy. He resided in Italy altogether fourteen years, chiefly in Rome and in Ferrara. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1823, his earliest contributions being scenes in which public buildings, such as the Castle of St. Angelo, St. Peter's, &c., were a principal feature. These were followed by subjects taken from Italian life in the neighbourhood of Rome, subjects of banditti life, &c. Commissioned by the Duke of Devonshire, he painted, in 1827, a picture representing the story related by Plutarch of 'The Spartan Isidas,' who, appearing in battle naked, and armed with sword and spear, was mistaken for a god. This picture, consisting of numerous figures, and of medium gallery size, occupied the painter nearly two years, and produced considerable sensation amongst the artists and dilettanti at Rome. In England it was not so generally appreciated; but its merit was acknowledged by the Royal Academy, of which body he was elected an Associate in 1827, the year of its exhibition. About this time, captivated by Venetian colouring, he painted some subjects of half-figures, life-size, sometimes of chivalrous character, sometimes taken from the picturesque peasantry of Italy. He was, in 1830, elected a Royal Academician. In the same year he returned to England, and established himself in London. The subjects now treated by him were undertaken chiefly in order to turn to account his materials from the costume and scenery of modern Greece. He varied his studies at this time by portrait-painting, and by his favourite half-figures in the Venetian style. He also occasionally treated small fancy subjects, and historic and modern Italian subjects. But henceforth his time was devoted to the service of art, by advice and by writing, rather than by any practical work. He exhibited but five pictures at the Royal Academy after his election as president.

In the year 1841 Eastlake was appointed secretary to the Royal Commission for decorating the new Houses of Parliament and for the promotion of the Fine Arts, and he conducted the business of that commission until its dissolution after the death of its president, the Prince Consort. In 1842 he was made librarian of the Royal Academy, and in the following year he became keeper of the National Gallery, which office, however, he resigned in 1847. On the death of Sir Martin Shee, in 1850, he was elected president of the Royal Academy and received the customary honour of knighthood. He also became a trustee of the National Gallery, of which he was, in 1855, made director for a period of five years. This appointment was renewed in 1860, and again in 1865, and during his tenure of office he was instrumental in obtaining for the nation many of its greatest treasures.

His literary productions were all connected with art; he edited, in 1842, a translation of Kugler's 'Italian Schools of Painting' (subsequently re-edited by his widow); but his chief works were his 'Materials for a History of Oil-Painting' (1847), and 'Contributions to the Literature of the Fine Arts' (1848).

In August, 1865, Sir Charles Eastlake left England, exceedingly unwell, for his usual annual tour on the continent, taken with a view of acquiring further examples for the National Gallery. At Milan he became seriously ill, but rallying slightly, pushed on to Pisa, where he died December 24, 1865. He was buried first in the English cemetery at Florence, but was subsequently re-interred at Kensal Green. The following are some of his principal paintings:

- The Raising of Jairus's Daughter. (British Institution, 1813.)
- Brutus exhorting the Romans to revenge the Death of Lucretia. (British Institution, 1815.)
- An Italian Contadina and her Children. (British Institution, 1824: now in the South Kensington Museum.)
- Girl of Albano leading a Blind Man to Mass. 1825.
- Mercury bringing the Golden Apple to Paris. (British Institution, 1820.)
- Lord Byron's Dream. (Painted at Rome in 1827. Royal Academy, 1829: now in the National Gallery.)
- Pilgrims arriving in sight of Rome. (Royal Academy, 1828; repeated in 1835, and again in 1836.)
- Una delivering the Red Cross Knight. 1830.
- Haidee, a Greek Girl. (Royal Academy, 1831: now in the National Gallery.)
- A Peasant Woman fainting from the Bite of a Serpent. (Royal Academy, 1831: now in the South Kensington Museum.)
- Greek Fugitives. (Royal Academy, 1833.)
- Escape of the Carrara Family from the pursuit of the Duke of Milan, 1389. (Royal Academy, 1834: a replica, of the year 1850, is in the National Gallery.)
- An Arab selling his Captives, Monks endeavouring to ransom them. 1837.
- Gaston de Foix before the Battle of Ravenna. 1838.
- Christ blessing Little Children. (Royal Academy, 1840.)
- Christ lamenting over Jerusalem. (Royal Academy, 1841: a replica is in the National Gallery.)
- Hagar and Ishmael. (Royal Academy, 1843: his diploma picture.)

EATON, JOSEPH O., an American painter of portraits and figure subjects, both in oil and in water-colours, was born in 1829. He died at Yonkers on the Hudson in 1875. Among his exhibited works were:

- Landscape: View on the Hudson. 1868.
- Greek Water-Carrier. 1872.
- Lady Godiva. 1874.
- Looking through the Kaleidoscope. 1875.
- His own Portrait. 1875. (National Academy of Design.)

EBERHARD, KONRAD, a German historical painter, better known as a sculptor, was one of the foremost artists of the so-called Nazarene School, which at one time gathered round Overbeck in Rome. He was born in 1768 at Hindelang in Algau, where his father and grandfather were sculptors and carvers. The Elector of Trèves and Bishop of Augsburg, Clement Wenceslas, often had occasion to go to Hindelang, where he made the acquaintance of Eberhard, and induced him to visit the Academy of Munich in 1798 to work under his fellow-countryman Boos. In 1816 he was appointed professor of sculpture at the Academy. Several pictures by him exist, one of which, 'The Adoration of the Magi,' is especially beautiful. He died at Munich in 1859. In most of his works he was assisted by his elder brother, FRANZ EBERHARD, an excellent sculptor, who was born at Hindelang in 1767, and died of cholera at Munich in 1836.

EBERLE, ADAM, one of the earliest and most gifted pupils of Cornelius, was born at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1805. He studied painting at the Düsseldorf Academy, and afterwards went with Cornelius to Munich. After commencing his career at Düsseldorf by painting 'The Entombment of Christ,' and 'St. Helena with two Angels,' he executed the large fresco-painting on the ceiling of the Odéon, representing 'Apollo among the Shepherds.' In 1829 he went to Rome, where he died in 1832.

EBERLE, ROBERT, a German animal painter, was born at Meersburg in 1815. He was first instructed by Bidermann at Constance, and afterwards went to Munich, where he studied from nature and the works of Van de Velde and Du Jardin. He especially excelled in painting sheep, and there is a 'Shepherdess' by him in the Modern Gallery at Munich. He died, through the discharge of a pistol, at Eberfing, near Munich, in 1859.

EBERLEIN, CHRISTIAN NICOLAUS, a German historical painter, was born at Rudolstadt in 1720. He worked in Göttingen, Wolfenbüttel, and Salzdahlum, and in 1775 became inspector of the gallery in the last-named town, and made good copies of many of the pictures therein. He died at Salzdahlum in 1788. His son, CHRISTIAN EBERHARD EBERLEIN, who was also a painter, was born at Wolfenbüttel in 1749, and died at Göttingen in 1804.

EBERLEIN, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, was born at Göttingen about 1770, and died there in 1815. An 'Italian Landscape' by him is in the Modern Gallery at Munich.

EBERMAYER, JOHANN EBERHARD, a German historical painter, was born at Nuremberg in 1659. He studied under Johann Murrer, and afterwards at Venice. He died in his native city in 1692.

ECHTER, MICHAEL, a German historical and fresco-painter, was born in 1810. He studied under Kaulbach, whom he assisted in decorating the staircase of the New Museum at Berlin. He died at Munich in 1879.

ECKARD, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, an engraver, was born in 1757 at Lauffen on the Neckar, and after studying architecture for a while, placed himself under Guibat and J. G. von Müller in the line which he afterwards adopted. He engraved portraits and historical pictures, and worked for some time at Düsseldorf in the illustration of various works; but in 1809 he obtained an engagement at Munich as an engraver upon lithographic stones of crests and ornamental writing. He died at Munich after 1832.

ECKEMANN-ALESSON, LORENZ. See EKEMANN-ALESSON.

ECKERSBERG, CHRISTOFFER VILHELM, a Danish painter of historical and genre subjects, sea-pieces, and portraits, was born at Blaakrog, Varnäs, in South Jutland, in 1783. He studied first in Aabenraa and in Flensburg; and in 1803 entered the Academy at Copenhagen, where he won the gold medal in 1809 with his 'Death of Jacob.' In the following year he went to Paris and entered David's studio, and in 1813 he visited Rome. Returning to Copenhagen, he was elected in 1817 a member of the Academy, to which he presented 'The Death of Balder.' In the following year he became one of its professors, and devoted much care, with great success, to the improvement of the talents of rising artists. In 1827 he was made Director of the Academy. Between the years 1818 and 1828 he executed a series of historical pictures relating to the House of Oldenburg in the palace of Christiansborg. He died at Copenhagen in 1853. Amongst his works are:

ECKERSBERG, JOHAN FREDERIK, a landscape painter, was born at Drammen in Norway in 1822. He was placed in a mercantile office in Christiania at the age of eighteen, but having previously been in Holland for several years, and visited Amsterdam, he had there imbibed a taste for art, so that after two years, against his father's wish, he relinquished his post, and entered the technical drawing-school at Christiania. Rapidly developing his talent for painting, he in 1824 obtained one of the Government stipends for young artists, and went to Düsseldorf, where he studied landscape painting under Professor Schirmer. He returned to Christiania in 1848, where his works commanded a very fair sale. He married in 1850, but two years later he was obliged to visit Madeira for his health, where, having first devoted his time to portrait painting to increase his rather slender funds, he travelled over the island, making sketches, from which he afterwards painted his magnificent series of pictures of Madeira. He returned to Christiania in 1854, and in 1859 founded in that city an Academy of Painting, which was soon after taken under Government patronage. Every summer from the date of his return to Norway he visited the most grand and picturesque spots in his native country, making sketches from which he afterwards elaborated his pictures. Eckersberg died at Sandvigen, near Christiania, in 1870. His 'Grand Panoramic Scene from a Norwegian Plateau' was exhibited at the Paris Exhibition of 1867.

ECKERT, HEINRICH AMBROS, a German painter of battle-pieces, was born at Würzburg in 1807, and was at first instructed by Fessel. In 1825 he attended the Academy at Munich, and afterwards visited the Tyrol and France. Between 1835 and 1840, in conjunction with Monten and Schelver, he published a work upon the German federal army, with two hundred coloured lithographic plates; and another illustrating the return of the Russian troops to their homes. He died at Munich in 1840, while engaged upon a picture of the great review near that city before the Emperor of Russia. Besides genre subjects and battle-pieces he painted marine views.

ECKHARDT, GEORG LUDWIG, a German portrait painter, was born at Hamburg in 1770, and died in 1794. He was an artist of great promise, and wrote the 'Hamburgische Künstlernachrichten,' published in 1794.

ECKHARDT, JOHANN ÆGIDIUS, (or ECCARDT,) was a native of Germany, who visited England about the year 1740, and became a pupil of Jan Baptist van Loo. He was much employed as a portrait painter, about the time that Sir Joshua Reynolds returned from Italy. There is a print of Peg Woffington, the actress, engraved by Faber, and another of Dr. Conyers Middleton, engraved by the same artist, from pictures by this painter. He died at Chelsea in 1779.

ECKMAN, EDUARD, a Flemish wood-engraver, was born at Mechlin about the year 1610. He engraved some wood-cuts, which are admired for the neatness of their execution and the correct drawing of the small figures. He appears to have taken the prints of Callot for his model, and has copied some of them in wood-cuts with surprising delicacy and spirit, particularly the plate of the 'Fireworks on the River Arno.' He also engraved after Businck and Abraham Bosse. The work of Eckman consists of upwards of a hundred prints.

ECKSTEIN, JOHANN, a German modeller and painter, lived in the 18th century, and studied at the Royal Academy in London, where he spent the greater part of his life. He stayed some time at Potsdam, and was practising in Birmingham in 1792. In 1796 he painted 'The Soldier's Return,' and a 'Family Gathering.' The Berlin Museum has two beautiful reliefs, signed J. E., which are said to be by this artist. He died in London in, or soon after, the year 1798.

ECKSTEYN, GEORG DAVID, a German engraver, resided at Nuremberg about the year 1721. He engraved some of the portraits for the 'Icones Bibliopolarum et Typographorum,' published by Roth-Scholtz at Nuremberg in 1726-42.

ECLECTICS. A name given to the Carracci Family.

ECMAN, JEAN, a French miniature painter, was born about 1641. He was received into the Academy in 1675, and died in Paris in 1677.

EDDELIEN, MATTHIAS HEINRICH ELIAS, was born at Greifswalde in 1803, and in 1819 went as a journeyman painter to Copenhagen, where he attended the Academy, and executed works in grisaille for Christiansborg. In 1837 he won the large gold medal for his picture of 'David amusing Saul by playing on the Harp,' and afterwards obtained a travelling allowance for a competitive painting of 'Christ making Himself known to His Disciples.' In 1839 he went to Rome, and while there painted for the church at Kronborg 'Christ blessing Little Children.' After his return he executed his chef-d'œuvre, consisting of the frescoes in the chapel of Christian IV., in the cathedral of Røskilde; but becoming paralysed he was unable to complete them. He died in 1852. There is in the Copenhagen Gallery a 'Faun plucking Grapes,' dated 1830.

EDELINCK, GASPARD FRANÇOIS, the youngest brother of Gérard Edelinck, was born at Antwerp in 1652. He was instructed by his brothers, Gérard and Jean, but did not long pursue the art of engraving. He died in Paris in 1722, leaving behind him no work of note, except the plate of 'The Deluge,' after Alessandro Veronese, which had been commenced by his brother Jean, and was finished by him under the direction of Gérard Edelinck.

EDELINCK, GÉRARD, a French engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1640, and received his instruction from Cornelis Galle. In 1666 he went to Paris, where he entered the studio of François de Poilly, and was taken into the service of Louis XIV., who settled a pension on him, with apartments at the Gobelins. In 1675 he received letters of naturalization, and in 1677 he was received into the Academy, and was soon after knighted by the King. He worked entirely with the graver; and his execution is at the same time both bold and finished. His style is more delicate than that of Bolswert and Pontius, without being less picturesque. His plates, though exquisitely finished, display nothing of labour or littleness. The size and the number of his prints evince the most surprising facility. The pictures of Le Brun, under the graver of Edelinck and Gérard Audran, appear to have been the works of an accomplished colourist, and assume qualities in which they were really deficient. Edelinck died in Paris in 1707. Robert-Dumesnil, in his 'Peintre-Graveur Français,' vii. 169—336, describes 339 engravings by him, of which 200 are portraits: the following are his principal works.

PORTRAITS.

Louis XIV., bust on a pedestal; after J. B. Corneille.

 Charles Le Brun; after N. de Largillière.
 Philippe de Champaigne; after a picture by himself; very fine.
 Charles d'Hozier, Genealogist of France; after Rigaud.
 Frédéric Léonard, Printer to the King; after the same.
 Jean Charles Parent; after Tortebat.
 Madame Helyot, with a crucifix; after Galliot.
 François Michel Le Tellier, Marquis de Louvois, bust, with Mars and Minerva as supporters; after Le Brun.
 André Hameau, Doctor of the Sorbonne; after Vivien.
 Nicolas de Blampignon, Doctor of the Sorbonne; after the same.
 Jean Rouillé, Count of Meslay; after Nanteuil.
 Charles Mouton, Musician to Louis XIV.; after De Troy.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Holy Family, with St. Joseph, St. Elizabeth, St. John, and two Angels; after the picture by Raphael in the Louvre, presented to Francis I. by Pope Leo X.; very fine. The first impressions are before the arms of Colbert, the second are with the arms, and the third have the arms effaced, while the frame in which they were inserted remains.
 The Virgin Mary sewing, with the Infant sleeping in a Cradle, surrounded by Angels, called 'La Couseuse'; after Guido; fine.
 The Holy Family, with St. Joseph presenting Flowers to the Infant Jesus; after C. Maratti.
 The Holy Family, called the 'Benedicite'; after Le Brun.
 A Female Saint, holding a Lily, and kneeling before the Virgin and Infant seated on a Throne, to whom she presents a Book; after Pietro da Cortona.
 The Penitent Magdalen renouncing the Vanities of the World; after the picture by Le Brun, now in the Louvre at Paris. The portrait is that of Madame de La Vallière. The first impressions are without the inscription, and are very scarce; the next best are without the border.
 St. Louis prostrating himself before a Crucifix; after Le Brun.
 St. Charles Borromeo kneeling; after the same.
 The Crucifixion, surrounded with Angels; on two sheets; after the same.
 Moses holding the tables of the Law; after Philippe de Champaigne; commenced by Nanteuil, and finished after his death by Edelinck.
 Christ and the Woman of Samaria; after the same.
 The Virgin at the foot of the Cross; after the same.
 St. Jerome; after the same.
 St. Ambrose; half-length; after J. B. de Champaigne.
 St. Basil and St. Gregory; half-length; after the same.
 A Combat of Cavalry, four Horsemen fighting for a Standard, with three dead Figures on the ground; after the celebrated cartoon by Leonardo da Vinci.
 Alexander, accompanied by Hephaestion, entering the Tent of Darius; on two sheets; after Le Brun. The first impressions have the name of Goyton at the bottom. This print completes the set of the 'Battles of Alexander' engraved by Gérard Audran after Le Brun.
 Alexander entering the Tent of Darius; after Mignard; Edelinck's last work, finished after his death by P. Drevet.

EDELINCK, JEAN, a brother of Gérard Edelinck, and probably younger than the latter, was born at Antwerp, but in what year is not known. He preceded his brother to Paris, and there engraved several plates in imitation of his style. Although very unequal to the works of his brother, his prints are not without considerable merit. He died in Paris in 1680. He engraved several of the statues in the gardens at Versailles, and there are also by him:

The Portrait of Isbrandus de Diemerbroeck, a famous anatomist; after Romeyn De Hooghe.
 The Deluge; after Alessandro Turchi. This plate was finished after his death by his youngest brother, Gaspard François Edelinck.

EDELINCK, NICOLAS, the son of Gérard Edelinck, was born in Paris about 1680. Although he had the advantage of his father's instruction, and of studying in Italy, he never rose above mediocrity. He engraved some portraits, and a few plates for the Crozat Collection. He died in Paris in 1730. Among other prints by him are the following :

Gérard Edelinck; after Tortebat.
Cardinal Giulio de' Medici; after Raphael.
Count Baldassare Castiglione; after the same.
Philip, Duke of Orleans, Regent of France, on horseback; after J. Ranc.
Adrien Baillet.
John Dryden; after Kneller.
The Virgin and Infant; after Correggio.
Vertumnus and Pomona; after J. Ranc.

EDEMA, GERARD, was born in Friesland (or according to others, at Amsterdam), in 1652. He was a scholar of Allart van Everdingen, and, like his master, painted landscapes with rocks and waterfalls, chiefly from views in Norway. At the age of eighteen he came to England, where he met with encouragement, and made voyages to Norway and Newfoundland, to collect subjects for his pictures among those wild scenes of nature, for which he had a romantic predilection. The figures in his landscapes are generally painted by Th. Wyck. Although the pictures by Edema are painted with spirit, they possess little of the chaste and simple colouring, and the picturesque touch, which distinguish the landscapes of Van Everdingen. He died at Richmond in 1700. At Hampton Court are a 'River Scene' and a 'Landscape' by him.

EDEMA, NICOLAES, born in Friesland in 1666, went to Surinam to paint the landscapes, plants, and insects of that country. He became a good landscape painter, as his views are after nature, with a good tone of colour, and a spirited touch. He died in London in 1722.

EDENBERGER, J. N., a German miniature painter, was a native of Baden-Durlach. He possessed considerable talent, and was living in 1773 at the Hague, whence he came to England, but returned thither in 1776.

EDLINGER, JOHANN GEORG, a portrait painter, was born at Graz in 1741. He was a pupil of Desmarées, and became court painter at Munich, where he died in 1819. His portraits are well painted, and show a leaning towards the works of Rembrandt. Some of his portraits of eminent Bavarians, engraved by Friedrich John, appeared in 1821 under the title 'Sammlung von Bildnissen denkwürdiger Männer.'

EDLINGER, KARL FRANZ, a Saxon painter, was born at Dresden in 1785, and died there in 1823. He painted portraits, especially miniatures, but only one historical picture by him is known, 'Ariadne in Naxos.' His son, JOHANN MORITZ ELLINGER, who was born at Dresden in 1823, and died in 1847, was a portrait painter and etcher.

EDMONDS, JOHN W., an American painter of genre subjects, was born at Hudson, New York, in 1806. Engaged during the greater part of his life as a cashier in a bank, he devoted his mornings and evenings to painting; but this constant toil weakened his health so much that in 1840 he came to Europe for rest. He first exhibited at the New York Academy in 1836, under an assumed name, 'Sammy the Tailor.' This was followed, among other works, by 'Dominie Sampson' in 1837, the 'Penny Paper' in 1839, 'Sparking' in 1840, 'Stealing Milk' in 1843, 'Vesuvius' and 'Florence' in 1844, 'Bargaining' in 1858, and 'The New Bonnet' in 1859. In 1838 he was elected an Associate of the National Academy, and in 1840 an Academician. He died at his residence on the Bronx River in 1863.

EDMONSTONE, ROBERT, a Scottish subject painter, was born at Kelso in 1795. He pursued the study of art under many difficulties, but at last became a student in the Royal Academy, London, where he first exhibited in 1818. He then went to the continent, and studied for a few years in Italy. Returning, he practised portrait painting in London from about 1824 to 1831, when he paid a second visit to Italy. He died at his native place in 1834, from the effects of fever contracted at Rome. His forte lay in works in which he introduced children. Amongst the pictures he exhibited were :

Italian Boys playing at Cards. 1830.
Venetian Water-Carriers. 1833.
Kissing the chains of St. Peter
The White Mouse. (His last work.)

EDRIDGE, HENRY, a miniature painter, was born at Paddington in 1769. He was apprenticed to Pether, the mezzotint engraver and landscape painter, but his chief excellence lay in miniature portraits, which he executed in black lead and Indian ink, and subsequently in water-colours. In 1786 he exhibited at the Academy 'The Weary Traveller,' and in 1803 portraits of King George III. and Queen Charlotte. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1820, and died in London in 1821. The following are among his works :

National Portrait Gallery :
Marquis of Anglesey. 1808.
Lord Auckland. 1809.
Robert Southey. 1804.

National Gallery of Scotland :
Coast Scene, with Figures.

South Kensington Museum :
Chenies House, near Brambletye.
Rick Yard, Ashford.
Farm-House, Buckinghamshire. 1814.
View near Bromley.
Brighton Beach.
Pont Neuf, Paris.
Portrait of a Military Officer.

EDWARDS, EDWARD, an historical painter, born in London in 1738, was employed by Boydell to make drawings from the old masters for his publications, and by the Society of Antiquaries for the same purpose. He painted for Boydell's Shakespeare a subject from the 'Two Gentlemen of Verona;' he painted also arabesques, and published 52 etchings. He never arrived at distinction, except that he was appointed teacher of perspective in the Royal Academy in 1788, which situation he held until his death. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1773, and sent pictures to its exhibitions pretty constantly from 1771 till the end of his life. He published in 1808 the 'Anecdotes of Painters,' intended as a supplement to Walpole; but in his facts he was too accurate to please his contemporaries, and consequently the work and its author were much decried. He died in 1806. A water-colour drawing by him, entitled 'North Dean, Castle Eden, Durham,' is in the South Kensington Museum.

EDWARDS, EDWIN, a landscape painter in water-colours and an etcher, was born at Framlingham in 1823. He was originally brought up for the law and practised as a proctor for many years. He commenced water-colour painting after a journey in the Tyrol, and through meeting the French artist Legros, in 1861, was induced to take up etching, on which his reputation chiefly rests. His works appeared at the Royal Academy, and at the Dudley Gallery. Amongst his best productions may be cited a series of etchings of English Inns. He died in London in 1879.

EDWARDS, GEORGE, a natural history draughtsman, was born at Stratford, in Essex, in 1694. From 1716 to 1731 he travelled much in Holland, Norway, Belgium, and France in pursuit of his art. In 1733 he was appointed librarian to the College of Physicians. In 1747-51 he published 'A Natural History of uncommon Birds and Animals,' and in 1758-64 'Gleanings of Natural History.' He retired to Plaistow, where he died in 1773.

EDWARDS, SYDENHAM, a draughtsman of animals and flowers, was born about 1768. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1792 to 1813. He published 'Cynographia Britannica,' 1800, the 'New Flora Britannica,' 1812, and founded the 'Botanical Register' in 1815. He also made drawings for Rees's 'Cyclopædia,' the 'Flora Londinensis,' the 'Botanical Magazine,' and the 'Sportsman's Magazine.' He died at Brompton in 1819.

EDWIN, DAVID, an American engraver, was born at Bath, in England, in 1776. He was the son of John Edwin, a celebrated comic actor, and was apprenticed to an engraver, but he ran away to sea, and reached America in 1797. There he was employed by Edward Savage, the portrait painter, and soon gained much reputation by his portraits. After twenty years' work his sight failed, and he was compelled to resort to various means in order to obtain a livelihood. He died at Philadelphia in 1841.

ECKHOUT, JACOB JOSEPH, was born at Antwerp in 1793, and studied first at the Academy of that city. He painted historical and genre subjects, and portraits, and in 1829 he was elected a member of the Academies of Amsterdam, Antwerp, Brussels, and Rotterdam. He settled at the Hague in 1831, and in 1839 became director of the Academy in that city, and after staying at Mechlin and Brussels he went to live in Paris in 1859. He imitated Rembrandt with some skill, and may be considered one of the most distinguished painters of the modern Dutch school. His compositions are expressive and lively, and the colouring vigorous. Eckhout died in Paris in 1861. His best works are:

The Death of William the Silent.

Peter the Great at Zaandam.

The Departure of the Recruits of Scheveningen.

Collection de Portraits d'Artistes modernes, nés dans le royaume des Pays-Bas. 1822.

ECKHOUT, VAN DEN. See VAN DEN ECKHOUT.

ECKHOUT, VICTOR, a genre painter, the son of Jacob Joseph Eckhout, was born at Antwerp in 1821. He studied under his father, and went to the East. He died in 1879.

EELKAMA, EELKE JELLES, a painter of landscapes, flowers, and fruit, was born at Leeuwarden in 1788. On account of his deafness, which was brought on by an illness at the age of seven, he was educated in the institution for the deaf and dumb at Gröningen, where he was instructed in the art of painting by G. De San. In 1804, he obtained the first prize of the Academy, and his works were highly praised. He visited Paris and London, travelled in France and Switzerland, and afterwards painted at Haarlem and Amsterdam. He afterwards lost his sight, and died at Leeuwarden in 1839.

EERVRUGHT. See DE MOMPER, JODOCUS.

EGAN, JAMES, an Irish mezzotint engraver, was born at Roscommon in 1799. He was employed in the lowest capacities by S. W. Reynolds, and, notwithstanding great difficulties and privations, persevered in the pursuit of his art. He died in London in 1842. His last and best plate is after Cattermole's 'English Hospitality in the Olden Time.'

EGERTON, D. T., a landscape painter, was one of the original members of the Society of British Artists, where he exhibited in the years 1824 to 1829, and in 1838 to 1840. In the latter years of his life he travelled much in America, obtaining thus the subjects for several pictures, notably one of 'Niagara.' He was murdered in Mexico in 1842.

EGG, AUGUSTUS LEOPOLD, the son of the eminent gunmaker of Piccadilly, was born in London in 1816. Though he took to the pencil and brush whilst at school, he does not appear to have thought of adopting the arts as a profession till about the year 1834, when he went to Sass's Art School, and shortly afterwards, in 1835, he was admitted a student at the Royal Academy. Even thus early he had commenced painting pictures of Italian subjects, though a stranger to Italy, as well as scenes from the pages of Scott; but his first work of importance was 'The Victim,' from 'Le Diable Boiteux' of Le Sage, which was exhibited at the Liverpool Academy of Arts. To this he afterwards, in 1844, painted a companion picture. Egg then exhibited in London, and in 1836, and the following years, we find his works on the walls of the Society of British Artists, the British Institution, and the Royal Academy; but owing to his having inherited a considerable fortune from his father, he was independent of his art for support, and accordingly did not exhibit, as a rule, more than one work each year at the Royal Academy, to the exhibitions of which he sent, in all, twenty-eight pictures. Of these, seven are taken from Shakespeare, five are founded on scenes in well-known works of fiction, and of the remainder nine are from familiar incidents in history. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1848, and an Academician in 1860. His pictures are comparatively few for one who had won the highest honours of his profession, but he was prevented from doing more in his art by delicate health, which compelled him to resort to the mild climate of Italy and the South of France, and latterly to Algiers, where he died and was buried in 1863.

Egg's talent was exercised in a rather peculiar field of study, comprising strictly historical incidents, and passages from classic fable. In the former class of subjects he stands quite alone; in the latter, he, in some sense, occupied the same ground as that in which Newton and Leslie frequently laboured; but his treatment of the latter class of subjects is more fanciful than that of either of those artists, whilst in subjects more properly considered as inventive, a philosophic spirit, somewhat melancholy in tinge, is observable, which they do not display. His principal works are:

A Spanish Girl. 1838.

Laugh when you can. 1839.

Scene from "Henry IV." 1840.

Scene from "Le Diable Boiteux." 1844. (National Gallery.)

Buckingham rebuffed. 1846.
 The Wooing of Katharina. ("Taming of the Shrew.") 1847.
 Lucentio and Bianca. ("Taming of the Shrew.") 1847.
 Queen Elizabeth discovers she is no longer young. 1848.
 Henrietta Maria in distress relieved by Cardinal de Retz. 1849.
 Peter the Great sees Catharine, his future Empress, for the first time. 1850.
 Pepys's Introduction to Nell Gwynne. 1851.
 The Life and Death of Buckingham. (Two pictures.) 1855.
 The Knighting of Esmond. 1858.
 Past and Present. (Three pictures.) 1858.
 The Night before Naseby. 1859.
 Madame de Maintenon and Scarron. 1859.
 The Taming of the Shrew: Dinner scene: Katharina and Petruchio. (His last picture.) 1860.

EGGERS, JOHANN KARL, a German historical painter, born at Neu Strelitz in 1790, was instructed by Matthäi at Dresden. He discovered the old mode of fresco-painting, and was employed in the Vatican at Rome, where he painted in the Braccio Nuovo. Subsequently he painted under the direction of Cornelius in the Museum at Berlin. Some of his oil-paintings are of considerable merit. He died in his native town in 1863.

EGGERT, FRANZ XAVER, a German painter upon glass, was born at Höchstädt on the Danube in 1802, and studied decorative painting at Augsburg and Munich; but he afterwards devoted himself entirely to glass-painting, in conjunction with Ainmüller, Hämmerl, and Kirchmair, and endeavoured to raise that art from its long decline. He especially distinguished himself by the magnificence of his ornamentation. His best works are in the new church of the suburb Au at Munich, in the cathedrals of Cologne and Ratisbon, and in several churches at Basle, Constance, &c. He died at Munich in 1876.

EGINTON, FRANCIS, an English painter upon glass, was born in 1737. He was brought up at Handsworth, near Birmingham, and from 1784 to 1805 he contributed greatly to the advancement of the art. Among his best works are to be noted the 'Resurrection' in Salisbury Cathedral and in Lichfield Cathedral; the 'Conversion of St. Paul' in St. Paul's, Birmingham; 'Christ bearing the Cross' in Wanstead Church; and 'Solomon and the Queen of Sheba' at Arundel Castle. Besides these there are windows by him in St. Asaph Cathedral, Fonthill Abbey, and Magdalen and All Souls' Colleges in Oxford. He died at Handsworth in 1805.

EGLEY, WILLIAM, a miniature painter, was born at Doncaster in 1798. His first employment was in a publisher's office in London, in the course of which occupation he found time to practise painting, of which he had been fond from an early age. After a short time he determined to follow portrait painting as a profession, and in 1824 two of his pictures were exhibited at the Royal Academy, one of them being the portrait of Yates, the actor. From this time he was a very constant exhibitor, painting a great many portraits of members of well-known English families, besides several foreigners of distinction. One of his latest works was a portrait of Foley the sculptor, which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1868. His death occurred in London in 1870. His miniatures were very carefully finished and pure in colour; and he was especially successful in his treatment of children.

EGLOFFSTEIN, JULIE VON, Countess, canoness of Hildesheim, born in 1792, was an amateur artist of much ability. She was one of the most beautiful and gifted women at the court of Weimar, and many of Goethe's poems bear witness to the lively interest which he took in her artistic development. She painted several portraits, including those of the Grand-Duchess of Saxe-Weimar and of Queen Theresa of Bavaria. Among works of different character are 'Shepherds in the Roman Campagna,' painted in 1835, 'Hagar in the Wilderness,' 'The Exposure of Moses,' 'Italian Popular Life,' and others, some of which are in the possession of the Emperor of Russia and of Queen Victoria. She died in 1869.

EGMONT, JUSTUS VAN, was born at Leyden in 1602. He was in 1615 a pupil of Gaspar van den Hoeck, but was afterwards sent to Antwerp to be educated in the school of Rubens, whom he assisted in several of his works, particularly those relating to the life of Mary de' Medici, which he painted for the Luxembourg Palace. On leaving the academy of Rubens he went to Paris, where he was appointed painter to Louis XIII. and afterwards to Louis XIV., and executed several considerable works in conjunction with Simon Vouet. Van Egmont was one of the twelve elders at the establishment of the French Academy of Painting and Sculpture, in 1648. He died at Antwerp in 1674. In the Vienna Gallery there is a portrait by him of the Archduke Leopold Wilhelm, and two others of Philip IV. of Spain. The Hague Gallery has a portrait of Louis XIV. by him. Portraits of Algernon Sydney by him are in the National Portrait Gallery, and at Penshurst, the latter painted at Brussels in 1663.

EGOGNI, AMBROGIO. See STEFANI DA FOSSANO.

EGOROV, ALEKSEYI EGOROVICH, a Russian painter, was born in the steppes of the Kalmyks about 1776, and died at St. Petersburg in 1851. A 'Holy Family' and the 'Scourging of Christ' by him are in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg.

EHEMANT, FRIEDRICH JOSEPH, a German landscape painter, was born at Frankfurt in 1804, and studied under Schirmer at the Düsseldorf Academy. He died at Munich in 1842.

EHNLE, ADRIAEN JAN, a Dutch painter of historical and genre subjects, was born at the Hague in 1819, and studied under C. Kruseman. He died in 1863. Among his works are 'Cornelis de Witt at Dordrecht' and 'The Reception of a Child at the Orphan House at Haarlem.'

EHRENBERG, WILLEM SCHUBERT VAN, a Flemish architectural painter, was born at Antwerp in 1630. He was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1662, under the name of Van Aerdenberch. It has also been written Hardenberg, Eerdenborch, Aerdenborch, Aremerberch, &c. He probably died about 1675. He painted the architecture in a picture by H. van Minderhout, representing 'Caricina before the King of Ethiopia,' which was presented by Van Ehrenberg in 1666 to the Guild of St. Luke, and is now in the Antwerp Museum, and in another by Biset, of 'William Tell,' formerly in the possession of the Guild of St. Sebastian at Antwerp, but now in the Brussels Gallery. The landscape part is by Hemelraet. In the Munich Gallery is an 'Interior of an Art-Collector's Gallery,' in which the architecture is by Van Ehrenberg, the figures by Gonzales Cooc and Jordaens, and in the Vienna Gallery is the 'Interior of a Church' by him, dated 1664. Van Ehrenberg added the architecture to the large picture in the Hague Gallery of the 'Interior of a Picture Gallery,' in which Gonzales Coex put the figures and accessories, and the paintings are by the hands of various artists.

EHRENSTRAL, DAVID KLOECKER VON. See KLOECKER.

EHRET, GEORG DIONYSIUS, a German botanical draughtsman and engraver, was born at Baden in 1710. After working for Jussieu in France, he settled in England in 1740, and supplied the illustrations for Trew's 'Plantæ Selectæ,' and Brown's 'History of Jamaica.' He also painted a large botanical collection for the Duchess of Portland. He died in 1770.

EIBNER, FRIEDRICH, a German painter of architectural subjects, was born at Hilpoltstein in 1826. He studied after the works of Heinrich Schönfeld, and travelled in Bavaria, and afterwards in Germany, France, Upper Italy, and Spain, making a large number of water-colour drawings of the places he visited. The Album for the Prince Metschersky, with whom he travelled in Spain in 1860-61, may be considered his best work. He died at Munich in 1877.

EICHENS, FRIEDRICH EDUARD, a German engraver, was born at Berlin in 1804. He studied engraving first under Buchhorn; and then went, in 1827, with a grant from the government, to Paris, where he received instruction from Forster, and later to Parma, where he studied for three years under Toschi. He subsequently visited Florence, Rome, Naples, Venice, and Milan. On his return in 1833 he became a drawing-master in a government school. He died at Berlin in 1877. Eichens engraved some of Kaulbach's frescoes in the Berlin Museum, and also his 'Shakespeare Gallery.' Among his prints are the following:

Madonna; after Steinbrück. 1833.
Adoration of the Kings; after Raphael. 1836.
The Magdalen; after Domenichino. 1837.
Madonna; after Raffaellino del Garbo. 1839.
Portrait of Mendelssohn; after Hildebrandt. 1840.
The Vision of Ezechiel; after Raphael. 1841.
Frederick the Great as Crown Prince; after Pesne. 1846.
'Come here'; after Begas. 1847.
The Woman taken in adultery; after Pordenone.

EICHHORN, ALBERT, an architectural and landscape painter, was born at Freienwalde-on-the-Oder in 1811, and studied under Tempeltei and Biermann at Berlin. In 1840 he visited Italy and Greece, where he made numerous sketches, which afterwards served him for the subjects of his paintings. Among his works, which are chiefly in the possession of the German Emperor, may be mentioned, 'Taygetus,' 'The Temple of Pheigalia,' 'St. Peter's at Rome,' 'The Temple of Corinth,' 'The Campagna,' &c. He died by suicide at Potsdam in 1851.

EICHHORN, HANS, a printer and wood-engraver of the 16th century, was employed by the Elector Joachim II. He died at Frankfort in 1583.

EICHLER, GOTTFRIED, an historical and portrait painter, was born at Augsburg in 1677. He studied under Johann Heiss, but went afterwards to Rome to improve under Carlo Maratti. His 'Last Supper,' in the church of the Franciscans at Augsburg, gives ample proof of his talent. He died in 1759.

His son, JOHANN GOTTFRIED EICHLER, born at Augsburg in 1715, was a portrait painter and engraver in line and mezzotint. He died in 1770, leaving a son, MATHIAS GOTTFRIED EICHLER, also an engraver, who was born at Erlangen in 1748, and died at Augsburg in 1818.

EICK, MARTIN VAN, a Dutch painter, was a native of Remerswaal in Zeeland. He flourished during the first half of the 16th century, and was a contemporary of Pieter Aartsen.

EIGNER, ANDREAS, who was born at Diedldorf, Upper Palatinate, in 1801, distinguished himself as a painter and a restorer of old pictures. He successfully employed alcoholic vapours, and a varnish of his own invention, to protect paintings against the destructive influence of the atmosphere. He was chiefly employed in the Galleries of Munich, Augsburg, Stuttgart, Carlsruhe, Basle, and Solothurn. He died at Augsburg in 1870.

EIMBECK, JOHANN RAPHEON VON, was an early German painter, about whom we have no details. There is by him in the cathedral of Halberstadt a triptych, representing the 'Crucifixion,' dated 1508.

EIMMART, GEORG CHRISTOPH, the elder, a German painter and engraver, born at Ratisbon in 1597, painted portraits, landscapes, still-life, and historical subjects. He died at Nuremberg in 1660.

EIMMART, GEORG CHRISTOPH, the younger, a German draughtsman and engraver, was born at Ratisbon in 1638. He was instructed by his father, and resided at Nuremberg, where he died in 1705. He engraved some plates for Sandrart's 'Academia,' and some small etchings of ruins, buildings, and vases, ornamented with figures, which have considerable merit. He was also a mathematician and astronomer, and published in 1701 'Iconographia nova contemplationum de Sole.'

EIMMART, MARIA CLARA, a daughter of Georg Christoph Eimmart the younger, was a designer and engraver. She was born in 1676, and usually worked with her father. She married the astronomer, J. H. Muller, and died at Altdorf in 1707.

EINSLE, ANTON, an Austrian portrait painter, was born at Vienna in 1801. He studied at the Academy of that city, and was largely patronized by the court and nobility. He died in 1871.

EISEN, CHARLES DOMINIQUE JOSEPH, the son and pupil of Frans Eisen, was born at Valenciennes in 1720. In 1741 he went to Paris, and in the following year entered the studio of Le Bas. His talent and his sparkling wit gained him admission to the court, where he became painter and draftsman to the King, and drawing-master to Madame de Pompadour. He afterwards fell into disgrace, and in 1777 retired to Brussels, where he died in poverty in 1778. His pictures are not without merit, but it is as a designer of illustrations and vignettes for books that he is best known. The most remarkable of these are the designs for the 'Fermiers généraux' edition of the 'Contes' of La Fontaine, published at Amsterdam in 1762; Ovid's 'Metamorphoses,' 1767-71; the 'Henriade' of Voltaire, 1770; the 'Baisers' of Dorat, 1770; and the 'Vies des Peintres hollandais et flamands' of Descamps, published in 1751-63. He etched some few plates of the Virgin, a 'St. Jerome,' 'St. Ely preaching,' &c. There are pictures by him in the Museums of Bordeaux, Alençon, and Bourg.

EISEN, FRANS, an engraver, as well as a painter of historical and genre subjects, was born at Brussels about 1685. When twenty years of age he went to Valenciennes, and remained there, painting many pictures for its churches and monastic institutions, until 1745, in which year he removed to Paris. At the age of ninety he, with his wife, was admitted into the Hospital for Incurables, where he was still living in 1778. There are two of his works in the Museum of Valenciennes, a 'Vision of St. Mary Magdalen,' and an 'Astrologer.' He etched a plate from the picture by Rubens of 'Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter,' which was in the church of St. Gudule at Brussels.

EISENHOUT, ANTONIE, a Dutch painter and engraver, flourished at Rome about 1590. He was a native of Varnbourg, and was still living in 1619. It appears that he has been miscalled 'Eisenhart' by Christ, and that some of his works have been ascribed to other masters. Brulliot refers to some attributed to Luca Ciamberlano by Bartsch, which he conjectures should be given to Eisenhout.

EISMANN, JOHANN ANTON, sometimes erroneously called LEISMANN, LISMAN, or LUISMON, a German painter of landscapes and battles, was born at Salzburg in 1634. Without the help of a master he had acquired some ability in drawing, by copying the prints and pictures to which he had access, when he resolved to visit Italy for improvement, and went to Venice, where his natural talent, assisted by the study of the works of the best masters of that school, soon asserted itself. Although he painted battle-pieces and portraits, he was more celebrated for his landscapes and seaports, which he embellished with architecture, somewhat in the style of Salvator Rosa. He died at Venice in 1698. There are in the Dresden Gallery two 'Landscapes with Ruins,' which are by him, and in the Vienna Gallery is a 'Landscape with a Combat of Cavalry.' He adopted his pupil, Carlo Briseghella, who took the name of Eismann, and painted the same class of subjects as his master. Hence there is some confusion in the accounts of both.

EISMANN BRISEGHIELLA, CARLO, born at Venice in 1679, the pupil and adopted son of Johann Anton Eismann—who at Venice had formed a friendship with his father, Mattia Briseghella—painted landscapes, sea-pieces, and battles in the style of his master. The Dresden Gallery contains three cavalry fights and a battle-piece by him. After the death of Eismann he appears to have settled at Ferrara. He published in 1706 an account of the paintings in the churches of that city.

EISSNER, JOSEPH, an Austrian engraver, was born at Vienna in 1788. He studied under Schmutzer and afterwards under Leybold, and practised on his own account from 1814. From 1822 he was drawing-master at the Academy in the Neustadt at Vienna, where he died in 1861. He etched a number of plates, and engraved, along with other historical subjects and portraits, the following works:

La Madonna della Sedia; after Raphael.
The Praying Madonna; after Sassoferrato.
Rembrandt's Mother; after Rembrandt.
The Fall of the Angels; after Luca Giordano.

EKELS, JAN, the elder, born at Amsterdam in 1724, was a scholar of Dirk Dalens, the younger. He painted views of cities in the manner of Jan ten Compe. His pictures are generally of a small size, and are highly finished, with a good effect of light and shade. He died at Amsterdam in 1781.

EKELS, JAN, the younger, a Dutch painter of genre pieces and an imitator of the old masters, especially of J. Molenaer, was born at Amsterdam in 1759. Two pictures by him, one representing 'A young Man drawing,' and the other 'A Peasant lighting a Pipe,' are in the Städel Gallery at Frankfurt. He died in 1793.

EKEMANN-ALESSON, LORENZ, (or ECKEMANN-ALESSON,) a lithographic artist, was born in Sweden in 1791. He studied and practised his art at Vienna, Munich, and Augsburg, but was afterwards appointed by the King of Württemberg to be professor and director of the newly established Lithographic Institute at Stuttgart. He chiefly executed landscapes and architectural views after Adam, P. Hess, and Wagenbauer; but his best plates are 'A Forest Scene,' after Waterloo; a 'Landscape,' after Wynants; and 'Württemberg Stallions,' after R. Kunz. He produced some other animal pieces, and also painted landscapes with animals. He died at Stuttgart in 1821.

EKMAN, ROBERT WILHELM, a genre painter, was born at Nystad in Finland in 1808, and died at Helsingfors in 1873. He was educated at the Stockholm Academy under Sandberg; and travelled much, especially in Italy. His pictures consist of scenes from northern life,—christenings, peasants' cottages, forest scenes, &c. Amongst them are:

An old Woman with a Bible.
A Dutch Sailor Family.
Robber Scene.

ELBURG, HANSJE VAN, (ELBURGH, ELBURCH, ELBURCHT, or ELERUCHT,) called HÂNSKIN, or KLEYN HANSKEN ('Little John'), an historical painter, was born at Elburg, near Campen, in 1500. He represented the figures in the manner of Frans Floris, and also excelled in landscapes and storms at sea. In Antwerp cathedral is his picture of 'The Miraculous Draught of Fishes.' In 1536 he was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp. He died in that city in 1551.

ELDER, CHARLES, an historical painter, was born in 1821. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1845 till his death, which took place in London in 1851. Amongst his works are:

Sappho. 1845.
Florimel imprisoned. 1846.
The Death of Mark Anthony. 1847.
Ruth gleanings. 1848.
Rosalind. 1850.
Weary Travellers. 1851.

ELDER, WILLIAM, a Scottish engraver, resided in London about the year 1680. He was one of those who were employed by the booksellers; and we have a few portraits by him, among which are the following:

His own Portrait, with a fur cap.
The same, with a wig.
William Sancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury.
John Pearson, Bishop of Chester.
Ben Jonson, prefixed to his 'Works,' 1692.
Sir Theodore de Mayerne, Physician.
Admiral Russell.
Sir Henry Pollexfen, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas.
John Ray, Naturalist.
Richard Morton, M.D.
George Parker, Astrologer.
Charles Snell, Writing-master.

ELFORD, Sir WILLIAM, Bart., an amateur landscape painter, was born in Devonshire in 1747. From 1784 he occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy, contributing landscapes, often with effects of sunset and of shower. He was made a baronet in 1800, and died at Totnes in 1837. There is a landscape by him at Windsor Castle.

ELIAERTS, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a Flemish painter of animals, flowers, and fruit, was born in 1761 at Deurne-Borgerhout, near Antwerp, in the Academy of which city he studied. He passed his life in France, but died at Antwerp in 1848. In the Antwerp Museum is a flower-piece by him.

ELIAS, MATHIEU, (ELYAS, or ELIE,) was born at Peena, near Cassel, in 1658. His parents were extremely poor, and he was employed when a boy in attending cattle, in which humble situation he was noticed by a painter of Dunkirk, named Philippe Decorbehem, tracing objects on the ground. The artist, struck with the singularity of the circumstance and the evident disposition of the boy, prevailed on his mother to intrust him to his care. After instructing him for some time he sent him to Paris for improvement, where he met with employment, and resided several years. On the death of Decorbehem, he settled at Dunkirk, and painted some altar-pieces for the churches in that town and its neighbourhood. He died at Dunkirk in 1741.

ELIZABETH, Princess, the third daughter of George III., was born in London in 1770. She married, in 1818, Frederick William Louis, Landgrave of Hesse-Homburg, and died at Frankfort in 1840. She was much attached to the arts of design, and several of the productions of her pencil were published, accompanied by the poetical effusions of the minor bards of the day, under the following titles:

The Birth and Triumph of Cupid; a poem, by Sir James Bland Burges, Bart. 1796.

Cupid turned Volunteer; with poetical illustrations by Thomas Park. 1804.

The Power and Progress of Genius. 1806.

Six Poems illustrative of engravings by H. R. H. the Princess Elizabeth. 1813.

ELKAN, DAVID LEVY, a lithographer and designer of arabesques, born at Cologne in 1808, studied at Düsseldorf, and became known by his imitations and compositions in the style of the middle ages. He died in his native city in 1866.

ELLENRIEDER, MARIE, the best German female painter of the first half of the 19th century, was born at Constance in 1791. She learned the rudiments of art from the miniature painter Einsle, and in 1813 went to Munich, and studied under Langer in the Academy there until 1820. After having twice visited Rome, she became acquainted with Overbeck, whose art-teaching she afterwards followed. Soon after her return from Rome she painted the 'Virgin and Child,' which is considered her best work. Subsequently she painted altar-pieces and portraits, and etched twenty-four plates after Langer, Overbeck, Rembrandt, and Titian. She died at Constance in 1863. A 'St. Felicitas' by her is in the possession of the Queen.

ELLIGER, ANTHONIE, the son and pupil of the younger Ottomar Elliger, was born at Amsterdam in 1701, and died at Ede in 1781. He painted historical, mythological, and allegorical pictures upon ceilings and walls. His daughter, CHRISTINA MARIA ELLIGER, was a portrait painter.

ELLIGER, OTTOMAR, the elder, born at Gothenburg in 1633, was the son of a physician, who, finding in him a strong inclination for art, sent him to Antwerp, at that time the residence of so many able artists, where he became a scholar of Daniel Seghers. He painted flowers and fruit in the highly-finished style of his master, and attained sufficient ability to be invited to the court of Berlin, where he was appointed painter to William Frederick, Elector of Brandenburg. The pictures of this artist are almost entirely confined to Germany, where they are held in considerable estimation. Examples are in the Dresden Gallery and in the Städel Gallery at Frankfort. He died at Berlin in 1679.

ELLIGER, OTTOMAR, the younger, the son of Ottomar Elliger the elder, was born at Hamburg in 1666. After being instructed in the first elements of the art by his father, he was sent to Amsterdam, where he became a scholar of Michiel van Musscher, a painter of small portraits and conversations, under whom he studied a short time, but being ambitious of distinguishing himself in a higher walk of art, and the works of Gerard de Lairese being then in high reputation, he entered the school of that eminent master, whose instruction enabled him in a few years to dispense with further assistance. Elliger painted historical subjects in the style of De Lairese, which were judiciously composed and correctly drawn. Like his instructor, he was particularly attentive to propriety of costume, and style of architecture. He was employed by the Elector of Mayence, for whom he painted the 'Death of Alexander,' and the 'Marriage of Peleus and Thetis.' His principal works are at Amsterdam, where he died in 1732. In the Vienna Gallery is a 'Woman with Fruit;' in the Cassel Gallery are 'The Feast of Cleopatra,' and 'The Daughter of Herodias dancing;' and in the Bordeaux Museum is an 'Allegory,' all of which are by him.

ELLINGER, Abbot of Tegernsee (1017—1048), is stated to have illustrated a manuscript of Pliny the Elder with figures of the animals described in the text; and in like manner the writings of other authors. In the Munich Library there is an Evangelium with paintings by him.

ELLIOT, WILLIAM, an engraver, was born at Hampton Court in 1727. He engraved several landscapes, which were admired for their taste and freedom, and of which the best are from the paintings of the brothers Smith, of Chichester. He died in London in 1766. We have by him the following plates:

A Landscape with Cattle; after Rosa de Tivoli.

A View near Maestricht, with Cattle; after A. Cuyp.

A Landscape with the Flight into Egypt; after Poelenborch.

A large Landscape; after G. Smith.

A set of four Landscapes; after G. and T. Smith.

A set of six plates of Horses; after T. Smith.

Two Landscapes, Spring and Summer; after Van Goyen.

Portrait of Helena Forman, the second wife of Rubens; after Rubens.

ELLIOT, WILLIAM, a marine painter, flourished in the latter part of the 18th century. Amongst his works are two pictures of the 'British Fleet' (one dated 1790) at Hampton Court, and 'The Loss of the Andromeda.'

ELLIOTT, CHARLES LCRING, an American portrait painter, was born at Scipio, New York, in 1812. He began life as a clerk at Syracuse, but devoted all his leisure time to drawing and painting, and about 1834 went to New York, where he became a pupil of Trumbull. After practising for about ten years in the western parts of the State he settled in New York, and is said to have painted more than seven hundred portraits of eminent people. His likenesses are remarkable for their vigour and truth; indeed, that of Fletcher Harper was sent to the Paris International Exhibition of 1867 as a typical example of American portraiture. Among his best portraits are also those of Fitz-Halleck Greene, the poet, James Fenimore Cooper,

Matthew Vassar, the painters Church and Durand, Governor Morgan, and Colonel Colt. There are among other works by him, 'Don Quixote,' 'Falstaff,' 'Andrew van Corlear the Trumpeter,' and 'The Head of Skaneateles Lake,' which is said to have been the only landscape he ever painted. Elliott died at Albany in 1868.

ELLIOTT, Captain ROBERT, R. N., an amateur marine painter, lived in the latter part of the 18th and the beginning of the 19th century. He made many sketches during his travels, from which Prout and Stanfield made drawings, and which were published in 1830. Amongst the works he exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1784 and 1789 were:

The Fleet in Port Royal Harbour. 1785.

View of the City of Quebec. 1786.

Breaking the French Line, Lord Rodney's Action. 1787.

Fire at Kingston, Jamaica. 1788.

ELLIS, JOSEPH F., a marine painter, born in Ireland about 1780, came to London about 1818, and exhibited a few pictures at the Royal Academy and the British Institution. He is, however, chiefly to be remembered by his clever imitations of Canaletto's works, which were palmed off on the public as originals by an unscrupulous picture-dealer, into whose hands, through misfortunes, he fell. He died at Richmond, in Surrey, in 1848.

ELLIS, WILLIAM, a landscape engraver, was born in London in 1747. He executed some plates in conjunction with William Woollett, whose pupil he had been; and there are several charming prints, mostly landscapes, by him from the designs of Paul Sandby and Thomas Hearne, as well as five views of the 'Battle of the Nile,' in aquatint, after William Anderson, published in 1800. The year of his death is unknown.

ELLYS, JOHN, a portrait painter, was born in 1701. He studied under Thornhill and Schmutz, and was a follower of Van der Banck, to whose house and connection he succeeded. Besides having a large practice, he held the two crown appointments of tapestry-weaver and keeper of the lions. In 1755 he was a member of the committee for the foundation of an Academy. Amongst his portraits are:

Lord Whitworth, the diplomatist. (At Knole Park.)
Figg, "the mighty combatant."

ELMER, STEPHEN, a painter of dead game and objects of still-life, was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1772, the year of his first exhibition, and resided principally at Farnham in Surrey, where he died in 1796. He represented subjects of still-life with great fidelity, and with a very spirited pencil. His son practised in Ireland at the close of the century.

ELMORE, ALFRED, an historical and genre painter, was born at Clonakilty, in the county of Cork, on the day of the battle of Waterloo, June 18th, 1815. His father was a retired army surgeon, who when his son was about twelve years of age removed to London, where young Elmore began his career by drawing from the antique in the British Museum. In 1832 he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, and in 1834 exhibited there his first picture, a 'Subject from an Old Play.' After this he went abroad, visiting Paris, Munich, Venice, Bologna, Florence, and ultimately Rome, where he remained for two years. He returned home in 1844, and in that year exhibited his 'Rienzi in the Forum,' which attracted much notice, and with 'The Origin of the Guelph and Ghibeline Quarrel in Florence,' exhibited in 1845, secured his election as an Associate in the latter year. His next popular picture was 'The Invention of the Stocking Loom,' exhibited in 1847, and engraved for the Art Union of London. In 1857 Elmore was elected a Royal Academician, and painted as his diploma work a subject from the "Two Gentlemen of Verona." But the best picture which he ever painted was that which he exhibited in 1860 of 'The Tuileries, 20th June, 1792,' representing the terrible scene of Marie Antoinette assailed in her own palace by the revolutionary mob. One of the most impressive pictures which he exhibited after this was 'Within the Convent Walls,' in the Academy Exhibition of 1864. He painted chiefly pictures of romantic incident, the subjects of which were occasionally drawn from his own fancy, but oftener derived from fiction or poetry. His greatest successes, however, were won in historical painting. Elmore died at Kensington, January 24th, 1881, and was buried in Kensal Green Cemetery. Besides the pictures above mentioned, the following are his principal works:

The Martyrdom of St. Thomas à Becket. 1840. Painted for Daniel O'Connell, and now in St. Andrew's Roman Catholic Church, Dublin.

The Novice. 1843.

The Fainting of Hero. 1846.

The Deathbed of Robert, King of Naples. 1848.

Religious Controversy in the time of Louis XIV. 1849. Griselada. 1850.

The Emperor Charles V. at Yuste. 1856.

An Incident in the life of Dante. 1858.

Marie Antoinette in the Temple. 1861.

The Invention of the Combining Machine. 1862.

Lucrezia Borgia. 1863.

On the Brink. 1865.

After the Expulsion. 1873.

Mary, Queen of Scots, and Darnley, at Jedburgh. 1877.

Lenore. 1871.

ELSASSER, FRIEDRICH AUGUST, a painter of landscapes and architectural views, was born at Berlin in 1810, and studied at the Academy of that city under Blechen, whose influence on art was at that time very great. In 1831 he went to Italy, and in 1834 and 1835 he visited Sicily. Among his choicest works are: 'The Forest of Calabria,' 'The Interior of a Church at Palermo,' 'A View of the Ruins at Rome,' &c. The King of Prussia sent him the Order of the Red Eagle, and granted him a pension for life, which he did not long enjoy, as he died at Rome in 1845. His brothers, HEINRICH and JULIUS ELSASSER, were also landscape painters. The latter was born at Berlin in 1815, and died at Rome in 1859.

ELSEVIER, AERNOUT, a Dutch painter of landscapes and conflagrations, was born about 1575 at Douai, but his parents removed to Leyden in 1580. He died after 1629.

His son, LOUIS ELSEVIER, who was also a painter, was born at Leyden in 1615, and died at Delft in 1675.

ELSHEIMER, ADAM, (ELSHAIMER, or ELZHEIMER,) a German painter, was probably born at Frankfort in 1574, but the dates of his career are differently reported. He was the son of a tailor, and was placed at an early age under the care of Philipp Uffenbach, who, though a reputable artist, was soon surpassed by his disciple. Finding no further means of improvement in his own country, Elsheimer went to Rome, where he studied the works of the great masters, and in a short time his pictures, which were very distinct from the works of all of his contemporaries, were held in general estimation. He was fond of landscapes with figures of such importance that the landscape interest is subordinated to that of the incident represented. His pictures were small and finished with the greatest perfection and detail, a quality then entirely new in Italy, especially when studied with extreme fidelity to nature. His power over light and shade was nearly as great as that of Rembrandt, who, in the next generation, followed out the same characteristic of intense chiaro-scuro. Elsheimer delighted in torchlight, moonlight, and the dusk of evening, all of which effects he represented with greater excellence than had before been accomplished. He possessed so extraordinary a memory, that it was sufficient for him to have looked at an object or scene once to draw it with the most surprising precision. The extreme patience and labour with which he finished his pictures was such, that the prices he received for them never sufficiently repaid him for the time spent upon them. If the unfortunate painter had been paid for them a fourth part of what they have since produced, he might have lived in affluence instead of the state of indigence and distress in which he passed the greater part of his life. As it was, he was cast into prison, although a man of irreproachable habits, and this preyed upon his mind. His only benefactor was Count Goudt, who purchased some of his choicest pictures, and has engraved seven of them in a highly-finished manner, well adapted to their style. Elsheimer is perhaps better known by these engravings than by his own pictures. 'Ceres drinking from the Witch's Goblet,' 'Jupiter and Mercury in the home of Baucis,' 'The Flight into Egypt,' 'Tobit and the Angel going home,' are among the number. The copperplate of the last named fell into the hands of Rembrandt, and was partly erased and altered by him into another subject. The elder Teniers, as well as Rembrandt, studied carefully the works of Elsheimer. He died in Rome in 1620. The following works by him are in public galleries:

Cassel.	Gallery.	Meeting of Elias and Obadiah.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Flight into Egypt.
Dulwich.	College.	Susannah and the Elders.
Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
"	"	Apostles.
"	"	Saints.

"	"	A Forest.
Rome.	Sciarra Pal.	Return of the Prodigal Son.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Rest on the Flight into Egypt.

ELSHEIMER, JOHANN, a brother of Adam Elsheimer, was born at Frankfort in 1593, and died previous to 1636. About 1632 he painted 'The Story of Virginia,' now on the Imperial Staircase in the Römer at Frankfort.

ELSHOLTZ, LUDWIG, a German painter of genre subjects and battles, born at Berlin in 1805, studied in the Academy of his native city, and afterwards in the studio of Franz Krüger, the painter of horses. His best work is 'The Battle of Leipsic,' painted in 1833, and now in the possession of the German Emperor. He died at Berlin in 1850. In the Berlin National Gallery is 'The Beginning of the Fight,' dated 1834.

ELST, PIETER VAN DER. See VAN DER ELST.

ELSTER, GOTTFRIED RUDOLF, an historical painter who worked for some time at Düsseldorf, executed a number of religious pictures, among which are a 'Holy Family,' in the possession of the Prince of Hohenzollern, and some cartoons for the Zionskirche at Berlin. He died in that city in 1872.

ELSTRACKE, REGINALD, an engraver who flourished in England about the year 1620, worked chiefly for the booksellers, and his plates are almost entirely confined to portraits. These are more sought after for their scarcity and their connection with English history, than for their merit as engravings. He also engraved the title-page and several of the portraits for Holland's 'Baziliologia. A Booke of Kings. Beeing the true and liuely Effigies of all our English Kings from the Conquest vntill this present.' The following portraits are by him:

James I.
Queen Elizabeth.
Mary, Queen of Scots. One of his best prints.
The same, with Lord Darnley.
Thomas Howard, Earl of Suffolk.
Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex.
Gervase Babington, Bishop of Worcester.
Sir Julius Cæsar, Master of the Rolls.
Sir Thomas More.
Sir Philip Sidney.
Thomas Sutton, founder of the Charter House.
Edmund, Lord Sheffield.
John, Lord Harrington.
William Knollys, Viscount Wallingford.
William Cecil, Lord Burghley.
Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden.
Richard Whittington.

ELTZ, JOHANN FRIEDRICH VON, born in 1632, was one of the first artists who worked in mezzotint. His works are now rare; examples of them are an 'Ecce Homo,' after Albrecht Dürer, and a portrait of Johann Philipp von Schönborn, Elector of Mayence, after Th. C. von Fürstenberg. He died at Mayence in 1686.

ELVEN, TETAR VAN. See TETAR VAN ELVEN.

ELYAS, MATHIEU. See ELIAS.

EMELRAET, PHILIPPUS AUGUSTUS. See HEMELRAET.

EMES, JOHN, a water-colour landscape painter, practised about the end of the 18th century, and exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1790 and 1791. He also engraved Jeffereys' 'Destruction of the Spanish Batteries before Gibraltar.'

EMLER, BONAVENTURA, an Austrian artist, was born in 1831, and studied at the Academy of Vienna. He became celebrated by his illustrations to the 'Divina Commedia' of Dante, and died in 1862.

EMMANUEL, a Greek priest and painter, is the author of a picture in the Byzantine style in the National Gallery, London. It represents 'St. Cosmo and St. Damian receiving the Divine Blessing,' and is signed χειρ Ἐμμανουὴλ ἱερέως τοῦ τζάνε ('the hand of Emmanuel, priest of Tzane'). It is suggested, in the catalogue, that this Emmanuel may be identical with the Emmanuel mentioned by Lanzi, who lived at Venice in the 17th century, and executed a painting dated 1660.

EMMANUELLO DA COMO, Fra. See COMO.

EMMETT, WILLIAM, an engraver who flourished about the year 1710, among other prints engraved a large view of the interior of St. Paul's Cathedral, which is executed in a neat, clear style; as well as three exterior views of the same edifice.

EMPIS, CATHERINE EDMÉE SIMONIS. See SIMONIS-EMPIS.

EMPOLI, JACOPO DA. See CHIMENTI.

ENDER, JOHANN NEPOMUK, an Austrian historical and portrait painter, was born at Vienna in 1793. In 1829 he became a professor in the Academy of his native city, where he died in 1854. He is distinguished for his oil-paintings and water-colour drawings, and a 'Madonna and Child' by him is in the Vienna Gallery. His son, Eduard Ender, is a well-known Viennese painter of historical and genre subjects.

ENDER, THOMAS, an Austrian landscape painter, the twin brother of Johann Nepomuk Ender, was born at Vienna in 1793. From the age of twelve he studied in the Academy of Vienna, where, in 1816, he obtained the grand prize for painting. In 1836 he was appointed a tutor, and afterwards professor of landscape in the Academy. Through the patronage of the Archduke John and Prince Metternich, he accompanied, as draughtsman, the scientific expedition sent by Austria to Brazil in 1817, and made a collection of seven hundred drawings, which are now at Vienna. Three views by him are in the Vienna Gallery. He died in Vienna in 1875. In the Berlin National Gallery is his 'Italian Wood Chapel.'

ENDLICH, PHILIP, a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1700. He was a pupil of Bernard Picart, and was chiefly occupied on portraits, among which are the following:

Hendrik, Count of Moens.

John Taylor, a celebrated oculist. 1735.

Juan Felipe d'Almeria, Governor of the Isle of St. Martin.

Jan Gosewijn E. Alstein, ecclesiastic of Amsterdam. 1738.

Jan Noordbeck; the same.

Pieter Hollebeck; the same.

Leonard Beels; the same.

ENDRES, BERNHARD, was born at Owingen, in Baden, in 1805, and studied genre and historical painting at the Academy of Munich. Two of his works are in the Gallery at Carlsruhe, the portrait of Pope Julius II., after Raphael, and 'Christ bearing the Cross.' He died in 1874.

ENDTER, SUSANNA MARIA. See SANDRART.

ENGEL, KARI, a German painter, was born in 1817 at Londorf, and died in 1870 at Rödelshheim. The Darmstadt Gallery has a 'View of the Studio of the Sculptor Scholl,' by him.

ENGELBRECHT, CHRISTIAN and MARTIN, two printsellers and engravers, who resided at Augsburg, flourished about the year 1721. Christian Engelbrecht, conjointly with J. A. Pfeffel, engraved some ornamental works for goldsmiths, after A. Morrison; and some views for the 'History of Architecture,' published in 1721 by J. Hernhard. Martin Engelbrecht engraved some plates after Rugendas and other masters, and some illustrations for Ovid's 'Metamorphoses.'

ENGELBRECHTSEN, CORNELIS, (or ENGELBERTS,) the son of a wood-engraver, was born at Leyden in 1468. The pictures of Jan van Eyck, the alleged inventor of oil-painting, being at that time the object of curiosity and admiration, Engelbrechtsen applied himself to study the works of that master, and is said by Van Mander to have been the first artist of his country that painted in oil. The paintings by this master which escaped the troubles of that country were preserved with great care in the church of Our Lady at Leyden. They represented the 'Crucifixion,' the 'Descent from the Cross,' 'Abraham sacrificing Isaac,' with some small pictures of the 'Life of the Virgin': these were well composed, and of a less Gothic style of design than was usual at the early period at which he lived. They sometimes bear the accompanying mark.  His principal work was an altar-piece, painted for the Epitaph of the family of Lockhorst, in the church of St. Peter at Leyden, and composed of a great number of figures representing the 'Adoration of the Lamb.' The National Gallery has a 'Madonna and Child' by him. The Antwerp Museum has two double pictures by him: the one, 'St. Leonard delivering prisoners,' and 'St. George;' the other, scenes from the life of St. Hubert. A 'Crucifixion' by him is in the Munich Gallery. Engelbrechtsen died at Leyden in 1533. He is thought to be identical with the "Cornelis de Hollandere" who was free of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1492.

ENGELMANN, GOTTFRIED, a German lithographer, who also painted in water-colours, was born at Mühlhausen in 1788, and died there in 1839. He was a pupil of Sennefelder, the inventor of lithography, and of C. von Mannlich, and he introduced the art into France.

ENGELRAMS, CORNELIS, (or ENGHELRAMS,) a Flemish painter, born at Mechlin in 1537, excelled in painting historical subjects in distemper. His best work, representing the 'Seven Works of Mercy,' is in the cathedral of St. Rombout at Mechlin. There are several of his pictures in Germany, where he passed some years. At Hamburg, in the church of St. Catharine, is a large altar-piece by him of the 'Conversion of St. Paul.' He died at Mechlin in 1583.

ENGERTH, ERASMUS, an Austrian artist, who was born at Vienna in 1796, studied at the Academy of his native city, and afterwards in Italy. On his return home he painted portraits and historical pictures, and also made successful copies from the great masters, but he subsequently devoted himself exclusively to the art of restoring paintings. He was keeper of the picture gallery of the Belvedere, and died at Vienna in 1871.

ENGELSZEN, CORNELIS. See VERSPRONK.

ENGLEHEART, FRANCIS, a line-engraver, born in London in 1775, was a nephew of George Engleheart, the miniature painter. He learned the art as an apprentice to Joseph Collyer, and as an assistant to James Heath. His first independent works were the illustrations to Akenside, after Stothard, whose 'Canterbury Pilgrims' he had a large share in engraving, and the illustrations to Homer after Cook. He also engraved some of Smirke's drawings for 'Don Quixote,' and several plates for the 'Literary Souvenir,' 'Amulet,' 'Gem,' and other Annuals, among which is the last portrait of Lord Byron, after W. E. West. He died in 1849. Besides the works already named, his best plates are:

Duncan Gray; after Sir David Wilkie.

The Only Daughter; after the same.

The Castle; after Cook.

Sir Calpine rescuing Serena; after Hilton.

ENGLEHEART, GEORGE, a miniature painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy in the latter part of the 18th century, and in 1790 was appointed miniature painter to George III. The date of his death is uncertain; but he is known to have exhibited up to 1812.

ENGLEHEART, J. D., a miniature painter, flourished in the first quarter of the 19th century. He exhibited at the Royal Academy between the years 1802 and 1828.

ENGLEHEART, TIMOTHY STANSFELD, a line-engraver, a son of Francis Engleheart, was born in London in 1803, and died there in 1879. He engraved several plates for the 'Literary Souvenir,' 'Forget me not,' and other Annuals.

ENGLISH, JOSIAS, was an amateur engraver, who resided at Mortlake, where he died in 1718. He executed an etching of 'Christ with the Two Disciples at Emmaus,' after Titian, and in 1654 a set of small upright plates of the 'Gods and Demigods.' His best work is a spirited etching of a half-length of a 'Man regaling,' after F. Cleyn.

ENGSTROM, WILHELM OSCAR, a Swedish animal painter, was born in 1831, and died at Düsseldorf in 1877.

ENHUBER, KARL VON, a genre painter, was born at Hof, in Voigtland, in 1811. He was the son of a civil officer, who when his son was eighteen months old removed to Nördlingem. After studying at the Munich Academy, he was at first an animal painter; he then worked at representations of the Thirty Years' War; and only through the study of the works of Metsu and Terborch did he discover his true talent. He was admitted a member of the Munich Academy in 1858, and died at Munich in 1867. He excelled in characterizing middle-class home life, with its pleasures and troubles, and was gifted with natural humour, which was the foundation of his delicate delineation of character. To be mentioned amongst his works are:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Return of the Munich Guardsman. 1844.
Darmstadt.	Gallery.	Sessions Day in Bavaria.
Munich.	Gallery.	A Grandfather watching his Grandson at play with toy Soldiers.
"	"	A Carver in his Workshop.

ENNIS, W., an Irish historical and portrait painter, was born in the first half of the 18th century. He studied at Dublin under Robert West, and afterwards in Italy, and subsequently became a master in the Dublin Art School. He died, through a fall from his horse, in the county of Wicklow, in 1771.

ENS, GIOSEFFO. See HEINS.

ENSLEN, JOHANN KARL, a German landscape painter, who was born in 1759 and died in 1849, was well known in his time for his panoramas, which were the first introduced into Germany.

ENSLEN, KARL GEORG, an Austrian painter, born at Vienna in 1792, studied in the Academy of Berlin. He travelled in Italy, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, and his panoramas give proof of a knowledge of excellent linear and aerial perspective. He died at Lille in 1866. There is a view of the 'Bay of Naples' by him in water-colours in the Lille Museum.

ENSO, GIOSEFFO. See HEINS.

ENSOM, WILLIAM, a line-engraver, died at

H H

Wandsworth in 1832. He engraved 'Christ blessing the Bread,' after Carlo Dolci, 'St. John in the Wilderness,' after Carlo Cignani, and several plates for the Annuals, of which the best are those in the 'Bijou' of George IV. and Lady Wallscourt, after Sir Thomas Lawrence.

EPINAT, FLEURY, a painter of historical subjects and landscapes, born at Montbrison in 1764, imitated his master David, with whom he went to Rome. He died at Pierre-Scise in 1830.

EPISCOPIUS, JOANNES. See DE BISSCHOP.

ERASMUS, DESIDERIUS, the eminent scholar, born at Rotterdam in 1467, painted in 1484 a picture representing 'Christ on the Cross, with Mary and St. John.' This work, which is little known, is in the style of the old Dutch masters, and is in the convent of Emaus, called Steyne, near Gouda. He died at Basle in 1536.

EREDI, BENEDETTO, an Italian engraver, was born at Florence in 1750. He engraved, in conjunction with J. B. Cecchi, nine plates of the Monument of Dante, with his portrait. There are also by him the following plates:

PORTRAITS.

Federigo Zuccherro; after himself.

Angelo Bronzino; Florentine painter.

Annibale Carracci.

SUBJECTS.

The Transfiguration; after Raphael.

The Adulteress before Christ; after Angelo Bronzino.

The Death of Lucretia; after Luca Giordano.

EREMITA DI MONTE SENARIO. See STEFANESCHI.

ERHARD, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, who was born at Nuremberg in 1795, was instructed by Zwinger and Gabler, and afterwards went to Vienna and Rome. Among the hundred and eighty-five plates which he etched are several landscapes and views of considerable merit. He committed suicide at Rome in 1822.

ERLINGER, GEORG, a printer and wood-engraver, was working at Augsburg in 1516, and at Bamberg from 1519 till his death in 1542. Among his woodcuts, which are very scarce, is one of 'Christ on the Cross.'

ERMELS, JOHANN FRANZ, a German painter and engraver, a pupil of Holtzman, was born near Cologne in 1641. He resided at Nuremberg, and painted for the church of St. Sebald in that city a picture of the 'Resurrection'; he was more successful, however, as a painter of landscapes, in which he imitated the style of Jan Both. He died at Nuremberg in 1699. In the Städel Gallery at Frankfurt is a 'Landscape' by him, with figures by J. H. Roos; and in the Vienna Gallery is a 'Landscape with Fishermen' by him. A 'Landscape' is also in the Milan Gallery. There are by him a few etchings of landscapes, after Waterloo, Breenbergh, &c., executed with spirit and taste.

ERRANTE, GIUSEPPE, born at Trapani, in Sicily, in 1760, studied at Palermo and Rome, and was employed in the Caserta Palace, Naples. On account of his political opinions he was obliged to remove to Milan, and afterwards established himself at Rome in 1810. Besides historical subjects, he painted portraits, in which he was especially successful. He died at Rome in 1821.

ERRAR, (or ERRARD,) JOHAN, an artist, who flourished at Liège about 1670, etched landscapes after Waterloo.

ERRARD, CHARLES, a French painter and architect, was born at Nantes about 1601, and is better known as one of the chief founders and directors of the Academy at Paris than as a painter and engraver. He studied in Italy, where he also spent the greater part of his life. In 1635 he was admitted a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and in 1665 was made director of the French Academy at Rome, where he died in 1689.

ERRI, CAMMILLO, of Modena, is known only by a picture of 'St. John the Baptist Preaching,' with the date 1577, in the Modena Gallery.

ERSKINE, HENRY DAVID, EARL OF BUCHAN. See BUCHAN.

ERTINGER, FRANZ, a German engraver, is said by some to have been born at Colmar, by others at Wyl in Swabia, in the year 1640. He resided chiefly at Paris, where he engraved several plates, which are not without merit, and where he died in 1700. His best prints are the following:

PORTRAITS.

J. F. de Beughem, Bishop of Antwerp.
Niccolò Macchiavelli.
Gabriel du Pinau.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The History of Achilles, in eight Plates; after Rubens; the same subjects have been since engraved by Baron. Twelve Prints from the Metamorphoses of Ovid; after the miniatures of Joseph Werner.

Ten Plates of the History of the Counts of Toulouse; after Raymond de La Fage.

The Marriage at Cana in Galilee; after the same.

A set of Friezes of Bacchanalian subjects; after the same. Several Views of Towns; after Van der Meulen; some of them in the manner of Callot.

ERVEST, JAKOB, a scholar of Adam Elsheimer, painted marine subjects, and naval combats.

ES, JACOB VAN, (or ESSEN,) a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1606. He was very successful in the art of reproducing still-life, but more especially fish, which he painted with an almost deceptive similarity to nature. His masterpieces are two 'Fish Markets,' in the Vienna Gallery, with figures by Jordaens. The Madrid Gallery also has two pictures of fish and a fruit and flower piece by Van Es. The Städel Gallery at Frankfurt has a fish-piece by him. In the Antwerp Museum is a good example of his still-life subjects, formerly in the Episcopal Palace, and in the Lille Museum is a picture of 'Oysters and Fruit,' which was formerly in the Abbey of Cysoing. He died at Antwerp in 1665-66.

ESBRAT, NOËL RAYMOND, a landscape and animal painter, was born in Paris in 1809, and died there in 1856. He was a pupil of Guillon-Lethière and of Watelet, and from 1844 sent pictures to various exhibitions.

ESCALANTE, JUAN ANTONIO, a Spanish painter, born at Cordova in 1630, was a scholar of Francisco Rizi, but he adopted the style of Tintoretto, as well in colouring as in composition. Several of his works in the churches of Madrid are highly commended by Palomino. In the church of San Miguel is a graceful picture of 'St. Catharine'; and in the church of the Espíritu Santo is an altar-piece of the 'Dead Christ,' with other figures, painted in the style of Titian. A similar picture in the Dresden Gallery is ascribed to him. The Hague Gallery has a 'Gipsy Woman telling an Officer's fortune.' In the Madrid Gallery are two works by him, 'A Holy Family,' and 'The Infant Christ and St. John;' and in the Hermitage, St. Petersburg, 'St. Joseph and the Infant Christ.' He died at Madrid in 1670.

ESCALANTE, JUAN DE SEVILLA ROMERO Y. See SEVILLA.

ESCHINI, ANGELO MARIA, a painter and engraver, flourished at Modena in the 17th century: by him more than one excellent plate representing the 'Virgin' is known.

ESCLAVO, EL. See PAREJA.

ESKILSSON, PETER, a Swedish genre painter, was born in 1820, in the Billeberga parish, Schonen. He was at first an under-officer in the Göta artillery regiment, and then a book-keeper at Göteborg; but by the assistance of a friend he was enabled in 1853 to go to Düsseldorf, where he studied under Tidemand. In 1859 he was compelled for a time to become a photographer at Stockholm, but he afterwards illustrated Bellman, depicting the Swedish popular life with great humour. He became an associate of the Academy in 1866, and died at Bremö, near Sigtuna, in 1872.

ESPAÑOLETE. See RIBERA.

ESPAÑA, JUAN DE, or JUAN EL ESPAÑOL. See GIOVANNI DI PIETRO.

ESPINAL, JUAN DE, a Spanish historical painter, was a native of Seville. He was the son and pupil of Gregorio Espinal, who was also a painter, but he afterwards entered the school of Domingo Martinez, whose daughter he married. He was chosen director of the School of Design which Cean Bermudez and other lovers of art established at Seville. Cean Bermudez says that he possessed more genius than any of his contemporaries, and but for his bad training and indolence would have been the best painter whom Seville had produced since the time of Murillo. A visit to Madrid late in life made apparent his misspent time, and he returned saddened and abashed to Seville, where he died in 1783. His chief works were scenes from the life of St. Jerome, painted for the monastery of San Geronimo de Buenavista, and now in the Seville Museum, and some frescoes in the collegiate church of San Salvador.

ESPINÓS, BENITO, a Spanish flower painter, the son of Josef Espinós, was a native of Valencia. He was appointed director of the Royal Academy of San Carlos in Valencia in 1787, and died about 1817. Nine of his flower-pieces are in the Madrid Gallery, whilst others are in the Museum of Valencia, and in the Escorial.

ESPINÓS, JOSEF, a Spanish painter and engraver, born at Valencia in 1721, studied painting under Luis Martinez and Evaristo Muñoz. He painted for the convent of the Servites of the Foot of the Cross, in Valencia, pictures of 'Our Lady of Sorrows' and of the founders of that order. He engraved in line several prints of saints, and died at Valencia in 1784, leaving a choice collection of prints, drawings, and books.

ESPINOSA, ALONSO and ANDRES DE, Spanish historical painters, who dwelt at Burgos in the early part of the 16th century, were brothers, who usually worked together. In 1524, together with Cristobal de Herrera, they gilded and decorated with paintings the Lady chapel of the cathedral at Palencia.

ESPINOSA, GERONIMO RODRIGUEZ DE, a Spanish

painter, born at Valladolid in 1562, was the father of Jacinto Geronimo de Espinosa. He married in 1596 Aldonza Lleó, at the Valencian town of Cocentayna, where he resided for many years. In 1600 he painted pictures of 'St. Lawrence' and 'St. Hippolitus,' and in the following year 'SS. Sebastian and Roch,' for the church of Cocentayna. These works were afterwards displaced, and passed into the hands of one Andreas Cister, a scrivener. In 1604-7 he executed, in conjunction with a certain Jayme Terol, a scholar of Fray Nicolas Borrás, the pictures for the high altar of St. John the Baptist's Church, at the town of Muro. Finally taking up his abode at Valencia, he died there about 1630.

ESPINOSA, JACINTO GERONIMO DE, a son and scholar of Geronimo Rodriguez de Espinosa, was born at Cocentayna, in Valencia, in 1600. He studied also under Francisco Ribalta, and went afterwards to Italy, where he acquired a boldness of design and a vigour of colouring that resemble the style of Guercino. His best pictures are in the churches at Valencia, particularly in San Esteban, and in the chapel of San Luis Bertran in Santo Domingo. The principal altar-piece in the church of the Carmelites is by this master, representing the 'Transfiguration.' He died at Valencia in 1680. Among his works are the following:

Dresden.	Gallery.	St. Francis of Assisi.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Mary Magdalen praying.
"	"	Christ at the column.
"	"	St. John the Baptist.
Valencia.	Museum.	Christ appearing to St. Ignatius Loyola.
"	"	The Communion of St. Mary Magdalen.
"	"	St. Louis Bertrand on his bier.

ESPINOSA, JUAN DE, born at Puente de la Reyna, in Navarre, was employed in 1653 to paint twenty-four scenes from the life of St. Millan, for the monastery of St. Millan de la Cogolla. He executed twelve with some skill, and after his death the work was completed by Fray Juan Rizi.

ESPINOSA, JUAN DE, a Spanish painter of fruit pieces, flourished towards the end of the 17th and the beginning of the 18th century. Nothing is known of his life. Two examples of his art are in the Madrid Gallery.

ESPINOSA, MIGUEL DE, of Saragossa, a painter of good repute, was invited in 1654 by the Benedictine fathers, to paint for their monastery of St. Millan de la Cogolla. Amongst his works executed at the expense of the brotherhood were pictures of the 'Miracle of the Water turned into Wine,' and the 'Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes.'

ESQUARTE, PABLO, a Spanish painter of the latter part of the 16th century, who studied at Valencia, but afterwards went to Venice and became a disciple of Titian. He had a great talent for portrait painting, and perhaps excelled in other departments, as the Duke of Villa Hermosa employed him to ornament his palace and country residence.

ESSELENS, JACOB, a painter of Amsterdam in the 17th century, is said to have been a pupil of Rembrandt, but his works do not corroborate the assertion. His pictures represent villages on the banks of rivers, woody landscapes, buildings with magnificent fountains, stag-hunts, and shipping pieces, painted in a clear tone of colour, and with figures spiritedly touched. The dates of his birth and death are not recorded. A picture of 'Figures by a River,' signed with his name, is in the Rotterdam Museum; a 'Fishing Piece' is in the Copenhagen Gallery; and in the Glasgow Corporation Galleries is a 'Rendezvous of a Hunting Party.'

ESSEN, HANS VON. See LADENSPELDER.

ESSEN, JACOB VAN. See ES.

ESSENBECK, J. VAN, was born at Rotterdam in 1627, and died in 1678; but no further details of his life are recorded. In the Glasgow Corporation Galleries is a 'Hawking Party' attributed to him.

ESSEX, RICHARD HAMILTON, an architectural water-colour painter, was born in 1802. He became in 1823 an associate of the Water-Colour Society, where he exhibited till 1836. His works also appeared at the Royal Academy. He died at Bow in 1855.

ESSEX, WILLIAM, a clever copyist in enamel of landscape and figure subjects, both by old and modern masters, first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1818, and for the last time in 1862, having been appointed miniature painter to the Queen in 1839. Towards the end of his life he painted a few miniature enamels from the life. His death occurred at Brighton, in 1869, at the age of 85. His son, WILLIAM B. ESSEX, who was a portrait painter, died at Birmingham in 1852, aged 29.

ESTEBAN, RODRIGO, was painter to Sancho the Brave, King of Castile. No work of his is known to exist, but an account of a payment of one hundred maravedis from the privy purse in 1291-92 is to be found in a MS. book of accounts in the Royal Library at Madrid.

ESTENSE, BALDASSARE, of Reggio, who was born about 1443, has been supposed to have been an illegitimate scion of the house of Este, since no mention of his father's name ever occurs in contemporary records, whilst he was called 'Estensis,' and received unusual promotion and rewards from the Dukes of Ferrara. He was a pupil of Cosimo Tura, and was also a medallist. In 1469 he painted the likeness of Borso I., and was ordered to present it in person to the Duke of Milan. From 1471 to 1504 he was a salaried officer at the court of Ferrara, living first in Castel Nuovo, for which he painted a canvas that has perished, and afterwards in Castel Tedaldo, of which he was the governor. In 1483 he painted the portrait of Tito Strozzi, now in the Costabili Gallery at Ferrara. His will, dated 1500, is in the archives of Ferrara, but the exact date of his death is unknown.

ESTORGES, J., a French engraver of the 17th century, who etched a plate in the style of Pietro del Po representing 'Christ on the Mount of Olives.'

ESTRADA, JOSÉ MARIA, an historical and genre painter of Valencia, who died at Madrid in 1873. He has left, among other pictures, 'Diana observing the sleeping Endymion,' 'An Eating-house,' and the portrait of Count Villalobos.

ESTRADA, JUAN and IGNACIO, were two brothers, who worked together as painters, though Ignacio was also a sculptor. They were born at Badajoz, Juan in 1717, and Ignacio in 1724, and were instructed by their father, Manuel Estrada, but Juan received three years' further tuition from Pablo Pernicharo, at Madrid. Many of their pictures are still to be seen in the churches of Valencia, Ignacio having furnished the designs, and Juan carried out the execution. Juan died at Badajoz in 1792, and Ignacio in 1790.

ETHENARD v ABARCA, FRANCISCO ANTONIO, a painter and engraver, the son of a German father, was born at Madrid. He served in the German body-guard under Charles II., and until it was disbanded in 1701 by Philip V., upon which he devoted himself entirely to the above branches of art, which he had already pursued as an amateur. He died at Madrid in 1710. He published a 'Philosophy of War' in 1675, and 'The Italian and Spanish Fencing-Master' in 1697, and both of these he illustrated with engravings.

ETLINGER, GEORG, was a German engraver on wood, who resided at Bamberg. There is by him a wood-cut representing Bishop Blaize, enclosed in a border ornamented with symbols of the Gospel, and executed with great spirit.

ETTY, WILLIAM, the eminent painter, was born at York, March 10, 1787. "Like Rembrandt and Constable," writes Etty, in an autobiography published in the 'Art Journal' in 1849, "my father also was a miller." In 1798 he was apprenticed to Robert Peck, a letter-press printer at Hull, as a compositor, "to which business," he says, "I served seven full years faithfully and truly, and worked at it three weeks as journeyman; but I had such a busy desire to be a painter, that the last years of my servitude dragged on most heavily. I counted the years, days, weeks, and hours, till liberty should break my chains and set my struggling spirit free." In 1806 he was invited to London by his uncle, William Etty, of the firm of Bodley, Etty, and Bodley, of Lombard Street. William Etty was himself "a beautiful draughtsman in pen and ink," and saw promise in the crude performances of his young kinsman, and besides helping him during life, left him a sufficient sum after his death to enable him to pursue his studies. Arrived in town, he tells us:—"I drew from prints or from nature, or from anything I could; I was made at home at my uncle's, I was furnished with cash by my brother. My first academy was in a plaster-cast shop, kept by Gianelli, in that lane near to Smithfield, immortalised by Dr. Johnson's visit to see 'The Ghost' there." He soon received a letter of introduction to Opie, who introduced him to Fuseli, by whom he was admitted as a probationer in Somerset House. He entered the schools of the Royal Academy in the same week as Collins; and Hilton and Haydon were amongst his fellow-students. By his uncle's generosity, who paid one hundred guineas for him, Etty, in July, 1808, became an in-door pupil of Sir Thomas Lawrence, then residing in Greek Street, Soho. Lawrence frequently employed him to make copies of his portraits, but had little leisure to give substantial assistance to his pupil in his studies. When his year of study under Lawrence was expired, Etty painted from nature, and copied the old masters in the British Gallery: this, he says, he found easy, after copying Lawrence. He was also a constant student in the Life School of the Royal Academy, where his industry was indefatigable, yet he never gained a medal. He ventured at one time to send six pictures to the Academy exhibition, but all were rejected; this happened year after year at the Academy, and at the British Gallery, but by discovering his defects, and by great industry in endeavouring to correct them, he at last conquered his bad fortune. In 1811 he was comforted by finding one of his pictures, 'Telemachus rescuing Antiope,' hung at the Royal Academy, and from that time forward he always obtained an entrance for some of his works at the Academy or the British Institution. He painted portraits also at this time, but chiefly occupied himself on classical subjects. In 1816 he visited Paris and Florence, but returned home in less than three months. In 1822 he went to Italy, visiting Venice, Florence, Rome, and Naples, but it was in Venice that he found the greatest attractions:—"Venice, the birth-place and cradle of colour, the hope and idol of my professional life." He studied in the academy there, and was elected one of its honorary members. He returned to London early in 1824, and in the same year exhibited 'Pandora formed by Vulcan, and crowned by the Seasons,' which was bought by Lawrence, and secured his election as an Associate of the Royal Academy. He became an Academician in 1828, and it was then suggested to him that he should discontinue his practice in the Life School, where he had been accustomed for years to attend every evening during the session to paint studies in oil from the living models, as it was considered incompatible with the dignity of an Academician to continue to take his place amongst the students; but he said he would rather decline the honour of membership than give up his studies. He resided in London from 1826 till 1848, when, owing to failing health, he retired to his native city York, where he died November 13, 1849. An exhibition of Etty's works was held in the summer of 1849 at the Society of Arts, and his 'Life' by Alexander Gilchrist was published in 1855. In his autobiography Etty has himself pointed out what he considered his greatest works. "My aim in all my great pictures has been to paint some great moral on the heart: 'The Combat,' the beauty of mercy; the three 'Judith' pictures, patriotism, and self-devotion to her country, her people, and her God; 'Benaiah, David's chief captain,' valour; 'Ulysses and the Syrens,' the importance of resisting sensual delights, or an Homeric paraphrase on the 'Wages of Sin is Death'; the three pictures of 'Joan of Arc,' Religion, Valour, Loyalty and Patriotism, like the modern Judith; these, in all, make nine colossal pictures, as it was my desire to paint three times three." Besides the above-mentioned the following are his principal works:

Sappho. 1811.
The Coral Finders. 1820.
Cleopatra's Arrival at Cicilia. 1821.
The Judgment of Paris.
Venus attired by the Graces.
The Wise and Foolish Virgins.

In the Royal Institution, Manchester.

- Ulysses and the Sirens.

ETZDORF, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, a landscape painter, and the younger brother of Johann Christian Etzdorf, was born at Pösneck, in the duchy of Saxe-Meiningen, in 1807. He was educated in art at the Munich Academy, and at first practised porcelain painting, but afterwards devoted himself to landscapes, in which he followed much the same style as his brother, producing forest scenes, rocky valleys, and winter pieces. After his brother's death he returned for a while to Pösneck, but afterwards took to the business of tanning, and settled first in Kissingen and finally in Würzburg, where he died in 1858. Besides his paintings he has left eighteen etchings of landscapes, mostly after his brother, and one lithograph.

ETZDORF, JOHANN CHRISTIAN MICHEL, a German landscape painter, was born at Pösneck, in the duchy of Saxe-Meiningen, in 1801. He studied landscape painting in Munich and its environs, and displayed an especial talent in representing gloomy forests, taking as his models the works of Ruisdael and Van Everdingen. He visited Norway, the North Cape, Sweden, Iceland, and England. One of his best paintings is in the Modern Gallery at Munich; it represents a 'Forge by the side of a Waterfall.' He died at Munich in 1851.

EUMARUS, of Athens, the foremost of the early Greek painters, flourished about B.C. 540-500. He appears to have introduced a degree of chiaro-scuro into his pictures, which would seem to have been not all monochrome. It is stated that he was also the first to distinguish the male from the female figure, and to denote age and disposition in the depicting of his characters.

EUPHRANOR, who was born on the Isthmus of Corinth, but resided at Athens, is stated to have lived from B.C. 375 to 335, and to have studied painting in the school of Aristeides. His chief works were in a porch in the Cerameicus at Athens. On the one side were the 'Twelve Gods,' and on the opposite side, 'Theseus, with Democracy and Demos,' in which picture Theseus was represented as the founder of the equal polity of Athens. In the same place was his picture of the 'Battle between the Athenian and Boeotian Cavalry at Mantinea,' containing portraits of Epaminondas and of Gryllus, the son of Xenophon. He also excelled as a statuary, both in marble and metals. He gave a peculiar dignity to his heroes, and Pliny extols him for an exact symmetry in his proportions. His picture of Theseus so satisfied him that in comparing it with one of the same hero painted by Parrhasius, he exultingly observed, that "the Theseus of Parrhasius appeared to have been fed on roses, and his with flesh."

EUPOMPUS, who flourished about B.C. 400-380, founded the school of Sicyon upon his own principles as opposed to the softness of the Ionian school. The 'Victor in the Gymnastic Combat' is one of his best works. Pamphilus, the master of Apelles, was his pupil.

EUSEBIO DI SAN GIORGIO, a painter of Perugia in the early part of the 16th century, was a scholar of Perugino, and painted for churches. His works are imitations or copies after Raphael. A fresco of the Archangel Michael, formerly in the Palazzo Gualtieri at Orvieto, and now in the Leipsic Museum, and which has been ascribed to Signor-elli, is probably by Eusebio.

EUXENIDAS, an ancient Theban painter, who flourished about B.C. 400 or 380, was the master of Aristeides, but little else is recorded respecting him.

EVANS, GEORGE, a portrait painter, who flourished about the middle of the 18th century, was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, where he exhibited. He died before 1770.

EVANS, RICHARD, a copyist, was employed for some time by Sir Thomas Lawrence to fill in the background and draperies of his pictures. He for many years resided in Rome, where he copied pictures by the old masters, besides painting some original portraits, and also attempting fresco-painting. He died at Southampton in 1871, aged 87. The copies in the South Kensington Museum of the Raphael arabesques are by him; as are also the following portraits in the National Portrait Gallery:

- Sir Thomas Lawrence; after Lawrence.
 Lord Thurlow; after the same.
 Thomas Taylor, the Platonist.

EVANS, WILLIAM, known as "Evans of Eton," a landscape painter in water-colours, was born at Eton in 1798, and succeeded his father as professor of drawing at Eton College in 1818. In 1828 he was elected an associate, and in 1830 a member, of the Water-Colour Society, where he continued to exhibit till 1875. In his later years he suffered much from a fractured jaw, and died at Eton in 1877. Amongst his best works are:

- Llanberis. 1828.
 Barmouth. 1828.
 Ferry on the Tay.
 Burnham Beeches.
 Doune Castle.
 The Gleam of Hope.
 Mill at Droxford. (South Kensington Museum.)

EVANS, WILLIAM, an engraver and draughtsman, who flourished in the early years of the 19th century, assisted Benjamin Smith, and made drawings for Cadell's and Boydell's publications. He drew for Cadell's 'Gallery of Contemporary Portraits' (1822), and engraved some plates for the Dilettanti Society's 'Specimens of Antient Sculpture.' His portrait of James Barry, R.A. (drawn in chalk for the 'Gallery of Contemporary Portraits') is in the National Portrait Gallery.

EVANS, WILLIAM, a landscape painter in water-colours, known as "Evans of Bristol," was born in 1811. He lived for many years at an isolated spot in North Wales, where he had abundant opportunity of depicting the rough mountain scenery in which he excelled. He became in 1845 an Associate of the Water-Colour Society, and after 1852 he spent much time in Italy. He died in London in 1858.

EVELYN, JOHN, who was born at Wotton, in Surrey, in 1620, was an English gentleman who claims a place among the amateur artists of his country, as the engraver of five small plates of his journey from Rome to Naples, which were etched in Paris in the year 1649. They bear the annexed monogram. He etched likewise a view of his own seat at Wotton, and another of Putney. Evelyn was the author of one of the earliest English publications on the subject of engraving, entitled 'Sculptura,' published in 1662. He died in London in 1706.

EVENOR, an eminent painter of Ephesus, who flourished about B.C. 420, was the father and instructor of Parrhasius.

EVERDINGEN, ALLART VAN, the younger brother of Cesar van Everdingen, was born at Alkmaar in 1612. He studied successively under Roeland Savery and Pieter Molyn, both of whom he greatly surpassed, and excelled in painting rocky landscapes. The talents of Van Everdingen were not, however, confined to subjects of that description; he painted sea-pieces and storms with surprising effect, and represented the tempest-tossed waves with awful and terrific fidelity. In a voyage which he made to the Baltic, he was shipwrecked on the coast of Norway, where he was under the necessity of remaining some time, until the vessel was repaired. He employed this interval in making sketches of the romantic wilds of that uncultivated country, which furnished him with admirable subjects for his pictures, in which the grand forms of his rocks, and the picturesque effect of his waterfalls, are drawn with a taste, and painted with a spirit, that entitled him to the appellation of 'The Salvator Rosa of the North.' His colouring is simple and pure, his touch broad and facile, and it is evident that every object in his pictures was studied immediately from nature. The small figures with which he embellished his landscapes are correctly drawn, and very neatly touched. The admirers of etchings are indebted to this excellent artist for a number of plates executed in a free and masterly style. His prints of landscapes amount to about a hundred, of which eight of the largest and most finished are very fine. He also engraved a set of fifty-seven small prints for Gottsched's translation of 'Reynard the Fox,' published in 1752. He sometimes signed his plates with his name, sometimes with the initials A. V. E., and at other times with the annexed monogram. He died at Amsterdam in 1675.

EVERDINGEN, CESAR VAN, born at Alkmaar in 1606, was a scholar of Jan van Bronkhorst. He painted historical subjects and portraits, and was also an eminent architect. In 1632 he became a member of the Guild at his native place, and in 1651 of that at Haarlem. One of his most esteemed works was in the principal church of Alkmaar, representing the 'Triumph of David.' He gained great reputation by a picture he painted of the Portraits of the Company of Archers, for their hall of assembly. He died in 1679.

His works are signed with the initials C. V. E., or with the monogram annexed. An important work by him (signed with his monogram and dated 1652) is in the Hague Gallery. It represents 'Diogenes in the market-place of Haarlem seeking an honest man,' and contains portraits of the Steyn family of Haarlem.

EVERDINGEN, JAN VAN, the youngest of the three brothers of the name, was born in 1625, and died in 1656. He was instructed by his brother Cesar, but painted only for amusement, being by profession an advocate.

EVERSDYCK, CORNELIS WILLEMSZ, was a portrait painter of Goes, who died there in 1649. In the Rotterdam Museum are three pictures by him, representing Officers and Members of the Company of Archers, called "Edele Voetboog," at Goes; two of which are dated 1616 and 1624.

EVERSDYCK, WILLEM, the son of Cornelis Eversdyck, flourished at Goes about the year 1660. He was a portrait painter, and several of his portraits were engraved by Houbraken. A picture of Officers and Members of the Company of Archers, called "Edele Voetboog," at Goes, by him, is in the Rotterdam Museum.

EVARD, PERPÈTE, a painter of portraits and miniatures, was born at Dinant about the middle of the 17th century, and was employed at several foreign courts. He died at the Hague in 1727.

EWBANK, JOHN WILSON, a landscape painter, was born at Darlington in 1799. Intended for the Roman Catholic priesthood, he was sent to Ushaw College, but, absconding, he apprenticed himself to a house-painter in Newcastle, whence he was taken to Edinburgh by Coulson, a decorator of considerable ability: he afterwards received instruction from Alexander Nasmyth. He became one of the foundation members of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1826, and about that time produced some works of a larger character, such as 'George IV. at Edinburgh Castle,' 'The Entry of Alexander the Great into Babylon,' 'Hannibal crossing the Alps,' 'View of Edinburgh from Inchkeith,' &c. He passed the last ten or twelve years of his life in Sunderland, where through intemperance he fell into great misery and want, and died in 1847. His sea and shore views were admirable in their simplicity, while their aerial effect has seldom been surpassed. A 'Canal Scene with Shipping' is in the National Gallery of Scotland.

EWOUTZON, JAN, a Dutch wood-engraver, who flourished at Amsterdam in the first half of the 16th century, executed many of the designs of Cornelis Teunisse or Antoniszoon, of which 'Mucius Scævola,' a 'Woman mounted upon an Ass,' and an 'Allegory upon the Flight of Time,' bear his signature, and the two last the dates 1536 and 1537.

EXIMENO, JOAQUIN, a Spanish artist, born at Valencia in 1674, painted fruit, flowers, birds, fish, and objects of still-life, which he represented with great fidelity. He died in 1754. His works are classed by Cean Bermudez with those of his father, who bore the same Christian name, and in conjunction with whom he painted. Their pictures were much esteemed by amateurs of the time, and four of large size are in the church of Our Lady of the Pillar at Valencia.

EXSHAW, CHARLES, an historical painter and engraver, was born at Dublin in the early part of the 18th century. He studied at Rome, Amsterdam, and probably in Paris, and engraved portraits of the Van Loo family, but about 1758 he came to London and endeavoured to start a drawing academy. He died in 1771. His prints are chiefly imitations of the works of Rembrandt, and are not without merit. Among other plates the following are by him :

A Bust of an old Man, with a round hat ; after Rembrandt. 1758.

A Head of an old Man, with a beard ; after the same. 1758.

Joseph and Potiphar's Wife ; after the same.

St. Peter's Bark in the Storm ; after the same.

A Girl carrying a Basket of Cherries, with two Boys, each having a Gun ; after Rubens.

EYBEL, ADOLF, a German painter of historical and genre subjects and of portraits, was born at Berlin in 1808. He studied at the Berlin Academy, and under Professor Kolbe, as well as in Paris under Delaroche. One of his most noted pictures represents 'Richard Cœur-de-Lion with his Court listening to Blondel's Song.' He died at Berlin in 1882. The following works by him may also be mentioned :

A Gleaner.

The Battle of Fehrbellin.

Scene from Sir Walter Scott's 'Woodstock.'

Scene from 'Faust.'

A Wine Party.

EYBL, FRANZ, an Austrian portrait and genre painter, was born at Vienna in 1806, studied in the Academy of his native city, and became a member of it in 1843. He died in 1880. He was for some time custodian of the Belvedere Gallery, which possesses two characteristic works by him :

An old Austrian Peasant Woman leaving Church. 1847.

An old Beggar, in a mountainous landscape. 1856.

EYCK, GASPAR VAN, a Flemish painter of marine subjects and sea-fights, was born at Antwerp about the commencement of the 17th century, and was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1632. He died in 1673. Three pictures by him are in the Madrid Gallery.

EYCK, HUBERT VAN, the elder of the two brothers Van Eyck, was born at Maaseyck, in the duchy of Limburg, according to Van Mander, about the year 1366. Very little is known of his history. It appears probable that he and his younger brother Jan, who was his pupil and assistant, were both employed together at Ghent in the service of Philip of Burgundy, then Count of Charolois, about the year 1410, the date which Vasari assigns as that of the invention of oil-painting. Their names, however, are not recorded in the register of the Guild of St. Luke until 1421, when, on the death of Michelle de France, the wife of Philip of Burgundy, they were admitted into the Guild without payment as a tribute to her memory, they having been "her favourite painters." Hubert van Eyck appears to have lived at Ghent until his death in 1426. Only a part of one great picture, 'The Adoration of the Mystic Lamb,' in the Cathedral of St. Bavon at Ghent, is known for certain to be by his hand, but this is sufficient to testify to his powers. He received the commission for this work from Jodocus Vydt, a burgo-master of Ghent, but did not live to carry it out. He was buried in the chapel in which this great altar-piece was afterwards placed, and his arm was preserved as a relic in the cathedral of St. Bavon until the 16th century, when it disappeared.

M.M.H.

EYCK, JAN VAN, who was born after 1380, is believed to have been about twenty years younger than his brother Hubert, Van Mander's statement to this effect being confirmed by their two portraits on one of the wings of the altar-piece in St. Bavon. In these portraits Hubert looks almost an old man, and Jan quite young. Jan, like his brother, was born at Maaseyck, in Limburg. This district seems to have had an early repute as a seat of art, and one Pol van Limburg is referred to in the archives of France as having been in the service of Jean de Berri from 1400 to 1416. According to tradition the Van Eycks sprang from an artistic family, but nothing is known of their father. It is probable that it was while Jan was acting as assistant to his brother in Ghent that the celebrated invention of oil-painting was made by them, or rather, it should be said, that the unsatisfactory methods of oil-painting previously known were brought to perfection. It is difficult to determine exactly in what the Van Eyck discovery really consisted, for it is certain that a process of mixing oil with colour was known at an earlier date. It was even described by the monk Theophilus in the 11th century in his treatise, 'Incipit tractatus Lombardicus qualiter temperantur colores,' and bas-reliefs and statues were constantly painted with oil-colours in the Netherlands long before the 15th century. But the process invented by the Van Eycks must evidently have solved some difficulty that had hitherto prevented the successful application of oil-colour in painting, for their discovery was at once eagerly welcomed by artists, and the greatest anxiety evinced by the artists of Italy, as well as by those of the Netherlands, to learn the secret of their success. Vasari gives a graphic account of the manner of the discovery, which in his first edition he attributes solely to Jan, the name of Hubert not having then been known to him ; but he just mentions Hubert in the next edition, and other early writers agree in ascribing the discovery to both brothers, Hubert being at the time about forty years of age, and Jan about twenty, working in his brother's workshop. With regard to the discovery itself, it seems to have consisted firstly in a varnish that was drying without being dark, and secondly in a liquid and colourless medium that could be mixed with the colours, and so do away with the necessity of using the old coloured viscous varnish at all.

Soon after his admission into the Guild of Painters at Ghent, Jan van Eyck entered the service of the infamous John of Bavaria, the warlike bishop of Liège, called for his cruelties 'Jean sans Pitié,' and went with him to the Hague after his seizure of Holland. M. A. Pinchart, the learned keeper of the records at Brussels, has at least discovered that the name of "Jean the painter," described as "our gracious Lord's painter," occurs occasionally in the accounts of Hendrik Noothaft, treasurer of Holland from Sept. 23, 1422, to Sept. 11, 1424, and this "Jean the painter" is believed to have been Jan van Eyck.

In the autumn of 1424, shortly before the death of John of Bavaria, Jan van Eyck left his service and returned to that of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy and Count of Flanders, to whom he was appointed court painter and 'varlet de chambre,' with a salary of one hundred livres per annum, and all the "honours, prerogatives, franchises, liberties, rights, profits, and emoluments thereunto appertaining," on the 19th of May, 1425. (See Laborde's 'Les Ducs de Bourgogne,' a work which has made known many particulars of Jan van Eyck's history.) In this honourable position he was treated with great distinction by the Duke, who employed him on various secret missions and journeys, for which he had special payment. What these secret journeys and pilgrimages were about we are not told, but it is surmised that they were probably for the purpose of taking the portraits of various princesses to whom Philip, who was now a widower, thought of offering his hand.

One such journey we know he undertook openly in 1428, when he went to Portugal with the ambassador who was to negotiate the marriage between Philip and the young Infanta. His portrait of the young lady was sent off to Flanders immediately, and it may be supposed pleased the Duke, for the wedding was celebrated by proxy in July, 1429, and Jan van Eyck returned with the bride to Flanders, arriving at Sluys, after long detention by the weather, on Christmas Day, 1429.

From this time Jan van Eyck would seem to have settled in Bruges, where he bought a house in 1430, and probably married about the same time, though the first notice we have of this event is in 1434, when the Duke stood godfather for his infant daughter.

After his settlement in Bruges, Jan van Eyck took up the work which his brother Hubert had left unfinished at his death, on the great altar-piece of the 'Adoration of the Mystic Lamb.' The three upper central panels of this magnificent altar-piece, consisting of the figures of the Father, the Virgin Mary, and St. John the Baptist, and the two outer wings, figures of Adam and Eve, are all that can be ascribed with certainty to Hubert; but probably the whole conception of the subject was his, though the marvellous execution of the central portion, representing the 'Mystic Lamb adored by the Church,' and the other wings, belongs to Jan. This celebrated altar-piece, which must be regarded as one of the most magnificent productions of early Flemish art, and which marks an epoch in the history of painting, was finished by Jan in 1432, six years after his brother's death, and was set up in the presence of an admiring multitude in the Vydt family chapel in St. Bavon in Ghent, where the central portions still remain, the panels of Adam and Eve being now at Brussels, and the other panels at Berlin. Next in importance to the altar-piece at St. Bavon stands a work, now in the Madrid Gallery, representing 'The Triumph of the Church.' The style, subject, and execution of this painting are so similar to those of the 'Adoration of the Mystic Lamb,' that Crowe and Cavalcaselle assign it unhesitatingly to Jan, though Passavant ('Die Christliche Kunst in Spanien'), who was the first to make it known, was in favour of its being by Hubert. Other pictures by Jan van Eyck are the 'Virgin and Child,' usually known as the 'Virgin and the Donor,' in the Louvre, painted for the chancellor Rollin; the 'Virgin and St. Donat,' called also the 'Pala Madonna,' in the Bruges Academy; the 'Virgin and Child,' at Ince Hall, near Liverpool; the careful drawing of 'St. Barbara,' in the Antwerp Museum; 'Salvator Mundi,' and the portrait known as the 'Man with the Pinks,' in the Berlin Gallery; the 'Virgin and St. Barbara,' in the possession of the Marquis of Exeter, known as the 'Burghley House Madonna'; a portrait of his wife, in the Bruges Academy; two portraits of men, in the Vienna Gallery; the 'Virgin, with SS. Catharine and George,' in the Dresden Gallery; and the three paintings in the National Gallery, of which the portraits of Giovanni Arnolfini of Lucca and his wife is one of the most perfect works of the master. "No other picture," says Kugler, "shows so high a development of his powers." It is in truth a marvellous work in its splendour of colour, knowledge of light and shade, and minute rendering of detail. It is signed Johannes de Eyck fuit hic, with the date 1434. Its remarkable history is given in the National Gallery catalogue.

The date of Jan van Eyck's death was formerly as uncertain as that of his birth, but it now seems tolerably well proved that it took place at Bruges on the 9th of July, 1440 (see Weale's 'Notes sur Jean van Eyck'). The last record of him in the ducal accounts is a payment in 1448-49, to enable Lyennie, daughter of Jan van Eyck, to enter the convent of Maaseyck.

The Van Eycks must be regarded as the founders of a new school of painting in Flanders, a school in which realism took the place of mysticism, and tradition gave way before knowledge. They introduced also a true feeling for landscape, and landscape backgrounds and minutely-rendered landscape foregrounds are among the chief charms of their pictures. They left a large number of pupils and followers, who carried on very faithfully the traditions of their art, until about the beginning of the 16th century.

EYCK, LAMBERT VAN. The name of Lambert van Eyck occurs in the accounts of the Duke of Burgundy, and it is generally supposed that he was a brother of Hubert and Jan, and also a painter; in fact, a reference recently observed in the archives of Lille seems to confirm this supposition; but no work of his is known to remain. M.M.H.

EYCK, MARGARET VAN. It is known that the Van Eyck brothers had a sister named Margaret, who is said by old writers to have been an excellent painter; but no works can with any certainty be assigned to her, though her name is often to be met with in catalogues. She died before Jan, and was buried, like her brother Hubert, in St. Bavon at Ghent.

M.M.H.

EYCK, NICOLAAS VAN, who was born at Antwerp in 1627, and died in 1677, painted cavalry encounters and camp scenes. In the Vienna Gallery is a picture by him of 'Troops quartered in a Village,' and in the Lille Museum is an equestrian portrait. He is presumed to have been a brother of Gaspar van Eyck.

EYCKEN, JEAN BAPTISTE VAN, a Belgian historical painter, was born at Brussels in 1809, and studied under Navez, obtaining the first prize at the Brussels Academy in 1835. He died at Schaerbeek, near Brussels, in 1853. Amongst his works are the following:

Abundance. (In the possession of the Queen.)

St. Sebastian.

The Crown of Thorns.

Parmegiano at the Sacking of Rome. (Brussels Museum.)

Descent from the Cross. (Brussels Museum.)

Tobit restoring his Father's Sight.

EYNDEN, FRANS VAN, born at Nymegen in 1694, studied under Elias van Nymegen at Rotterdam. Aided by the counsels of Chevalier Van der Werf, he painted Arcadian scenes, which he executed in the manner of Jan van Huysum, but not with equal perfection. His skies and distances are serene and delicate, and the clouds illumined by the sun are pleasingly reflected in the waters. His scenes are skilfully varied, and the different kinds of trees characterized with a neat and masterly touch; his figures also are well painted, and disposed with judgment. He seldom signed his pictures, unless required to do so by the purchaser. He died at Nymegen in 1742.

EYNDEN, JACOBUS VAN, a nephew of Frans van Eynden, born at Nymegen in 1733, studied art under his father, and painted principally water-colour pictures of flowers, fruit, animals, and views of towns. He, however, devoted a large portion of his time to science. He died at Nymegen in 1824.

EYNDEN, ROELAND VAN, the younger brother of Jacobus van Eynden, was born at Nymegen in 1747, and died at Dordrecht in 1819. Like his brother he devoted but a portion of his time to painting, and is principally known by his works on art and artists, of which the most important is the 'Geschiedenis der Vaderlandsche Schilderkunst,' written in conjunction with Van der Willigen, and published in 1816-1842.

EYNHOUDTS, REMOLDUS, or ROMBOUT, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1605, and died there in 1679. He was a pupil of Adam van Oort, and painted portraits; but he is better known as an engraver. He executed several plates after Rubens, Cornelis Schut, and other painters of the Flemish school; and some of the prints for the Teniers Gallery. They are engraved in a slight, dark style; and his drawing, though not very correct, is bold and masterly. Among other prints by him are the following:

SUBJECTS AFTER RUBENS.

The Adoration of the Magi.

The Resurrection.

The Virgin and Child, with St. Bonaventure and Rubens as St. George.

St. Gregory, surrounded with emblematical figures.

The Four Doctors of the Church, with St. Clara holding the Sacrament.

St. Christopher.

The Virgin with the Infant Christ, seated in a bower.

St. Peter and St. Paul.

The Judgment of Cambyses.

Peace and Prosperity.

EYRE, JAMES, a landscape painter, was born at Derby in 1802, and received instruction from Creswick and De Wint. He died in 1829.

EZPELETA, —, a painter of Aragon, who excelled in miniatures and illumination, was born at Alagon, and died, aged 60, about the middle of the 16th century, at Saragossa, where he illuminated with great delicacy many choir-books for the cathedral.

EZQUERRA, GERONIMO ANTONIO DE, who was a scholar of Antonio Palomino, flourished in the early years of the 18th century. A specimen of his skill in landscape is in the Madrid Gallery; it represents 'Neptune with Tritons and Nereids,' on a wooded sea-shore. He produced a series of Saints for the church of San Felipe Neri at Madrid, and various works for the palace of Buenretiro.

F

FABER, FRÉDÉRIC THÉODORE, a Belgian landscape and genre painter, born at Brussels in 1782, was first instructed by his father, but in 1799 he went to Antwerp, and studied under Ommegeanck. He afterwards established at Brussels a china manufactory, and abandoned painting on canvas for painting on porcelain. He also etched upwards of a hundred plates of landscapes and animals, some after his own designs, and others after Ommegeanck, De Roy, and Van Assche. He died in 1844.

FABER, JOHAN, the elder, was one of the first artists who worked in mezzotint. He was born at the Hague about the year 1660, and came to London about 1687, where he executed a considerable number of plates after his own designs. He died at Bristol in 1721. The following are his best works:

The Portraits of the Founders of Colleges at Oxford and Cambridge.

The Heads of the Philosophers; after Rubens.

Dr. John Wallis, the mathematician; after Kneller.

Humphrey Lloyd, of Denbigh, antiquary. 1717.

FABER, JOHAN, the younger, who was born in Holland in 1684, was instructed by his father, Johan Faber the elder, and by J. van der Banck. He greatly surpassed his father as a mezzotint engraver, and was esteemed the ablest artist of his time in that branch of art, after John Smith. He died in London in 1756. Among his 165 plates, which are executed in a bold and free manner, there are:

The Beauties of Hampton Court; after Kneller.
The Forty-eight Portraits of the Members of the Kit-Cat Club; after the same.
Charles II. in his robes, seated; after Lely. 1750.
Edmund Halley; after Murray. 1722.
A Man playing the Guitar; after F. Hals. 1754.
Ignatius Loyola; after Titian. 1756.
The Children of Frederick, Prince of Wales; after Du Pan.
Caroline, Queen of George II.; after J. van der Banck.
Sir Isaac Newton; after the same. 1726.
Michael Rysbrack, sculptor; after the same.
Enoch Seeman, painter; after the same.
George Lambert, landscape painter; after the same.

FABER, JOHANN, a landscape painter, was born at Hamburg in 1778, and died in the same city in 1846. He worked originally at historical subjects, and painted the altar-piece, 'Suffer Little Children to come unto Me,' for St. Catharine's Church at Hamburg. On his journey to Italy in company with J. A. Koch and Reinhardt, he was induced to adopt landscape painting, in which line he is best known. The Berlin Gallery contains a 'View of the Capuchin Monastery, near Naples,' by him (1830).

FABER, JOHANN THEODOR EUSEBIUS, a landscape painter, was born at Gottleube in 1772, and died at Dresden in 1852. There are two landscapes by him in the Dresden Gallery, one in the Harz mountains, and the other in the Tyrol.

FABER, PIERRE, a French engraver, who resided at Lyons about the year 1621. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, for whom he engraved several plates, in a neat style, but without much taste.

FABER DU FAUR, CHRISTIAN WILHELM VON, a German painter, was born at Stuttgart in 1780. He first devoted himself to painting, but subsequently became a soldier, and as a lieutenant served in the Russian campaign, which he afterwards illustrated by his sketches in a work entitled, 'Blätter aus meinem Portefeuille im Laufe des Feldzugs 1812,' published in 1831-44. His most noteworthy paintings are, 'The Passage of the Beresina,' a work of great merit, and 'The Coffee-House at Wilna.' He died at Stuttgart in 1857.

FABIO, Pio, a painter of Udine, studied at Rome, and in 1678 became a member of the Academy of St. Luke. He afterwards returned to his native place, where he painted several altar-pieces.

FABIUS, called PICTOR, a Roman artist, descended from the celebrated family of the Fabii, painted principally at Rome, and in B.C. 304 decorated the Temple of Salus on the Quirinal Hill, with a representation probably of the battle gained by Bubulus over the Samnites. His paintings were preserved until the reign of the Emperor Claudius, when the above temple was destroyed by fire. They were probably held in little estimation, as Pliny, to whom they must have been known, neither acquaints us with the subjects, nor commends the execution. The art of painting in its rude and early forms was general in Italy, but was founded on the Etruscan style, which never advanced beyond a flat polychromatic treatment. In the fine arts Rome owes all to Greece, and in painting never acquired the individuality which she did in the other arts. That painting was then little respected by the Romans, and that the title of 'pictor' was not considered as an honourable distinction, but rather intended to stigmatize the illustrious character who had degraded his dignity by the practice of an art which was held in no consideration, may be inferred from a passage of Cicero, in the first book of his 'Tusculan Disputations': "An censemus si Fabio nobilissimo homini laudatum esset quod pingeret, non multos etiam apud nos Polycletos et Parrhasios fuisse." No tradition of Roman painting exists earlier than the time of Fabius, nor does his example appear to have been followed by any of his contemporaries; for an interval of nearly a hundred and fifty years occurs before any mention is made of another Roman painter.

FABRE, FRANÇOIS XAVIER, a French painter of historical subjects, portraits, and landscapes, was born at Montpellier in 1766. He studied under Jean Coustou and under David, and obtained the 'grand prix' in 1787. He was at Rome in 1793, and afterwards went to Naples and to Florence, where he resided for some years, becoming a professor in the academy, and marrying secretly (it is said) the Countess of Albany, after the death of Alfieri. He returned to Montpellier in 1826, and there founded the École des Beaux-Arts, of which he became director. He was created a baron in 1830. He died in 1837 at Montpellier, bequeathing to that city the collections of pictures, engravings, cameos, and books which form the Museum which bears his name. Amongst his chief works are:

Philoctetes at Lemnos.
Saul pursued by the Shade of Samuel.
The Judgment of Paris.
The Death of Milo.
Portrait of Alfieri. (Uffizi, Florence.)
Portrait of the Countess of Albany. (Uffizi, Florence.)
Neoptolemus and Ulysses taking from Philoctetes the arrows of Hercules. (Louvre.)
The Death of Abel. (Musée Fabre, Montpellier.)
The Holy Family. (Musée Fabre, Montpellier.)
The Death of Narcissus. (Musée Fabre, Montpellier.)
The Family of the Kings of Etruria, Dukes of Parma. 1804. (Madrid Gallery.)

FABRE, PIERRE, an engraver, was a native of Lyons, where he worked about 1620. He executed the engravings for some works published at Lyons, representing the decorations erected in that city for the reception of Louis XIII. in 1622.

FABRI, ALOISIO, an engraver, was born at Rome in 1778, and died there in 1835. Amongst his many works may be mentioned four plates after Raphael's frescoes in the Vatican, in continuation of a set of engravings commenced by Volpato and Morghen, 'Constantine presenting Rome to the Pope,' 'The Oath of Leo III.,' 'The Coronation of Charlemagne,' and 'Charlemagne's Victory over the Saracens'; and eleven plates after the paintings of Michelangelo in the Sistine Chapel, in continuation of a set of engravings commenced by Cunego: these represent 'David and Goliath,' the 'Brazen Serpent,' 'Judith and Holophernes,' the prophets Isaiah, Daniel, Jonah, and Zachariah, and the Cumæan, Delphic, Libyan, and Persian Sibyls. He also engraved 'The Magi,' after Andrea del Sarto.

FABRI, GIOVANNI, an Italian engraver, who worked at Bologna in the middle of the 18th century, and died probably about 1790, executed some plates in a neat but formal style, among which are :

St. Mary Magdalen; after Pasinelli.
Virgin and Child; after Guido Reni.
St. Jerome; after Carracci.

FABRIANO, ALLEGRETTO (or GRITTO) DA. See NUZI.

FABRIANO, ANTONIO DA, flourished in the 15th century, but the dates of his birth and death are alike uncertain. A 'Coronation of the Virgin' in the Casa Morichi is attributed to him; and also a 'St. Jerome,' with the date 1451, in the Fornari Gallery at Fabriano. He was a feeble assistant of Gentile da Fabriano.

FABRIANO, FRANCESCO DI GENTILE DA. It is uncertain whether this artist was the son or merely pupil of Gentile. He lived in the 15th century, and his paintings are of no very great merit. The following works by him may, however, be mentioned :

Fermo. S. Domenico. Ave Maria.
Rome. Vatican. The Virgin and Child.

FABRIANO, GENTILE DA. See MASSI, GENTILE.

FABRIQUE, NICOLAS LA. See LA FABRIQUE.

FABRITIUS, BERNHARD, a Dutch portrait painter, who flourished from about 1650 to 1672, was a disciple of Rembrandt, whose eminence he sometimes almost reached. His paintings, however, are not all executed with the same care, some of them being faulty in drawing and colouring, whilst others are bold and broad in style. The following works may be noted :

Brunswick. Gallery. St. Peter in the house of Cornelius. 1659.
Brussels. Camberlyn Collection. } Goliath. 1658.
" " } Joan of Arc. 1657.
Copenhagen. Gallery. The Presentation in the Temple. 1668.
Frankfort. Stadel Inst. Portrait of a Young Man. 1650.
" " The Birth of St. John the Baptist. 1669.
Vienna. Academy. Head of a Man.

FABRITIUS, KARL, a Dutch painter, born at Delft about 1624, was a pupil of Rembrandt. He painted portraits and perspective views, and had acquired considerable reputation, when he was killed by the blowing up of the powder magazine at Delft in 1654. A fine 'Head of a Man,' by him, in the Rotterdam Museum, was for a long time ascribed to Rembrandt. Fabritius was the instructor of Jan ver Meer of Delft. Besides the above work by him there are :

Amsterdam. Museum. Herodias with the Head of St. John the Baptist. (Ascribed in the catalogue to Drost.)

Berlin. Gallery. Head of a Man.
Cologne. Wallraf-Richartz Museum. } A Portrait.

FABRITIUS, KILIAN, was a German landscape painter, who from 1633 to 1680 worked at the court of the Elector John George II. of Saxony. Many of his paintings are to be met with at Darmstadt, where there is in the Museum a Landscape by him. At Stockholm there is 'The Expulsion of Hagar,' painted in 1650; and in the Vienna Gallery is a 'Pastoral Landscape.' The following etchings, which are very rare, are also by him :

Christ at the House of Nicodemus.
The Holy Family. 1633.
A Hunting Scene, with the Elector John George II.

FABRIZZI, ANTONIO MARIA, was born at Perugia in 1594. He went to Rome when he was very young; and is said by Pascoli to have commenced his studies under Annibale Carracci, of whose instruction he was deprived by the death of that great master, when he was only fifteen years of age; and it does not appear that he sought the aid of any other instructor. His works evince ingenuity in composition, and great freedom of hand. He died at Perugia in 1649.

FABULLUS. See AMULIUS.

FACCENDA, FRANCESCO, who worked at Perugia from 1760 to 1770, executed the plates of emblems for the edition of Cesare Ripa's 'Iconologia,' published at Perugia in 1764-67.

FACCHETTI, PIETRO, a painter and engraver, born at Mantua in 1535, was instructed by Girolamo and Ippolito Costa. He visited Rome in the pontificate of Gregory XIII., and died in that city in 1613. Although his first essays in historical painting were not without merit, he abandoned that line for the painting of portraits; and his portraits of some of the nobility were so much admired, that there was scarcely a person of distinction at Rome, of either sex, whose likeness he did not paint. His pictures had not only the merit of perfect resemblance, but were designed in a grand style, and admirably coloured. Facchetti was also an engraver, and there are two etchings by him, which are distinguished for their skilful and pure design; they represent a 'Holy Family' after Raphael, and 'Christ bearing the Cross.'

FACCHINETTI, GIUSEPPE, a native of Ferrara, flourished in the 18th century. He was instructed by A. F. Ferrari, and was one of the pupils who chiefly helped to build up the name of the school to which he belonged. He painted in a vigorous and yet tender style, and achieved most of his success in historical, architectural, and perspective paintings. His works are to be found in Santa Caterina da Siena at Ferrara, and in other churches in that neighbourhood.

FACCI, FRANCESCO, a painter of Verona, was a pupil of F. Ricci. He died in 1621.

FACCINI, BARTOLOMMEO, a native of Ferrara, painted portraits and architectural pieces in the style of Girolamo da Carpi. He was killed by falling from a scaffold in 1577. There is a picture attributed to this artist in the Museum at Lille: it represents the 'Martyrdom of St. Agnes.' In many of his works he was assisted by his brother, GIROLAMO FACCINI.

FACCINI, PIETRO, (or FACINI,) was born at Bologna in 1560. He did not display any genius, or disposition for art, until he had arrived at the age of maturity; and it is told by Malvasia, that being in the habit of visiting the academy of the Carracci, though not for the purpose of study, one of the pupils drew a caricature of him, which excited the mirth and ridicule of his fellow-students. On the drawing being shown to Faccini, he took a piece of charcoal, and, without any previous instruction or practice, sketched a satirical likeness of the person who had ridiculed him, which astonished every one present, particularly Annibale Carracci, who persuaded him to study art, and took him under his particular tuition. His assiduity was so great that he practised drawing from the skeleton at night, and it is related that on one of these occasions Annibale, for a practical joke, slyly pulled the cord and caused the skeleton to move, which so offended Faccini that he left their school. He met immediately with employment and applause from the public, and even established an academy in opposition to that of the Carracci, which for a short time was respectably frequented. The delusion did not, however, last long: it was soon discovered that Faccini's design was neither correct nor tasteful, that his figures were uncouth and disproportioned, and the character of his heads without expression or beauty. His colouring was admirable, resembling the freshness of Tintoretto, and this caused Annibale to declare, on seeing his picture of the 'Martyrdom of St. Lawrence,' in San Giovanni in Monte, that in his carnations he seemed to have worked human flesh into his colours. He died in 1602.

The principal works of Faccini are:

Bologna.	Pinacoteca.	The Marriage of St. Catharine.
"	"	The Guardian Saints of Bologna.
"	"	The Virgin and Child.
"	S. Giov. in Monte.	The Martyrdom of St. Lawrence.
"	S. Domenico.
"	"	The Virgin appearing to St. Francis.
"	S. Paolo.	The Crucifixion of St. Andrew.
"	S. Mattia.	The Adoration of the Magi.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Marriage of St. Catharine.
"	"	The Virgin and Child with Saints.
Modena.	Estense Gall.	Study of a Man.

He etched also some plates, which are signed with the annexed monogram

St. Francis of Assisi.
Two Blind Beggars; after Annibale Carracci.
A Boy in a Chimney Corner.
A Dog in a landscape.

FACHERIS, AGOSTINO, a painter of Bergamo, is noticed by Tassi in his 'Lives of the Bergamese Painters,' where he describes a picture by him in the Church of the Trinity at Borgo Sant' Antonio, representing 'St. Augustine with two Angels,' and dated 1528.

FACINI, PIETRO. See FACCINI.

FACIUS, GEORG SIGMUND and JOHANN GOTTLIEB, who were brothers and engravers, were born at Ratisbon, about 1750. Both studied at Brussels, where their father held the office of Russian consul. In the year 1776 they proceeded to London, in order to work for Alderman Boydell, and for whom they completed a great number of plates. They worked chiefly as etchers, and the impressions from their plates are either black or brown, or in colours. They were both living in 1802. Among their best works are:

Benjamin West and his Family; after West. 1777.
Apollo and the Muses; after C. Maratti. 1784.
Apollo with the Muses on Parnassus; after L. Guttenbrunn. 1794.
Hector and Paris; after Angelica Kaufmann.
Abraham entertaining the three Angels; after Murillo.
The Young Bull; after Paulus Potter.

FACKLER, JOSEPH, born at Salzburg in 1698, painted a picture of 'St. Rupert,' in the church of St. Peter in his native city. He died in 1745.

FACTOR, PEDRO NICOLAS, a Spanish painter, was born at Valencia in 1520. The early part of his life was devoted to study, and he is said to have distinguished himself as a poet as well as a painter. In 1537 he entered the Franciscan monastery of Santa Maria de Jesus, where he painted many of his pictures, the best of which is said to have been 'St. Michael triumphing over Lucifer.' None of his works are known to exist, but Cean Bermudez says that they displayed considerable skill in drawing, although somewhat poor in colouring. He also painted miniatures for the choir-books of his convent. Factor died at Valencia in 1583, and in 1786 was declared by Pope Pius VI. a "beato," or saint of the second order. Spain has produced many devout artists, but to Factor alone have the honours of canonization been accorded.

FADINO, IL. See ALENI.

FAENZA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA DA, called BERTUCCI (the Monkey), who painted in the style of Perugino and Pinturicchio, flourished in the early part of the 16th century at Faenza. In the Pinacoteca of that city there are various works ascribed to him, of which the most remarkable is a 'Majesty,' signed by him and bearing the date 1506. Crowe and Cavalcaselle also claim for Bertucci an 'Adoration of the Magi' in the Berlin Gallery, there ascribed to Pinturicchio, and a 'Glorification of the Virgin' in the National Gallery, given in the catalogue to Lo Spagna, who was a pupil of Perugino.

FAENZA, JACOPONE DA. See BERTUCCI.

FAENZA, MARCO DA. See MARCHETTI.

FAENZA, MARCO ANTONIO DA, called also MARCO ANTONIO ROCCHETTI, an Italian painter of the earlier part of the 17th century, is probably the artist mentioned by Vasari with the surname Figurino, who was one of the best disciples of Giulio Romano. His early paintings are of a small size, often representing scenes in the life of St. Sebastian. The following works are also by him:

Faenza. Pinacoteca. The Madonna of the Angels.
" S. Rocco. St. Roch. 1634.

FAENZA, OTTAVIANO DA, an Italian painter of the 14th century, who was instructed by Giotto, spent the greater part of his life at Faenza, where he died. There are several paintings attributed to him to be found in the neighbourhood of Faenza, and at Bologna.

FAENZA, PACE DA, an Italian painter, who flourished during the 14th century, was a pupil of Giotto, and is said to have executed some decorations in fresco on the exterior of San Giovanni at Bologna. He had a particular talent for representing small figures. About the year 1574 the following works by him existed at Forli:

The Holy Cross.
A small picture in tempera, representing the Passion.
Four Scenes from the Life of the Virgin.

FAENZONE, FERRAU. See FANZONE.

FAES, PIETER, a painter of flowers and fruit in the manner of Van Huysum, was born at Meir, near Hoogstraten, in the province of Antwerp, in 1750. His pictures are tastefully composed and delicately pencilled, but are somewhat deficient in vigour and chiaroscuro. Many of his works were transferred from Laeken to Vienna. He died at Antwerp in 1814.

FAES, PIETER VAN DER. See VAN DER FAES.

FAGAN, ROBERT, a portrait painter, who resided for some time in Rome, flourished towards the close of the 18th century.

FAGE, NICOLAS DE LA. See DE LA FAGE.

FAGE, RAYMOND DE LA. See DE LA FAGE.

FÄGERPLAN, AXEL JOHAN, a Swedish artist, born in West Gothland in 1788, was an historical and fruit painter of some renown. He died in 1865.

FAGIVOLI, GIROLAMO, an engraver who worked at Bologna about 1560, published several prints after Correggio, Cecchino de' Salviati, and Francesco Mazzuola.

FAHLCRANTZ, KARL JOHAN, a Swedish landscape painter, was born in Dalecarlia in 1774. He was instructed by P. Ljung, a sculptor and painter, and depicted Northern scenery with a masterly touch, his twilight and moonlight scenes being particularly effective. He died at Stockholm in 1861. Among his best known works are :

The Legend of Frithiof.

Several Views of Stockholm, Christiania, and Sparreholm, the Fortress of Bohus, the Hills of Smedjebacken, Cape Framnäs, the Balestrand, and the Waterfall of Donare.

FAIRAM, JOHN. See FAYRAM.

FAIRFIELD, CHARLES, a painter who died at Brompton in 1804, at the age of about forty-five, is chiefly known by his excellent copies of Dutch paintings.

FAIRHOLT, FREDERICK WILLIAM, a draughtsman, was born in 1818, in London, where his father, a native of Prussia, had settled as a tobacco manufacturer. His first attempts in art were as a drawing-master and scene-painter. He was next employed by Charles Knight in making designs for the 'Pictorial History of England,' 'Pictorial Shakespeare,' and other works. From the commencement of the 'Art Journal,' in 1839, he was a constant contributor, both as author and as artist, and about the same time he seems to have begun to take an interest in antiquities. He wrote several books on the pageants and costume of mediæval England, of which the best are 'Costume in England,' 1846, 'A Dictionary of Terms in Art,' 1854, and 'Rambles of an Archæologist,' 1871, and he left to the Society of Antiquaries a collection of works on these subjects. He died in London in 1866.

FAIRLAND, THOMAS, an engraver and lithographic artist, was born in 1804. After having studied under Fuseli in the Academy, where he gained a silver medal for drawing from the antique, he became a pupil of Charles Heath, but he afterwards gave up line-engraving for lithographic drawing, and eventually devoted himself to portraiture, in which he was very successful. His reproductions of the works of Landseer and Hunt, as well as 'The Recruit; or, Who'll serve the King?' and 'Left Leg foremost,' obtained great popularity. He executed many private portraits for the Queen, whose personal regard he enjoyed until his death in 1852. Among other lithographs by him may be mentioned :

The Poacher's Confederate; after Hancock.

The Rat-catcher; after A. Cooper.

The Deserter.

Mrs. Chisholm; after A. C. Hayter.

FAIRLESS, THOMAS KERR, a landscape painter, was born at Hexham in 1823. He first practised wood-engraving under Nicholson of Newcastle, and then came to London, exhibiting landscapes at the Royal Academy from 1848 to 1851. He died at Hexham in 1853.

FAIRMAN, RICHARD, DAVID, and GIDEON, were engravers of Philadelphia, who died respectively in the years 1821, 1815, and 1827.

FAISTENAUER, ANDREAS. See FEISTENAUER.

FAISTENBERGER. See FEISTENBERGER.

FAITHORNE, WILLIAM, the elder, an eminent engraver, was born in London in 1616. He was a pupil of Robert Peake, a painter and print-seller, who was afterwards knighted by Charles I., and under him he worked three or four years, until the breaking out of the Civil War, when Peake took up arms for the king, and Faithorne was persuaded by his master to accompany him into the service. At the taking of Basing House, where Peake had the rank of lieutenant-colonel, Faithorne was made a prisoner, and was for some time confined in Aldersgate, during which period he resumed his profession, and, among other plates, engraved a small head of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. With much difficulty the solicitation of his friends procured his release, on condition that he left the country. He retired to France, where he became acquainted with Robert Nanteuil, under whose instruction he made great improvement. After the year 1650, he was permitted to return to England, and he established himself as an engraver and printseller near Temple Bar, where he carried on a considerable trade in Italian, Dutch, and English prints. In 1680, however, he quitted his shop, and retired to a more private life in Printing-house Yard, Blackfriars, where he continued to engrave, and to draw portraits in crayons, an art which he had learned in Paris. He died in 1691.

The works of this excellent engraver consist chiefly of portraits, in which he specially excelled. Many of them are of an admirable execution, clear, brilliant, and full of colour. Previous to his journey to Paris, he had adopted the Flemish and Dutch mode of engraving; but on his return from France his style was greatly improved. In his historical prints he shows a deficiency and incorrectness of drawing; and it is not, certainly, from these that a just estimate can be formed of his great ability. His plates are extremely numerous, some of them exceedingly scarce, and very valuable. When he did not fix his name to them, he marked them with a cipher composed of two Fs. F, F The following are his best portraits; a more complete list will be found in Fagan's 'Descriptive Catalogue of the Engraved Works of William Faithorne,' 1888.

Sir William Paston, Bart.; 1659; extremely fine.

Lady Paston; after Van Dyck; 1649; very fine.

Margaret Smith, afterwards Lady Herbert; after the same.

Montagu Bertie, Earl of Lindsey; after the same.

William Sanderson; after Zoust. 1658.

Anne Bridges, Countess of Exeter; after Van Dyck.

Samuel Collins, M.D.; W. Faithorne ad vivum del. et sculp.

John Kersey, mathematician; after Zoust. 1672.

John La Motte, Citizen of London.

John, Viscount Mordaunt.

Thomas, Earl of Elgin. 1662.

Mary, Lady Langham.

Henry Cary, Earl of Monmouth.

Thomas Killigrew, with a Dog; after W. Sheppard.

Thomas Stanley; after Lely.

Robert Bayfield; æt. 25; with a large hat. 1654.

Robert Bayfield; æt. 27; without a hat.

Francis Rous, Provost of Eton. 1656.

Sir Henry Spelman.

Thomas Hobbes.

Samuel Leigh. 1661.

Queen Henrietta Maria, with a Veil; in the manner of Mellan.

Thomas Mace; after Cooke; prefixed to his 'Musicks Monument,' 1676.

Sir Orlando Bridgman.

Sir John Fortescue.

Robert Boyle; oval.

Elias Ashmole; bust, in a niche.

William Oughtred; in the style of Hollar.

William Harvey.

Henry Lawes.

John Milton; drawn and engraved from life in 1670, as a frontispiece to Milton's 'History of Britain.'

John Wallis, D.D., prefixed to his 'Mechanica.'
 Sir Francis Englefield, Bart.; oval; extremely scarce.
 Oliver Cromwell, whole length, in armour, a large emblematical Print, with various devices and mottoes; very scarce.

SUBJECTS AFTER MASTERS, &c.

The Holy Family; after Laurent de La Hire.
 The Repose in Egypt; after Simon Vouet.
 Landscape, with a waggon; after Rubens.
 The Fall of Phaeton; after Diepenbeek.
 Title-page and ten plates for Bishop Jeremy Taylor's
 'Great Exemplar,' or Life of Christ, 1653.
 Æneas and the Golden Branch, and Æneas killing Turnus; after F. Cleyn; engraved for Ogilby's translation of Virgil, 1654.

FAITHORNE, WILLIAM, the younger, a son of William Faithorne the elder, was born in 1656.
 He was instructed in the elementary principles of design by his father, but practised a different branch of engraving, being chiefly engaged in scraping portraits in mezzotint. His merit in that line would have secured to him both profit and reputation; but neglecting his business, he fell into distress, which occasioned his father much sorrow. He died not earlier than 1701. The following are esteemed his best portraits:

Thomas Flatman, poet and painter.
 Mary, Princess of Orange; after Hanneman.
 Sir William Reade, oculist to Queen Mary.
 Queen Anne, when Princess of Denmark.
 George, Prince of Denmark.
 Frederick, Duke of Schomberg; after Dahl.
 John Dryden; after Clostermann.
 Sir Richard Haddock; after the same.
 John Moore, Bishop of Ely.
 Sophia, Electress of Hanover.
 Sophia Dorothea, Princess of Hanover.
 Charles XII. of Sweden; after Ehrenstrahl.
 Mrs. Plowden; after Clostermann.

FALBE, JOACHIM MARTIN, a portrait painter, born at Berlin in 1739, was instructed by Harper and A. Pesne. Several etchings after Rembrandt, or in the style of that master, which are attributed to him, and some of which are signed with Falbe's monogram, are in existence. In 1764 he was elected a member of the Academy at Berlin, in which city he died in 1782.

FALCH, JOHANN, an animal painter, was born at Augsburg in 1687, and died in 1727. In the Hermitage at St. Petersburg are two pictures by him of insects and reptiles.

FALCIERI, BIAGIO, was born at Brentonico in 1628, and studied at Verona under Locatelli, and at Venice under Cavaliere Pietro Liberi. Among his works there is in the church of the Dominicans at Verona, a large picture of 'The Council of Trent';
 in the upper part of which he has represented 'St.
 Thomas vanquishing the heretics.' There exists also an etching by him, executed with great spirit, representing 'St. Jerome in the Wilderness.' He died in 1703.

FALCINI, DOMENICO, an Italian engraver, flourished at Siena in the latter part of the 16th century. There are by him some woodcuts after Raphael and other masters, which are executed on three separate blocks, one for the outline, another for the half-tint, and the third for the dark shadows. He also engraved on metal. He marked his prints with the annexed cipher, but he has left one plate with a monogram composed of the letters D.F.F.

FALCK, JEREMIAS, a designer and engraver, was born at Dantzic about 1619. He passed some time in Paris, and from the resemblance of his style to that of Cornelis Bloemaert, would appear to have studied the engravings of that master. On leaving France he went in succession to Copenhagen, Stockholm, and Amsterdam, where he executed several plates for the celebrated cabinet of Reynst. Subsequently he worked at Hamburg, and it is probable that he died there about 1663.

 His plates are distinguished for the splendour of their effect, and he engraved with equal success portraits and historical subjects, both of which have great merit. The following are among his best works:

PORTRAITS.

Louis XIII. of France; after Justus van Egmont. 1643.

This is considered his best work.

Christina, Queen of Sweden; after D. Beck.

Peter Gembichi, Bishop of Croatia; after the same.

Leonard, Count of Torstenson; after the same. 1649.

Axel, Count of Oxenstjern; after the same. 1653.

Adolphus John, Prince Palatine; after the same.

Charles Gustavus, Prince of Sweden; after the same.

Nell Gwynne; after Lely.

Karl Gustav Wrangel; after D. Klocker.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Large Crucifixion; after Van Dyck.

Christ with the Crown of Thorns; after the same.

The Concert; after Giorgione.

Esau selling his Birthright; after Tintoretto. 1663.

Hunters with Hares; after the same.

The House of Pleasure; after Rubens.

Pallas with the Shield and Lance; after A. Bloemaert.
 1656.

St. John preaching in the Wilderness; after the same.
 1661.

Satyr and Ceres; after F. Snayers.

The Virgin with the Infant uttering Blessings; after Justus van Egmont.

The Virgin with the Infant; after J. Stella.

Semiramis; after Guerchino.

The Cyclops; after Michelangelo da Caravaggio.

FALCKEISEN, THEODOR, a Swiss designer and engraver, born at Basle in 1765, was instructed by Holzhall and Karl Guttenberg. Amongst his works is an excellent plate after Benjamin West's
 'Death of General Wolfe.'

FALCKENBURG, FRIEDRICH VON, a German landscape and historical painter, etched a few portraits, and other subjects, in a slight, scratchy style; they are marked F.V.F. He lived at Nuremberg, and died in 1623.

FALCO, AGNOLO. The name of this artist is affixed to a rude, coarse etching, representing a landscape, into which is introduced the story of Apollo and Daphne. Though it is incorrectly drawn and very indifferently executed, it appears to have been the work of a painter, and is from his own design.

FALCO, JUAN CONCHILLOS. See CONCHILLOS
 FALCO.

FALCONE, ANIELLO, called L'ORACOLO DELLE
 BATTAGLIE, was born at Naples in 1600, and was a scholar of Giuseppe Ribera, called Spagnoletto.
 He spent some years in France, where may still be met with several of his paintings, which are rare and highly valued. He distinguished himself as a painter of battles and skirmishes of cavalry, which he composed and designed with great fire and animation. He was equally correct in the drawing of his figures and horses, and their various movements are expressed with the most characteristic propriety. His touch is bold and free, and his colouring vigorous and effective. He was not less successful in his easel pictures than in those of a larger size; and his best works were esteemed little inferior to the admirable productions of Borgognone. Aniello Falcone was the founder of a large school in his native city, and was one of the masters of Salvator Rosa. He died at Naples in 1665. Among his paintings are the following:

- Madrid. Gallery. A Fight between Romans and Barbarians.
 " " A Fight between Turkish and Christian Cavalry. 1631.
 Paris. Louvre. A Fight between Turks and Christians.

Falcone was also an etcher, and there are by him twenty prints, in which he shows lively imagination and bold and intelligent design; they somewhat resemble the works of Parmigiano, and are executed with a light and spirited point. Among his etchings may be mentioned:

A battle between naked Men on foot and on horseback. 1618.

Apollo and Marsyas; after Parmeggiano.

Four plates of Apostles: James the Less, James the Greater, John the Evangelist, and Matthew.

A young Woman sleeping and suckling a Child.

The Adoration of the Magi; after Raphael.

FALCONET, PIERRE ÉTIENNE, was the son of the eminent sculptor, Étienne Maurice Falconet, who executed the equestrian statue of Peter the Great at St. Petersburg. He was born in Paris in 1741, and about 1766 came to London, where he became a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, and painted a great number of portraits until 1773, about which time he returned to Paris, where he died in 1791. Among his works may be mentioned the portraits of twelve of the foremost artists in London, the decorations in the Chinese Temple at the seat of the Baroness De Grey in Bedfordshire, and several extravagant historical pieces. Earlom and others have engraved some of his works.

FALCONETTO, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, was born at Verona in the 15th century. He was instructed by his father, Jacopo Falconetto, and excelled in painting animals and fruit. Many of his works are in Verona and its environs. He died at Roveredo.

FALCONETTO, GIOVANNI MARIA, the brother of Giovanni Antonio Falconetto, born in 1458 at Verona, was both a painter and an architect, and seems to have devoted himself more during his long life to the latter profession than to the former. He learned the elements of painting from his father, Jacopo Falconetto, and is said to have spent twelve years of his early life in Rome, measuring and studying the ancient edifices of that city. He was a follower of Liberale and an imitator of Melozzo da Forlì, and he painted largely in the churches of Verona. In 1493 he decorated, in monochrome, the cupola of the chapel of San Biagio in SS. Nazzaro e Celso, and displayed a profound knowledge of perspective effect in his arrangement of its various subjects. His finest works are the religious allegories which he executed from 1509 to 1516, in the church of San Pietro Martire at Verona. Of his panel pictures there remain a 'Virgin and Child, between SS. Augustine and Joseph,' painted in 1523, at San Giuseppe, Verona; an 'Annunciation,' above the altar of the Emili Chapel in San Zeno, Verona; an 'Augustus and the Sibyl,' in the Museum of that city; and an 'Assumption of the Virgin,' in the Berlin Gallery. The latter years of his life were devoted to architecture, and his death occurred at Padua in 1534.

FALDA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian architect and etcher, was born at Valduggia, in the Milanese, in 1648. It is not said by whom he was instructed; but his style bears a great resemblance to that of Israel Silvestre. He was at Rome from 1669 to 1691, and there are by him several designs and engravings of the churches, gardens, fountains, and public buildings of that city, distinguished for their good perspective, and embellished with figures neatly drawn. The date of his death is not known. The following are among his best works:

Two Views of the Piazza Navona.

Two Views in Rome; the Basilica of St. Peter's, and the Fountain of St. Peter's.

A large plate of St. Peter's, and the Buildings round it.

A View of the Interior of St. Peter's, on the occasion of the Canonization of St. Francis of Sales.

A View of the Castle of St. Angelo; after Bernini.

The Fountains of Rome; 31 plates.

The Gardens of Rome; 19 plates.

FALDONI, ANTONIO, an Italian painter and engraver, born at Ascoli, in the Marca di Trevisano, about the year 1687, first studied landscape painting under Antonio Luciano; but his pictures are little known. He afterwards applied himself to engraving, and imitated first the style of Gilles Sadeler, and afterwards that of Mellan, in which he was very successful; and several of his prints are deservedly admired. He engraved a set of portraits of the Doges of Venice, and the Procurators of St. Mark; besides which, there are the following prints by him:

PORTRAITS.

Marco Ricci, painter; after Rosalba Carriera.

Antonio Maria Zanetti, engraver; after the same.

Luca Carlevaris, painter and engraver.

Sebastiano Ricci, painter.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

A Holy Family, with Angels; after Sebastiano Ricci.

The Conception; after the same.

The Nativity; after Pietro da Cortona.

David playing on the harp before Saul; after G. Camerata.

David dying from the wrath of Saul; after the same.

Part of the Drawings by Parmigiano for the collection published by Zanetti.

FALENS, CHARLES VAN. See VALENS.

FALERI, DOMENICO, was a painter of the school of Siena, where he was born in 1595. In the church of the Hospital of Monagnese in Siena is a picture of the 'Nativity,' and other pictures are in a Benedictine priory in the neighbourhood. He died in 1640.

FALGANI, GASPARE, an Italian landscape painter, was born at Florence in the beginning of the 17th century. He was a pupil of Valerio Marucelli, and devoted himself entirely to landscape painting, of which specimens are to be found in various Italian galleries.

FALLARO, JACOPO, an Italian painter of the 16th century, was a contemporary with Titian. According to Vasari, there is in the church of the Jesuits at Venice, on the door of the organ, a painting by this artist of 'Giovanni Colombini receiving from the Pope the cloak of the Order.'

FALLOCCO, NICCOLÒ, a painter and native of Ortina, who flourished about 1740, was instructed by Francesco Solimena, whose works he copied with great success.

FALOT, NICOLAS, a French historical painter, flourished between the years 1576 and 1627. The dates of his birth and death are unknown.

FALZAGALLONI. See FERRARA, STEFANO DA.
FANCELLI, PIETRO, was born at Bologna in 1764, and painted in oil and tempera in the Venetian style for churches and castles, as well as scenes for theatres. He died in 1850.

FANO, BARTOLOMMEO and POMPEO DA, father and son, who were both painters, flourished at Fano about the year 1530. According to Lanzi, they painted in conjunction for the church of San Michele, in that city, a picture of the 'Raising of Lazarus,' dated 1534, on which he remarks that it is surprising to observe how little they had attended to the reformation and improvement which had almost generally been adopted by other artists of their time. It is painted in the Gothic style of the middle of the preceding century. Pompeo, however, after the death of his father, attempted the more modern taste, and painted some pictures which gained for him considerable reputation. Pompeo da Fano was the first instructor of Taddeo Zuccheri.

FANOLI, MICHELE, an Italian lithographer and engraver, who was born at Cittadella about 1807, studied in the Venice Academy, and under Cicognara. He spent many years in Paris, whence in 1860 he was recalled by the Italian government to found a school of lithography at Milan, which he directed till his death in that city in 1876. He died poor, leaving a collection of sketches to the Venice Academy. Amongst his reproductions are:

Orpheus; after Jalabert.

The Holy Women at the Tomb; after Landelle.

Our Lord and SS. Peter and John; after the same.

Will of the Wisp; after Gendron.

The Two Foscari; after Grigoletti.

The Festival of the Virgin; after Galteri.

FANSAGA, COSIMO, (or FANZAGA,) a painter, sculptor, and architect, was born at Bergamo in 1591, and was a scholar of Pietro Bernini at Rome. Most of his works were executed at Naples, where he erected a number of edifices, and in some instances decorated them with statues and pictures of his own production. He died in 1678.

FANSHAWE, CATHARINE MARIA, an amateur etcher, was born in London about 1775, and died about 1834. She etched a few historical and figure subjects with considerable ability.

FANTETTI, CESARE, a designer and etcher, was born at Florence about the year 1660. He resided chiefly at Rome, where he engraved several plates, after his own designs and those of other masters. Conjointly with Pietro Aquila, he engraved the plates from the paintings by Raphael in the Vatican, called Raphael's Bible, thirty-seven of the series being executed by Fantetti, and the remainder by Aquila. He also engraved the following prints:

Agrippina with the Ashes of her Husband; after Franc. Rosa.

Christ praying in the Garden; after L. Carracci.

A Charity, with three Children; after Annibale Carracci.

Latona insulted by Niobe; after the same.

Flora surrounded by Cupids; after Ciro Ferri.

The Death of St. Anne; after Andrea Sacchi.

Some Friezes, and other subjects, from various Italian masters.

FANTI, ERCOLE GAETANO, born at Bologna in 1687, was a pupil of M. A. Chiarini. He first painted in Italy stage decorations, but afterwards went to Vienna, where he was made Superintendent of the Liechtenstein Gallery. He died at Vienna in 1759.

FANTI, VINCENZO, the son of Ercole Gaetano Fanti, studied first under Altomonte, and then went to Rome and Turin, and eventually in 1744 to Vienna, where he succeeded his father as Superintendent of the Liechtenstein Gallery. The dates of his birth and death are not known. His portrait is in the Uffizi, Florence.

FANTONE, FRANCESCA, a painter of the Bolognese School, who flourished in 1760, was the niece and pupil of Gian Gioseffo dal Sole, but she afterwards studied under Cavazzoni. She died about 1772.

FANTUZZI, ANTONIO. See TRENTO, ANTONIO DA.

FANZAGA, COSIMO. See FANSAGA.

FANZONE, FERRAU, (or FAENZONE,) was born at Faenza in 1562, and, according to the Abbate Titi, studied at Rome under the Cavaliere Vanni, where he painted several frescoes in San Giovanni in Laterano, the Scala Santa, and the church of Santa Maria Maggiore. There are, however, some pictures at Ravenna, particularly a 'Deposition from the Cross,' in the church of the Dominicans, and a 'Probatica,' at the Confraternità di San Giovanni, which partake so much of the fine style of Lodovico Carracci, that Fanzone has been supposed to have been educated in his academy. His design is grand and correct, with great amenity in his colouring, and a fine impasto. He died in 1645.

FA PRESTO. See GIORDANO, LUCA.

FARELLI, GIACOMO, a Neapolitan painter, was born in 1624, and brought up under Andrea Vaccaro, whose style he at first followed, but he afterwards imitated with more success that of Guido. He died in 1706. Of his productions there remain in Santa Maria Maggiore at Naples, 'The Fall of the Angels,' and 'The Ascension'; others are in SS. Apostoli and Redenzione dei Cattivi.

FARFUSOLA, BARTOLOMMEO, a painter born at Verona, flourished in the year 1640. He has left several pictures in the churches of Verona, among others a 'St. Ursula' in the church dedicated to that saint.

FARGUE. See LA FARGUE.

FARINA, PIER FRANCESCO, an Italian painter who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, and was employed in decorating the palace of Carlsruhe and several churches of Bologna.

FARINATI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, called by Vasari BATTISTA DA VERONA, and by others in error BATTISTA ZELOTI and BATTISTA FONTANA, was born at Verona in 1532, and is said to have been instructed by Paolo, his uncle, or, according to others, by Antonio Badile. He was the fellow-student and friend of Paolo Veronese, with whom he co-operated in several important works in the public edifices at Venice, as well as in the Villa Soranza at Castelfranco. He is numbered by Vasari among the disciples of Titian. His picture of the 'Holy Family,' in the Lochis-Carrara Gallery at Bergamo, is painted entirely in the style of that master, and it is to his studies in that school that he was indebted for the warmth and harmony of his colouring. His style is marked by its grandeur, though inferior in grace to that of Paolo Veronese. As a fresco-painter he possessed especial ability. He died in 1592. The following paintings are by him:

Venice. Palazzo Reale.	The Virtues and Study.
Vicenza. Monte d. Pieta.	The Decoration of the Façade.
" Cathedral.	The Conversion of St. Paul.
" "	The Miraculous Draught of Fishes.

FARINATI, ORAZIO, the son and disciple of Paolo Farinati, was an historical painter and etcher who was living at Verona in 1607. During his short career he gave proof of uncommon ability, and promised to reach an elevated rank among the artists of his country, when he died in the prime of life. He etched a few plates from the designs of his father, which are frequently confounded with those of the latter. There exist the following paintings by him:

Verona.	S. Paolo.	The Descent from the Cross (a copy after his father).
"	S. Maria del Paradiso.	St. James. 1607.
"	"	Pope Gregory. 1607.
"	S. Stefano.	Descent of the Holy Ghost (considered his best work).

Both father and son signed their paintings with a snail, and their prints, in addition to the snail, with their initials or full names.

Orazio Farinati's best plates are:

The Descent from the Cross; after Paolo Farinati. 1593.

The Finding of the Cross, with St. Francis and other figures; after the same.

The Destruction of Pharaoh's Host; after the same. 1599.

The Holy Family, with St. John.

FARINATI, PAOLO, of the family of the Uberti, was born at Verona in 1522. He was a pupil of Niccolò Giolfinio and A. Badile, but studied also the works of Parmigiano, and soon surpassed his instructors. To judge from the large style of his design, it would be thought that he had been brought up in the school of Giulio Romano; and it is certain that he studied for some time at Mantua the works of that master. His death occurred in 1606. Among his works there are:

Berlin.	Gallery.	A Presentation in the Temple.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Venus seated, and two Loves.
Mantua.	Cathedral.	St. Martin.
Modena.	Estense Gall.	Angels playing a Trumpet (water-colour).
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Adoration of the Magi.
Venice.	SS. Cosimo e Damiano.	Presentation in the Temple
Verona.	S. Giorgio.	The Four Evangelists.
"	S. M. in Organo.	The Multiplication of the Loaves (painted in his 79th year).
"	"	The Murder of the Innocents.
"	"	The Emperor Constantine ordering a number of Children to be murdered.
"	"	Christ walking on the Sea.
"	S. Giovanni in Fonte.	St. Gregory feeding the Poor.
"	Gallery.	The Baptism of Christ.
"	SS. Nazzaro e Celso.	Christ before the People.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Frescoes.
		A Heathen Sacrifice.

There are several etchings by Paolo Farinati executed in a free, bold, and masterly style. Like his paintings he frequently marked them with the accompanying device of a snail; but he sometimes signed them with his name, or with the initials P. F. or P. V. F. The following are from his own designs:

St John. 1567.

St. Jerome kneeling, leaning on a Bank.

Mary Magdalen seated, with a Book and a Crucifix.

The Virgin, with the Infant Jesus and St. John.

Angels holding the Instruments of the Passion.

Venus and Cupid. 1566.

A Charity, with three Children.

Venus and Cupid at the Forge of Vulcan.

FARINGTON, GEORGE, a painter of historical subjects, was born in 1754 at Warrington, of which place his father was rector. He was educated under West, and in 1780 obtained the gold medal at the Royal Academy for his 'Macbeth.' This promising artist afterwards went to the East Indies, where he would undoubtedly have acquired both fame and fortune, had he not died in the prime of life in 1788.

FARINGTON, JOSEPH, a landscape painter, the elder brother of George Farington, was born in 1747 at Leigh, in Lancashire. He was a scholar of Richard Wilson, and from 1778 to 1813 he exhibited constantly at the Royal Academy, where he was elected an Associate in 1783, and an Academician in 1785. He was also a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. His works are chiefly views of the scenery of Westmoreland and Cumberland, which have been engraved by Byrne, Pouncey, Medland, and others. In 1794 he published seventy-six views of the river Thames. He died in 1821. The South Kensington Museum possesses two water-colour drawings by him.

FARJAT, BENOÎT, a French engraver, was born at Lyons in 1646. He was taught the elements of the art by Guillaume Chasteau, whose manner he at first adopted; but he afterwards went to Rome, and acquired a greater command of the graver, and a better style of design, though he is not always correct. He died in Rome about 1720. There are by him some portraits, and various subjects from the Italian masters; the following are the most esteemed:

PORTRAITS.

Cardinal Federigo Coccia; after L. David.

Cardinal Cornaro; after the same. 1697.

Cardinal Tommaso Ferrari; after the same. 1695.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Holy Family, with St. John; after Albani.

The Holy Family, with St. John presenting a Cross; after Pietro da Cortona.

The Marriage, or, according to others, the Coronation, of St. Catharine; after Agostino Carracci.

The Virgin and Infant Jesus, with St. John presenting some fruit; after Annibale Carracci.

The Temptation of St. Anthony; after the same.

The Communion of St. Jerome; after Domenichino.

The Death of St. Francis Xavier; after G. B. Gaulli.

The Marriage of the Virgin; after C. Maratti.

The Nativity of Christ; after the same.

The Race of Atalanta; after P. Locatelli.

FARNBOROUGH, AMELIA LONG, Baroness, who was born in 1772, and died in 1837, was a very clever amateur water-colour painter. She exhibited as an honorary exhibitor many drawings at the Royal Academy. She was a daughter of Sir Abraham Hume, Bart., and in 1793 married Sir Charles Long, afterwards Lord Farnborough.

FARRER, NICHOLAS, a portrait painter, born at Sunderland in 1750, was a pupil of Pine, and a friend of Sir Joshua Reynolds and Northcote. His portraits, without being imitations, bear a strong resemblance to Sir Joshua's manner, and have sometimes been mistaken for that master's work. He painted the portraits of the Duke of Richmond and family. He died in 1805.

FARUFFINI, FEDERICO, a native of Sesto, who was distinguished as a painter and engraver, studied at Rome. His altar-pieces and other historical subjects are original in conception, but of especial merit is his 'Macchiavelli and Borgia,' which he both painted and engraved, and for which he obtained a medal in 1866. He died at Milan.

FASOLO, BERNARDINO, the son of Lorenzo Fasolo, was living in the 16th century at Pavia. He is known to have been a member of the council of the Guild of Genoa in 1520, but no dates can be given of his birth or death. The following pictures are by him:

Berlin.	Gallery.	A Holy Family.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Venetian Lady.
Paris.	Louvre.	Virgin and Child. 1518.

FASOLO, GIOVANANTONIO, who was born at Vicenza in 1528, first studied under Battista Zelotti; but the brilliant reputation of Paolo Veronese induced him to enter the school of that distinguished master, under whom he became a good historical painter. In the church of San Rocco at Vicenza is a fine picture by Fasolo, representing the 'Pool of Bethesda,' a grand composition, executed in a style that would not have disgraced Paolo Veronese; in the church of the Padri Servi is another fine picture by this master, the 'Adoration of the Magi.' In the residence of the Prefect of that town there are also by him three pictures of subjects from Roman history, representing 'Mutius Scævola before Porsena,' 'Horatius defending the Bridge,' and 'Marcus Curtius leaping into the Gulf.' He died in 1572.

FASOLO, LORENZO, called LORENZO DI PAVIA, was a Lombard painter living in the early part of the 16th century, who went from Pavia to Genoa, and was one of the artists employed by Lodovico Sforza in 1490 in the decorations of the Porta Giovia Palace at Milan. His chief work is an altar-piece representing 'The Deposition from the Cross,' which he painted in 1508, for the nuns of Santa Chiara, at Chiavari, where it still remains. The Louvre has by him 'The Family of the Virgin,' dated 1513. His death occurred before 1520.

FASSETTI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, born at Reggio in 1684 of poor parents, entered the studio of Giuseppe Dallamano as a colour mixer, and it was not till he was eighteen years of age that he made his first attempt at art. He entered the studio of Francesco da Bibiena, and became one of the best decorative painters of his day. He died after 1772.

FASSIN, NICOLAS HENRI JOSEPH DE, a Belgian landscape painter, was born at Liège in 1728. Early in life he served in the French army, and it was not until he was thirty-four years of age that he commenced the study of art in the Academy at Antwerp. He afterwards visited Italy and Switzerland, and resided for some time at Geneva. He painted a landscape for the Empress of Russia, for which he was handsomely rewarded, and many others are to be found at Liège, and in Germany and England. He died in his native city in 1811. His biography, with a list of his pictures, was published by Van Hust in 1837.

FATIO, ANTOINE LÉON MOREL. See MOREL-FATIO.

FATTORE, IL. See PENNI.

FAUCCI, CARLO, an Italian engraver, was born at Florence in 1729. He was a pupil of Carlo Gregori, and engraved portraits and historical pieces with ability. On leaving that artist, he engraved several plates for the collection of the gallery of the Marquis Gerini, and afterwards visited England, where he engraved some plates for Boydell. He died at Florence in 1784. Amongst others, the following prints are by him:

The Birth of the Virgin; after Pietro da Cortona.
The Adoration of the Shepherds; after the same.
482

The Martyrdom of St. Andrew; after Carlo Dolci.
The Coronation of the Virgin; after Rubens.
A Bacchanalian subject; after the same.
Cupid; after Guido.

RAIMONDO FAUCCI, his nephew, assisted him in the execution of many of his plates.

FAUCHERY, AUGUSTIN, a French painter and engraver, was born in Paris in 1800, and was instructed by Guérin and Regnault. One of his best engravings is a plate of 'Mona Lisa,' after Leonardo da Vinci. He died in Paris in 1843.

FAUCHIER, LAURENT, a French portrait painter, was a pupil of Pierre Mignard. He flourished in the second half of the 17th century.

FAUCUS, GEORGE. See FOCUS.

FAULKNER, BENJAMIN RAWLINSON, a portrait painter, was born at Manchester in 1787, and until 1813 pursued a commercial life at Gibraltar. Then, returning to England on account of an attack of the plague, he devoted himself to art, receiving his first instruction from his brother. After some study in London, he began exhibiting at the Royal Academy in 1821; but his practice was chiefly in Manchester. He died at Fulham in 1849. Amongst his works are:

John Dalton, the chemist. 1841. (Royal Society, London.)
John McCulloch, the geologist. (Royal Society, London.)
Rev. Dr. Raffles. (Lancashire Independent College.)

FAULKNER, JOSHUA WILSON, a portrait painter, the brother of Benjamin Faulkner, was born in the latter part of the 18th century. He was a native of Manchester, where he spent the greater part of his life, but he exhibited at the Liverpool Institution, and occasionally at the Royal Academy. He died soon after 1820. There is a portrait of Sir John Ross, the Arctic discoverer, by him.

FAUR, CHRISTIAN WILHELM VON FABER DU. See FABER DU FAUR.

FAURAY, ANTOINE DE. See FAVRAY.

FAURE, EUGÈNE, a French painter of allegories, mythological subjects, and portraits, was born at Seyssinet, near Grenoble, in 1822. He studied under David d'Angers and Rude, and his first work, a landscape, now in the Grenoble Museum, appeared at the Salon in 1847. He died in Paris in 1879. The following are his chief works:

Dreams of Youth. 1857.
First Steps in Love. 1861.
Confidence. 1863.
Eve. 1864.
La Source. 1878.

FAVA, GIANGIACOMO, commonly known as MACRINO D'ALBA, was a painter of the old Lombard school, who worked from about 1496 to 1508. One of his best pictures, a 'Madonna and Child,' is in a chapel of the Certosa, near Pavia. The Städel Institute at Frankfurt possesses a 'Madonna' by him, with side-pictures from the history of St. Joachim and St. Anne.

FAVA, PIETRO DA, Count, a Bolognese nobleman, who distinguished himself not only as a patron of art, but also as an amateur, was born at Bologna in 1667. He studied art under L. Pasinelli, and was the protector and friend of Donato Creti and Ercole Graziani. He chiefly studied the works of the Carracci, whose style he preferred to every other. In the church of San Tommaso dal Mercato at Bologna is an altar-piece by him of the 'Virgin and Infant, with St. Albert, St. Paul, and other Saints'; and at Ancona, in the cathedral, are the 'Adoration of the Magi,' and the 'Resurrection.'

He was a member of the Clementine Academy, and died in 1744.

FAVANNE, HENRI DE, (or FAVANNES,) a painter of historical subjects, was born in London in 1668, and was instructed by René Houasse. He travelled through England, and afterwards lived ten years in Spain. He then went to Paris, where he was elected rector of the Academy, and died in 1752.

FAVANNE, JACQUES DE, (or FAVANNES,) the son of Henri de Favanne, was at first an engraver, and was instructed by H. F. Thomassin, but he afterwards took to painting, and executed principally sea-pieces. He was residing in Paris about 1760. He is mentioned by Basan as the engraver of a plate after Watteau of 'The Pleasures of Summer.'

FAVRAY, Chevalier ANTOINE DE, (or FAURAY,) born in 1706, was a pupil of Jean François de Troy, the younger, whom he accompanied to Rome when the latter was appointed Director of the Academy in that city. At Malta, in the service of the Knights of the Order, he executed several representations of Maltese manners and customs, one of which in the Louvre served for his reception into the Academy in 1762. A picture of the 'Annual Thanksgiving of the Knights of St. John, in the church of their patron saint, for their deliverance from the Turks,' was sent with the above to Paris. In 1762 he went with the French ambassador, the Chevalier de Vergennes, to Constantinople, where he remained till 1771, when, on war breaking out between Turkey and Russia, he returned to Malta. From this time all further details of his life are unknown, though he seems to have been alive in 1789, and probably in 1791. In the La Caze collection in the Louvre is a picture of 'Maltese Ladies paying a visit.' His portrait is in the Uffizi, Florence.

FAXARDO, JUAN ANTONIO, a Spanish painter, was a native of Seville, to whom Alonzo Miguel de Tobar was sent when a boy to learn painting.

FAY, JOSEPH, a German painter, born at Cologne in 1813, attended from 1833 to 1841 the Academy at Düsseldorf, and afterwards studied at Munich, and at Paris under Paul Delaroche. He first painted historical subjects, and had a happy talent in representing scenes from the life and manners of the old Germans, but not meeting with sufficient encouragement, he changed his style for genre painting, for which purpose he visited Italy. He died at Düsseldorf in 1875. The following are among his best works:

Samson and Delilah. 1839. (Cologne Museum.)
Cleopatra.

A large Frieze. (Elberfeld Court-house.) This has perished, but some cartoons of it still exist.

Thisbe listening.

Romeo and Juliet. 1846.

Gretchen in Prison. 1847.

FAYERMANN, ANNE CHARLOTTE. See BARTHOLOMEW.

FAYRAM, JOHN, a portrait and landscape painter, practised in London about the year 1740. There are by him some slight, coarse etchings of views in the neighbourhood of Chelsea and Battersea, and also one of the Hermitage in Kew Gardens.

FEARNLEY, THOMAS, a landscape painter of English parentage, was born at Fredrichshall in Norway in 1802. After spending a short time in his uncle's business, he entered the Copenhagen Academy, and was patronized by the Crown Prince Oscar, for whom he painted a 'View of Copenhagen.' In 1828 he set out on his travels through Europe, and did not return to Norway till 1836. He afterwards spent some time in England, and exhibited at the British Institution a 'Norwegian Cascade.' He died at Munich in 1842. Amongst his most noticeable works are:

The Blue Grotto of Capri.

The Glacier of the Grindelwald (repeated several times).
Labrofos Waterfall. (Christiania National Gallery.)

FEARY, JOHN, a landscape painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1772 to 1788. He obtained a premium at the Society of Arts in 1775.

FECHHELM, CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, a portrait and historical painter, born at Dresden in 1732, studied under Mengs, Manjocky, and Hutin, first portrait painting, and then miniature. In the Seven Years' War Maria Theresa commissioned him to paint the portraits of the generals engaged in that campaign for the Military School at Vienna. He died at Dresden in 1816. His son, KARL CHRISTIAN, who was born at Dresden in 1770, and died in 1826, was likewise a painter.

FECHHELM, KARL FRIEDRICH, who was born at Dresden about 1723, studied under Müller at Prague, and was engaged at Berlin, in the palace and other public places, in painting frescoes and architectural decorations. He died in 1785. There are some views of Berlin etched by him.

FECHNER, EDUARD CLEMENS, who was born at Gross-Särchen, near Moscow, in 1799, was a portrait painter and an etcher, who studied in 1814 at Dresden under Grassi and Retsch. In 1820 he went to Munich, where he improved his style under Stieler. He worked some time for the Duke of Leuchtenberg, and visited Paris in 1825. He excelled in painting portraits of ladies and children; he also executed eleven etchings in a spirited manner. He died in Paris in 1861.

FEDDES, PIETER, called PIETER VAN HARLINGEN, from the place of his birth, was born in 1588, and distinguished himself as a painter on glass. He also etched portraits, conversation and historical pieces, with a broad and spirited point. There are by him 119 plates, among which the most important are the following:

Johannes Bogerman, the President of the Synod at Dordrecht. 1620.

Martinus Hamconius.

Charity, or Love.

Fifty-two portraits of the Princes and Dukes of Friesland, for Hamconius's Frista (Franecker, 1620).

The Portraits in Winsemius's Cronycken van Vriesland (Franecker, 1622).

His plates are signed P. Harlingensis, although not always in full. He died in 1634.

FEDERIGHETTO DI DALMATIA, II. See BENCOVICH.

FEGATELLI, GIUSEPPE MARIA, a native of Bologna, and pupil of C. Gennari, flourished in the latter half of the 17th century, and painted pictures for the churches of his native city.

FEHLING, HEINRICH CHRISTOPH, a German painter, born at Sangerhausen, in Thuringia, in 1653, was instructed by Bottschildt, to whom he was related. After having lived several years in Italy, he was appointed court-painter to the Elector John George IV., and became director of the Academy and inspector of the Art Galleries at Dresden, where he died in 1725. In the Dresden Gallery is a portrait by him of Colonel Kaspar von Klengel, and a number of painted ceilings remain as specimens of his art in the palaces of that city.

FEI, ALESSANDRO DI VINCENZIO, called ALESSANDRO DEL BARBIERE, an historical painter, was born at Florence in 1543, and was a pupil first of Ghirlandajo, afterwards of Piero Francia, and lastly of Maso da San Frediano. His invention was fertile and prompt, adapted to the great works which he executed in fresco, and embellished with architecture in a grand style. He was fond of introducing buildings and grotesque figures into his paintings. His works are to be found in the churches and public edifices at Florence, Pistoja, and Messina. One of his most esteemed pictures is the 'Flagellation,' in the church of Santa Croce at Florence, in which city he died in 1592.

FEID, JOSEPH, an Austrian landscape painter, was born at Vienna in 1807. He possessed a great talent in depicting foliage and forest life, and died at Weidling, near Vienna, in 1870. The following works by him are in the Vienna Gallery:

A Scene in a Wood, with Nymphs bathing. 1828.

A Study of the Schneeberg.

A Forest Landscape, with a large Oak. 1841.

A Landscape with an approaching Storm.

FEIGL, JOHANN, an engraver, who flourished at Vienna in the last quarter of the 18th century, was a pupil of Schmutzer and of Wille. His best known work is, 'An old Woman washing the Head of a Boy,' after G. Dou, 1776.

FEISTENAUER, ANDREAS, (or FAISTENAUER,) a native of Rosenheim, in Bavaria, studied at Vienna under Stoll. He afterwards went to Munich, where he painted several pictures for the churches, and in 1658 was appointed court-painter to the Elector of Bavaria. The date of his death is not known.

FEISTENBERGER, ANTON, was born at Innsbruck, in the Tyrol, in 1678. He had no abler instructor than an obscure artist, named Bouritzsch, who lived at Salzburg, or Passau; but he had an opportunity of studying some of the works of Gaspard Poussin, by which he formed for himself so grand a style of painting landscape, that on seeing his pictures, it would be supposed that he had visited Rome. His landscapes are embellished with architectural ruins, and refreshed with waterfalls; the forms of his trees are grand and picturesque, and his foliage is light and spirited. He was invited to Vienna by the Emperor of Germany, by whom he was employed for several years, and many of his best works are in the Imperial and Liechtenstein Galleries in that city. Other landscapes by him are in the Dresden Gallery and at Weimar. He was not successful in drawing the figure, but was assisted in that branch by Hans Graf and Van Bredael. He died at Vienna in 1736.

FEISTENBERGER, JOSEPH, born at Innsbruck in 1684, was the brother of Anton Feistenberger, by whom he was instructed, and whom he assisted in some of his works. There are two landscapes by this artist in the Vienna Gallery. He died at Vienna in 1735.

FEKE, ROBERT, one of the earliest American colonial painters, was descended from a Dutch family, who settled at Oyster Bay, Long Island. It is said that having been taken prisoner and carried to Spain, he there learned to paint, and on his return home settled at Newport, Rhode Island, where, among other portraits, he painted that of the beautiful wife of Governor Wanton, now in the Redwood Library. He worked also at New York, and in 1746 at Philadelphia, where his portraits were considered the best after those of West. He subsequently went to Bermuda for his health, and died there at the age of about forty-four.

FELICE, SIMONE, was an Italian engraver of the 17th century, who, in conjunction with Giovanni Battista Falda, engraved a collection of prints, entitled 'Le Giardini di Roma.' Felice's plates are very neatly executed, with small figures, spiritedly designed, and are in no way inferior to the productions of Falda.

FELICIATI, LORENZO, an Italian painter, was born at Siena in 1732, and died in 1779. Several pictures by this artist are to be found in the churches of Siena and its neighbourhood.

FELIPE, Fray, was a Spanish miniature painter of the early part of the 16th century, who, in conjunction with Bernardino Canderron and Alonso Vazquez, between 1514 and 1518 decorated a missal for the cathedral of Toledo.

FELLINI, GIULIO CESARE, born about 1600, was a pupil of Gabriele Ferrantini and of Annibale Carracci. He excelled in painting horses and figures, and was assisted by his son Marcantonio Fellini.

FELLNER, FERDINAND, a designer and painter, was born at Frankfort in 1799. After receiving a high-class education he went to Munich to study art, and remained there from 1825 to 1831, but later on he established himself at Stuttgart and published a number of illustrations. As a painter his works are less meritorious. He died at Stuttgart in 1859. Some of the most remarkable of his designs for books are:

The Illustrations of the 'Seven Swabians.'

Sixteen Illustrations of 'Don Quixote.'

The Illustrations of 'Faust.'

Five Illustrations of 'Wilhelm Tell.'

Illustrations of 'Wallenstein,' 'The Maid of Orleans,'

'Macbeth,' 'Romeo and Juliet,' Bürger's 'Lenore,'

'Oberon,' 'Robert,' 'Gudrun,' &c.

His paintings bear the accompanying monogram, and among them are the following:

Burgberg. Church.

The Holy Family (partly painted by Pilgram).

Frankfort. Emperor's Saloon.

Conrad I.

Frederic the Beautiful.

FELLOWES, JAMES, a portrait painter, practised in the first half of the 18th century. He was reputed to be the painter of a picture, once well known, of 'The Last Supper,' at St. Mary's, Whitechapel.

FELSENTHAL, WOLFGANG, Edler von. See KÖPP.

FELSING, GEORG JAKOB, a German line-engraver, was born at Darmstadt in 1802. He was first instructed by his father, Johann Konrad Felsing, but he afterwards visited Italy and studied at Milan under Longhi, and at Florence the style of Raffaello Morghen. After residing some time at Naples he revisited Florence, and became a professor in the Academy of that city, and a member of the Academy of Milan. He returned to Darmstadt in 1832, when he was elected professor, and appointed engraver to the Court. During a stay in Paris he was influenced by the style of Desnoyers, and at Munich by the principles of the artists there. Felsing's plates show the talent of a great artist, and he worked with the graver in a clear and vigorous manner. He was also a member of the Academies of St. Petersburg, Berlin, and Vienna, and of the Institute of France. He died at Darmstadt in 1883. His most important works are:

Christ on the Mount of Olives; after Carlo Dolci. 1828.

The Madonna enthroned; after Andrea del Sarto. 1830.

The Marriage of St. Catharine; after Correggio. 1831.

The Violinist; after Raphael. 1833.

Girl at the Fountain; after Bendemann. 1835.

The Virgin with the Infant, St. Elizabeth, and St. John; after Overbeck. 1839.

St. Geneviève in the Forest; after Steinbrück.

The Saviour; after Leonardo da Vinci. 1844.

Christ with the Doctors; after the same. 1847.

Hagar and Ishmael; after Köhler. 1848.

Moses in the Bulrushes; after the same. 1849-52.

The Lorelei; after Köhler the younger. 1854.

The Betrayal of Christ; after Hofmann. 1861.

St. Cecilia; after the same.

Christ with the Cross; after Crespi.

FELSING, JOHANN KONRAD, a German engraver, was born at Giessen in 1766, and learned the elements of his art in Darmstadt. He engraved many portraits in the dotted manner, but was more particularly distinguished by his topographical works, of which the last and best was the military plan of Mayence. He died at Darmstadt in 1819. He was the father of JOHANN HEINRICH FELSING, a celebrated copper-plate printer, who died in 1875, and of GEORG JAKOB FELSING, the eminent engraver.

FELTRE, MORTO DA. See LUZZI.

FELTRINI, ANDREA, called also ANDREA DI COSIMO, was a Florentine painter who excelled in grotesques. He was born about 1490, and died about 1554. His works are to be met with at Florence on the fronts of houses, on walls, and on ceilings. He is called by the first name, from his having been a scholar of Morto da Feltre, and by the second from his having studied art under Cosimo Roselli.

FEMINIA, GABRIEL, a Spanish painter, who flourished at the commencement of the 18th century. He had the reputation of being the best landscape painter of his time in Spain.

FENDI, PETER, a German genre and water-colour painter, engraver, lithographer, and designer, was born in 1796 at Vienna, in the academy of which city he studied. In 1818 he became draughtsman to the Cabinet of Antiquities, and in 1821 he went to Venice, and obtained a gold medal for his picture of 'The Grotto.' He produced pictures on various subjects of German history and poetry, and also designed illustrations for Dibdin's 'Bibliographical Tour in France and Germany,' and for Hormayr's 'History of Vienna.' He died in 1842. His 'Young Girl watching a Lottery' is in the Vienna Gallery, and his 'Bride' appeared at the London International Exhibition of 1862.

FENIS, BARTHELEMI, was an engraver who worked at Modena from 1653 to 1669, and etched several plates in the style of Callot.

FENNITZER, GEORG, who worked at Nuremberg towards the end of the 17th century, was an engraver in chiaroscuro, especially of portraits. His plates are signed G. F., G. Fenn., G. Feni., or G. Fenitz. Among his portraits are:

Matthäus Müller.

Johann Conrad Götz. 1690.

Petrus Ihseburg.

Andreas Bergmann. 1693.

FENNITZER, MICHAEL, who was evidently a relation of Georg Fennitzer, was born at Nuremberg in 1641, and died there at the close of the century. He also was an engraver in mezzotint, and his best plates are 'The Last Supper,' after Adam Kraft's relief in the Church of St. Sebaldus at Nuremberg, and two or three portraits of local celebrities. He marked his productions with either his entire name or his initials.

FENOLLO, PAOLO, an Italian painter, is known by a 'Bacchic Scene' in the Madrid Gallery.

FENTZEL, GREGOR, an engraver, was a native of Nuremberg, who worked in that city about 1650. He engraved the 'Battle of King Alphonso and the Moors,' after Antonio Tempesta, and the portrait of General Don Balthasar Marradas, after F. Cleyn, as well as portraits and other illustrations in the style of Jan Sadeler, mostly for the books of Paulus Fürst of Nuremberg.

FERA, BERNARDINO, who flourished about 1700, was a pupil of Solimena, and was known for his frescoes and distempers.

FERABOSCO, GIROLAMO. See FERRABOSCO.

FERABOSCO, MARTINO, a native of Italy, who resided at Rome, engraved the plates for the work entitled 'Architettura della Basilica di San Pietro in Vaticano,' published at Rome in 1620.

FERABOSCO, PIETRO, an Italian painter, who flourished about 1616, spent the greater part of his life in Portugal, where his works are mostly to be found.

FERDINAND, LOUIS ELLE, the elder, a French painter of portraits, and an engraver, was born in Paris about 1612. He was the son and pupil of the painter Ferdinand Elle, a native of Mechlin, who settled in France, and was one of the instructors of Nicolas Poussin. Ferdinand Elle was known best by his baptismal name alone, and for this reason his sons, Louis and Pierre, appear to have adopted it as a surname. Independently of his talent as a painter, he etched several plates, in a spirited and tasteful style, and the prints for a book, entitled 'Le Livre original de la Portraiture,' printed at Paris in 1644. He was one of the foundation members of the Academy in 1648, and died in Paris in 1682. There are also by him the following plates:

Portrait of a Lady; after Van Dyck.

Nicolas Poussin; V. E. pinxit.

A set of six Friezes; after L. Testelin.

A set of six groups of Children; after the same.

Several allegorical and mythological subjects; after Primaticcio.

FERDINAND, LOUIS ELLE, the younger, the son and pupil of Louis Elle Ferdinand the elder, was born in Paris in 1648. He painted portraits with great reputation, and became a member of the French Academy, his reception pictures being a portrait of Samuel Bernard, the miniature painter, now in the Louvre, and a portrait of Regnaudin, now in the École des Beaux-Arts. In the National Portrait Gallery is a likeness by him of Dr. Thomas Burnet, dated 1675. He died at Reims in 1717. His brother, PIERRE ELLE FERDINAND, etched a few plates, including 'St. Potentiana,' after Correggio, and died in Paris in 1665.

FERDINANDI, FRANCESCO, (or FERNANDI,) called IMPERIALI, an Italian painter, worked at Rome in 1730. There are two works by him at Rome, one is the 'Martyrdom of St. Eustache,' in the church dedicated to that saint, and the other is the 'Death of St. Romuald.'

FERG, FRANZ DE PAULA, a painter and etcher, was born at Vienna in 1689. He was instructed first by his father, Pancrazius Ferg, and afterwards by J. Orient in landscape painting, and by Hans Graf in the drawing of figures. His reputation soon spread through Germany, and he was invited to the court of Dresden, where he passed some years. In 1718 he went from Brunswick to London, where he passed twenty years, and might have lived in affluence and respectability, had not an imprudent marriage involved him in difficulties, and kept him in continual indigence. He is reported to have been found dead in the street, near the door of his lodging, in 1740. The landscapes of Ferg are of very agreeable scenery, enriched with architectural ruins in a very picturesque style, and bear some resemblance to the works of Poelenborch: his scenes from common life resemble those of Ostade. His compositions, which are happily arranged, show great diligence in the execution, and bear the annexed monogram  The following are among his paintings:

Brunswick.	Gallery.	The Four Seasons.
"	"	A Market Scene.
"	"	A Rural Feast.
Cassel.	Gallery.	Sea View.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Six Landscapes with ruins and figures.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Two small Landscapes.
Hampton Ct.	Palace.	Small Landscape.
Vienna.	Gallery.	A Fair.

There is a set of eight neat and spirited etchings by Ferg of ruins and figures, called 'Capricci fatti per F. P. F.'

FERGIONE, BERNARDINO, a painter of marine views and sea-ports, is stated by Lanzi to have flourished at Rome about the year 1718. Claude Joseph Vernet studied in Fergione's atelier on his arrival in Rome in 1732.

FERGUSON, JAMES, the Scottish astronomer, born near Keith, in Banffshire, in 1710, was a self-taught man. Though better known as an astronomer, he gained a living in Edinburgh and in England, for several years, by drawing miniature portraits in black lead. He died in 1776.

FERGUSON, WILLIAM GOW, was a native of Scotland, who after learning the first rudiments of art in his own country, passed some years on the continent. On his return to his native country, he acquired some reputation in painting dead game and still-life. He died in London about the year 1695. Some of his smaller pictures are so excellent that they are frequently attributed to Weenix, to whose works they bear strong resemblance. In the Berlin Gallery is a picture of still-life, a dead partridge, and in the National Gallery of Scotland is one of 'Sculptured Ruins and Figures.'

FERNANDEZ, ALEXEO, (or HERNANDEZ,) was a Spanish artist of considerable skill, who at the beginning of the 16th century painted for the convent of St. Jerome at Cordova several altarpieces from the lives of Christ and the patron Saint, which were considered equal in execution to any contemporary productions. In 1508 he was employed to paint and gild the noble reredos of the high-altar of Seville Cathedral, designed at the close of the previous century by the Flemish architect Dancart. Fernandez remained at Seville until 1525. A 'Madonna with Angels,' in the church of Santa Ana in Seville, is by his hand.

FERNANDEZ, ANTONIO ARIAS. See ARIAS FERNANDEZ.

FERNANDEZ, FRANCISCO, who was born at Madrid in 1605, and brought up in the school of Vincenzo Carducho, was one of the most ingenious artists of his time, and his talent gained great reputation for him at an early age. He was employed by Philip IV. in the palaces at Madrid, and in the convent of La Victoria are pictures by him of the 'Death of St. Francis of Paola,' and 'St. Joachim and St. Anne.' He also etched five spirited plates of allegories for Carducho's 'Dialogos de la Pintura,' 1633. He was killed in a quarrel by Francisco de Baras in 1646.

FERNANDEZ, JUAN ANTONIO RIBERA Y. See RIBERA.

FERNANDEZ, LUIS, (the elder of the name,) was a painter in tempera of Seville, who about the year 1580 was the instructor of the elder Herrera, Juan and Augustin del Castillo, and Francisco Pacheco.

FERNANDEZ, LUIS, a Spanish historical painter, both in oil and in fresco, born at Madrid in 1594, was a pupil of Eugenio Caxes. There are by him in the cross-walk of the convent of La Merced Calzada scenes from the life of St. Ramon, painted in 1625, and in Santa Cruz were several frescoes and oil paintings, which perished, however, by fire in the 17th century. His works, executed in the style of his master, are distinguished for correctness of design and beauty of colouring. He died at Madrid in 1654.

FERNANDEZ, VASCO, commonly known as GRAN VASCO, or GRÃO VASCO, ('Vasco the Great,') was a Portuguese painter, who has been variously cited as 'Ferdinand de Vizeu,' 'Gran Vasco de Vizeu,' 'Fernandez Vasco de Casal,' or simply 'Vasco Pereira,' or 'Vasco Fernandez.' If reliance can be placed on Portuguese testimony, or rather assertion, he was the greatest painter that ever lived; not only are his pictures the most excellent, but the most numerous. All in Portugal that have not secured a name are by Gran Vasco. Zani notices Vasco Pereira, a Portuguese painter, who worked in 1594; and Cean Bermudez has given an account of him among the Spanish artists. Count Raczyński, who was desirous of identifying Vasco Pereira with Gran Vasco, and who examined a small picture by the former, with the date 1575, abandoned that idea, and left the elucidation of the subject to his friend M. J. Berardo. The conclusions at which the latter arrived in 1844, and which do not appear to have been subsequently shaken, were that Gran Vasco is identical with a certain Vasco Fernandez, whose baptismal register shows him to have been the son of a painter named Francisco Fernandez, and to have been born in 1552, and baptized in the church of Vizeu, though it is uncertain whether he was born within that town or in a mill in its vicinity. He flourished during the reign of Dom Sebastian. One of his paintings probably is the 'Christ on the Cross' in the Misericordia at Oporto, which is ascribed to Holbein.

FERNANDEZ DE CASTRO, ANTONIO, was a canon of Cordova, who painted two pictures of 'St. Ferdinand,' and the 'Virgin of the Immaculate Conception,' for the chapter-room of his cathedral. He died in 1739.

FERNANDEZ DE GUADALUPE, PEDRO, a Spanish artist, painted in 1509-12 a number of wooden figures for Seville Cathedral, and in 1527 executed for the same edifice a 'Descent from the Cross,' with the body of the Saviour lying upon the knees of Mary, as well as some other pictures, one of which represented the 'Repentance of St. Peter.'

FERNANDEZ DE LAREDO, JUAN, one of the best fresco painters of his time, was born at Madrid in 1632, and studied under Francisco Rizzi, whom he assisted in his works at the Retiro. He painted many pictures for the churches at Madrid, where he was killed by a fall in his own studio in 1692.

FERNANDEZ NAVARRETE, JUAN, commonly called EL MUDO, from having been deaf and dumb, was born at Logroño about 1526. An acute malady at the age of three years deprived him of the sense of hearing, and consequently of the power of learning to speak. He received his first instruction in art from Fray Vicente de Santo Domingo, a monk of the order of St. Jerome, but subsequently went to Italy and studied at Venice under Titian. His sojourn in Italy lasted for at least twenty years, and whilst there he availed himself of the opportunity of visiting the studios of the most renowned masters. Although there is no account of any production of importance by him during his stay in that country, yet it is certain that he obtained a great reputation among the artists, which no doubt was augmented by the circumstance of his infirmity. The fame of El Mudo, by which name he was known in Italy, reached Philip II., who was commencing the decorations of the Escorial, and he was commanded to attend at Madrid for the purpose of being employed on that work. He arrived there in 1568, and was appointed painter to the king, with an annual pension of 200 ducats, in addition to the price of his works. He had scarcely commenced his labours, when a serious malady compelled him to retire to the country for the benefit of air, and he remained for three years in his native place, Logroño, on leave of absence, but receiving his pension as painter to the king. In 1571 he returned to the Escorial, bringing with him four large pictures which had been commanded, and for which he received 500 ducats. These were an 'Assumption,' the 'Martyrdom of St. James the Great,' a 'St. Philip,' and a 'St. Jerome.' It is believed that in the first the face of the Virgin was the portrait of his mother, Catalina Ximenes, who in her youth had been very beautiful. In addition to these four pictures he painted for the Escorial 'The Nativity,' 'Christ at the Pillar,' a 'Holy Family,' and 'St. John writing the Apocalypse': these he finished in 1575, and for them he received 800 ducats. These eight pictures were Navarrete's principal works: unhappily three of them, the 'Assumption,' 'St. Philip,' and 'St. John,' were destroyed by fire; the other five were saved and placed in the principal cloister of the monastery. Besides their unquestionable merit, each picture is remarkable for some peculiar circumstance. Thus the 'Martyrdom of St. James' and the 'St. Jerome' are most minutely finished; a manner which he did not continue in his other compositions. The 'Christ at the Pillar,' seen in front, is an admirable head, which, by its meekness and beauty, contrasts marvellously with the ignoble features of the flagellators. In the 'Holy Family' the heads are equally beautiful and expressive; but, by a strange caprice, the painter has placed on one side of the fore-ground of the picture a partridge, and on the other, a dog and cat contending for a bone, with such comical contortions that it is impossible to regard them without laughing. In 'The Nativity,' El Mudo essayed to vanquish a formidable difficulty in painting. He has introduced three lights in the picture: the effluence from the holy Infant; that which proceeds from the glory above, and which extends over the whole composition; and that emitted from the torch which Joseph holds in his hand. The group of shepherds is the best part of the picture. It is related that Pellegrino Tibaldi, on seeing it, cried out in raptures, "Oh! gli belli pastori!" This exclamation gave its name to the picture, and it continues to be known as 'The Beautiful Shepherds.' In 1576 El Mudo painted his famous picture of 'Abraham and the three Angels,' for which he received 500 ducats, and about this time he entered into a contract with the prior, inspector, and treasurer of the Escorial, to paint thirty-two pictures, which he engaged to deliver within four years. Twenty-seven of these pictures were to be seven feet and a half in height and seven feet and a quarter in breadth, and the other five thirteen feet high and nine feet broad. In the contract, which is preserved in the archives of the monastery, all the details are specified: for example, the canvas of each is to be of one piece without seam; the work is to be entirely by the hand of Juan Fernandez Navarrete, and to be done either at the convent, at Madrid, or at Logroño; the figures are to be just six feet and a quarter in height; if the same Saint is repeated several times in the pictures he is always to have the same visage and the same vestments; the painter is not to put in the pictures either cat, or dog, or any immodest figure. He did not, however, live to complete this vast undertaking; he painted in 1577 and 1578 the eight which represent the Apostles, the Evangelists, St. Paul, and St. Barnabas; the rest were finished in the following years by Alonso Sanchez Coello and Luis de Caravajal. El Mudo's health had always been delicate, and he died at Toledo in 1579. In the Madrid Gallery there are by him a 'Baptism of Christ,' 'St. Peter,' and 'St. Paul.'

FERNANDI, FRANCESCO. See FERDINANDI.

FERNELEY, J. E., an English animal painter, was born in 1781, and died in 1860. He exhibited hunting pictures at the Royal Academy from 1818 to 1849.

FERRABOSCO, GIROLAMO, (FERRABOSCO, or FORABOSCO,) a native of Padua, painted at Venice from 1631 to 1659. He was a contemporary of Boschini, who gives to this master, and to the Cavaliere Liberi, the first rank among the Venetian painters of the time. He was more employed for private collections than for the churches, and was much engaged in portrait painting, in which he particularly excelled. Ferrabosco possessed a noble and penetrating genius, and united suavity with finish, and elegance with force; his works were studied in every part, particularly in the heads. He was still living in 1660. In the Dresden Gallery is a picture of 'A Young Woman snatched from the hand of Death.'

FERRACUTI, GIOVANNI DOMENICO, who, according to Lanzi, was a native of Macerata, flourished about the middle of the 17th century. He chiefly painted landscapes, particularly winter-pieces, which were much esteemed in his time.

FERRADO, CRISTOBAL, a Spanish painter, was born at Anieva, in the principality of the Asturias, in 1620. He had acquired some ability from the instruction of an unknown artist, and afterwards developed into an accomplished painter from his own unaided practice. In 1640 he became a monk of the order of Santa Maria de las Cuevas, near Seville. He continued, however, to exercise his art, and painted some pictures for the altars of his monastery. Several of his productions are in the cloister of San Miguel at Seville, and others have been removed to the Alcazar. Towards the end of his life he was made rector of the Carthusian Monastery of Cazaller. He died at Seville in 1673.

FERRAJUOLI, NUNZIO, called NUNZIO DEGLI AFFLITTI, was born at Nocera de' Pagani, in the Neapolitan territory, in 1660. After studying some time under Luca Giordano, he went to Bologna, where he became a scholar of Giuseppe dal Sole. His first efforts were in historical painting; but his genius decidedly led him to landscape in oil and fresco. He died at Bologna in 1735.

FERRAMOLA, FLORIANO, or FIORAVANTE, a native of Brescia, born at the end of the 15th century, painted both in oil and fresco, and was influenced by Foppa, Costa, and Francia. Rossi relates of him that when Brescia was sacked by Gaston de Foix in 1512, he remained calmly working at his easel, and being there found by a gang of plunderers who demanded ransom, he, without discontinuing his labours, told them to help themselves, which they quickly did, and left his studio an empty wreck. Happily for the artist his talents gained for him the protection of Gaston de Foix, who ordered him to paint his portrait, and indemnified him for his losses. He was much employed as a fresco painter at Brescia, though very little by him now remains there. The church of Santa Maria at Lovere still preserves in its nave frescoes of the Twelve Apostles and Saints by him, as also parts of an organ screen executed in 1518. He is known to have contracted in 1516 to paint the organ shutters, and in 1527 to decorate the chapel of the Cross in the cathedral of Brescia, and to have died before its completion in 1528. Of the last-named work only one fresco remains in its place. The following paintings by him still exist:

Brescia.	Casa Borgondio.	The Birth of Adonis.
		The Death of Iphigeneia.
"	S. Giov. Evangelista.	The Trinity, with Saints.
"	Tosi Collection.	Christ on the Cross.
Lucca.	S. Frediano.	Altar-piece.

FERRAND, JACQUES PHILIPPE, who was born at Joigny in Burgundy in 1653, was a miniaturist and painter in enamel. He was the son of a physician to Louis XIII., and studied under Mignard and Samuel Bernard. In 1690 he was received into the Academy, on which occasion he painted a portrait of Louis XIV. He excelled in his art, and published in 1721 a work entitled, 'L'Art du feu, ou manière de peindre en émail.' He travelled in Italy, England, and Germany, and died in Paris in 1732.

FERRANDINI, CLAUDIO, an engraver, worked in Paris and Toulon in the latter part of the 18th century. He engraved landscapes, sea-pieces, and views after Claude, Fontaine, J. Vernet, S. R. Vialy, Teniers, &c. He died about 1790.

FERRANTE, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, who was born at Bologna about 1600, was a pupil of Gessi. He executed several works in oil and fresco at Bologna and at Piacenza, where he died in 1652.

FERRANTI, DECIO and AGOSTO, father and son, were painters who flourished about 1500. Both of them painted miniatures exquisitely, and in the cathedral of Vigevano is an Evangelarium and a Missal richly embellished by them.

FERRANTINI, GABRIELE, called GABRIELE DAGLI OCCHIALI, from his wearing spectacles, was born at Bologna about 1550, and was instructed in the school of Dionysius Calvaert. He painted historical subjects, both in oil and fresco, in a pleasing and tasteful manner. Several of his works are in the churches at Bologna, of which the following are the most esteemed: in San Benedetto, 'St. Francis of Paola'; in San Mattia, a fine picture of 'St. Jerome'; in La Carità, 'St. Francis receiving the Stigmata'; and in the church of the Servites, the 'Descent from the Cross' and the 'Birth of the Virgin.'

FERRANTINI, IPPOLITO, a brother of Gabriele Ferrantini, was instructed by the Carracci, whom he imitated with success. He was a member of the Accademia degli Incaminati. In the church of San Mattia in Bologna is a picture representing 'St. Michael.'

FERRARA, BONO DA, (or BONO FERRARESE,) lived in the 15th century, and seems to have been the pupil of both Pisano and Squarcione. He was employed by the Dukes of Ferrara to decorate their castles at Migliaro and Belfiore, in 1450 and 1452. He also painted a 'St. Christopher' in the chapel of the Eremitani at Padua, and he is said to have assisted in the decorations of the Cathedral of Siena in 1461. The National Gallery possesses a 'St. Jerome in the Desert,' by him, and in the Galleries of Dresden and Munich are also paintings assigned to this artist. His style partakes of that of his master Squarcione, and also of that of his fellow-pupil Mantegna. Of his birth or death no dates can be given.

FERRARA, COSME DA. See TURA.

FERRARA, ERCOLE DA. See GRANDI.

FERRARA, STEFANO DA, called FALZAGALLONI, was a Ferrarese, who lived in the latter half of the 15th century, and is described by Vasari as having been the friend of Mantegna. He filled the chapel of the Santo at Padua with frescoes, which were destroyed in 1500, in consequence of the renovation of the edifice by Andrea Briosco. In the Brera, Milan, are two Madonnas with Saints, that are assigned to him; and in San Giovanni in Monte, Bologna, is a 'Madonna and Child, with two Angels,' considered to be by this artist. The dates of his birth and death are uncertain.

FERRARESINO, IL. See BERLINGHIERI, CAMILLO.

FERRARI, ANTONIO FELICE, the son of Francesco Ferrari, was born at Ferrara in 1668. He was a painter of architecture, and distinguished himself by the grandeur of his style in the paintings for the palaces at Ferrara, Venice, Padua, and Ravenna. He died in 1720.

FERRARI, BERNARDINO, who was born at Vigevano about 1540, painted at that place the chapels of San Jacopo and San Filippo. He imitated the style of Gaudenzio Ferrari.

FERRARI, DIFENDENTE, a contemporary of Macrino, was a painter of numerous pictures, chief of which are a 'Pietà' in the cathedral of Chivasso, altar-pieces in the cathedral of Ivrea (1519-1521), and a 'Nativity, with Saints' (1531) in the church of Ranverso.

FERRARI, FRANCESCO, born at Castello della Fratta, near Rovigo, in 1634, was a painter of historical subjects, architecture, and landscapes. He was first employed in figure-painting, but afterwards studied decoration and scenery under Gabriele Rossi. He painted for the Marchese degli Obizzi, among other works, the theatre at San Lorenzo in 1650. Subsequently he was engaged upon theatre-decorations at Vienna, and painted in San Francesco, the Gesù, San Giorgio, and the Bucci Mansion at Ferrara, and San Petronio at Bologna, where he executed 'The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian.' He died in 1708.

FERRARI, FRANCESCO BIANCHI, called IL FRARI, an excellent artist, born in 1447, executed many paintings at Modena, but a great number of his productions have perished. A fine picture by him in the Louvre at Paris, representing 'The Madonna enthroned, with Saints and Angels,' bears so striking a resemblance to Correggio's 'St. Francis' in the Dresden Gallery, that it has much strengthened the supposition that Correggio was Ferrari's pupil. He died in 1510.

FERRARI, GAUDENZIO, called by Vasari GAUDENZIO MILANESE, a painter and sculptor of the Lombard school, was born at Valduggia, near Novara, most probably in the year 1484. Nothing is known of his early years, or as to who was his first master, though he seems at one time to have been a pupil of Luini. That he was instructed in the principles of art by Girolamo Giovenone at Vercelli is a supposition devoid of foundation, but he studied under Stefano Scotti, a painter of arabesques, at Milan. His greatest advance was, however, derived from an attentive study of the works of Leonardo da Vinci. There is no proof that he was acquainted with Perugino or Raphael, or that he was at Rome, and painted in conjunction with the latter in the Farnesina and in the Vatican in 1519 and 1520. This devotion to the study of such models developed his great talent so rapidly as to cause him so early as in 1504 to be appointed for the execution of a considerable work in the Cappella del Sacro Monte at Varallo, representing the 'Sacrifice of Christ.' In 1508 he was at Vercelli. In 1510 he painted for the commune of Arona a picture in six compartments, the subject of the principal one being 'The Virgin adoring the Infant.' This, and others of his early works, was signed 'Gaudenzio di Vincio.' At Varallo he displayed great activity, and executed a considerable number of paintings and sculptures. He was also the instructor of many artists, as, Andrea Solario, Bernardino Lamini, Firmo Stello, Cesare Luini, and Antonio Zamotti. From 1527 until his death at Milan, where he left unfinished a 'Last Supper' in Santa Maria della Passione, he painted in oil and fresco in several churches in that city and its neighbourhood. There exists a great number of frescoes by Gaudenzio, which are scarcely inferior to those of his pupil Luini, with whom he painted from 1532 to 1535 in San Cristoforo at Vercelli. The latest mention of him is in 1545, and it is probable that he died at Milan in 1549 or 1550. The different styles of the great masters after whom he studied are very discernible in his works, while here and there he becomes fantastical and odd. He undoubtedly possessed an extraordinary fertility of invention, together with an elevation of style, and these characteristics have caused him to be considered one of the first painters of his time. His works are not so distinguishable for a correct delineation of muscular anatomy as for a choice of difficult and uncommon attitudes, which are bold and striking where the subject admits. The following is a list of several of his works:

Arona.	Church.	Madonna and Child.
Berlin.	Gallery.	The Annunciation.

FERRARI, GIOVANNI ANDREA, GREGORIO, LORENZO, and ORAZIO DEI. See DEI FERRARI.

FERRARI, LEONARDO, called LONARDINO, was a native of Bologna, and a scholar of Lucio Massari. Although he is chiefly noticed by Malvasia as a painter of drolleries and carnival festivals, he acquired no little reputation by his historical works, of which there are several in the churches at Bologna. In SS. Gervasio e Protasio is a picture of the 'Virgin of the Rosary, with Mary Magdalen, and other Saints'; in San Francesco, the 'Death of St. Joseph'; and in La Madonna della Neve, 'St. Anthony of Padua.

FERRARI, LUCA, called LUCA DA REGGIO, was born at Reggio in 1603. He had the advantage of studying under Guido Reni; and in the airs of his heads, and the elegant movement of his figures, he approaches the graceful style of his instructor. One of his most esteemed works is a 'Pietà,' in the church of Sant' Antonio at Padua; it is full of character and expression, and admirably coloured. In compositions which require a multiplicity of figures he is less successful, as appears in his picture of 'The Plague,' at the Dominicans, painted in 1630. He was the instructor of Minorello and Cirello, the former of whom is often confounded with Luca, from the great resemblance of his works to those of his master. Luca da Reggio died at Padua in 1652. In the Estense Gallery at Modena are a 'Magdalen,' 'The Death of Cleopatra,' and 'Tomyris, Queen of the Massagetæ, placing the head of Cyrus, King of the Persians, in a bottle filled with blood,' and in the Bordeaux Museum is 'Painting crowned by Fame.'

FERRARI, PIETRO, a native of Parma, was instructed by Giuseppe Baldrighi. He was a professor of the Academy of his native city, and imitated the old masters of that school rather than his instructor. He died in 1787.

FERRARO, FRANCESCO DEL BIANCO. See BIANCHI.

FERRER, GARCIA, the Licentiate, an ecclesiastic and painter of some reputation at Valencia, executed some pictures for the altar of San Vicente Ferrer in the convent of San Domingo, and practised his art at Madrid. Cean Bermudez mentions a 'Crucifixion' by him, dated 1632, then in the possession of Don Mariano Ferrer, secretary of the Academy of San Carlos.

FERRERS, BENJAMIN, a portrait painter, flourished about the middle of the 18th century. He was deaf and dumb. Amongst his works are portraits of Bishop Hoadly and Bishop Beveridge; the latter is in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

FERRETTI, GIOVANNI DOMENICO, called GIOVANNI DOMENICO DA IMOLA, was born at Florence in 1692. He was a scholar of Giovanni Gioseffo dal Sole, and painted historical subjects, both in oil and fresco, with considerable success. His works are principally in the palaces and churches of Imola, Leghorn, Siena, Florence, and Pisa. He also painted the cupola of the Filippini, at Pistoja. One of his best pictures is 'The Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew,' in the church dedicated to that apostle at Pisa.

FERRI, CINO, an Italian historical painter, was born at Rome in 1634. He was the most distinguished scholar of Pietro da Cortona, with whom he executed many paintings, and whose style he imitated with a servility that renders it sometimes difficult to distinguish his works from those of his instructor, from which they only differ in their inferiority. He was patronized and employed by Prince Borghese and Pope Alexander VII., for whom he executed several works. The Grand-Duke Cosmo III. invited him to Florence to finish the great fresco works which were left imperfect by Pietro da Cortona, and in this he was so successful, that they appeared to be the production of one hand. Ferri died in 1689. The following are his most important paintings:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Marriage of the Virgin.
Bergamo.	S. Maria Maggiore.	Scenes from the Bible. His largest work.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	David refusing the Armour.
Darmstadt.	Gallery.	The Rape of Helen.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Dido and Æneas.
"	"	Dido dying on the funeral pile.
Florence.	Pitti Pal.	Frescoes (commenced by Pietro da Cortona).
"	Uffizi.	Christ on the Cross.
"	"	Alexander on his couch reading Homer.
Hampton Court.	Pal.	Triumph of Bacchus.
Modena.	Estense Gall.	Coriolanus besought by his family not to besiege Rome.
"	"	A Roman Warrior.

Munich.	Gallery.	The Rest on the Flight to Egypt. Madonna and Child.
Nuremberg.	Landauer Brüderhaus.	The Holy Family.
"	"	Rebekah and Elieser at the Well.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Vision of St. Catharine of Siena.
Rome.	S. Ambrogio della Massima.	St. Ambrose healing a sick person. His best work.
"	S. Agnese.	The Cupola (finished by Corbellini).
"	Vatican.	Designs for the mosaics in the cupola of the right nave in St. Peter's.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Christ appearing to Mary Magdalen.

FERRI, GESUALDO, born at San Miniato in 1728, was still living in 1776. He was a pupil of Pompeo Batoni, and his works are to be found in Florence and other places. Among them is an 'Exaltation' in the Carmine Church in Florence.

FERRIERE, F. and L., father and son, of Swiss extraction, were miniature painters, who practised in London. The former exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1793 to 1822, and the latter from 1817 to 1828.

FERRONI, GIROLAMO, a painter and etcher, was born at Milan in 1687. It is not stated who was his first instructor in art; but at an early period of his life he painted the 'Death of St. Joseph,' for the church of Sant' Eustorgio, at Milan; and afterwards visited Rome, where he entered the school of Carlo Maratti. He died about 1730. There are some spirited and tasteful etchings by this artist, after C. Maratti, including the following:

Joshua stopping the course of the Sun.
Deborah celebrating the Victory over Sisera.
Jael slaying Sisera.
The Chastity of Joseph.
Judith with the Head of Holofernes.
St. Charles Borromeo; after S. Cantarini.

FERRUCCI, NICODEMO, was a native of Fiesole, and the favourite disciple and friend of Domenico Passignano, whose spirited style and facility of execution he emulated. He accompanied that master to Rome, and assisted him in his most important undertakings. He chiefly excelled as a fresco painter; and many of his works are in the public edifices at Florence and Fiesole, as well as in the neighbourhood of Rome. He died in 1650.

FERTÉ, M. DE LA. See DE LA FERTÉ.

FESEL, CHRISTOPH, born at Ochsenfurt in 1737, distinguished himself as a painter of historical subjects and portraits. After having studied some time under Mengs and Battoni at Rome, he returned to Germany, and painted a number of easel-pictures for churches, besides frescoes. All his works are of a bright colouring. He was professor at the Academy of St. Luke at Rome, and died at Würzburg, where he was court-painter and inspector of the Gallery, in 1805.

FESELEN, MELCHIOR, an historical painter, of Passau, lived at the same time as Altdorfer, whose works he imitated with assiduity. Though he was inferior to that artist, his paintings are rich in composition, with a great number of figures highly finished, and in a style quite peculiar to himself. He died at Ingolstadt in 1538. Among his paintings (marked with the annexed monogram) MF. there are:

Darmstadt.	Gallery.	The Crucifixion.
Munich.	Gallery.	The Siege of Rome by Porsena. 1529.

Munich. Gallery. Caesar conquering the town
Alesia in Gaul. 1533.
Nuremberg. Museum. The Adoration of the Magi.
1531.
Ratisbon. Hist. Soc. St. Mary of Egypt.

FESSARD, ETIENNE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1714. He was a pupil of Edme Jeaumart, and proved an artist of sufficient merit to be appointed one of the engravers to the king. He died in Paris in 1774. He executed a considerable number of plates, among which are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Hortensia Mancini, Duchess of Mazarin; after Ferdinand.
Marie Madeleine de Lavergne, Countess de La Fayette;
after the same.
J. P. de Bougainville, of the French Academy; after C. N. Cochin.
The Marquis de Mirabeau; after Van Loo.
The Duke de Choiseul; after the same.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

Diana and Actæon; after Giacomo Bassano; for the Crozat Collection.
The Virgin enthroned, with SS. Francis, John, and Catharine; after Correggio.
The Holy Family, with St. Charles Borromeo; after Scarsellino.
The Four Liberal Arts, personified by Children; four plates; after C. van Loo.
Jupiter and Antiope; after the same. 1758.
Herminia armed as Clorinda; after J. B. Pierre.
The Birth of Venus; after F. de Troy.
Jupiter and Leda; after the same.
The Triumph of Galatea; after Bouchardon; etched by Count de Caylus, and finished by Fessard.
The Triumph of Bacchus; after the same; etched by Count de Caylus, and finished by Fessard.
The Nativity; after Boucher.
A Flemish Festival; after Rubens. 1762.
Psyche abandoned by Cupid; after Le Moine.

FETI, DOMENICO, born at Rome in 1589, was a scholar of Lodovico Cardi, called Cigoli. While still very young he went to Mantua with Cardinal Ferdinando Gonzaga, afterwards Duke of Mantua, by whom he was much patronized, and who subsequently appointed him his principal painter. In this city he studied the works of Giulio Romano, and at Venice, to which city he went afterwards, the masters of the Venetian school. He represented scenes from the Bible and from mythology, as well as from life; but his oil paintings are superior to his frescoes. This able artist was unfortunately addicted to intemperance and excess, to which he fell a victim, at Venice, in 1624. The following are among his principal works:

Berlin. Gallery. Elijah in the Wilderness.
Brunswick. Museum. The Expulsion of Hagar.
The Return of the Prodigal.
Dresden. Gallery. The Martyrdom of St. Agnes.
David with the Head of Goliath.
The Return of the Prodigal.
Young Tobias pulling the Fish out of the Water.
Several Parables.
Edinburgh. Nat. Gall. The Beheading of St. John the Baptist.
Florence. Corsini Pal. Christ praying in the Garden.
Christ presented to the People by Pontius Pilate.
The Crowning with Thorns.
The Entombment.
Pitti Pal. The Labourers in the Vineyard.
The Lost Coin.
Uffizi. Artemisia.
Frankfort. Städel. The Visitation.
The Flight into Egypt.

Hampton Court. Palace. David with the Head of Goliath.
Mantua. Academy. The Miracle of the Loaves.
Cathedral. Frescoes.
Modena. Esten-e Gall. The Virgin enthroned.
Munich. Gallery. Herminia.
St. Peter.
Tancred lying wounded in the arms of his Esquire.
Paris. Louvre. Nero.
Rural Life.
Melancholy.
The Guardian Angel.
Petersburg. Hermitage. The Adoration of the Shepherds.
Portrait of a Comedian.
David.
The Conception.
The Young Tobias healing his Father.
Dædalus and Icarus.
Venice. Academy. Melancholy.
Vienna. Gallery. A Market-place.
The Flight into Egypt.
The dead Leander.
Moses and the burning Bush.
The Marriage of St. Catharine.
The Triumph of Galatea.
St. Margaret.

FEUERBACH, ANSELM, a German historical painter, the son of a well-known archaeologist, was born at Spire in 1829, and after his father's removal to Freiburg, he went, when seventeen years of age, to Düsseldorf, and there first studied art under the tuition of Schadow. But the religious sentiment of that school being little to his taste, he left Düsseldorf in 1848, and went to Munich, where, as a pupil of Genelli, he first disclosed that classical taste which afterwards gave him his high position in the ranks of art. In 1850 he betook himself to the Antwerp Academy, and in the following year to Paris, where he first worked under Couture, but afterwards quite independently. He did not, however, remain long in that city, for in 1853 we find him removing to Carlsruhe, in 1854 to Venice, and in 1855 to Rome.

The earliest of Feuerbach's productions of which we find mention is his 'Sea Nymph,' painted while studying under Genelli at Munich. Then in 1852, at Paris, he executed his graceful and natural 'Hafis at the Fountain'; at Carlsruhe, in 1853, his 'Death of Pietro Aretino,' which proved a most striking picture through the strong individualities of the characters, and the grandeur and comprehensiveness of the design. At Venice he copied Titian's 'Ascension,' and also painted poetical subjects, in which he developed a further advance in the direction of his previous picture. At Rome, in 1857, appeared his 'Dante with the noble Ladies of Ravenna,' now in the Carlsruhe Gallery, a production characterized by loftiness of conception together with depth of thought; in 1861, his 'Iphigenia in Tauris,' and 'Francesca da Rimini'; and in 1862, a magnificent and solemn 'Pietà.' At Vienna he painted upon the ceiling of the Museum of Modelling a powerful original design of 'The Titans.' His death occurred at Venice in 1880. Among his other works are the following:

Medea.
Orpheus and Eurydice.
Petrarch and Laura.
Ariosto in the Park of Ferrara.
The Boy Musicians. 1865.
The Banquet of Plato. 1869.
Medea going into Exile. 1870.
The Judgment of Paris. 1871.
The Battle of the Amazons. 1872.

Iphigenia. (Stuttgart Gallery.)
Romeo and Juliet.
Melancholy.
The Fall of the Titans.

FEURLEIN, JOHANN PETER, who was born at Boxberg in 1668, was instructed in painting by Oswald Onghers, and visited Vienna and Venice. He died at Anspach in 1728. He was an excellent painter of portraits and historical pieces, among which may be mentioned :

The portrait of the Emperor Joseph I.
The paintings in the Castles of the Duke of Saxe-Hildburghausen and the Margrave of Anspach.

FEYERABEND, SIGMUND, born in 1527 or 1528, was a bookseller at Frankfort. To him are attributed the woodcuts from the designs of Virgil Solis in a German Bible printed at Frankfort in 1561, and the portraits of the Doges of Venice in Kellner's 'Chronica,' also printed at Frankfort in 1574. He died after the year 1585. He signed his cuts with SF or a monogram. Several of his relations also were wood-engravers, and one of them, M. FEYERABEND, who worked about 1578, executed several figures after Melchior Lorich.

FIACCO, ORLANDO, (or FLACCO,) a native of Verona, who flourished about 1560, was instructed by Francesco Torbido, called Il Moro. His style much resembles that of Badile. Vasari praises his portraits, and Lanzi says that his forms resemble those of Caravaggio. There are by him at Verona, in San Nazario, a 'Crucifixion' and an 'Ecce Homo.'

FIALETTI, ODOARDO, was born at Bologna in 1573. After studying for some time under Giovanni Battista Crenonini, at Bologna, he went to Rome, and afterwards to Venice, where he entered the school of Tintoretto. He died at Venice in 1638. His principal paintings are in San Marco and Sant' Andrea at Murano. Boschini mentions thirty-eight pictures by this painter, in the different churches at Venice. At Hampton Court Palace are 'Senators of Venice in the Senate House,' and 'Four Doges of Venice,' both of which were brought direct from Venice by Sir Henry Wotton, and by him bequeathed to Charles I. He also etched 243 plates from his own designs, and after other masters. These are usually marked with the cipher F, and among them are the following :

- A long frieze, with Tritons, Sirens, &c.
- Venus and Cupid, Diana hunting, the god Pan, and a Man holding a Vase ; after Pordenone.
- The Pastimes of Love, twenty plates, entitled 'Scherzi d'Amore.' 1617.
- A set of plates of the Costumes of different Nations, and of the different Religious Orders. 1626.
- The Marriage at Cana ; after Tintoretto.
- St. Sebastian ; after the same.
- Designs of all the parts of the Human Body.
- Designs for Sieges.
- A Book on Fortification and Instructions for Fighting, in forty-three plates. 1628.

FIAMMINGHINO, GIAMBATTISTA, GIOVANNI MAURO, and MARCO. See ROVERE.

FIAMMINGO (FIAMINGO, FIAMMINGHO, or FLAMMINGO). This is a general name given by the Italians to Flemish artists, but they are so numerous that it is difficult to distinguish the Fiamminghi in the Italian writers. Zani names no less than sixty-four.

FIAMMINGO, ANSELMO, who flourished about 1680, was instructed by Luca Giordano. He was a most successful copyist of his master.

FIAMMINGO, ARRIGO, probably a native of Mechlin, was born about 1523. His family name is not known ; but he is called by the Italians Fiammingo (Fleming), on account of his nationality. He visited Rome in the time of Gregory XIII., and was employed by that pontiff in the Vatican. In the Sistine Chapel of the basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore there is a 'Resurrection of Christ' restored by him from the original of Domenico Ghirlandajo, but it has lost all trace of the style of that master. In La Madonna degli Angeli is a picture by this master of 'Christ and Mary Magdalen in the house of the Pharisee,' a grand composition, of many figures ; and in the same church is a fine picture of 'St. Michael discomfiting the rebel Angels,' designed in a grand and noble style. Many other works of this painter, in oil and fresco, are in the public edifices at Rome, where he died in 1601.

FIAMMINGO, CORNELIO. See CORT.

FIAMMINGO, DIONISIO. See CALVAERT.

FIAMMINGO, ENRICO, first studied under Giuseppe Ribera, called Spagnoletto, but was afterwards a scholar of Guido. There are some works by this artist, in the style of Guido, in the church of San Barbaziano, at Bologna.

FIAMMINGO, GIOVANNI MAURO. See ROVERE.

FIAMMINGO, GUALTIERI and GIORGIO. These two artists painted for the churches of Florence a great number of windows after the designs of Vasari. It is supposed that these glass-painters, mentioned by Vasari, are identical with Dirk and Wouter Crabeth of Gouda.

FIAMMINGO, GUGLIELMO, a scholar of Francesco Albani, painted in the style of that master at Bologna about 1660. His productions are remarkable for the landscapes.

FIAMMINGO, PAOLO. See FRANCESCHI.

FIAMMINGO, ROBERTO. See ROBERT LE LONGE.

FIASELLA, DOMENICO, called IL SARZANA (or SARAZANA), was born at Sarzana, in the Genoese state, about 1589. After passing some time in the school of Giovanni Battista Paggi, he went to Rome, where he studied attentively the works of Raphael. During a residence of ten years at Rome he was employed in several works conjointly with Passignano and the Cavaliere d'Arpino. On his return to Genoa he painted a great number of pictures for the churches in that city. His powers were best adapted to the depicting of tragic scenes. As a colourist he is superior to the generality of the Genoese painters. He distinguished himself also as a portrait painter, and died in 1669. His principal works are :

- Genoa. S. Sebastiano. St. Anthony finding the dead body of St. Paul the Hermit.
- " S. Agostino. St. Thomas of Villanuova.
- Piacenza. S. Vincenzo. St. Bernard (in the manner of Raphael).
- Sarzana. Cathedral. The Murder of the Innocents.

FIGAROLO, IL MUTO DI. See SARTI.

FICATELLI, STEFANO, who was born at Cento about 1630, and died at the beginning of the 18th century, was a pupil of Guercino. He executed some pictures for the churches in Ferrara, but his chief works are his copies after Guercino.

FICHERELLI, FELICE, called FELICE RIPOSO, born at San Gimignano in 1605, was a pupil of Jacopo da Empoli. He acquired the name of Felice Riposo from his singular taciturnity, for which he was not more remarkable than for his uncommon indolence. This inertness is more to be regretted, as the few works he has left are distinguished by an elegance of design, a 'morbidezza,' a truth to nature, and a harmony of colour that charm. Such is his picture of 'Adam and Eve driven from Paradise,' in the Rinuccini Palace, and his 'St. Anthony,' in the church of Santa Maria Nuova, at Florence. His copies after Perugino, Andrea del Sarto, and others, have been mistaken for the works of those masters. He died in 1660. In the Dresden Gallery is a 'Lucretia and Tarquinius' by him.

FICQUET, ETIENNE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1719, and was instructed by G. F. Schmidt and Le Bas. He acquired great reputation by a set of small portraits which he engraved of distinguished literary characters of France. They are executed with extraordinary neatness and delicacy, and are very correctly drawn. One of his best plates is a portrait of Madame de Maintenon, after Mignard, now become very scarce. He engraved also several of the plates for Descamps' 'Vie des Peintres Flamands et Hollandais,' of which those of Rubens and Van Dyck are very highly finished. He died in Paris in 1794. The following are among his best prints:

Françoise d'Aubigné; after P. Mignard.
J. de La Fontaine; after Rigaud.
J. F. Regnard; after the same.
J. J. Rousseau; after De La Tour. 1763.
F. M. Arouet de Voltaire; after the same. 1762.
Pierre Corneille; after Le Brun.
J. de Crébillon; after Aved.
J. B. P. de Molière; after Coypel.
René Descartes; after F. Hals.
M. Montaigne; after Dumoustier. 1772.
De La Mothe Le Vayer; after Nanteuil.
F. de La Mothe Fénélon; after Vivien.
J. J. Vadé; after Richard.
P. P. Rubens; after Van Dyck.
Anton Van Dyck; after the same.

FICTOORS, JAN. See VICTOORS.

FIDANI, ORAZIO, a native of Florence, was born about 1610, and died shortly after 1642. He was a pupil of Giovanni Biliverti, whose style he imitated. Several of his pictures are to be found in Florence, among which may be named 'The Four Doctors' and 'The Four Evangelists' in the church of the Chartreuse. The Corsini Gallery possesses two portraits.

FIDANZA, FILIPPO, born at Sabina in 1720, was instructed in painting by Marco Benefial at Rome. Subsequently he studied and imitated the great masters, and many works by him of that description are still to be met with at Rome. He died in 1790.

FIDANZA, FRANCESCO, the son of Filippo Fidanza, was born at Milan in 1749. He studied under Vernet and Lacroix, and excelled in landscape painting. For Eugène Beauharnais he painted the Italian Harbours, two of which, Ancona and Malamocco, with a landscape, are in the Brera at Milan. He died at Milan in 1819.

FIDANZA, GREGORIO, brother of Francesco Fidanza, was a disciple of Claude Lorrain and Salvator Rosa, whom he imitated with success in his landscapes. He died in 1820.

FIDANZA, PAOLO, an Italian painter and engraver, of Rome, was born at Camerino in 1731, and studied after the great masters at Rome, from whose paintings he executed a series of heads. There are by him several plates after Raphael, Annibale Carracci, and Guido Reni, but very indifferently executed; among them are the following:

Mount Parnassus; after Raphael.
The Mass of Bolsena; after the same.
The Descent from the Cross; after Annibale Carracci.
St. Peter and St. Paul appearing to St. Francis; after the same.

FIEBIGER, JULIUS, a Saxon landscape painter, was born at Bautzen in 1813, and died at Dresden in 1883. There is a landscape by this painter in the Dresden Gallery.

FIEDLER, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, born at Pirna in 1697, was a painter of portraits, who studied in Paris under Rigaud and Largillière. As court-painter at Darmstadt, where he died in 1768, he executed the portraits of a number of distinguished personages. Among his productions in the Gallery of that town are 'The Burial of Christ,' 'The Seasons,' some portraits, among which is the artist himself, and some fruit and fish pieces.

FIELDING, ANTHONY VANDYKE COPLEY, an eminent water-colour landscape painter, was born in 1787. He was the second son of Theodore Nathan Fielding, and studied under John Varley. In 1810 he became an Associate of the Water-Colour Society, to the exhibitions of which he was a very large contributor. He became a full member of the Society in 1813, treasurer in 1817, secretary in 1818, and was president from 1831 until his death. He was awarded a gold medal at the Paris Salon of 1824. The public appreciation of his art, and a large teaching connection, enabled him to amass a considerable fortune, and in his later years he retired to Brighton. He died at Worthing in 1855. His works are clever, although the rapidity with which they were executed—he frequently exhibited more than forty in one year at the Water-Colour Society—renders them slight. He is seen at his best in his sea-pieces and aerial effects. He occasionally painted in oil, and some of his works in this medium appeared at the Royal Academy. There is a large collection of his water-colour drawings in the South Kensington Museum.

FIELDING, JOHN, an engraver, was born about 1758. He studied under Bartolozzi and Ryland, for the latter of whom he worked much, so that few plates bear his own name; of these are 'Jacob and Rachael,' after Stothard, and 'Moses saved by Pharaoh's Daughter.'

FIELDING, NEWTON, a water-colour painter and an engraver, was the youngest son of Theodore Nathan Fielding. He painted animals, but he is chiefly known as an engraver and lithographer. His practice was large in France, where he had a considerable reputation. He died in 1856.

FIELDING, THALES, a water-colour painter, born in 1793, was a younger son of Theodore Nathan Fielding. He painted landscapes, with cattle and figures, and became drawing-master at the Woolwich Military Academy. He died in London in 1837. At the South Kensington Museum is a water-colour drawing, 'Greenwich Hill,' by him.

FIELDING, THEODORE HENRY ADOLPHUS, a water-colour painter, the eldest son of Theodore Nathan Fielding, was born in 1781. He exhibited occasionally at the Royal Academy, and became drawing master at Addiscombe Military College.

He also wrote several works on the theory and practice of painting, engraving, and perspective. He died at Croydon in 1851. At the South Kensington Museum is a water-colour drawing of 'Manorbeer Castle' by him. His wife was a member of the Water-Colour Society, and from 1821 till 1835 exhibited drawings of flowers, birds, insects, &c. at its exhibitions.

FIELDING, THEODORE NATHAN, a portrait painter, had considerable practice in the latter half of the 18th century in Yorkshire and Lancashire. He was the father of the four water-colour painters, Theodore, Copley, Thales, and Newton Fielding.

FIELIUS, JAN. See FILICUS.

FIESOLE, Fra BENEDETTO DA, called also BENEDETTO DA MUGELLO, who was born at the village of Vicchio, in the province of Mugello, was a brother—probably younger—of the celebrated Fra Angelico, and with him entered the convent of San Domenico at Fiesole, in 1407, taking the name of 'Frater Benedictus,' by which he is usually known. For three years previous to his death, which occurred in 1448, he held the post of superior of that convent. Fra Benedetto was a miniaturist of talent. He illuminated the choral books of San Marco, Florence, and also books in the convent of San Domenico, Fiesole. He is supposed also to have assisted Fra Angelico in his frescoes in San Marco.

FIESOLE, Frate GIOVANNI DA, commonly, from the piety of his life and works, called FRA ANGELICO, was born at Vicchio, in the province of Mugello, in 1387. His father's Christian name was Pietro, his surname is unrecorded. He was christened Guido, and both he and his brother Benedetto entered the Dominican convent of Fiesole, near Florence, in 1407, when Guido took the name of Giovanni. His earliest works were illuminations for manuscripts. The first years of his monastic life were spent—owing to the brotherhood being driven from Florence by the Archbishop for their allegiance to Gregory XII.—at Foligno and at Cortona, where many of his works still remain, notably in the church of the Jesuits. He probably returned with the Dominicans to Fiesole in 1418, and remained there eighteen years, during which he executed many paintings and frescoes for the convent and churches. Amongst them can be mentioned a 'Tabernacle' representing a life-size 'Virgin and Child enthroned,' with twelve angels in the cornice, painted in 1433, and now in the Uffizi Gallery; also the thirty-five panels which formerly adorned the plate cupboards of the SS. Annunziata, and now in the Academy of Arts at Florence. About 1436 he went to the monastery of San Marco, at Florence, which owed so much of its splendour to the liberality of Cosmo de' Medici; and in 1438 he painted the altar-piece for the choir. This has since been pulled down, but portions of it are in the Academy of Arts. The numerous frescoes with which Fra Angelico has adorned the church and convent have rendered it for ever famous, and have so often been described and illustrated that it is unnecessary here to enlarge on them. He was engaged on the work about nine years. About 1445 he went, at the invitation of Pope Eugenius IV., to Rome, and shortly afterwards he was offered the Archbishopric of Florence, which through modesty he declined. In 1447 he visited Orvieto, where he painted the 'Last Judgment' in the Cappella Nuova of the cathedral. The subjects are 'The Saviour in the midst of a glory of Angels,' the 'Virgin amongst the Apostles,' and sixteen figures of Saints and Prophets. He did not complete the chapel, but it was subsequently finished by Signorelli in 1499. On his return to Rome, he was employed by Nicholas V. to decorate with frescoes the chapel in the Vatican which bears his name; these illustrate the lives of St. Stephen and St. Lawrence. Fra Angelico died at Rome in 1455, and was buried in the church of Santa Maria sopra Minerva in that city. The following are his principal works:

Antwerp.	Museum.	St. Romuald reproaching Otho III. with the murder of Crescentius.

FIESSINGER, FRANZ GABRIEL, a Jesuit, born at Offenburg in Breisgau in 1752, studied without any master the art of engraving. He visited Munich, Vienna, Friburg (1786), Switzerland, France, and lastly London, where he died in 1807. Among his plates may be mentioned:

Prudence; after M. A. Franceschini. 1777.

Ecce Homo; after Giuseppe Cesari. 1781.

The portrait of Thaddäus Kosciuszko; after J. Grassi.

FIGINO, AMBROGIO, a native of Milan, was born about 1550, and was alive in the year 1595. He was a pupil of Giovanni Paolo Lomazzo, and not only distinguished himself in portrait painting sufficiently to be celebrated in the poetry of Marino, but was eminent for his historical works. He has left in his native city a 'St. Ambrose' in Sant' Eustorgio, a 'St. Matthew' in San Raffaello, an 'Assumption' in San Fedele, a 'Conception' in Sant' Antonio, and (in the Brera) the portrait of Lucio Foppa, and a 'Virgin and Child.'

FIL, JAN. See FILICUS.

FILHOL, ANTOINE MICHEL, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1759, was instructed by F. D. Née. He was very successful in depicting landscapes, and published several works on art, among which the most noted is the 'Musée Français,' 1804-15. He died in Paris in 1812.

FILICUS, JAN, (FILIIUS, FIL, or FIELIUS,) a Dutch painter, was born at Bois-le-Duc in 1660. He was a scholar of Pieter van Slingelandt, and painted in the very highly-finished manner of his master. His pictures, like those of Slingelandt, represent conversations, or subjects taken from private life, and small portraits. His works, without possessing the extreme polish of those of his instructor, have great merit, and are found in the best collections in Holland. He died in 1719.

FILIPEPI, ALESSANDRO, better known as SANDRO BOTTICELLI, the youngest son of Mariano Filipepi, was born at Florence in 1447. He was apprenticed to a goldsmith in his youth, but left that art and studied that of painting, choosing Fra Filippo Lippi as his first model. The galleries of the Uffizi, Florence, and of the Louvre, Paris, both possess circular Madonnas, with Angels, painted by him soon after the death of Lippi, in 1469. In 1478, Sandro, by order of the Signori Otto, and according to a custom then prevalent in that city, painted the effigy of the traitor Pazzi on the front of the Public Palace of Florence. In 1480, Sandro painted the fresco of 'St. Augustine,' at the church of the Ognissanti, Florence. In the Uffizi Gallery is an allegorical painting of 'Fortitude,' which was formerly in the Mercatanzia; and an 'Allegory of Spring,' formerly belonging to Cosmo de' Medici, is in the Academy of Arts, Florence. In the church of Santa Maria Novella, Florence, is an 'Adoration of the Magi,' executed by this artist to perpetuate the memory of Cosmo, who, as one of the kings, kneels to adore the Infant, while the other two kings are said by Vasari to be portraits of Giuliano and Giovanni de' Medici. In 1481 Botticelli executed a series of designs for Landino's edition of Dante, printed at Florence in that year, which display wonderful power of fancy and execution. The original drawings of these in a manuscript of Dante were formerly in the collection of the Duke of Hamilton, and are now in the Royal Library at Berlin. Of this same year is the large painting in the Academy of Florence, originally executed for San Marco, which represents the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' surrounded by angels and a choir of cherubs, with figures of SS. Augustine, John the Evangelist, Ely, and Jerome; its predella contains four scenes from the lives of the preceding saints.

Botticelli also practised engraving to a limited extent, as appears from the evidence of Vasari. He executed a set of twelve plates of Sibyls, and seven of the Planets; a 'St. Jerome kneeling before a Crucifix,' and a 'St. Sebastian, with the Virgin,' inscribed O mater Dei, memento mei, &c.

Between the years 1481 and 1484 Botticelli was called to Rome by Sixtus IV. to compete in the decorations of the Sistine Chapel with Perugino, Rosselli, Signorelli, and Ghirlandajo. He there executed two designs drawn from the Old Testament, viz., 'The Destruction of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram,' and 'Moses smiting the Egyptians at the Well,' and one from the New Testament, of 'The Temptation of Christ in the Wilderness.' Of about this period is the allegorical painting representing 'The Slander upon Apelles,' which was painted for Fabio Segni. In 1483 he, with Ghirlandajo, was commissioned to decorate the Sala dell' Udienza, in the Public Palace of Florence. In 1487 Sandro executed four panels illustrating Boccaccio's fable of 'Nastagio degli Onesti,' for the marriage of Pierfranco di Giovanni Bini with Lucrezia Pucci. Through the influence of Lorenzo de' Medici, Botticelli, in conjunction with Domenico and Davide Ghirlandajo, executed in 1491 the mosaics formerly in the Cappella San Zanobi in the church of Santa Maria del Fiore, Florence. His death occurred at Florence in 1510, he having in his old age become reduced in circumstances and a pensioner of the Medici family.

The following works by Botticelli are in the public and private galleries of Europe:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Virgin enthroned, with Angels.	Florence.	Academy.	The Virgin and Child (from the Convent of Sant' Ambrosio; by some ascribed to Del Castagno).

FILIPPI, CAMILLO, was a native of Ferrara, who flourished about the middle of the 16th century. He was a disciple of Dosso Dossi, and painted historical works with some success. In the church of Santa Maria del Vado, at Ferrara, is a picture by this master representing the 'Annunciation'; and in that of Il Gesù is another of the 'Trinity.' His death took place in 1574.

FILIPPI, CESARE, the younger son and pupil of Camillo Filippi, was born at Ferrara in 1536. He assisted his father and brother Sebastiano in their works, and excelled in painting heads and grotesques in the ornamental style, although he sometimes attempted historical subjects, which are very feeble imitations of the style of his brother. Such is his picture of the 'Crucifixion' in the church of La Morte. He died after 1602.

FILIPPI, GIACOMO, a native of Ferrara, studied painting under Francesco Ferrari. His views and architectural paintings are deservedly esteemed. He died in 1743.

FILIPPI, SEBASTIANO, called BASTIANINO, and sometimes GRATELLA, born at Ferrara in 1532, was the son of Camillo Filippi. He was first instructed in art by his father, and when he was eighteen years of age he went to Rome, where he had the advantage of being admitted into the school of Michelangelo, but on account of the unhealthy climate of Rome he was obliged to leave that city and return to Ferrara. He was a fertile painter, but negligent in the execution of his works, which are very unequal in value and possess little originality. Though his drawing is correct, his figures are clumsy. His principal work is 'The Last Judgment' (1577-84), in the cathedral at Ferrara, a prodigious performance in which he imitated the style of Michelangelo. It has been spoiled by restoration. A 'Holy Family' and an 'Adoration of the Magi' are in the Costabili Gallery in the same city, in the churches of which there are no fewer than seven pictures of the 'Annunciation,' differing little from each other in composition. Among his best works may also be noticed his 'Martyrdom of St. Catharine,' in the church dedicated to that saint; in Santa Maria de' Servi, the 'Adoration of the Magi'; in the Certosa, a grand picture of St. Christopher, entirely in the lofty style of Michelangelo; in San Benedetto, a 'Dead Christ supported by Angels'; and at the Cappuccini, the 'Virgin and Infant, with St. John.' In the cathedral is a picture of the 'Circumcision,' which is supposed to have been painted before he went to Rome. Filippi died at Ferrara in 1602.

FILIPPO, Fra. See LIPPI, FILIPPO.

FILLEUL, GILBERT, was a French engraver, who is mentioned by Basan. He flourished about the end of the 17th century, and executed some plates after Le Brun, Simpol, &c.

FILLEUL, PIERRE, was the son of Gilbert Filleul. He engraved some plates for the 'Fables' of La Fontaine; as well as the 'Carriers,' after Wouwerman.

FILLIAN, JOHN, an engraver, flourished from about 1676 to 1680, in which year he died at an early age. He was a pupil of the elder Faithorne, and worked in the style of his instructor. The following are by him:

Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex.
William Faithorne; after a print by Faithorne.
The Head of Paracelsus.
The Frontispiece to Heylyn's 'Cosmography.'

FILOCAMO, ANTONIO and PAOLO, two brothers, were natives of Messina, and are noticed by Hackert in his 'Memorie de' Pittori Messinesi.' They were educated in the school of Carlo Maratti, at Rome; and on their return to Messina, established an academy, which was much frequented. They executed conjointly several works, both in oil and in fresco, in the former of which Antonio was very superior to Paolo. Their principal works are in the churches of Santa Caterina di Valverde and San Gregorio, at Messina, where they both died of the plague in 1743.

FILOTESIO, NICCOLA, (FILOTTESCHI, or FILATICH,) usually called COLA DELL' AMATRICE, and sometimes COLA DALLA MATRICE, is mentioned by Vasari in his life of Calabrese. He painted from about 1513 to 1543, in Ascoli, Calavria, and Norcia, and was distinguished throughout all that province. His manner was hard in his earlier pictures, but in his subsequent works he exhibited a fulness of design, and an accomplished modern style. His 'Last Supper,' formerly in the oratory of the Corpus Domini, and now in the Foundling Hospital, is a work of merit. Ascoli possesses, in addition to this, several of his best works. A few are in Rome—an 'Ascension' is in the Museum of the Lateran, and a 'Madonna' in the Capitol. Cola died at Amatrice, but in what year is not known.

FINCH, FRANCIS OLIVER, a landscape painter in water-colours, was born in 1802. In early life he studied under John Varley, and painted portraits. He exhibited regularly at the Water-Colour Society, of which he was elected an associate in 1822, and a full member in 1827. His works were generally poetic compositions, and he excelled in twilight and moonlight scenes. He died in 1862. Several of his landscapes are at the South Kensington Museum. His 'Memorials' were printed in 1865.

FINCKE, HANS, a landscape and architectural engraver, was born at Berlin in 1800. He studied under Buchhorn, and in London under Finden, and died in 1859. His best plates are a view of the Cathedral at Meissen, after Schirmer, and a view of Salzburg, after Biermann. He commenced also a view of the Convent of San Miniato near Florence, after Biermann, which was finished after his death by Dröhmer.

FINDEN, EDWARD FRANCIS, a line-engraver, was the younger brother of William Finden, and like him a pupil of James Mitán. He was born in London in 1792, and died in the same city in 1857. He worked chiefly upon the various publications issued by himself and his brother, but executed also a few plates for the 'Literary Souvenir,' as well as the following:

The Princess Victoria; after Westall.
The Harvest Waggon; after Gainsborough.
Happy as a King; after Collins.

FINDEN, WILLIAM, a line-engraver, was born in 1787. He was a pupil of James Mitán, and in conjunction with his brother Edward, and a number of assistants and pupils, he published several ably executed series of prints and book-illustrations. The principal of these were as follow:

Landscape Illustrations to the Life and Works of Lord Byron. 1831—1834.
The Gallery of the Graces; after Chalon, Landseer, and others. 1832—1834.

Landscap Illustrations of the Bible; after Turner, Calcott, Stanfield, and others. 1834.

Byron Beauties. 1834.

Landscape Illustrations to the Life and Poetical Works of George Crabbe. 1834.

Portraits of the Female Aristocracy of the Court of Queen Victoria; after Chalon, Hayter, and others. 1838-39.

The Royal Gallery of British Art.

The Beauties of Thomas Moore.

Besides these independent works, the Findens produced the illustrations to the 'Arctic Voyages,' published by Murray; to Brockedon's 'Illustrations of the Passes of the Alps,' 1827-29; to Campbell's 'Poetical Works,' 1828; and some of the plates for Lodge's 'Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain,' 1821-34. The 'Royal Gallery of British Art' and the 'Beauties of Thomas Moore' involved the Findens in a great loss from which they never recovered. William Finden died in London in 1852. The most important plates by his own hand are:

George IV., full-length, seated on a sofa; after Sir Thomas Lawrence.

The Highlander's Return; after Sir Edwin Landseer.

The Naughty Boy; after the same.

Deer-Stalkers; after the same.

The Interior of a Highlander's House; after the same.

The Fisherman's Daughter; after the same.

The Village Festival; after Sir David Wilkie.

The Crucifixion; after Hilton.

Returning from Market; after Sir A. W. Calcott.

Sickness and Health; after Webster.

Lord Byron at the age of nineteen; after G. Saunders.

The Rivals; after Leslie. ('Literary Souvenir,' 1826.)

The Blackberry Boy; after Hamilton. ('Anniversary,' 1829.)

FINI, TOMMASO DI CRISTOFORO, also called MASOLINO DA PANICALE, was the son of Cristoforo Fini, of the quarter of Santa Croce, at Florence, and was born at Panicale in 1383. He probably received his artistic education from Lorenzo Ghiberti, and afterwards from Gherardo Starnina, and was admitted into the Guild of the Medici and Speciale, at Florence, in 1423; shortly afterwards he entered the service of Philippo Scolari, Obergespann of Temeswar, in Hungary, who is better known as Pippo Spanno, and with whom he went to Hungary in 1427. At his death Masolino returned to Italy, and accepted from Cardinal Branda Castiglione the commission to paint the choir of the church, which that prelate had just finished in Castiglione di Olona, in 1428, and in which can still be seen the remains of a double course of frescoes representing scenes from the lives of the Virgin and SS. Stephen and Lawrence. He also decorated the whole of the Baptistery at Castiglione with scenes drawn from the life of St. John the Baptist, which still remain, and although much injured by time, are worthy of notice. Very little else that is really authentic remains of Masolino's work. The date of his death, though somewhat doubtful, is now set down as 1447. The famous Masaccio was one of his pupils.

FINIGUERRA, TOMMASO, or MASO. The invention of taking off impressions on paper from engraved plates has long been the subject of dispute between archæologists and critics, influenced unhappily sometimes by national predilections. Vasari attributes this discovery to Maso Finiguerra, a Florentine goldsmith and niello worker, who flourished about the year 1460, and the story, as recounted by him with all its interesting details, has been constantly reproduced until lately, and will, most probably, be still reproduced, by un-learned writers, because there is no record whatever of the commencement of printing by pressure from engraved metal plates, a process which seems to have quickly followed, in both Upper and Lower Germany, that of surface-printing from wood-cuts. Finiguerra, being an engraver on silver for the decorative purpose of niello work, i. e. filling the incision with a preparation of carbon fused by extreme heat, the result being an ornamental one, lines of black metal on the white surface of the silver, was in the habit of taking a mould of his work as he proceeded, which he cast from in sulphur, then filled the incisions, now receptive like the original silver, with a black ink, thus at last seeing a representation of what the finished niello would be. Instead of this elaborate process an accident showed him that if he rubbed the black ink into his metal plate, by pressing upon it wet paper such as printers use he could get a representation direct, only it would be a reversed one.

Unhappily for this story of the great historian of the masters of Italian art, there have been from time to time impressions from engraved plates brought to light with dates earlier than that assigned to this almost self-evident plan to save himself trouble by Finiguerra. These exist in several national collections; in the British Museum, for instance, is a set of twenty-eight compositions from the 'Passion,' on one of which is the date lviii^o jor, meaning the 57th year of the 15th century, while no windfall of early Italian engravings has ever taken place. The number, besides, of skilful artist-engravers living by their art in various parts of Germany during the second half of the same century, hundreds of whose elaborately beautiful productions are now carefully preserved and catalogued, particularly the Master of 1466, Martin Schongauer, who died at an advanced age, probably in 1486, and his contemporary, Van Meckenem, &c., none of whose works indicate the infancy of the 'mechanique' in the art, make it certain that pressure-printing from engraved plates is to be added to the correlative inventions of German origin.

Notwithstanding this reduction of his honours, Finiguerra's name is still important in Florentine history. It has hitherto been stated that about 1450, being then about twenty-five years of age, he was employed by the Corporation of Merchants to provide a Pax in silver-gilt niello for the Baptistery, Ghiberti being then employed on the celebrated gates. This Pax, representing the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' still exists in the cabinet of the Gallery at Florence, and two sulphur casts and two impressions of it are still preserved. One of these casts is now in the British Museum, and both the paper proofs are in the public collections in Paris. Recent investigations, however, prove that this celebrated Pax was the work of Matteo Dei, one of the most eminent of the Florentine goldsmiths of the 15th century.

It is to be observed that Vasari was profoundly ignorant of people and things north of the Alps, calling Dürer, and every other northern artist he had occasion to mention, Flemings, because the inventor of oil-painting, Van Eyck, was a Fleming; yet he was not aware that Van Eyck was actually in Rome, and his pupil, Roger van der Weyden, was actually in Florence in the very year when Finiguerra is supposed to have produced his first impression on paper from the engraved Pax. Passavant, observing this fact in the history of Roger, ingeniously and acutely supposed that he went to see Finiguerra's work, and made the niellist acquainted with the practice then already established in his native country. That writer concludes by saying he is "confirmed in this opinion by certain very old proofs of nielli of Netherlands origin in the collection at Dresden, and which are of the period of Master Roger." Such is probably the true foundation of the celebrated Vasari narrative. W.B.S.

FINK, FREDERICK, an American genre painter, was born at Little Falls, New York, in 1817. He commenced life as a student of medicine, but impelled by an irresistible love of art, he went to New York and studied under Morse. In 1840 he visited Europe, and made copies of the works of Titian and Murillo. Among his pictures are 'An Artist's Studio,' 'The Shipwrecked Mariner,' 'The Young Thieves,' and 'A Negro Wood-Sawyer.' He died in 1849.

FINKE, HEINRICH JONATHAN, was born at Nuremberg in 1816. He was instructed in the principles of art in that city, and afterwards visited Belgium and Holland, and settled in Altenburg, where he was mostly employed by the court. He excelled in portraiture, and his productions, which are entirely in the Dutch style, are executed in a clear and bold manner. He was professor at Altenburg, and died in 1868.

FINLAYSON, JOHN, an engraver, was born about the year 1730, and worked in London. In 1773 he received a premium from the Society of Arts, and about three years after this he died. He engraved in mezzotint several portraits, and a few plates of historical subjects, among which are the following:

PORTRAITS.

The Duchess of Gloucester; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
 Lady Charles Spencer; after the same.
 Lady Elizabeth Melbourne; after the same.
 The Earl of Buchan; after the same.
 Miss Wynyard; after the same.

FINNEY, SAMUEL, a miniature painter, was born in Cheshire in 1721. He was a member of the Society of Artists, where he exhibited from 1761 to 1766. He became portrait painter to Queen Charlotte, and died in 1807.

FINOGLIA, PAOLO DOMENICO, a native of Orta, in the kingdom of Naples, flourished about the year 1640. He was brought up in the academy of Cavaliere Massimo Stanzioni, but painted more in the style of Spagnoletto. He was a correct and expressive designer, and possessed great fecundity of invention. His principal works were the vault in the convent of San Martino at Naples, with scenes from the life of St. Martin (his best work), and ten oil paintings in the Capitol. He died in 1656.

FINSON, LOUIS, or ALOIS, (or FINSONIUS,) was born at Bruges about 1580. He went to Rome about 1600, where he became a disciple of Caravaggio. He travelled in Germany and settled at Aix, but subsequently visited Naples, and returned to Aix, whence he removed in 1614 to Arles, where he was drowned in the Rhone about 1632. The following are among his works, which are excellent in colour but wanting in dignity:

Aix.	Museum.	The Incredulity of St. Thomas.
		The Resurrection. 1613.
Andenne.	Church.	Massacre of the Innocents.
Arles.	Museum.	The Martyrdom of St. Stephen.
		The Adoration of the Magi. 1614.
Marseilles.	Museum.	A dying Magdalen.
Naples.	Museum.	The Annunciation. 1612.
Rome.	San Giovanni.	The Resurrection. 1610.

FIORAVANTI, was an Italian painter of still-life and inanimate objects, who excelled in painting vases, fruit and flowers, and musical instruments, which he represented with great exactness and fidelity.

FIORE, COLANTONIO DEL. See TOMASI, NICCOLA.

FIORE, FEDERIGO. See BAROCCI.

FIORE, JACOBELLO DEL. See DEL FIORE.

FIorentino, DOMENICO. See DEL BARBIERE.

FIorentino, LUCA, a Florentine engraver, who flourished in the early part of the 16th century, followed the manner of Robetta. He used the annexed monogram:

The following are some of his best works:

Herodias with the Head of St. John the Baptist.
 A richly-dressed Woman seated on the Ground, with two Children.
 A Man with a Bow.
 The Virgin and Child, St. Anthony, and St. Francis.
 St. Catharine and St. Lucia.

FIorentino, STEFANO, called STEFANO DA PONTE VECCHIO, and LO SCIMMIA (the ape), is questionably stated to have been the grandson and the disciple of Giotto. He was born at Florence in 1301, and, according to Vasari, greatly excelled his instructor in every department of the art. The rules of perspective were little known at the early period at which he lived, and he has the credit of establishing them on more regular principles. If he was less successful in his endeavours to overcome the difficulty of foreshortening, he has at least the credit of being the first artist who attempted it. He succeeded, better than any of his contemporaries, in giving expression to the airs of his heads, and a less Gothic turn to the attitudes of his figures. His works in the churches at Rome and Florence have perished, and the picture of the 'Virgin and Infant Christ,' in the Campo Santo at Pisa, which Lanzi mentions as the only vestige remaining of his productions, is clearly a work of the Siense school. He died in 1350.

FIorenzo DI LORENZO. Little is known of this painter, excepting that a contract was made by him to paint a double altar-piece in the church of Santa Maria Nuova, now belonging to the Servites, in Perugia, in 1472; and that in 1521 he assisted Tiberio d'Assisi in the valuation of a picture by Giannicolo of Perugia. Parts of the above-mentioned altar-piece can be still seen at the Academy of Arts at Perugia, as also eight half-lengths of saints, a 'St. Sebastian,' and other paintings of less value. There are also by him:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child, on a gold ground. 1481.
Diruta.	S. Francisco.	An Eternal in a circular glory, between SS. Roman and Roch. 1475.
Madrid.	Trinidad Mus.	The Saviour, with four Saints.

Perugia. Palazzo Com- } Two panels, with half-lengths of FIORILLO, JOHANN DOMINIK, born at Hamburg in 1748, was a painter and literary man. In 1759 he began to study at the Academy at Baireuth, and in 1761 went to Rome and became a scholar of P. Battoni. From 1765 to 1769 he studied at Bologna under Vittorio Bigari, but at the end of this term he returned to Hamburg, and was employed at the court at Brunswick, where he brought himself into notice. He became superintendent of the collections of engravings at Göttingen in 1784, and in 1799 professor at the University. He died at Göttingen in 1821.

FIORINI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was a native of Bologna. He flourished at the close of the 16th century, and died subsequently to 1595. He is chiefly known as a coadjutor of Cesare Aretusi, in conjunction with whom he painted several pictures at Bologna and Brescia, and distinguished himself especially as a good designer and a happy inventor. By him there are the following works:

Bologna. Cathedral. Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter.
 " San Giovanni in Monte. Birth of the Virgin.
 " San Benedetto. The Descent from the Cross.
 " Padri Servi. The Mass of St. Gregory.
 Brescia. S. Afra. The Birth of the Virgin.
 Rome. Sala Regia. A small painting by Fiorini alone.
 " Vatican.

FIORINO, JEREMIAS ALEXANDER, born at Cassel in 1793, painted several portraits now in the Dresden Gallery. He died at Dresden in 1847.

FIORONI, ADAMO, an Italian engraver, was born about 1800. He was a scholar of Longhi, and engraved several excellent plates at Milan, amongst which were:

The Virgin and Child, with St. John; after Raphael. 1829.
 The Virgin and Child, called 'La Madonna del Adjuto'; after B. Luini. 1822.

FIRENS, PIERRE, was an indifferent French engraver, who, according to Basan, resided in Paris about the year 1640. He copied, in a stiff, clumsy manner, the 'Hermits,' after Sadeler, and engraved some portraits, among others that of Henry IV. of France.

FIRENZE, ANDREA DA (who is distinct from Andrea de Florentia), was an artist living in the 15th century, and known as the author of a large altar-piece, signed and dated 1437, in a chapel of the church of Santa Margareta, at Cortona, which represents the 'Virgin taken to Paradise by six Angels, with Saints.' There is also, in the Casa Kamelli, at Gubbio, a 'Conversion of Constantine,' signed by him. The dates of his birth and death are not known.

FISCHBACH, JOHANN, born at Gravenegg, in Lower Austria, in 1797, was a painter of landscapes and genre-pieces. He studied at the Academy at Vienna, and his twenty-eight crayon-designs, representing forest trees in Germany, brought him into much notice. He died at Munich in 1871. The following are by him:

Munich. Gallery. A landscape in Salzburg.
 Vienna. Gallery. A Farmer's Boy disputing with a Girl for a Bird.
 " " A Widow in a Churchyard.

FISCHBACH, KARL. See VITTINGHOFF.

FISCHER, A., is the name of an engraver who executed a print of the 'Carriers,' after Wouwerman. The same subject is engraved by Filloul.

FISCHER, ANNA CATHARINA, a German lady, excelled in painting flowers in distemper and in oil. She was married to Benjamin Blok in 1664.

FISCHER, GEORG JOHANN PAUL, a miniature painter, was born in 1786 at Hanover, where he studied under Ramberg. He came to England in 1810, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1811 to 1871. He became miniature painter to George IV., and died in 1875.

FISCHER, HERMANN. See SWANEVELT.

FISCHER, ISAAC, a portrait and historical painter of Augsburg, died in 1705.

FISCHER, JOHANN, was an engraver on wood, to whom are attributed the cuts for the Bible printed at Strassburg in 1606.

FISCHER, JOHANN GEORG, an historical painter, was born at Augsburg in 1580. He travelled in Italy, but became an imitator of Albrecht Dürer. He died at Munich in 1643. The following are by him:

Munich. Gallery. Christ carrying the Cross.
 " " The Apprehension of Christ.
 Nuremberg. Landauer-Brüderhaus. The Apostles John, Peter, Mark, and Paul; after Albrecht Dürer.
 " Moritz-Chapel. Ecce Homo (supposed to be by him, but by some attributed to Albrecht Dürer.) Pommersfelden. Gall. The Trinity; after Albrecht Dürer.

FISCHER, JOSEPH, who was born at Vienna in 1769, studied painting and engraving under Brand and Schmutzer at the Academy of that city. After having travelled some time he returned to Vienna, and became a professor in the Academy. He died at Vienna in 1822. Among his paintings in the Gallery of that city are a view of Vienna and a landscape. His best engraved works are the following:

The Entombment; after Schidone.
 Christ in the Temple; after Ribera. 1793.
 The Adulteress before Christ; after Füger.
 The Emperor Francis, led by Minerva and Justice, receiving the homage of his people; in aquatint.
 The Portrait of Correggio.

His sister, MARIA ANNA FISCHER, who was born at Vienna in 1785, was also an engraver, chiefly of landscapes and battle-pieces.

FISCHER, JOSEPH ANTON, born at Oberstorf, Algäu, in 1814, was at first a cow-herd, but being assisted by Ch. Schraudolf, he studied at the Academy at Munich under Schlotthauer, and visited Italy in 1832 and 1843. During this time he executed cartoons under H. Hess for the glass-paintings of the Auerkirche, representing 'The Flight into Egypt,' 'Death of the Virgin,' 'Burial of the Virgin,' 'Christ in the Temple,' 'The Three Kings,' 'The Angel's Salutation,' 'The Marriage of the Virgin,' and 'The Prophecy of Simeon in the Temple.' He was a follower of Fra Angelico, and painted from 1844 to 1848 the cartoons for eight glass-paintings for the cathedral at Cologne, representing 'St. John the Baptist preaching,' 'The Adoration of the Magi,' 'The Taking down from the Cross,' 'The Stoning of St. Stephen,' 'The Descent of the Holy Ghost,' 'The Four Great Prophets,' 'The Four Evangelists,' and 'The Four Western Fathers'; for these he obtained the gold medal of Prussia. Several beautiful pen-and-ink drawings by this artist are in different collections, especially in Munich, where he died in 1859. Among his oil paintings are the following:

Munich.	Gallery.	The Flight into Egypt. 1841.
"	"	The Adoration of the Magi. 1844.
"	"	The Visitation. 1845.
"	"	The Entombment. 1848.
"	Princess Narischkin's.	The Ascension of the Virgin.

FISCHER, VINCENTZ, an historical painter and professor of architecture at the Academy of Vienna, was born at Schmidham, in Bavaria, in 1729, and died at Vienna in 1810. In addition to some pen-and-ink drawings, the following works by him are worthy of mention:

The Restoring of the Young Man of Nain to life. 1763.
The Raising of Lazarus. 1763.
Moses when a Boy treading on Pharaoh's Crown (in the Academy at Vienna).

FISEN, ENGELBERT, a Flemish painter, born at Liège in 1655, was a pupil of Bertholet Flemalle. When still very young he went to Italy, where he studied under Carlo Maratti, whose style he imitated. After eight years he returned to his native city, where his principal pictures are a 'Crucifixion,' painted for the chapel of the Hôtel-de-Ville; and a 'Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew,' and a 'Christ on the Cross,' painted for the church of St. Bartholomew. He died at Liège in 1733.

FISHER, ALVAN, an American portrait painter, who was a native of Needham, Connecticut, visited Europe in 1825, and studied for some time in Paris. He died at Dedham, Massachusetts, in 1863, having produced many satisfactory and refined likenesses, especially that of Spurzheim.

FISHER, EDWARD, a mezzotint engraver, was born in 1730 in Ireland, but resided in London during the time he was known as an artist, and died there about the year 1785. He engraved a number of portraits, chiefly after Sir Joshua Reynolds, which possess great merit. Among others are the following:

PORTRAITS AFTER SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS.

John, Earl of Bute, when Lord Cardiff.
The Marchioness of Tavistock (Lady Elizabeth Keppel); full length.
Garrick between Tragedy and Comedy. 1769.

FISHER, JONATHAN, an Irish landscape painter, was born at Dublin about the middle of the 18th century. He held a post in the Stamp Office, but his art was poor. He died in 1812.

FISHER, THOMAS, who was born at Rochester in 1782, was a clerk in the India Office. He practised art as an amateur, and made many drawings of antiquarian subjects, which he etched himself. He died at Stoke-Newington in 1836.

FISK, WILLIAM HENRY, a portrait and historical painter, was born in 1797 at Thorpe-le-Soken, Essex. He did not take up art as a profession till he was thirty-one years of age, having been for the ten previous years engaged in mercantile employment. His first picture exhibited at the Royal Academy was a portrait in 1831, and he continued painting in the same branch of art till 1835; from this date his pictures were chiefly historical. Among these we may mention 'Leonardo da Vinci dying in the arms of Francis I.,' exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1838; 'Attempted Assassination of Lorenzo de' Medici in Florence in 1478,' exhibited in 1839, and which was awarded the gold medal of the Manchester Institution in 1840; and 'The Trial of Charles I.,' exhibited in 1842, and afterwards engraved. His historical pictures are well composed, and accurate as to costume. He retired a few years later to a property he had purchased in the country, and from this time almost entirely relinquished painting. He died at Danbury, near Chelmsford, in 1872.

FITTLER, JAMES, a line-engraver, was born in London in 1758. He entered the schools of the Royal Academy in 1778, and was elected an Associate Engraver in 1800. He distinguished himself by numerous works after English and foreign masters, of different subjects and character; and book illustrations by him abound. His best engravings are considered to be 'Lord Howe's Victory,' and 'The Battle of the Nile,' both after De Louthembourg; the portrait of Benjamin West; the plates in Forster's 'British Gallery,' others in Bell's 'British Theatre,' and the portraits in Dibdin's 'Aedes Althorpiæ,' published in 1822, after which time he does not appear to have produced anything of importance. He died at Turnham Green in 1835.

FLAMEN, AALBERT, (or FLAMAND,) a Flemish painter and etcher, resided in Paris from 1648 to 1664. He painted landscapes, birds, and fish, and particularly excelled in representing the last of these, to which he gave a surprising appearance of reality. He succeeded less in landscape painting, and the forms of the trees, as well as the modification in light and shadow, are defective. There are by this artist some neat etchings of the above-mentioned subjects, executed with the dry point and graver in the style of Hollar. He sometimes marked his plates with his name, AL, and sometimes with the annexed cipher.

There are by him 601 plates, among which may be mentioned:

- 36 plates of Sea Fish.
 24 " Fresh-water Fish.
 12 " Livre d'Oyseaux.
 13 " Diversæ Animæ Species. 1659.
 The Militia of Paris. 1660 and 1662.

There exist also several portraits by Aalbert Flamen, which have been engraved by Poilly and Boulanger.

FLAMEN, F., probably of the same family as Aalbert Flamen, was a native of Flanders, who resided in Paris about the year 1660. Among other prints, he etched a set of four plates of 'Views on the River Seine,' after the designs of Israel Silvestre.

FLAMENCO, JUAN, (that is, 'John the Fleming,') supposed to be identical with JUAN DE FLANDES, is mentioned under the former name by Cean Bermudez as a painter who resided in the Certosa di Miraflores from 1496 to 1499, and painted the altarpieces there, for which he was paid the sum of 53,545 maravedis, besides his maintenance. On the right-hand, or gospel side of the altar, he represented various passages in the life of St. John the Baptist, which were well treated, with good colouring and much expression, in the style of Lucas van Leyden; the painting on the left, or epistle side, is much deteriorated, and it can only be seen that it represented 'The Adoration of the Kings.'

Under the name of Juan de Flandes, the same writer notices an artist who painted eleven pictures in the cathedral of Palencia, which he began in the year 1509, under an engagement to complete them in three years, for the sum of 500 gold ducats. Some have supposed that Hans Memling is the painter intended by these two appellations.

FLANDIN, EUGÈNE NAPOLÉON, a French landscape painter, was born at Naples in 1809. After producing various pictures, which obtained considerable success, he was present in 1838 throughout the campaign in Algeria, and reproduced several of the scenes with his brush. In 1839 he was selected to pursue antiquarian investigations in Persia, and on the completion of this work he prosecuted further researches in the East, and published several works containing the fruits of his labours. The most important of these is his 'Voyage en Perse,' published in conjunction with Pascal Coste, the architect, in six folio volumes, Paris, 1843-54; and 'L'Orient,' published at Paris in folio, 1853-74. He did not return to painting till about 1850; and he died in 1876. Amongst his chief works are:

- The Piazzetta and Ducal Palace at Venice. 1836.
 The Bridge of Sighs. 1836.
 A View of the Coast at Algiers. 1837.
 The Breach at Constantine. 1839.
 View of Stamboul. 1853.
 View of the Royal Mosque at Ispahan. 1853.
 General View of Constantinople. 1855.
 The Entrance of the Bosphorus. 1855.
 View of Bagdad. (Marseilles Museum.)

FLANDRIN, AUGUSTE RENÉ, a French painter, brother of Jean Hippolyte Flandrin, was born at Lyons in 1804. He was at first employed in book illustration, but in 1832 he went to Paris, where he worked for two years under Ingres. He painted several portraits, and after visiting Italy, became director of the Academy at Lyons, where he died in 1843. Amongst his works are:

- Savonarola preaching at Florence.
 Reposing after the Bath.
 Interior of San Miniato, Florence.

FLANDRIN, JEAN HIPPOLYTE, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in 1809 at Lyons, where his father fought a hard battle against poverty as a miniature painter. He was the fourth son, and his mother, who had seen much of the cares and necessities which follow the pursuit of art, was resolutely opposed to his becoming a painter. She at length relented, and in 1821 he entered the studio of the sculptor Legendre, and afterwards studied under Revoil in the Lyons Academy. By dint of the strictest economy a little hoard was scraped together sufficient to enable him and his younger brother Paul to set out for Paris in 1829. To economize their slender means, the two brothers were obliged to travel thither from Lyons on foot. Arrived in the capital, they became pupils of Ingres, in preference to Hersent, to whom they had letters of introduction. The choice was most fortunate, for Ingres proved most kind to his pupils, and Flandrin to the end of his life ever showed himself loyal and devoted to his old master. The next three years was a period of great trial and privation. Besides suffering from cold and scanty food, he had what was no doubt a slight attack of cholera, then raging grievously in Paris. He was also laid low by rheumatism, from which he subsequently became a great sufferer. In 1832 he obtained the long-wished-for 'grand prix de Rome' with his 'Theseus recognizing his Father.' Early in the following year he arrived at Rome, and though not overburdened with means, he now managed to send frequent remittances to help the home at Lyons. While studying here, he formed a friendship with Ambroise Thomas, the French musical composer, which lasted through life. He returned to Paris in 1838, and soon obtained ample employment in the mural decorations of churches. His first great work in the church of St. Séverin was completed in 1841, in which year he received the cross of the Legion of Honour. Two years later he married Aimée Ancelot, and their eldest son was born in 1845. The history of the remainder of Flandrin's life may be summarized in the decorative works which he executed. The chief of these were: St. Germain-des-Prés—sanctuary 1842-4, choir 1846-8, and nave 1855-61; St. Paul, Nîmes, 1847-9; St. Vincent-de-Paul, Paris, 1850-4; the Conservatoire des Arts et Metiers, 1854; and the church of Ainay, at Lyons, in 1855. He did not lack appreciation of his works, for he was promoted to the rank of officer of the Legion of Honour in 1853, and in the same year was elected to the Academy, becoming Professor of Painting in 1857. The popularity of his art drew to him a large connection as a portrait painter, and he had many eminent sitters. His health during the last few years had been anything but good; his sufferings from rheumatism, aggravated by his work in cold, damp churches, had been great; and in 1863 he undertook a long-looked-for journey to Italy, in hopes of a restoration of strength. But he was not destined to return, for he succumbed to an attack of small-pox at Rome, March 21st, 1864. Besides the decorative works already enumerated, the following are amongst the chief of his easel productions:

- Dante and Virgil. 1835. (Lyons Museum.)
 Euripides. 1835. (Lyons Museum.)
 St. Clara healing the Blind. 1836. (Nantes Cathedral.)

Christ blessing little Children. 1837. (Lisieux Museum.)

Flandrin's 'Lettres et Pensées,' accompanied by a biographical notice and a catalogue of his works, were published by the Count Delaborde in 1865.

O.J.D.
 FLATMAN, THOMAS, was born in London in 1633, and was educated at Winchester school. From thence he went to New College, Oxford; but leaving the university without a degree, he removed to the Inner Temple, where, in due time, he became a barrister. It does not appear that he ever followed the profession of the law, but having a turn for the fine arts, he indulged his inclination, and gained some reputation as a poet and a painter in miniature. Horace Walpole mentions in his 'Anecdotes,' that Mr. Tooke, Master of the Charterhouse, had a head of his father by Flatman, which was so well painted that Vertue took it for Cooper's; and Lord Oxford had another portrait by him, which was so masterly that Vertue pronounced Flatman to be equal to Hoskins and next to Cooper. It is certain that he excelled more as a painter than a poet, and Granger asserts that one of his heads is worth a ream of his Pindarics. He died in 1688.

FLAVITSKY, KONSTANTIN DMITRIEVICH, a Russian historical painter, was born in 1829 or 1830, and studied at the Academy of St. Petersburg, of which he afterwards became a professor. He earned considerable praise in his country for his painting of 'The Death of the Princess Tarakanoff.' He died at St. Petersburg in 1866.

FLAXMAN, MARY ANN, a sister of John Flaxman, the celebrated sculptor, with whom she resided for some time, was an occasional exhibitor at the Royal Academy of portraits and subjects taken from poems, as well as domestic scenes, from 1786 till 1819. She died in 1833, in her 65th year. Blake engraved her designs for Hayley's 'Triumphs of Temper,' and her illustrations to 'Robin Goodfellow' were also engraved. Redgrave mentions the following, amongst others, of her works:

Turkish Ladies. 1786.
 Ferdinand and Miranda playing Chess. 1789.
 Portrait of Mrs. Billington. 1802.
 Sappho. 1810.
 Maternal Piety. 1819.

FLEGEL, GEORG, a painter of subjects of still-life, was born at Olmütz in Moravia in 1563, and resided at Frankfort, where he died in 1638. He painted fruit, flowers, fish, vases, glasses, and other inanimate objects. The flowers and fruit in the paintings of Martin van Valckenborch are by him. There are fruit-pieces by this artist in the Gallery at Cassel and the Museum at Darmstadt, and in the latter is a portrait of himself.

FLEISCHBERGER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, was a German engraver, who worked for the booksellers. He engraved an ornamental frontispiece, and a portrait of the author, for Horst's 'Opera Medica,' printed at Nuremberg in 1660.

FLEISCHMANN, AUGUSTIN CHRISTIAN, was an obscure German engraver, who was employed by the booksellers at Nuremberg. He engraved some of the portraits for Roth-Scholtz's 'Icones Bibliopolarum et Typographorum,' published in 1726-42.

FLEISCHMANN, FRIEDRICH, a painter and engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1791, and was instructed by Ambrosius Gabler. He executed many miniatures and portraits in oil, and engraved more than 1900 plates with the point. He died at Munich in 1834. His best works are:

His own Portrait.
 The Four Apostles; after Albrecht Dürer.
 Ecce Homo; said to be after Leonardo da Vinci.
 The Portrait of Van Dyck.

FLEMALLE, BERTHOLET, (more commonly FLEMAEL, and sometimes FLAMAEL,) a son of Renier Flemalle, a glass painter, was born at Liège in 1614. He was first instructed in painting by Hendrik Trippez, but afterwards by Geraert Douffet, an historical painter, who had studied at Rome. Under this master he acquired sufficient ability to venture on visiting Italy. On his arrival at Rome in 1638, he was unremitting in his studies after the works of the best masters, and it was not long before he was noticed for the readiness of his invention and the freedom of his hand. The Grand-Duke of Tuscany invited him to Florence, and employed him in ornamenting one of the galleries of his palace. After passing some years in the service of that prince, he visited Paris, where he was patronized by the Chancellor Séguier, who employed him in some of the apartments at Versailles. In the sacristy of the Augustinian church in Paris he painted the 'Adoration of the Magi.' Notwithstanding this flattering encouragement, he quitted Paris and returned to his native country in 1647, after an absence of nine years. His first work after his return was a grand composition of the 'Crucifixion,' which he is said to have painted for one of the chapels of the collegiate church of St. John, as well as for the King of Sweden. This performance gained him great reputation, and he was employed in several considerable works for the churches at Liège. In 1670 he was invited to return to Paris, where he painted the ceiling of the king's chamber of audience, in the palace of the Tuileries, representing an emblematical subject of religion. He was made a member, and afterwards a professor, of the Royal Academy in Paris, and was high in the estimation of Louis XIV. and the public. The love of his native country induced him, however, to return to Liège, where he was elected canon of the collegiate church of St. Paul, and continued to exercise his talents, under the protection of Henry Maximilian, Prince Bishop of Liège. A few years before his death, which took place at Liège in 1675, he fell into an extreme melancholy and gave up entirely all work. Bertholet Flemalle possessed an inventive genius, and had acquired by his studies in Italy a great style of composition, and a correctness of design that partake of the grandeur of the Roman school, but more especially the style of Nicolas Poussin. His forms are, however, too artificial, and his colouring is weak. The following is a list of his most important paintings:

Brussels.	Museum.	The Chastisement of Heliodorus.
Cassel.	Gallery.	The Death of Lucretia.
"	"	Alexander leaving for Asia.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Pelopidas.
"	"	Aeneas leaving Troy with his wife Creusa, his father Anchises, and his son Ascanius.
Florence.	Ducal Pal.	Several paintings.
Liège.	Dominican Church.	The Elevation of the Cross.
"	"	The Assumption of the Virgin.
"	Cathedral.	The Raising of Lazarus.
Liège.	St. Paul.	The Conversion of St. Paul.
"	St. John.	A Crucifixion.
Paris.	Louvre.	Mysteries of the Old and New Testament.

FLEMALE, RENIER, (or FLEMAEL,) was a painter on glass, to whom is attributed 'The Adoration of the Magi,' in St. Paul's at Liège. He was the father of Bertholet and Willem Flemalle; and of a third son, Hendrik, who was a goldsmith.

FLEMALE, WILLEM, (or FLEMAEL,) who was instructed by his father, painted several excellent glass-paintings for the Magdalen Church at Liège.

FLEMING, JOHN, a Scottish landscape painter, lived in the early part of the present century. He is best known from the series of views he painted for Swan's 'Lakes of Scotland,' published at Glasgow in 1834. In the Glasgow Corporation Galleries is a 'View of Greenock,' painted by him in 1827.

FLERS, CAMILLE, born in Paris in 1802, was a painter of landscapes and a scholar of Pâris. His 'Views of Normandy' and 'The Banks of the Marne and Eure' display a great amount of study and power or feeling in the colouring. He died at Annet (Seine-et-Marne) Paris in 1868. He was the instructor of Cabats. In the Louvre is a landscape by this artist of the 'Environs of Paris.'

FLESSHIER, B., is an artist mentioned by Walpole as a painter of sea-pieces, landscapes, and fruit. His pictures may be supposed to have possessed considerable merit, as some of them were thought worthy of being placed in the collection of King Charles the First, and in that of Sir Peter Lely.

FLETCHER, HENRY, was an English engraver who flourished about the year 1729. He engraved a print of 'Bathsheba and her Attendants at the Bath,' after Sebastiano Conca, and some portraits, among which is that of Ebenezer Pemberton, minister of Boston, prefixed to a volume of his sermons.

FLETCHER, NICOLAS, is mentioned by Basan as having engraved, about 1750, some views of Rome, after Canaletto.

FLEUNER, PETER. There is a woodcut executed in a very bold, spirited style, representing an emblematical subject, apparently 'The Procession of Gluttony,' with the name of this artist at length, and dated 1549.

FLEUR, NICOLAS GUILLAUME DE LA. See DE LA FLEUR.

FLEURY, ANTOINE CLAUDE, a French historical and portrait painter, was born about the middle of the 18th century. He studied under Regnault, and exhibited at the Salon from 1795 to 1822. Amongst his works are:

The Abduction of Helen from the Temple of Diana. 1800.

Theseus going to fight the Minotaur. 1804.

The Doom of Orestes. 1806.

Venus and Adonis.

The Origin of Painting. 1808.

504

Cornelia and her Sons. 1810.

The Flight into Egypt. 1819.

The Widow's Mite. 1819.

Portrait of Louis XVIII. 1819.

FLEURY, FRANÇOIS ANTOINE LÉON, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1804. He was the son of Antoine Claude Fleury, under whom he at first studied, and then under Bertin and Hersent. Between 1827 and 1830 he made a sketching tour in France and the neighbouring countries. He occasionally painted figure subjects, such as 'The Baptism of Christ,' at the church of St. Marguerite, and 'St. Geneviève,' at St. Etienne-du-Mont, Paris. He died in 1858. Amongst his works are:

A View of the Ponte Ratto, Rome. 1831.

Wood in Normandy. (Bar-le-Duc Museum.)

View on the Road to Genoa, near Nice. (Amiens Museum.)

Pasturage in Normandy, near Trouville.

Water and Mill at Coutivert.

View on the Coast of Genoa. (Orleans Museum.)

FLICIUS, GERBARUS, is only known by his portrait of Archbishop Cranmer, painted in 1546, now in the National Portrait Gallery. It has been engraved in Thoroton's 'Antiquities of Nottinghamshire,' and in Lodge's 'Portraits.'

FLINCH, ANDREAS CHRISTIAN FERDINAND, a wood-engraver, was born at Copenhagen in 1813, and studied at the Academy there from 1832 to 1838. He had previously worked as a goldsmith, but he afterwards took to wood-engraving from self-tuition, and introduced a special method of his own into Denmark, consisting in drawing the outline upon the block and working out the details with a free hand. In 1840 he settled down as a lithographer, and published the popular 'Flinchs Almanak' with woodcut illustrations. He died at Copenhagen in 1872.

FLINCK, GOVERT, was born at Cleves in 1615. It was the wish of his parents to bring him up to mercantile pursuits; but his desire of becoming a painter induced him to seek every opportunity of becoming acquainted with artists, and his father was at length persuaded to allow him to follow a profession for which he had shown so decided a propensity. He was first a scholar of Lambert Jacobsz, at Leeuwarden, and under him he remained some time; but he afterwards entered the school of Rembrandt, and made such progress that after a year his works were scarcely discernible from those of that master.

From 1640 to 1650 he executed his best productions of historical subjects and portraits, and in both he was one of the most successful and most employed artists of his country. The magistrates of Amsterdam engaged him in many considerable works for the town-hall, and he painted the portraits of some of the most illustrious personages of his time. In 1652 he became a burgher of Amsterdam. The Elector of Brandenburg and Prince Maurice of Nassau favoured him with their protection, and employed him in many important works. The burgomaster of Amsterdam had commissioned him to paint twelve pictures for the town-hall, of which he had finished the sketches when he died in 1660. In the latter part of his life he began to study after the works of the Italian masters. The following is a list of his best paintings:

Aix-la-Chapelle. Hôtel de Ville. } The Regents. 1642.

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Fête of the Civic Guard of Amsterdam, in celebration of the Peace of Munster. 1648.

FLINDT, PAUL, born at Nuremberg about 1570, was a goldsmith and engraver on metals, and one of the first artists who worked with the stamp or swage. He died after 1644.

FLIPART, CHARLES JOSEPH, the brother of Jean Jacques Flipart, was born in Paris in 1721, and was instructed in the rudiments of art by his father. He visited Venice, and studied painting under Tiepolo and Amiconi, and engraving under Wagner. After staying some time at Rome he was appointed court painter and engraver by King Ferdinand VI. of Spain in 1770. His best plates are the portraits of the King and the Queen of Spain. Some of his paintings are in two of the churches at Madrid. He died in that city in 1797.

FLIPART, JACQUES NICOLAS, who was born in Paris in 1724, was a painter of no repute.

FLIPART, JEAN CHARLES, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1683. He engraved some plates, which are executed entirely with the graver, in a neat, finished style, but without much effect. He died in Paris in 1751. Amongst his works are:

- The Portrait of René Choppin; after Janet.
- The Virgin and Infant; after Raphael; for the Crozat Collection.
- Christ praying on the Mount of Olives; after the same; for the Crozat Collection.
- The Penitent Magdalen; after Le Brun.
- Apollo and Daphne; after R. Houasse.

FLIPART, JEAN JACQUES, the son of Jean Charles Flipart, born in Paris in 1719, was instructed in the art of engraving by his father, whom he soon surpassed. He afterwards studied under L. Cars. His plates are partly etched, and finished with the graver, and possess great merit. He died in Paris in 1782, leaving a considerable number of plates, many of which were after the best masters of his time. They include the following:

- Portrait of J. B. Greuze; after Greuze.
- A Sick Man surrounded by his Children; after the same. 1767.
- Twelfth Night; after the same.
- Portrait of Jacques Dumont le Romain; after De La Tour.
- The Holy Family; after Giulio Romano.
- Adam and Eve; after C. Natoire.
- Venus presenting the Arms to Æneas; after the same.
- A Sea-storm at Night; after Vernet.
- A Sea-storm by Day; after the same.
- Christ curing the Paralytic; after Dietrich.
- A Bear-hunt; after C. van Loo.
- A Tiger-hunt; after F. Boucher.
- The Battle of the Centaurs and Lapithæ.

CHARLES FRANÇOIS FLIPART, the brother of Jean Jacques Flipart, who died in 1773, executed several plates after Fragonard.

FLODING, PEHR, a Swedish designer and engraver, was born at Stockholm in 1721. He was instructed by Charpentier, and resided chiefly in Paris, but finally returned to his native city, where he died in 1791. He engraved several plates, both in line and in aquatint, among which are the following:

- The Portrait of Alexander Roslin, painter; after Roslin.
- Apollo and Daphne; after F. Boucher.
- Soldiers guarding a Prison; after the same.
- A Girl sleeping, with a Dog by her; after J. B. Deshaies.
- Gustavus III., King of Sweden; after L. Pasch.
- A Battle; after Casanova.

FLORENCE, WILLIAM OF, was a monk who, in the 13th century, painted in Westminster Abbey, in the old castle at Windsor, and in Guildford.

FLORENTIA, ANDREA DA, was an artist who lived in the 14th century, and painted the frescoes inside the east gate of the Campo Santo of Pisa, which represent incidents in the life of St. Ranieri. Records exist to prove that they were executed by order of Piero Gambacorta, and that Andrea received payment for them in 1377. These frescoes were afterwards completed by Antonio Veneziano in 1386. Crowe and Cavalcaselle have assigned to this artist an immense series of frescoes painted between 1339 and 1346 in the Cappellone dei Spagnuoli, in the convent of San Spiritù, Florence. These frescoes contain between three and four hundred life-size figures, and present an allegorical representation of 'The Triumph and Power of the Church Militant through the efforts of St. Dominic and the members of his Order.' On the north wall of this same chapel is a fresco representing 'Christ going to Calvary,' and 'The Crucifixion.' No dates are known as to this artist's birth or death.

FLORENTIA, BERNARDUS DE, is a name found on a few pictures, as a triptych in the Academy, and a 'Virgin and Saints' in the convent of the Ognissanti at Florence. It was at one time thought that the author might possibly be identical with Leonardo di Cione, the brother of Orcagna.

FLORENTIA, RAFFAELLINO DI. See CAPPONI.

FLOREZ, FRANCISCO, a painter of illuminations in the service of Isabella of Spain, whose missal embellished by this artist is now in the Cathedral of Granada.

FLORI DELLA FRATTA. See DELLA FRATTA.

FLORIANI, FRANCESCO, a native of Udine, who flourished in the 16th century, was instructed by Pellegrino, and displayed a great talent for portraiture. Many of his paintings were in the possession of the Emperor Maximilian II., by whom he was employed. His 'Judith' has great merit.

FLORIANO, FLAMINIO, was a Venetian painter, who imitated the style and copied the works of Tintoretto with success, from which fact he is supposed to have been a disciple of that master. One of his best works is a picture of 'St. Lawrence,' in the church of that saint.

FLORIGERIO, SEBASTIANO, who lived in the 16th century, was probably born about the year 1500 at Udine. He was a pupil of Pellegrino, and is thought to have married his daughter Aurelia. His first altar-piece was painted in 1525 for the church of Santa Maria di Villanuova, and in 1529 he painted, by commission, the altar-piece of 'St. George and the Dragon' for the church of San Giorgio of Udine. Soon after this he went to Padua, where he painted the portal of the Palazzo del Capitaneo, and seems to have remained in that city until 1533. On his return to Udine he unhappily killed a man in a duel, and was obliged to flee for refuge to Cividale, which he was unable to leave until 1543. His death is believed to have occurred at Udine soon afterwards. The following are among his extant paintings:

Padua.	S. Bovo.	Deposition from the Cross, with Saints. A Pietà.
Venice.	Academy.	The Conception, between SS. Roch and Sebastian.
"	"	Madonna and Child, with St. Augustine and St. Monica (painted for the Shoemakers' Guild at Udine).
"	"	St. Francis, St. Anthony, and St. John the Baptist (painted for San Bovo at Padua).
"	"	Madonna and Child enthroned, with St. John, St. Anthony, and St. Monica (formerly in the Servi at Venice).

FLORIMI, GIOVANNI, (or FLORINI,) an engraver, who was a pupil of Cornelis Galle, worked at Siena in 1630. His works consist principally of portraits, and among them is that of Francesco Piccolomini, after F. Vanni.

FLORIS, FRANS. See DE VRIENT.

FLOS, DU. See DUFLOS.

FLÜGGEN, GISEBERT, a German painter, was born at Cologne in 1811, and having there learned the rudiments of painting, visited in 1833 the Academy at Düsseldorf, but went soon afterwards to Munich, where he became known for his genre paintings. The characters, the expression of the faces, and the excellent arrangement of his pictures have a very pleasing effect. He was elected a member of the Academy at Munich in 1853, and died there in 1859. The following are some of his works:

Hanover.	Museum.	Jacob deceiving Isaac. 1848. (His best work.)
Leuchtenberg.	Ducal Gall.	The Chess-players.
Madrid.	Gallery.
Munich.	Gallery.	The unlucky Player. 1841.
		The Ante-chamber of a Prince. (His last unfinished work.)

FO, G. R., was a native of Switzerland, who flourished about the year 1551. Papillon speaks of him as an excellent engraver on wood, and a contemporary of Hans Holbein. He executed the cuts for the 'History of Animals,' by Conrad Gesner, published at Zurich in 1551, and also engraved the coins and medals of the 'Roman Emperors,' for another work by the same author, published in 1559.

FOCK, HERMANUS, who was born at Amsterdam in 1766, and died there in 1822, was a landscape painter as well as an etcher, of whose works there remain sixty-five plates of landscapes, caricatures of Napoleon, &c.

FOCOSI, ALESSANDRO, who was born in 1839, painted historical subjects at Milan. His best works are 'Catharine de' Medici and Charles IX.' (1867), and 'Charles Emmanuel throwing the Insignia of the Golden Fleece to the Ambassador of Spain,' painted for the Government of Italy. He died in 1869.

FOCUS, GEORGE, born at Chateaudun about 1641, was a painter of landscapes and an etcher. His best plates are six 'Italian Views,' after Nicolas Poussin. He died in Paris in 1708. He is called Fancus by Félibien and Mariette.

FOGGO, GEORGE, who was born in 1793, worked with his elder brother James Foggo. He lithographed the cartoons of Raphael, and he was the author of several essays written for the advancement of art. He died in 1869.

FOGGO, JAMES, was born in London in 1790. His father, who was a zealous friend of civil and religious liberty, having given offence to the Tory government at the time when they had suspended the Habeas Corpus Act, proceeded with his family to Paris, where his sons were educated in the Imperial Academy. In 1815, on the return of Napoleon from Elba, James Foggo hastened to England, full of hope and ambition; but after his long exile he sought in vain the friends of his childhood. Nevertheless, without the encouragement of patronage, he set to work in a humble second-floor room, and painted his 'Hagar and Ishmael,' which was exhibited at the British Institution, where it was favourably noticed by West and other artists, yet did not find a purchaser. In 1819 he was joined by his brother George, and during the next forty years the brothers, working together, produced various historical pictures, generally of a large size, which, however, were doomed to remain on their hands unsold, their slender means of living being chiefly derived from teaching. In 1821 and 1822 they painted their large picture representing the 'Christian Inhabitants of Parga preparing to emigrate in presence of the invading force of Ali Pasha.' This and subsequent works obtained the approbation of Sir Thomas Lawrence, Fuseli, Hilton, Flaxman, and other artists of eminence. An 'Entombment of the Saviour,' by them, forms the altar-piece of the French Protestant church in St. Martin's-le-Grand. Amongst their other works may be mentioned 'Napoleon signing the Death-warrant of the Duke d'Enghien, in spite of the entreaties of his mother,' 'General Williams amongst the inhabitants of Kars,' and 'Christ at the Pool of Bethesda' (1824). The Foggos contributed also to each of the cartoon and fresco exhibitions held in Westminster Hall in the years 1840 to 1843. James Foggo died in London in 1860.

FOGOLINO, MARCELLO, was probably born in the Friulan Provinces at the beginning of the 16th century. He learned his art in Vicenza, and one of his earliest paintings is a small 'Adoration of the Magi,' in tempera, formerly in San Bartolommeo, and now in the Public Gallery of that city. In 1523 he contracted with the Scuola di San Biagio, at Pordenone, for a 'Virgin and Child between SS. Blaise and Apollonia,' and a little later he executed the 'Glory of St. Francis between Daniel and St. John the Baptist,' both of which pictures are now in the cathedral of Pordenone. On his return to Vicenza, he painted a 'Madonna surrounded by Angels,' now in Santa Corona; and a 'Nativity' that is in the possession of Signor Bernasconi of Verona. According to a letter in his own hand, still in existence, he was at Trent in 1536, having been appointed to aid in the decorations of that city for the visit of King Ferdinand. In the Santissima Trinità, Trent, is an altar-piece that may be assigned to him, as also other paintings and frescoes in the churches and cathedral of that city. The dates of his birth and death are uncertain. Among his extant paintings are the following:

- Berlin. Gallery. Madonna and Child with Saints. (Early work: formerly in San Francesco, Vicenza.)
 Pordenone. S. Biagio. Madonna with Saints.
 " Cathedral. St. Francis between Daniel and St. John the Baptist. (Much in the style of Raphael.)
 Vicenza. Council-house. } The Adoration of the Magi.

His engravings, which are executed with the graver in a free and light manner, include:

- A Virgin and Child, in a landscape with architectural ruins, and Joseph drawing water from a well.
 A naked Woman and a Child.
 A Statue of Marcus Aurelius on horseback.
 The Fragment of a Female Statue.
 A Nativity.
 Mary going to the Temple.

FOHR, DANIEL, born at Heidelberg in 1801, first studied science, which he afterwards abandoned for the art of painting. After studying some time by himself, he went to Munich in 1829, and then to the Tyrol. He was court painter to the Grand-Duke of Baden, and died at Baden-Baden in 1862. There are by him in the Gallery at Karlsruhe:

- Mazeppa. 1836.
 A View of the Königsee, near Berchtesgaden. 1836.
 The Steinberg, near Berchtesgaden. 1837.
 The Four Seasons, representing four Epochs of German History.

FOHR, KARL PHILIPP, a brother of Daniel Fohr, was born at Heidelberg in 1795, and studied at Munich, chiefly by himself from nature and the great masters. His paintings, which are to be met with at Karlsruhe, Darmstadt, and Frankfort, display genius and grandeur of style. In the Städel Institute at Frankfort are views of Tivoli and Heidelberg. His death occurred in 1818 at Rome, from bathing in the Tiber.

FOKKE, SIMON, a Dutch designer, etcher, and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1712. He was a pupil of J. C. Philips, and was chiefly employed for the booksellers on small portraits and vignettes, which he executed with spirit, but for the most part superficially. The same must be said of the numerous drawings which he has left. He died at Amsterdam in 1784. There are by him, among others, the following plates:

- His own Portrait; after himself.
 A View of the Port of Leghorn; after Vernet.
 A View near Narni, in Lombardy; after the same.

Six plates of Dutch Views, with Rivers, Ships, and Skaters; after Avercamp.

Several Portraits for Tycho Hofman's 'Portraits historiques des hommes illustres de Dannemark,' 1746.

Several plates of his own design for Wagenaar's 'Vaderlandsche Historie,' 1749-59.

The Treaty of Peace at Münster; after Terborch.

The Prodigal Son; after Spagnoletto; in the Dresden Gallery.

Jacob keeping the Flocks of Laban; after the same; in the Dresden Gallery.

The Death of Dido, a burlesque; after C. Troost.

FOLDSONE, JOHN, a portrait painter, was born about the middle of the 18th century. He exhibited at the Academy up to 1783, soon after which year he died. He was the father of Mrs. Mee, the miniature painter.

FOLER, ANTONIO, was born at Venice in 1528. He was a contemporary and friend of Paolo Veronese, whose splendid style he followed with some success in his colouring, though very deficient in his design, particularly in his large works. In his easel pictures this inferiority is less discernible, and they possess considerable merit. Among other works by this master, Ridolfi notices the following: in the church of the Abbey of San Gregorio, three pictures of the 'Assumption of the Virgin,' 'The Scourging of Christ,' and 'The Crucifixion'; in Santa Barnaba, 'The Birth of the Virgin'; and in Santa Caterina, 'Christ praying in the Garden,' and 'The Resurrection.' He died in 1616.

FOLIGNO, PIETRO ANTONIO DA, a native of Foligno, studied under Benozzo Gozzoli. He lived in the 15th century, but the exact dates of his birth and death are unknown. Remains of frescoes by him may be seen in the convent of Sant' Anna, the monastery of Santa Lucia, the monastery of San Francesco, where is a 'Virgin and Child,' dated 1499, and in other churches in Foligno. At SS. Antonio e Jacopo at Assisi is a series of scenes from the life of St. James, probably painted by him about 1468.

FOLKEMA, JAKOB, a Dutch designer and engraver, was born at Dokkum, in Friesland, in 1692. He was first instructed by his father, Johann Jakob Folkema, a goldsmith, and studied afterwards under B. Picart at Amsterdam. During that time he worked for Royaumont's Bible, 1712, and Ruysch's Anatomy, 1737. Folkema was also an excellent engraver in mezzotint. He died at Dokkum in 1767. He had a sister, ANNA FOLKEMA, who painted miniatures, assisted her brother, and engraved some few plates. She was born in 1695, and died in 1768. By Jakob Folkema there are, among others, the following plates:

An Emblematical Print on the Death of the Prince of Orange.

Time discovering the Bust of F. Rabelais, with figures and satirical and emblematical attributes.

The Martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul; after Niccolò dell' Abbate.

Several plates for the Dresden Gallery; after Le Brun and Niccolò dell' Abbate.

PORTRAITS.

Miguel Cervantes de Saavedra; after C. Kort.

Johannes Ens, Professor of Theology at Utrecht; after Colla.

Petrus de Maestricht, Professor of Theology at Frankfort; after the same.

Humphrey Prideaux, Dean of Norwich; after Seeman.

Suethlagius, Pastor at Amsterdam; after Anna Folkema.

FOLLI, SEBASTIANO, who is stated by Baldinucci to have been a native of Siena, was born in 1568. He was a scholar of Alessandro Casolano, and distinguished himself by several frescoes in the churches at Siena, particularly the cupola of Santa Marta, and some subjects from the 'Life of St. Sebastian,' in the church of that saint, painted in competition with Rutilio Manetti, to whose pictures they are in no way inferior. He visited Rome, and was employed in some considerable works for the Cardinal de' Medici, afterwards Leo XI. He died in 1621.

FOLO, GIOVANNI, an Italian engraver, was born at Bassano in 1764. He was first instructed by Mengardi and Zanotti, two painters at Bassano, and studied next in Volpato's school at Rome, but subsequently he chose Raffaello Morghen as his model. In his earlier productions there appears something of hardness and dryness of style, from which even his beautiful engraving of the 'Madonna de' Candelabri,' after Raphael, is not altogether free; but this defect is wholly avoided in the 'Mater dolorosa,' after Sassoferrato. Here the engraver has succeeded in expressing the character of the original picture, and diffused over the copy the same harmony of light and shade, and delicate colouring, which are the pleasing characteristics of the master. Folo merits the name of a great artist; he seeks rather to preserve grandeur of character than to produce a work that is merely pleasing to the eye by elaborate execution. His strokes throughout are powerful and firm; yet in subjects requiring amenity of treatment he varies his manner so as to give a corresponding delicacy, as may be instanced in his 'Adam and Eve,' after Titian. 'Christ raising the Widow's Son at Nain,' after Annibale Carracci, is considered his best work. Folo's style was not suitable for small subjects, as may be conjectured from the medallion of Pius VII.; his productions are for the most part of a large size. He was a member of the Academy of St. Luke at Rome, and received in 1807 the gold medal of the Academy at Milan for 'Time protecting Innocence against Evil and Envy,' after Nicolas Poussin. He died at Rome in 1836. Besides those above-mentioned, his most important works are:

The Last Supper; after Leonardo da Vinci.
 The Virgin and Child; after Raphael.
 The Marriage of the Virgin; after the same.
 Mater amabilis; after Sassoferrato.
 Danaë; after Titian.
 The Marriage of St. Catharine; after Correggio.
 The Archangel Michael; after Guido Reni.
 The Massacre of the Innocents; after Nicolas Poussin.
 Diana, resting from hunting, found by the Nymphs; after B. Nocchi.
 The Death of Virginia; after Camuccini.
 The Triumph of Scipio; after Pierino del Vaga.
 St. Andrew; after Domenichino. 1799.
 Christ on the Cross; after Michelangelo.
 Hercules with Lichas; after Canova.

FOLTZ, PHILIPP, born at Bingen in 1805, was first instructed in art by his father, the architect, Ludwig Foltz. In 1825 he went to Munich, and became a scholar of Cornelius, under whose direction he executed several considerable works in the royal palace. 'The Founding of the Academy of Sciences by the Elector Maximilian III.,' in the arcades of the royal court garden at Munich, is one of his chief works. With Lindenschmit he decorated a saloon of the palace with scenes from Schiller's poems. After having finished his great work, 'Otho, King of Greece, taking leave of his paternal Castle,' containing forty-two portraits, and the nineteen scenes from Bürger's poems for the Queen's apartment in the new palace, he went in 1835 to Italy, where he considerably improved his style. In 1838 he returned to Munich, became in 1865 director of the Gallery, and died in that city in 1877. In many of his works he was assisted by Dietz and Wendling. Among his numerous paintings are:

Armansperg. Castle } The Madonna.
 Chapel. }
 Cologne. Museum. The Singer's Curse; from Uhland's ballad.
 Darmstadt. Gallery. A Scene on the Iser near Munich.
 Frankfort. Römersaal. The Emperor Sigmund.

FONBONNE, QUIRIN, a Dutch engraver, worked at Paris from 1720 to 1734. Among other subjects he engraved some of the plates for De Monicart's 'Versailles immortalisé,' 1720-21.

FONSECA Y FIGUEROA, JUAN, a Spaniard of high descent in the 17th century, who was canon and chancellor of the cathedral at Seville, and upper chamberlain to the court at Madrid, was known in art by the production of some excellent portraits, but more especially by his patronage of other artists, in particular Velazquez.

FONTAINE, E., a French engraver on wood, flourished about the year 1681. Among other cuts by him there is a print representing the figure of Christ, standing upon a pillar. It is a very indifferent performance.

FONTAINE, JACQUES FRANÇOIS JOSEPH SWEBACH DE. See SWEBACH.

FONTAINE, PIERRE JOSEPH LA. See LA FONTAINE.

FONTANA, ALBERTO, was born at Modena about the year 1537. He was a fellow-student with Niccolò dell' Abbate, under Antonio Begarelli, and in conjunction with his co-disciple, painted the panels of the Butchers' Hall at Modena; a work which is mostly executed in the style of Niccolò dell' Abbate. There is certainly a great similarity in their styles, but although Alberto Fontana resembles Niccolò in the airs of his heads, he is always unequal to him in his design, and there is something red and heavy in his colouring. He died in 1558. In the Estense Gallery at Modena are four figures in fresco representing Vigilance, Prudence, Hope, and Faith.

FONTANA, BATTISTA. See FARINATI.

FONTANA, CESARE, was a native of Italy, who flourished about the year 1620. He engraved several plates representing funeral processions and cavalcades. Zani says he was living in 1660.

FONTANA, DOMENICO MARIA, is stated to have been born at Parma about the year 1540, to have learned the art of engraving at Bologna, and to have engraved several plates from his own designs, as well as after other masters. The following plates have been attributed to him:

The Flight into Egypt, with a mountainous Landscape.
 The Sabine Women making Peace between the Romans and the Sabines.
 St. John preaching in the Wilderness.
 Mount Calvary, with a Latin inscription.
 Christ going to Calvary. 1584.

There appear to have been two artists at Parma of this name, the second of whom was living in 1644, and has left one plate, after Parmigiano, of 'Moses with the Tables of the Law.'

FONTANA, FRANCESCO, born in 1843, was a sculptor and painter. His water-colour drawings representing scenes from the Bible are highly valued. He died at Milan in 1876.

FONTANA, GIAMBATTISTA, born at Ala, in the Tyrol, in 1525, was a painter, etcher, and engraver. He learned under Giovanni Carotto, and subsequently became court painter of the Archduke Ferdinand at Vienna. He worked also at Venice and at Rome. Though the design of his figures is meagre, his extremities and expressions of the heads deficient, and his drapery mannered, he composed his productions in a rich and masterly style, and handled the point with lightness and carefulness, and the graver mostly with neatness. He died after 1584. Among his sixty-eight plates, partly of his own composition and partly after other masters, the most important are :

Christ bearing the Cross.
The Crucifixion.
St. Martin.
The Prophet Ezekiel. 1579.
The Martyrdom of St. Peter; after Titian.
St. Agatha in Prison; after Benedetto Caliari.

FONTANA, GIULIO, was a native of Verona. Only one plate by him is known; it represents 'The Fight of the Venetians with the Imperial Troops at Cadore,' 1569, after Titian.

FONTANA, LAVINIA, the daughter of Prospero Fontana, was born at Bologna in 1552, and was instructed in art by her father. She painted historical pieces, which are considerably esteemed. Her greatest merit was, however, in portrait painting, which she practised at Rome with much success. She first visited that capital during the pontificate of Gregory XIII., whose portrait she painted, as well as those of many persons of distinction; and she was considered one of the ablest artists of her time. She married Paolo Zappi of Imola, who painted the drapery of her works, and she died at Rome in 1602. Her most important paintings are the following :

Bologna.	S. Trinità.	The Birth of the Virgin.
"	Madonna del Baraccano.	The Holy Family and St. Joachim.
"	Mendicanti.	The Miracle of the Loaves.
"	S. Lucia.	The Crucifixion.
"	Pieve di Cento.	The Madonna, with SS. Cosmo and Damian.
"	"	The Ascension. 1593.
"	Pinacoteca.	Louisa of France before St. Francis of Paola. 1590.
"	Gall. Hercolani.	Virgin with Saints and Angels in glory.
"	Gall. Zambeccari.	The Queen of Sheba.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Portrait of the Senator Orsini.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Holy Trinity.
Dublin.	Nat. Gall.	Visit of the Queen of Sheba to Solomon.
Florence.	Pitti Pal.	Her own Portrait.
"	"	A Female Portrait.
"	Uffizi.	Portrait of Friar Panigarola.
"	"	Christ appearing to the Magdalen. 1561.
Imola.	Signor Zappi.	Her own and her Father's Portraits.
Madrid.	Escorial.	The Holy Family with St. John.
Milan.	Brera.	Seven Portraits.
Modena.	Estense Gall.	Portrait of a Franciscan.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Venus and Cupid.
Rome.	S. Paolo fuori le Mura.	The Stoning of St. Stephen.

FONTANA, PIETRO, an Italian engraver, born at Bassano in 1762, was first instructed in painting by Mingardi at Venice. He went in 1785 to Rome, where he devoted himself entirely to the art of engraving, and became a scholar of Volpato and Morghen. He engraved in a tender and clear manner, and his style is a mixture of the Italian and English principles. He was a member of the Academies of St. Luke at Rome and at Venice. He died at Rome in 1837. His best plates are the following :

The Sibyls; after Domenichino.
Judith, Jupiter, Semele, and the Entombment; all after Correggio.
Christ before Pilate; after Lodovico Carracci.
Christ healing the Blind; after the same.
The Four Evangelists; after Guercino.
Ecce Homo; after the same.
Christ and the Pharisee; after Guido Reni.
Herodias; after the same.
Aurora; after the same.
Portrait of De Marchi; after the same.
The Death of Cæsar; after Camuccini.
Lucretia; after the same.
Pompey; after the same.
The Feast of the Gods; after the same.
Hercules, Ajax, and the Wrestlers; after Canova.
The Apostles; after Thorvaldsen.

FONTANA, PROSPERO, was born at Bologna in 1512, and was a scholar of Innocenzio da Imola. He attached himself, however, more to the style of Giorgio Vasari, preferring his expedition and facility to the diligent and careful finishing of his master. He is more incorrect and negligent than Vasari, and to him Lanzi attributes the principal cause of the decadence that took place in the Bolognese school at his time, until it was reformed by the Carracci, who were, notwithstanding, educated in his academy. Prospero did not study long, but soon commenced the practice of his art. He went to Rome, and, with the recommendation of Michelangelo, he was employed by Pope Julius III. Being after this engaged by Primaticcio, who was painting at that time at Fontainebleau, he went there, but being taken ill he returned to Italy, and stayed some time at Genoa, where he painted for the Doria Gallery and the Palace of the Signoria. After his return to Bologna he executed a considerable number of paintings for the palaces, churches, and fronts of houses, and became the instructor of a number of pupils, as Lodovico, Annibale, and Agostino Carracci, Dionysius Calvaert, Tiarini, and Achille Calici. He was several times administrator of the Guild at Bologna, where he died in 1597. The following is a list of his most important productions :

Bologna.	S. Silvestro.	The Adoration of the Magi. (His best work.)
"	Madonna del Baraccano.	The Disputa of St. Catharine.
"	S. Giacomo.	The Baptism of Christ.
"	"	The Beneficence of St. Alexius.
"	Mad. delle Grazie.	The Ascension of Mary.
"	Pinacoteca.	The Entombment.
"	Gall. Hercolani.	Judith and Holofernes.
Città di Castello.	Pal. Vitelli.	The principal Achievements of the Vitelli Family.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Holy Family with SS. Cecilia and Catharine.
Milan.	Brera.	The Annunciation.
Modena.	Estense Gall.	The Visit of St. Anne (in water-colour).

Fontana was also eminent as a portrait painter, doing better in this branch than in his historical productions, and distinguished himself at Rome in the pontificates of Julius III. and his three next successors. The most important of his portraits are :

Pope Julius III.
Ulisse Aldrovandi.
Achille Bocchi.

FONTANA, VERONICA, born in 1596, was the daughter of the elder Domenico Maria Fontana, and was instructed in design by her father and Elizabetta Sirani. She etched some plates, representing scenes in the life of Mary, and the portrait of Andreini, the poet, and executed some woodcuts for a Latin Bible, and the portraits for Malvasia's Felsina pittrice, 1678. Some writers attribute also to her the 'Office of the Virgin,' published at Venice in 1661, and some neat woodcuts, principally small portraits.

FONTANIEU, M. DE, was a French amateur engraver, who etched for his amusement a few small plates of animals, &c., some of them dated 1760.

FONTANUS, E., a wood engraver, was a native of Flanders, who flourished about 1625. His name appears on some engravings in a book, published at Breda, entitled 'Kleynen gulden Gebedenboek met de figuren des Levens Jesu Christi ende Gebeden toegevoegt aen ceremonien der H. Misse,' published in 1678.

FORTEBASSO, FRANCESCO, was a painter and engraver who was born at Venice in 1709. He received his first instruction in art at Rome, but afterwards studied at Venice, under Sebastiano Ricci. He died in 1769. His works as a painter are little known, but as an engraver he has left the following:

The Virgin appearing to St. Gregory, who is praying for the Delivery of the Souls in Purgatory; after Sebastiano Ricci.

A set of seven fantastical subjects; from his own designs.

FORTEBUONI, ANASTASIO, a native of Florence, was educated in the school of Domenico Passignano. He visited Rome in the pontificate of Paul V. (1605-21), and there he painted some pictures for the churches. In San Giovanni de' Fiorentini are 'The Birth of the Virgin' and 'The Death of the Virgin,' which are considered his best works; and in Santa Maria in Selci is 'The Annunciation.' The vault of San Giacomo de' Spagnuoli is painted by him, and there is a figure of 'St. John the Baptist' in the Uffizi. This promising artist died young in 1626.

FONTENAY, JEAN BAPTISTE BELIN DE. See BELIN.

FONTYN, PIETER, was born at Dordrecht in 1773, and was instructed in art by Pieter Hofman and Willem van Leen. He painted portraits, interiors with figures, and scenes of joviality and domestic enjoyment. He died at Dordrecht in 1839.

FOOTTIT, HARRISON, was a miniature painter, who practised in England towards the close of the 18th century.

FOPPA, VINCENZO, the elder, was born at Foppa, in the province of Pavia, in the early part of the 15th century, and was probably one of Squarcione's pupils, who afterwards became a disciple of Mantegna. He lived at Brescia in his youth and again in his old age. About 1456 Foppa went to Milan, where he adorned the Medici Palace, then newly rebuilt by Michelozzo for Cosmo de' Medici, with scenes from the life of Trajan, busts of the emperors and empresses, &c. He was also employed by Francesco Sforza to embellish with mural paintings the great hospital at Milan, as also the Palazzo dell' Arengo. In 1461 he was married at Pavia, and in 1462 he worked at the Carmine of that city, but his frescoes have now been obliterated. In 1465 he was employed at the Certosa, and between the years 1480 and 1489, Giuliano della Rovere, then

Bishop of Savona, commissioned Foppa to paint an altar-piece for his cathedral, which is now to be seen in the church of Santa Maria di Castello at Savona. It consists of an immense monumental composition in three courses. The centre panel contains the Virgin and Child, guarded by angels, blessing the Bishop, between St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist; the second and third courses contain the Doctors of the Church and the Evangelists. The predella represents Salome dancing before Herod, the Decollation of St. John the Baptist, the Epiphany, the Vision at Patmos, and St. John the Evangelist rising from the cauldron of boiling oil. In 1489 Foppa returned to Brescia, and made a petition to be again received as a citizen, which was granted to him, as well as a yearly income of 100 livres, on the condition that if he went away on leave he should not practise outside of the city. The frescoes painted by him at the Carmine of Brescia are still visible, though much faded, and consist of the 'Evangelists,' the 'Four Doctors of the Church,' and a 'Crucifixion.' Many of the churches in Brescia contain altar-pieces and frescoes by this artist. He died in that city in 1492. Of his pictures may be mentioned:

Bergamo.	Lochi-Carrara Gallery.	{ St. Jerome penitent before a Cross. Crucifixion, with a view of Golgotha. 1456.
Brescia.	St. Barnabas Chapter House.	{ Frescoes.
London.	Nat. Gallery.	Adoration of the Kings (formerly assigned to Bramantino).
Milan.	Brera Gall.	S. Sebastian.
"	" "	Virgin and Child, with two kneeling Prophets. 1455.
"	Medici Pal.	Scenes from the Life of Trajan. About 1456.

FOPPA, VINCENZO, the younger, who lived in the 16th century, is supposed to have been a relative of the elder Foppa, and to have received his instruction either from him or from Ferramola. No dates are known of his life or death. Frescoes and pictures by him may be found in the churches of Santa Giulia, San Salvatore, Santa Maria in Solaro, Santa Barbara, and others in Brescia. The Tosi Gallery in the same city possesses a 'Christ going to Calvary' by this artist.

FORABOSCO, GIROLAMO. See FERRABOSCO.

FORBICINI, ELIODORO, who flourished from 1550 to 1570, was a native of Verona, who excelled in grotesques. He decorated two rooms in the Palazzo Canova, which have been much admired.

FORBIN, LOUIS NICOLAS PHILIPPE AUGUSTE, Comte de, born at La Roque d'Antheron (Bouches-du-Rhône) in 1777, was instructed in the rudiments of the art by De Boissieu. Whilst a soldier in the Garde Nationale at Nice and Toulon, he became acquainted with the painter Granet, who exercised great influence over him. After quitting the service he studied at Paris under David, but in 1799 was again obliged to change the artist's for the soldier's life, and went through the campaigns in Portugal and Germany. In 1809 Forbin, who was then a lieutenant-colonel, took leave of the army and went to Italy to study. He stayed there five years, and then returned to Paris, where he was elected a member of the Institute, and appointed director of the Royal Museums, and subsequently superintendent of the collections in the Louvre, the Luxembourg, and at Versailles. In 1817 he visited Syria, Greece, and Egypt, and published in 1819 his 'Voyage dans le Levant,' an excellent work, with eighty lithographic plates. Later on he went to Sicily, from whence he brought back a great number of sketches. He wrote also several other works. He died in Paris in 1841. Among his best paintings are:

The Death of Pliny at the Eruption of Vesuvius.
The Death of King Andrew of Hungary.
A Nun in the Vaults of the Inquisition.
A Monk accused of having helped a Nun to escape.
Interior of the Peristyle of a Monastery. 1830. (Louvre, Paris.)
A Chapel in the Colosseum at Rome. 1834. (Louvre.)

FORD, MICHAEL, an Irish engraver in mezzotint, was probably a pupil of John Brooks, to whose business as a printseller in Dublin he succeeded about 1747. He is supposed to have been lost at sea in 1758. There are several portraits by him, some of which are after his own paintings. They include the following:

William III.; after Kneller.
George II.; after Hudson.
William, Duke of Cumberland; after the same.
William Stanhope, Earl of Harrington; after Du Pin.
Henry Singleton, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland; after himself.

FORD, RICHARD, the author of the 'Handbook for Travellers in Spain,' who was born in London in 1796, practised art as an amateur. He illustrated Lockhart's 'Spanish Ballads,' and etched several plates. He died at Heavitree, near Exeter, in 1858.

FORD, SAMUEL, an Irish historical painter, was born at Cork in 1805. Although brought up in great poverty, he managed to study at the Cork School, and in 1828 became master of the Cork Mechanics' Institute, but he died of consumption in the same year. Amongst his works were:

The Genius of Tragedy 1827.
The Fall of the Angels.

FORE, LE. See LE FORE.

FOREST, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1636. He was instructed in the first rudiments of art by his father, Pierre Forest, an artist little known. He went afterwards to Italy, and at Rome became the scholar of Pietro Francesco Mola. After studying the works of that master for some time, he applied himself to an imitation of the grand landscapes of Titian and Giorgione. On his return to France he was esteemed one of the ablest landscape painters of his country, and was received into the Academy in Paris in 1674. From an unfortunate process he made use of in the preparation of his colours, some of his pictures have since become dark. He died in Paris in 1712.

FORESTIER, HENRI JOSEPH DE, born at San Domingo in 1790, was a pupil of Vincent and David, and obtained in 1813 the first prize, which enabled him to go to Rome. There he became very favourably known through his paintings of 'Anacreon' and 'Cupid.' He died in 1872. Among his historical and genre paintings may be mentioned.

Christ healing the Demoniac. 1817. (Louvre, Paris.)
The Funeral of William the Conqueror.

FORGUE, APOLLONIE DE. See SEYDELMANN.

FORLI, ANSUINO DA, was the painter of the 'Adoration of St. Christopher' in the Eremitani Chapel, Padua. In the Correr Gallery at Venice is a tempera profile 'Portrait of a Man,' which is assigned to Ansuino. No dates of his birth or death can be given.

FORLI, FRANCESCO DA. See MINZOCCHI, and MODIGLIANI.

FORLI, GUGLIELMO DA, called GUGLIELMO DEGLI ORGANI, who was the earliest painter of Forli, flourished in the 14th century. He was a pupil of Giotto, and painted frescoes in the churches of San Domenico and the Franciscans in his native city, but none of his works are extant.

FORLI, MARCO DA. See PALMEZZANO.

FORLI, MELOZZO DA. See DEGLI AMBROSI.

FORMELLO, DONATO DA, was a native of Formello, in the duchy of Bracciano. He was a disciple of Giorgio Vasari, and, according to Baglione, visited Rome early in the pontificate of Gregory XIII. He greatly surpassed the style of his instructor, as is evident in his fresco works on a staircase in the Vatican, representing subjects from the life of St. Peter. He died about 1580.

FORNARO, IL. See CIVERCHIO.

FORNAVERT, J. P., was an obscure engraver, chiefly employed by the booksellers. Strutt mentions a frontispiece to a book of devotion by this artist, representing 'Moses and Aaron, with the Four Evangelists.' It is neatly executed with the graver, but in a stiff, formal style.

FORNAZERIS, JACQUES DE, (probably the same as FORNAZORI,) was a French engraver, who flourished from 1594 to 1622. He resided at Lyons, and appears to have been principally employed for the booksellers, though his plates are executed in a style very superior to that of the generality of artists of that class. He engraved portraits of historical personages, and also several frontispieces, which he generally embellished with small historical figures, correctly drawn. His plates are executed with the graver. Among his fifty-six engravings may be noticed:

PORTRAITS.

Henry IV. (Five plates.)
Mary de' Medici. (Two plates.)
Pope Leo XI.
Pope Paul V.
Charles Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy.
James I., King of Great Britain.
Gabrielle d'Estrées.
Louis XI.

FRONTISPICES.

To the 'Biblia Sacra,' Lyons. 1606; in quarto.
To the 'Biblia Sacra,' Lyons. 1618; in folio.
To the 'Tabula Chronographica,' Lyons. 1616.
To the 'Praxis Fori Pœnitentialis,' Lyons. 1616.
To the 'Commentaries of J. Fernandus.' 1622.

FORRESTER, ALFRED HENRY, a caricaturist, known by the pseudonym of 'Alfred Crowquill,' was born in London in 1805. His family was connected with the Stock Exchange, on which he was himself more or less engaged till 1839. His works were generally in illustration of his own letterpress. He also contributed to 'Bentley's Miscellany,' 'The Illustrated London News,' 'The Humourist,' &c. He died in 1872. Amongst his productions were:

Leaves from my Memorandum Book.
Eccentric Tales.
The Wanderings of a Pen and Pencil.
The Comic English Grammar.
Comic Arithmetic.
A Bundle of Crowquills.

FORRESTER, JAMES, an engraver, flourished about the year 1760. He resided some years in Italy, where he etched several plates of landscapes, which are executed in a neat, pleasing style.

FORSELL, CHRISTIAN, born in 1777, studied first at the Academy at Copenhagen, and afterwards improved his talent for art by travelling. He was court engraver and professor at the Academy at Stockholm. The following are some of his best works:

The Coronation of the Virgin; engraved after a design by Ternite.

The Poet Camoëns; after Gérard.

Charles John, King of Sweden; after the same.

'Une Année en Suède,' in forty-eight plates; partly from his own drawing, partly after those of Sandberg. 1837.

FORSTER, FRANÇOIS, a Swiss engraver, born at Locle in 1790, was instructed by P. G. Langlois in Paris. In 1814 he obtained the first prize, by which he was sent to Rome, and after his return he soon gained a reputation, his numerous plates being remarkable for the skill with which he represented the original. He handled the graver with great ability, and his faculty of imparting both vigour and tenderness in the execution gives the whole a beautiful and harmonious effect. In 1844 Forster was elected a member of the Institute of France and the Academies of Brussels and Berlin. He died in Paris in 1872. The following were his most important plates:

The Disciples at Emmaus; after Paolo Veronese. 1812.

The Portrait of a Woman; after the same. 1818.

Aurora and Cephalus; after Guérin. 1821.

Dido and Æneas; after the same. 1828.

The Portrait of Albrecht Dürer; after Dürer. 1823.

Arthur, Duke of Wellington; after Gérard.

La Vierge au Basrelief; after Leonardo da Vinci. 1835.

Titian's Mistress; after Titian.

La Vierge de la Maison d'Orléans; after Raphael. 1838.

La Vierge à la Légende; after the same. 1846.

The Holy Family; after the same. 1854.

The Three Graces; after the same.

The Portrait of Raphael; after the same. 1835.

Christ on the Cross; after Sebastiano del Piombo. 1850.

Louis I. of Bavaria; after Stieler.

Alexander von Humboldt; after Sieuben.

St. Cecilia; after Delaroche.

FORSTER, THOMAS, an artist who lived in the early years of the 18th century, drew miniature portraits on vellum with lead pencil.

FORSTMAN, GREGORIO. See FOSMAN.

FORTI, GIACOMO, a painter of the Bolognese school, who flourished in 1483, was a pupil of Zoppo. He assisted his master in his frescoes, but in the church of San Tommaso al Mercato in Bologna, is a fresco of the Virgin, which is attributed to him.

FORTIER, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1775, and died in the same city in 1835. His best plates are 'The Entry of the French into Milan,' after Gérard; 'A Virgin Forest in Brazil,' after Clarac; and 'Morning,' after Moucheron.

FORTIN, AUGUSTIN FÉLIX, a French painter of landscapes, and of genre and historical subjects, was born in Paris in 1763, and studied under his uncle, the sculptor Lecomte. He was, however, chiefly noted for his sculpture, for which he obtained the grand prize in 1783. He became a member of the Academy in 1789, and died in Paris in 1832. Amongst his paintings are:

Invocation to Nature.

A Satyr.

Lesbia.

FORTIN, CHARLES, a French genre and landscape painter, the son of Augustin Félix Fortin, was born in Paris in 1815. He studied under Beaume and Roqueplan, and first exhibited in 1835. He died in Paris in 1865. Amongst his works are:

The Rag-seller.

The Return to the Cottage.

The Chimney Corner.

The Butcher's Shop.

The Village Barber.

Chouans. 1853. (Lille Museum.)

The Blessing. (Luxembourg Gallery.)

The Music Lesson.

The Smoker. 1855.

During Vespers, Morbihan. (Paris Exhibition, 1855.)

Rustic Interior. 1859.

The Country Tailor. 1861.

Between two Halts. 1864.

FORTNER, GEORG, who was born at Munich in 1814, studied under Schlotthauer and Heinrich Hess. He executed frescoes for the Bavarian National Museum; but he is better known for his designs for church windows. He died at Munich in 1879.

FORTUNY Y CARBÓ, MARIANO, a Spanish painter in oil and water-colours, was born of humble parentage at Reuss, near Barcelona, in 1841. Showing great artistic promise in his childhood, he was enabled by a local magnate to study at Barcelona and Madrid, and he further pursued his studies at Rome and Paris. He soon became known, and worked with great assiduity on the commissions he received, many of which were from Goupil of Paris. With the exception of the time during which he was on the staff of General Prim in Morocco, the rest of his life was passed chiefly at Rome and Paris. His death, which occurred at Rome in 1874, was occasioned by an attack of fever, contracted while sketching in damp weather in the vicinity of Naples. The pictures remaining in his studio were sold in Paris, and realized 800,000 francs. He married the daughter of Señor Madrazo, the director of the Madrid Academy. The following are amongst his chief works:

A Marriage in the Cathedral of Madrid.

Rehearsal at the Opera Buffa.

Snake-charmers.

Fantasy of Morocco. 1866.

A Book-lover in the Library of Richelieu. 1869.

The Fencing Lesson.

The Tribunal of a Cadi.

The Academy of the Arcadians. 1874.

Baron Davillier published at Paris in 1875, with illustrations, 'Fortuny, sa vie, son œuvre, sa correspondance.'

FOSCHI, FERDINANDO, was a landscape painter who flourished at Bologna in the 18th century. There is a landscape by him in the Lille Museum, and a winter scene in the Darmstadt Museum.

FOSCHI, SIGISMONDO, a son of Antonio Foschi, was born at Faenza, and flourished about 1530. There is a 'Madonna and Child' by this artist in the Brera at Milan, which came from the church of San Bartolommeo in Faenza.

FOSMAN, GREGORIO, (or FORSTMAN), is considered the best of the Spanish engravers of title-pages during the reign of Charles II. Among his works are the following:

Portrait of Archbishop Manso de Zuñiga.

Title-page to a 'Life of St Domingo de Silos.' 1653.

Title-page to Ximena's Catalogue of the Bishops of Jaen. 1654.

Title-page to Gandara's 'Glory of the Church in Galicia.' 1677.

The Auto-da-fé held in the Plaza-Mayor of Madrid, 30th June, 1680.

One of the plates of Vera Tassis's 'Obsequies of Queen Maria Louisa.' 1690.

St. Francis Xavier.

Portrait of Cardinal Errico Noris.

FOSSANO, AMBROGIO DA. See STEFANI.

FOSSATI, DAVIDE ANTONIO, a painter and etcher, was born at Morco, near Lugano, in 1708, and studied drawing under Mariotti at Venice, and painting under Daniel Gran, with whom in 1723 he went to Vienna. In 1728 he painted the dining-hall in the monastery of St. Martinsberg at Pressburg; but in 1730 he returned to Venice, and in the next year executed the wall-paintings in the villa at Torre, near Este, as also in the nunnery of Santa Margareta, near Luis. He afterwards took to etching, but did not succeed at first. His death occurred at Vienna about 1780. His works as a painter are little known, but he has left among his later and happier efforts several etchings of landscapes and historical subjects after various masters. The following are his plates most worthy of notice: they are sometimes marked with the cipher AS Diana and Calisto; after Solimena.

The Family of Darius before Alexander; after Paolo Veronese.

Jupiter destroying the Vices; after the same.

Rebekah and the Servant of Abraham; after A. Bellucci.

The Calling of St. Peter to the Apostleship; after the same.

A set of twenty-four Views of Venice, and Landscapes; after Marco Ricci.

FOSSATI, DOMENICO, was born at Venice in 1743, and studied painting at the Academy of that city. He distinguished himself as a painter of architecture and a decorator, and his works are to be met with in the theatres and palaces of Venice, Padua, Vicenza, Verona, Udine, Monza, and Gratz, and in the Scala at Milan. He died at Venice in 1784.

FOSSATI, GIORGIO, an engraver and architect, who was born at the commencement of the 18th century, and died about 1770, executed the plates to the 'Raccolta di varie Favole' (Venice, 1744), and also made the designs for the carving in the Scuola di San Rocco at Venice.

FOSSE, DE LA. See DE LA FOSSE.

FOSSEYEUX, JEAN BAPTISTE, who was born in Paris in 1782, and died there in 1824, studied under Delaunay and Moreau the younger. He engraved after Velazquez, Domenichino, &c.

FOSTER, THOMAS, an Irish portrait painter, was born in 1798. He came to England early, and entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he exhibited from 1819 to 1825. He died by his own hand in 1826. Amongst his portraits are:

Miss Tree.

Right Hon. John Wilson Croker.

Sir Henry Bishop, the composer.

FOUCEEL, —, a Dutch landscape painter and engraver, flourished in the early part of the 17th century. Three very tenderly executed plates, now very rare, are known by him: 'The Group of Trees,' 'The Avenue,' and 'The Terrace.'

FOUCHER, NICOLAS, born in Paris in 1650, was instructed by Mignard, and painted portraits and historical subjects. He also etched in a spirited manner the portrait of 'Jaque Roland, sieur de Belebat, maistre chirurgien.' Foucher died about 1700.

FOUCHIER, BARTRAM DE, a Dutch painter, was born at Bergen-op-Zoom in 1609. He was sent to Antwerp when very young, and there became a scholar of Van Dyck, but when that master left Antwerp to visit England, Fouchier returned to Holland, where he studied under Jan Bylert, at Utrecht. He afterwards went to Rome, where he remained three years, and would probably have acquired a distinguished reputation if he had not been implicated in a quarrel, which obliged him to quit the city. The fame of the Venetian painters drew him to Venice, where he particularly devoted himself to studying the works of Tintoretto. After an absence of eight years he returned to Holland, where he soon found that neither the style he had acquired in Italy, nor the subjects of his pictures, were agreeable to the taste of his countrymen. He therefore abandoned historical painting, and applied himself to paint similar subjects to those of Ostade and Brouwer, representing assemblies of peasants and drunken frolics, which were admired in his time, and are still to be found in the collections in Holland. He died at Bergen-op-Zoom in 1674.

FOULLON, BENJAMIN, the son of Pierre Foullon, a native of Antwerp, who received letters of naturalization from Francis I. of France, flourished in 1583. By him there are forty-eight crayon drawings in the National Library in Paris, which resemble in style those of François Clouet. He was painter at the court of Henry IV. of France.

FOUNTAIN. See LA FONTAINE.

FOUQUET, JEAN, (or FOUQUET,) a French miniature painter, was born at Tours about 1415. At that time there were two different schools in France: the one adopted the principles of Van Eyck, the other united the manner of that artist with the Italian style, and of the latter Fouquet was a great adherent. His first-known work is dated 1461; his last, 1475. He was court painter to Louis XI., and died in 1483. Among his miniatures and oil paintings are the following:

- | | | |
|-------------|-------------------------------------|--|
| Antwerp. | Gallery. | The Virgin and Child. (The half of an altar-piece in oil.) |
| Frankfort. | Brentano-

| Munich. | Royal Library. | The Miniatures in a French translation of Boccaccio, by Pierre Faure, curé of St. Denis. 1458. |
| Paris. | National Library. | Eleven Miniatures in a French translation of Josephus's 'History of the Jews,' representing scenes in the life of Joseph. |
| Versailles. | Gallery. | The Portrait of Guillaume Juvenal des Ursins (in oil). |

FOUQUIÈRES, JACQUES, was born at Antwerp in 1580, where he received some instruction from Jodocus De Momper, and afterwards studied under Jan Brueghel, though he adopted a style of landscape painting very superior to that of either of those masters, and in this branch of art arrived at an excellence that induced Rubens occasionally to employ him to paint the backgrounds of his pictures. Under this master he gained so high a reputation that the Elector Palatine employed him at his court when still young. He afterwards visited Rome and Venice, where he greatly improved his style by studying the works of Titian, whose fine landscapes were the particular objects of his admiration. In 1621 he went to Paris, and was employed by Louis XIII. in the great gallery of the Louvre. His pictures were so much admired by that monarch that he conferred on him the honour of knighthood, which mark of distinction is said by D'Argenville to have rendered him so vain and ridiculous, that he afterwards never painted without his sword by his side. He became so proud and overbearing that his insolent conduct to Nicolas Poussin, who was employed by the king at the same time in the Louvre, was the means of depriving France of the talents of that admirable painter, who left Paris in disgust, and resided at Rome for the remainder of his life. Fouquières was, notwithstanding these foibles, a distinguished painter of landscapes; his pencil is free and firm, and his colour, both in oil and in fresco, is clear and fresh, though occasionally cold, and too green. The figures with which he embellished his landscapes are correctly drawn, and touched with great spirit. He fell into disgrace, and died in Paris, in poverty, in 1659. There is a small landscape by this artist in the Darmstadt Gallery, and another in the Bordeaux Museum.

FOUR, N. DU. See DU FOUR.

FOURDRINIER, PIERRE, was a French engraver, who flourished for upwards of thirty years in London. He engraved many plates for the embellishment of books, plays, and pamphlets, and also executed some large plates of architectural views, which are his best performances. Some of these were for a large folio volume of the 'Villas of the Ancients,' published by Robert Castell in 1728. He also engraved some of the plans and elevations of Houghton Hall. He died in London in 1758.

FOURMOIS, THÉODORE, a Belgian artist, who was born at Presles in 1814, first devoted himself to pencil drawing, afterwards to water-colour, and lastly to oil painting. He was a diligent and tasteful artist, and painted with a bold brush. His subjects are mostly views of Brussels and the Ardennes. He died at Brussels in 1871.

FOURNIER, —, a French engraver, executed part of the plates for a small folio volume, entitled 'Les Tableaux de la Pénitence.'

FOURNIER, DANIEL, an à-la-mode beefseller, shoemaker and engraver, was born early in the 18th century. He published in 1764 a work on Perspective, and died about 1766. There is a mezzotint by him of Cuthbert Mayne, a Catholic priest.

FOURNIER, JACQUES. See FORNAZERIS.

FOURNIER, JEAN, a native of France, was a scholar of F. de Troy, and gained the first prize at the Royal Academy of Painting in 1737 for a picture of 'Samson and Delilah.' He passed the greater part of his artistic life at the Hague, and painted the portraits of many distinguished persons of his time; among others, those of the Duke of Cumberland and Admiral Anson. He died at the Hague in 1765.

FOURNIER, JEAN BAPTISTE FORTUNÉ DE, born at Ajaccio, Corsica, in 1798, studied at the Polytechnic School at Naples, and was distinguished for his water-colour views of interiors, as 'The Saloon of Louis XIV. in the Tuileries.' He died in Paris in 1864.

FOUTIN, J., an engraver of Chateaudun, was probably a goldsmith, as the only prints known by him are some plates of ornamental foliage, with grotesque heads, figures, &c., dated 1619.

FOWLER, WILLIAM, a draughtsman and engraver, was brought up as a carpenter at Winterton in Lincolnshire, where he died in 1832.

FOWLER, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, was born in 1796. His best known work is a portrait of Queen Victoria, which was engraved in mezzotint by J. R. Jackson. He died in London about 1880.

FOX, CHARLES, who was born at Falmouth in 1749, and who began life as a bookseller, later turned his attention to art, practising both landscape and portraiture. He likewise published some translations from the Persian, and died at Bath in 1809.

FOX, CHARLES, was born in 1794, at Cossey, near Norwich, where his father was steward to Lord Stafford, of Cossey Hall. After a period of studying engraving under Edwards at Bungay, he came up to London, became an inmate in the studio of John Burnet, who was at that time engaged in engraving some of Wilkie's principal works, and assisted Burnet in their completion. The engravings executed entirely with his own burin are several small plates after Wilkie for Cadell's edition of Sir Walter Scott's novels, and various illustrations to the Annals of the day. His large engravings are a whole-length portrait of Sir George Murray, after Pickersgill; 'The First Council of the Queen,' and 'Village Recruits,' after Wilkie. His early habits and love of flowers never left him; and on Dr. Lindley, his fellow-townsmen, being appointed secretary of the Horticultural Society, Fox was chosen as a judge and arbitrator for the various prizes; and during the whole time gave the greatest satisfaction, both on account of his scientific skill and his strict impartiality. He also executed all the engravings for a periodical called 'The Florist.' At the time of his decease, which took place at Leyton in 1849, he was engaged upon a large print after Mulready's picture of 'The Fight interrupted.'

FRACANZANO, CESARE, a Neapolitan painter, who flourished in the 17th century, was a pupil of Spagnoletto. He died in France some years after 1657. His son, MICHELAGNOLO FRACANZANO, who was also a painter, died in France about 1685. There is in the Madrid Gallery a picture by the latter, representing 'Two Wrestlers.'

FRACANZANO, FRANCESCO, the brother of Cesare Fracanzano, was a pupil of Spagnoletto and the master of Salvator Rosa, whose sister he had married. His married life was an unhappy one, as by the instigation of his wife he committed crimes for which he suffered death at Naples in 1657.

FRACASSI, CESARE, (or FRACASSINI,) was born in 1838. He studied painting in Rome, where he executed several frescoes for San Lorenzo. He died in 1868. One of his most important pictures is 'The Martyrs of Gorinchum.'

FRADELLE, HENRI JOSEPH, an historical painter, was born at Lille in 1778, but passed his life in England. From 1816 to 1855 he occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy, but his works chiefly appeared at the British Institution. He died in 1865. Amongst his works (several of which were engraved) are:

Milton dictating 'Paradise Lost.' 1817.
Mary, Queen of Scots, and her Secretary
Rebecca and Ivanhoe.
Belinda at her Toilet.
The Earl of Leicester and Amy Robsart.
Queen Elizabeth and Lady Paget.
Lady Jane Grey.

FRAGONARD, ALEXANDRE EVARISTE, a French historical painter, was born at Grasse in 1780. He was a son of Jean Honoré Fragonard, and studied under David. Besides painting, he devoted himself to sculpture, and to designs for lithography. He died in Paris in 1850. His chief paintings are:

Maria Theresa and her Son.
Francis I. knighted. 1819. (Versailles.)
The Triumphal Entry of Joan of Arc into Orleans. (Orleans Museum.)
The Burgesses of Calais in the Tent of Edward I.
Francis I. receiving Works of Art brought from Italy by Primaticcio.
Henry IV. and Gabrielle d'Estrées.
Siege of Ptolemais. (Versailles.)
Battle of Marignan. 1836. (Versailles.)

FRAGONARD, HIPPOLYTE EVARISTE ETIENNE, a French historical and genre painter and lithographer, was born in Paris in 1806. He was the grandson of Jean Honoré Fragonard, and was for many years connected with the porcelain manufactory at Sèvres. He died in Paris in 1876. There is at Versailles a copy by him of Bronzino's 'Isabella of Aragon supplicating Charles VIII. of France.'

FRAGONARD, JEAN HONORÉ, a French painter and engraver, was born at Grasse in 1732. He was at first a notary's clerk, but showed so little disposition for that profession that he entered first the school of Chardin, where he was instructed in the principles of painting, and then attended the atelier of Boucher, where he made so rapid progress that he obtained, when only twenty years old, the 'grand prix de Rome' with his 'Jeroboam sacrificing to Idols.' He studied at Rome after Solimena, Cortona, Barocci, and with especial predilection the works of Tiepolo. In company with Jean Claude Richard, the Abbé de St. Non, and Hubert Robert, he visited Naples and Sicily. After his return to Paris Fragonard painted for the King in 1765 his 'Coresus and Callirrhoe,' but he exhibited only at the Salons of 1765 and 1767. Seeing that his style of painting, which he acquired in Italy, did not meet with sufficient success, he applied himself to painting love-scenes of a sensual character. These productions he sold for great sums, and they were just adapted to the corrupt taste of that time in France. His portraits, scenes of family life, landscapes, miniatures, copies after the great masters, and crayon and water-colour drawings, are of a most graceful and light touch. Fragonard died in Paris in 1806. His wife, MARIE ANNE GÉRAUD, to whom he was married in 1769, was distinguished as a miniature painter. She was born at Grasse in 1745, and died in Paris in 1823. An account of Fragonard and of his works will be found in MM. de Goncourt's 'Art du XVIII^{me} siècle.' Among his chief paintings are the following:

Grasse.	M. de Malvilan.	Ten Love-scenes.
Lille.	Museum.	Adoration of the Shepherds.
London.	Hertford House.	The Chances of the Swing.

There are by this artist several etchings from his own designs, and after various masters, among which are the following:

The Circumcision; after Tiepolo.
The Circumcision; after Sebastiano Ricci.
Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus; after the same.
The Last Supper; after the same.
St. Roch; after Tintoretto.
The Conception; after the same.
The Presentation; after the same.
Four Bacchanalian subjects; after his own designs.
L'Armoire. 1778.

FRASINGER, KASPAR, a painter and etcher of Ingoldstadt, in Bavaria, died at that town in 1600. The following etchings are by him:

The Virgin. 1595.
The suffering Redeemer attended by two Angels. 1598.
The suffering Redeemer seated on a Stone. 1599.
The Virgin lamenting over the Dead Body of Christ. 1599.

FRANCART, GILBERT, a French painter, whose only known work is a picture of 'St. Sebastian' in the church of Bazoches-du-Morvand. It is well drawn and coloured in the style of Le Brun, and dated 1661. He was still living in 1692.

FRANCESCA, PIERO DELLA. See DEI FRANCESCHI.

FRANCESCHI, PAOLO, called PAOLO FIAMMINGO, was born at Antwerp in 1540, but went when young to Venice, where he became a scholar of Tintoretto, and resided during the remainder of his life. He principally excelled in painting landscapes, although he sometimes produced historical subjects. In the church of San Niccolò de' Frari, at Venice, are two pictures by this master, of 'The Descent from the Cross,' and 'St. John preaching in the Wilderness,' and in the Munich Gallery is 'The Dead Christ in the lap of the Virgin.' He was employed by the Emperor Rudolph II., for whom he painted several landscapes and other subjects. He died at Venice in 1596.

FRANCESCHIELLO. See LA MURA.

FRANCESCHINI, BALDASSARE, called IL VOLTERRANO, the son of Gasparo Franceschini, a sculptor, was born at Volterra in 1611. He was called 'Il Volterrano giuniore,' to distinguish him from Daniele Ricciarelli da Volterra, and first studied under Matteo Rosselli, but he afterwards became a scholar of Giovanni da San Giovanni. He is said to have excited the jealousy of that master, who, having engaged him as his coadjutor in some works in the Palazzo Pitti, after witnessing his capacity, thought it prudent to dismiss him. He was one of the most distinguished fresco painters of his time, and was more employed in that line than in easel pictures. He died at Florence in 1689. His most important productions are as under:

Bordeaux.	Museum.	Moses before Pharaoh.
"	"	Apollo and Marsyas.

FRANCESCHINI, DOMENICO, was an indifferent Italian engraver, by whom we have a slight etching of the 'Amphitheatre of Flavius,' dated 1725.

FRANCESCHINI, GIACOMO, the son and scholar of Marc Antonio Franceschini, was born at Bologna in 1672. He painted historical pictures in the style of his father, and there are some of his works in the churches at Bologna. In Santa Maria Incoronata is a picture of 'St. Usualdo, St. Margaret, St. Lucy, and St. Cecilia'; in San Simone, 'The Crucifixion'; and in San Martino, 'St. Anne.' Franceschini died at Bologna in 1745.

FRANCESCHINI, Cavaliere MARC ANTONIO, who was the founder of the Upper Italian school, and whose first performances are to be met with at Imola, Ozzano, and Piacenza, was born at Bologna in 1648. From the Academy of Giovanni Maria Galli he passed into that of Carlo Cignani, of whom he became the most assiduous assistant. Together with that master he completed the works in the Palazzo del Giardino of the Duke Ranuccio II. at Parma, which were begun by Agostino Carracci. Franceschini also painted under Cignani at Bologna, Piacenza, Modena, Reggio, and other places, in fresco, tempera, and oil. Endowed with such capacities, Franceschini met with great encouragement. In 1702 he painted scenes from the history of the Republic in the Council-palace at Genoa, and in 1711 designed at Rome for Pope Clement XI. several cartoons for the mosaics in St. Peter's, for which he was honoured with the Order of Christ. On returning to Genoa in 1714, he executed several frescoes and paintings in the church of the Padri Filippini, and in the Pallavicini and Durazzo palaces. After having adorned the chapel of the Madonna del Carmine at Crema, in 1716, he returned to Bologna, and did not let his brush rest until he was nearly eighty years of age. He died there in 1729. His principal works at Bologna are a ceiling in the Palazzo Ranuzzi; a fine picture of the 'Annunciation' at the Pinacoteca; the 'Death of St. Joseph,' in the church of Corpus Domini; 'St. John in the Isle of Patmos,' in La Carità; and 'St. Francis of Sales kneeling before the Virgin and Infant,' in La Madonna di Galeria. At Rimini, in the church of the Augustines, is a fine picture of 'St. Thomas of Villanova giving Alms to the Poor.' His picture of the 'Founders of the Order,' at the Padri Servi at Bologna; and his 'Pietà,' at the Agostini at Imola, painted when he was near eighty, have no appearance of feebleness or senility. Other paintings by him are:

- Bologna. Pinacoteca. Holy Family.

FRANCESCHINI, VINCENZO, was probably a relation of Domenico Franceschini. He executed part of the plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino,' published in 1748.

FRANCESCHINO. See CARRACCI, FRANCESCO.

FRANCESCHITTO, (or FRANCISQUITO,) is stated to have been a native of Spain, born at Valladolid in 1681, and a scholar of Luca Giordano, who was accustomed to assert that the disciple would surpass his master. He accompanied that painter to Italy, on his leaving Madrid, and at Naples gave proof of the prediction of Luca, in a picture which he painted for the church of Santa Maria del Monte, representing 'St. Pasquale,' with a beautiful choir of angels, and a grand landscape. This promising artist died at Naples in 1705.

FRANCESCO DI GIORGIO, who was born at Siena in 1439, was more famous as an architect and an engineer than as a painter. His paintings are cold and unrelieved, and the strange conceits in his composition are both surprising and unpleasant. Six or eight panels by him are still in the Academy of Siena, and there is an altar-piece by him with scenes from the life of 'St. Benedict' in the Uffizi at Florence. His brilliant successes in the laying out of fortresses, and in the invention of means for their attack and reduction, were only surpassed by Leonardo da Vinci, whom he met in 1490 at Pavia. He died in 1502.

FRANCESCO DI GIOVANNI, who lived at Florence in the 15th century, is the author of a 'Dead Christ,' painted in 1491, and now in one of the chapels of the Pieve of that city. He had a son named Raffaello, who finished an altar-piece ordered of his father in 1504 by the church of Empoli. It represents the 'Deposition from the Cross,' and is now in the Uffizi Gallery at Florence.

FRANCESCO DI STEFANO, commonly called PESELLINO, to distinguish him from his grandfather Pesello, was born at Florence in 1422. His father, Stefano, who was a painter, died before 1427, and left his widow, the daughter of Pesello, in poor circumstances. It thus happened that the young Francesco was brought up by his grandfather, with whom he remained till the old man died, in 1446, when he continued to carry on the business in the atelier till he himself died young, in 1457, at Florence. In his works he, to some extent, copied the style of Filippo Lippi, and the predella of an altar-piece by that artist in the Florence Academy is said to be by him:

The following are the works usually ascribed to Pesellino:

- Florence. Academy. The Nativity; Miracle of St. Anthony of Padua; Martyrdom of St. Cosmo and St. Damian. (Part of the predella of the 'Virgin and Saints' by Filippo Lippi, also in the Academy.)
 " Buonarroti Coll. } Three scenes from the Life of St. Nicholas. (Predella from the Cappella Cavalcanti, in Santa Croce, Florence.)

Florence.	Palazzo Torrighiani.	Meeting of David and Goliath (cassone).
"	"	David Triumphant (cassone).
"	Santo Spirito (formerly the sisterhood of S. Giorgio).	Annunciation.
Frankfort.	Städel.	Virgin and Child.
Liverpool.	Gallery.	St. Bernardino preaching in the Cathedral at Florence.
London.	Nat. Gall.	A Trinità (from the church of the Trinità, Pistoja).
Paris.	Louvre.	St. Francis receiving the Stig- mata; St. Cosmo and St. Damian healing a sick man. (Part of the predella of the 'Virgin and Saints' by Filippo Lippi, in the Academy, Flo- rence.)
"	"	The Nativity. (Ascribed in the catalogue to Filippo Lippi, but Crowe and Cavalcaselle attri- bute it to Pesellino.)
Rome.	Doria Palace.	Two Scenes from the Life of St. Sylvester.

FRANCHI, ANTONIO, an Italian historical painter, was born at Lucca in 1634, and settled at Florence. He was a scholar of Baldassare Franceschini, called Il Volterrano, though he rather followed the style of Pietro da Cortona. His picture of 'St. Joseph of Calasanzio,' in the church of the Padri Scolopi, is admired for the correctness of its design and the vigour of its effect. His best work, 'Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter,' is in the parochial church of Caporignano near Lucca. He was employed by the Grand-Duke of Tuscany, for whom, as well as for private collections, he painted several easel pictures. He wrote a book on art, entitled 'La Teorica della Pittura,' printed at Lucca thirty years after his death. He died in 1709. His son and daughter, GIUSEPPE and MARGHERITA, also became artists.

FRANCHI, CESARE, who gained repute by painting figures of a small size, was a native of Perugia, and was instructed by Giulio Cesare Angeli. Franchi died in 1615.

FRANCHI, LORENZO, was born at Bologna about 1563, and was instructed by Camillo Procaccini; but after leaving that master he attached himself to the manner of the Carracci, whose works he copied, or imitated in small. He became eminent in this way; but the masters he chose for his models have the credit of the performance, and the name of Lorenzo Franchi is scarcely recognized out of his own country. He died about 1630.

FRANCHINI, NICCOLÒ, who was born at Siena in 1704, and died in 1783, was a son of the sculptor Giacomo Franchini. Among his pictures in Siena are 'St. Francis of Sales,' in the Baptistery (now San Giovanni); 'St. Christopher,' in Sant' Agostino; and the 'Death of the Virgin,' in San Giorgio.

FRANCHOYS, LUCAS. See FRANÇOIS.

FRANCI, FRANCESCO, who was born at Siena in 1658, and died there in 1721, has left in that city a number of pictures, among which may be named 'St. Jerome,' at the church of Fonte Giusta, and a 'Last Supper' in the refectory of the Osservanti.

FRANCIA, DOMENICO, a painter and architect, born at Bologna in 1702, was a son of the engraver Francesco Maria Domenico Francia, and studied under Ferdinando Galli (called Bibiena), whom he assisted in his paintings at Vienna. He was afterwards appointed builder to the King of Sweden, and on the expiration of this service painted at other European courts. He died in 1758.

FRANCIA, FRANCESCO GIACOMO. See RAIBOLINI.

FRANCIA, FRANÇOIS LOUIS THOMAS, a water-colour landscape painter, was born at Calais in 1772. In early life he settled in London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1795 to 1822. He attained considerable reputation, and was appointed water-colour painter to the Duchess of York. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the associate-ship of the Academy in 1816, and shortly afterwards returned to his native place, where he died in 1839. There are nine of his works in the South Kensington Museum.

FRANCIA, GIULIO. See RAIBOLINI.

FRANCIA, PIETRO, was a native of Florence who painted for the catafalque of Michelangelo a work representing that artist standing before Pope Pius IV., holding in his hands the model of the cupola of St. Peter's at Rome, 1563. Alessandro del Barbieri was his pupil.

FRANCK, FRANZ FRIEDRICH, born at Augsburg in 1627, was instructed by his father, Hans Ulrich Franck. He died at Augsburg in 1687. The following productions are by him:

Augsburg.	St. Anna.	The History of Jacob and Esau.
Carlsruhe.	Ducal Pal.	The Passage of the Red Sea.
Mannheim.	Gallery.	The Israelites after the Passage through the Red Sea.
"	"	A Saloon of Pictures and An- tiquities.
Ratisbon.	Cathedral.	St. Francis dying.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Man.

FRANCK, HANS. See LÜTZELBERGER.

FRANCK, HANS ULRICH, a German historical painter and etcher, was born at Kaufbeuren, in Swabia, in 1603. He resided chiefly at Augsburg, where he died in 1680. Among other engravings the following are by him:

Twenty-five plates of scenes in Military Life. 1656.
The Meeting of David and Abigail.
Alexander and the dying Darius. 1644.

FRANCK, JAN WILLEM, a Dutch painter of flowers, birds, and fruit, was born at the Hague in 1720. He copied after Berchem, Potter, Wynants, Van de Velde, Van Huysum, &c., and died at the Hague in 1761.

FRANCK, JOHANN, an engraver, was the son of Hans Ulrich Franck. He engraved several portraits for the booksellers, of which are some of those in Priorato's 'Historia di Leopoldo Cesare,' 1670; and in conjunction with Susanna Sandrart and J. Meyer, he engraved a set of plates of the gardens and fountains in the vicinity of Rome.

FRANCK, JOSEPH, a Belgian line-engraver, was born at Brussels in 1825. He was a pupil of Calamatta, and engraved many portraits and other plates after ancient and modern masters, besides which he completed the engraving of Rubens's 'Descent from the Cross,' which had been left unfinished by Erin Corr. He died in 1883. His principal works are:

The Virgin with the Lily; after Leonardo da Vinci.
The Entombment of Christ; after Quentin Massys.
A Pietà; after Van Dyck.
The Prisoner; after Gérôme.
Paul and Virginia; after Van Lerius.
La Glycine; after Portaels.
Meditation; after A. Robert.
The First Stockings; after H. Kretschmer.

FRANCKALLS, BAPTIST, an obscure engraver, is mentioned by Florent Le Comte, who says he excelled in engraving tournaments, theatrical scenes, and magnificent decorations.

FRANCKEN (or, as it is sometimes written, FRANK,) is the name of a numerous family of Flemish painters, whose works are found in many of the public galleries of Europe. Owing to the fact that they all painted much in the same style as Frans Francken the elder, who was a pupil of Frans Floris, and the chief of the family, their works have doubtless been ascribed in some cases wrongly.

FRANCKEN, AMBROSIUS, the elder, a younger son of Nicolaes Francken, was born at Herenthals, in 1544. He was instructed in the art of painting by Marten De Vos, or, according to other writers, by Frans Floris. About the year 1570 he visited France, and in 1573 became a master, and in 1581-82 the dean of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp. Though his productions are too overcharged in every respect, Ambrosius possessed a fecundity and warmth of invention which was superior to that of his brothers. He died at Antwerp in 1618. His most important works are the following:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	Martyrdom of St. Crispin and St. Crispinian.
"	"	Scenes from the Lives and Martyrdom of St. Cosmo and St. Damian. (The wings of a triptych.)
"	"	Scenes from the Life of St. Sebastian.
"	"	The Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes. 1598.
"	"	The Last Supper. (A triptych.)
"	"	The Disciples at Emmaus. (The left wing of the above triptych.)
"	"	Melchizedek sacrificing. (The reverse of the same.)
"	"	The Ordination of St. Paul and St. Barnabas. (The right wing of the above triptych.)
"	"	Visit of the Angel to Elijah. (The reverse of the same.)
"	"	Scenes from the Life of St. George. (The wings of a triptych.)
"	"	St. George and St. Margaret. (The reverses of the above.)
"	"	The Martyrdom of St. Catharine.
"	St. Jacques.	Christ raising the Daughter of Jairus.

Antwerp. St. Jacques. Christ and the Adulteress.
(The two laterals of an altar-piece painted in 1600.)
" " Christ on the Mount of Olives with the Disciples. (The reverse of both wings.)

Dresden. Gallery. Mary, the Queen of Heaven.

FRANCKEN, AMBROSIUS, called the younger, to distinguish him from his uncle of the same name, was born at Antwerp in the latter part of the 16th century. He studied under his father, Frans Francken the elder, whose style he imitated. In 1624 he was registered as a master in the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp, and he is said to have painted some time in Louvain. He died in 1632. Little else is known of him.

FRANCKEN, CONSTANTINUS, a skilful painter of siege and battle scenes, born at Antwerp in 1661, was the son of Hieronymus Francken the third, and grandson of Frans Francken the younger. In 1694 he became dean of the Guild of St. Luke. 'The Siege of Namur,' with William III. and his generals, is by some considered his best work. He died at Antwerp in 1717.

FRANCKEN, FRANS, the elder, the second son of Nicolaes Francken, was born at Herenthals in 1542, and learned painting in the school of Frans Floris. In 1567 he received the freedom of the city of Antwerp, and became a master in the Guild of St. Luke, of which he was dean in 1588-89. He possessed great ability in design and in colouring, but his pictures are wanting in depth and spirit. After 1597 he signed his paintings D o F. (den ouden Frans), 'the elder Francis.' He died at Antwerp in 1616. His portrait has been etched by Van Dyck. Among his pupils were his sons, Hieronymus, Frans, and Ambrosius Francken, G. Goltzius, Jan De Waal, and Herman van der Maest. The following are among his principal works:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	The Holy Family.
Antwerp.	Gallery.	Eteocles and Polynices.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Christ on the Cross.
Blenheim.	Palace.	Pharaoh perishing in the Red Sea.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Overthrow of Pharaoh in the Red Sea.

"	"	A Cavalier leading a Lady out to Dance.
"	"	The Scourging of Jesus.

FRANCKEN, FRANS, the younger, called DON FRANCISCO, was a younger son of Frans Francken the elder, and was born at Antwerp in 1581. He was instructed in the art by his father, whose style he followed for some time. He afterwards visited Italy, and resided chiefly at Venice, where he studied the works of the great colourists of that school. After an absence of three years he returned to Antwerp, and in 1605 was received into the Guild of St. Luke, of which he was dean in 1614-15. He died at Antwerp in 1642. His paintings represent scenes from the Bible and mythology, allegories, balls, masquerades, festivals, and landscapes, with figures of a small size. The figures in the works of the younger De Momper, the elder Neeffs, and Bartelmees van Bassen were inserted by him. He was undoubtedly superior in design, colouring, and expression to his brothers Ambrosius and Hieronymus, and even to his father. Before his father's death he signed D. j. F. (den jongen Frans), but afterwards D. o. F. (den ouden Frans), to distinguish himself from his nephew. Among his works are the following:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	The Adoration of the Virgin and Child. 1616.
Antwerp.	Gallery.	The Miracles at the Tomb of St. Bruno.
"	"	The Martyrdom of the Four with the Crowns. 1624.
"	"	The Works of Mercy. 1608.
Augsburg.	Gallery.	Seven paintings: Christ with Martha and Mary; Christ bearing the Cross, &c.
"	"	The Continnence of Scipio.

Vienna.	Gallery.	The Witches' Sabbath. 1607.
"	"	Christ crucified. 1606.
"	"	Meeting of Christ and Nicodemus.
"	"	Cræsus and Solon.

FRANCKEN, FRANS, the third, called 'den rubenschen Francken' (Rubens's Francken), but for what reason is not known, was a son of Frans Francken the younger. He was born at Antwerp in 1607, and became dean of the Guild of St. Luke in 1655. He usually painted small figures, with which he often decorated the interiors of churches by the younger Pieter Neeffs. Before the death of his uncle he signed his paintings den jonge, and after 1642, F. F. He died in 1667. The following works by him are known:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	Family Group in a Picture Gallery.
Augsburg.	Gallery.	St. John preaching.
"	"	Moses striking the Rock. 1654.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Interior of Antwerp Cathedral. 1648.
Hague.	Gallery.	Interior of a Cathedral. (Signed by him and Pieter Neeffs.)

FRANCKEN, GABRIEL, a son of Sebastiaen Francken, of whom it is only known that he was a pupil of one Gerard Schoofs in 1605, and a member of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1634.

FRANCKEN, HIERONYMUS, the elder, the eldest son of Nicolaes Francken, was born at Herenthals, near Antwerp, in 1540, and was a disciple of Frans Floris. He afterwards visited France on his way to Italy, and passed some time in Paris; he painted in 1565 at Fontainebleau, and about the same time, in the church of the Augustinians in Paris, a 'Crucifixion.' He afterwards went to Rome, where he studied for some time, and then returned to Paris. He was employed by Henry III., and was appointed portrait painter to the king. In Flanders he established an academy, and after the death of Frans Floris, the scholars of that master placed themselves under his tuition, and even Abraham Bloemaert attended his school. When Henry III. was murdered in 1589, he returned to Antwerp, but being patronized by Henry IV. and Louis XIII., he again took up his residence in Paris in 1595, and died there in 1610. His best productions are his portraits, which may be compared with those of Pourbus. Among his paintings may be noted:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Allegory of the Abdication of Charles V. at Brussels.
Antwerp.	Cathedral.	The Miracles of St. Gomer. 1607.
Dresden.	Gallery.	The Beheading of St. John the Baptist.
Fontainebleau.	Palace.	Several paintings.
Lille.	Museum.	Charles V. taking the Religious Dress.
Paris.	Augustinian Church.	The Crucifixion.
"	Franciscan Church.	The Nativity of Christ. 1585.
Stockholm.	Museum.	Assembly of Sea Gods.

FRANCKEN, HIERONYMUS, called the younger to distinguish him from his uncle, was born at Antwerp in 1578. He studied under his father, Frans Francken the elder, and under his uncle Ambrosius. He was free of the Guild of St. Luke in 1607, and died at Antwerp in 1629. He was especially successful in his portraits. In the Antwerp Gallery is a picture by this artist of 'Horatius Cocles at the Sublician Bridge,' painted in 1620.

FRANCKEN, JAN BAPTIST, the son of Sebastiaen Francken, was born at Antwerp in 1599. He received his first instruction from his father, and for some time followed his style, which he afterwards improved by an attentive study of the works of Rubens and Van Dyck. His first efforts were historical subjects; but he adopted a mode of representing the interiors of saloons and galleries, embellished with pictures and statues, &c., with gallant assemblies of figures and conversations. His works of that description were painted with great beauty of colouring, and a very spirited touch. They were greatly sought after, and were placed in the choicest collections. He possessed a talent of imitating so exactly the peculiar touch and style of each master in the small pictures he introduced into his galleries, that it was easy to point out the original painter. It was the possession of this talent that induced so many contemporary artists to solicit his assistance to decorate their pictures with small figures, both in landscapes and interiors. Many of Pieter Neeffs's are so ornamented. He died in 1653. Pictures by him of the 'Beheading of St. John the Baptist' are at Augsburg and Brussels, and at Bruges there is a picture of 'Christ among the Doctors.'

FRANCKEN, JOHANNES, called by the Italians GIOVANNI FRANCO, entered the school of Jacob van Utrecht in 1512, and afterwards went to Italy, and established himself at Naples in 1550. In San Francesco, at Naples, the painting of the 'Adoration of the Magi,' dated 1556, is by this artist.

FRANCKEN, LAURENS, was instructed in painting by his uncle, Gabriel Francken, in 1623. He chiefly excelled in historical and landscape subjects. About 1660 he established himself in Paris.

FRANCKEN, NICOLAES, born at Herenthals about 1520, is said to have been instructed by Frans Floris, and was the father of Hieronymus, Frans, and Ambrosius Francken. He died at Antwerp in 1596.

FRANCKEN, P. H., who flourished about the middle of the 17th century, painted for the Carmelite Church at Antwerp a picture of 'Elijah on Mount Carmel,' which has disappeared, and for the church of the Recollets, pictures of 'St. Francis of Assisi,' 'St. Anthony of Padua,' 'St. Louis,' and one called 'The Poisoned Blow,' in reference to the attempt made on the life of St. James, Archbishop of Milan. These pictures are now in the Antwerp Gallery.

FRANCKEN, SEBASTIAEN, (or VRANCKX,) was born at Antwerp in 1578. He was a disciple of Adam van Noort, and distinguished himself in painting battles and cavalry skirmishes, also conversation pieces, hunting parties, and landscapes with figures and animals. He likewise executed several paintings in conjunction with his son, Jan Baptist, and adorned the works of Pieter Neeffs, De Momper, and other artists, with figures. Several etchings were also made by him of European costumes. He died at Antwerp in 1647. His portrait, painted by Van Dyck, has been engraved by Hondius. Among his works, which are sometimes signed with the accompanying monogram, , are the following:

Dresden.	Gallery.	Temptation of St. Anthony.
Lille.	Museum.	A Virgin. (Painted in conjunction with Jan Brueghel.)
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Passage of the Red Sea.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	A Pillaged Village.
Stockholm.	Museum.	Arrival of Mary de' Medici at Antwerp.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Interior of the Church of the Jesuits at Antwerp.
"	"	Banditti plundering a Carriage.

FRANCO, AGNOLO, or ANGIOLO, was a Neapolitan artist whose death occurred about 1455. The frescoes in the Cappella Brancaccio at San Domenico Maggiore, Naples, representing the 'Crucifixion,' and scenes taken from the lives of the saints and martyrs, are assigned to him.

FRANCO, ALFONSO, was born at Messina in 1466, and died there in 1524. He is the author of a 'Pietà,' dated 1520, in the church of San Francesco di Paola, Messina.

FRANCO, GIACOMO, an Italian designer and engraver, was a relation of Giovanni Battista Franco. He was born at Venice in 1566, and 520 instructed by Agostino Carracci. He generally signed his plates with his name, but sometimes with a monogram. The following prints are the most worthy of notice:

Part of the plates for an edition of Tasso's 'Gerusalemme liberata,' published at Genoa in 1590; after the designs of Bernardo Castelli; the rest were engraved by Agostino Carracci.

Habiti delle Donne Venetiane; published in 1626.

A collection of portraits of Great Men; dated 1596.

St. Jerome; J. Franco Roma, sc.

The Crucifixion; signed Giacomo Franco, fec.

Hercules between Virtue and Pleasure; from an antique basso-relievo.

FRANCO, GIOVANNI. See FRANCKEN, JOHANNES.

FRANCO, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, called IL SEMOLEI, was born at Udine in 1510, and distinguished himself as an historical painter and an etcher. He went to Rome when he was young, devoted himself to an attentive study of the works of Michelangelo, and became one of the ablest designers of his time. He excelled especially in representing mythological and allegorical decorations of small size, but was less successful in larger works. He was engaged by several masters to assist in the execution of their designs. In 1536 he painted at the triumphal arch for the entry of Charles V. into Rome, and went afterwards to Florence with Raffaello da Montelupo for a similar purpose, and executed with Vasari several works in a palace for Ottaviano de' Medici, where there were also some of his own compositions. He executed for the Dukes Alexander and Cosmo I. several portraits of the Medici after Sebastiano del Piombo, Titian, and Pontormo. He was subsequently employed by the Duke of Urbino in the majolica manufactory at Castel Durante, and several times at Rome. The latter part of his life he spent at Venice, where he died in 1580, leaving unfinished his works in the chapel of San Francesco della Vigna. Among his paintings may be mentioned:

Florence.	Pitti Palace.	The Battle of Montemurlo.
Rome.	Frat. d. Misericordia.	Imprisonment of St. John the Baptist (fresco).
"	S. Maria sopra Minerva.	Scenes from the Bible (fresco).
Venice.	S. Francesco della Vigna.	The Baptism of Christ.
"	S. Giobbo.	Madonna with Saints.
"	Tomb of Christ.	Mercury, with Abundance and Fugger.
"	Fugger.	Fame.

There are by him 108 etchings, which are very different in value and in manner of execution. It is said that only those are by him which are etched in a broad style and finished off with a light and spirited point. He handled the graver most mechanically. It is not known with certainty from whom he learned this branch of art, but it has been supposed that he was instructed by Marc Antonio; and this conjecture is strengthened by a near resemblance between his style and that of Giulio Bonasone, who was unquestionably a disciple of Marc Antonio. He generally marked his plates B. F. V. F., (Battista Franco Venetus fecit). The following are his principal etchings:

Moses striking the Rock.
Abraham meeting Melchizedek.
Abraham sacrificing Isaac.
The Israelites gathering Manna in the Desert.
The Captive Kings brought before Solomon.
The Adoration of the Shepherds, with Angels in the Clouds.
The Virgin and Infant, with St. John.
St. John the Baptist.
St. Jerome holding a skull.

Christ disputing with the Doctors.
 The Entombment of Christ.
 Simon the Magician before the Apostles.
 The Cyclops at their Forge.
 Hercules and Deianira.
 The Flagellation; after Titian.
 The Raising of Lazarus; after Raphael.
 The Donation made to the Church by the Emperor Constantine; after the same.
 The Last Judgment; after M. Rotta.

FRANÇOIS, CHARLES REMY JULES, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1809. He was a scholar of Henriquel-Dupont, and died in 1861. Some of his plates are:

Hebe; after Ary Scheffer.
 Napoleon at Fontainebleau; after Delaroche. 1830.
 Pilgrims in the Square of St. Peter's at Rome; after the same. 1847.
 The Happy Mother; after the same. 1853.
 Le galant Militaire; after Terborch.

FRANÇOIS, JEAN CHARLES, a French engraver, was born at Nancy in 1717. He is said to have been the first who engraved in Paris in the style representing drawings made in crayons, and for this he received a pension of 600 francs from the king, and was entitled 'Graveur des dessins du Cabinet du Roi.' He also executed some portraits, the most important of which are those for the quarto edition of Saverien's 'Histoire des Philosophes modernes,' 1761-69. He died in Paris in 1769. Among other plates by him are the following:

A Body Guard; after Vanloo.
 The Virgin; after Vien.
 Benedetto Spinoso; after Deshayes.
 Louis XV., King of France.
 Marie Leszczyńska, Queen of France.
 Pierre Bayle; after Carle Vanloo.
 Desiderius Erasmus; after Holbein.
 Thomas Hobbes; after Pierre.
 John Locke; after Vien.
 Nicolas Malebranche; after Bachelier.
 The Dancers; after F. Boucher.
 A March of Cavalry; after Parrocel.

FRANÇOIS, LUCAS, (or FRANCHOYS,) the elder, a painter and engraver, was born at Mechlin in 1547. It is not mentioned by whom he was instructed in art, but he painted historical subjects with considerable skill, and was also much employed as a portrait painter. He passed the early part of his life at the courts of France and Spain, but after an absence of six years he returned to Flanders, where he painted several altar-pieces for the churches, which are deservedly admired. He died at Mechlin in 1643. Among the productions of Lucas François are:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	Education of the Virgin.
"	"	Apparition of the Virgin to St. Simon Stock.
Mechlin.	St. Catharine.	Martyrdom of St. Lawrence.
"	Museum.	Portrait of Philippus Snoy. 1619.
"	St. John.	St. Agatha.
Tournai.	Abbey of St. Martin.	St. Placidus and St. Maurice.

Among his engravings may be mentioned:

The Adoration of the Magi; after Van Dyck.
 The portrait of an old Man; after the same.

His two sons, Pieter and Lucas, were also successful painters.

FRANÇOIS, LUCAS, the younger, a son of Lucas François the elder, born at Mechlin in 1616, was a pupil of his father, whom he assisted in his works. He afterwards entered the studio of Rubens, where he imitated the style of Bockhorst. Following his father and brother, he went to France, but after some years he returned to his native city, in the churches and Museum of which may be found several of his works. He died at Mechlin in 1681.

FRANÇOIS, PIERRE JOSEPH CÉLESTIN, a Flemish historical, genre, and miniature painter, as well as an etcher, was born at Namur in 1759. He was a pupil of Lens, and travelled in France, Italy, and Germany, but finally established himself at Brussels, where he became a professor in the Academy. His pupils were very numerous, including Navez, Decaisne, Madou, and others. He died in 1851. Amongst his works are:

Marius sitting on the Ruins of Carthage. (Brussels Gallery.)
 A Physician consulted by two old Women. (Haarlem Museum.)
 The Assumption. (Ghent Academy.)

FRANÇOIS, PIETER, the son of Lucas François the elder, was born at Mechlin in 1606. For some time he studied under his father, and followed his style in his larger historical works; but he afterwards entered the school of Gerard Seghers, whose academy was then in great repute, and adopted a mode of painting history and portraits of a size smaller than life. The Archduke Leopold invited him to his court, where he was favoured with the esteem and patronage of that prince. He was also solicited to visit Paris, where he met with the most flattering encouragement, and rendered himself extremely acceptable to the Parisians by his accomplishments as a man of the world, and his knowledge of music. After passing four years in France he returned to Flanders, where he continued to exercise his talents with great success. He died at Mechlin in 1654. Pieter François was ingenious in his compositions, firm and correct in his drawing, and clear and seductive in his colouring. The Museum at Lille possesses a portrait by him of Gisbert Mutzarts, Abbot of Tongerlo, dated 1645, and in the Dresden Gallery is a picture of a 'Man in Armour.' There exists also an etching by him, which is very rare and of great spirit; it represents 'Christ and St. John as children, seated under a tree and kissing each other.'

FRANÇOIS, SIMON, a French painter, was born at Tours in 1606. Without the help of a master, he had made some progress in the art, when he went to Italy, where he studied some years. At Bologna he became acquainted with Guido Reni, who made him a present of his portrait, painted by himself. On his return to France he settled in Paris, where he painted the portrait of Louis XIV. as Dauphin, and many other distinguished personages, so much to the satisfaction of the court, that he looked forward with confidence to the acquisition of fortune and fame. In these flattering expectations he was, however, disappointed, for he fell into disgrace, and died in obscurity in Paris in 1671. He painted for several churches, and is said to have etched a 'Magdalen in a Cavern,' and a 'St. Sebastian,' two plates of a good design and a noble expression.

FRANCQUART, JACQUES, a Flemish painter, was born at Brussels in 1577. He received a liberal education from his parents, who were of good position, and having shown an early inclination for art, he was sent to Italy to study painting and architecture, and remained there some years. On his return to Flanders he was appointed principal painter and architect to Albert and Isabella, then governors of the Low Countries. He was greatly esteemed by those illustrious personages, who employed him in several public works, both in painting and architecture. The church of the Jesuits, at Brussels, was built from his designs, and ornamented with some of his pictures. He died at Brussels in 1651.

FRANCUCCI, INNOCENZO, called INNOCENZO DA IMOLA, was born in 1494 at Imola, but principally resided at Bologna. In 1508 he entered the school of Francesco Francia, but, according to Malvasia, he afterwards passed some years at Florence, under Mariotto Albertinelli. His style partakes of that of Fra Bartolommeo and Andrea del Sarto, whose works he appears to have studied attentively. His pictures are numerous in the churches at Bologna; and in some of them he approaches so near to the beauty and simplicity of Raphael, that they appear to have been painted from his designs. Some of his altar-pieces have small pictures under them, which are extremely beautiful. In the church of San Giacomo, under his large painting of the 'Marriage of St. Catharine,' there is an exquisite little picture of the 'Nativity'; and in San Matteo is an altar-piece of 'The Virgin and Infant, with several Saints,' and below five small pictures, representing 'Christ appearing to the Magdalen in the Garden,' 'The Presentation in the Temple,' 'St. Peter Martyr,' 'The Nativity,' and 'Christ disputing with the Doctors.' That he was well skilled in architecture Francucci has shown in his immense fresco in the cathedral at Faenza, and in the Osservanti at Pesaro, in which his landscape and perspective are compared by Lanzi to those of Leonardo da Vinci. He died in 1550, according to Vasari, of a pestilential fever. Of his paintings, in addition to the above, may be mentioned:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child with Saints.
Bologna.	Servi.	Annunciation.
"	"	Marriage of the Virgin.
"	Pinacoteca.	Madonna glorified, with Saints (painted for San Michele in Bosco). 1517.

FRANGIPANE, NICCOLÒ, is believed by some to have been a native of Padua, by others of Udine. He flourished from the year 1565 till 1597, and executed a number of church pictures, but was more successful in mythological scenes, particularly the legends of Bacchus. At Padua, in the church of San Bartolommeo, is a fine picture by him of 'St. Francis,' painted in 1588; and at Pesaro, an altar-piece in San Stefano. But his most admired work is an 'Assumption,' in the church of the Conventuali, at Rimini.

FRANK, MICHAEL SIGISMUND, born at Nuremberg in 1769, was instructed there in the art of painting on porcelain by Trost. He afterwards painted on glass, in which he was very successful, and helped to raise the almost forgotten art from its long decline, by discovering in 1804 the method which was formerly in use. He executed for the chapel of the Castle of Stauffenberg in Franconia several devices of coats of arms, and in 1808 those for the court of Bavaria, for which he was highly praised. King Maximilian I. gave him a building in which to paint on glass. Among the works of that period executed on a large scale are a 'Circumcision' after Goltzius, and a 'Nativity of Christ' after Bolswert. From 1814 to 1818 he was employed by the Prince of Wallerstein; he afterwards returned to Munich, where he was made royal glass-painter for his 'Treatise on Glass-Painting.' In 1827 he was appointed director of the Institute founded by King Louis, and executed the large windows for the cathedral at Ratisbon, which constituted his chief production. He died at Munich in 1847.

FRANK, PAULINE. See STEINHÄUSER.

FRANKEN, THEODOR, a genre painter, was born at Geilenkirchen, near Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1811. He studied under Schadow at Düsseldorf, and produced spirited scenes of popular and home life. He died at Düsseldorf in 1876.

FRANKENBERGER, JOHANN, an Austrian portrait painter, was born at Hadamar in Nassau in 1807, and died at Vienna in 1874.

FRANKENDORFFER, CONRAD, a native of Nuremberg, flourished about 1498, and was an excellent miniature painter.

FRANKFORT, HIERONYMUS VON. See GREFF.

FRANQUE, JEAN PIERRE, a French painter, was born at Le Buis in 1774. He studied under David, and excelled in historical subjects and portraiture, imitating the style of his master. He married Lucile Messagerot, also an artist, who died in 1802, at the age of twenty-two years. Franque died in 1860, leaving among others the following works:

Versailles.	Gallery.	The Passage of the Rhine; after Le Brun. 1835.
"	"	The Siege of Lille; after Van der Meulen and Le Brun. 1836.
"	"	The Battle of Lens. 1841.

FRANQUE, JOSEPH, the twin brother of Jean Pierre Franque, was born at Le Buis in 1774, and died in 1812. He also was a painter, and there is by him at Versailles a picture of the Empress Maria Louisa and the King of Rome.

FRANQUELIN, JEAN AUGUSTIN, born in Paris in 1798, was instructed by Regnault, and became known through his works, representing scenes in public life, conversation-pieces, &c., which have often been copied. He died in Paris in 1839. The painting of 'The Occupation of Brissac,' by this artist, is at Versailles.

FRANQUINET, WILLEM HENDRIK, born at Maestricht in 1785, was instructed by Herreyns at Antwerp. He afterwards visited Germany, and was a drawing-master at his native town from 1804 to 1815. In 1816 he settled in Paris, and in 1821 painted the 'Bacchanal,' and in 1822-34 published a 'Galerie des Peintres,' for which J. Chabert wrote the text. He died at New York in 1854.

FRANS, NICOLAES, was born at Mechlin in 1539. It is not said under whom he studied; it is only known that at an early age he entered the order of the Franciscans, in which he continued to exercise his art, and became a fair historical painter. In the collegiate church of Our Lady at Mechlin is an altar-piece by this master, representing the 'Flight into Egypt'; and in the church of Hanswyck, near Mechlin, are two pictures by him of the 'Visitation' and the 'Annunciation.' His drawing is correct, and he was an excellent colourist.

FRANSSIÈRES, J. DE, was a French engraver of little celebrity. He engraved part of the plates for a set of Turkish costumes, published in Paris in 1714, by M. de Ferriol.

FRANZ, C., who studied under Schwind, practised first as an historical painter, but afterwards turned his attention towards genre subjects. He died at Munich in 1876.

FRASER, ALEXANDER, a Scottish painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1786, and commenced his artistic career by studying at the Trustees' Academy in that city, where he had David Wilkie and Watson Gordon for fellow-students. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1810, settling in London three years later. Soon after this Wilkie employed him to fill in the minor details and still-life of his pictures, a practice which he continued for a good many years. Among the works exhibited by him at the Royal Academy may be mentioned 'The Village Sign-Painter,' 'The Blackbird and his Tutor,' and 'Tapping the Ale-barrel.' He does not appear to have exhibited after 1859, and during the latter years of his life seems to have been quite an invalid. His death occurred at Wood Green, near London, in 1865. A great part of his earlier works consisted of coast scenes, and at a later date he painted pictures in illustration of the 'Waverley Novels,' some of which have been engraved. He became an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1842. In the National Gallery is the 'Interior of a Highland Cottage' by him, and in the National Gallery of Scotland is a view 'At Barncleuth.'

FRASER, CHARLES, an artist born at Charleston in 1782, studied law, but afterwards devoted himself to art. In 1825 he painted the portrait of Lafayette. His talent was very diversified, and in 1857, at an exhibition of his works at Charleston, there were shown 313 miniatures and 139 landscapes and other pieces by him. He died at Charleston in 1860.

FRASSI, PIETRO, born at Cremona in 1706, was a pupil of Angiolo Massarotti. He went to Florence, but afterwards to Rome, where he died in 1778. His best work was a picture of 'The Miracle of St. Vincent Ferrer,' painted for the Dominicans in Cremona, which caused him to be made a member of the Academy of St. Luke.

FRATACCI, ANTONIO, born at Parma in the beginning of the 18th century, received his first lessons in art from Ilario Spolverini. He afterwards entered, at Bologna, the school of Carlo Cignani, whose style he imitated. There is a picture in the church of San Giorgio at Bologna of 'Christ healing St. Pellegrini Laziosi,' and at Sant' Eustorgio, at Milan, a 'St. John' and an 'Adoration of the Magi.'

FRATELLINI, GIOVANNA, was born at Florence in 1666. The early disposition she showed for art recommended her to the notice of the Grand-Duchess Victoria, who took her under her protection, and had her instructed by the best masters in drawing and music. She was afterwards taught miniature painting by Ippolito Galantini, and finished her studies under Antonio Domenico Gabbiani. She painted historical subjects and portraits in oil, pastel, enamel, miniature, and crayons, but chiefly excelled in the last, in which she is no way inferior to the celebrated Rosalba. Her reputation spread throughout Italy, and she painted the portraits of Cosmo III. and his wife, her patroness, the principal nobility of the court, and the most illustrious personages of the country. One of her best works is in the Ducal Gallery at Florence; it represents her painting the portrait of her son. This distinguished lady died at Florence in 1731.

FRATELLINI, LORENZO MARIA, the son of Giovanna Fratellini, by whom he was instructed in the elementary principles of design, was born at Florence in 1690. He afterwards studied under Antonio Domenico Gabbiani, who had been the instructor of his mother. Under that master he acquired a ready and correct manner of designing, and became a promising painter, both of history and of portraits, but he died in the prime of life, in 1729.

FRATREL, JOSEPH, born at Epinal in 1730, was a scholar of Baudouin in Paris, and distinguished himself as a painter and etcher. He was court painter of King Stanislaus and the Elector-Palatine Charles Theodore: in the Darmstadt Museum is a portrait of the Electress. He died at Mannheim in 1783. The following are his best-known works:

Joseph's Dream; after L. Krahe.

The Miller's Son.

St. Nicholas.

FRATTA, DOMENICO MARIA, born at Bologna in 1696, studied under Giovanni Viviani, Carlo Rambaldi, and Donato Creti. He abandoned the art of painting, and devoted himself entirely to drawing with the pen, in which he acquired such perfection as to give to his productions a European fame. He died in 1763.

FREDEAU, AMBROISE, called FRÈRE FREDEAU, who flourished about the middle of the 17th century, was a monk of the Augustinian order. He imitated Vouet in his paintings.

FREDERICH, EDUARD, born at Hanover in 1813, attended the Academy at Düsseldorf from 1836 to 1843, and studied in particular landscape and genre painting, which he, however, changed afterwards for scenes of encampments and manoeuvres. He was court painter, and died at Hanover in 1864.

FREDI, BARTOLO DI. See BARTOLO.

FREEBAIRN, ALFRED ROBERT, an engraver, is chiefly known by his engraving of Flaxman's 'Shield of Achilles.' He died in 1846, in his 53rd year.

FREEBAIRN, ROBERT, a landscape painter, was born in 1765. He was for a short time with Richard Wilson, who died before Freebairn's education was completed, and afterwards went to Italy, where he remained about ten years, but never rose above mediocrity. His pictures are simply pleasing, never striking. On his return to England, Freebairn met with several patrons, and as he was slow in performance, it is probable they were the chief purchasers of his works. He died in 1808.

There are about forty prints of Italian and English scenery published by him.

FREEMAN, JOHN, an historical painter, flourished in the latter half of the 17th century. He was also scene painter to Covent Garden Theatre. There are five works attributed to him in the Louvre.

FREEMAN, SAMUEL, an engraver, was born in 1773, and died in 1857. Amongst his plates are :

A Holy Family; after Correggio.

A Madonna; after Raphael.

The Infant Christ and St. John; after the same.

St. Ambrose refusing admission to the Church to Theodosius; after Van Dyck.

FREESE, JOHANN OSKAR HERMANN, a painter of animals and hunting scenes, was born in Pomerania in 1813. He was destined by his father to be a farmer, in spite of his early inclination to art, but in his 34th year he devoted himself, after many heavy misfortunes, to painting as his vocation. He visited for a short time the atelier of Brücke, then that of Steffek in Berlin. In 1857 his first work, 'Stags Fighting,' appeared. His subjects of study were field and wood, and principally hunting, which he loved passionately. He died at Hessenfelde, near Fürstenwald, in 1871, of brain fever, which he contracted whilst out shooting in trying to cross a river when in a heated state. He is very happy in his bolder designs, but less so in his idyllic representations. Among his works are especially to be mentioned, 'Deer Fleeing,' 'Stags attacked by Wolves,' and a 'Boar Hunt,' all in the Berlin National Gallery.

FREESE, N., a miniature painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1794 to 1814.

FREESSEN, JOHANN GEORG, (or FREEZEN,) a portrait painter, was born at Palts, near Heidelberg, in 1701. He first studied under Jan van Niekelen, and afterwards under Philip van Dyk, of whom he became one of the best scholars, and with whom he stayed seven years at the Hague. He was patronized by the Duke of Hesse, and was appointed historical and portrait painter to the court of Cassel. He possessed a great knowledge of paintings, which he acquired in Germany, Italy, France, and in the school of Philip van Dyk—an acquisition which was of the greatest use in the establishment of the Cassel Gallery. He died at Cassel in 1775.

FREGEVIZE, FRIEDRICH, a Swiss landscape painter, was born in Geneva in 1770, and died there in 1849. He lived for a long time in Berlin, where he was elected in 1820 a member of the Academy; he returned to Geneva in 1829, and went to Dessau in 1839. The Berlin National Gallery contains views painted by him of 'The Lake of Geneva,' and 'The Valley of the Rhone, near Geneva.'

FREIDHOFF, JOHANN JOSEPH, a German mezzotint engraver, born at Heggen, in Westphalia, in 1768, studied under J. G. Huck. He visited Holland and France for his improvement, and died at Berlin in 1818. There are by him :

Night; after Correggio. 1800.

The Death of Germanicus; after Poussin. 1798.

Joseph and Potiphar's Wife; after Cignani. 1796.

Alexander von Humboldt; after Weitsch.

A Waterfall; after Ruissdael. 1797.

FRÉMINET, MARTIN, a French historical painter, born in Paris in 1567, received his first instruction from his father, a tapestry designer. He soon made some progress in his career in Paris, and executed several commissions, including a picture of 'St. Sebastian' for the church of St. Joseph. But it was to Italy that his thoughts turned, and about 1592 he set out thither. At this time the controversies raised by the Naturalists were at their height, and into them Fréminet entered with ardour. His time was chiefly passed at Rome, Parma, and Venice, and he directed his most serious attention to the works of Parmigiano and Michelangelo, the study of the latter having a great influence on him. After an absence of about sixteen years he returned to his native country by way of Lombardy and Savoy, and in the latter he painted some important works for the ducal palace. His fame had preceded him, for on the death of Toussaint Du-Breuil in 1602 he was appointed by Henry IV. his principal painter, obtaining at the same time by purchase a sinecure post about the court. In 1608 he commenced for the king the decoration of the chapel at Fontainebleau, which was executed in oil on plaster. In the five compartments of the ceiling he depicted 'Noah entering the Ark,' the 'Fall of the Angels,' 'Our Lord in Glory,' the 'Angel Gabriel,' and the 'Creation.' Behind the altar he painted the 'Annunciation,' and he also executed other frescoes representing kings, prophets, &c., and scenes from the life of Christ. This masterpiece was not finished until the succeeding reign, and on its completion, in 1615, he received the cross of the Order of St. Michael. Fréminet died in Paris in 1619, and was buried, in accordance with his desire, in the Abbey of Barbeaux, near Fontainebleau, for which he had painted several pictures, which were destroyed when that Abbey was burnt in 1793. He left a son Louis, who followed in his father's footsteps as a painter. The poet Regnier was his friend, and dedicated to him his tenth Satire. Fréminet had a good knowledge of architectural perspective and of anatomy, though his aspirations after the grandeur of Michelangelo frequently led him into exaggerations, and have caused him to be much decried. To do him justice, however, it must be owned that he marks a great advance in the history of the French school. The works of his predecessor, Cousin, are no doubt the earliest which show the impress of Italian art, but it was Fréminet who first fully felt and evidenced the influence of the great Italian masters. He is seen at his best in those works in which the spirit of Parmigiano is most apparent. His style of working was singular: he painted a picture in separate portions, without sketching or designing the rest of the composition. The following are some of his existing works :

Liverpool. Institution.		The Birth of Venus. (A sepia drawing.)
Orleans.	Museum.	St. Matthew.
"	"	St. Mark.
"	"	St. Luke.
"	"	St. John.
"	"	St. Augustine.
"	"	St. Ambrose.
"	"	St. Gregory.
"	"	St. Jerome.
Paris.	Louvre.	Mercury ordering Æneas to abandon Dido.
Tours.	Museum.	The Last Judgment (doubtful).

A 'Virgin and Child' is the only etching by Fréminet which is known. O.J.D.

FRENCH, HENRY, an Irish historical painter, was born about the end of the 17th century. He studied at Rome, and gained a medal in the Academy of St. Luke. He came to England, but did not meet with success. His death took place in 1726.

FRENZEL, JOHANN GOTTLIEB ABRAHAM, born at Dresden in 1782, was instructed by Darnstedt, and excelled in engraving landscapes. He was director of the Royal Collection of engravings at Dresden, and wrote several works on his art. He died at Dresden in 1855. Among his best plates are:

Ruins; after Ruissdael.

Evening; after the same.

A Landscape with Cattle in the Water; after Poelenborch.

FRESNES, DIRK, or THEODORUS, a Dutch painter, was born at Enkhuizen in 1643. He was of an ancient and opulent family, who gave him an education suited to his birth; and, among other accomplishments, he was taught drawing, for which he showed so strong a predilection, that his parents acceded to his desire of visiting Italy, and he passed several years at Rome, studying after the antique, and the best productions of modern art. He returned to Holland with a large collection of drawings which he had made in Italy, and distinguished himself by several historical works; among which were the ceiling of a public hall at Amsterdam, and some pictures in one of the palaces of the Prince of Orange. In his studies in Italy he appears to have been more attentive to purity and correctness of design than to the blandishments of colouring, in which he is less successful. He is said to have been invited to England by Sir Peter Lely, who promised to introduce him to the king, but finding on his arrival that the situation he expected was filled by Antonio Verrio, he returned to Holland. He is not, however, mentioned in Walpole's 'Anecdotes.' He had just finished some considerable works in the town-hall at Enkhuizen when he died, in 1693.

FREUDENBERGER, SIGMUND, born at Berne in 1745, was a painter and engraver, who was instructed in the rudiments of art by Em. Handmann. He afterwards went to Paris, and improved himself under Wille, Boucher, Greuze, and Röslin. His scenes of Swiss life in the Bernese Oberland were first engraved and afterwards painted. In the town-library at Berne there is a portrait of Haller by this artist. He died in 1801.

FREUDWEILER, HEINRICH, a Swiss portrait and genre painter, was born at Zürich in 1755, and was first instructed by H. Wüst; he afterwards studied at the Academies at Düsseldorf and Mannheim, and visited Dresden and Berlin, where he became acquainted with Graf and Chodowiecky. In 1785 he returned to Zürich, and died in 1795. He painted several historical scenes relating to his country.

FREY, JAKOB, a grandson of Johann Jakob Frey, is known by a plate of Leonardo da Vinci's 'Last Supper,' which, however, is taken from the old copy by Marco d'Oggione.

FREY, JOHANN JAKOB, a Swiss engraver, was born at Lucerne, in 1681. After learning the principles of design he went, when he was twenty-two years of age, to Rome, where he received some instruction from Arnold van Westerhout, and had afterwards the advantage of studying in the school of Carlo Maratti, at the same time with Robert van Auden-Aerd. His progress was rapid, and he was soon regarded as one of the ablest artists at Rome. His drawing is correct and tasteful, and he was a perfect master of harmony and effect. He etched his plates with spirit, and worked over the etching with a firm and masterly hand. Few artists have approached nearer to the style of the painters from whom they engraved than Frey. He died at Rome in 1770. His prints, which exceed the number of one hundred, are generally of a very large size. The following are the principal:

PORTRAITS.

Carlo Maratti; after a picture by himself.

Pope Innocent XIII.; after A. Masucci.

Pope Benedict XIII.; after the same.

Pope Gregory XIII.; after the marble by Camillo Rusconi.

Mary Clementina Sobieska, wife of the Old Pretender.

Augustus shutting the Temple of Janus; after the same. 1738.

St. Andrew kneeling before the Cross; after the same.

St. Bernard; after the same.

FREY, JOHANN MICHAEL, who was born at Bibenach in 1750, painted at Augsburg, and excelled in landscapes, and also as an engraver. His plates are executed in the manner of Bega; the best is a large landscape, after Ruissdael. He died at Augsburg in 1813.

FREY, JOHANNES, a Swiss landscape painter, a native of Basle, studied principally in Italy, and his views of that country are much valued. From Egypt, whither he accompanied Professor Lepsius, he brought many excellent sketches of the Pyramids, Labyrinths, &c. It is to be regretted that he was obliged to make but a short stay on account of his health. His painting of 'Chamsyn in the Desert,' in the possession of the Emperor of Germany, was produced in 1845, and is greatly admired. He died at Frascati, near Rome, in 1865. The Modern Gallery at Munich has his 'Two Memnons near Thebes.'

FREY, JOHANNES PIETER DE. See DE FREY.

FREY, MARTIN, born at Wurzach in 1769, was a scholar of Johann Gottlieb von Müller at Stuttgart, and subsequently resided at Vienna, where he was still living in 1821. Among his best etchings are:

The Temptation of St. Jerome; after Domenichino.
 The Virgin with Jesus and John; after the painting in the Esterhazy collection at Pesth, attributed to Raphael.
 The Infant Christ on a bed, and holding the Cross; after Albani.
 St. Justina; after Pordenone.
 An Old Man; after G. Maes.

FREY, SAMUEL, a Swiss painter of landscapes, the father of Johannes Frey, was born at Sissach in 1785. He devoted himself first to engraving under Von Mechel, but at Antwerp he studied oil-painting. In 1810 he returned to Basle, where he died in 1836.

FREY, ECHKE, JOHANN, a monk of the convent of Königsbrück, in Alsace, who flourished about the year 1428, mentions himself at the end of a Bible containing some good miniatures, as its author. Whether he executed the miniatures is considered by Dr. Waagen to be an open question. The Bible is in the Royal Library at Munich.

FREYBERG, ELEKTRINE, born at Strassburg in 1797, was the daughter and pupil of Johann Stuntz, a painter of landscapes, under whose tuition she gave proof of great ability. She visited France and Italy, and stayed at Rome some time. Her paintings of historical scenes are distinguished for a tender touch, and she was not less successful in portraiture and landscape painting. One of her best works is a 'Holy Family,' 'The Birth of St. John,' and two landscapes, in the album of King Louis of Bavaria, are by this artist; in the Leuchtenberg Gallery 'The Virgin and Child,' and 'The Three Marias at the Tomb'; and in the Munich Gallery a 'Holy Family,' 'The Naming of St. John the Baptist,' and 'A Boy playing the flute.' She died at Munich in 1847.

FREZZA, GIOVANNI GIROLAMO, an Italian engraver, was born at Canemorto, near Tivoli, in 1659, and died at Rome in 1730. He was instructed in engraving at Rome by Arnold van Westerhout. His plates are etched with care, and very neatly finished with the graver, but without much force or effect. The following, among others, are by him:

The Gallery of the Verospi Palace; seventeen plates after the frescoes by F. Albani.

A set of ten plates, including the title, after the nine pictures by Niccolò Berrettoni, in the church of Santa Maria in Monte Santo, at Rome.

The Virgin suckling the Infant; after Lodovico Carracci.

The Holy Family; after Carlo Maratti.

The Assumption of the Virgin; after the same.

The Twelve Months; after the same.

The Judgment of Paris; after the same.

The Riposo, called the Zingarella; after Correggio.

The Descent of the Holy Ghost; after Guido.

Polyphemus on a Rock, and Galatea and her Nymphs on the Sea; after Sisto Badalocchio.

Polyphemus hurling a Rock at Acis and Galatea; after the same.

Venus; after an antique painting; for the Crozat Collection.

Pallas; after an antique painting; for the Crozat Collection.

FREZZA, ORAZIO, a native of Naples, lived in the 17th century, and was instructed by G. B. Benaschi. He afterwards studied the works of Lanfranco and Domenichino, whom he imitated with some success.

FRICK, J. F., born in 1774, was an engraver and a professor at the Academy of Berlin, who gained much repute for his aquatints. His best work is the series of illustrations of 'The Castle of Marienburg in Prussia,' in nineteen plates, 1799. He died in 1850.

FRIDERICH, JACOB ANDREAS, a German engraver, was born in 1683. He engraved some plates of Hussars and other horsemen, after Rugendas. He died in 1751.

FRIED, HEINRICH JAKOB, born at Queichheim, near Landau, in 1802, studied at Stuttgart and Augsburg, and from 1822 under Langer and Cornelius at the Academy of Munich. In 1834 he went to Rome, and afterwards to Naples, and from thence returned to his native country in 1837. Being patronized by Prince Karl von Wrede, he settled at Munich in 1842, and became conservator of the Artistic Society in 1845. He died at Munich in 1870. Fried was a great lover of legends, often taking these and similar sources for the subjects of his best pictures. He also executed a great number of landscapes, as well as genre and historical pieces and portraits, the best of which are:

A Hunting Party before the Castle of Trifels.

The Blue Grotto at Capri. (Munich Gallery.)

A View of Hohenschwangau.

The Wounded Knight.

Italian Flute-Players.

The Cloister of San Scolastica.

Views of the Palaces of Italy.

FRIEDERICI, JULIUS, a painter of Trèves, who was educated at the Düsseldorf Academy, has left two paintings of merit, 'Adam and Eve,' and a 'Flight into Egypt.' He died quite young in 1835.

FRIEDLÄNDER, JULIUS, a genre painter, was born at Copenhagen in 1810, and entered the Academy there in 1824, afterwards studying under Lund. In 1843-44 he visited Paris and Italy, whence he derived additional subjects for his art. Still later he took to depicting military and naval life. He died in 1861. Among his pictures are:

Polish Exiles.

A Doctor by a Sick Bed.

Rope-Dancers about to perform. (Copenhagen Gallery.)

The Spanish Staircase at Rome. (Copenhagen Gallery.)

Boys at Play at Capri.

Scene in a Children's Bedroom.

FRIEDRICH, CAROLINE FRIEDRIKE, a flower painter, was born at Friedrichsstadt in 1740, and died at Dresden in 1812. She was court painter and a member of the Dresden Academy, and produced a number of admired bouquets in oil and water-colours.

FRIEDRICH, CASPAR DAVID, born at Greifswald in 1774, studied first at the Academy at Copenhagen under Quisdorf, and went to Dresden in 1795, where he painted landscapes. Subsequently he visited Rügen, the Giant and the Harz Mountains, and Italy. He also etched several plates of landscapes and trees. In 1817 he became professor at the Academy of Dresden, and in 1840 a member of that at Berlin. He died at Dresden in 1842. His best landscapes are:

Berlin. Castle. An Abbey in an Oak Forest, on a Winter Evening.

" " A Traveller on the Seashore.

" Nat. Gall. Evening View in the Harz Forest.

" " The Moon rising over the Sea.

Dresden. Gallery. Two Men looking at the Moon.

" " A Giant's Grave.

" " Rest after Haymaking.

FRIEDRICH, FRANZ, (or FRIEDERICH,) a designer, engraver, and carver, worked at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder about the year 1550. He was employed by the printer Eichhorn, and was considered the first engraver of his district at that time. His woodcuts are signed with two monograms, with the addition of 'Peter Hille'; this is supposed to mean that the design only is by him. He died after 1583. Some of his copper-plates are marked with a different monogram, and are very rare. The following are perhaps the best:

Portrait of the Elector Joachim II.
Portrait of Ludolph Schrader. 1581.
Portrait of the Archbishop Heinrich Julius of Brunswick.
Portrait of Heinrich Paxmann. 1580.

FRIES, BERNHARD, a German landscape painter, was born at Heidelberg in 1820. He studied successively at Carlsruhe, Düsseldorf, and Munich, and for many years resided in Italy, where he produced his most important work—a series of forty Italian landscapes. He died at Munich in 1879.

FRIES, ERNST, a landscape painter, and brother of Bernhard Fries, was born at Heidelberg in 1801, and died at Carlsruhe in 1833. He was taught first by the elder Rottmann, and then by K. Kuntz at Carlsruhe. The English painter Wallis, who was then residing in Heidelberg, made a great impression upon him. Afterwards he went to Darmstadt, where he studied architecture and perspective under Moller. In 1821 he removed to Munich, where he visited the Academy. From 1823 to 1827 he lived in Italy, and returned to Munich and Carlsruhe in 1831, but died in the prime of his activity in 1833. Among his paintings are:

A View of Tivoli.
Sorrento and the House of Tasso.
Pozzuoli and the Gulf of Baiae.
Capo Misene.
The Waterfall of Liris at Isola di Sora. 1833. (Munich Gallery.)
The Castle of Massa.
A View of Heidelberg.
Valmontone. (Berlin National Gallery.)

He lithographed six plates, representing views of Heidelberg Castle, 1820-21, and the 'Death of Siegfried,' from the Nibelungen Lied, after C. Ganglof. With Thürmer he executed an etching of the Roman Forum.

FRIES, HANS, a Swiss painter, was born at Freiburg in the middle of the 15th century. It is probable that he studied in Germany. He was a member of the Guild at Basle in 1487-88, and at Freiburg in 1501. He died subsequently to 1518. The following paintings are by him:

Basle.	Museum.	Scenes from the Life of the Virgin (Painted for the Johanniter-Comthurei). 1514.
"	"	Six Scenes from the Life of the Virgin (Painted for Berne).
Freiburg.	Council.	The Last Judgment (now re-Chamber. moved). 1501-6.
"	Franciscan Convent.	The Legend of St. Anthony.
"	Arsenal.	Coats of Arms and seventeen Flags. 1506.
Vienna.	Gallery.	A young Man, with Death behind him. 1524.

FRIES, KARL FRIEDRICH, born at Winnweiler, in the Palatinate, in 1831, studied first at the Academy at Munich, and afterwards under Berdellé. He visited Vienna, and painted there under Rahl; then went to Venice, Florence, and Calabria, where he studied the old masters. He died at St. Gall, Switzerland, in 1871. His style much resembles that of the Venetian painters. The following are some of his works:

Wine, Woman, and Song; in the style of Paolo Veronese. 1862.
The Mineral Bath in the Abruzzi.

Several copies of the Ascension of the Virgin; after Titian.

St. Barbara; after Palma Vecchio.

FRIES, WILHELM, a brother of Bernhard and Ernst Fries, was a landscape painter, and the conservator of the Wessenberg Museum. He was born in 1819, and died at Constance in 1878.

FRIQUET, JACQUES CLAUDE, called FRIQUET DE VAUX-ROSE, or VAUROZE, was born in 1648. Little is known of this artist except that he was a scholar of Bourdon, and painted, after the drawings of his master, the gallery of the hotel of M. de Bretonvilliers, president of the Chambre des Comptes. He also painted, in 1667, an allegorical picture of the campaign in Flanders, and another of the conquest of Franche Comté in the following year. He was elected a member and professor of anatomy in the Academy of Paris in 1670: his reception work, 'The Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle,' is in the Louvre. He also engraved some of the works of Bourdon. He died in Paris in 1716.

FRISCH, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, an historical painter, was the son of the designer and engraver, Ferdinand Helfreich Frisch, and was born at Berlin in 1737. He was a pupil of B. Rode, but afterwards studied further at Rome. He died at Berlin in 1815, while holding the posts of court painter and director of the Academy. He painted numerous ceilings in the palaces at Berlin, Potsdam, and Sans Souci, with portraits, mythological representations, and scenes from the life of Frederick the Great.

FRISCH, JOHN DIDRIK, a Norwegian landscape painter, was born at Charlottedal, near Slagelse, in 1835, and studied in the Academy at Sorø under Harder, and afterwards in that at Copenhagen. In 1867 he went to Italy for further improvement, but died at Florence in that year. He was fond of introducing animals into his landscapes. One of his pictures is entitled 'Two old Neighbours procuring a Night's Lodging.'

FRISIUS. See DE VRIES.

FRISIUS, JAN EILLART, was very likely one of the De Vries family. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, for whom he engraved some plates of portraits; among others:

Henry IV., King of France.
Henry of Nassau, Prince of Orange.

FRISTER, KARL, an Austrian painter, was born at Vienna in 1742, and died in the same city in 1783.

FRITS, PIETER, a Dutch painter, was born probably at Delft about 1627. He spent some time in Italy, and was employed at several European courts. In 1683 he established himself at Delft. He painted incantations, spectacles, and other eccentric absurdities, in the style of Jerom Bosch; but not meeting with sufficient encouragement in this line, he abandoned it for that of a printseller, in which he amassed a large fortune. He was still living in 1702.

FRITSCH, DANIEL, a German painter, lived in the latter part of the 16th century. He copied, or imitated, the works of Lucas Cranach, as appears by a picture in the church at Tempelhof, near Berlin, mentioned by Kugler, and supposed to be by Lucas Cranach, but which, on cleaning, was discovered to be the work of Fritsch, and painted in the year 1596. Kugler observes that in power of colouring it is inferior to the later works of Cranach, but is distinguished by the excellence and individual truth of the heads.

FRITZSCH, CHRISTIAN, an engraver, was a native of Hamburg. He was chiefly employed in engraving portraits, among which are:

Pope Benedict XIV.
John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough.

FRITZSCH, CLAUDIUS DITLEY, a Danish flower painter, was born at Kiel in 1765, and died at Copenhagen in 1841. There are some specimens of his art in the Gallery of the latter city.

FROMANTIOU, HENDRIK DE. See DE FROMANTIOU.

FROMENTIN, EUGÈNE, a French painter of Algerian subjects, and an art writer, was born at La Rochelle in 1820. He studied under Cabat, and travelled in the East from 1842 to 1846. He died at St. Maurice, near his birthplace, in 1876. Amongst the books he wrote are 'Les Maîtres d'autrefois,' 'Un Été dans le Sahara,' 'Une Année dans le Sahel,' and a romance called 'Dominique.' His chief paintings are:

The Gorge of the Chiffa.
Hawking in Algeria. (Luxembourg Gallery.)
Arab Encampment (unfinished). (Luxembourg Gallery.)
The Simoom. 1859.
Arabs attacked by a Lioness. 1868.
The Halt of Muleteers. 1869.
Rendezvous of Arab Chiefs.
A Souvenir of Esneh. 1876.
The Nile. 1876.

A memoir of Fromentin by M. Louis Gonse was published in 1881, and has since been translated into English.

FROMMEL, KARL LUDWIG, born at Birkenfeld in 1789, was instructed in painting by Philipp Jakob Becker, and in engraving by Haldenwang. He afterwards went to Paris and Italy for improvement, returned to Germany in 1817, and became professor of painting and engraving at Carlsruhe. He visited England in 1824, and founded, with H. Winkles, an atelier for engravers on steel. In 1829 he was made director of the Gallery at Carlsruhe. He died at Ispringen, near Pforzheim, in 1863. Frommel's landscapes are very spirited and tasteful compositions. Among them are:

Sorrento.
The Eruption of Vesuvius.
The Blue Grotto at Capri.
Scylla in Calabria.
The Convent Garden at Sorrento.
The Churchyard at Salzburg.
The Castle of Hohenstaufen.
A View of Rome.
Ætna and Taormina.
Bellaggio on Lake Como.
The House of Tasso at Sorrento.
The Villa Serbelloni on Lake Como.

Among his engravings are:

Ariccia, near Rome.
View of the Villa d'Este at Tivoli.
A Landscape with Goats and Shepherds.
A View of Vesuvius.
A View of Mount Ætna.
La Grotta delle Sirene.

FRONTIER, JEAN CHARLES, was born in Paris in 1701. He was a pupil of Claude Guy Hallé, and took the first prize at the Academy in 1728, with a picture of 'Ezekiel abolishing Idolatry and establishing the Worship of the true God.' He was received as an academicien in 1744, with the picture 'Prometheus bound on Caucasus,' now in the Louvre. He exhibited at the Salon from 1743 to 1751, and became director of the Academy of Lyons, where he died in 1763.

528

FROSNE, JEAN, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1630, and was still living in 1676. He was principally employed in engraving portraits, of which the Abbé de Marolles collected forty-three. He also engraved part of the large ornamental plates for the collection of views, &c., by S. de Beaulieu. Among others, the following portraits are by him:

Claude Baudry, Abbé de La Croix; after Le Bon. 1657.
Louis de Lorraine, Duc de Joyeuse.
Henri d'Orléans, Duc de Longueville.
Nicolas Dauvet, Comte de Desmarez; after Stresor.
Nicolas Potier, President of the Parliament.
M. Dreux d'Aubray.

FROST, GEORGE, an English landscape painter, son of a builder, was born at Barrow, in Suffolk, in 1744. He was employed in connection with the Ipswich coach, and only pursued art as a pleasure. He was a follower of Gainsborough, and on friendly terms with Constable. He died at Ipswich in 1821. In the Glasgow Gallery is a sketch by this artist entitled 'Courtship.'

FROST, WILLIAM EDWARD, an English mythological and allegorical painter, was born at Wandsworth in 1810. He received his first instruction in art from an amateur, then at Sass's academy, and finally at the schools of the Royal Academy, which he entered in 1829, and where, in 1839, he won the gold medal with his 'Prometheus bound.' For the first fourteen years of his career he painted portraits, and then relinquished that branch of art to follow in the footsteps of Etty, to whom he had been introduced at the age of fifteen, and who had given him much advice. At the Westminster Hall competition in 1843 he obtained a prize of £100 for his 'Una surprised by Fauns.' He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1846, but did not become an Academician until 1871, when he deposited as his diploma picture 'A Nymph and Cupid.' He died in London in 1877. His chief works are:

Sabrina. 1845.
Diana surprised by Actæon. 1846.
Una and the Wood Nymphs. 1847. (The Queen.)
The Disarming of Cupid. 1850. (The Queen.)
Chastity. 1854.
Narcissus. 1857. (International Exhibition, 1862.)
The Syrens. 1860.
A Dance. 1861.
The Graces and Loves. 1863.
Hylas and the Nymphs. 1867.
Puck. 1869.
Musidora. 1871.

FROYEN, —, the name of an obscure and very indifferent engraver, is affixed to a print representing the head of our Saviour. It is executed entirely with the graver.

FRUMENTI, NICCOLÒ, who flourished about 1460, was the painter of a triptych in the Uffizi at Florence, representing the 'Raising of Lazarus,' dated 1461.

FRUTET, FRANCISCO. This name appeared first in the pages of Cean Bermudez, whence it has been copied again and again during the present century. Cean Bermudez appears to have been misled by certain documents in the archives of the convent of La Merced Calzada at Seville, and so to have ascribed to an artist who never existed the triptych of the 'Adoration of the Magi,' now in the Brussels Gallery, which was probably the last work of Frans Floris. The question has been discussed by M. Fétis in the 'Bulletin des Commissions royales d'Art et d'Archéologie' for 1880.

FRUTTI, IL GOBBO DA'. See BONZI.

FRUYTIERS, PHILIPPUS, a Flemish painter and etcher, was born at Antwerp about the year 1610. He first painted historical subjects in oil, and had given proof of considerable ability in an altar-piece representing the 'Virgin and Infant seated on a Globe, with a Choir of Angels,' painted for the cathedral, when he quitted oil-painting for distemper and miniature, and became the most celebrated artist of his time in those branches. His colouring is excellent, and his compositions evince a ready invention. His works were greatly esteemed by Rubens, and it is no slender proof of his merit that he was employed to paint the portraits of that great master and his family, which he executed entirely to his satisfaction. There is at Windsor Castle a miniature by him of the wife and family of Rubens. He died at Antwerp in 1665. Fruytiers etched some plates in a very masterly style; they are principally portraits. The most important are:

Jacob Edelheer, the Ambassador.
M. Ambrosius van Capelle, Bishop of Antwerp.
Gottfroy Wendelinus. 1648.
Hedwiga Eleonora, Queen of Sweden.
Don Laur. Ramires de Prado, Eques. 1649.
Innocens a Calatayerone, head of the Capuchins in Belgium.
Benj. Sardagna. 1650.
St. Joachim and St. Anna presenting the Child Mary to the Trinity.

FRY, WILLIAM THOMAS, who was born in 1789, and died in 1843, practised engraving with some success.

FRYE, THOMAS, a portrait painter and engraver in mezzotint, was born in the vicinity of Dublin in 1710, but afterwards resided in London, and in 1749 established a porcelain manufactory at Bow, which did not prove a successful venture. He painted portraits with success, both in oil and in miniature. His portrait of Jeremy Bentham at the age of thirteen is in the National Portrait Gallery. He also scraped in mezzotint several plates of portraits, most of which are as large as life. He died in 1762. Among his engravings are the following heads:

George III.
Queen Charlotte.
His own Portrait.
Portrait of his Wife.
Miss Pond.

FUCHS, ADAM, an engraver on copper and wood, flourished in Germany in 1550-80. Among his plates, which are marked with his name or initials, or with one or other of the accompanying monograms, are:

The Elector Frederick the Wise.
Martin Luther kneeling before a Crucifix. 1568.
A Hare mounted as General.
Twelve Plates of Love-pieces of Sea-horses and Monsters.

FUCHS, MAXIMILIAN HEINRICH, who was born in 1767, became deservedly known for his architectural design for the cathedral at Cologne. He restored with ability the 'Crucifixion of Peter,' in St. Peter's church in that city, and Stephan's painting in the cathedral. He died at Cologne in 1848.

FUCKERAD, BERNARD, a Jesuit, born in Thuringia in 1601, executed a number of paintings for the Jesuits' Church and that of St. Andrew at Cologne. He is said to have been so skilful in copying the works of other artists, that an imitation by him of a picture by Johann Hulsman deceived that painter into the belief that it was his own production. He died at Cologne in 1662.

FUENTE. See DE LA FUENTE.

FUENTES, GIORGIO, born at Milan in 1756, studied under Gonzaga, and distinguished himself as a painter of decorations in the Scala at Milan, at Frankfort (1796-1805), and in the Grand Opera in Paris. He died at Milan in 1821.

FUERSTENBERG, THEODOR CASPAR VON, one of the first artists who worked in mezzotint, is said to have been instructed by Ludwig von Siegen. All that is now known of this artist is that he was a prebendary at Mayence in 1624, and provost in 1673. He died at that town in 1675. His very rare and beautiful plates are:

The Portrait of the Archduke Leopold William of Austria. 1656.
Christ with the Crown of Thorns; after Albrecht Dürer.
The Bust of a Prince. 1658.
The Head of St. John.
Herodias with the Head of St. John.
The Portrait of the Margrave Frederick of Baden.

FUES, FRIEDRICH CHRISTIAN, an historical, genre, and portrait painter, was born at Tübingen in 1772, and was educated at Stuttgart under Harper and Hetsch. He then found employment in Stobwasser's varnish factory at Brunswick, and after that with J. D. von Mayr at Nuremberg, in the preparation of pictures for snuff-boxes and ornaments, until he was appointed professor of painting in the art school of the latter city. He died in 1836. He etched thirteen plates of landscapes, and lithographed four. Among his paintings are:

The Minnesingers.
The Family of an old Knight in the Castle Hall.
A Peasant laughing.
Summer and Winter. 1835.
Consecration of a Swabian Church. 1839.
Nine Portraits of distinguished Nurembergers. (Town Hall, Nuremberg.)

FUESSLY is the name borne by a numerous family of artists, who flourished at Zurich in the 18th and 19th centuries. The most important member was Heinrich Fuessly, better known as Henry Fuseli, R.A. The others painted portraits, flowers, miniatures, &c., and some of them wrote on art.

FUESSLY, HEINRICH, or, as he is commonly known in England, HENRY FUSELI, second son of Johann Kaspar Fuessly, was born at Zurich in 1741. He was originally intended for the Church, and actually entered it, but compelled by the enmity of a magistrate, whose dishonesty he had exposed, to leave his native town, he went to Berlin, and for some time devoted himself to literature, in which he was engaged at intervals throughout his life. In 1765, at the instigation of the British ambassador at the court of Berlin, he visited England, and in 1767 an introduction to Reynolds, who praised his drawings, induced him to become a painter, and in the following year he went to Italy, where he stayed for nearly nine years, studying the works of Michelangelo; but he never fairly mastered the principles of drawing or colouring, and his works are esteemed more for the powerful imagination they display than for any artistic merit. He was of most eccentric habits and extravagant ideas, and these ideas are everywhere apparent in his pictures. Leaving Italy in 1778, and passing through Zurich, he reached England in the following year, and in 1782 produced his famous picture of 'The Nightmare.' In 1786 he became a zealous worker in Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery, for which he executed nine paintings. In 1788 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and an Academician two years later, and in 1790, too, he married one of his models. In 1799 he opened his Milton Gallery, comprising forty-seven paintings, the result of several years of labour. In the same year he was elected Lecturer on Painting at the Royal Academy, and in 1804 he was made keeper, the bye-laws being altered to allow him to retain the lectureship. He died at Putney in 1825. Fuseli was an artist in mind, but devoid of technical knowledge. His most famous productions are, perhaps, his illustrations to Shakespeare.

FÜGER, FRIEDRICH HEINRICH, was born at Heilbronn in 1751. Some of his works exhibit elegance of form and an agreeable colour; but he is very unequal, as may be seen from those in the Vienna Gallery, which are not his best. He first learned painting under Guibal at Stuttgart, but finding himself not yet apt enough for the art, he studied jurisprudence at Halle in 1768. In 1770 he took up the brush again, and painted under Oeser at Leipsic. He then went to Dresden, where he executed several portraits. In 1772 he returned to Stuttgart in order to study composition under Guibal. At Vienna, to which city he went in 1774, he was patronized by Maria Theresa, who assisted him to visit Rome, in which city he studied after the antique and the great masters, especially after Mengs and Battoni. After having finished several frescoes in the Caserta Palace, near Naples in 1782, which represent 'Allegories upon the Origin of the Sciences,' he was appointed vice-director of the Academy at Vienna in 1783. He died at Vienna in 1818. His most important paintings are:

Brunswick.	Gallery.	The Portrait of Count Ludolf.
London.	Nat. Port.	Portrait of Nelson (painted at Vienna in 1800).
Munich.	Gallery.	The Magdalen.
Vienna.	Gallery.	St. John the Baptist.
"	"	The Magdalen.
"	"	Ariadne at Naxos.
"	"	Orpheus in the Lower World.
"	"	Dido on the Funereal Pile.
"	"	Adam and Eve lamenting over the body of Abel.
"	"	The Judgment of Brutus.
"	"	Semiramis.
"	"	Virginia.
"	Academy.	The Death of Germanicus.
"	Czernin Gallery.	The Farewell of Coriolanus.
"	Count Sinzen- dorf.	Prometheus.

Other portraits by him are:

The Emperor Joseph.
The Elector of Mentz.
General Loudon.
The Princess of France.
The Countess Rzewuska with her Children.

He illustrated Klopstock's 'Messiah' with twenty designs which were engraved by Leybold, and likewise executed fifteen etchings of portraits and mythological subjects.

FÜHRICH, JOSEPH, was born at Kratzau, in Bohemia, in 1800, and studied first at Prague under Bergler, and in 1827 at Vienna, where he designed and painted several romantic scenes. In 1829 he went to Rome, and executed three frescoes in the Villa Massimi, representing scenes from Tasso's 'Gerusalemme liberata.' He afterwards became a follower of Overbeck. In 1854 he began his great works in the Altlerchenfelder Church at Vienna, representing the 'Raising of Lazarus' and the 'Last Judgment.' He died at Vienna in 1876. Though his religious subjects are not free from fault, they are well conceived, the figures being natural and the draperies simple. Among his numerous paintings and drawings may be mentioned:

Fifteen drawings for Tieck's 'Genovefa.'
Illustrations to Goethe's 'Erk König.'
Twelve drawings for Goethe's 'Hermann and Dorothea.'
Jesus entering the Garden.
Joshua and his army giving thanks on the Fall of the Walls of Jericho.
The Nativity of Christ.
The Creator in the Clouds giving Moses the Commandments. (Vienna Gallery.)
The Appearance of fighting Horsemen in the Clouds, terrifying the inhabitants of Jerusalem, before the occupation by Antiochus. (Vienna Gallery.)
The Virgin going over the Mountain. (Vienna Gallery.)
Fourteen scenes from the Crucifixion. (St. John Nepomuk, Vienna.)
Eight scenes in the life of the Prodigal Son.
Sixteen scenes of the Spiritual Rose.
Fifteen scenes of the Resurrection.

FULCARUS, SEBASTIANUS. See FURCK.

FULCO, GIOVANNI, was born at Messina in 1615. After having learned the first principles of design in his native city, he went to Naples, where he entered the school of Cavaliere Massimo Stanzione. He is said by Hakert, in his 'Memorie de' Pittori Messinesi,' to have been a firm and correct designer, and to have excelled particularly in the representation of children. Many of his pictures have been destroyed by the earthquakes, to which his country is subject. Of those that remain are his fresco works, and a picture in oil of the 'Birth of the Virgin,' in the chapel of the Crucifixion, at the Nunziata de' Teatini, at Messina. He died about the year 1680.

FULIGNO, NICCOLÒ DA. See LIBERATORE.

FULIGNO, PIER ANTONIO DI, flourished about the middle of the 15th century, and executed the frescoes in Santa Cattarina at Assisi.

FULLER, ISAAC, an English painter, was born in 1606. Nothing is known of his family, or of his instructor in his own country, but he studied some years under François Perrier, in Paris. He was principally employed in England, and especially at Oxford, in wall pieces. In the chapel at Wadham College he painted the 'Children of Israel gathering Manna,' and at Magdalen College an altar-piece which was praised by Addison. He also painted five pictures of the 'Escape of Charles II. after the battle of Worcester,' which were presented to the Irish Parliament. His own portrait, which is at Queen's College, Oxford, though eccentric, is touched with great force, and full of character. Fuller etched some plates for a drawing-book, called 'Libro da disegnare'; and in conjunction with Tempesta and Henry Cooke, etched the plates for the 'Moral Emblems,' by Cesare Ripa; they are very indifferently executed. He died in London in 1672.

FULLER, RICHARD, an American landscape painter, was born at Bradford, in New Hampshire, in 1822. In 1840 he was apprenticed to a cigar manufacturer at Boston, and later on he was made street inspector and night watchman. From 1852 to 1866, however, he made attempts at the pursuit of art in his leisure hours, deriving his instruction from the pictures which he saw in shop-windows.

From 1867 until his death he was able to devote himself entirely to painting, and depicted American landscapes with much poetical feeling. He died at Chelsea, near Boston, in 1871, and bequeathed to the art club of that city ninety of his paintings, which entitle him to rank among the best landscape painters of his country.

FUMACCINI, ORAZIO. See SAMACCHINI.

FUMIANI, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, was born at Venice in 1643, and was educated at Bologna. After acquiring an excellent style of design and composition in that school, he returned to Venice, where he studied for some time the works of Paolo Veronese. Lanzi considers his picture of 'Christ disputing with the Doctors,' in the church of La Carità, as his best performance. Among other things the immense ceiling painting in San Pantaleone, representing the 'Glorification of St. Pantaleon,' is remarkable. He died in 1710.

FUMICELLI, LODOVICO, was a native of Trevigi, who flourished about the year 1536. It is not known with certainty whether he was a scholar of Titian or not; but Lanzi regards him as one of the ablest and most memorable of his imitators. In 1536 he painted the principal altar-piece of the church of the Padri Eremitani at Padua, representing the 'Virgin and Infant seated in the clouds, with St. Augustine, St. James, and St. Marina below'; which, according to Ridolfi, is designed and coloured in a style worthy of the greatest masters. In the church of the Padri Serviti, at Trevigi, he painted a picture of 'St. Liberale and St. Catharine,' with two laterals, representing 'St. Sebastian and St. Philip,' the latter the founder of their order. It is to be regretted that the offer of an advantageous situation in the engineers tempted him to abandon painting.

FUNGAI, BERNARDINO, was a native of Siena, who was born about 1460, and died in 1516. He was instructed in the art of painting by Benvenuto del Guasta. His style retains something of the dry, stiff manner which preceded him, though not more so than that of many of his contemporaries. Among the works of this artist, in which he was partly assisted by Pacchiarotti, the following are the most important:

Chiusi.	Cathedral.	The Nativity of Christ. (Assisted by Pacchiarotti.)
London.	South Kensington Museum.	The Virgin with the Child; in the style of Perugino. (Falsely ascribed to Vivarini.)
Siena.	S. M. de' Servi.	Coronation of the Virgin.
"	"	Madonna di Fontegiusta. 1500.
"	Carmin.	The Virgin and Child, with Saints. 1512.
"	Academy.	The Ascension.
"	"	Christ between St. Francis and St. Jerome.
"	"	A Madonna. (Assisted by Pacchiarotti.)

FUNK, HEINRICH, born at Herford, in Westphalia, in 1809, learned the rudiments of art from his father, and studied in 1829 under Schirmer at the Academy at Düsseldorf. He soon became known as an excellent painter of landscapes, and was employed at Frankfort from 1836 to 1854. Subsequently he settled at Stuttgart, where he became professor of the art school, and died in 1877. Funk was a student of nature, who possessed a fine taste for the beautiful, and painted in a simple manner. The following of his paintings are noteworthy:

Berlin.	Gallery.	A Summer's Day on the Rhine.
Frankfort.	Städel Inst.	A Ruin in the Evening Light.
		The Lower Valley of the Inn.
		Landscape.
Stuttgart.	Gallery.	An approaching Thunderstorm in the Eifel Mountains.

FURCK, SEBASTIAN, (or FULCARUS,) a German engraver, was born at Altkülz, Hundsrück, about 1589. In the early part of his life he resided at Rome, where he engraved some plates as early as 1612. From 1620 to 1630 he was established at Frankfort-on-the-Main. He engraved many portraits and historical pieces, chiefly for the booksellers, among which are those of the Colonna family; also some plates after Titian, and other masters. He died at Frankfort in 1666. He worked principally with the graver, though there are a few etchings by him. When he did not sign his plates with his name, he marked them with the cipher . The following prints are by him:

The Last Judgment; after Michelangelo.

St. Sebastian; a half-length figure.

An ornamental Frontispiece to the works of Gul. Fabricius, dated 1646. It is etched in a very spirited style, and is signed S. Furck, f.

FURICH, JOHANN PHILIPP, born at Strassburg in 1655, studied under Johann Heinrich Roos at Frankfort, and became so successful an imitator of that master, that his works are often mistaken for those of Roos. He died after 1735.

FURINI, FRANCESCO, who is styled by Lanzi the Guido and Albani of the Florentine school, was the son of Filippo Furini, a respectable portrait painter, and was born at Florence in 1604. He was first instructed by his father, and afterwards studied under Passignano and Roselli; and on leaving their schools, visited Rome and Venice. In 1644 he was appointed curate at Mugello, near Borgo San Lorenzo, where he painted some of his best pictures. But he acquired the high reputation in which he is held by his admirable easel pictures, which are found in the first collections in Florence. He had a preference for imitating the style of Albani, in which he was very successful. He drew with elegance and correctness, particularly the delicate forms of women and children, and he generally made choice of those subjects in which they could be introduced with the happiest effect. Such are his pictures of the 'Three Graces,' in the Palazzo Strozzi, and of 'Nymphs carried off by Satyrs,' in the Casa Galli. Furini died at Florence in 1649. Among his paintings are the following:

Borgo San Lorenzo.	Church.	St. Francis receiving the Stigmata.
"	"	The Ascension of the Virgin.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	The Penitent Magdalen.
Darmstadt.	Museum.	A Female Saint.
Dresden.	Gallery.	St. Cecilia.
Edinburgh.	Nat. Gall.	A Head of St. Sebastian.
"	"	A Poetess.
Florence.	Pitti Pal.	Adam and Eve in Eden.
"	"	An Allegorical Figure.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Lot and his Daughters.
Rome.	Pal. Capponi.	David and Abigail.
"	Pal. Corsini.	Mythological Subjects.
Vienna.	Gallery.	The Magdalen.

FURNIUS, PIETER JALHEA, a Flemish designer and engraver, was born in Flanders about 1540, and was residing at Antwerp about the year 1570. He was a contemporary of the Galle and the Sadeler, who engraved some plates from his designs. His style of engraving bears a near resemblance to that of those artists. Though he drew the figure correctly, in attempting to imitate the lofty style of Michelangelo he fell into affectation and extravagance. He worked entirely with the graver in a slight, feeble manner. The many plates which he engraved after M. Heemskerk, J. Stradanus, M. De Vos, P. Brueghel, M. van Coxie, and others, are signed with the accompanying monogram. The date of his death is not mentioned. Among other prints the following are by him: F

The Parable of the Good Samaritan: a set of six plates.
The Martyrdom of St. Felicia; P. Furnius in. et fecit.
The Escape of Cloelia; P. Furnius fecit.

FÜRST, ROSINE HELENE, was an embroiderer and engraver of Nuremberg in the 17th century. Her sister, MAGDALENE FÜRST, painted flowers.

FÜRSTENBERG, THEODOR CASPAR VON. See FUERSTENBERG.

FURTMAYR, PERCHTHOLD, a miniature painter of the Upper German School, flourished between 1470 and 1501. There are by him in the castle of Wallerstein, Mailingen, near Nördlingen, a Chronicle in two folio volumes, with a great number of miniatures, and a Bible, with vignettes; and at Munich, in the Royal Library, a Missal in five folio volumes, with miniatures, beautiful monograms, and flowers, executed for the Archbishop Bernhard of Salzburg in 1481.

FUSELI, HENRY. See FUESSLY, HEINRICH.

FUSS, HANS. See SUESS, HANS.

FÜTERER, ULRICH, who was born at Landshut, and flourished at Munich, is the author of a 'Crucifixion,' painted in imitation of sculpture, in the Gallery at Schleissheim. It was painted about 1480, and is a specimen of very undeveloped art. Füterer is better known as a poet than as a painter.

FYFE, WILLIAM BAXTER COLLIER, a Scottish genre and portrait painter, was born at Dundee about 1836. He became a student of the Royal Scottish Academy, and exhibited his first picture of importance, 'Queen Mary resigning her Crown at Loch Leven Castle,' in the Exhibition of 1861; but this was surpassed in later years by 'The Raid of Ruthven.' In 1863 he settled in London, and from that time onward was busily engaged with portraiture, which he varied with landscapes and genre subjects of interest and merit. Some of his most important portraits are those of the Earl and Countess of Dufferin, Admiral Grenfell, Alderman Sir William McArthur, Dr. Lorimer and John Faed, R.S.A. He died suddenly in London in 1882. His best-known genre pictures are:

A Girl of the Period.
On Household Cares intent.
What can a Young Lassie dae wi' an Auld Man?
A Good Catholic.
Wandering Minstrels.
A Quiet Christmas.

FYOLL, CONRAD, who flourished at Frankfort-on-the-Main from the year 1464 to 1476,—the only space of time of which record concerning him has been handed down to us,—is a painter whose works display graceful drawing and subdued colouring. The chief picture ascribed to him is an altar-piece in the Städel Institute at Frankfort. It represents, in the centre, 'Christ on the Cross,' with the donor and his sons on the right wing, and his wife and daughters on the left wing. There is also a picture of the 'Family of St. Anne.' Mention may also be made of a triptych in the Berlin Gallery formerly assigned to him, but now thought to be of rather later date, representing the 'Virgin and Child with St. Anna,' and 'SS. Barbara and Catharine' and the 'Annunciation' on the wings; and of another in the Antwerp Museum, with the 'Adoration of the Magi' in the centre, and the 'Nativity' and 'Circumcision' on the wings.

FYT, JAN, a Flemish painter and etcher, was born at Antwerp in 1609. He studied in the atelier of Jan van Berch in that city in 1621, became a master in the Guild of St. Luke in 1629, and afterwards visited Rome. When he returned to Antwerp he joined the Guild of the Romanists in 1650, and became its dean in 1652. He excelled in the representation of every species of animal, but in dogs he is perhaps without a rival. It is impossible for art to approach nearer to nature than in the pictures of Fyt of that description. His touch is without manner, or the formality of practice; it is loose, spirited, and playful, but peculiarly characteristic, and full of energy. Such was his extraordinary merit, that he was courted by the greatest painters of his time to embellish their works with the additional attraction of his admirable animals. Rubens, Janssens, De Craeyer, and Jordaens employed him in that way, which was the more flattering to his talent as Rubens himself excelled in painting animals of every description. His works are to be met with at Antwerp (the 'Meal of the Eagle' and the 'Sleeping Hound'), Augsburg, Berlin, Brunswick, Dresden, Cassel, Munich, Madrid, Paris, Venice, and Vienna. A group of 'Dead Birds' is in the National Gallery. He died at Antwerp in 1661. There are by Fyt some admirable etchings, executed in the bold and spirited style of his pictures; they are as follow:

A set of eight of Dogs and other Animals. 1640.

A set of seven of Dogs, of different species, with backgrounds of landscapes; dated 1642, and inscribed Johannes Fyt, pinx. et fecit.

A set of eight small plates of a Cart, a Horse, a Dog, Foxes, Goats, and three of Cows. These are very scarce.

Lanzi mentions a Gio. Fajt di Anversa, who resided for some time at Venice, and was employed in the Casa Sagredo and Casa Contarini: this statement, if correct, cannot apply to Jan Fyt.

G

GAAL, BARENT, (or GAEL,) a Dutch painter, was born at Haarlem in 1650. He was a scholar of Philip Wouwerman, until the death of that master in 1668, when he found himself capable of dispensing with further instruction. He painted hunting parties, battles, horse-fairs, and other subjects similar to those of his instructor, and he frequently painted figures in the landscapes of Isaac Koene, a scholar of Jacob Ruisdael. He died in 1703. The Rotterdam Museum has paintings by him of 'A Woman making Cakes,' and 'The Village Inn'; and the Brunswick Gallery one of 'Soldiers playing Cards.' In the Hermitage at St. Petersburg are a 'Coast Scene' and a landscape, and in the Augsburg Gallery is 'A Pig Market.'

GAAL, PIETER, was born at Middelburg in 1769, and received his first instructions from his father, Thomas Gaal, under whom he made some progress; he afterwards became a pupil of Schweickhardt, at the Hague. After visiting London, Paris, and several places in Germany, he settled in his native city, where he painted portraits, landscapes, animals, live and dead game, and subjects of ordinary life, some of which were of large dimensions. He died at Middelburg in 1819.

GAAL, THOMAS, a painter of portraits, birds, and flowers, was born at Dendermonde in 1739. He fixed his residence at Middelburg, and was one of the founders and directors of the Academy in that town. J. Perkois, J. H. Koekkoek, and S. De Koster were his pupils. He died at Middelburg in 1817.

GABBIANI, ANTONIO DOMENICO, an Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1652. After he had studied some time under Justus Sustermans and Vincenzo Dandini, the Grand-Duke Cosmo III., having been made acquainted with his promising talent, took him under his protection, and sent him to the Florentine Academy at Rome, where he frequented the school of Ciro Ferri. After passing three years at Rome he visited Venice, and improved his style of colouring by the study of the great painters of that school. He was invited to the court of Vienna, where he painted the portrait of the Emperor and some historical subjects for the Imperial Gallery. On his return to Florence he painted several altarpieces for the churches, particularly a fine picture of the 'Assumption,' and a 'Repose in Egypt'; also his celebrated picture of 'St. Philip,' in the church of the Padri dell' Oratorio. For his easel pictures he generally selected subjects into which he could introduce children, in which he excelled. He continued to paint until he was killed by a fall from a scaffold at Florence, in 1726. His principal works in public galleries are:

Cambridge.	Fitzwilliam Museum.	Portrait.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Christ at the house of Simon the Pharisee.
Florence.	Uffizi.	His own Portrait.
"	"	Rape of Ganymede.
"	"	Madonna.
Munich.	Gallery.	St. Francis of Assisi performing Miracles.
"	"	St. Peter of Alcantara.

Four engravings by him are known:

The Madonna; after Parmigiano.
Portrait of an old Man.
Portrait of a young Woman.
A Landscape.

GABBIANI, GAETANO, the nephew of Antonio Gabbiani, studied under his uncle, and became a meritorious portrait painter in pastel. He worked at Florence, and died about 1750.

GABBUGIANI, BALDASSARE, an Italian engraver, executed some of the plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino,' published at Florence between the years 1747 and 1766.

GABET, CHARLES HENRY JOSEPH, a French painter of miniatures and of portraits in water-colours, was born at Courbevoie in 1793. He is also known as the author of a 'Dictionnaire des Artistes de l'École Française au XIX^e siècle,' published in 1831. He died in Paris in 1860.

GABET, FRANZ, an Austrian etcher, was born at Vienna in 1762, and died in the same city in 1847. He executed several landscapes after M. Molitor, as well as some from his own designs, and six plates of Ruins, &c., after F. E. Weirötter (1791).

GABIOU, JEANNE ELIZABETH. See CHAUDET.

GABLER, AMBROSIOUS, a German painter and engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1764, painted beautiful miniatures. His father, Nikolaus Gabler, painted in oils and etched.

GABLER, JOHANN JAKOB, an engraver, was a native of Augsburg. He worked at Leipsic, and engraved the 'Battle of Lutzen' in 1632.

GABRIEL, GEORGES FRANÇOIS MARIE, a French miniature painter and designer, born in Paris in 1775, was a pupil of Naigeon and Regnault. Among his designs are those ordered by the French Government for the great work of the Institute on Egypt; and among his portraits is one of Madame de Maintenon, engraved by Mécou, which forms the frontispiece to her memoirs by Lafont d'Ausonne. The date of his death is unknown.

GABRIEL, PAULUS JOSEPH, a painter and sculptor, was born at Amsterdam in 1785. He learned sculpture from his father and Canova, and devoted himself principally to that branch of art; but he at first practised miniature painting, and in his twentieth year proceeded to Paris specially to improve himself therein. In 1820 he was made a member of the Institute at Amsterdam, and director of the Royal Academy there. He died at Amsterdam in 1833.

GABRIELLI, CAMILLO, a native of Pisa, was a scholar of Ciro Ferri. Lanzi states that he was the first who introduced the style of Pietro da Cortona among his countrymen. He painted some oil pictures at the Carmelites, and for private collections; but he was more distinguished for his fresco paintings, which were much esteemed. His principal work was the decorations of the great saloon in the Palazzo Alicata. He died in 1730.

GABRIELLO, ONOFRIO, was born at Messina in 1617. After studying six years in his native city, under Antonio Ricci, called Barbalonga, he went to Rome, and entered the school of Pietro da Cortona. He afterwards visited Venice, and on his return to Messina he was much employed in the churches, for private collections, and in portrait painting. He was in great repute when the Revolution, which took place in 1674, obliged him to quit Sicily, and he settled at Padua, where he resided several years, and was usually called Onofrio da Messina. Some of his best works are in the church of San Francesco di Paola at Messina, and in the 'Guida di Padova' are mentioned several of his pictures in the public edifices and private collections of that city, particularly in the Palazzo Borromeo. He died in 1706.

GABRON, WILLEM, born at Antwerp in 1625, was a good painter of fruit and flowers, and excelled in the representation of gold and silver vases, porcelain, and ornaments of a like kind. He spent several years in Italy, but died at Antwerp in 1679. The Munich, Brunswick, and Darmstadt Galleries have works by him.

GADDI, AGNOLO, the son of Taddeo Gaddi, was born at Florence apparently after 1333, and at his father's death was left under the joint tutorship of Giovanni da Milano and Jacopo del Casentino. In the early portion of his career he painted the 'Resurrection of Lazarus,' in the church of San Jacopo tra Fosse, at Florence. The frescoes in the Pieve of Prato, representing the two legends of the Virgin and the Sacred Girdle, that were painted in his prime, and show evident traces of Giotto's principles, are still to be seen there. Unfortunately they are much damaged both by time and by repairs, but they still show considerable power and ability. Many other productions from his brush exist in Prato. In the choir of Santa Croce, at Florence, are eight frescoes illustrating the Legend of the Cross. Altar-pieces by him may also be found in many of the churches in and around Florence. He is said to have lived for some time at Venice, engaged in mercantile pursuits. He died at Florence in 1396, and was buried in the church of Santa Croce. Among his paintings are the following:

Florence.	Academy.	Virgin and Child in Glory, surrounded by Saints.
"	"	Evangelists and Doctors of the Church.
"	"	Scenes from the Lives of St. John the Evangelist, St. John the Baptist, St. Nicholas, and St. Anthony.
"	S. Croce.	Eight subjects from the Legend of the Cross—frescoes.
"	"	Figures of Saints.
"	Uffizi.	The Annunciation.
Paris.	Louvre.	The Annunciation.
Prato.	Cathedral.	Thirteen subjects from the Life of the Virgin, and the Legend of Dagomari (who carried the Holy Girdle from Palestine to Prato).
"	Museum.	Virgin and Saints.

GADDI, GADDO, the intimate friend and contemporary of Cimabue, was born at Florence about 1260. From Tafi, Gaddo learned the art of mosaic, and one of his earliest works was the figures of the prophets beneath the windows in the baptistery of San Giovanni at Florence. The influence of Cimabue is chiefly shown in his mosaic inside and above the portal of Santa Maria del Fiore at Florence, representing a 'Coronation of the Virgin, with Saints and Angels.' This artist seems to have visited Rome, and to have been employed in mosaic work in Santa Maria Maggiore, and in the choir of St. Peter's. He also painted in the upper church of St. Francis at Assisi, and executed the mosaics of the old Duomo outside Arezzo. His portrait, as well as that of Tafi, was painted by his son Taddeo Gaddi in the 'Sposalizio' in the Baroncelli Chapel at Santa Croce. Gaddo Gaddi was still living in 1333, but probably died about that year, and was buried in the cloisters of Santa Croce.

GADDI, GIOVANNI, an inferior artist, was a son of Taddeo Gaddi, and a pupil of his brother Agnolo. He painted in San Spirito at Florence a 'Dispute of Christ with the Scribes in the Temple,' and some similar works, but they were all destroyed on the rebuilding of the church. He died in 1383.

GADDI, TADDEO, the son of Gaddo Gaddi, was born at Florence about 1300, and was first instructed by his father, but afterwards by his godfather Giotto, whose assistant he became for twenty-four years. When Giotto left Florence to visit Naples, the Baroncelli Chapel in Santa Croce was completed, and Taddeo, after painting the 'Virgin and Child between four Prophets' on the funeral monument at the entrance, executed on the walls of the chapel itself scenes from the life of the Virgin, and in the diagonals of the double ceiling the Eight Virtues. One of these works was an altar-piece now in the Berlin Gallery, and inscribed "Anno Dñi MCCCXXXIII mensis septembris Tadeus me fecit." The centre panel represents the 'Virgin and Child,' with the patrons kneeling at the foot of the throne. On the right wing is the 'Birth of the Saviour,' and a scene from the life of St. Nicholas of Bari, and on the left wing, beneath two prophets, is the 'Crucified Saviour,' with the Magdalen grasping the foot of the cross, and the Virgin and St. John on either side. Another is an altar-piece in the sacristy of San Pietro at Megognano, near Poggibonsi, inscribed "Taddeus Gaddi d̄ Florētia me p̄xit MCCCLV.," representing the 'Virgin and Child enthroned among angels.' Taddeo's activity may well be compared with that of his master, though but few of his works survive. His frescoes in San Spirito, the altar-pieces in San Stefano del Ponte Vecchio, the frescoes in the church of the Serviti, the allegories in the tribunal of the Mercanzia, have all disappeared. He laboured also at Pisa, where a portion of his work executed in San Francesco in 1342 still remains. He afterwards worked in Arezzo and Casentino. Taddeo Gaddi died at Florence in 1366, and was buried in the cloisters of Santa Croce.

Giovanni da Milano and Jacopo del Casentino were his pupils. He was also celebrated as an architect. The following are among his works:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Virgin adored by Saints and Donators. 1334.
"	Academy.	History of St. Francis.
Florence.	S. Croce.	Scenes from the Life of Christ.
"	"	Subjects from the History of the Virgin—frescoes.
"	S. Maria Novella.	The Last Supper—fresco.
"	"	Scenes from the Life of Christ—frescoes.
"	"	The Triumph of St. Thomas Aquinas. (A grand composition, attributed to Gaddi, but bearing all the marks of the Sienese school.)
"	S. Felicità.	Virgin surrounded by Saints—altar-piece.
Gotha.	Gallery.	Christ.
Paris.	Louvre.	Scenes from the Beheading of St. John the Baptist; Calvary; Christ and Judas Iscariot; Martyrdom of a Saint. (Predella in three compartments.)
Pisa.	S. Francesco.	The Apostles; St. Francis; several Saints; Allegorical Figures of the Virtues. Frescoes. 1342.
Poggibonsi.	S. Pietro, Megognano.	Virgin enthroned, surrounded by Saints. 1355.
Prato.	Gallery.	History of the Girdle of the Virgin. (A predella.)

GAEL, BARENT. See GAAL.

GAELLEN, ALEXANDER VAN, who was born at Amsterdam in 1670, was the scholar of Jan van Huchtenburgh, and, like his master, painted battles and subjects of the chase, which he treated with great fire and spirit. Whilst he was a pupil of Huchtenburgh, he had an opportunity of improving his touch by copying the works of Wouwerman, Berchem, and other eminent masters, as his instructor was a dealer in pictures as well as a painter; and he was perhaps more indebted to this circumstance, than to the lessons of Huchtenburgh. He soon found himself able to dispense with further instruction, and, resolving on visiting other countries in search of improvement, went to Germany, where he passed some time at Cologne, in the employment of the Elector. After a few years passed in Germany he returned to Holland, where, not meeting with the encouragement he expected, he did not long remain, but determined to visit England, whither some of his pictures had preceded him. He accordingly came to this country in the reign of Queen Anne, and is said to have painted a picture of Her Majesty in a coach drawn by eight horses, and attended by several of the nobility. He also painted three pictures, representing two of the principal battles between the Royal Army and that of the Commonwealth in the time of Charles I., and the 'Battle of the Boyne.' No mention, however, is made of Van Gaalen in Walpole's 'Anecdotes.' He died in 1728.

GAESBEECK, A. VAN, a Dutch painter of genre subjects and portraits, flourished from about 1670 to about 1700, but no particulars of his life are known. His works, which are rare, are in the manner of Gerard Dou and Pieter van Slingeland. The Berlin Gallery possesses 'The Seamstress,' and the Amsterdam Museum a portrait of a young Man.

GAETA, SCIPIONE DA. See PULZONE.

GAGLIARDI, BARTOLOMMEO, born at Genoa in 1555, is said to have been a painter of some reputation. He executed works after the manner of Michelangelo. There are also several plates by him, both etched and finished with the graver, among which is a large print representing an emblematical subject, executed in a style resembling that of Cherubino Alberti, though very inferior. He died in 1620.

GAGLIARDI, BERNARDINO, was born at Città di Castello in 1609. Although he was a scholar of Avanzino Nucci, he pursued a different path after he had made a journey to Rome, where he was particularly struck with the works of the Carracci and of Guido. In the cathedral at Città di Castello, he painted the 'Martyrdom of St. Crescentianus,' a work of considerable effect, but deficient in other respects. He appears to more advantage in his two pictures of the history of Tobit; but his best performance is his picture of 'St. Pellegrino,' with two laterals, in the church of San Marcello at Rome. He died in 1660.

GAGLIARDI, FILIPPO, is mentioned as having executed architectural paintings about the year 1640. The Madrid Gallery possesses an 'Interior of St. Peter's at Rome,' by him.

GAGNERAUX, BÉNIGNE, born at Dijon in 1756, was first instructed in the school at Dijon under François Devosge, from whence he proceeded to Rome, where he acquired a reputation by his picture of the 'Meeting of Gustavus III. of Sweden with Pope Pius VI.,' which is now in the King's Palace at Stockholm. In the Dijon Museum are pictures of 'Soranus and Servilius,' 'Battle of Senef,' 'Passage of the Rhine by the French Army under Condé,' a 'Bacchanal,' a 'Cavalry Charge,' and a 'Triumph of Neptune.' Owing to the disturbances in Rome he quitted that city, and retired to Florence, where he died in 1795. In the Uffizi at Florence are his own portrait, a 'Battle Scene,' and a 'Lion Hunt.'

GAGNIÈRES, JEAN. See GANIÈRES.

GAILLARD, ROBERT, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1722, executed a considerable number of plates of portraits, historical and other subjects, and landscapes. He died in Paris in 1785. The following are his best prints:

PORTRAITS.

Cardinal Étienne René Potier de Gesvres; after P. Batoni.

Christophe de Beaumont, Archbishop of Paris; after Chevalier.

Jean Joseph Languet, Archbishop of Sens; after the same.

The Queen of Sweden; after Lantinville.

GAILLARD DE LONJUMEAU, PIERRE JOSEPH, a French amateur engraver, etched several small plates for his amusement; among others, a set of views of the 'Antiquities of Aix,' dated 1750.

GAILLOT, BERNARD, a French historical painter, born at Versailles in 1780, was a pupil of David. He died in Paris in 1847. His principal pictures are:

Cornelia. 1817.

St. Martin. (Val-de-Grâce, Paris.)

Conversion of St. Augustine. 1819. (Notre-Dame-des-Victoires, Paris.)

Dream of St. Monica. 1822. (The same.)

The Assumption. 1827. (The town of Eu.)

Christ blessing little Children. 1831.

GAINSBOROUGH, THOMAS, who was born at Sudbury in 1727, was the youngest son of John Gainsborough, a clothier. He very early discovered a propensity for art, which was nursed, as he loved to acknowledge in after years, by the Suffolk scenery with which he was surrounded. Before he was ten years old he was sent to the Grammar School, of which his uncle, the Rev. Humphrey Burroughs, was master; but he does not seem to have made much progress, as he employed himself chiefly in making sketches. At last, when he was in his fifteenth year, it was decided to send him to London, and so in 1741 he was intrusted to the care of a silversmith, who introduced him to Gravelot, an engraver and teacher of drawing, from whom he learned the art of etching. Gravelot, recognizing his talent, obtained for him admission to the Martin's Lane Academy, where he worked for three years under Frank Hayman, the historical painter, and then set up for himself in Hatton Garden, where he did a little modelling and produced a few landscapes. After a year's experience of Hatton Garden, he returned, in 1745, to Sudbury, where he set up as a portrait painter, and in the same year married a young lady named Margaret Burr, whose brother was a traveller in his father's employ. After a brief residence at Sudbury, he removed to Ipswich, and it was there that he made the acquaintance of Joshua Kirby, which ripened into a warm friendship, and lasted till the death of the latter in 1771. When Kirby left Ipswich for London, it was Gainsborough's destiny to become acquainted with Philip Thicknesse, who had just been appointed Governor of Landguard Fort, Ipswich, and who afterwards influenced the painter's career, and became his first biographer; for it was at his suggestion that in the year 1760 he removed to Bath. There he took apartments in the newly-erected Circus at the rent of £50 a year, and business came in so fast that the price of a portrait was raised from five to eight guineas, and eventually settled at forty guineas for a half-length, and a hundred guineas for a whole-length. On the foundation of the Royal Academy in 1768, Gainsborough was one of the thirty-six original members, though he does not seem to have taken any part in the work, for which in 1775 the Council moved that "the name of Mr. Gainsborough be omitted from their lists," which was, however, rescinded at the next general meeting. On his original election to the Academy he contributed 'A Romantic Landscape, with Sheep at a Fountain.' In 1774, owing to a quarrel with the Thicknesse, Gainsborough left Bath, and for a second time set up in London, taking up his residence at Schomberg House, a noble mansion in Pall Mall, where commissions came in so fast that he was unable to keep up with the demand made on his services. In 1779 he was at the very height of his fame; all the eminent men of the day sat to him, and he was the favourite painter of the King and Royal Family. From 1769 to 1783 (excepting in the years 1773 to 1776) he was a constant contributor of portraits and landscapes to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy; but in the year 1783, owing to a disagreement with the Council about hanging the picture of the three Princesses, he withdrew his pictures, and never again contributed to the exhibitions. In 1788 a lump in his neck, which he first felt when present at the trial of Warren Hastings in Westminster Hall, developed into a cancer, of which he died in the same year. He was buried at his own desire in Kew Churchyard, where a simple flat stone records his name, age, and date of death. Gainsborough will always occupy one of the highest places in the English school, whether as a portrait or a landscape painter. In his early landscapes he showed traces of the influence of the Flemish school, but as time went on Nature alone became his mistress. As a colourist he ranks with Rubens, and in technical work Ruskin says that "Turner is a child to him." In his life and character Northcote says that "he was a natural gentleman, and with all his simplicity had wit too." The principal features in his character were his kindness and his passionate love of music. His failings seem to have been his capriciousness and infirmity of temper.

Gainsborough designed and etched with much spirit at least eighteen plates, among which are:

- A plate for Kirby's 'Perspective.'
- An Oak Tree, with Gipsies.
- A Man ploughing.

The Watering Place.
Evening.
Repose.

Besides these he executed three plates in aquatint, one of which is most carefully finished. His life work consisted of upwards of 300 paintings, of which over 220 were portraits. George III. was painted eight times, Pitt seven times, Garrick five times. Among other names are those of Lord Camden, Sir William Blackstone, Dr. Johnson, Laurence Sterne, Richardson, Clive, Burke, Sheridan, Windham, Franklin, Canning, Mrs. Graham, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Lady Vernon, Lady Maynard, Quin, and Mrs. Siddons. Lists of his works are to be found in Fulcher's 'Life of Thomas Gainsborough, R.A.,' London, 1856. The following are some of his most famous pictures in public galleries and well-known private collections:

London, National Gallery.

GALANINO, IL. See ALOISI.

GALANTINI, IPPOLITO, called IL CAPPUCCINO, and sometimes IL PRETE GENOVESE, was born at Florence in 1627, and was for some time a scholar of Padre Stefaneschi, through whose influence he became a monk of the order of the Capuchins, whence the two names by which he is frequently known. He was sent as a missionary to India, where he passed several years, and on his return to Europe painted several pictures for the churches of his order. In the Uffizi is his own portrait. He died in 1706, in the monastery of Montughi, near Florence.

GALARD, GUSTAVE DE, Count, a French painter and designer, was born at the château of Lille, near Lectoure, about 1777, and died at Bordeaux in 1840. In the Bordeaux Museum there is by him a 'View at La Teste.' His son, GEORGES DE GALARD, was born at Bordeaux, and died there in 1834, and there is in the Museum of that city a 'Study of a Sweep,' by him.

GALASSI, GALASSO, (sometimes called GALASSO ALGHISI,) the son of a shoemaker of Ferrara, was born about 1423. From the account-books of the House of Este, it appears that he was called Maestro Galasso de Mattheo Calegario, and was employed in the decorations of the palace of Belreguardo between the years 1450 and 1453. In 1455 he composed the 'Assumption,' and finished the portrait of Cardinal Bessarion, at Santa Maria in Monte, Bologna. Amongst his early paintings were the 'Trinity,' in the Museum of Ferrara; and the 'Entombment,' and a 'Virgin and Child, with donor and patron Saint,' in the Costabili Gallery in the same city. Professor Saroli possesses a 'Christ on the Mount of Olives,' and the Marquis Strozzi a 'Crucifixion,' both in Ferrara. Galassi died in 1473.

GALCERAN, ANTONIO, who was a pupil of Esquarte, was brought from Italy to Zaragoza in 1580. He painted in the palace of the Bishop of Barbastro, and enriched the cathedral there with historical pictures.

GALCERAN, VICENTE, a Spanish engraver, was born in 1726, and studied under Ravanals and Rovira, executing a print of St. Vincent Ferrer, when only eleven years old. Leaving Valencia for Madrid in 1750, he was soon after employed by the Chapter of Toledo to retouch some plates sent from Rome by Cardinal Portocarrero. He executed plates for works on natural history and horsemanship, and the portraits of the kings of Spain for Berni's 'Títulos de la Castilla,' printed at Valencia in 1769, the last but little to his credit. He returned to Valencia in 1768, where he engraved portraits of Bishop Cervera of Cadiz, and others. He died at Valencia in 1788, leaving, it is said, no less than 700 plates, great and small.

GALEAS, FRAY FRANCISCO DE, an excellent Spanish illuminator and miniaturist, was born at Seville in 1567. He studied law until 1590, when he entered the convent of Santa Maria de las Cuevas. He was afterwards promoted to the priory of Cazalla, but he resigned this dignity after two years, and returned to his Sevillian convent, to die of vexation in 1614. The convent possesses two of his miniatures, 'The Saviour dead' and 'The Saviour rising'; also some illuminations in books, which display great clearness and beauty.

GALEN, THYMAN VAN, a native of Utrecht, who flourished early in the 17th century, is chiefly known by a picture of the 'Ruins of a Temple' placed in the Hospital of St. Job in Utrecht.

GALEOTTI, SEBASTIANO, born at Florence in 1676, first studied under Alessandro Gherardini, but afterwards went to Bologna, where he became a scholar of Giovanni Gioseffo dal Sole. He possessed a ready invention, and was a good designer; and his powers were well adapted to fresco painting, in which, according to Ratti, he executed some considerable works in the church of La Maddalena at Genoa. Few of his works are to be found in his native city, from which it would seem that he was not held in so much reputation there as in Upper Italy; but there are several at Piacenza and Parma, and particularly at Turin, where he was made director of the Academy. He died at Turin in 1746, leaving two sons, GIUSEPPE and GIOVANNI BATTISTA, who were also painters.

GALESTRUZZI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a painter and engraver, was born at Florence in 1618. He studied painting under Francesco Furini, and afterwards went to Rome, where he was received into the Academy of St. Luke in 1652. The date of his death is uncertain, but he was still living in 1661. He was the friend of Stefano della Bella, whose style he imitated, and, according to Huber, finished some of the plates left imperfect at his death. He etched a great number of plates, of which there is a catalogue by Giacomo Rossi; the following are among the principal:

Paris receiving the Golden Apple from Mercury; after Annibale Carracci.

Beheading of St. John the Baptist; after Battista Ricci.

The Apotheosis of the Emperor Claudius. 1657.

Several sets of Friezes and Bas-reliefs; after Polidoro da Caravaggio.

A set of Antique Gems, with explanations by Leonardo Agostino; published at Rome in 1657 and 1659.

Mausoleum in honour of Cardinal Mazarin; six plates, from the designs of the Abbat Elpidius Benedictus.

1661.

GALIMARD, CLAUDE. See GALLIMARD.

GALIMARD, NICOLAS AUGUSTE, a French historical, portrait, and landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1813. He studied under his uncle, Auguste Hesse, and with Ingres, and soon became known for his pictures, chiefly of Biblical subjects. He painted the 'Disciples at Emmaus' for St. Germain-l'Auxerrois, and mural decorations in St. Germain-des-Près, Paris. His picture of 'The Ode,' exhibited at the Salon in 1846, is now in the Luxembourg Gallery. Many of Galimard's works have been engraved by Aubry-Lecomte and others. He made several designs for stained-glass windows, and wrote treatises on the subject. He died at Montigny-les-Cormeilles (Seine-et-Oise) in 1880.

GALINDEZ, MARTIN, a Spanish painter, was born at Haro in Old Castile, in 1547. In 1584 he entered the Chartreuse of Paular, where he devoted his leisure to the arts and to mechanical pursuits, and where he died in 1627, after executing a number of tolerable devotional pictures, and a variety of wood-carvings, sundials, and alarums.

GALIZIA, FEDE, (or GALLIZI,) was a native of Trento, in the Milanese, who flourished about the year 1616. She was the daughter of Annunzio Galizia, a miniature painter, who resided at Milan, from whom she received her instruction in art. She painted historical subjects and landscapes, in a pleasing and finished style, resembling that of the Bolognese school anterior to the Carracci; but she excelled in small portraits. One of her best historical pictures is 'Christ appearing to Mary Magdalen,' in the Brera at Milan, from the church of La Maddalena.

GALLARDO, MATEO, was a Spanish painter, who resided at Madrid in 1657. There is a figure of Christ, signed with his name, and several of the Virgin, of the size of life.

GALLE, CORNELIS, the elder, a younger son of Philipp Galle, was born at Antwerp in 1576, and was taught engraving by his father. He followed the example of his brother Theodoor in visiting Rome, where he resided several years, and acquired a correctness of design, and a freedom of execution, in which he greatly surpassed both his father and his brother. After engraving several plates at Rome, from the Italian masters, he returned to Antwerp, where he carried on the business of a printseller, and engraved many plates after the works of his countrymen and his own designs. He died in 1656. Previous to going to Italy, he engraved some plates in the dry, stiff style of his father, of which the best known are:

A part of the plates of the Life of Christ; after Marten De Vos.

A set of plates of the Life of the Virgin Mary; after Stradan.

A set of plates of the Life of St. John the Baptist; after the same.

The following are the most esteemed of his later prints:

PORTRAITS.

St. Charles Borromeo, Cardinal Archbishop of Milan.

Philipp Rubens, the brother of Peter Paul Rubens.

Ferdinand III.; after Van Dyck.

Jan van Havre; after Rubens.

Charles I., King of England; in an allegorical border; after Van der Horst.

Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I.; with a border of flowers and figures; after the same.

Leopold William, Archduke of Austria; after A. van de Velde.

Artus Wolfart, painter; after Van Dyck.

Jan Wiggers; after H. De Smet.

Isabella of Arenberg; after Ch. Wautier.

Johannes de Falckenberg; after Van der Horst.

Abraham Ortelius; after H. Goltzius.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

Adam and Eve; after Giov. Batt. Paggi.

The Holy Family returning from Egypt, with a Choir of Angels; after the same.

Venus caressing Cupid; after the same.

St. Peter baptizing St. Priscia; after the same.

The Virgin and Infant, to whom St. Bernard is offering a Book; after Francesco Vanni.

The Crucifixion, with the Virgin, St. Francis, and St. Theresa; after the same.

Venus bound to a Tree, and Minerva chastising Cupid; after Agostino Carracci.

Procne showing the Head of her son Itys to her husband Tereus; after the same.

Seneca in the Bath; after the same.

The Virgin caressing the Infant Jesus; after Raphael.

The Entombment of Christ; after the same.

The Virgin Mary, under an arch, ornamented with flowers by Angels; after Rubens.

Judith cutting off the Head of Holofernes; after the same.

The Four Fathers of the Church; after the same.

A naked Woman grinding colours; after the same.

Autumn and Winter; two landscapes; after the same.

A Banquet, with Musicians; without the name of the painter.

GALLE, CORNELIS, the younger, the son of Cornelis Galle the elder, was born at Antwerp in 1615, and was instructed in the art of engraving by his father. It does not appear that he had the advantage of studying in Italy, which may account for his drawing being less correct than that of his father or his uncle. His portraits are more meritorious than his larger pieces. He died at Antwerp in 1678. The following are his most esteemed prints:

PORTRAITS.

The Emperor Ferdinand III.; after Van Dyck. 1649.

Mary of Austria, his Empress; after the same. 1649.

Henrietta of Lorraine; after the same.

Jan Meyssens, painter and engraver; after the same.

Jodocus Christophorus Kress de Kressenstein, Senator of Hamburg; after Anselmus van Hulle.

Ottavio Piccolomini, in a border of fruit and flowers; after the same.

538

Godardus a Reede.

Adrianus Klaus.

Otto Gericke.

Justus Lipsius.

Pieter Collins.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

Job and his wife; after A. Diepenbeeck.

St. Dominic receiving the Rosary from the Virgin; after the same.

Descent from the Cross; after the same.

The Crucifixion; after J. van den Hoeck.

Venus suckling the Loves; after Rubens.

Flight into Egypt; after the same.

Christ in the Tomb; after the same.

Christ at the Pharisee's Table; after L. Cigoli.

GALLE, CORNELIS, the third, born at Antwerp in 1642, is supposed by some to have been the son of Cornelis Galle the younger, and by him to have been instructed in the art of engraving. His productions are but little known, or are confused with those of his better-known ancestors.

GALLE, HIERONYMUS. In the Uffizi Gallery at Florence is a picture of a 'Festoon of Flowers,' signed Hieronymus Galle. f. A. 1655.

GALLE, JAN, a son and pupil of Theodoor Galle, was born at Antwerp in 1600, and died there in 1676. Among his plates are:

The Wise and Foolish Virgins; after Marten De Vos.

Twelve plates of Old Testament History.

Christ surrounded by the Instruments of His Passion.

The fat Cook and the thin Cook; after P. Brueghel the elder.

Lubricitas Vitæ Humanæ; after the same. 1553.

Judith giving the Head of Holofernes to a Slave; after H. Goltzius.

GALLE, PHILIPP, a Dutch engraver, was born at Haarlem in 1537. He founded a family of artists, who became conspicuous as engravers. He studied under Cuerehert, and afterwards established himself as an engraver and printseller at Antwerp, where he died in 1612. The number of his prints is considerable, and they are generally marked with one of the annexed ciphers:  or .

The following are his principal plates:

PORTRAITS.

Jean Calvin.

Martin Luther.

Ulrich Zwingli.

Wilibald Pirckheimer.

Sir Thomas More.

Dante Alighieri.

Marten van Heemskerk, painter.

Willem Philander, architect.

The Statue of the Duke of Alva. 1571.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The Seasons; after Marten van Heemskerk. 1563.

The Three Young Men in the Furnace; after the same. 1565.

Abraham sacrificing Isaac; after the same.

Lot and his Daughters; after the same. 1558.

Mutius Scævola in the Tent of Porsena; after the same. 1563.

GALLE, THEODOOR, the elder son of Philipp Galle, was born at Antwerp in 1571, and was instructed in the use of the graver by his father. He afterwards went to Rome to study the antique, and whilst there he engraved several plates after the great masters. He died at Antwerp in 1633 or 1634. The following are his principal works:

The Portrait of Justus Lipsius; oval.

St. Jerome kneeling.

St. John.

St. Hildrude and St. Hildegonde.

A set of emblematical subjects; entitled 'Litibus abusus, &c.'

A set of plates of the Life of St. Norbert; published at Antwerp.

Twenty-eight plates of the Life of the Virgin and St. Joseph.

A set of thirteen figures, each with a title and explanation; entitled 'Typus occasionis, &c.' 1600.

The Infant Jesus regarding the Instruments of the Passion.

A Frontispiece to Mascard's 'Silvarum libri'; after a design by Rubens. 1622.

A Frontispiece to 'Las Obras en Verso' of Francisco de Boria; after the same. 1654.

GALLEGOS, FERNANDO, a Spanish painter, was born at Salamanca in 1475. It is said that he studied under Albrecht Dürer, but it is more likely that Berruguete was his master; and he only followed the taste which then prevailed in Europe. Some of his pictures bear so strong a resemblance to those of Dürer, that acknowledged connoisseurs have mistaken them. His best work is an altarpiece in the chapel of St. Clement at Salamanca. Count Raczyński, in his work 'Les Arts en Portugal,' says there are many of Gallegos's pictures there, but neither Palomino nor Cean Bermudez mentions the circumstance of his having painted in Portugal. He died in 1550. There are six scriptural subjects by him in the Madrid Gallery.

GALLETTI, Fra FILIPPO MARIA, a Florentine painter, was born in 1664, and died in 1742. His portrait is in the Uffizi.

GALLI, ALESSANDRO, called ALESSANDRO DA BIBIENA, a painter and architect, was a son of Ferdinando Galli. He was skilful in both oil and fresco painting, and was employed at the court of the Elector Palatine, in whose service he died about the year 1760.

GALLI, ANTONIO, was a brother of Alessandro Galli, and, like him, a painter and architect. He was born at Bologna in 1700, and died at Milan in 1774. He painted theatrical decorations.

GALLI, CARLO, a son of Giuseppe Galli, was, like his father, a painter and architect. He visited the various courts of Germany, as well as those of England, France, and Italy, and is known to have been still living in 1769.

GALLI, FERDINANDO, called FERDINANDO DA BIBIENA, the son of Giovanni Maria Galli, was born at Bologna in 1657. His father dying when he was only eight years of age, he was placed in the school of Carlo Cignani, who, finding the genius of his pupil led him to architecture and perspective, rather than the design of the figure, recommended him to devote himself to that particular department, which he thereupon studied under Aldrovandini, Trogli, and Manni, and with such success that he became the most distinguished master of his time in the ornamental and decorative branches of the art. There was scarcely a sovereign in Europe who did not invite him to his court. He was much engaged for the Dukes of Parma and Milan, and was invited to Vienna by the Emperor Charles VI. The public festivals on all occasions of victories, the triumphal entries of princes, &c., were celebrated under the direction of Bibiena, and were more sumptuous and magnificent than any before witnessed in Europe. He became blind, and died at Bologna in 1743. A painting by him is in the National Gallery. It is entitled the 'Teatro Farnese, Parma,' and represents the pit and stage of a theatre, in which 'Othello' is being played. To him the theatre is indebted for very great improvements in its scenery, and the illusive enchantment of its decorations. But his talents were not confined to scene-painting; he painted also many admirable architectural and perspective views, which are placed in the principal galleries in Italy. In these, the figures are usually painted by his brother Francesco. He likewise published several works on civil architecture.

GALLI, FRANCESCO, called FRANCESCO DA BIBIENA, the younger brother of Ferdinando Galli, was born at Bologna in 1659. He first studied under Lorenzo Pasinelli; but he was afterwards instructed in the school of Carlo Cignani. His knowledge of architecture and perspective was considerable; but he excelled in figures. He worked successively for the Emperors Leopold I. and Joseph I., and was invited to Madrid by Philip V., who appointed him his principal architect. He died in 1739.

GALLI, GIOVANNI MARIA, called GIOVANNI MARIA DA BIBIENA, was born at Bibiena, in the Bolognese state, in 1625. He studied under Albani, and his productions have often been mistaken for those of his master. He died in 1665. Of his larger works in the churches at Bologna the following are the most esteemed: 'The Ascension,' in the Certosa; 'St. Anne,' in La Carità; 'St. Andrew,' in San Biagio; and 'St. Francis of Sales,' at the Padri Servi. This artist was the founder of a family of whom no fewer than nine are known to fame, all of whom bore the surname of Bibiena.

GALLI, GIUSEPPE, a painter and architect, was a son of Ferdinando Galli, and was born in 1696. After studying under his father, he worked in conjunction with him at Barcelona and Vienna, and afterwards by himself at several German courts. He died at Berlin in 1756.

GALLI, MARIA ORIANA, was a daughter of Giovanni Maria Galli, who studied painting under Carlo Cignani and Franceschini.

GALLIARI, BERNARDINO, an Italian painter, was born at Andorno about 1707, and died about 1794. There is an 'Adoration of the Shepherds' by him in the Brera at Milan.

GALLIARI, GASPARE, an Italian painter, was born at Treviglio about 1760, and died at Milan in 1818. In the Brera at Milan is a view of Venice by him.

GALLIMARD, CLAUDE, a French engraver, was born at Troyes, in Champagne, in 1720. He passed some time at Rome, and on his return to France became a member of the Academy at Paris. We have by him several plates after De Troy, Subleyras, and Sébastien Bourdon. He also engraved a number of ornaments for books, among which are fourteen frontispieces and vignettes after Cochin the younger. The following also are by this artist:

The Bust of Nicolas Vleughels; after M. A. Slodtz. 1744.

The Queen of Sheba before Solomon; after J. F. de Troy.

GALLINA, REMIGIO CANTA. See CANTA-GALLINA.

GALLINARI, JACOPO, who was probably born at Bologna, worked there in 1676, and at Padua in 1685. He is known by two etchings, 'A Lady,' and 'Venus and Cupid.'

GALLINARI, PIETRO, called PIETRO DEL SIGNOR GUIDO, was a native of Bologna, and a favourite scholar of Guido Reni. He painted a few historical pictures, which are said to have been retouched by Guido. He died young in 1664.

GALLIS, PIETER, an amateur painter of flowers, fruit, and objects of still-life, was born in 1633, and lived at Enkhuysen, where he died in 1697.

GALLIZI, FEDE. See GALIZIA.

GALLO, IL PRETE. See GUILLAUME, Le Frère.

GALLO, BERNARDO and GIOVANNI. See SALOMON.

GALLO, SAN. See SANGALLO.

GALLOCHE, LOUIS, a French painter, born in Paris in 1670, was a scholar of Louis de Boullogne, but afterwards studied in Italy. Upon his return to France he founded a school, and one of his first pupils was François Le Moine. His picture of 'Hercules restoring Alcestis to her Husband' gained him his election to the Academy in 1711, of which he became successively professor in 1720, rector in 1746, and chancellor in 1754. He died in Paris in 1761. The above painting is now in the Louvre, while in the cathedral of Notre-Dame in Paris is a picture by him of the 'Departure of St. Paul for Jerusalem.' His chief work was the 'Removal of the Remains of St. Augustine to Pavia,' a picture which has disappeared.

GALLUS, BERNARDUS and JOANNES. See SALOMON.

GALLUS, RICARDUS. See TAURINI.

GALOFRE y COMA, JOSÉ, a Spanish historical painter, was born at Barcelona, and died in the same city in 1877. He studied in Rome, where he became an associate of Overbeck. In 1854 he painted for the Queen of Spain 'An Episode from the Conquest of Granada in 1494.' He also published a book on 'Art in Italy and other Countries of Europe.'

GALVAN, JUAN, a Spanish painter, was born at Lucena, in the kingdom of Aragon, in 1598. According to Palomino, he went to Rome for improvement, where he remained some time, and on his return to Spain in 1624 resided chiefly at Zaragoza, where he was named painter by the Corporation, and executed various pictures for the cathedral and Carmelite convent. For the cathedral of Zaragoza he executed pictures of the 'Nativity,' 'Santa Justa,' and 'Santa Rufina,' as well as other large works, which Cean Bermudez praises for their colouring. He painted the cupola of Santa Justa y Rufina, and a picture of the 'Trinity' for the Barefooted Carmelites; but his principal work was the 'Birth of the Virgin.' He died at Zaragoza in 1658.

GAMARRA, JUAN CIRILO MAGADAN Y. See MAGADAN.

GAMBARA, LATTANZIO, born at Brescia in 1541 or 1542, was the son of a tailor, who, driven by necessity from his native city, took refuge at Cremona, and supported himself and his son by the exercise of his trade, which he destined the latter to follow. The disposition of the boy inclined to a different pursuit, and he employed all his leisure moments in sketching, for which he was often severely chastised by his father. These quarrels, and their cause, came to the knowledge of Antonio Campi, a painter of Cremona, who interested himself in favour of the youth; and, on examining his drawings, found in them evidence of genius, and prevailed on his father to entrust him to his care. He studied in the school of the Campi for six years; and when he was eighteen years of age, he was placed under the tuition of Girolamo Romanino, who entertained a high opinion of his talents, and ultimately gave him his daughter in marriage. He surpassed his father-in-law both in the correctness of his design, and in the grandeur of his compositions. To the principles he had acquired under the Campi, he added the charm of Venetian colouring, in which he approached the rich tones of Pordenone. In the Strada del Gambaro at Brescia are several fine fresco paintings by him of mythological and classical subjects; but these are less surprising than his admirable works in the cloisters of the Benedictine Fathers of Sant' Eufemia at Brescia. They represent 'Moses and the Brazen Serpent,' 'Cain slaying Abel,' 'Samson and Delilah,' 'Judith with the Head of Holofernes,' 'Jael and Sisera,' and a 'Deposition from the Cross.' In the Castello at Brescia are frescoes of the 'Triumphs of Bacchus.' The most studied of his works are his twelve frescoes in the cathedral at Parma, representing subjects from the Life of our Saviour, which captivate even in their close proximity to Correggio's masterpieces. Of his oil pictures, the most admired are the 'Birth of the Virgin,' in the church of San Faustino Maggiore at Brescia; and a 'Pietà,' in San Pietro at Cremona. In the Glasgow Gallery is the Head of a Female. He died in 1574, in consequence of a fall from a ladder.

GAMBARINI, GIUSEPPE, born at Bologna in 1680, was a scholar of Lorenzo Pasinelli, until the death of that master, when he entered the school of Cesare Gennari, whose style he followed in his colouring, and some of whose works he copied. Finding himself unequal to the dignity of historical painting, he abandoned it, and applied himself to subjects taken from ordinary life, in which he was more successful. He died in 1725. There are some of his works in the churches at Bologna: in Santa Maria Egiziaca, is a picture of that Saint; and at the Osservanti, 'St. Catharine Vigri's Entrance into Bologna.'

GAMBERUCCI, COSIMO, a Florentine painter, flourished about the year 1610, and was a scholar of Battista Naldini. He did not attain to great celebrity in the art, although some of his works in the churches at Florence, particularly his picture of 'St. Peter curing the lame Man,' in San Pietro Maggiore, just amount to respectability. He also painted easel pictures, which are found in the collections at Florence.

GAMELIN, JACQUES, a French painter, was born at Carcassone in 1739, and died at Narbonne in 1803. There are by him in the Bordeaux Museum, 'Socrates drinking Hemlock,' 'The Departure of Abradates for the Fight,' and 'The Death of Abradates.'

GAMMON, JAMES, was an English engraver of no great reputation, by whom there are a few portraits, executed in a stiff, formal style. He was working in London about 1660. Among others, the following are by him:

Queen Catharine of Braganza.
Henry, Duke of Gloucester.
George, Duke of Albemarle.
Richard Cromwell.
Sir Toby Matthews.
Edward Mascal, the painter.

GAMPERLIN. See GRAF, URS.

GANDIA, JUAN DE, was a Spanish painter, celebrated for his pictures of architecture and perspective views. He lived about 1720.

GANDINI, ANTONIO, was a native of Brescia, who had the advantage of being educated under Paolo Veronese, whose style he followed, together with something of that of Palma. He possessed a fertile invention, and was a correct designer, as is apparent in his principal work, the 'Crucifixion,' in the old cathedral at Brescia. He died in 1630. He left a son, BERNARDINO GANDINI, who was also a painter, and who died in 1651.

GANDINI, GIORGIO, sometimes called GIORGIO DEL GRANO, from the family name of his mother, was a native of Parma, who died in 1538. Orlandi not only states that he was a disciple of Correggio, but also asserts that his pictures were occasionally retouched by that master. The Padre Zapata, in his description of the churches of Parma, ascribes to this painter the great altarpiece of San Michele, which had erroneously been attributed by Ruta, in his 'Guida di Parma,' to Lelio Orsi. Correggio had been engaged to paint the tribune of the dome of that church, but died before it was commenced; and the commission was offered to Gandini, who also was prevented by death from executing it. In the Oldenburg Gallery are pictures of a 'Penitent Magdalen' and a 'Holy Family.'

GANDOLFI, GAETANO, an Italian painter and etcher, was born at San Matteo della Decima, in the Bolognese, in 1734. He first studied under his elder brother, Ubaldo, then he went to Venice, and from thence to Bologna. He painted several pictures for the churches at Bologna, and other cities in Italy, of which the most esteemed are, 'The Assumption,' in the ceiling of Santa Maria della Vita, and 'The Marriage at Cana,' in the church of the Santissimo Salvatore, at Bologna; 'The Martyrdom of St. Pantaleone,' in the church of the Girolimini at Naples, and his own portrait, in the Pinacoteca. There are likewise by this artist an etching of the 'Adoration of the Shepherds,' after the picture by Niccolò dell' Abbate, in the Palazzo Leoni at Bologna; also 'St. Peter and St. Paul' after Guido Reni. He died at Bologna in 1802.

GANDOLFI, MAURO, an engraver, was born at Bologna in 1764, and studied under his father, Gaetano Gandolfi. Early in life he entered the army, and came with his regiment to Paris, where he devoted himself to engraving. He afterwards visited England, and there studied under Sharp and Bartolozzi, returning by way of Rome to Bologna, where he for a while pursued oil painting. His first large engraving was 'Diogenes before Alexander' (1802), after his father. An unpleasant critique of one of his productions affected him so much that he left Europe, and travelled in America, and afterwards in Africa. In 1821 he returned to Bologna, engraved several plates after Correggio, and Raphael's 'St. Cecilia,' of which he also made a beautiful copy in water-colours. He also engraved 'The Child Jesus sleeping on the Cross,' 'Judith with the Head of Holofernes,' and various other subjects. In the Bologna Gallery is his portrait painted by himself. He died in 1834.

GANDOLFI, UBALDO, the elder brother of Gaetano Gandolfi, was born in 1728. He was both a painter and sculptor, and studied under Torelli and Graziani. His principal works are 'The Prophets' in San Giuliano at Bologna, his anatomical preparations for pupils, and in the Pinacoteca a 'Head of a Girl,' the 'Resurrection of Christ,' and a 'Holy Bishop.' He died at Bologna in 1781.

GANDY, JAMES, a portrait painter, born at Exeter in 1619, is said to have been instructed by Van Dyck. He went to Ireland under the protection of the Duke of Ormond, and painted many portraits of the nobility and gentry. He died in Ireland in 1689.

GANDY, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, was born in the second half of the 17th century. He was the son of James Gandy, and is supposed to have studied under Gaspar Smitz. He chiefly lived at Exeter, and many of his works are to be found in Devon and Cornwall. He died after 1715.

GANGLOFF, KARL WILHELM, a designer, born at Leutkirch in 1790, was one of those artists by nature who produce works of great promise in their youth before they have received any instruction. He was originally employed as a clerk, but on his artistic productions becoming in some degree known, he was induced in 1813 to go to Stuttgart and study under De Necker. Unhappily he died in 1814, at Merklingen in Würtemberg, but he has left several compositions from the Old and New Testament and the 'Nibelungen Lied' which show much originality and depth of feeling. Uhland has dedicated three sonnets to his memory.

GANIÈRES, JEAN, (or GAGNIÈRES,) a French engraver, flourished in Paris about the year 1650. He engraved a few plates after Blanchard, Valentine, &c., but was more employed on portraits. His plates are executed with the graver in a stiff and tasteless style. Among others, the following are by him:

The Penitent Magdalen; after J. Blanchard.
 A Boy sleeping, with a skull near him. 1640.
 Louis XIII. of France; an oval, with ornaments. 1640.
 Cardinal Flavio Chigi.
 M. de La Melleraye. 1679.

GANSES, PAUL, was a Neapolitan painter of sea pieces and moon-light effects, who lived in the 17th century.

GANTREL, ETIENNE, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1646, and died there in 1706. There are by this artist several plates of portraits and historical subjects, executed in a neat style, of which the following are the best:

PORTRAITS.

Louis XIV. of France; life-size.
 Sebastiano Pisani, Bishop of Verona.
 Antoine Bruneau, President of La Tournelle; after La Dame.
 J. L. de La Bourdonnaye, Bishop of Lyons; after Fontaine.
 M. Poncet de La Rivière. 1682.
 Louis Berrier, Counsellor to the King. 1674.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Rod of Moses, changed into a Serpent, devouring the Rods of the Magicians of Pharaoh; after N. Poussin.
 The Israelites passing the Red Sea; after the same.
 The Israelites dancing round the Golden Calf; after the same.
 The Descent from the Cross; after the same.
 St. Francis Xavier restoring an Indian to life; after the same.
 St. Gervais and St. Protas before the Proconsul; after Le Sueur.
 St. Benedict kneeling; after Philippe de Champagne.
 St. Francis in ecstasy; after Carracci.
 The Head of Christ; after Le Brun.

GANZ, JOHANN PHILIPP, a German engraver, born at Eisenach in 1746, was appointed engraver to the Court of Hanover.

GARAVAGLIA, GIOVITA, an Italian engraver, was born at Pavia in 1790, and studied under Anderloni. In 1803 he entered the Academy of Milan, where in 1813 his 'Herodias,' after Luini, gained a prize, and in 1817 another was adjudged to him for his 'Holy Family in a Landscape,' after Raphael. In 1833 he was elected Professor of Engraving at Florence, where he died in 1835. His principal works are:

The Madonna and Infant St. John; after Gimignani.
 Hagar and Ishmael; after Barocci.
 Jacob and Rachel; after Appiani.
 The Magdalen; after C. Dolci.
 The Ascension; after Guido Reni.
 Charles V.; after the same.

GARBIERI, CARLO, the son and scholar of Lorenzo Garbieri, painted historical subjects in the style of his father. In the church of San Giovanni in Monte, at Bologna, is a picture by him of the 'Death of St. Mary of Egypt'; and in San Paolo is one of 'St. Paul taken up into Heaven.'

GARBIERI, LORENZO, called IL NIPOTE, was born at Bologna in 1580, and was brought up in the school of Lodovico Carracci, of whose style he was one of the most successful imitators. Naturally of a dark and gloomy turn of mind, he selected the most austere and melancholy subjects; and his pictures generally represent the most tragical and terrible events, as massacres, martyrdoms, and pestilence. To the style of the Carracci, he added something of the vigorous light and shadow of Caravaggio. Such are his pictures in the church of Sant' Antonio at Milan, which Sant' Agostino, in his 'Catalogo,' has attributed to the Carracci. In San Paolo de' Barnabiti at Bologna he painted the 'Plague of Milan,' with St. Charles Borromeo communicating the diseased; and a 'Penitential Procession.' At the Filippini at Fano is an admirable picture of 'St. Paul raising Eutychus,' painted with such power and expression that it excites both terror and devotion. In San Maurizio at Mantua is his celebrated 'Martyrdom of St. Felicità and the seven Virgins.' At Bologna, in the church of San Lodovico, is a fine picture of the 'Death of St. Joseph'; at the Cappuccini, the 'Crucifixion'; in S. Michele in Bosco, scenes from the life of St. Benedict and St. Cecilia; and at the Pinacoteca, 'The Magician Circe.' In consequence of his marriage with a rich lady, he abandoned his profession many years before his death, which took place in 1654.

GARBO, RAFFAELINO DEL. See CAPPONI.

GARCIA, BERNABÉ, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid in 1679, and died in the same city in 1731. He was a scholar of Juan Delgado, and painted 'The Four Doctors of the Church' for a church at Alcalá de Henares.

GARCIA, FERRER, ('the Licentiate Don Pedro'), though an ecclesiastic, exercised the profession of a painter at Valencia and Madrid, about the middle of the 17th century, and obtained a great reputation, especially in perspective. He painted Crucifixions, one of which bears date 1632, and the usual religious subjects. His collection of pictures by the great masters, as well as his own performances, was sold at his death for a large sum.

GARCIA, FRANCISCO, was a Spanish painter at Murcia, at the commencement of the 17th century, as is shown by the inscription on an altar-piece in the chapel of Los Velez, in the cathedral of that city; it represents 'St. Luke writing.' The artist was in the employ of the Marquis de los Velez.

GARCIA, MIGUEL and GERONIMO, were twin brothers, and canons of the Collegiate Church of San Salvador at Granada, one being a painter and the other a sculptor; the first coloured the images which the second carved. They followed the style, and perhaps profited by the instruction, of Alonso Cano.

GARCIA DE MIRANDA, JUAN, was born of Asturian parents at Madrid in 1677, and studied painting under Juan Delgado, producing chiefly devotional pictures, particularly 'Immaculate Conceptions,' for private patrons. Born without a right hand, he made use of the stump of the arm to hold pencils, maulstick, &c. He was appointed to clean and restore the pictures injured in the fire at the Alcazar, and acquitted himself so well as to be appointed, in 1735, painter-in-ordinary to Philip V. He also held, with Palomino, from 1724, the post of public valuer of pictures. He died in 1749, leaving a son JUAN, of great promise as a painter, who, however, died at the age of twenty-one. His brother and disciple, NICOLAS GARCIA DE MIRANDA, who was born in 1698, and died in 1738, painted landscapes with religious figures.

GARCIA HIDALGO, JOSEF, was a Spanish painter, who wrote notes of his life, but omitted to state where and when he was born. From circumstances narrated by him it is conjectured that he was a native of Murviedro, in Murcia, and born about 1656. He was named by the artists of the day 'El Castellano.' He studied in the city of Murcia, under Mateo Gilarte and Nicolas de Villacis. After passing some years under those masters he went to Italy, and at Rome became a scholar of Giacinto Brandi, under whose tuition he made considerable progress. Pietro da Cortona, Salvator Rosa, and Carlo Maratti assisted him with their counsels; but the climate of Italy proving detrimental to his health, he returned to Spain, where he attached himself to Carreño, and, though far advanced in the art, worked as a young pupil. In 1674 he went to Madrid, and was employed by Charles II. in a series of twenty-four pictures on the life of St. Augustine, for the cloisters of San Felipe el Real, which occupied him, with other commissions from the king, till 1711. He was also much employed by Philip V., who made him his principal painter in 1703, and shortly after a chevalier of the order of St. Michael. In the latter part of his life he retired to the convent of San Felipe, and died there probably soon after 1711, but in what year is not known. He published 'Principios para estudiar la nobilissima arte de la Pintura,' 1691, and several other works on anatomy and painting for the benefit of students. His productions are at Madrid, Valencia, Sigüenza, San Jago, and Guadalajara.

GARCIA REYNOSO, ANTONIO, a Spanish painter, was born at Cabra, in Andalucia, in 1623, and studied under Sebastian Martinez, an artist of some eminence, at Jaen. He painted landscapes and historical subjects; and there are several of his works noticed by Palomino, particularly an altar-piece in the church of the Capuchins at Andujar, representing the 'Trinity,' with several Saints. There are also some of his pictures in the churches and private collections at Cordova, in which city he died in 1677.

GARCIA SALMERON, CRISTOBAL, a Spanish painter, born at Cuenca in 1603, was a disciple of Pedro Orrente. He was a good painter of historical subjects and of animals, one of his most esteemed works being a picture of the 'Nativity,' in the church of San Francisco at Cuenca. He was employed by Philip IV. to paint a bull-fight in honour of the birthday of Charles II. of Spain, and he executed several works for the cathedral at Cuenca and for the convent of Barefooted Carmelites. He died at Madrid in 1666.

GARDELLE, ROBERT, born at Geneva in 1682, studied under Largillière in Paris, where he distinguished himself as a portrait painter, producing also etchings of portraits and of views of Geneva. He died in 1766.

GARDELLE, THÉODORE, a Swiss miniature painter, was born in 1722 at Geneva, where he was apprenticed to an engraver. He was of dissipated habits, and wandered about from Geneva to Paris, Brussels, and finally to London, where he was executed for murder in 1761.

GARDINER, WILLIAM NELSON, an Irish engraver, was born at Dublin in 1766. He studied at the Dublin Academy, and then came to London, where, after various vicissitudes, he became an assistant to Bartolozzi, with whom he prepared plates for Harding's Shakespeare, De Grammont's 'Memoirs,' and Lady Diana Beauclerk's illustrations to Dryden's 'Fables.' He subsequently studied at Cambridge, with a view of taking orders, but afterwards took to copying portraits, and finally became a bookseller. He died by suicide in London in 1814.

GARDNER, DANIEL, an English portrait painter, born at Kendal in 1750, studied at the Royal Academy, and was patronized by Reynolds. His portraits, which were in oil and crayons, were successful, and he was enabled to retire early from practice. He died in London in 1805.

GARDNER, THOMAS, was an English engraver, who lived in the first half of the 18th century. He chiefly worked for the booksellers, and engraved a set of plates for the 'Book of Common Prayer,' paraphrased by James Harris in 1735.

GARDNOR, Rev. JAMES, an English landscape painter, was born in 1729. In 1767 he received a premium at the Society of Arts, and his works, both in oil and water-colours, appeared at the Royal Academy from 1782 to 1796. He furnished illustrations for Williams's 'History of Monmouthshire,' and published 'Views on the Rhine' in 1788. He was Vicar of Battersea, where he died in 1808.

GAREIS, FRANZ, a painter, born at Marienthal in 1776, studied at Dresden under Casanova. He afterwards went to Rome, where by his picture of 'Orpheus in the Lower World,' he gained a considerable reputation, but unfortunately he died at Rome in 1803, at the early age of twenty-seven.

GAREMYN, JAN, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Bruges in 1712, and studied under Louis Roons and Matthias De Visch. He painted numerous altar-pieces for the churches at Bruges and Courtrai; and others for private persons at Brussels and Ghent. His pictures are highly esteemed by his countrymen for their warmth of colouring. He painted several pictures in imitation of Rembrandt and Teniers, and designed and executed several of the plates for the 'Chronicles of Flanders,' published in 1736. He became professor in the Academy of Bruges, and died in that city in 1799.

GARGIUOLI, DOMENICO, called MICCO SPADARO, an historical and landscape painter, born at Naples in 1612, was a fellow-student with Salvator Rosa, in the school of Aniello Falcone. He was employed in decorating the architectural views of his friend Viviani Codagora with a number of small figures in the style of Callot and Della Bella. He died in 1679. The following paintings by him are known:

Gotha.	Gallery.	Two Men playing at Cards.
		Two Ship Boys.
Naples.	Museum.	Revolution of 1647.
"	"	The Piazza di Mercatello in 1648.
"	"	Court of the Convent of San Martino.
Paris.	Louvre.	A Combat in the Crusades.

GARIBALDO, MARC ANTONIO, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1620, and in 1651-2 became a member of the Guild of St. Luke. He painted for the Jesuits' College at Antwerp a picture of 'The Virgin, as the Queen of Martyrs.' The date of his death is unknown, but he was living in 1690. There are by him:

Flight into Egypt. (Antwerp Gallery.)
St. Bernard reproving William of Aquitaine. (St. Gilles, Bruges.)

GARIGUE, —, was a French painter of the 18th century, by whom there is a portrait of Charles de Siffredy de Mornas in the Avignon Museum.

GARNER, THOMAS, a line-engraver, was born at Birmingham in 1789, where he was apprenticed to a Mr. Lines. In the early part of this century he contributed many engravings to the various Annuals that flourished at that period; he also executed several plates for the 'Art Journal,' of which that of 'L'Allegro,' after W. E. Frost, R.A., is considered one of his best works. He passed nearly all his life in Birmingham, where he executed many portraits of local celebrities, and died in 1868.

GARNERAY, AMBROISE LOUIS, a French marine painter, born in Paris in 1783, received his first instruction from his father, Jean François Garneray. At the age of thirteen he went to sea, and after various adventures (of which he subsequently published an illustrated history) was taken prisoner by the English in 1806. He remained in England till 1814, and on his return to France was patronized by Louis XVIII. A 'View of the Port of London' was his first exhibited work in 1816, and he received a gold medal in 1819. In 1833 he was appointed director of the Rouen Museum, and he subsequently designed for the Sèvres manufactory for six years. He studied aquatint, and designed and engraved sixty-four views of the principal ports of France, and forty views of foreign ports, which were published with text by Jouy in 1821-32. At the Paris Exhibition of 1855 he received a medal for his invention of a new kind of artists' canvas. He died in Paris in 1857. Amongst his works are:

Boulogne.	Museum.	View of Sidon: sun setting.
Marseilles.	Museum.	The Canal at Furnes.
Nantes.	Museum.	An Incident of the Battle of Navarino. 1853.
Rochefort.	Museum.	The Frigate 'Virginie' attacking an English Squadron.
Rochelle.	Museum.	The Capture of the 'Kent.'
Rouen.	Museum.	Cod Fishing off Newfoundland. 1839.
Versailles.	Gallery.	Battle of Augusta. 1836.
"	"	Battle of Navarino.
"	"	The Return from Elba.

GARNERAY, AUGUSTE, the second son of Jean François Garneray, was born in Paris in 1785, and died there in 1824. He studied under Isabey, and painted chiefly in water-colours. Besides numerous portraits, he has produced several pictures from tales of interest, as also designs for vignettes, and for a work on Egypt.

GARNERAY, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French painter of portraits, architectural views, and fanciful subjects, was born in Paris in 1755, and died at Auteuil in 1837. He was a pupil of David, and his earlier portraits are said to be in the Flemish style.

GARNIER, ANTOINE, was a French engraver, who flourished in Paris from about 1625 to 1646. He etched his plates in a bold style, and finished them with the graver. He engraved some of the paintings by Primaticcio at Fontainebleau, and a set of twelve plates after the pictures by the same painter in the chapel of Fleury. He also engraved some plates after Nicolas Poussin and Michelangelo da Caravaggio, and the following after J. Blanchard:

The Holy Family.
Charity.
St. John the Baptist.
St. Sebastian.

He usually marked his plates with the cipher .

GARNIER, ETIENNE BARTHÉLEMY, a French portrait and historical painter, was born in Paris in 1759. He was a pupil successively of Durameau, Doyen, and Vien, and obtained the "grand prix" in 1788. His subjects are chiefly from the ancient poets, or relating to the popular monarchs of France, such as Dagobert, Henry IV., and Napoleon.

544

In 1828 he was an unsuccessful competitor with Horace Vernet for the directorship of the School of Rome. At Avignon is a portrait of Cardinal Maury. He died in Paris in 1849.

GARNIER, LOUIS HIPPOLYTE, a painter and lithographer, excelled in miniature portrait painting. He was born in Paris in 1802, and died there in 1855. Among his lithographs are 'Rebekah,' and 'Ruth and Boaz' after Chopin; 'On the road to Market,' after Eugène Devéria; and others after Ary Scheffer, Schlesinger, &c.

GARNIER, NOEL, one of the earliest French engravers, was born about the year 1490, and died later than 1540. He engraved some grotesque ornaments, with the Gothic alphabet in forty-eight plates of figures representing the Arts, Sciences, Trades, &c. There is also a plate by him of several naked men fighting, bearing some resemblance to the style of Hans Sebald Beham, though very inferior; it is marked  on a tablet. He is called 'The Master of the Knot.' Other plates of his are a 'St. Anthony,' copied from Albrecht Dürer, and 'The Triumph of Bacchus,' from G. Pencz.

GAROFALO, BENVENUTO DA. See TISI.

GARRARD, GEORGE, an animal painter, was born in 1760. He studied under Sawrey Gilpin, and in 1778 entered the schools of the Royal Academy, at which he first exhibited in 1781. He practised largely in modelling, and in 1800 was elected an Associate of the Academy. He died at Brompton in 1826. Amongst his works are:

View of a Brewhouse Yard. 1784.
Sheep Shearing. 1793.
A Peasant attacked by Wolves in the Snow. 1802.
An Agricultural Show. (Woburn Abbey.)

GARRARD, MARC. See GEERARTS.

GARRET, WILLIAM, a wood-engraver, practised at Newcastle in the 18th century. He published a series of thirteen small designs, the last of which is 'Death leading a Female to the Grave.'

GÄRTNER, GEORG, the elder and the younger, were painters who lived at Nuremberg in the 17th century, the former dying in 1640, and the latter in 1654. The elder painter executed portraits in water-colours, whilst the younger was an imitator and copyist of Dürer.

GÄRTNER, JOHANN PHILIPP EDUARD, an architectural painter, was born at Berlin in 1801. He was taught painting when a child by Müller at Cassel, and returned to Berlin when but twelve years of age to paint in a porcelain factory. In 1821 he made a student's tour to the North Sea, and then engaged himself to Gropius. Three years' study in Paris followed, and he then devoted himself to architectural painting. In 1837-39 he worked in Russia for the Emperor Nicholas. He died at Berlin in 1877. Many of his architectural pictures are in the royal palaces, and one is in the National Gallery of that city. In the Leipsic Gallery is an Italian landscape.

GARVEY, EDMUND, a landscape painter in both oil and water-colours, is supposed, from his connection, to have been of an Irish family. In 1770 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and an Academician in 1783. He lived at Bath from 1769 to 1777, and died in 1813. He imitated Richard Wilson, to a certain extent, in his manner of painting.

GARZI, LUIGI, was born at Pistoja in 1638, and studied under S. Boccali, in his native city, until he was fifteen years of age. In 1653 he went to Rome, where he entered the school of Andrea Sacchi, of whom he was the favourite disciple, and became one of the most eminent painters of his time. He was the contemporary and rival of Carlo Maratti. After having painted several pictures for the public edifices at Rome, he was invited to Naples to paint in the church of Santa Caterina a Formello, and in the royal palace. In the cathedral at Pescia he painted an immense picture of the 'Assumption,' which is considered his best performance. Of his works at Rome, the principal are the cupola of the Cibo chapel, in Santa Maria del Popolo; 'The Maries at the Tomb of our Saviour,' in Santa Marta; and the celebrated picture of 'The Prophet Joel,' in San Giovanni in Laterano. In the Liverpool Institution is a landscape by Salvator Rosa, with the figures by Luigi Garzi, and in the Munich Gallery is a 'Flight into Egypt.' He died in 1721.

GARZI, MARIO, was the son of Luigi Garzi, by whom he was instructed in art. He painted historical subjects in the style of his father, and was an artist of very promising talent, but died quite young. Two of his pictures are noticed in Pascoli's 'Guida di Roma.'

GARZON, JUAN, a Spanish painter, for a short time the pupil of Murillo, was associated with Meneses Osorio in many of his works, but none of his own are known to survive. He died at Madrid in 1729.

GARZONI, GIOVANNA, was a native of Ascoli, who flourished about the year 1630, and resided chiefly at Rome, where she distinguished herself as a painter of flowers, and of portraits in miniature. At Florence she painted the portraits of some of the Medici and other nobility. She died at Rome in 1673, and bequeathed all her property, which was considerable, to the Academy of St. Luke, where a marble monument is erected to her memory.

GASCAR, HENRI, a French portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1635, and visited England in the reign of Charles II. He was greatly patronized by the Duchess of Portsmouth, and met with so much encouragement, that he is said to have realized above ten thousand pounds during a residence of a few years. He left England about 1680, and died at Rome in 1701. His best portrait was that of Philip, Earl of Pembroke. He scraped a few miserable mezzotints, after his own pictures, among which is the portrait of the Duchess of Portsmouth, and that of James II. when Duke of York.

GASPARI, GIOVANNI PIETRO, born at Venice in 1735, painted the decorations for the Court Theatre at Munich, and etched fourteen architectural plates.

GASPARINI, GASPARE, was a native of Macerata, who flourished about the year 1585. He was a disciple of Girolamo da Sermoneta, whose style he followed, though in a less finished manner; as appears in his two pictures in the church of San Venanzio at Fabriano, representing 'The Baptism of Christ' and 'The Last Supper.' He is seen to more advantage in his picture of 'St. Peter and St. John curing the Lame Man,' in the same church, a grand composition, in which he seems to have imitated the style of Raphael. In the church of the Conventuali, in his native place, there is a fine picture of 'St. Francis receiving the Stigmata.'

GASPARINI, SEBASTIANO. In the 'Descrizione delle Pitture d'Ascoli,' by Orsini, a painter of this name is noticed, who painted several pictures in fresco, in a chapel in the church of San Biagio, in that city.

GASPARRI DI SPINELLO. See SPINELLI.

GASPERS, JAN BAPTIST, (or JASPERS,) a native of Antwerp, was a scholar of Thomas Willeborts. He visited England during the civil war, and was much employed by General Lambert. After the Restoration he became an assistant to Sir Peter Lely, and afterwards to Sir Godfrey Kneller. He drew well, and excelled in making designs for tapestry. The portrait of Charles II. in Painter-Stainers' Hall, and another of the same king, in the hall of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, were painted by him. He died in London in 1691.

GASSEL, LUCAS VAN, called also, from his birthplace, LUCAS VAN HELMONT, was a landscape painter, who was born about 1480. It is supposed that he resided chiefly at Brussels, where he died about 1555, but certainly not later than 1560. His landscapes are very rare: they are painted sometimes in oil, and sometimes in water-colours. There is a picture by him in the Vienna Gallery bearing his monogram and the date 1548, and there is another in the Lille Museum. His portrait by Jacob Bink is in the collection of "persons who died before 1572," engraved by Jan Wierix.

GASSEN, FRANCISCO, a painter of Barcelona, was born in 1598. He executed, in conjunction with Pedro Cuquet, a series of pictures on the Life of St. Francis of Paola, for the Minimite convent in his native city. He died at Barcelona in 1658.

GASSIES, JEAN BRUNO, a French historical and genre painter, was born at Bordeaux in 1786. He studied under Vincent and Lacroix, and died in Paris in 1832. He chiefly executed historical subjects from the Old and New Testaments, or from French history; but the pictures exhibited by him embrace a great variety of subjects—historical, poetical, and allegorical—landscapes, marine views, interiors of churches, and striking scenes on the coasts of England and France. Amongst his works are:

Hagar and Ishmael. 1811. (Brussels Gallery.)

Horace at the Tomb of Virgil. 1817.

Portrait of Louis XVIII. 1819. (Bordeaux Museum.)

The Communion of St. Louis. 1819.

The Clemency of Louis XII. 1824. (Versailles Gallery.)

View of the Church of Boulogne. 1826.

A Bivouac of the National Guard. 1831.

GASSNER, SIMON, a painter and engraver, was born at Steinberg in the Tyrol, in 1755. He studied in Munich under Gallrap and Demel, and excelled in historical and landscape painting. He was engaged by the Margrave of Baden to decorate a room at Carlsruhe, but returned to Munich in 1790, and was still living in 1825. He also engraved with the needle and in the aquatint manner, and produced an etching of the 'Temple in the English Garden in Munich,' which bears his monogram.

GAST, MICHEL DE. See DE GAST.

GASTINEAU, HENRY, a landscape painter in water-colours, was born in 1797. After studying in the schools of the Royal Academy, he commenced work as an engraver. He then took to oil-painting, but finally joined the Water-Colour Society as an Associate in 1818, being elected a full member in 1824. He was intimately connected with Turner, David Cox, Copley Fielding, and others of the English water-colour school. He died at Camberwell in 1876. Amongst his works are :

Penrhyn Castle. (South Kensington Museum.)
 Netley Abbey. (The same.)
 The Pass of Klamme, Styria. (Paris Exhibition, 1855.)
 Glenarm, Antrim. (London International Exhibition, 1862.)
 Hospice and Pass of St. Gothard. (The same.)
 The Pass of Killiecrankie. (Paris Exhibition, 1867.)

GASULL, AGUSTIN, an historical painter of Valencia, studied at Rome under Carlo Maratti. His 'St. Andrew,' 'St. Stephen,' 'La Vierge de l'Espérance,' and 'St. Joseph,' which he painted for the church of San Juan del Mercado at Valencia, are much admired; and there are many pictures by him in other churches of the same city. He died at Valencia at the commencement of the 18th century.

GATTA, BARTOLOMMEO DELLA. See DELLA GATTA.

GATTI, BERNARDINO, called IL SOJARO, or SOGLIARO, was born at Pavia in 1495. He was one of the ablest disciples of Correggio, and approached nearer to the style of his instructor than any other of his pupils. Parma, Piacenza, and Cremona are rich in his works, among which are a 'Riposo,' in the church of San Sigismondo, and a 'Nativity,' in San Pietro, at Cremona; and a 'Pietà,' in the church of La Maddalena at Parma. He succeeded Pordenone in the work left unfinished by that master in the tribune of Santa Maria di Campagna at Piacenza; where, according to Vasari, the whole appears to be by the same hand. One of his most considerable works is the 'Assumption,' in the cupola of the Madonna della Steccata, at Parma, painted in 1560, in which the Madonna is of the most captivating beauty. In the refectory of the church of San Pietro at Cremona is his great work of the 'Miracle of the Multiplication of the Loaves,' painted in 1552, a composition of many figures, larger than life, admirably varied in the heads and attitudes, and conducted with a beauty of colour, and a harmony of effect, which atone for some slight defects in the aerial perspective. An 'Ecce Homo' and a 'Crucifixion' by him are in the Museum at Naples. He died at Parma in 1575.

GATTI, GERVASIO, called IL SOJARO, was a native of Cremona, who flourished from the year 1571 to 1631. He was the nephew of Bernardino Gatti, under whom he studied, and from whom he learned to copy Correggio, as his early works testify, whilst his later ones are more in the manner of the Carracci. In the church of San Pietro at Cremona is a fine picture of the 'Death of St. Cecilia,' with a glory of angels, truly Correggiasque. He was also an excellent painter of portraits, upon which he was much employed.

GATTI, GIROLAMO, was born at Bologna in 1662, and was a scholar of Marc Antonio Franceschini, whilst his colouring is after the style of Cignani. Several of his works are in the churches and palaces at Bologna. In Santa Maria Incoronata is a picture of 'St. Augustine, St. Petronius, and St. Gregory, interceding for the Souls in Purgatory'; in the church of La Natività, the 'Presentation in the Temple'; and in the Palazzo Pubblico, 'Charles V. crowned by Pope Clement VII.' He, however, painted more works of a smaller class. He died in 1726.

GATTI, OLIVIERO, an Italian painter and engraver, was a native of Parma. He was a scholar of Giovanni Lodovico Valesio, and, from the resemblance of his style, although greatly inferior, to that of Agostino Carracci, was probably instructed in engraving by that master. His works as a painter are little known; but he engraved several plates, some of which are after his own designs, which possess considerable merit. He was received into the Academy at Bologna in 1626, and was working in that city up to 1648. The following prints are by him:

St. Francis Xavier kneeling on the sea-shore, and taking up a Crucifix, which is floating on the water; after his own design.

The Virgin caressing the Infant Christ; after Lorenzo Garbieri.

St. Jerome; after Agostino Carracci. 1602.

St. Roch. 1605.

An emblematical subject, representing an Armorial Bearing, supported by two River Gods, with an armed figure, standing alone, surrounded by Jupiter, Hercules, Neptune, Apollo, and Minerva; after L. Carracci.

A set of four small plates, representing the Deity forming the World, the Creation of Adam, the Sacrifice of Abraham, and Judith with the Head of Holofernes; after Pordenone.

A Drawing-book; after the designs of Guercino.

GATTI, TOMMASO, born at Pavia in 1642, was a scholar of Carlo Sacchi. He afterwards went to Venice, where he studied the works of the great masters of that celebrated school; and on his return to Pavia he painted several pictures for the churches.

GATTI, URIELE, called IL SOJARO, flourished about the year 1601, as appears from the date inscribed on a picture by him of the 'Crucifixion,' in the church of San Sepolcro at Piacenza. Lanzi conjectures that this painter was a brother of Gervasio Gatti.

GATTY, MARGARET, an amateur etcher, was born at Burnham in Norfolk in 1809. She was the daughter of Dr. Scott, Lord Nelson's chaplain, and married the Rev. Alfred Gatty, D.D., vicar of Ecclesfield, near Sheffield, in 1839. Between 1837 and 1843 she etched several landscapes, but she is best known as an authoress of books for children. She died at Ecclesfield in 1873.

GAUBERT, PIERRE, a French portrait painter who was working in 1701, was a member of the Academy. There is a portrait of a lady by him in the Dresden Gallery.

GAUCHER, CHARLES ÉTIENNE, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1740, was first a pupil of Basan, and afterwards of J. P. Le Bas. He died in Paris in 1804. He engraved several portraits and other subjects, of which the following are the principal:

PORTRAITS.

Maria Cecilia, Ottoman Princess, daughter of Achmet III.; after his own design.

M. du Faty, celebrated Advocate; after Notte.

Louis Gillet.

Louis Augustus, Dauphin of France; after Gautier.

J. P. Timoléon de Cossé, Duke of Bri sac; after St. Aubin.

Louis de Grimaldi, Bishop of Le Mans. 1767.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

An allegorical subject, to the memory of J. P. Le Bas; after Cochin.

The Crowning of Voltaire; after Moreau.

The Card-players; after Tilborch.

Repose; after Gaspar Netscher.

GAUDENZIO MILANESE. See FERRARI.

GAUDIN, LUIS PASCUAL, a Spanish painter, was born at Villafranca in Catalonia in 1556. He entered in 1595 the Carthusian monastery of Scala Dei, where he painted the 'Saviour washing the Disciples' Feet,' the 'Prayer in the Garden,' and two series of Evangelists and Apostles. For the Carthusian monastery at Seville he executed a series of pictures from the life of the Virgin, whom he has represented dressed in a Venetian robe with enormous sleeves and no veil—a breach of etiquette which endangered his reputation for orthodoxy; but the pictures are much praised by Cean Bermudez. He also executed a 'Last Supper' for Portaceli, near Valencia. He died in the monastery of Scala Dei in 1621.

GAUERMANN, FRIEDRICH, a landscape and animal painter, was born at Miesenbach on the Schneeberg in 1807. He was the son of Jakob Gauermann, and, in spite of his weak state of health, he showed talent very early, delighting in the study of animals. He wished to attend the Academy of Vienna, but had to give up the idea, on account of his health; he therefore had to content himself with painting the scenery of his native country in the summer, and with copying Dutch pictures, especially those of Ruisdael, Potter, Roos, Berchem, and Wouwerman, in Vienna in the winter. From 1825 to 1846 he made numerous excursions in various parts of Germany, and in 1836 became a member of the Academy at Munich. He died at Vienna in 1862. Amongst his works are:

A Peasant digging.
The End of the Chase.
Halt on the Mountain.
A Bear Hunt.
Wolves and Deer. (South Kensington Museum.)
Wild Boar and Wolf. (The same.)
The Harvest Waggon.
The Approach of a Storm.
Styrian Charcoal Burners.
Watering-Place in the Tyrol. (Berlin National Gallery.)
Tyrolean Village Smithy. (The same.)
The Labourer. (Vienna Gallery.)
Peasants reposing. (The same.)
Wolves and a Dead Horse. (Städel Institute, Frankfurt.)

GAUERMANN, JAKOB, a German landscape and genre painter and engraver, was born at Oeffingen, near Canstatt, in 1773. He at first worked as a stone-mason at Hohenheim, but his strong inclination for drawing brought him to the knowledge of Duke Charles of Württemberg, who enabled him to receive an education in art. After this he travelled for six years in Switzerland, but in 1798 he went to Vienna. After this he visited in succession the Tyrol and Styria, making sketches, which he worked up into water-colour drawings and oil pictures. He died at Vienna in 1843. He also executed several etchings of landscapes.

GAUFFIER, LOUIS, was born at La Rochelle in 1761. He was a pupil of Hugues Taraval, and he won the first prize for painting in 1784, at the same time as Drouais, the subject being the 'Woman of Canaan.' He exhibited as an Associate of the Academy in 1789, but his health necessitated a residence at Florence, where he died in 1801. 'The Three Angels with Abraham at Mamre,' and 'Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi, giving her jewels for the public good,' represent Gauffier in the Louvre. Among other works by him are 'Cleopatra,' 'Jacob and Laban's Daughter,' and 'Alexander and Hephestion.' His wife, PAULINE CHATILLON, to whom he was married at Rome, was a painter of genre subjects, and a pupil of Drouais. Many of her works were engraved by Bartolozzi, and she was herself an exhibitor at the Salon of 1798.

GAUGAIN, THOMAS, an engraver, born at Abbeville in 1748, came to England whilst young, and studied under Houston. He engraved many plates after Reynolds, Morland, Cosway, Northcote, and others, and died in London about 1805. The following are his principal works:

The Snow Man; after J. Barney.
The Young Pedlar; after the same.
Maria; after Müller.
The Death of Prince Leopold of Brunswick; after Northcote.
Mary Stuart hearing her death-warrant; after the same.

GAULLI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, called IL BACCIO, was born at Genoa in 1639. After acquiring the first principles of art in his native city under Borzone, he went to Rome, where, by studying the works of the best masters, aided by the counsel of Bernini, he soon rose into repute, and established a style of his own. The great vault of the church of the Gesù, at Rome, representing 'St. Francis Xavier taken up into Heaven,' is one of his most considerable works. He possessed the talent of always adapting his style to the character of his subject. In his picture of 'St. Anne kneeling before the Virgin and Infant,' with a beautiful group of angels, in the church of San Francesco a Ripa, he exhibits everything that is cheerful, pleasing and graceful. Contrasted with this is his 'Death of St. Francis Xavier,' in Sant' Andrea al Quirinale, which he has treated in an austere style, with all the solemnity and pathos which the subject requires. In the church of Sant' Agnese he painted the 'Four Cardinal Virtues,' and such is their force and brilliancy, that the neighbouring works of Ciro Ferri are nearly eclipsed by them. His best efforts were intended for fresco designs, and he excelled more particularly in his figures of children. He also painted portraits with distinguished reputation; and he is stated by Pascoli to have painted seven different pontiffs, and a great number of the distinguished personages of his time. His own portrait is in the Uffizi at Florence, and 'St. John the Baptist preaching,' is in the Dijon Museum. He is said to have etched a portrait of Cardinal Celio Piccolomini. He died in 1709.

GAULT DE SAINT GERMAIN, PIERRE MARIE, was born in Paris in 1754. He studied under Dumoreau, and died in 1822, leaving a very large number of historical, landscape, and fancy pictures, besides portraits. Among his portraits are those of Voltaire, Mademoiselle Clairon, Crébillon, and Stanislaus, King of Poland. He wrote accounts of the lives and works of Leonardo da Vinci and Nicolas Poussin; a 'Guide des Amateurs de Tableaux pour les Écoles allemande, flamande et hollandaise,' 1818; and other works relative to painting, in which he displayed much knowledge and judgment.

GAULTIER, J., a French engraver little known, was probably from his style a relation of Leonard Gaultier. Among others, he engraved some small plates of emblematical subjects.

GAULTIER, LEONARD, (or, as he sometimes signs himself, GALTER,) a French engraver, was born at Mayence about 1561, and died in Paris in 1641. His style of work resembles that of Wierix and Crispyn vande Passe. His prints are executed entirely with the graver, with great precision, but in a stiff, formal manner. He must have been very laborious, as the Abbé de Marolles possessed upwards of eight hundred prints by him, many of which were after his own designs. They consist of portraits, and various subjects, of which the following are the most worthy of notice. They are sometimes signed with his name, and sometimes with the cipher Gr.

PORTRAITS.

Henry IV. of France.
Henry, Duke of Montpensier.
J. Amyot, Bishop of Auxerre.
Alexandre Bouchart, Viscount de Blossville.
Philip de Mornay, Seigneur du Plessis. 1611.
Charles de Gontaut de Biron, Marshal of France.
Etienne Pasquier.
Jean Caron.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

A set of small plates of subjects from the Old and New Testament.
A set of the Prophets, Apostles, and Evangelists.
Thirty-two plates of the History of Cupid and Psyche; after Raphael.
The Procession of the League; a satirical print.
The Family of Henry IV.; nine figures.
The Assassination of Henry IV.
The Coronation of Mary de' Medici. 1610.
The Cyclops forging the Thunderbolts; after J. Cousin. 1581.
A Sacrifice; after M. Fréminet.
The Last Judgment; copied from Martin Rota's engraving after Michelangelo.

GAULTIER, PIERRE, a French painter and engraver, flourished from about 1730 to 1762, or later, and resided chiefly at Naples. He etched the following plates, after Francesco Solimena:

David and Bathsheba.
Ecce Homo!
The Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth.
St. Michael discomfiting the Evil Spirit.
The Defeat of Darius.
The Battle of the Centaurs.
The Four Quarters of the World; small ovals.

GAUTHEROT, CLAUDE, who was born in Paris in 1769, and died there in 1825, was a pupil of David, whose friendship involved him in the troubles of the Revolution. He opened a school of design where the most noted artists studied under his direction. His principal work, 'Napoleon haranguing his troops on the Bridge of the Lech at Augsburg,' is at Versailles.

GAUTHIER DAGOTY, ÉDOUARD, an engraver, the son and pupil of Jacques Fabien Gauthier Dagoty, was born in Paris in 1745, and died at Florence in 1785. In 1780 he issued a series of twelve plates, printed in colours, chiefly from the pictures in the gallery of the Duke of Orleans. He has also left plates after Correggio, Raphael, Titian, Van Dyck, and others.

GAUTHIER DAGOTY, JACQUES FABIEN, who was at the same time a painter, engraver, author, anatomist, and physical scientist, was born at Marseilles in 1717, but came to Paris in 1737, and there engaged in the business of printing in colours from several mezzotint plates. He was for a time an assistant to J. C. Le Blond, the inventor of this art, and after his death, in 1741, succeeded to the privilege of his patent. He died in Paris in 1786. He published a number of coloured illustrations of anatomy and natural history, as also some portraits, including those of Louis XV. and Cardinal Fleury.

GAUW, G., is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a singular plate of the 'Head of Mercury,' after J. Mathan, engraved in imitation of a pen-drawing.

GAVARNI. See CHEVALIER.

GAVASETTI, CAMILLO, was a native of Modena, who flourished about the year 1625. He studied under his father, Stefano Gavasetti, a miniature painter and gilder, but he rather followed the Carracci. His principal works are at Piacenza, where he is better known than at Parma or Modena. He was engaged with Piadini in painting Scriptural subjects, and at the Presbiterio, or parsonage of Sant' Antonio at Piacenza, is a fresco representing a subject from the Apocalypse, which was esteemed by Guercino the finest work of art in that city. He died young in 1628.

GAVASIO, AGOSTINO, was probably the son of Giovanni Giacomo Gavasio. There is by him in the parish church of Nembro, near Bergamo, an altar-piece of wood called "di Tutti Santi"; in San Niccolò, a repainted altar-piece with 'St. Augustine enthroned between St. Stephen and St. Lawrence'; in San Sebastiano, an altar-piece with the 'Virgin and Child'; and in the court of the Casa Longhi, a fresco of the 'Virgin and Child, with Saints.' Tassi notices a picture by this master in the parochial church of San Giacomo at Piazzatore, in the valley of Brembana, of the 'Virgin and Infant,' dated 1527.

GAVASIO, GIOVANNI GIACOMO, a native of Poscante, in the valley of Brembana, was a Bergamese artist who flourished early in the 16th century, but of whom no records exist. He is the author of five arched panels with figures of the Apostles, and of three paintings in tempera of half-length figures of Saints and Bishops in couples, on a gold ground, in the Lochis-Carrara Gallery in Bergamo. There is also a painting by him of 'The Virgin crowned by Angels,' dated 1512, in Sant' Alessandro at Colonna.

GAVAZZI. See GAVASIO.

GAVIN, ROBERT, a Scottish landscape and genre painter, was born at Leith in 1827. He early manifested a taste for art, and when about twenty-one years of age he entered the Edinburgh School of Design. His earlier works partook much of the style of Sir George Harvey, and a few of them, as, for instance, his 'Reaping Girl' and 'Phoebe Mayflower,' were reproduced in chromo-lithography, and became very popular. Soon after 1870 he made a tour in America, and afterwards went to the continent; he then settled for a time at Tangier, where he painted numerous Moorish subjects. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1855, and an Academician in 1879, when he painted as his diploma picture 'A Moorish Maiden's First Love.' He died at Newhaven, near Edinburgh, in 1883.

GAWDIE, Sir JOHN, Bart., a portrait painter, was born at West Harling in Norfolk in 1639. He was deaf and dumb, and studied under Lely. Succeeding to the baronetcy on the death of his father in 1666, he pursued art only as an amusement, but Evelyn speaks of him in commendatory terms. He died in 1699.

GAYWOOD, ROBERT, an engraver, was born about 1630, and died about 1711. He was a pupil of Hollar, whose style he imitated. The most interesting of his works are his portraits, among which are the following:

Mary, Queen of Scots, with a Crucifix in her hand.
Charles I.; oval, with a hat and cloak.
Henrietta Maria, his Queen, in mourning.
Elizabeth, daughter of Charles I., with an Angel drawing a veil from her face.

Charles II.; after Hanneman.
 Charles II., on horseback. 1661.
 The same, with a hat and feather.
 Catharine, Queen of Charles II.
 Oliver Cromwell.
 Richard Cromwell.
 George Monck, Duke of Albemarle.
 Jerome Weston, Earl of Portland.
 The Countess of Portland.
 Sir Bulstrode Whitelocke.
 Sir Peter Temple, Bart.
 Sir George Croke, Chief Justice of the King's Bench.
 Sir Kenelm Digby.
 Sir Peter Paul Rubens.
 Hans Holbein.
 William Camden, historian and antiquary.
 William Fairfax, General in the Palatinate. 1656.
 Inigo Jones, architect.
 Margaret Lemon; after Van Dyck.
 James Shirley, poet.
 William Drummond, the Scottish historian.
 John Playford, musician.
 Matthew Stevenson, poet.
 John Evelyn, antiquary.
 Sir Anthony Van Dyck.
 Lady Van Dyck.
 Countess of Arundel.
 Countess of Carlisle.
 Dr. Sibbes.
 Archy, the King's Jester.

He also engraved the picture of 'Venus reclining, with a Man playing on the Organ,' after Titian, as well as:

A set of eight plates of Birds; after F. Barlow.
 A set of Animals; after the same.
 A set of Lions and Leopards; after Rubens.
 A Hare; after B. Poel.

GAZAN, FRANCISCO, was a Spanish engraver of the 18th century, who engraved, about 1713, a portrait of Quevedo, after a drawing of Salva Jordan.

GEBAUER, CHRISTIAN DAVID, an animal painter and an etcher, was born in 1777 at Neusalz in Silesia, and educated at the Copenhagen Academy from 1800 under Lorentzen. He devoted himself to landscapes as well as animals, executing the latter at first in Indian ink, but afterwards in oil. In 1813 he proceeded to Dresden, where he took to drawing, painting, and etching military scenes, and in 1815 was received into the Academy there. Later in his life he established a school of design at Aarhus, where he died in 1831. His pictures of horses and dogs, several of which are in the Copenhagen Gallery, are among his best works.

GEBHARD, W. M., a German landscape painter and engraver, flourished at Nuremberg from 1730 to 1750. There are by him 'The Sacrifice of Iphigeneia,' and two sets of landscapes with ruins and waterfalls.

GEDDES, ANDREW, a Scottish portrait painter, was born at Edinburgh about the year 1789. He was the son of David Geddes, an auditor of excise, and was educated at the High School and University of Edinburgh. He showed an early predilection for the fine arts, but did not commence his career as a professed artist until after the death of his father. He entered the schools of the Royal Academy in 1807, about the same time that Haydon, Jackson, and Wilkie were students there, and after some years' study he settled down to practise in Edinburgh. In 1814 he took a residence in London for his artistic pursuits, and continued annually to spend some months there. About this time he painted the portraits of Sir David Wilkie, Henry Mackenzie (the author of 'The Man of Feeling'), Dr. Chalmers, and other persons of note. The approbation which these portraits elicited induced him to put down his name as a candidate for the honours of the Royal Academy; but he was unsuccessful, and the Associateship was not awarded him till 1832. In 1818 he painted a picture of 'The Discovery of the Regalia in Scotland,' in which he introduced the portraits of several of the most distinguished men of his native city, among them Sir Walter Scott. In 1828 he visited the continent, and passed some time in Italy, Germany, and France. On his return in 1831 he painted an altar-piece for the church of St. James, Garlick Hill, and a picture of 'Christ and the Woman of Samaria.' He visited Holland in 1839, and he was skilful as an etcher in the manner of Rembrandt. He died in London in 1844. His principal works are:

Edinburgh. Nat. Gallery.	Summer.
" "	His own Portrait.
" "	Hagar.
" "	Portrait of the Artist's Mother.
" "	Portrait of George Sanders.
London. Nat. Gallery.	Dull Reading (Portraits of Terry and his Wife).

" South Kensington Museum.	} A Man Smoking.
" "
" "	A Study from Giorgione.

GEDDES, MARGARET SARAH. See CARPENTER.

GEEDTS, PIERRE JOSEPH, a Belgian historical painter, born at Louvain in 1770, studied at the Antwerp Academy under Herreyns. In 1800 he was appointed one of the professors of the new Academy of Louvain, which post he held till 1833, when he was, as he always considered, unjustly dismissed. He died at Louvain in 1834. His best works are a 'Calvary,' and 'The Archbishop of Cologne delivering a miraculous host to an Augustine Monk;' the latter is in the church of St. Jacques at Louvain.

GEEDTS, PIERRE PAUL, the son of Pierre Joseph Geedts, was born at Louvain in 1793, and studied under his father and at the Louvain Academy, where he carried off the principal prizes. He was appointed professor of modelling, but resigned on his father being dismissed. He was a good portrait painter, but there is only known by him one historical picture, painted in 1824 for the church of St. Jacques. He died at Louvain in 1856.

GEEFS, ALOYS, a Belgian historical painter and sculptor, was born at Antwerp in 1817, and died at Auteuil near Paris in 1841. 'The Scourging of Christ' was one of his best paintings.

GEEL, JOOST VAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1631, where he died in 1698. He was a scholar of Gabriel Metsu, whose polished style he imitated so exactly, that it is not always easy to distinguish their works. He also painted marines and sea-ports, which are highly finished, and very agreeably coloured. In the Amsterdam Museum is a portrait of Van Geel, by himself, and in the Hermitage, St. Petersburg, 'A Concert.'

GEELLEN, CHRISTIAAN VAN, a painter born at Utrecht in 1755, was a pupil of Jakob Maurer. He painted portraits, family pieces, and landscapes, and died in 1826. His son, also named Christiaan, born in 1794, showed great talent, but died in 1825 at the early age of thirty-one years.

GEELKERKEN, NICOLAAS VAN, (or GEILKERK,) was a native of Holland, who flourished at Leyden from about 1624 to 1654. He was chiefly employed in engraving maps, but executed also some portraits, among which is that of Maurice, Prince of Nassau.

GEERAERTS, MARTIN JOSEPH, a Flemish historical painter, born at Antwerp in 1707, was intended for the law, and studied in the Jesuits' College. Preferring art, however, he became a pupil of Abraham Godyn, and was made free of the Guild of St. Luke in 1731. In 1741 he became one of the six directors of the Academy of Antwerp, who filled that office gratuitously. He died at Antwerp in 1791. He excelled in grisaille painting in imitation of bas-reliefs, of which there are the following examples:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	The Fine Arts. 1760.
Brussels.	Gallery.	Christ and the Disciples at Emmaus.
"	"	The Saviour at the House of Simon the Pharisee.
"	"	The Sons of Aaron punished by Fire from Heaven.
"	"	The Woman taken in Adultery.
"	"	Abraham and Melchisedeck.
"	"	The Sacrifice of Abraham.
"	"	The Sacrifice of Eli.
Hague.	Museum.	Autumn.

GEERARTS, MARC, (whose name is found variously written GERARD, GERAATS, GHEERAERTS, GUERARDS, &c.,) the elder, a Flemish painter and engraver, born at Bruges in the 16th century, was a pupil of Marten De Vos. During the religious wars he came to England, and became painter to Queen Elizabeth. He died in this country before 1604, as Van Mander, in his book published in that year, complains of not being able to gain any authentic date about his death from his son. He was the author of a remarkable plan of Bruges made before 1566, of which the original is in the possession of the Corporation of that city. In the Vienna Gallery are two portraits, and in the church of Notre-Dame in Bruges is a 'Descent from the Cross,' by some assigned to Frans Pourbus. Geerarts painted the procession of Queen Elizabeth to a marriage that took place at Blackfriars about 1600, which he himself engraved, and which was reproduced by Vertue, who, in defiance of an earlier and well-grounded tradition, conjectured that it represented a royal visit to Hunsdon House, Hertfordshire, in 1571. He also engraved some plates for an edition of Æsop's 'Fables' published at Bruges in 1567. In the Burghley House collection are portraits by him of Queen Elizabeth, Lord Burghley, and the Earl of Essex. There are in the National Portrait Gallery portraits by him of Mary, Countess of Pembroke, Lord Burghley, and William Camden.

GEERARTS, MARC, the younger, a son of Marc Geerarts the elder, was born at Bruges, and was a pupil of Lucas De Heere. The dates of his birth and death are alike unknown. He is supposed to have come to England, but some confusion exists between the works of the father and son. The most important of all the works attributed to this artist is the 'Assembly of English, Spanish, and Austrian Plenipotentiaries held at Somerset House in 1604,' recently acquired for the National Portrait Gallery at the Hamilton sale, which formerly bore the forged signature of Pantoja de La Cruz. There is a picture of Elizabeth, signed M. G., belonging to the Duke of Portland, a head of Camden in the Bodleian, a full-length portrait of Thomas Cecil, first Earl of Exeter, painted in 1612, at Woburn Abbey, and other signed specimens at Barrow Green and Penshurst.

GEERTGEN VAN SINT JANS. See HAARLEM, GERRIT VAN.

GEEST, CORNELIS VAN, was a Dutch engraver, by whom there is a half-sheet print of Gilbert Burnet, Bishop of Salisbury.

GEEST, WYBRAND DE. See DE GEEST.

GEFFELS, FRANZ, was a painter, etcher, and builder from the Netherlands, who was working at Mantua from about 1651 to 1671. He has left seven plates of buildings and ruins, the best of which is 'The Card-players by a Ruin;' also 'The Catafalque of Charles II., Duke of Mantua,' and 'The Gala on the Marriage of the Emperor Leopold I.,' after Burnacino.

GEGENBAUER, JOSEPH ANTON VON, a German historical painter, was born in 1800, at Wangen in Würtemberg. He studied under Langer at Munich, and during his stay there from 1815 to 1823 produced a 'St. Sebastian,' an altar-piece for his native town, and two idyllic pieces which attracted great notice. In 1823 he went to Rome, where he established himself, and soon became distinguished. Here he produced 'Adam and Eve after their Expulsion from Eden,' and 'Moses striking the Rock,' both of which are now in the palace at Stuttgart. Upon his return home in 1826 he was employed to decorate the new Palace of Rosenstein near that city. He went again to Rome in 1829, and was employed for six years principally in fresco painting, and afterwards up to the end of his life was occupied in the same way in Stuttgart. He died at Rome in 1876. In addition to the pictures mentioned above, the following are among his oil paintings:

A sleeping Venus and two Satyrs.
Leda and the Swan.
Madonna and Child. (An altar-piece at Wangen.)
Several portraits.

Among his fresco works are:

Scene from the Story of Cupid and Psyche. (Rosenstein Palace.)
The four Seasons and Aurora. (The same.)
Hercules and Omphale; fresco painting upon canvas. (The Queen.)
Ascension of the Virgin. (The same.)
The Crucifixion. (The same.)
Scenes from the Life of Count Eberhard II. of Würtemberg. (Residential Palace at Stuttgart.)

GEIGER, ANDREAS, a mezzotint engraver, was born at Vienna in 1773, and died there in 1856. Among his best plates are 'Antiochus and his Physician Erasistratus,' after Füger, 'The Death of Cato,' after Caravaggio, 'Helen and Paris,' after David, and 'The Burial of Christ,' after Van der Werff.

GEIKIE, WALTER, a Scottish subject painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1795. He became deaf and dumb, and studied in the Trustees' Academy. His works first appeared in 1815, and he was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1831, and an Academician in 1834. He died in 1837. He published a volume of etchings: and there is in the National Gallery of Scotland a 'Cottage Scene' by him.

GEILKERK, NICOLAAS VAN. See GEELKERKEN.

GEIRNAERT, JOSEPH, a Flemish genre painter, born at Eecloo in Flanders, in 1791, was a pupil of Herreyns and of Paelinck. From 1830 to 1836 he practised at the Hague, but died at Ghent in 1859. Amongst his works are:

The Schoolmaster. (Mechlin Museum.)
A Consultation at the Doctor's. (Brussels Gallery.)
Leonardo da Vinci painting the Gioconda.

Moses saved from the Waters.
Joseph and Potiphar.
Asking in Marriage.
The Card Players.
The Little Marauders.
The Return of the Fishermen.
An Election.
Albrecht Dürer at the tomb of Van Eyck.
The Arrest of Count Egmont. 1823.
The Lesson on the Harp. (Ghent Museum.)
Giving a Pledge. (Ghent Museum.)
The Visit of the Doctor. (Haarlem Museum.)

GEISSLER, JOHANN MARTIN FRIEDRICH, an engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1778, was first instructed by Heinrich Guttenberg, but spent from 1803 to 1814 in further study in Paris, devoting himself especially to architecture and landscapes. He died at Nuremberg in 1853. The best of his plates are from his own designs, but he also executed views of churches, &c., after Ainmiller and others, and 'The Return of the Herd,' after Berchem, 'The Road through the Beech-wood,' after Ruisdael, and 'A Landscape with an Oak and a fallen Beech-tree,' after Wynants.

GEIST, AUGUST CHRISTIAN, a landscape painter, born at Würzburg in 1835, was at first a pupil of his father, Andreas Geist (who died in 1860), under whom he executed many landscapes, architectural and marine views, and heads, both in oil and water-colours. In 1853 he proceeded to Munich, and improved himself in landscape work by study under Friedrich Bamberger. In 1854 he travelled in the Rhone mountains, and produced therefrom twenty-four Indian ink drawings. He then established a studio of his own; but in 1859 he made a tour around Carlsruhe with Schinner; in 1860 visited the Rhine and Antwerp; in 1862 the Highlands of Bavaria; in 1863 Franconian Switzerland; and in 1864 the Allgau. The years 1865 to 1867 he spent in Rome on account of his health; and he died at Munich in 1868. The following are some of his best works:

Achach Castle. 1853.
Pleasure Party at Carlsstadt. 1853.
Winter Landscape at Schäftlarn. 1853.
Landscape near Polling. 1856.
Festal Morning on a Mountain Lake. 1863.
The Idyll. 1864.
Thunderstorm in the Campagna.
Fountain near Aricia.
Theatre of Tusculum.

He also etched thirteen 'Ruins of Franconian Fortresses' for the Polytechnic Association at Würzburg, for which also the above Indian ink drawings were executed.

GELASIO DI NICCOLÒ, a Ferrarese painter of the 13th century, is said to have studied in Venice under the Greek Theophanes, and on his return to Ferrara, in 1240, to have executed various works there for the bishop, Filippo Fontana. The paintings usually ascribed to him belong to a later date.

GELDER, ARENT DE. See DE GELDER.

GELDER, N. VAN, was an animal painter of the Netherlands, who flourished about 1660. The Vienna Gallery contains one or two pictures of game by him, and in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge is a picture of 'Boors playing at cards.'

GELDER, PIETER, was a Dutch painter, supposed to have been a scholar of Rembrandt, whose manner he imitated. He was living in 1655.

GELDERBLOEM, LAURENT, born at Dordrecht about 1748, was a pupil of Joris Ponsen. This artist gave promise of considerable talent, but died before reaching the age of thirty.

GELDERSMAN, VINCENTIUS, a Flemish painter, was born at Mechlin about 1539. It is not known under whom he studied, but he painted historical subjects with some success. Among his most esteemed works may be noticed a picture of 'Susannah and the Elders,' and a 'Descent from the Cross,' in the cathedral at Mechlin; also a 'Leda' and 'Cleopatra with the Asp.'

GELDORP, GEORG, a portrait painter, was born at the end of the 16th century, probably at Cologne, though Walpole calls him a native of Antwerp. He certainly studied at Antwerp, and then went to London, where he was appointed keeper of the pictures to Charles I. Rubens and Van Dyck were successively his guests on their arrival in England. He died in London about 1658. Among his portraits may be named those of the Duke of Lennox and the Earl of Lindsay, both of which have been engraved, and one of George Carew, Earl of Totness, in the National Portrait Gallery.

GELDORP, GORTZIUS, (or GUALDORP,)—sometimes known by his Christian name alone—was a Flemish painter, born at Louvain in 1553. After learning the rudiments of art in his native city, he went, at seventeen years of age, to Antwerp, where he became a disciple of Frans Francken the elder. On the death of that master he passed into the school of Frans Pourbus, under whom he became one of the best artists of his time, particularly in portraits, in which he was greatly employed. His talents were not, however, confined to portraits: he painted likewise several historical subjects for the Duke of Terra Nova at Cologne. Among his best pictures are:

Cologne. Wallraf-Richartz	} The Four Evangelists.
Museum.
Darmstadt. Gallery.	Two portraits.
Gotha. Gallery.	Four portraits.
Milan. Brera.	Portrait of a Lady.
Munich. Gallery.	Portrait of a Man.
Petersburg. Hermitage.	Lucretia.
" "	Portrait of a Man.

He died at Cologne in 1616 or 1618.

GELDORP, MELCHIOR, a portrait and historical painter, was a son and scholar of Gortzius Geldorp. He was working at Cologne from 1620 to 1640, and some works of his are there preserved, among which may be named:

Portrait of an Ecclesiastic. 1615.
Portrait of a Lady. 1618.
Portrait of a Child. 1624.
Portrait of Wolfgang William, Count Palatine of the Rhine and Duke of Bavaria.

GELÉE, FRANÇOIS ANTOINE, a French engraver and lithographer, was born in Paris in 1796, and studied under Girodet and Pauquet. He died in Paris in 1860. Amongst his plates are:

Daphnis and Chloe; after Hersent.
Justice and Divine Vengeance pursuing Crime; after Prud'hon.
Venus and her Doves; after Lambert.
The Shepherd of Virgil; after Boisselier.

GELENIUS, SIGISMUND, was a German engraver, who flourished about the year 1576. Professor Christ attributes to him a set of twelve small woodcuts of the 'Labours of Hercules,' which are executed with considerable spirit.

GELIBERT, JEAN PIERRE PAUL, a French animal painter, was born in 1802, and died at Barthele-Neste, Hautes Pyrenées, in 1883.

GELISSEN, MAXIMILIEN LAMBERT, a landscape painter, was born at Brussels in 1786. In 1820 he won the first prize medal for a 'View of Ruysbroeck,' now in the Ghent Museum, and later in life he travelled in England and Scotland. He died at Brussels in 1867.

GELL, Sir WILLIAM, an English topographical draughtsman, was born in 1774. He studied in the schools of the Academy, and practised as an architect, but is best known by the illustrated books he published on the topography and antiquities of Greece and Italy. In 1820 he settled in Italy, where he acted as Chamberlain to Caroline, Princess of Wales. He died at Naples in 1836. Amongst the works he published are:

- Topography of Troy. 1804.
- Geography and Antiquities of Ithaca. 1807.
- Itinerary of Greece. 1810.
- Attica. 1817.
- Itinerary of the Morea. 1818.
- Pompeiana. 1817-19.
- The Walls of Rome. 1820.
- Narrative of a Journey to the Morea. 1823.
- Topography of Rome and its Vicinity. 1834.

GELLE, JOHANN, a German engraver, flourished about the year 1628, and resided chiefly at Cologne. He engraved some of the plates for the 'Académie de l'Espée,' published at Antwerp, by Gerard Thibault, in 1628, as well as a portrait of the Emperor Ferdinand II. in a border of medals, dated 1619. They are worked entirely with the graver, in a stiff, formal style.

GELLE, CLAUDE, commonly called CLAUDE DE LORRAIN, a French landscape painter and etcher, was born in 1600 at Chamagne, a village on the Moselle in the Vosges country, then in the ancient province of Lorraine. His parents, Jean Gellée and Anne Pedose, were in humble circumstances, and had five sons, of whom Claude was the third. Concerning his early life, his biographers differ considerably; their information coming from two sources. The first is Joachim von Sandrart, a German painter, who resided for some years at Rome, where he became intimate with Claude, and whose reminiscences are included in his 'Academia Artis Pictoriæ.' The other authority is Filippo Baldinucci, a Florentine artist, whose account was derived from the two grand-nephews of the painter.

According to Sandrart, Claude showed so little aptitude for study when at school that his parents apprenticed him to a pastry-cook. He afterwards found his way to Rome, in company with some other young Lorrainers practising the same vocation. Here he lived for some time in the house of Agostino Tassi, a Perugian landscape and marine painter, who had studied under Paulus Bril. He acted as the painter's factotum: looked after the kitchen and household affairs, groomed the horse, ground the colours, and cleaned the palettes and brushes. While engaged on these duties he applied himself, with the help of his master, to a diligent study of perspective and the ground-work of art.

According to Baldinucci, when Claude was twelve years old he became an orphan, and had to seek the shelter of his eldest brother's home. Jean had settled at Freiburg, on the opposite bank of the Rhine, where he pursued the arts of wood engraving and carving. From him Claude, who had already shown a taste for art, received his first instruction in drawing. His stay in the Swabian country was not long, for about a year after, a kinsman, passing through Freiburg on his way to Rome in pursuit of trade as a lace merchant, took him with him to the Eternal City. His relative was soon compelled to leave him, and Claude, a boy of fourteen years, was left alone in a foreign land. For some time he remained at Rome in lodgings near the Pantheon, eking out a scanty subsistence, and endeavouring to improve his knowledge of art by such humble means as lay within his reach. Owing to the wars which then ravaged Europe, the slender remittances he received from his friends at length entirely ceased, and he had to trust to his own unaided efforts to maintain himself. Nothing daunted, he set out for Naples to obtain some instruction from Gottfried Wals, a painter of Cologne. With this master he remained about two years, devoting his attention to perspective and architecture. He then returned to Rome, and gained admission to the studio of Tassi. Baldinucci states that he lived in the painter's house, and significantly admits that he looked after the household accounts.

Comparing these two accounts, it will be seen that they are in entire agreement on one point only: the fact of Claude having passed some time with Tassi, from whom he received instruction. As to the precise character of the relationship in which they stood to each other, it is evident from the admission of Baldinucci that Claude did not enter Tassi's house simply as a pupil, but as some sort of a dependent. As to the time of this sojourn, it appears that it must have commenced before 1619. A deposition by Tassi has lately been discovered, in which he speaks of Claude as one of his assistants in some decorations which he was executing for Cardinal Montalto in that year. Thus far there is certainty. Less certain is the account of the pupilage at Naples under Wals. Still it does not absolutely conflict with Sandrart, and may be accepted as supplying a link in the history. As regards the pastry-cook incident, and the manner in which Claude originally reached Rome, the two accounts are entirely at variance, and they must be left thus, until, perchance, further research shall have thrown more light on the subject.

In the spring of 1625 Claude left Rome, and set out on a series of wanderings. The first point aimed at was Venice. On his way thither, he spent a few days in devotion at the well-known shrine of the Virgin at Loretto. At Venice he stayed some time and executed several works. He had then intended to return to Rome, but, altering his plans, he determined to visit his native country. Passing through Trent and Innsbrück, he made a short sojourn in Bavaria at the village of Harlaching. During the journey he was laid low by sickness, when he had the misfortune to be robbed of all his worldly possessions. In this forlorn condition he returned to his native place, and after a short stay there proceeded to Nancy. Here he again took up the brush as assistant to De Ruet, the court-painter to the Duke of Lorraine. With him he continued till the summer of 1627, employed on various works, and more especially on the decoration of the Carmelite church at Nancy. His desire to return to Italy was quickened by an accident to the scaffolding used in the latter work, in which he had a narrow escape, and he set out on his return journey, making a halt of a few days at Lyons. On his arrival at Marseilles he was seized by illness, and again had the misfortune to be robbed of his little store of money. Before he could proceed further he was obliged to raise the means to continue his journey by painting some pictures for a local patron of the arts. His troubles were not even yet ended, for the voyage to Cività Vecchia was so stormy that there were grave doubts whether the vessel would reach land.

Claude arrived at Rome on the 18th October, 1627. The years which immediately succeeded his settlement there appear to have been devoted to a close and direct study of nature. During this period he became acquainted with Sandrart, his future biographer, to whose account we are chiefly indebted for what is known of his mode of working. He sketched indefatigably in the open air, from the earliest dawn to nightfall, so that he might be thoroughly imbued with the ever-changing aspects of nature under the varying conditions of light. He mixed his colours while the effects were still before him, and then, returning home, applied them to the work which he had in hand. The German mentions Claude's weakness in drawing men and animals. He says that though he bestowed great attention on this branch of art, and for many years studied diligently from statues and living models in the Academy, yet he was never able to remedy this failing. That he was well aware of it is testified to by Baldinucci, who relates that he was accustomed to observe jocularly that he sold his landscapes but gave the figures. Following the example of many other painters, he frequently had recourse to other hands for the groups which serve to animate and give titles to his works. His chief assistant in this way was Filippo Lauri, the son of a Flemish painter who had settled at Rome, and he is also said, though perhaps doubtfully, to have been assisted by J. Miel, F. Allegrini, and the two Courtois.

Sandrart and Claude became very friendly; made sketching excursions together, and exchanged specimens of each other's art. This acquaintance is really the only trace of the Lorrainer having been intimate with his brother artists. He is mentioned casually, very casually, in connection with other painters, but he does not seem to have formed any other close intimacy. This isolation, combined with the small amount of information which has come down to us concerning Claude's life subsequent to his settlement at Rome, leads to the conclusion that his whole time and energies were devoted to art. Whether in his studio or in the short excursions he made into the surrounding country, his devotion to art never flagged. He remained a bachelor, and, to secure himself against the distractions caused by the care of a house, he induced a relative to migrate from Lorraine about 1636, and to take charge of his household. He carried his isolation so far that his name only occurs once in connection with Nicolas Poussin, the chief figure amongst the French artists then resident in Rome, and it is likewise absent from the biographies of the many great painters who were his contemporaries. There is no trace of his name in the records of the Academy of St. Luke, neither was he included amongst the members of the French Academy at Paris, which was founded while he was in the heyday of his reputation.

Claude does not appear to have at once sprung into fame after settling down at Rome. Some ten years probably elapsed before he attracted the attention of Cardinal Bentivoglio, one of the leading men in the Papal Court. A commission which he executed for this patron was so much appreciated that he was introduced by him to the reigning Pope, Urban VIII. This Pontiff ordered four works from him, two of which are now in the Louvre, and bear the date 1639. Henceforth his position was assured, and but few events occurred to disturb the even tenor of his career. The chief facts of his subsequent life might be included in a list of the works he painted, and of the patrons for whom they were executed. It must suffice within the limits of this notice to mention among the latter: M. de Bethune, French Ambassador at Rome; Cardinal Giorio; Innocent X. and his nephew, Prince Pamfili; the Duc de Bouillon; the King of Spain; Cardinal Giovanni de' Medici; Pope Alexander VII.; the Bishops of Montpellier and of Ypres; Cardinal Rospigliosi, afterwards Pope Clement IX.; M. de Bourlemont; the Constable Colonna; Cardinal Massimi; Prince Altieri, and the Elector of Bavaria.

There is an incident recorded by Baldinucci of the latter part of Claude's life which must not be omitted. In a spirit of compassion he had, about the middle of his career, taken into his studio a deformed and friendless boy, named Giovanni Domenico. The lad grew up in the master's house, and remained with him as pupil and assistant for twenty-five years. Then the enemies of Claude spread a report that the works which issued from his studio were really executed by Domenico. The ungrateful assistant joined the cabal, left his benefactor, and brought an action against him for the payment of a salary during all the years he had spent with him. Without waiting for the decision of the court, Claude at once paid the claim, and thenceforth closed the door of his studio to all assistants.

It now remains to speak of what is known as the "Liber Veritatis." This is a collection of 200 drawings of Claude's pictures, executed in bistre, and occasionally touched up with white. Nearly all bear inscriptions giving details as to when and for whom the pictures they represent were painted. The volume which contains them was bequeathed by the painter to his nephews as an heirloom, but their successors in the trust sold it. After various vicissitudes it at length found a resting-place in England in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire. Until of late years it was considered, following the account of Baldinucci, that the drawings were done by Claude as a means of identifying his works, and of protecting himself against the spurious productions which his fame caused unscrupulous contemporary artists to palm off as his. It is not necessary to enter into the details of the controversy, as the painter's will, which has recently been discovered, no longer leaves it open to doubt that the "Liber Veritatis" was intended by him as a record, whether complete or not, of his pictures and their destination.

During the latter part of his life Claude suffered much from ill-health, his chief foe being the gout. A severe illness in the early part of 1663 caused him to make the will which has just been mentioned. From it we learn that, besides his relative and housekeeper, Jean, there was also living with him an adopted daughter named Agnès, then 11 years old, whom he affectionately calls "mia zitella." To her he leaves for life the precious "Liber Veritatis," and makes minute and careful provision as to the property bequeathed for her maintenance. After his recovery from this attack, the painter resumed the brush. The state of his health in the remaining years of his career probably precluded his working in the open air as formerly, but the record of pictures executed during this period shows that he manfully persevered, and produced many important works. The inscriptions on two designs in the "Liber Veritatis" attest that he painted pictures from them as late as 1681. The end came in the November of the following year, probably on the 23rd, and not on the 21st, as stated in the inscription placed on his grave by his nephews. He was buried, according to his desire, in the church of the Trinità dei Monti. In 1840, however, his remains were removed to the French church of San Luigi, where a memorial was erected to him by his country. The property which he left, estimated by Baldinucci at 10,000 scudi, chiefly consisted of obligations in the Papal "monti." There were twenty-two of these "luoghi," of which fourteen were left, either absolutely or for life, to his adopted daughter, and eight to his nephew Jean. A codicil made in 1670 somewhat altered the disposition of his possessions, but Agnès and Jean still remained the chief legatees.

Claude devoted considerable attention to etching, and many of his works in this medium show no less than his pictures his peculiar excellences. Meaume gives a list of thirty-two plates executed by him, which date from 1630 to 1663. Besides these, there is a series of etchings of the fireworks exhibited at Rome on the election of Ferdinand III. as King of the Romans in 1637.

The pictures painted by Claude number about 400. Of these the majority are in England, where the private collections are very rich in specimens of his art. For many years there was a great rage amongst English amateurs for his works. The galleries of the Dukes of Devonshire, Rutland, and Westminster, Lords Ellesmere, Leicester, and Northbrook, alone contain nearly half a hundred.

It will be noticed that many of his pictures bear as a title some scriptural or classical incident. But it must not be inferred that the incident occupies any important part in the composition. The figures introduced are quite subordinate, and frequently only serve to give a title to the work. The interest centres in the landscape. This is seldom an exact reproduction of any particular view. It is frequently a scene, more or less idealized, from the neighbourhood of Rome. In other cases it is a composition pure and simple, in which, however, can often be traced many existing features, such as the Colosseum, the temple of the Sibyl, and other remains of classic buildings, the heights of Tivoli, &c.

GEMINUS, THOMAS, (or GEMINIE,) who was an engraver, as well as a printer, executed several plates to ornament his publications. In the year 1545, he published a translation of Vesalius's 'Anatomy,' which was first printed at Padua in 1542, with woodcuts. Geminus copied them on copper, and the book was dedicated to Henry VIII., with the title 'Compendiosa totius Anatomie Delineatio, ære exarata,' and published in folio in 1545. These plates, according to Ames, were some of the first rolling-press printing in England. He afterwards published an English translation of the same work by Nicholas Udal, in 1552, dedicated to Edward VI. Geminus lived in Blackfriars, where he published a 'Prognostication,' relating to the weather, the phenomena of the Heavens, &c., with a number of plates, engraved by himself. Vertue states, that he published another small work on Midwifery, with copper cuts by himself.

GEMMEL, HERMANN, an architectural painter, was born in 1813 at Barten in Eastern Prussia. He was instructed by E. Biermann and W. Schirmer, and afterwards travelled in Italy. In 1855 he was made professor of perspective and architecture at the Academy of Painting in Königsberg, where he died in 1868. Mention is made of the following works by him:

- Family Room in a mediæval Castle. 1855.
 Chapel of Cardinal Zeno in San Marco.
 Baptistery in San Marco.

GENAELS, ABRAHAM. See GENOELS.

GENDALL, JOHN, an English landscape painter, was born about the year 1789. He assisted in the production of many illustrated books of scenery, notably with Pugin in 'Picturesque Views of the Seine,' 1821, and with Westall and Shepherd in 'Views of Country Seats,' 1823-28. Between 1846 and 1863 he exhibited at the Royal Academy many oil and water-colour views in Devonshire, where he lived. He died at Exeter in 1865.

GENDRON, ERNEST AUGUSTIN, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1817. He studied under Paul Delaroche, and afterwards spent six years in Italy, whence he sent to the Salon of 1844 his first exhibited picture—'Dante commented on by Boccaccio.' There also he painted 'The Willis,' which has been often lithographed, and 'The Nereids.' Among his later works may be mentioned 'Sunday: a Florentine Scene in the Fifteenth Century' (1855); 'The Funeral of a young Girl at Venice' (1859); 'Nymphs at the grave of Adonis' (1864); and 'Lucretia' (1869). He likewise decorated the chapel of St. Catharine in the church of St. Gervais in Paris. He died in 1881.

GENELLI, CAMILLO, who was born at Munich in 1840, was a son of Buonaventura Genelli, and while a boy drew landscapes under his father's tuition. From 1856 to 1859 he attended the Munich Academy, and went, in 1864, to Vienna, where, under Rahl, he executed oil and sepia compositions from Grecian mythology, among which is 'Ulysses slaying the Suitors.' In 1865 he removed to Weimar, where he died in 1867.

GENELLI, JANUS, the father of Buonaventura Genelli, was born at Copenhagen in 1771, and died at Berlin in 1813. He was instructed in Rome, and painted warmly-coloured landscapes, particularly from the Harz mountains.

GENELLI, BUONAVENTURA, a German historical painter, was born at Berlin in 1798. He was the son of the landscape painter, Janus Genelli, and received his first tuition from Bury and Hummel, and from his uncle, Hans Christian Genelli, the architect, who obtained for his pupil the assistance of the Queen of the Netherlands, who enabled him to go to Italy in 1820. In 1832 he was recalled to paint some wall-pictures for Dr. Härtel, and in 1836 he went to Munich, where he remained until 1859. He then settled at Weimar, where he died in 1868. A 'Rape of Europa' by him is in the Berlin National Gallery.

GENGA, BARTOLOMMEO, the son of Girolamo Genga, was born at Cesena in 1518. According to Vasari, he painted some historical pictures in the style of his father, but he is more known as a sculptor and an architect, than as a painter. He died at Malta in 1558.

GENGA, GIROLAMO, was born at Urbino in 1476, and was first a disciple of Luca Signorelli, whom he assisted in several of his works, particularly at Orvieto. After some years he entered the school of Pietro Perugino, at the time when Raphael was a student under that master, and there he remained three years and became an intimate friend of his greater fellow-pupil. He then lived for a time at Florence and Siena, but returned to Urbino to execute a commission for Duke Guidobaldo II. He, however, worked as a coadjutor with Signorelli, and with Timoteo Viti, and afterwards with Raffaello dal Colle in the Imperiale at Pesaro. His services to the Duke of Urbino were more in the capacity of an architect than a painter, though he made many designs for the decorations of the theatre. He afterwards resided at Rome, where he painted a fine picture of 'The Resurrection' for the church of Santa Cattarina di Siena. About 1512 he returned to Urbino at the bidding of the Duke Francesco Maria, whom he afterwards followed into banishment to Cesena, and there painted an altar-piece representing 'God the Father, with the Virgin and Four Fathers of the Church,' which is now in the Brera at Milan. In the Pitti Palace at Florence is a 'Holy Family' by him. He died at Urbino in 1551. He was also a sculptor and modeller. Among his pupils were Francesco Menzocchi, and Baldassare Lancia.

GENILLON, JEAN BAPTISTE FRANÇOIS, a marine painter of the school of Joseph Vernet, was born about 1749. His subjects are naval combats, shipwrecks, sea-ports, eruptions of Vesuvius by moonlight, and conflagrations at sea under a similar aspect. He died in Paris in 1829.

GÉNISSON, VICTOR JULES, a Flemish painter, was born at St. Omer in 1805. He studied at Antwerp under the brothers Van Bree, and died at Bruges in 1860. He excelled in painting the interiors of churches, and amongst his works are:

The Archduke Albert and Archduchess Isabella visiting Tournai Cathedral in 1600. (Brussels Gallery.)
 Interior of the Chapel of the Holy Sacrament, St. Gudule, Brussels. 1835.
 Interior of St. Jacques, Antwerp. 1836 (Dublin National Gallery.)
 Interior of Antwerp Cathedral. 1837.
 Confessional in St. Paul, Antwerp.
 Interior of Strassburg Cathedral.
 Interior of Amiens Cathedral.

GENNARI, BARTOLOMEO, son of Benedetto Gennari the elder, was born at Cento in 1594. He was nearly of the same age with Guercino, and rather emulated his style than copied him. In the church of Santa Maria del Carobio, at Bologna, is a fine picture of the 'Assumption' by this master. He died in 1661.

GENNARI, BENEDETTO, the elder, who was born at Cento in 1570, and died there in 1610, was the instructor of Guercino, and has left a painting of 'Christ at Emmaus,' now in the Capuchin monastery at Cento, which has passed for a work of that master. He also produced a number of portraits.

GENNARI, BENEDETTO, the younger, born at Cento in 1633, was the nephew and the scholar of Guercino, with whom he soon became associated in his work. Finding that his uncle's productions were highly valued by Louis XIV. of France, he proceeded to Paris in 1672, where he was well received. Lanzi states, that he saw in the Palazzo Ercolani, a picture of 'Bathsheba' by Guercino, together with a copy of the same by Gennari, and remarks that the former appeared to be freshly painted, and the copy to be the older picture. He also painted some pictures of his own composition for the churches at Bologna and Cento. He came to England in 1674, and was for some time in the service of Charles II. and of James II. When the latter was dethroned he returned to France, and in 1690 went to Bologna, where he died in 1715. His principal works are:

Bologna.	S. Domenico.	St. Rosa.
"	S. Giovanni in Monte.	St. Anianus baptizing a Pagan King.
"	Pinacoteca.	Head of St. Peter.
"	Cappuccini.	St. Anthony of Padua.

GENNARI, CESARE, the younger brother of Benedetto Gennari, was born at Cento in 1637, and was also instructed by his uncle Guercino, whose style he followed with success. He painted several pictures, from designs of his own, for the churches at Bologna. In San Martino Maggiore is a picture of 'St. Mary Magdalen of Pazzi,' painted entirely in the style of Guercino; in San Niccolò, 'St. Nicholas kneeling before the Virgin;' at the Padri Servi, 'St. Apollonia;' in San Bartolommeo, 'Christ praying in the Garden,' and in the Pinacoteca the 'Vision of the Virgin and Child to St. Nicholas.' In the Pitti Palace at Florence is a 'Madonna and Child.' He died at Bologna in 1688.

GENNARI, ERCOLE, a son of the elder Benedetto Gennari, was born at Cento in 1597, and died there in 1658. He was instructed by his brother-in-law Guercino, whom he closely imitated in his works.

GENNARI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was a native of Cento, who flourished about the year 1606. He is stated by Lanzi to have been one of the masters of Guercino, and to have been a successful historical painter. In the 'Guida di Bologna' is noticed a picture by this master in the church of the Trinità representing the 'Madonna in glory, with Saints,' painted in the style of Procaccini. It is dated 1606.

GENNARI, LORENZO, was probably related to Benedetto Gennari. He was a scholar of Guercino, and flourished about the year 1650. One of his best pictures is at the Cappuccini at Rimini.

GENNARO DI COLA. See COLA.

GENOD, MICHEL PHILIBERT, a French genre and historical painter, was born at Lyons in 1796, and died there in 1862. He was instructed by Révoil, and became one of the most noted artists of his native city. 'The Family Festival' (1855) is one of his best paintings.

GENOELS, ABRAHAM, sometimes called ARCHIMEDES, was born at Antwerp in 1640. When he was twelve years of age, he became a pupil of Jacob Backereel, with whom he remained until he was fifteen. His ambition confined itself at first to portrait painting; but having made some successful attempts at landscapes, he attached himself to that branch of the art, to which his genius was more adapted. To perfect himself in perspective, he studied for some time under Fierlants, a native of Bois-le-Duc, who resided at Antwerp, and who was esteemed the most correct professor of that science of his time. His desire for improvement prompted him to travel; and he visited Paris at the time when Poussin, Mignard, and Le Brun were in the zenith of their fame. It was not long before his talent distinguished itself in that metropolis; and he was employed to paint the cartoons for eight large landscapes to be executed in tapestry for M. de Louvois, in which the figures were painted by De Sève. He was engaged by Le Brun to paint the backgrounds of his 'Battles of Alexander;' and in 1665 was made a member of the Academy at Paris, under the auspices of Le Brun. These flattering distinctions could not, however, detain him at Paris; and after having in 1672 been made a member of the Guild of St. Luke in his native city, he proceeded to Rome, where he arrived in 1674, and was received into the Bentevogel Society, who conferred on him the name of 'Archimedes,' on account of his knowledge of mathematics, and with this title he sometimes signed his etchings. He painted several large pictures of views in the vicinity of Rome, for Cardinal Rospigliosi; and after a residence of eight years in Italy, he returned to Flanders in 1682 with an ample collection of drawings which he had made of the environs of Rome. He died at Antwerp in 1723. Genoels may be ranked among the ablest landscape painters of his country. His colouring is natural and vigorous; he possessed a commanding facility, and a touch which he could appropriate to the particular objects he had to represent. A painting by him of 'Minerva and the Muses' is in the Antwerp Museum, and two of his landscapes are at Brunswick.

We have by this painter some masterly etchings of landscapes, from his own designs, executed in a bold, free style, and ornamented with figures and cattle. He sometimes marked his plates with the cipher A. among them are the following:

A set of four mountainous Landscapes, with ruins and figures. 1684.

Two rocky Landscapes, with figures. 1675.

Two grand Landscapes, with ruins and figures.

Four mountainous Landscapes, with ruins and waterfalls.

Four views of Gardens, with figures and statues.

Two large Landscapes, with waterfalls.

GENSLER, JAKOB, a genre painter, was born at Hamburg in 1808, and received his first instruction in that city under Gerold Hardorf the elder. In 1824 he was placed under J. H. W. Tischbein at Eutin, and remained with him for two years, after which, in 1828, he attended the Academy at Munich. After a short stay in the Tyrol and Salzburg, he proceeded in 1830 to Vienna for further study, and returned in the following year to Hamburg, where he settled down. He visited Holland and Belgium in 1841, and died at Hamburg in 1845. His pictures are chiefly taken from popular life and from special localities, and are marked by great regard to individuality in the characters, and to costume, furniture, and landscape surroundings; the subjects chosen being such as the gathering of fruit, the hauling in of fish, women spinning or drawing water, and so on. Gensler also etched several plates for the 'Album of German Artists at Düsseldorf,' among which is 'The Sailors.'

GENTILESCH, SOFONISBA, a French lady, illustrious in art, is mentioned by Palomino as coming from France in the train of Queen Isabella of Valois, third wife to Philip II. of Spain. She painted with great skill miniature portraits of their Majesties, the Infant Don Carlos, and many of the court ladies. She died at Madrid in 1587.

GENTILESCHI, ARTEMISIA, the daughter and the disciple of Orazio Gentileschi, was born at Rome in 1590. She accompanied her father to England, where she painted some portraits of the nobility, and some historical pictures for the king, the best of which was 'David with the Head of Goliath.' Her portrait by herself is at Hampton Court. But she passed the chief part of her life at Naples and Bologna, where she was much admired for her accomplishments and her talents as a painter. She was favoured with the friendship and advice of Guido, and studied attentively the works of Domenichino. In the Pitti Gallery at Florence are her best performances, representing 'Judith with the Head of Holofernes,' and 'Mary Magdalen;' and in the Madrid Gallery the 'Birth of St. John the Baptist,' and a Portrait. She married Antonio Schiattesi. She died in 1642.

GENTILESCHI, FRANCESCO, who flourished in the first half of the 17th century, was the son of Orazio Gentileschi, with whom he came to England. He studied under Domenico Fiasella, called Sarzana, but his pictures, which are said to have been historical, are little known.

GENTILESCHI, ORAZIO, called LOMI, after his step-father, was born at Pisa in 1562. He studied under his half-brother, Aurelio Lomi, and his uncle Bacci Lomi, and then went to Rome, where he improved his style by studying the works of the best masters, and by the advice and assistance of Agostino Tassi, with whom he formed an intimate friendship, and whose landscapes he frequently decorated with figures. Several of their joint works are in the Quirinal and Rospigliosi Palaces, and in other places in Rome. He also painted historical subjects for the churches and public edifices, particularly for La Pace, and a fine picture of 'St. Cecilia and St. Valerian,' in the Palazzo Borghese. Some of his best works are in the royal palace at Turin, and at Genoa. He afterwards visited France, from whence his reputation travelled to England, and caused Van Dyck to send for him to London, where he was employed by Charles I. Nine pictures by Gentileschi in the royal collection were sold after the king's death for six hundred pounds, and are now the ornaments of the hall at Marlborough House. He also painted two pictures for the Duke of Buckingham—a 'Magdalen,' and the 'Holy Family.' Van Dyck painted an admirable portrait of him, which has been engraved by Vorsterman. He resided in England twelve years, and died in London in 1647. The following are some of his paintings:

Compiègne.	Palace.	Meditation.
Genoa.	S. Siro.	The Annunciation.
"	Adorno Pal.	The Sacrifice of Abraham.

GENTSCH, ANDREAS, was a German engraver, who resided at Augsburg, and flourished early in the 17th century. He engraved several small copper-plates of grotesque ornaments, some of which are dated in 1616. He usually marked his plates with the same cipher as Heinrich Aldegrever A; but they are inferior to the works of that artist, and the date also furnishes a distinction.

GEOFFROY, CHARLES MICHEL, a French engraver, was born at Joinville in 1819, and died at Passy in 1883. He engraved the 'Médée' of Delacroix, the 'Harem' of Diaz, the 'Watermill' of Ruysdael, and several portraits of theatrical celebrities.

GEORGI, FRIEDRICH OTTO, a German painter, was born at Leipzig in 1819, and died at Dresden in 1874. There is by him in the Dresden Gallery a picture of 'Jerusalem and Mount Moriah.'

GERARD, FRANÇOIS PASCAL SIMON, Baron, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in 1770 at Rome, where his father was in the service of the ambassador of France. About 1782, he came to Paris, and studied for eighteen months in an aristocratic academy. He then became a pupil of the sculptor Pajou, then of Brenet, and finally, in 1786, of David, by whom his style was chiefly influenced. In 1789 he competed for the 'prix de Rome,' but only succeeded in obtaining the second place. The following year saw the death of his father, which caused him to accompany his mother, who was a native of Italy, back to Rome. On his return to Paris, he managed with some difficulty to escape the whirlpool of revolutionary politics, and to devote himself to art. One of his best works, 'Belisarius,' appeared in 1795, and was bought by the Dutch minister. His chief support, however, for some years was in working for the publishers, for whom he produced drawings illustrating editions of Virgil and Racine. He at length won a position by means of his portraits, and was patronized successively by Napoleon I., Talleyrand, Louis XVIII., the Emperor of Russia, the King of Prussia, Charles X., Louis Philippe, and others. With such patrons he did not lack honours: he was one of the original knights of the Legion of Honour, he was elected a member of the Institute, and in 1819 he was created a Baron. In his latter years his house was the resort of many celebrities, and he attracted a large circle of friends. During this period he was much occupied in the completion of some large decorative works at the Panthéon, representing 'Death,' 'Patriotism,' 'Justice,' and 'Glory.' Gérard did not keep an atelier for students as is customary with French painters, but he was assisted in his numerous works by Paulin Guérin, Steuben, and his only pupil, Mademoiselle Godefroid. He died in Paris, after a short illness, January 11th, 1837. It is computed that Gérard produced 28 historical pictures, 87 full-length, and about 200 half-length portraits, besides a great number of subject pictures. The judgment of his contemporaries has been ratified: Gérard's historical and subject pictures lack that greatness of idea and power of execution which would have entitled him to a place in the front rank of painters. It is by his portraits that he is to be judged, and, thanks to the opportunities he enjoyed, few portrait painters have had a greater chance by the distinction of their sitters, of transmitting their names to posterity. He may be considered as one of the last of the direct followers of David: he did not seek for any new or striking inspirations which might form a starting-point for a new departure in art, but adhered closely to the canons of classicism as enunciated by his master.

Baron Gérard's 'Œuvre' was published with descriptive text by his nephew in 1852-57, in three folio volumes, and his 'Correspondance' with artists and distinguished persons of his time in 1867. The following is a list of the works by him to be found in some of the chief European collections:

GERARD, LOUIS AUGUSTE, a French landscape painter, was born at Versailles in 1782, and studied under Bertin. He died in Paris in 1862. Amongst his works are:

View of the Porte d'Auteuil. 1819.
View of Rouen. 1822.
View of the Chapel of Betharam. 1827.
The Bridge of Neuilly.
View at Senlis.
View of Château de Polignac. (Narbonne Museum.)

GERARD, MARGUERITE, born at Grasse in 1761, was a pupil of Fragonard. There are by her in the Bordeaux Museum full-length portraits of M. Tallien and M. Récamier, and at Fontainebleau a picture entitled 'Les Torterelles.'

GERARD OF ST. JOHN. See HAARLEM, GERRIT VAN.

GERARDI, ANTONIO, is mentioned by Le Comte as an engraver of funeral pomps, monuments, &c.

GERARDIN, JEAN, a French engraver, flourished about the year 1680. He worked entirely with the graver, in a neat style, but without taste. He engraved a set of plates after the pictures by Pietro da Cortona in the palace at Florence.

GERARDINI, MELCHIORRE, (GHERARDINI, GIRALDINI, or GILARDINO,) a painter and engraver, was, according to Orlandi, a native of Milan, and was a scholar of Giovanni Battista Crespi, called Cerano. After the death of that master, Gerardini was employed to finish the pictures he left imperfect; and he also painted for the churches several altarpieces of his own composition. At San Celso, a small town near Milan, is a picture by him of St. Catharine of Siena, of which Lanzi speaks in favourable terms. He etched some plates after Pietro da Cortona, Guido, and others, as well as several from his own designs in the style of Callot, representing battles and other subjects, executed with neatness and spirit. He died in 1675.

GERARDS. See ZYLL, GERAERD P. VAN.

GERBIER, Sir BALTHASAR, Baron d'Ouvilly, was born at Middleburg in 1592, and distinguished himself as a miniature painter, at a period when the ablest artists of his country were in their greatest celebrity. He came to England as a retainer of the Duke of Buckingham in 1613, and painted the portraits of the principal nobility of the time. He accompanied the Duke of Buckingham to Spain, where he was sent to bring about the treaty of marriage. Among the Harleian manuscripts is a letter from the Duchess of Buckingham to her lord, when in Spain, in which she says, "I pray you, if you have an idle time, sit to Gerbier for your picture, that I may have it well done in little." The Earl of Denbigh possesses a portrait of Donna Maria, Infanta of Spain, by Gerbier. On it is inscribed: "This is the picture of the Infanta of Spain that was brought over by the Duke of Bucks. She was to have married King Charles the First." In the collection of the Duke of Northumberland is a large oval miniature of the Duke of Buckingham on horseback, by him, dated 1618. The head is well painted, and it is finished with great labour. The head of the horse is spirited. In a letter dated 1628, it is said, "That the King and Queen were entertained at supper at Gerbier's, the Duke's painter's house, which could not stand him in less than one thousand pounds." In 1641 he was appointed master of the ceremonies, and the same year was naturalized as an English subject, and also made successor to Inigo Jones as surveyor of the royal palaces. But falling into disfavour soon after, he left England and went to Surinam, where he was seized as a Dutch subject and sent back to Holland. He returned to this country during Cromwell's Protectorate, and founded an academy, which, however, had but very slight success. He was employed on the decorations for Charles II.'s triumphal entry into London, and met with considerable occupation as an architect. He died in London in 1667, while engaged upon the building of Lord Craven's residence, Hempstead Marshall, and there he was buried. He published several works, including an 'Encyclopædia of Art.' Van Dyck painted a fine picture of Sir Balthasar Gerbier and his family, which is now at Windsor Castle.

GERBO, LOUIS, a Flemish painter, was born at Bruges in 1761, but went to Paris, where he was engaged as a decorative painter. In the church of St. Jacques in Ghent is a 'Holy Family,' and several pictures are at the château of St. André near Bruges. He died in 1818.

GERCO, B., a Dutch engraver, executed some plates in imitation of the charming prints of Waterloo. After etching the plates he scratched upon them with the graver, and from not having afterwards cleared away the barb, has left a clumsy effect.

GERHARD, OTTO, a painter of Regensburg, flourished about the year 1720. His historical pictures and other works, which are in the style of Bourguignon, show considerable talent.

GERHARD VAN HAARLEM. See HAARLEM.

GÉRICAULT, JEAN LOUIS ANDRÉ THÉODORE, a French animal and historical painter, was born at Rouen, September 26th, 1791. He was the son of an advocate in good circumstances, and was sent to Paris to complete his education at the Lycée Impériale. While still at school, the bent of his inclinations was plainly to be seen. His holidays were spent at the circus, and in the streets there was no greater attraction to him than the horses in a well-appointed equipage. In 1808 he became for a short time the pupil of Carle Vernet. He then studied under Guérin, with whose academic traditions he had but little sympathy. His art-training was really due to his study of the old masters in the Louvre, and the works of Rubens exercised a very powerful influence on him. His family was much opposed to his becoming a painter, and his ardent spirits, checked in one direction, sought other pursuits. He became a member of the Jockey Club, and plunged into all the dissipations of the 'jeunesse dorée.' At length, in 1812, he was enabled to have a studio of his own, and the first-fruits of his work in it was the 'Chasseur de la Garde,' now in the Louvre. On the Restoration in 1814, he served for three months in the Royal Musketeers, and for the next two years he did but little painting. In 1816 he set out for Italy, where he occupied himself in making copies from the old masters. Hitherto he had devoted his attention chiefly to animal painting, but on his return to Paris he produced what is really his only great historical work, 'The Raft of the Medusa.' It was exhibited at the Salon of 1819, where it evoked a great storm of criticism, and its appearance may be said to mark the commencement of the struggle between the Classic and Romantic schools in France. Géricault shortly after visited England, in company with his friend Charlet, and by the exhibition of this work in London realized the sum of £800. During his stay in this country, he practised the then new art of lithography with much ardour. Many of his works in this medium represent English scenes, amongst which mention should be made of 'The Coal Waggon.' On his return to France, his health, sorely tried by dissipation, began to give way, and his condition was aggravated by a fall from his horse. He, nevertheless, produced at this time a great number of sketches, studies, &c., and also made some progress in sculpture. His death took place in Paris on January 18th, 1824. The following is a list of Géricault's works in public galleries:

Chalons-sur-Saone.	Museum.	A Negro.
Grenoble.	Museum.	Two Horses in a stable.
Montpellier.	Museum.	Portrait of Lord Byron.
"	"	Two Horses in a stable.
"	"	Sketches.
Nantes.	Museum.	Officer of Chasseurs of the Guard. (A study for the Louvre picture.)
Paris.	Louvre.	The Derby at Epsom. 1821.
"	"	Wounded Cuirassier quitting the field. 1814.
"	"	Head of a Bull-dog.
"	"	Turkish horse in a stable.
"	"	Spanish horse in a stable.
"	"	A Carabineer.
"	"	Stable with five horses.
"	"	The Lime-kiln.
"	"	Officer of the Chasseurs of the Guard. 1812.
"	"	The Raft of the Medusa. 1819.
Rouen.	Museum.	Study of a horse.
"	"	Study of heads of goats.

GERIKE, SAMUEL THEODOR, an historical painter, was born at Spandau in 1665, and studied under Romandon. He was court-painter in Berlin, and is also known by two etchings, 'The Virgin kissing her Son's Body at the Tomb,' and 'John the Baptist in the Wilderness.' He died at Berlin in 1730.

GERINI, LORENZO DI NICCOLÒ, the son of Niccolò di Pietro Gerini, flourished in the 15th century. In the passage leading to the chapel of the Medici in Santa Croce at Florence is a 'Coronation of the Virgin, with attendant Saints,' painted by him in 1410; but his principal work is an altar-piece in San Domenico, Cortona, representing the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' with a predella containing the 'Adoration of the Magi,' signed by Lorenzo in 1440. Little is known about his life or death, but the following works by him are preserved:

Florence.	Academy.	Coronation of the Virgin. 1401. (The central panel of an altar-piece.)
San Gimignano.	Gallery.	Glorification of St. Bartholomew. 1401.
"	"	Virgin and Child.
"	"	Four scenes from the lives of SS. Fina and Gregory.

GERINI, NICCOLÒ DI PIETRO, who flourished in the closing years of the 14th century, probably received his early instruction from Taddeo Gaddi, but afterwards became the pupil and assistant of Spinello d'Arezzo. His earliest existing work is a series of frescoes representing scenes from the 'Passion,' with the 'Resurrection,' the 'Noli me tangere,' the 'Ascension,' and the 'Descent of the Holy Ghost,' in the convent of San Francesco, Pisa, which are signed by him and dated 1392. At Prato, in the convent of San Francesco, is likewise a series of frescoes by Niccolò, representing scenes from the life of St. Matthew, and other subjects from the New Testament. At San Bonaventura he painted scenes from the Passion, of which but fragments remain. The sacristy of the church of Santa Croce, Florence, contains frescoes that are assigned to this artist. His latest known work is dated 1401. It is the right side of an altar-piece in three compartments, preserved in the Academy at Florence, and contains the figures of 'St. Peter, St. John the Evangelist, St. James, and St. Benedict.' The central panel contains the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' by his son Lorenzo, whilst the left side consists of figures of Saints by Spinello Aretino. An 'Entombment,' likewise in the Florence Academy, assigned to Taddeo Gaddi, is by Crowe and Cavalcaselle ascribed to Niccolò di Pietro Gerini.

GERINO DA PISTOJA, a native of Pistoja, was, according to Vasari, a friend of Pinturicchio and a follower of Vannucci. His earliest recorded work was the 'Virgin of Succour' at Sant' Agostino in Borgo San Sepolcro, where also are some frescoes by the same artist. In 1505 he was employed in the cathedral of his native city, and in 1509 he furnished for the church of San Pietro Maggiore an altar-piece of the 'Virgin and Child, with Saints.' About 1513 he was labouring in the Convent of San Luchese, near Poggibonsi, and two scenes from the life of Christ, signed and dated, are preserved in a refectory. His later works, a fresco of 'St. Agatha and St. Eulalia' in San Paolo, a 'Coronation of the Virgin' in the Palazzo della Comunità, Pistoja, and the 'Virgin with Saints,' of 1529, originally in the Convento di Sala at Pistoja, and now in the Uffizi Gallery at Florence, are decidedly inferior to his earlier works.

GERMAIN, LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1733. There are by him some spirited etchings of the 'Ruins of Pæstum,' published in 1769, from the designs of Dumont.

GERMAN LLORENTE, BERNARDO, a Spanish portrait painter, the son of an obscure artist, was born at Seville in 1685. He studied under Cristobal Lopez, whom he soon surpassed; and upon Philip V. visiting Seville, he was made choice of to paint the portrait of the Infant, Don Philip, in the execution of which he gave such satisfaction, that he became the favourite painter of the court. He, however, refused the offer of the post of court painter, and preferred, though in the prime of life, to betake himself to the seclusion of a hermitage, in which he pursued his art in accordance with his own simple taste. He was called 'Pintor de las Pastoras,' because he painted many of his Virgins in the attire of shepherdesses, one of the best specimens of which adorned the chapel of St. John Nepomuk in the church of San Ildefonso. He gave to his heads so much grace, sweetness, and relief, that many were sold as the work of Murillo, and pass for such out of Spain. At the latter part of his life, for the purpose of increasing the force of his chiaroscuro, he darkened his pictures with a kind of brown varnish, which was very detrimental, as it made them almost unintelligible. He died at Seville in 1757. The following works by him may be mentioned:

Madrid.	Gallery.	The Virgin as a Shepherdess.
"	Merced Calzada.	The Virgin with the dead Body of Christ.

GERMYN, SIMON, a native of Dordrecht, born in 1650, was a scholar of G. Schalcken, whose manner he for some time followed; he afterwards studied under Ludowyk Smits, called Hartcamp, who instructed him in his peculiar manner of painting fruit; but his productions in that way are not much esteemed. He next turned his attention to landscape painting, which he practised till his death, in 1719.

GEROLA, ANTONIO. See GIAROLA.

GERON, MATTHIAS, a painter and wood-engraver of Lauingen in Bavaria, is known by a picture of the 'Siege of Lauingen by Charles V.,' dated 1551, and also by the large tapestry in Neuburg, representing the 'Expedition of the Count Palatine Otto,' and the paintings of the 'History of Paris' and the 'Destruction of Troy,' executed in 1540, in the gallery of Duke Litta. Some woodcuts in a Missal for the use of the diocese of Augsburg, printed in 1555, are also attributed to him, and it is judged from them that he was a pupil of Hans Burgkmair. His best wood-cuts are 'Christ on the Cross,' and the 'Deposition from the Cross.'

GERRIT VAN HAARLEM. See HAARLEM.

GERRIT VAN SINT JANS. See DAVID, GHEERARDT.

GERST, JOHANN KARL JAKOB, a painter of landscapes and of theatrical scenes, was born at Berlin in 1792, and was in 1818 appointed royal decorative painter in that city, where he died in 1854. He executed several of the grand designs of Schinkel, as scenes for the 'Zauberflöte,' 'Nurmahal,' 'Fernando Cortez,' &c., as well as a host of splendid original decorations for operas, ballets, and plays.

GERTNER, JOHAN VILHELM, a Danish portrait painter, etcher, and lithographer, was born at Nyboder in 1818. He studied at Copenhagen, but afterwards travelled a great deal. Among his portraits, which are much esteemed, are those of King Frederick VII., Count von Frysensberg, Thorvaldsen, Dahl, Eckersberg, and Count Moltke. At first Gertner painted also landscapes and interiors, and his earliest important work was 'A Shepherd driving a Flock of Sheep,' painted in 1839, and now in the Copenhagen Gallery. He died at Copenhagen in 1819.

GESELSCHAP, EDUARD, a genre and historical painter, was born in 1814 at Amsterdam, where his parents had taken refuge from the storming of Wesel, their native place. Upon their return to Wesel, Eduard obtained his first lessons in drawing from a painter named Welsch. In 1831 he settled in Düsseldorf, and attended the Academy there from 1834 to 1841, receiving the instructions of Schadow. He died after many years' illness at Düsseldorf in 1878. Many of his pictures have been engraved by Martinet, Fritz Verner, and others. Among them may be named:

Faust in his Study.

The Bride at the Grave of her Lover.

Götz von Berlichingen before the Council.

Valentine's Death.

Romeo and Juliet in the Vault.

The Burial of Christ.

The Discovery of the dead body of Gustavus Adolphus.

1848.

The Eve of St. Nicholas. 1852.

The Eve of St. Martin.

The Grandmother's Picture Bible.

Old Woman at the Spinning Wheel.

GESSI, ERCOLE and GIOVANNI BATTISTA DEL. See RUGGIERI.

GESSI, FRANCESCO, was born at Bologna in 1588. He studied under D. Calvaert and Cremonini, and was afterwards one of the ablest scholars of Guido Reni, so that he obtained the name of a second Guido, and was employed by that master to finish many of his pictures. He possessed a vivacity of genius, and a facility of execution, which are said by Lanzi to have excited the jealousy of his master. His 'Assumption' in the church of La Morte at Bologna; his 'Martyrdom of St. Catharine,' in the church of that Saint; and, above all, his 'St. Francis,' at the Nunziata, have frequently been mistaken for the works of Guido. In later years he left Guido, and founded a school of his own, but his want of application impaired his genius, so that his works of this period are very indifferent. There are, however, several early pictures by him in the churches at Bologna, which are greatly admired, such as his picture of 'St. Charles Borromeo interceding for the Plague-stricken,' in the church of La Compagnia de' Poveri; 'St. Anthony of Padua,' in Santa Maria delle Muratelle; and the 'Descent of the Holy Ghost,' at the Cappuccini. He died at Bologna in 1649. The following pictures by him are in public galleries:

Bologna.	Pinacoteca.	St. Francis of Assisi receiving the Stigmata.
"	"	The Madonna and Child.
"	"	Christ praying to the East.
"	"	The Holy Family with two Angels.
"	"	St. Bonaventura.
"	"	Madonna and Child, with Angels.
Dresden.	Gallery.	A Magdalen.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Cupid.
Milan.	Brera.	Madonna and Child, with Saints.
Modena.	Estense Gal.	St. Francis.
Stockholm.	Gallery.	Christ as a Child.
"	"	Christ with the Crown of Thorns.
Stuttgart.	Gallery.	Diana and Actæon.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Morpheus appearing to Hæcylon.

GESSNER, KONRAD, a painter and etcher of horses and battle-pieces, born at Zurich in 1764, was the elder son of Salomon Gessner. After studying first at home, and then under Landolt and J. H. Wüst, he went in 1784 to the Dresden Academy, where he received the instructions of Graff and Zingg, and where he exhibited his first large battle-piece in 1785. After a brief term at home, he proceeded in 1787 to Italy, but on his father's death in the following year he once more returned to Zurich, where he remained till 1796, when he proceeded to England, and continued successfully working here till 1804. He again returned home, and prosecuted his experiments in etching upon stone, which he had commenced in England with Senefelder. He died in 1826. Among his best etchings are those of 'A Riding Horse at the Water-trough,' 'Horses at a Manger,' and 'A Dragoon leading a Horse.' In the South Kensington Museum are two water-colour drawings by him, 'Horses at a Pool,' and 'Soldiers playing at Cards in a Stable.'

GESSNER, SALOMON, was born at Zurich in 1730, and died in 1788. He is well known to the literary world by his 'Death of Abel,' and other poetical works, but he claims notice here as a landscape painter and engraver. His paintings, which are mostly in water-colours, are scattered among collections in various European countries. He etched several plates of vignettes, and other ornaments, for his 'Death of Abel' and his 'Pastorals,' and over three hundred etchings by him are known. He practised art as an amateur till he was thirty years of age, when he took to it as a profession, studying nature, and engravings from the works of Claude and Poussin. He also executed several landscapes in a very pleasing and finished style, of which the following are the principal:

A set of ten Landscapes. 1764.

Twelve Pastoral Landscapes. 1767—1786.

Ten Landscapes, with mythological figures. 1769—1771.

Twenty Idyllic Scenes. 1772—1775.

GESTELE, MARCUS VAN, a native of the Netherlands, flourished in the first half of the 15th century. In conjunction with Van Coudenberghe he painted for the church of Roselede, and in 1485 an altar-picture for the church of St. Martin at Courtrai.

GEUZENDAM, G. J., a native of Pekel-A, a village in the province of Gröningen, received his education from G. De San in Gröningen, where he established himself from 1801 to 1811 as a miniature portrait painter. After that time he travelled in Russia for a short time, and died shortly after his return to his own country, either at Deventer or at Zutphen, after 1815.

GEYER, JOHANN, a genre and historical painter, was born at Augsburg in 1807, and originally brought up as a cartwright. He, however, attended the school of the higher arts in that city, and in 1826 went to the Munich Academy, where he studied under Clemens Zimmermann. He then travelled in Belgium and France, and in 1833 was appointed professor of figure drawing at the Augsburg Polytechnic School. He died at Augsburg in 1875. Among the best of his works, in which he was fond of introducing the costume of the reign of Louis XIV., the following may be mentioned:

The Night Watchman.

Rival Preachers.

The Emperor Louis committing himself to the Protection of Augsburg. (Augsburg Town-hall.) 1844.

The Fornarina in the Studio of Raphael.

Capture of a Patrician. (Bremen Art Coll.) 1863.

Opening the Will. (Bremen Art Coll.) 1857.
 Reception of a Prince. (Hanover Gallery.)
 Götz von Berlichingen in Heilbronn. (Erfurt Art Coll.) 1859.
 Rehearsal for a Concert. (Leipsic Museum.)
 Interior of a Menagerie. (The same.)
 Concilium Medicum. (Munich Gallery.)
 End of a Bal Masqué. (The same.)
 Christening Feast.

GEYN, G. D., (or GEIJN,) an obscure Flemish engraver, who flourished from 1640 to 1650, was principally employed in engraving book ornaments for the booksellers, in which he attempted a humble imitation of the style of Paul Pontius. Among other prints by him is the portrait of Carolus Aleaspinæus.

GEYSER, CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, an engraver, was born at Görlitz in 1740. He executed several plates for different works, among which are the vignettes in Heyne's edition of Virgil, after Fiorillo, and in Hinchfeld's 'Theory of Gardening.' He died at Leipsic in 1803. His son, CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, born at Leipsic in 1772, was also an engraver.

GFALL, ANTON, was born at Kaunserthal in the Tyrol, in 1725, and educated first at the Imperial Academy of Vienna, and afterwards under Antonio Galli and Servandoni. He executed historical pictures in oil and fresco, but was especially successful in architectural and decorative painting. He died at Vienna in 1770.

GHANDINI, ALESSANDRO, was a wood-engraver, who worked for Andrea Andreani at Rome about 1610. One of his productions (marked A. G.) is a chiaroscuro of two blocks, representing 'St. Catharine.'

GHEDINI, GIUSEPPE, was born at Ficarolo in 1707, and was a scholar of Giacomo Parolini. There are several of his works in the churches at Ferrara. In Santa Cattarina da Siena is a picture by him of 'St. Lucy;' in San Leonardo, 'The Martyrdom of St. Catharine;' in Corpus Domini, 'The Annunciation,' and 'The Death of St. Joseph;' and in the refectory of the monastery of Santa Maria degli Angeli, his principal work, representing 'The Multiplication of the Loaves,' painted in 1755. He died in 1791.

GHENT, GERHARD OF, a pupil of Hans Memline, was engaged in 1479 in assisting his instructor upon the miniatures for a large prayer-book now in the Library of St. Mark at Venice.

GHENT, JOSSE, or JUSTUS OF, who was born at Ghent in 1410, and flourished up to the last quarter of the century, was probably a scholar of the Van Eycks. He is supposed to have assisted those masters in some of their most celebrated pictures; and Waagen is of opinion that 'The Last Judgment' in the church of St. Mary at Dantzic is by him, though long held by connoisseurs to be the work of Jan van Eyck. This picture is ranked by Kugler, who has given a very full description of it, among the greatest masterpieces of art. Kugler, however, does not say that it is by Justus of Ghent; he speaks only of 'The Communion' in the church of Sant' Agata at Urbino, and a small picture in the collection of M. van Huyvetter at Ghent, of 'The Finding of the Cross, and its Verification by the raising of a dead woman to life.' The picture at Urbino was probably finished in 1475, as Justus was paid in that year the sum of 300 florins, by the brotherhood of the 'Corpo di Cristo,' for whom it was originally painted. The series of 'Poets,' 'Philosophers,' and 'Doctors' in the library of the Duke Federigo of Urbino are probably his, but there is much uncertainty about the painters of this era. The late Sir Charles Eastlake possessed a picture by this artist of 'The Burial of Bishop Hubertus;' and a 'Last Supper' is in the church of the Lion at St. Petersburg.

GHERRARDI, ANTONIO, who was born at Rieti in 1664, and died at Rome in 1702, was a pupil of P. F. Mola, and afterwards of Pietro da Cortona. He painted for various churches in Rome, and has also left six etchings of 'The Torture of St. Martina.'

GHERRARDI, CRISTOFANO, called DOCENO, born at Borgo San Sepolero in 1500, was a disciple of Raffaellino dal Colle. He went to Florence, where he became acquainted with Giorgio Vasari, with whom he remained on friendly terms until his death. He excelled particularly in fresco, and assisted Vasari in many of his most considerable works. There are several grotesque subjects by him in the Casa Vitelli. Of his oil paintings the principal are, 'The Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth,' in the church of San Domenico at Città di Castello; and his picture of 'Santa Maria del Popolo,' at Perugia, painted in conjunction with Lattanzio della Marca. In 1539 Vasari induced him to go to Bologna, where he assisted in painting three altar-pieces for San Michele in Bosco. He also assisted Vasari in his fresco paintings for the brotherhood of the Scalza at Venice. He died at Borgo San Sepolero in 1556, whilst in the course of an engagement for assisting Vasari with the frescoes for the ducal palace at Florence.

GHERRARDI, FILIPPO, born at Lucca in 1643, studied under Pietro da Cortona, and worked with Giovanni Coli at several large paintings. His work is so similar to that of Coli, that it is hard to distinguish one from the other. Pietro da Cortona invited him back to Rome, to assist him in painting the cupola of Santa Maria in Campitelli. In the Colonna Gallery are two fine pictures by him of 'The Battle of Lepanto,' and 'The Triumph of Marc Antonio Colonna.' There are several pictures by him in the churches at Lucca, where he died in 1704.

GHERRARDINI, ALESSANDRO, born at Florence in 1655, was a scholar of Alessandro Rosi. He proved a distinguished painter of history, both in oil and in fresco. In the Monastery of the Augustines at Florence, is a fine picture by this painter of 'The Crucifixion;' and in the Casa Orlandini, a subject from the life of Alexander the Great. He died in 1723.

GHERRARDINI, MELCHIORRE. See GERARDINI.

GHERRARDINI, STEFANO, was a bamboccia painter of Bologna, who studied under Giuseppe Gambarini, and died in 1775.

GHERRARDINI, TOMMASO, born at Florence in 1715, was a pupil of Vincenzo Meucci. Three masterpieces by him are in the Vienna Gallery — 'An Offering in Honour of Pan,' 'Victory and Fame upon a Triumphal Car,' and a 'Triumphal Procession of Ariadne.' He died at Florence in 1797.

GHERRARDO, one of the best Florentine miniature painters, was employed by Lorenzo the Magnificent, for whom he worked in mosaic in conjunction with Ghirlandaio in the cathedral of Florence, and by Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, whose Bible, illuminated by him, is in the library of the Vatican, and is a lasting memorial of the excellence of Gherardo's art. A Missal of the year 1494, in the Laurentian Library at Florence, and a Breviary in the National Library in Paris, are also ascribed to him. In the Bologna Gallery is a picture of the 'Marriage of St. Catharine.'

GHERINGH, ANTONIUS, was a Flemish painter of the 17th century. He decorated churches in the Renaissance style, and pictures of his may be seen in the Dresden and Vienna Galleries. He was made free of the Guild of St. Luke in 1662, and died at Antwerp in 1667 or 1668. In the Munich Gallery is a picture of the 'Interior of the Jesuit Church at Antwerp,' with the date 1663.

GHERWETT, — VAN, a pupil of Rembrandt, lived in the middle of the 17th century. In the Munich Gallery is a picture by this artist of 'Abraham on the point of sacrificing Isaac.'

GHERZO, DOMENICO, commonly known as DOMENICO DI BARTOLO, was born at Asciano in the early part of the 15th century. He belongs to the decline of Sienese art. The frescoes which he executed, in 1435-40, in the sacristy of the cathedral of Siena, have perished; but a weak production, illustrating various works of mercy in connection with the institution, in the hospital of Santa Maria della Scala, Siena, still exists, with the exception of the Angel of Mercy. This work was painted between 1440 and 1444, and after that date nothing further is recorded of him. His death appears to have occurred in 1449. The galleries of Berlin, Bruges, Perugia, Rouen, and Siena have works ascribed to Domenico di Bartolo.

GHEZZI, GIUSEPPE, son of Sebastiano Ghezzi, was born in 1634 in the Comunanza, near Ascoli, and was for some time instructed by his father; but he afterwards went to Rome, where he studied the works of Pietro da Cortona, whose style he adopted. He was employed and highly esteemed by Pope Clement XI., and at the time of his death, in 1721, was secretary to the Academy of St. Luke at Rome.

GHEZZI, PIER LEONE, who was born at Rome in 1674, was the son of Giuseppe Ghezzi, and studied under his father, whom he surpassed. In conjunction with L. Garzi, F. Trevisani, and B. Luti, he was employed by Benedict XIV. to paint 'The Prophets' in San Giovanni in Laterano, and in other works. He was also employed in several considerable works by the Duke of Parma, who conferred on him the order of the Golden Spur. But he was most celebrated for his talent in caricature, and his works of that description are frequently found in the collections at Rome, where he died in 1755. There are by him a few etchings, executed in a clear, neat style, from his own designs, and after the works of his father. Among them are:

The Virgin and Infant Jesus; after Giuseppe Ghezzi. 1700.

Portrait of the Abbate Pietro Palatio.

Portrait of Nicola Zabaglia, engineer of St. Peter's.

GHEZZI, SEBASTIANO, was born in the Comunanza, near Ascoli, and flourished about the year 1634. He was a scholar of Guercino, and painted historical subjects with some success. At the Barefooted Augustines at Monsammartino, there is a fine picture by him of 'St. Francis receiving the Stigmata.'

GHISI, GIORGIO, called GIORGIO MANTOVANO, was born at Mantua in 1520, and died in the same city in 1582. He was the elder brother of Teodoro Ghisi, and like him a pupil of Giulio Romano. He became one of the chief artists in damascene work. He drew the nude very correctly, and excelled more particularly in the depicting of hands and feet, but his representations are all very much alike, and his style is very monotonous. This defect is particularly discernible in his immense print of the 'Last Judgment,' after Michelangelo. His engravings, especially those after the works of Raphael and Michelangelo, approach in the excellence of their drawing and execution those of Marc-Antonio. They are generally signed with his name, or marked with the cipher G.M.F. The following are his principal plates:

Portrait of Pope Julius II.; after Raphael.

The Holy Family, half-lengths; after the same.

The School of Athens; after the same. Two sheets.

The Dispute of the Sacrament; after the same.

An emblematical subject; sometimes called 'Raphael's Dream,' and sometimes 'The Melancholy of Michelangelo.' It represents an old man looking at a shipwrecked vessel, whilst a nymph appears approaching him; in the background are seen several horrible and fantastical figures. It is inscribed Raphelis Vrbinatis inventum, &c., and on a tablet, Georgius Ghisi Mant. F. 1561.

The Prophets and Sibyls; after the paintings by Michelangelo, in the Sistine Chapel. Six large plates.

The Last Judgment; after the same. Ten large plates.

An allegorical subject, representing the Birth of a Prince of the House of Gonzaga; after Giulio Romano. 1568.

Cupid and Psyche crowned by Hymen; after the same.

The Birth of Memnon; after the same; very fine.

Cephalus and Procris; after the same.

The Interview between Hannibal and Scipio; after the same.

Regulus led to death by the Carthaginians; after the same.

Regulus shut up in the Tun; after the same.

Venus in the Forge of Vulcan, sharpening the Arrows of Cupid; after Perino del Vaga.

Venus and Mars; after Raffaello Motta.

An allegorical subject, representing a Judge on his Tribunal, with an Ass's Ears; after Luca Penni.

Endymion carrying Diana to the Chase on his shoulders; after the same.

Hercules conquering the Hydra; after Giovanni Battista Scultore.

The Judgment of Paris; after the same.

The Siege of Troy; after the same.

The Taking of Troy; after the same.

A print representing tombs, skeletons, &c., called 'The Resurrection of the Dry Bones;' after the same. 1554.

Venus and Adonis; after Teodoro Ghisi.

Angelica and Medora; after the same.

The Birth of the Virgin; after B. Spranger.

The Trinity; after his own design. 1576.

The Adoration of the Shepherds; after Ange'o Bronzino; in two sheets. 1554.

The Last Supper; after Lambert Lombard.

The Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth; after his own design.

The Crucifixion; after the same.

GHISI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA. See SCULPTORE.

GHISI, TEODORO, called TEODORO MANTOVANO, was born at Mantua in 1536. He was the younger brother of Giorgio Ghisi, and had the advantage of being educated under Giulio Romano, one of the ablest of whose scholars he was. After the death of Giulio, he was selected by the Duke of Mantua to complete the works which were left unfinished by that great master. He died at Mantua in 1601.

GHISLANDI, DOMENICO, was a native of Bergamo, who flourished about the year 1662. He excelled in painting architectural and perspective views in fresco; though he occasionally painted historical subjects. Tassi mentions some pictures of the life and miracles of St. Francis of Paola by him, in the cloisters of the Padri Minimi at Bergamo; and in the Palazzo Terzi is a saloon ornamented with architecture, in which the figures are painted by Giacomo Barbella.

GHISLANDI, FRA VITTORE, called 'Il Frate PAOLOTTI,' the son of Domenico Ghislandi, was born at San Leonardo, in the Bergamese state, in 1655. He was a scholar of Sebastiano Bombelli, but he soon went to Venice, where he in 1675 entered the convent of St. Francis of Paola, and became a most accomplished portrait painter. He died at Venice in 1743. In the Rothan Gallery there is by him a lifelike picture of a young Bergamese.

GHISOLFI, GIOVANNI, (or GRISOLFI,) born at Milan in 1632, was a pupil of Salvatore Rosa. There are two architectural compositions of 'Ruins' by him in the National Gallery of Scotland. His 'Marius among the Ruins of Carthage,' and several of his decorative pictures are in the Dresden Gallery. He died at Milan in 1683.

GHISONI, FERMO. See GUISONI.

GHISSI, FRANCESCO, was living at Fabriano in the 14th century, and is the author of an altarpiece of the 'Virgin and Child,' with rays issuing from the person of the Virgin, which illuminate the darkness, symbolised by a crescent moon and stars on a dark blue background; it is dated 1374, and is now in the Augustine church of San Salvatore at Monte Giorgio. The Fornari collection at Fabriano possesses a 'Virgin and Child, between two kneeling Angels,' which is signed by him in 1395. Other examples by this artist may be seen in the church of San Domenico at Fermo; at Ascoli; and in the Museo Cristiano at Rome.

GHISSONI, OTTAVIO, was a native of Siena, who at an early age went to Rome, where he studied several years, chiefly under Cherubino Alberti. In 1610 he visited Genoa, and was for some time a scholar of Ventura Salimbeni. He painted some pictures in fresco for the public edifices.

GHITTI, POMPEO, was born at Marone, a small town near Brescia, in 1631. He was first a scholar of Ottavio Amigoni, but afterwards went to Milan, where he studied five years under Giovanni Battista Discepoli, called 'Lo Zoppo di Lugano,' to whom he subsequently became assistant. His death is assigned to the year 1703, though it is stated that one of his works bears the date 1704. Four etchings by him are known; they are, 'The Holy Family;' 'The Rest in Egypt,' after Discepoli; 'The Crowning with Thorns,' after Titian; and 'St. Maurus healing the Sick.'

GHUENS, BOUDEWYN, (GHEENS, or GEENS,) a Flemish painter, born at Mechlin in 1599, was a son of Jan Ghuens, called 'Prins.' He was still living in 1672.

GHUENS, JACOB, a native of Mechlin, was a painter who flourished about 1558.

GHUENS, JAN, a native of Mechlin, painted in 1528 a picture of 'Christ on the Cross,' surrounded by different figures.

GHUENS, JAN, called 'PRINS,' or 'PRINSKE' (the 'Little Prince'), flourished at the end of the 16th and beginning of the 17th century. The Museum at Mechlin has a picture by this artist of the 'Siege of Lierre' in 1595. In 1596 he executed a strategical plan of Mechlin and its surroundings. He died at Mechlin after 1617.

GIACCHINETTI GONZALEZ, JUAN, called IL BORGOGNONE DALLE TESTE, a Spanish portrait painter, was born at Madrid about 1630. It is not known by whom he was instructed, but his best studies were from the works of Titian. He excelled in portrait painting, and from his extraordinary talent in that branch, acquired the name of 'Il Borgognone dalle Teste.' About the middle of his life he went to Italy, and painted many portraits at Brescia and Bergamo. He died at the latter city in 1696.

GIACHETTO. See JAQUET.

GIALDISI, FRANCESCO, or GIOVANNI. According to Zaist, in his 'Notizie de' Pittori Cremonesi,' this painter was of Parma, but flourished at Cremona about the year 1720. He excelled in painting flowers and fruit, and particularly in his pictures of still-life, such as carpets, with musical instruments, books, &c., which he represented with a fidelity of form and a truth of colour which are admirable.

GIAMBONO. See BONI, MICHELE GIOVANNI.

GIAMPICCOLI, GIULIANO, an Italian engraver, was born at Venice in 1698. He was the nephew of Marco Ricci, and his style renders it probable that he was brought up in the school of Wagner. He was still living in 1765. He engraved several plates after Marco Ricci and others, among which are the following:

A set of twelve Landscapes, with a frontispiece; after Marco Ricci.

A set of four pretty Pastoral Subjects.

A set of four Landscapes; after M. Ricci and F. Zuccarelli.

GIANCARLI, POLIFILO. See ZANCARLI.

GIANNETTI, FILIPPO, was a landscape painter of Messina, who studied under the Dutch painter Casembroodt. He excelled his master in the greatness of his designs, but was not his equal in execution. He painted so quickly that he was called 'The "Fa presto" of Landscape Painters.' He died at Naples in 1702.

GIANNICOLA DI PAOLO MANNI. See MANNI.

GIANNUZZI, GIULIO DEL. See DEI GIANNUZZI.

GIANOLI, PIETRO FRANCESCO, born at Camperogno about 1620, was a pupil of Antonio Rossi. His portrait is in the Brera at Milan, where he died about 1690.

GIAQUINTO, CORRADO. See CORRADO.

GIAROLA, ANTONIO, (or GEROLA,) called 'Il Cavaliere COPPA,' was born at Verona in 1595, and studied at Bologna under Guido and Albani. In the church of San Bernardo at Bologna is a picture by him of 'St. Maurus kneeling before the Virgin and Infant;' but he is seen to more advantage in his 'Magdalen in the Desert,' in the church of the Padri Servi. In the refectory of the seminary at Verona is a fine picture by Giarola of 'Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus.' His pictures are crowded with figures. He died in 1665.

GIAROLA, GIOVANNI, a painter of Reggio, who died in 1557, is said to have been a pupil of Correggio. He executed paintings at Parma, which have perished, but wall-pictures of his are still to be seen in the Donelli Palace at Reggio.

GIBB, ROBERT, a Scottish landscape painter, was born at Dundee about the beginning of the 19th century, and on the formation of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1830, was elected one of its first members. He died in 1837. The following works by him are in the National Gallery of Scotland:

Craigmillar Castle.
Borthwick Castle.
View near Edinburgh.

GIBBON, BENJAMIN PHELPS, a line-engraver, was born in 1802. He was the son of the vicar of Penally, Pembrokeshire, and after having been educated at the Clergy Orphan School, learned engraving under Scriven and J. H. Robinson. He died in London in 1851. Amongst his plates are:

The Two Dogs; after Sir Edwin Landseer.
Suspense; after the same.
Jack in Office; after the same.
A Fireside Party; after the same.
The Highland Shepherd's Home; after the same.
The Shepherd's Chief Mourner; after the same.
The Shepherd's Grave; after the same.
There's no Place like Home; after the same.
Roebuck and Rough Hounds; after the same.
The Wolf and the Lamb; after Mulready.
Portrait of Queen Victoria; full-length.

GIBELIN, ESPRIT ANTOINE, a French historical painter, was born at Aix in 1739. He studied under Arnulfi at Florence, and resided for a long time in Italy, receiving in 1768 a prize from the Academy of Parma. He returned to France in 1771, and revived fresco painting in monochrome. The frescoes decorating the School of Medicine in Paris are by him. He died at Aix in 1813. There is in the Museum of Aix a picture by him entitled, 'Post equitem sedet atra cura.'

GIBERTONI, PAOLO, was a native of Modena, who flourished about the year 1760. He resided chiefly at Lucca, and excelled in grotesque subjects in fresco, in which he introduced little animals of every description. He also painted landscapes, which were esteemed in his time, and have increased in value since his death.

GIBOY, —, a French engraver, who flourished from 1810 to 1824, executed a print of 'Apollo and the Hours,' and vignettes for Tasso's 'Gerusalemme liberata,' after Perrenot, as well as plates after Swebach de Fontaine, and others, for the work of the Comte de Clarac on the Louvre. Among his other plates the following may be mentioned:

Gaspard l'Avisé; after Horace Vernet.
The Year, drawn by the twelve months; after Perrenot.
The Miraculous Draught of Fishes; after Jouvenet.
The Entry of Henry IV. into Paris; after Gérard.

GIBSON, DAVID COOKE, a Scottish genre painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1827. He was at first taught by his father, who died early. He then, by his own exertions, was enabled to enter the schools of the Royal Scottish Academy, and afterwards to study in London, Belgium, and Paris. His works first appeared at the Royal Academy in 1855, and he was showing much promise, when, after a visit to Spain, he died in London in 1856. His exhibited pictures were:

The Little Stranger. 1855.
Rustic Education. 1855.
Un Corrillo Andaluz. 1856.
Gipsies of Seville. 1857.

GIBSON, EDWARD, an English portrait painter of the 17th century, was the son, or near relative, of Richard Gibson the Dwarf, and was also his pupil. He died in his 33rd year.

GIBSON, PATRICK, a Scottish landscape painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1782. He received a good general education, and then studied under Nasmyth, and in the Trustees' Academy. He did much literary work, contributing to the 'Encyclopædia Edinensis,' the 'Edinburgh Encyclopædia,' the 'Edinburgh Annual Register,' and the 'New Edinburgh Review.' In 1818 he published a volume of etchings of Edinburgh. He left Edinburgh in 1824, and settled as a teacher at Dollar, where he died in 1829. His works are in the classic style, and there is a characteristic 'Landscape Composition' by him in the National Gallery of Scotland.

GIBSON, RICHARD, usually called 'The Dwarf,' from his diminutive size, being only three feet ten inches in height, was born in 1615, probably in Cumberland. He was, when a boy, page to a lady at Mortlake, who, perceiving in him a disposition for art, placed him under the care of Franz Cleyn, under whom he made considerable progress. His talent attracted the notice of King Charles I., who made him one of his pages. It is reported in Walpole's 'Anecdotes of Painting,' that he was married to a little lady of his own height, named Anne Shepherd, and that their marriage was celebrated in the presence of Charles I. and his Queen, who ordered a diamond ring for the bride; but the troubles coming on, she never received it. The union of this diminutive couple was commemorated by Waller in one of his prettiest poems. After the death of the king, Gibson was taken under the protection of Philip, Earl of Pembroke, and is said to have painted the portrait of Oliver Cromwell several times. When Sir Peter Lely visited England, Gibson improved himself greatly by copying the portraits of that master; and he rose into such repute that he was sent to Holland to teach the Princess Mary to draw, and had also the honour of instructing Queen Anne. He lived to the age of 75, and died in 1690. His widow died in 1709, at the age of 89. They had nine children, five of whom lived to grow up to the ordinary stature of mankind.

GIBSON, SUSAN PENELOPE, a miniature painter, the daughter of Richard Gibson the Dwarf, was born in 1653, and died in 1700. There is a portrait of Bishop Burnet by her.

GIBSON, THOMAS, a portrait painter, was born about 1680. His art was good, and he had a large practice. Highmore said that Thornhill was much indebted to him. He retired to Oxford in 1730, but returned again to London, where he died in 1751. Amongst his works are:

Flamstead, the astronomer. (Royal Society, London.)
Vertue, the engraver. (Society of Antiquaries, London.)
Archbishop Wake. (National Portrait Gallery.)

GIBSON, WILLIAM, a miniature painter, born in 1644, was a nephew of Richard Gibson the Dwarf, under whom and Lely he studied. He made many copies of the latter's works, and purchased part of his collection. He died in 1702.

GIERYSKI, MAX, a Polish genre painter, was born at Warsaw in 1846. His father, a military administrative officer, sent him to the Polytechnic School in Pulawy to learn mechanics. In 1863 he took part in the Polish Revolution, and remained till January, 1864, an officer of the national troops. He visited the University of Warsaw after peace had been signed, and showed a great inclination for music; but the Governor, General Berg, persuaded him to devote himself to painting, and helped him with an allowance, by which he was enabled to visit the University of Munich, where his great talent was developed under Alexander Wagner and Franz Adam. In 1870 he established a studio of his own. In 1872 he revisited his native land, but had to go to Meran in 1873 on account of his health, which his life as a soldier had greatly impaired; he spent the summer at Reichenhall, and the winter at Rome, but returned to Reichenhall in a worse condition, and died there in 1874. His first picture was 'An Attack by Cossacks.' He afterwards devoted his time to winter scenes, rainy landscapes, moonlight nights, and so forth, all more or less of a melancholy cast. Other well-known pictures by him are:

A Polish Spinning-room.
Duel with Pistols on Horseback.
Jews at the Evening Prayer.
A Visit by Moonlight.
The Meet for the Hunt.
Cossacks in a Country Street.
Hunting in the reign of Louis XIV. (Berlin National Gallery.)

GIESMANN, FRIEDRICH, an historical painter, born at Leipsic in 1810, was the son of a sculptor and wood-engraver, and devoted himself to the study of sculpture for a while, but afterwards abandoned it for painting. He took to the depicting of scenes from nature, and in particular of wild beasts from a menagerie; further on he produced portraits. He received the patronage of the King of Saxony during a two years' stay at Dresden, but in 1832 he left that city for Munich, with the intention of devoting himself exclusively to historical painting. He died there in 1847. He executed numerous wall paintings, as well as decorative and encaustic work, and he assisted Schnorr von Karolsfeld in adorning the halls of the new royal residence at Hohenschwangau, where he painted from Schnorr's cartoons five large wall pictures from the lives of Charlemagne, Rudolf of Hapsburg, and Frederick Barbarossa, as well as four friezes from his own designs. Of his easel paintings, 'The Parable of the Prodigal Son' is specially praised.

GIETLEUGEN, JOSSE, a painter and engraver, was a native of Courtrai, who was living in 1545. His original name was Van Gulleghem, but he changed it for some unknown reason. He engraved the wood-cuts for Hadrianus Junius's 'Emble-mata,' printed at Antwerp in 1585.

GIFFART, PIERRE, was born in Paris in 1638. He engraved a considerable number of portraits and book ornaments, which are neatly executed with the graver, but without much taste, though his merit was sufficient to procure him admission into the Academy in 1682, and the distinction of engraver to the king. He died in Paris in 1723. The following prints are by him:

PORTRAITS.

Marie Anne Victoire of Bavaria, Dauphiness of France.
Françoise d'Aubigné, Marchioness de Maintenon.
Philip, son of Thomas XIII., Count of Savoy.
Edward, son of Amadeus XV., Count of Savoy.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

A set of Medals from the French King's Cabinet.
A set of designs for Chimney-pieces; twenty plates, engraved in conjunction with Scotin; after Berain.

GIFFORD, GEORGE, an engraver of portraits, flourished about the year 1640. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, and his plates are very indifferently executed. Among others, he engraved the following:

Hugh Latimer, Bishop of Worcester.
Sir Edward Marmion.
John Bate; prefixed to his 'Mysteries of Nature,' 1635.

GIFFORD, SANDFORD ROBINSON, an American landscape painter, was born at Greenfield, in Saratoga county, New York, in 1823. He studied art at Hudson, New York, where he was influenced by the works of Thomas Cole, and in the National Academy of Design, New York. In 1850 he visited England and the Continent, and on his return, in 1851, he was elected an Associate of the National Academy, and became a full member three years later. He subsequently, in 1860, started on a journey through parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, and in 1870 he visited the Rocky Mountains. His works bear ample proof of the results of his travels. He died in New York in 1880. The following are some of his best paintings:

Mount Mansfield. 1869.
Twilight on Mount Hunter. (Exhibited at Paris in 1867.)
Morning in the Adirondacks. 1867.
San Giorgio, Venice. 1870. (Exhibited at Paris in 1878.)
Fishing Boats on the Adriatic. 1871.
Near Palermo. 1876.
The Ruins of the Parthenon. 1880.
Sunrise on the Matterhorn. 1880.

GIGANTE, GIACINTO, an Italian painter, lithographer, and etcher, born at Naples in 1806, was descended from a family of artists. He was at first a geographer, but studied painting under Pitloo, and then executed water-colour drawings for H. Wolfensberger, etchings of the 'Bay of Naples,' along with Vianelli, and landscape studies in lithography. In 1846 he accompanied the Emperor and Empress of Russia to Sicily, and composed an album of the island, after which he was appointed drawing-master in the family of King Ferdinand II. He died at Naples in 1876. He chiefly produced landscapes and architectural pictures in water-colours, for which he received the principal prize at Brussels. Two of his best works are: 'The Interior of the Treasury of St. Januarius on the Miracle Day' (Gallery of Capodimonte), and 'The Tomb of Giovanni Caracciolo at Carbonara.'

GIGOLA, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Brescia in 1796, and after studying five years in Rome, where he painted numerous portraits, and further in Paris, became first a miniature, and afterwards an enamel painter. He died at Milan in 1841. He executed miniatures on vellum for 'Gli Amori di Dafne e Cloe,' and Da Porto's 'Giulietta e Romeo,' as well as for Byron's 'Corsair.' The Ambrosian Library at Milan also contains several admired miniatures by him.

GIL, GERONIMO ANTONIO, a Spanish painter and engraver, born at Zamora in 1732, was a pupil of Tomas Prieto. His works show correct drawing and attention to technical detail. He died at Madrid in 1798.

GILARDI, PIETRO, was born at Milan in 1679, and was instructed in art by Federigo Bianchi, but he afterwards went to Bologna, where he became a scholar of Marc Antonio Franceschini and Giovanni Gioseffo dal Sole. He was successful in historical painting, and especially excelled in large fresco works, his talents being particularly adapted to the embellishment of cupolas, ceilings, and other extensive operations. Such are his frescoes in the refectory of San Vittore at Milan. The year of his death is not recorded, but he was in his best repute from 1700 to 1718. Sassi completed such of his works as were left unfinished at his death.

GILARDINO, MELCHIORRE. See GERARDINI.

GILARTE, MATEO, a Spanish painter, was born at Valencia about 1648. He was a scholar of Francisco Ribalta, and proved an eminent painter of history, both in oil and in fresco, working principally in Murcia, where he formed a great friendship with Juan de Toledo, the battle painter, with whom he worked. In the Madrid Gallery is a picture of the 'Birth of the Virgin.' In the church of Nuestra Señora del Rosario are three large pictures in fresco, representing 'Esther before Ahasuerus,' 'Jacob wrestling with the Angel,' and 'St. Dominic with other Saints.' For the convent of that church he painted the 'Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes.' He died at Murcia in 1700. His daughter, MAGDALENA GILARTE, painted much in his style for the cloisters of Murcia, Toledo, and Madrid.

GILBERT, ARTHUR. See WILLIAMS.

GILBERT, JOHN GRAHAM. See GRAHAM-GILBERT.

GILBERT, JOSEPH FRANCIS, a landscape painter, was born in 1792. He resided at Chichester, and exhibited at the Royal Academy and the British Institution. He contributed to the Westminster Hall competition a picture of 'Edwin and Emma.' He died in 1855. Amongst his works are:

View of East Street, Chichester.

Goodwood Race-course: Priam winning the Gold Cup.

View of the Ruins of Cowdray.

GILES, JAMES WILLIAM, a Scottish landscape painter, the son of an artist of local reputation in Aberdeen, was born at Glasgow in 1801. After having studied painting under his father, he passed a short time in Italy. In 1830 he was elected a member of the Royal Scottish Academy, and about this time sent several works to the Royal Academy. His pictures chiefly depict Highland scenery, especially fishing, to which sport he was much addicted. A picture by him, 'The Weird Wife,' is in the National Gallery of Scotland. He died at Aberdeen in 1870.

GILFILLAN, JOHN A., a Scottish painter, was in his early life in the Royal Navy. He afterwards devoted himself to art, and from 1830 to 1840 held the appointment of professor of painting in the Andersonian University at Glasgow. He afterwards emigrated to New Zealand, where he died. In the Glasgow Corporation Galleries is a picture of 'Robinson Crusoe landing stores from the Wreck,' and in the South Kensington Museum is a picture of a 'Scotch Loch.'

GILIO, a native of Siena, painted a book-cover, preserved in the Academy of Arts, representing a monk of St. Galgano in a white dress, seated in profile on a chair, dated 1257.

GILIOLI, GIACINTO, a Bolognese painter, born in 1584, was brought up in the school of the Carracci. Of his works at Bologna, the most esteemed are his picture of the 'Death of St. Joseph' in Santa Mattia, and 'David with the Head of Goliath' in San Salvatore. He died in 1665.

GILL, CHARLES, a portrait painter, was the son of a pastry-cook at Bath. He became a pupil of Sir Joshua Reynolds, and exhibited a few portraits at the Royal Academy between 1772 and 1819.

GILLARDINI, MELCHIORRE. See GERARDINI.

GILLBERG, JACOB, a Swedish engraver, was born in Wernmland in 1724. He engraved several portraits of distinguished personages of Sweden; and afterwards went to Paris, where he executed several plates in imitation of chalk drawings; among which were some heads after Raphael, and some landscapes engraved jointly with Demarteau. He died in 1793.

GILLBERG, JACOB AXEL, a Swedish miniature painter, the elder son of Jacob Gillberg, was born in Westmanland in 1769. He is known by his equestrian portrait of Charles XIII., and his portraits of Charles XIV. (Bernadotte) and his Queen, after Gérard. The date of his death is not known.

GILLE, JEAN BAPTISTE. See COLSON.

GILLEMANS, JAN PAULO, a fruit and flower painter, born at Antwerp in 1650, was the pupil of Georgius van Son. In 1673, along with his brother, Pieter Matthias, he was made free of the Guild of St. Luke. He then went to Paris, and from there in 1713 to Amsterdam. He is said to have fallen into a canal and been drowned about 1742. There are by him a signed picture in the Museum at Lille, and another in the South Kensington Museum.

GILLEMANS, PIETER MATTHIAS, brother of Jan Paulo, was born at Antwerp, where he also died in 1692. He had a high reputation as a fruit and flower painter.

GILLES OF ANTWERP. See CONGNET.

GILLIG, JAKOB, (or GELLIG,) a Dutch painter, was born at Utrecht about the year 1636, and is stated by Balkema to have died there in 1688. He excelled in painting fish, which he represented with great fidelity. He also painted portraits, and it is said landscapes. Several of his works are in the Berlin and Cassel Galleries, and the Kunsthalle at Carlsruhe. He married a daughter of Adam Willaarts, the landscape painter.

GILLIG, MICHEL, a Dutch painter, flourished in the latter part of the 17th century, and executed a portrait of Gerard De Vries in 1685.

GILLIS, F., a painter, born at Besançon at the commencement of the 18th century, was a professor of the Academy at Tournai. In the Museum of that town are a 'Group of dead Birds,' a portrait of Jean Baptiste Fauquez, a 'Head of an old Man,' and 'St. Nicholas.' He died at Froimont, near Tournai, in 1790.

GILLIS, HERMAN, born at Antwerp in 1733, was a pupil of Geeraerts, and painted portraits and historical subjects. In 1768 he became a member of the Guild of St. Luke, and afterwards travelled in Germany and Austria. At Vienna he painted a portrait of the famous General Laudon. He executed some pictures for the church of Hoogstraeten on the legend of the Holy Blood, and in 1773 was appointed Director of the School of Design at Louvain. The date of his death is not known.

GILLOT, CLAUDE, a French painter and engraver, was born at Langres in 1673. He was sent to Paris when young, and became a scholar of J. B. Corneille. He chiefly excelled in designing fauns, satyrs, and grotesques, in which he acquired some reputation, and was received into the Academy in Paris in 1715. Antoine Watteau was his scholar, and greatly surpassed him. He died in Paris in 1722. His works as a painter are little regarded; but he has left us a considerable number of etchings, from his own designs, which are executed in a bold, free style. Including the plates he engraved for the 'Fables' of La Mothe-Houdard, Gersaint makes his prints amount to one hundred and eighty. Among others, the following are by him:

The Feast of Diana disturbed by Satyrs; Cl. Gillot fecit.
The Feast of Bacchus celebrated by Satyrs and Bacchantes.

The Triumph of Pan celebrated by Nymphs and Sylphs.
The Triumph of Faunus, the God of the Forests.
The Milk-jug and the Upset Pot.

GILLRAY, JAMES, the most eminent of English caricaturists, was born in 1757, and is supposed to have been of Irish descent. Scarcely any particulars of his early years are known. It is said that he was the son of a Chelsea pensioner, and a person of the same name, who was probably his father, filled the office of sexton to the Moravian cemetery at Chelsea for forty years, and was buried there in 1799. Like the illustrious Hogarth, and the celebrated engraver Sharp, he began his career as a letter engraver, though we have been unable to find any specimens of his works of that description.

Being disgusted with this monotonous occupation, he ran away from his employer, joined a company of strolling players, and after undergoing the various hardships which this course of life invariably entails, he returned to London, and became a student of the Royal Academy, where he pursued most energetically his studies in the art of design. That he must have attained remarkable proficiency is very evident from several plates which he engraved after his own designs, particularly two subjects from Goldsmith's 'Deserted Village,' inscribed 'The Village Train' and 'The Deserted Village,' published in 1784. These are designed in a remarkably free and picturesque manner, and have some resemblance to the earlier works of Stothard. They are exceedingly well engraved in the dotted manner, and though the name of his instructor in this art is not known, they so much resemble the works of the unfortunate Ryland, that one can have but little hesitation in assigning the credit of the tuition to him. Among other works of this class, and executed about the same time, are, a capital portrait of Dr. Arne, after Bartolozzi; 'Colonel Gardiner's last Interview with his Children;' 'The Burning of the Duke of Athole East Indiaman, 1785;' 'The Wreck of the Nancy Packet off Scilly, 1784;' and two portraits of William Pitt, all after his own designs. The two last, though admirable representations of the man, are nevertheless somewhat approaching to caricature. He also engraved a few plates after Lady Spencer's drawings. Either for the purpose of amusement or of mystification, he occasionally adopted fictitious names. Thus the following plates, which are known to be by him, have other names attached to them: 'The Nativity,' after Copley, J. Hurd fecit, 1785; 'The Return,' a child with a dog in a landscape, J. Kent fecit, 1781; 'A Storm,' J. Penn fecit, 1786; and were it necessary, many others of his works might be quoted bearing these names. He also, on many of his earlier caricatures, made use of a monogram composed of the letters J. S., interlaced in such a manner as to resemble that used by Sayer the caricaturist, which he probably adopted to mislead the public as to the real author of the publications.

In 1792 he engraved a droll representation of 'John Bull and his family landing at Boulogne,' for his friend Bunbury, and in the same year he accompanied De Louthembourg in his travels in France and Flanders to collect materials for the latter's great picture of the 'Siege of Valenciennes.' The memorial of this tour is preserved in two groups, known as 'Flemish Characters.'

Gillray appears to have worked as an engraver long after his career as a caricaturist had commenced, for he engraved in 1792 a large plate after Northcote, representing the delivery of the prisoners from the Bastille, inscribed, 'Le Triomphe de la Liberté, ou, L'Élargissement de la Bastille;' and in 1794, 'Marquis Cornwallis receiving the royal Hostages at Seringapatam,' after the same painter: probably the last of his productions of this description.

Admirable as many of these works are, it is as a caricaturist that Gillray is best known, and upon which his fame entirely rests. In this art he has no rival; and the exquisite tact with which he seized upon points, both in politics and manners, most open to ridicule, is only equalled by the consummate skill and wit with which he satirized them. His earlier works are more carefully than spiritedly executed, and look like the productions of an engraver only. The earliest of his undoubted caricatures, though many others antecedent have been with great reason attributed to him, is dated 1779; it is probably a satire on the Irish Fortune-hunter, and is called 'Paddy on Horseback,' the so-called horse being a bull, on which he is riding with his face to the tail. But his improvement was rapid and extraordinary, and he soon attained a marvellous freedom both of design and in the management of the etching needle. It is said that he etched his ideas at once upon the copper without making a previous drawing, his only guides being sketches of the distinguished characters he intended to introduce made on small pieces of card, which he always carried about with him. His caricatures amount to more than twelve hundred, of which the following are a few of the more important, arranged according to the dates at which they appeared.

A New Way to pay the National Debt. George III. and his Queen are coming out of the Treasury loaded with money, which is overflowing their pockets; on the right is the Prince of Wales in a very shabby condition, gratefully receiving money from the Duke of Orleans. April 21, 1786.

Ancient Music. A caricature of the King and Queen in ecstasy at a concert performed by the ministers. May 10, 1787.

Monstrous Cravens. A satire on the grasping avarice of George III. and Queen Charlotte. May 29, 1787.

March to the Bank. An etching, executed in the most masterly style. August 22, 1787.

Market Day. Lord Thurlow, as a grazier, is attending Smithfield Market, and examining the beasts, the heads of which represent the leading political characters of the day. May 2, 1788.

Election Troops bringing in their Accounts to the Pay Table. A satire on the means employed by ministers, unsuccessfully, however, to frustrate the election of Fox for Westminster. This is the first caricature on which the name of Gillray appears. 1788.

Frying Sprats, and Toasting Muffins. Two small but very clever caricatures on the parsimonious habits of George III. and Queen Charlotte. 1791.

Anti-Saccharites, or John Bull and his Family leaving off the use of Sugar. The King and Queen, from economical motives, are enjoying and praising their tea without sugar, while the Princesses are evidently very much disgusted. The Royal Family, it is said, were highly delighted with this caricature. 1792.

A Connoisseur examining a Cooper. A very bold and happy idea, capably carried out. George III. is represented almost purblind, looking with great attention at a miniature of Oliver Cromwell, by Samuel Cooper, which he holds in one hand, while he has a candle in the other. The bitterness of this satire was occasioned by the disparaging observations the King made on the portraits Gillray had sketched during his tour in Flanders with De Louthembourg. The King had said, "I don't understand these caricatures." The exasperated artist made this drawing, and said, "I wonder if the royal connoisseur will understand this?" 1792.

Temperance enjoying a frugal Meal, and A Voluptuary under the Horrors of Digestion. Two most admirable productions, unsurpassed in humour, design, or execution. The temperate habits of George III. in the former, and the Epicurean manners of the Prince of Wales in the latter, are portrayed with the most consummate ability. 1792.

Bengal Levée, from an original drawing made on the spot by an amateur. A very large and skilfully-executed plate. 1792.

The Dagger Scene, or the Plot discovered. A capital representation of a well-known scene in the House of Commons, in which Edmund Burke was the chief performer. 1792.

Fatigues of the Campaign in Flanders. The Duke of York luxuriating in the company of Flemish women, attended by his soldiers, who are bringing in large bowls of punch. 1793.

The Loyal Toast. The Duke of Norfolk giving his celebrated toast, "The majesty of the people," at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, for which he was dismissed from his offices. 1798.

The Consequences of a successful French Invasion. A set of four plates, in which the horrors to be expected are given with extraordinary spirit.

The Cow-pock, or the wonderful effects of the new Inoculation. A very humorous burlesque on the popular opinions respecting Jenner's invaluable discovery.

L'Assemblée Nationale, or a grand co-operative Meeting at St. Anne's Hill (the residence of Charles James Fox), respectfully dedicated to the admirers of a Broad-bottom'd Administration. This is undoubtedly the most talented caricature that has ever appeared. The King is supposed to have been executed, the Republic proclaimed, and Fox, as first consul, is holding his levée at his house at St. Anne's Hill. All the leading Whigs are present, of whom the likenesses are most admirable, and in the right corner is seen a portion of the figure of the Prince of Wales, to whom this caricature gave so much offence that he offered a large sum of money for its suppression, which being accepted, he ordered the plate to be destroyed. The plate, however, was not destroyed, but secreted, and it still exists. 1804.

The King of Brobdingnag and Gulliver (George III. and Bonaparte); two plates. 1803 and 1804.

The Middlesex Election. Sir Francis Burdett dragged in his carriage to the poll by the Duke of Norfolk, Charles James Fox, and other leading Whigs. 1804.

The Reconciliation (between George III. and the Prince of Wales). Admirably treated. 1804.

The Life of William Cobbett, written by himself. Eight satirical plates. 189.

Installation of the Chancellor of Oxford (Lord Grenville), August 8, 1810. A large plate, and the last political engraving bearing Gillray's name.

Other pieces not of a political nature, but full of humour, and sometimes severely satirical on the fashionable frivolities of the time, wherein he did not spare the persons of the prime leaders of society, may be added:

A Pic Nic Orchestra. This plate contains the portraits of the Marchionesses of Buckingham and Salisbury, Lady Mary Cholmondeley, Lord Edgumbe, and Charles Greville.

Dilettanti Theatricals. The same characters are introduced as in the preceding plate.

Blowing up Pic Nics. The same parties assailed by Sheridan in the character of Harlequin, assisted by Mrs. Siddons and John Kemble.

The Bulstrode Siren. Mrs. Billington and the Duke of Portland.

Push-pin. Duke of Queensberry and Miss Vanneck.

Twopenny Whist. The party consists of Betty Marshall, the assistant to Mrs. Humphreys, Mrs. Turner, Mr.

Mortimer, and a German of the name of Schotter.

Betty Marshall is showing the trump card.

Cockney Sportsmen; four plates. 1800.

Elements of Skating; four plates. 1805.

Rake's Progress at the University; five plates. 1806.

Gillray executed a series of twenty stippled plates, usually printed in a red colour, bearing the title 'Hollandia Regenerata.' They have Dutch inscriptions, were published in Holland, and were intended principally to ridicule the republican costumes and appointments. The last plate published during his life was 'A Barber's Shop in Assize time,' from a drawing by Bunbury. It is dated January 9th, 1811, but was engraved much earlier.

Gillray was unfortunately another example of the imprudence that so frequently accompanies genius and great talent. His habits were in the highest degree intemperate, and for many years he resided in the houses of his publisher, Mrs. Humphreys, in New and Old Bond Streets, and lastly in St. James's Street. By her he was most liberally supplied with every indulgence, and during his residence with her he produced nearly all his most celebrated works, which were bought up with unparalleled eagerness, and circulated not only throughout England, but all over Europe. Though under an engagement not to work for any other publisher, yet, to satisfy his insatiable desire for strong drink, he now and then etched plates for Mr. Fores of Piccadilly, disguising, and occasionally very successfully, both his style and handling.

It has been before observed, that the last of his works is dated in 1811; soon after this he sank into a state of mingled imbecility and delirium, and died in London in 1815.

There exists a specimen of his practice of the art of lithography. It represents a 'Domestic Musical Party;' the mother is playing on the pianoforte, the husband stands behind her playing the flute, the children are singing. It exhibits considerable ability, and is excessively rare. He engraved on wood a medallion portrait of William Pitt, placed against a rustic monument overshadowed by the branches of an oak, and a few small woodcuts, among which are 'A Woman crying Fish,' 'A Boy near a Cottage drinking,' and 'A Beggar at a Door.'

GILPIN, SAWREY, an animal painter, was born at Carlisle in 1733. He was the son of a captain in the army, from whom he received some instruction in drawing. On his arrival in London, he was for some time under a ship painter. His genius, however, led him to drawing animals; and some of his sketches having been shown to the Duke of Cumberland, he took Gilpin under his patronage, and employed him in painting the portraits of his favourite racers, and other subjects, at Newmarket. He became one of the most correct and spirited drawers of horses that the art has produced; and that he possessed powers of a superior cast, which would have enabled him to distinguish himself in the more elevated walk of historical painting, is evident in his pictures of the 'Election of Darius' and the 'Triumph of Camillus.' Gilpin was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1795, and an Academician in 1797. He died at Brompton in 1807. The animals, particularly the horses, in Barret's pictures, are generally by Gilpin; and the landscape part of Gilpin's pictures is by Barret. In the South Kensington Museum is a picture of 'Cows in a Landscape;' and in water-colours, 'Sketch of a Lion and Lioness,' and

'A Mansion in process of construction.' There are a few very spirited etchings by this estimable artist; among others, the following:

A set of Oxen, Cows, &c.

A small Book of Horses.

Some Heads for his brother's, Rev. William Gilpin's, 'Lives of the Reformers.' 1809.

GILPIN, WILLIAM, a landscape draughtsman, born in 1724, near Carlisle, was the brother of Sawrey Gilpin. He graduated at Oxford, and was afterwards master of Cheam School, and finally vicar of Boldre, Hants, where he died in 1804. He published a large number of topographical works, for which he drew and engraved the illustrations. There are four landscapes in Indian ink by him in the South Kensington Museum.

GILPIN, WILLIAM SAWREY, a water-colour painter, was the son of Sawrey Gilpin. He was the first president of the Water-Colour Society (1804—1806), exhibiting there till 1814; and he held the appointment of drawing-master at the Royal Military College at Great Marlow. He died about 1815.

GILSON, JEAN HENRI, called 'Frère ABRAHAM D'ORVAL,' was born at Habay la Vieille in 1741. He established himself in the Ardennes as a hermit, till on the suppression of the hermits by Joseph II. he entered the Abbey of Orval. The Prior, struck by his talent, made him travel to Rome, Antwerp, Brussels, and Paris, and then sent him to the Academy at Düsseldorf. There he carried off the first prize with a picture of 'Adam and Eve lamenting the Death of Abel.' On his return to the Abbey he set to work to fill the refectory, halls, and church of the Abbey with pictures. In 1793 the Abbey with all its pictures was destroyed by the French, and Gilson retired to Florenville, where he opened a studio, and died in 1809. He executed a large number of portraits and religious pictures.

GILTlinger, JOHANNES GUMPOLT. See GÜLTlinger.

GIMIGNANI, GIACINTO, (or GEMIGNANI,) was born at Pistoja in 1611, but studied at Rome, first under Nicolas Poussin, and afterwards in the school of Pietro da Cortona. In his composition and design he followed the classic style of his first instructor, but in his colouring, and the taste of his architecture, that of the second. He worked in competition with Andrea Camassei and Carlo Maratti, in the Baptistery of San Giovanni in Laterano, where he painted in fresco some subjects from the life of Constantine. Several of his works are in the Palazzo Niccolini at Florence; and a fine picture of 'Leander,' in the Uffizi, is so much in the style of Guercino, that Lanzi says it was for some time attributed to that master. In the church of San Giovanni at Pistoja are two pictures of subjects from the life of St. John; in the cathedral, 'St. Roch;' and in the Pitti Palace at Florence, 'Rebecca at the Well.' He died in 1681. There are a few etchings by this master, executed with great spirit, and marked with the annexed monogram:  Among them are:

The Rape of the Sabines. 1649.

The Siege and Capitulation of Tournai in 1581.

A set of twelve small plates of the Sports of Children.

Anthony and Cleopatra.

Queen Semiramis quelling a Revolt.

GIMIGNANI, LODOVICO, (or GEMIGNANI,) was the son of Giacinto Gimignani, and was born at Rome in 1644. He chiefly excelled in fresco; and there are several of his works in the churches at Rome, as well as others executed in conjunction with his father. The vault of Santa Maria delle Vergini is one of his most admired performances; the principal altar-piece of the same church is by him. He died in 1697.

GINDERICK, THEODORICH VON, painted in 1475 'Two Angels,' and a baldacchino, for the chapel of St. Michael in the Victor's church at Xanten.

GINDTER, MATHÄ. See GÜNTHER.

GINNASI, CATTARINA, the niece of Cardinal Domenico Ginnasi, was born at Rome in 1590. She was taught painting by Giovanni Lanfranco, after whose designs she painted the whole of the pictures in the church of the convent of Santa Lucia at Rome. She died in 1660.

GIOCCHIO, ULISSE, a painter of the Florentine school, born at Monte San Savino, flourished in the early part of the 17th century. In 1616 he painted a lunette, representing 'St. Dominick and a procession of Corpus Domini,' over the principal entrance of the church of Santa Maria Novella in Florence, and in the following year decorated with frescoes the cloisters of San Lorenzo in Pistoja.

GIOJA, GAETANO, a painter of Rimini, who lived in the last quarter of the 18th century, studied at Florence and Rome, and executed historical and mythological pictures. He was still living in 1824.

GIOLFINO, NICCOLÒ, called by Vasari NICOLA URSINO, was a contemporary of Falconetto, and born at Verona about 1465. His paintings are chiefly to be seen in the churches of his native city. The Museum of Verona possesses two of the 'Madonna and Saints;' and the Berlin Gallery has a 'Virgin and Child between four Saints.' The church of Santa Maria in Organo, Verona, is especially rich in frescoes by him. The National Gallery, London, possesses two panels, originally in one, containing portraits of the Giusti family. He was a friend of Mantegna, and the master of Paolo Farinati, a celebrated fresco painter of Verona. The exact date of his death is unknown, but he was alive in 1518.

GIOLFINO, PAOLO, a painter of Verona in the 16th century, was a brother and pupil of Niccolò Giolfino. The Verona Gallery contains a 'Madonna enthroned,' and a 'Resurrection,' by him.

GIOLITO, GABRIELE, was a native of Ferrara, who resided in Venice, where from 1542 to 1567 he carried on the business of a printer, and also engraved on wood the illustrations for his edition of the 'Orlando Furioso' of Ariosto, first issued in 1542. He died before 1577.

GIONCOY, MICHEL, (or GIONCQUOY,) a painter, was a native of Tournai, who studied at Rome. In conjunction with B. Spranger he produced several works, but died in the year 1600, in the prime of life.

GIONIMO, ANTONIO, born at Padua in 1697, was first instructed by his father, Simone Gionimo, and afterwards studied under Aureliano Milani and Crespi. His principal residence was at Bologna, where he painted some pictures for the churches. Among his best works are the 'Finding of Moses,' in the church of Santa Cristina; and the 'Martyrdom of St. Floriano,' in Sant' Agata. He died at Bologna in 1732.

GIONIMO, SIMONE, the father of Antonio Gionimo, was born in Dalmatia in 1655, but afterwards removed to Vienna. He painted somewhat after the manner of Guercino.

GIORDANO, LUCA, called 'FA PRESTO,' was born at Naples in 1632. He was the son of Antonio Giordano, an obscure artist, whom he had surpassed when he was only eight years old, and the astonishment which he created caused the Viceroy of Naples to place him under the care of Giuseppe Ribera, called Lo Spagnoletto. Before he was thirteen years of age he had acquired a fertility of invention, and a readiness of hand, that are perhaps without example. Animated by the report he had heard of the wonders of Rome, he withdrew himself from his father's house, and made the best of his way to that city. He there habitually copied the works of Raphael, Michelangelo, and Caravaggio. His talents recommended him to the notice of Pietro da Cortona, who employed him to assist him in the many considerable works in which he was at that time engaged. The brilliant style of this master was particularly congenial to the taste of Luca Giordano; and he appears to have aimed at excelling him in the facility and splendour of his execution. His father, who had lived in a state of indigence and obscurity, followed him to Rome; and from the produce of the talent of his son, whose designs after the works of the great masters were esteemed and sought after, he received a considerable emolument. Such was the demand for his drawings and sketches, that his father continually urged him to despatch, by repeating to him, 'Luca, fa presto.' ('Luke, make haste.') and hence he came to be designated by this phrase. In the last edition of Bellori's 'Vite de' Pittori,' in which is introduced the life of Luca Giordano, he is said to have made twelve different copies of the paintings by Raphael in the Loggie of the Vatican, and twenty drawings after the 'Battle of Constantine,' by Giulio Romano; besides those from Michelangelo, Caravaggio, and others. The fruits of his industry enabled him in company with his father to make a journey through Lombardy to Venice, where he studied the works of Titian and Paolo Veronese. He then returned by way of Florence and Leghorn to Naples. His first public works in his native city were a picture of the 'Holy Rosary' for the church of San Potito, three small frescoes from the life of St. John the Baptist for the chapel of San Giacomo della Marca, and some oil paintings for the church of Santa Teresa. In 1655 he painted in competition with Giacomo Farelli, for the church of Santa Brigida, a picture of 'St. Nicholas borne away by Angels,' which was a work of such power as to establish his reputation at the early age of twenty-three. In 1678, on peace being established between France, Spain, and Holland, he painted an immense picture to commemorate the event. In 1679 he was invited to Florence to paint the chapel of Sant' Andrea Corsini, and was overwhelmed with kindness by the Grand-Duke Cosmo III. On his way to Florence he was received by the Marquess of Heliche, the Spanish Ambassador to Rome, who afterwards became viceroy of Naples, by whom, as also by his successor, the Count of Santistevan, he was largely patronized. By imitating the style of every distinguished painter, he formed one which partook of the manner of each. He is compared by Bellori to the bee, that collects honey from the sweets of every flower. It would have been better for his fame if he had established a character of his own, and if imitation were not so apparent in all his productions. Some of his pictures having reached Spain, he was invited to Madrid by Charles II., in 1692, where he was appointed painter to the king. He has nowhere left greater proofs of that despatch for which he is so celebrated. In the space of two years he painted in fresco the immense ceiling of the church, and the staircase of the Escorial; the latter, representing the famous 'Battle of St. Quentin,' and the 'Taking of Montmorency,' is considered as one of his finest works. His next productions included the great saloon in the Buen Retiro, the sacristy of the cathedral at Toledo, the chapel of Our Lady of Atocha, and the vault of the Royal Chapel at Madrid. After the death of Charles II. he was retained in the service of Philip V., and during a residence of ten years in Spain he completed a prodigious number of pictures, which might reasonably have been supposed to have occupied a long life of the most industrious painter. In 1702 he accompanied Philip V. to Naples, where the high reputation he had acquired in Spain rendered his reception enthusiastic. It was with difficulty that even he could keep pace with the eagerness of his fellow-citizens to possess his works. It is reported of him, that the Jesuits, having engaged him to paint a picture of 'St. Francis Xavier,' complained to the viceroy that they could not prevail on him to finish the picture, though it was to be placed at their principal altar on the day of the festival of that saint. Luca Giordano, finding himself pressed on all sides, painted the picture in a day and a half. Perhaps no painter has left so many pictures, without even excepting Tintoretto. To such uncommon powers it would not be reasonable to refuse the claim to genius; but it was certainly that species of mechanical skill which produced little that was marked with depth and originality. He died at Naples in 1705. His pupils were his son, Paolo de' Matteis, Aniello and Niccolò Rossi, Pavelli, Tommaso Fasano, Simonelli, Francisquito, and some others. The following paintings by him are preserved in the galleries of Europe:

There are some very spirited etchings by Luca Giordano, executed in a free, masterly style; among them are:

Elijah calling Fire from Heaven to destroy the Priests of Baal.
The Virgin and Infant Jesus.
St. Joseph and St. John.
The penitent Magdalen.
The Adulteress before Christ.
Christ disputing with the Doctors.
St. Anne received into Heaven by the Virgin.

GIORDANO, SOFIA, was born of poor parents at Turin in 1779. She was placed under the tuition of M. de Maron, the sister of Raphael Mengs, at Rome, but she returned to Turin in 1801, and married a surgeon named Giordano. Her chief works were in miniature and pastel. She died at Turin in 1829.

GIORDANO, STEFANO, was born at Messina, and is known by a splendid picture of 'The Last Supper,' produced in 1541, in the cloister of San Gregorio at Messina.

GIORGETTI, GIACOMO, born at Assisi about the year 1610, was a scholar of Giovanni Lanfranco. He excelled in historical paintings and frescoes, and several of his works are in the churches of his native city, the most considerable being the dome of the principal church. In the sacristy of the Conventuali he painted some pictures of the 'Life of the Virgin.'

GIORGIO, a miniature painter of the 15th century, was a son of Alberto of Germany. In 1441 he was employed by the Marquis Leonello of Ferrara in the preparation of breviaries and other ecclesiastical work, which occupied him till 1462. He left a son, who is known in art as Martino da Modena.

GIORGIO, GIOVANNI, was an Italian engraver, who was employed chiefly by the booksellers. He resided at Padua, where he engraved the plates for a work on antique lamps, published in 1653, entitled 'De Lucernis Antiquorum reconditis.' He also engraved a frontispiece with figures to Vesling's 'Anatomy,' published at Padua in 1647. There is also by him a ludicrous print, called 'The Bath of the Anabaptists,' after Raphael. He died at the age of 77.

GIORGIO DE FLORENTIA, flourished from 1314 to 1325, and was probably a pupil of Giotto. He is supposed to have painted at Borghetto and at the castle of Chambéry.

GIORGIONE. See BARBARELLI.

GIOTTINO, whose real name is not known with certainty, is supposed, from late researches, to have been Giotto di Maestro Stefano, who lived in the 14th century, and was evidently a careful and conscientious pupil of Giotto; another account has given his name as Tommaso di Stefano. There are still in the chapel of San Silvestro in Santa Croce, at Florence, a series of frescoes, attributed to Giotto, illustrating 'The Miracles of St. Sylvester.' The drawing and general composition of these frescoes is admirable, the colouring warm and clear, and plainly show that the maxims and spirit of Giotto aided and animated this artist. The frescoes in the crypt chapel of the Strozzi in Santa Maria Novella, which represent scenes from the life of Christ, and a 'Pietà,' formerly in San Romeo, but now in the Uffizi Gallery, are also to be attributed to him. All the above-mentioned works are of the latter half of the 14th century. The frescoes in the chapel of the Holy Sacrament at Assisi, representing scenes from the life of St. Nicholas, and now much damaged by damp and partly obliterated, are considered by many to be by Giotto. Nothing authentic is known concerning the birth or death of this artist.

GIOTTO. See BONDONE.

GIOVANI, FRANCESCO, (or JUVANIS,) an engraver, is stated to have been born in 1635, and to have studied under Carlo Maratti. Plates by him are known of 'The Child Jesus upon a Cloud beside the Manger,' 'The Adoration of the Shepherds,' after Maratti, and 'Saturn enthroned.'

GIOVANNARIA, a monk of the Carmelite order, born at Brescia about 1460, excelled in perspective. His brother, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, was also a painter.

GIOVANNI, Maestro. See BOCCARDI.

GIOVANNI BATTISTA DI FRANCIA. See MOLA.

GIOVANNI BATTISTA DI RAFFAELLO. See GRASSI.

GIOVANNI DI FRANCESCO. See TOSSICANI.

GIOVANNI DI MARTINI. See MARTINI.

GIOVANNI DI PAOLO, called GIOVANNI DEL POGGIO, was a contemporary and occasional assistant of Sano di Pietro; he was already known in 1423, and was on the roll of the Guild at Siena in 1428. He died about 1481. The Academy at Siena possesses a 'Last Judgment' by him, dated 1453, and several panels of his production are in the collection of M. Ramboux of Cologne. Giovanni del Poggio has also some repute as a miniature painter.

GIOVANNI DI PIERO, who was born at Naples, lived in the 14th century at Pisa, where he kept a shop, and had as partner Martino Bartolommei, with whom he painted an altar-piece for the hospital of Santa Chiara, Pisa, in 1402, for the sum of ninety-five golden florins. This painting represents the 'Virgin and Child enthroned between four Saints,' with a Trinity, and SS. Mark and Luke in its pinnacles. In 1403 and 1404 he also furnished a canvas, and did other work in the hospital; and in 1405 he executed the 'Crucifixion' on canvas that is now hanging in the inner choir of the church of San Domenico, Pisa, with his signature and date. No dates can be given of this artist's birth or death.

GIOVANNI DI PIETRO, who flourished in the 15th century, was an occasional assistant of Sano di Pietro, and is of little note. In the choir of Santa Maria dei Servi, at Siena, is a 'Virgin of Mercy' by him. No further details concerning him are known.

GIOVANNI DI PIETRO, called, from his nationality, LO SPAGNA, (or GIOVANNI SPAGNUOLO, also JUAN DE ESPAÑA and JUAN EL ESPAÑOL,) first appears as his own master at Todi in 1507. His instructors in the art seem to have been Perugino and Pinturicchio; he was the companion of Raphael at Perugia, and his style shows a mixture of Peruginesque and Raphaellesque, without the higher qualities of either school. His death took place at Spoleto between 1528 and 1530. Amongst other paintings by him, the following may be cited:

Assisi.	S. Francesco.	Virgin enthroned, with Saints. 1516.

GIOVANNINI, CARLO CESARE, a son of Jacopo Maria Giovannini, was born at Parma in 1695, and died at Bologna in 1758, having resided in the latter city from 1723. It is not said by whom he was instructed, but he was a good historical painter. He, however, devoted himself rather to the restoration of pictures. Several of his works are in the public edifices at Bologna, the following being the most esteemed: 'St. Anne teaching the Virgin to read,' in the church of La Morte; 'Adam and Eve driven from Paradise,' in La Madonna del Piombo; and 'Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter,' in San Giovanni in Monte. He had a sister, BIANCA GIOVANNINI, a portrait painter, who died in 1744.

GIOVANNINI, JACOPO MARIA, (JOVANNINUS, or JOANNINUS,) was born at Bologna in 1667, and died at Parma in 1717. He was a scholar of Antonio Roli. He painted some pictures for the churches at Bologna; one of the most esteemed being that of 'The Magdalen worshipping the Cross,' in the church of San Niccolò degli Alberi. He is more known as an engraver than a painter. There are by him several plates after the great masters, particularly after Correggio and the Carracci, of which the following are the principal:

A set of twenty large plates; after the paintings by Lodovico Carracci, and others, in the cloister of San Michele in Bosco, at Bologna.

Twelve prints from the frescoes by Correggio, in the cupola of San Giovanni at Parma.

St. Jerome; after Correggio.

The Virgin and Infant, with St. George; after Correggio.

St. Sebastian; after Lodovico Carracci.

The Communion of the Apostles; after Marc Antonio Franceschini.

GIOVANNINO DEL PIO. See BONATTI.

GIOVENONE, GIROLAMO, (or GIUVENONE,) was a native of Vercelli, who flourished at the beginning of the 16th century, as appears from two of his pictures in the church of San Paolo in that city, dated 1514 and 1516. At Vercelli, in the church of the Augustines, there is a fine picture by him of the 'Resurrection,' with two laterals representing St. Margaret and St. Cecilia. Other works of his are in the same town and in Bergamo.

GIOVENONE, GIUSEPPE, a painter of Vercelli, appears to have flourished at the end of the 15th century. His pictures are peculiar from the contrasts they exhibit. One of them, a representation of 'Christ's Resurrection,' is in the Turin Gallery.

GIRALDI, GUGLIELMO, (called MAGRI, or DEL MAGRO,) was a painter of Ferrara, who, between 1450 and 1477, painted miniatures for various books, including a Missal, Breviary, and Psalter, and the works of Tibullus, Appian, and Petrarch.

GIRARD, ALEXIS FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, was born at Vincennes in 1789. He studied painting under Regnault, but later on turned his attention to engraving, in which he achieved much success. He succeeded in uniting together in his works the mezzotint, roulette, and Indian ink styles. He died in Paris in 1870. The following are among his best plates:

The Virgin with the Fish; after Raphael.
The Virgin with the Pearl; after the same.
Portrait of Talma; after Gérard.
Corinna; after the same.
Louis XVIII. in his Cabinet; after the same.
Cardinal Mazarin on his Death-bed; after Delaroche.
Cardinal Richelieu on the Rhone; after the same.
The Archangel Gabriel; after the same.
The Last Day of Pompeii; after C. Bruloff. 1839.
Mary Stuart; after Decaisne.
The Happy Mother; after Prud'hon.
Dolce far niente; after Winterhalter.
Vintage at Naples; after the same. 1842.
Daniel in the Lions' Den; after Ziegler. 1839.
Bonaparte crossing the St. Bernard; after Steuben.
Abduction of Rebecca; after Coignet.

GIRARD, JEAN GEORGES, a French painter, born at Epinal in 1635, was a pupil of Legrand. He died at Nancy in 1690.

GIRARD, ROMAIN, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1751. He engraved after Cipriani 'The Sacrifice of Love,' and 'Love caressing Beauty;' and after Greuze, 'The Broken Pitcher;' he also copied 'The Death of Dido,' from Bartolozzi.

GIRARDET, ABRAHAM, an engraver and etcher, was born at Locle, in the canton of Neuchâtel, in 1764, and when but thirteen years of age engraved 466 plates to a Biblical work. He then became a pupil of B. A. Nicolet in Paris, and in 1794 sought further improvement in Rome. The vignettes which he engraved for editions of Horace and La Fontaine are his best works. He died in Paris in 1823. The best of his larger plates are:

The Transfiguration; after Raphael. 1806.
The Triumph of Titus and Vespasian; after Giulio Romano. 1810.
The Rape of the Sabine Women; after Poussin.
The Dead Saviour; after Andrea del Sarto.
The Supper; after Philippe de Champaigne.
The Death of Arnold Winkelried.

GIRARDET, CHARLES SAMUEL, an engraver and lithographer, was born at Locle in 1780. He received his first instruction from his brothers Abraham and Alexander Girardet, and completed his studies in Paris. At first he engraved views of Swiss scenery, but executed 'The Resurrection of Christ,' after Le Brun, in 1804. In 1811 he turned his attention to lithography, and in that medium depicted the 'Biblical Narratives,' after Hübner; 'The Transfiguration,' after Raphael; 'The Battles of Alexander,' after Le Brun; and 'The Death of Endamidas,' after Poussin. From 1833 to 1840 he made designs for the 'Magasin Universel.' He died in Paris in 1863.

GIRARDET, EDOUARD HENRI, a Swiss painter and engraver, was born at Neuchâtel in 1819. He studied art under his father, Charles Samuel Girardet, and with his brother Karl, and became famous as a painter of genre subjects and landscapes. Journeys in Egypt and Algiers resulted in several good pictures representing those countries and their people. Among his most successful paintings of Swiss peasant-life are the following:

A Sale by Auction in a village.
A Dying Peasant blessing his family.
A Young Mother dying in the snows of the Great St. Bernard.
The Doctor's Visit.
The Little Apple Thieves.

Girardet, in the midst of work such as this, suddenly gave it up in favour of engraving, and worked in aquatint, mezzotint, and a mixed style, with as much success as he had done in painting. The following are his best prints:

Divicon; after Gleyre.
The Banquet of the Girondins; after Delaroche.
The Fainting of the Virgin; after the same.
The Return from Golgotha; after the same.
The Virgin in contemplation before the Crown of Thorns; after the same.
The Oenci; after the same.
Molière at the table of Louis XIV.; after Gérôme.
The Education of a Prince; after Zamaccini.
A Spanish Wedding; after Fortuny.
Raphael in his Studio; after Jalabert.
The Marriage of Henry IV.; after Lechevalier-Chevignard.

He died at Versailles in 1880.

GIRARDET, JEAN, an historical painter, was born at Nancy in 1709. He studied first in his native city, but more especially in Italy, and painted for churches and palaces in oil and fresco. He died at Nancy in 1778. Some of his work, of a classical character, may be seen in the town-hall of that city.

GIRARDET, KARL, a genre and landscape painter, was born at Locle in 1810. He was a son of Charles Samuel Girardet, and after being instructed under Léon Cogniet he travelled in Switzerland, Germany, Italy, Spain, Egypt, &c., and from 1836 brought out landscapes and representations of the manners of those countries. In 1842 he excited much attention by a picture of 'A secret Protestant Meeting in a cave attacked by Troops and Monks.' He succeeded especially with views of Swiss lakes, North Italian landscapes, scenes from popular and military life, children's games, and so forth. He also illustrated Ariosto, and Thiers's Histories of the Consulate and Empire. His death occurred in Paris in 1871.

GIRARDIN, ALEXANDRE FRANÇOIS LOUIS DE, Count, a French historical and landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1767, and became a pupil of Bidault. He exhibited at the Salon of 1822 a 'View of Ermenonville,' and various other landscapes at the subsequent exhibitions until 1835, after which year there is no further record of him.

GIRARDON, CATHERINE. See DUCHEMIN.

GIRAUD, ANTOINE COSME, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1760, was a pupil of Lingée, and executed vignettes and plates for booksellers. His best works are two plates after Borel, the one representing 'Two young Women lying on a bed,' the other 'A young Woman bathing her feet.' He died after the commencement of the 19th century.

GIRAUD, VICTOR, a French genre painter, born in Paris in 1840, was a pupil of Picot and Eugène Giraud. His best known picture, 'The Slave-Market,' was formerly in the Luxembourg Gallery; he also painted 'The Bird-Charmer.' He died in 1871, from disease brought on by exposure on the fortifications of Paris during the siege.

GIRLING, EDMUND, an amateur etcher, who flourished in the early part of the 19th century, was a clerk in a bank at Yarmouth. He etched after Rembrandt, Crome, and the Dutch masters, and his works were exhibited at the Norwich Society.

GIRODET-DE-ROUSSY-TRIOSON, ANNE LOUIS, a French historical painter and writer, was born at Montargis in 1767. Having lost his parents when very young, he was adopted by an army surgeon, M. Trioison, whose name he subsequently added to his own. After some elementary instruction from a painter named Luquet, he entered the studio of David in 1785. In 1787 and 1788 he unsuccessfully competed for the 'prix de Rome,' but at length, in 1789, obtained the coveted distinction with a picture of 'Joseph making himself known to his brethren.' He spent some time in Rome, and there painted the 'Endymion,' which first brought his name into notice. The political troubles of the time obliged him to fly to Naples, and thence to Venice, but on his way home he fell ill at Genoa, and was carefully tended by Gros. Once more settled in Paris, he devoted himself assiduously to historical painting, and he met with such success that at the decennial competition in 1810, he was awarded the 'grand prix' for his 'Scene from the Deluge,' in preference to David's 'Sabines.' In 1812 Girodet's adopted father died, and with the property bequeathed to him he was enabled to indulge a taste for architecture. This amateur house-building, and his literary pursuits—for he wrote a poem on painting, and contributed freely to the art literature of the day—did not leave him much leisure during the next few years for the production of any large works. In fact, throughout his career, he painted but few pictures. His time was greatly occupied with studies and sketches, and he executed an immense number of designs for the illustration of the classic authors, notably for editions of Anacreon, Virgil, and Racine. In his latter years Girodet suffered much in health, and he owed much to the attention of his friend, the great physician Larrey. He died in Paris in 1824, and previous to his burial at Père-la-Chaise, Louis XVIII. ordered the cross of officer of the Legion of Honour to be affixed to his breast. Like David himself, and most of his disciples, Girodet lacked a mastery over colour. His power of drawing was his forte, and to this is due the charm of many of his works. He is seen at his best in his less ambitious subjects, such as the 'Atala' and the 'Endymion'; whilst in such works as the 'Insurrection at Cairo' and the 'Deluge,' he is strained, not to say theatrical. The following is a list of some of his works:

Ajaccio.	Hôtel de Ville.	Portrait of Charles Bonaparte.
Amiens.	Museum.	The Burial of Atala. (A replica of the Louvre picture.)
Angers.	Museum.	Romulus and Tatius. 1788.

GIROUST, A. L. C., an historical and portrait painter, born at Versailles about 1780, was a pupil of David. He was still living in 1835.

GIROUST, JEAN ANTOINE THÉODORE, a French historical painter, was born at Bussy-Saint-Georges (Seine and Marne) in 1753. He was a pupil of Lépicié, obtained the 'grand prix' in 1778, and was received into the Academy in 1788 upon his 'Œdipus at Colonus.' He died at Mitry-Mory (Seine and Marne) in 1817. He executed a great number of works, among which were 'St. Theresa,' in the cathedral of Boulogne-sur-Mer, 'The Tortures of the Maccabees,' 'Eponine and Sabinus,' and 'St. Godeliva.'

GIRSCHER, BERNHARD, a landscape painter, was born at Rothenburg, near Görlitz, in 1822. He at first studied medicine, but in 1848 turned his attention to art, and worked under the portrait and landscape painter Resch at Breslau. In 1849 he proceeded to Munich, where he remained four years, passing the summer months in walking through the Bavarian highlands and the Tyrol. He spent some time at Liegnitz, and then in 1854 removed to Berlin, travelling, however, after this in the Tyrolean and Styrian Alps. He died in 1870. Among his best paintings are 'Moonlight Night in the Tyrolean Highlands,' 'Water-Mill in Silesia,' and those in which glaciers are represented.

GIRTIN, THOMAS, who was born in Southwark in 1775, was a pupil of Edward Dayes. He was one of the founders of the English school of painting in water-colours, and is generally classed next to Turner, with whom he was on terms of intimacy. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1794 to 1801. Many of his pictures represented views in London, while others were from Scotland, the Lake district, Wales, and Devonshire; there were also several of English cathedrals. On the occasion of the peace of Amiens, Girtin went to Paris, where he made twenty drawings of the principal views in that metropolis, of which he etched the outlines, and the plates were finished in aquatint by other artists. He afterwards painted a panorama of London. Though of a very weak and delicate constitution, such was his attachment to art that he continued to exercise his profession till within a few days of his death, though in a state of the most deplorable debility. He died in London in 1802, at the early age of twenty-seven. The British Museum possesses a fine collection of Girtin's drawings and sketches, many of which were presented by Mr. Chambers Hall in 1855, or bequeathed by Mr. Henderson in 1878. Some interesting particulars respecting this artist are contained in Thomas Miller's 'Turner and Girtin's Picturesque Views, sixty years since,' London, 1854. Among his works in public collections are the following:

British Museum.

View of Bridgenorth.
The Great Hall, Conway Castle.
Ethel Castle, Northumberland.
Lanercost Priory, Cumberland.
Melrose Abbey.
Knaresborough Castle.
View of Ripon.
York Cathedral.

GISBRANT, JOHN, was an English historical painter of the 17th century. He spent many years at Lisbon, where he painted an altar-piece for the church of St. Mary Magdalen.

GISELAER, N. B. In the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge is a picture of the 'Interior of a Hall,' signed N. B. Giselaer, fecit Anno Dni. 1631. The colouring and perspective are good, but the figures are too large, and the animals bad.

GISMONDI, PAOLO, called PAOLO PERUGINO, was a native of Perugia, but was educated at Rome under Pietro da Cortona, and was received into the Academy in that city in 1668. Some of his best fresco works, which are historical, are those in the church of Sant' Agnese and in the tribune of Sant' Agata at Rome.

GIUDICI, CARLO MARIA, a painter, sculptor, and architect, was born at Viggiù, in the Milanese, in 1723. From his thirtieth year he studied the great masters in Rome, and afterwards settled down in Milan, where he in 1760 started a school, by means of which he sought to develop a purer style, and inculcate closer study of the antique and of nature. He died at Milan in 1804. His works as a sculptor were considerable; as a painter he executed a few frescoes in San Francesco di Paola at Milan, and some easel pictures from both sacred and profane history, which in the heads recall the style of Guido Reni.

GIUNTALODI, DOMENICO, (i.e. GIUNTA DI LODO,) was a painter and architect, who was born at Prato in 1505, and learned painting under Niccolò Soggi, and afterwards at Rome. He died at Guastalla in 1560. He executed several important works as an architect, and was made engineer to Charles V. As a painter, in addition to the portraits of some notable persons of his time, he is known to have produced a picture of 'The Coliseum,' which was engraved by Girolamo Fagivoli, and of 'An Old Man in his Drawing Chair,' engraved by Agostino Veneziano.

GIUOCHI, GIULIANO, called PESELLO, the son of Arrigo di Giucolo Giuochi, was born at Florence in 1367. He was more of a sculptor and architect than a painter, and in 1390 was commissioned to design a monument to Pietro Farnese in Santa Maria del Fiore. In 1414-16 he painted flags for the interior of San Giovanni, and in 1419 he unsuccessfully competed for the erection of the cupola of Santa Maria del Fiore, but was made Brunellesco's substitute in the following year. In 1424 occurs the only record of his name in the Guild of St. Luke. He died in 1446 at Florence, and was buried in the church of the Carmine. Owing to a confusion on the part of Vasari, much doubt exists as to the authorship of various works attributed indiscriminately to Giuliano and his grandson Francesco, who resided for many years in his grandfather's atelier in the Corso degli Adimari. In the Uffizi Gallery at Florence is an 'Annunciation,' painted for the church of San Giorgio sulla Costa by Giuliano, who is said to have excelled in the representation of animals. Both grandfather and grandson were employed in painting 'cassoni.'

GIUSTI, ANTONIO, was born at Florence in 1624, and first studied under Cesare Dandini, but afterwards under Mario Balassi. He painted with equal success historical subjects, landscapes, animals, and hunting-pieces; and continued to exercise his profession with unabated vigour until he reached his eighty-first year. He died in 1705.

GIUSTI, FELICE, who was born at Pistoja, and died at Bologna, flourished about the middle of the 18th century. He studied under Cresspi, and painted sea-pieces and landscapes with figures. He was surpassed by his brother, GIACOMO GIUSTI, who also was born at Pistoja, and died at Bologna.

GIUSTI, GREGORIO, who was born at Pistoja in 1732, studied at Rome under Seblonca, and afterwards under Battoni. In 1756 he executed several pictures for the church of San Vitale, but he was principally employed by the Directors of the Kircher Museum in painting art objects.

GLAESER, GEORG, a portrait and historical painter, was born at Altorf, near Nuremberg, in 1719. After receiving tuition from his own friends he underwent a ten years' apprenticeship, and was then appointed court painter to the Margrave Friedrich at Baireuth, who sent him first to Vienna, where he twice obtained the prize, and then to Italy, from whence he only returned after seven years, and died at Baireuth in 1748. The following paintings by him are in the gallery of the Landauer Brüderhaus at Nuremberg:

Lucretia stabbing herself.

Cleopatra applying the Asp to her Breast.

Alexander on entering India received by the High Priest.

The Baptism of Christ.

Portrait of a Rabbi. 1735.

GLANTSCHNIGG, ULRICH, was born at Hall, in the valley of the Inn, in 1661, and after studying at Venice, settled in 1686 at Botzen, where he died in 1722. He chiefly painted altar-pieces, but also genre scenes. The following are among his works:

Botzen. Franciscan Ch. St. Francis receiving the Stigmata. 1712. (Restored by Sie in 1856.)

" Parish Ch. The Three Wise Men from the East.

Brixen. Chapter House. The Marriage at Cana.

His son and pupil, JOSEPH ANTON GLANTSCHNIGG, who was born at Botzen in 1695, and died there in 1750, but who lived chiefly at Würzburg, was a painter of historical, genre, and landscape subjects.

GLASER, HANS, a wood-engraver and card-painter, lived at Nuremberg about the middle of the 16th century. His works, which are very rare and have chiefly an historical interest, are for the most part views of old castles and fortresses; one of them represents 'An Owl surrounded by other Birds.'

GLASER, JOHANN HEINRICH, was a Swiss wood-engraver, who flourished at Basle about 1630.

GLASS, JOHANN KILIAN, (not KLASS, as given by Nagler,) was born at Dornsieid in the province of Hanau in 1701, and afterwards settled down at Frankfort-on-the-Main. He worked variously at the painting of portraits, house façades, ornaments, snuff-boxes, &c. He was much employed by Oppenheimer, the Finance Minister of Württemberg, and at Lausanne (in 1742) for the Margrave of Baden and some English noblemen. He afterwards went to Paris, where he was lost sight of.

GLAUBER, DIANA, the sister of Johannes and Jan Godlieb Glauber, was born at Utrecht in 1650, and was instructed in design by her elder brother. She painted historical subjects and portraits, in which she distinguished herself at Hamburg, where she chiefly resided. In the latter part of her life she became blind.

GLAUBER, JAN GODLIEB, called MYRTILL, the younger brother and scholar of Johan Glauber, was born at Utrecht in 1656. At the age of fifteen he accompanied Johannes Glauber in his journey through France to Italy. Whilst at Paris, he studied under Jacob Knyf, who was in some repute as a painter of architectural views and seaports. After this he rejoined his brother at Lyons, and went with him to Rome, where he studied two years. In 1684 he went to Hamburg, and met with great encouragement, but was afterwards invited to the court of Vienna, where he passed a great part of his life. Jan Godlieb Glauber painted landscapes in the style of his brother,—hence his nickname,—though with a less masterly handling; but he excelled in seaports, which he embellished with small figures, correctly drawn and neatly touched. He died at Breslau in 1703. Some good landscapes by him are in the Augsburg, Munich, Pommersfelden, and Vienna Galleries. In the Glasgow Gallery is a picture of 'The Snake in the Grass.'

GLAUBER, JOHANNES, surnamed POLYDOR, was the son of German parents, but was born at Utrecht in 1646. He studied for some time under Nicolaas Berchem, but having seen some Italian landscapes he was seized with a desire to go to Italy, and in 1671 left Holland upon a journey to Rome, travelling through France in company with his brother and sister and the brothers Van Dooren. He remained a year at Paris and two at Lyons, studying under various masters. Arriving at length in Rome he received the name of 'Polydor,' upon joining the Artists' Guild. He passed two years in that city, sketching the most remarkable scenery in the vicinity; and afterwards visited Padua, Venice, Hamburg, and Copenhagen. On his return to Holland in 1684, he settled at Amsterdam; and formed an intimacy with Gerard de Lairese, who was then in the height of his reputation, and joined him in his studio. The landscapes of Glauber, decorated with the classic figures of the 'Poussin of Holland,' obtained such reputation, that it was with difficulty they could execute the commissions which they received. It was at this time that Glauber painted the fine landscapes in the château of Soestdijk, for the Prince of Orange, in which the figures are painted by De Lairese. He died at Schoonhoven in 1726. His works exhibit nothing of the taste of his country, his forms and scenery being entirely Italian. Among his principal pictures are the following:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Diana at the Bath.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Mercury carrying off Io.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Italian Landscape.
Cassel.	Museum.	Five Landscapes.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	Landscape.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Landscapes.
Hague.	Gallery.	Idyllic Landscape.
Madrid.	Gallery.	Departure of Adonis for the chase.
Munich.	Gallery.	Four Landscapes.
Paris.	Louvre.	Two Landscapes.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Landscape.
		Mountain Landscape.

There are by him several etchings, executed in a slight, spirited style, some of them after his own designs, and others after Berchem and Gaspard Poussin. He also etched some plates from the designs of Gerard de Lairese. The following are his principal prints:

Various Landscapes and Cattle; after Berchem.
Two Landscapes; after Gaspard Poussin.
A set of six oblong Landscapes; from his own designs.
A set of six upright Landscapes; from the same.
A set of circular plates of allegorical subjects, from the histories of the four great Monarchies of Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome; after De Lairese.

GLAUCION, a painter of Corinth, is only known through being recorded by Pliny as the instructor of Athenion.

GLEDITSCH, PAUL, an engraver and etcher, was born at Vienna in 1794. He was instructed by J. F. Leybold, and in 1819 obtained the first prize, whilst in 1848 the King of Prussia awarded him a gold medal for his plate of 'St. Catharine,' after Carlo Dolci. He died at Vienna in 1872. Other engravings by him are:

Mary observing the sleeping Child; after Guido Reni.
Madonna and Child, with St. Jerome; after Raphael.
Madonna and Child, with the Magdalen and St. Catharine; after Perugino.
Madonna Velata; after Sasso Ferrato.
Cupid the Bow-Cutter; after Parmigiano.
Portrait of the Emperor Joseph I.; after Pompeo Battoni.

GLEYPE, MARC CHARLES GABRIEL, an historical painter belonging to the French School, but Swiss by birth, was born at Chevilly, a small village near La Sarraz, in the Canton of Vaud, in 1806. His father, who was a farmer, encouraged his son's predilection for art. He first studied at Lyons, but in 1824 he migrated to Paris, and became a pupil of Hersent. This master did not exercise any marked influence on him, and he owed more to his study of the old masters in Italy, where he went in 1828. He stayed chiefly at Padua, Florence, and Rome, and whilst in the latter city, he sent some water-colour portraits to the Salon of 1833—his first appearance at the annual exhibition. He then made a long tour in the Levant, visiting Egypt, Greece, and Asia Minor. The fruits of his travels were seen in two decorative works, a 'Nubian Girl,' and 'Diana,' typifying Egypt and Greece, which he painted in 1838 for M. Lenoir of Paris. Soon after his return he suffered from a dangerous attack of ophthalmia, which at one time threatened him with loss of sight. On his recovery, he painted the well-known 'Evening,' which established his position, and henceforth the history of his life is almost contained in the list of the works he executed. It should be mentioned that from some cause not clearly ascertained, he did not exhibit his pictures at the Salon after the year 1849. Paul Delaroche had a high appreciation of Gleyre's art, and on giving up his atelier, recommended his pupils to him. Amongst those who passed through his studio were the English painters, Poynter, Marks, and Calderon. Gleyre died on the 4th May, 1874, from the rupture of a blood-vessel while visiting the exhibition at Paris on behalf of the expatriated inhabitants of Alsace. The chief characteristics of his works are the softness and poetic feeling with which they are imbued, although in some of his productions, as the 'Pentheus' and the 'Battle of Leman,' he exhibits considerable strength and vigour. The following are some of his principal pictures :

- St. John in the Island of Patmos. 1840.
- Evening, or Lost Illusions. 1843.
- The Departure of the Apostles. 1845.
- Dance of Bacchantes. 1849.
- The Pentecost. 1851. (St. Marguerite, Paris.)
- Execution of Major Duval. 1852. (Lausanne Museum.)
- Battle of Leman. (Lausanne Museum.)
- Venus on a Goat.
- Hercules at the feet of Omphale. 1863.
- Pentheus pursued by the Maenades. (Basle Museum.)
- The Charmer. (Basle Museum.)
- The Bath. 1868.
- Joan of Arc in the Forest.
- The Deluge.
- Ruth and Boaz.
- Minerva and the Graces.
- Portrait of General Jomini. } (Lausanne Museum.)
- " M. W. Haldimand. }
- " Thomas Carlyle. O.J.D.

GLIEMANN, PHILIPP ALBERT, a German portrait painter, was born at Wolfenbüttel in 1822. He had from his youth to struggle for his subsistence, so that it was not until 1844 that he was able to resort to the Dresden Academy for instruction. After this he entered Julius Hübner's atelier, and then, with the exception of brief trips to Paris and Antwerp, he remained settled in Dresden, where he died in 1872. There is a 'Head of a bearded Jew' by him in the Dresden Gallery.

GLINK, FRANZ XAVIER, a German historical painter, was born at Burgau in 1795. He was the son of a carpenter, and learned his father's trade; he went with his parents in 1809 to Munich, where his talent for art induced him to attend the Academy. In 1824 he went to Italy, and upon his return painted the altar-piece for the chapel of the Military Hospital at Munich as a token of gratitude for his travelling allowance. He painted several church pictures, amongst them some for the Frauenkirche. He died at Munich in 1873. His finest pictures are :

- The Flight into Egypt.
- The Virgin's Visit to Elizabeth.
- The Virgin and Child.
- Christ in Gethsemane.
- Christ in Glory.

GLINZER, KARL, (or GLINTZER,) an historical and landscape painter, was born at Breitenau, near Cassel, in 1802. He was first instructed by J. Krausskopf, a pupil of David, next passed two years at the Munich Academy, and in 1825 made a brief stay with Schadow at Düsseldorf; he then proceeded by way of Belgium to Paris, where he entered the atelier of Baron Gros. In 1833 he made a journey to Rome and Naples, which had much influence on the character of his subsequent productions. Later in life he partially abandoned the practice of art in order to pursue the theoretical department, and in 1865 he published a treatise entitled 'Art and School.' On the reopening of the Cassel Gallery, however, he furnished chalk drawings from Rembrandt, of the size of the originals, for the publication of the Rembrandt Album. He died at Cassel in 1878. Among his paintings, in addition to numerous portraits, are the following :

- Joseph's bloody Coat. 1838.
- Susannah.
- The Good Samaritan.
- The Slave Dealer. 1840.
- Pan and Syrinx. 1852.

GLOCKENDON, ALBERT, (or GLOCKENTON,) the elder, a German engraver and miniature painter, was born at Nuremberg about the year 1432. He was educated in the school of the elder Rogier van der Weyde, and was working at Würzburg in 1481-85. His plates are wrought entirely with the graver, in a neat but stiff style; and he appears to have imitated the manner of Martin Schongauer, some of whose plates he copied. He usually marked his prints with his initials in Gothic letters, thus :  The following plates are by him :

- Twelve plates of the Passion of Christ; after Martin Schongauer.
- Ten plates of the Wise and Foolish Virgins; after the same.
- Christ bearing His Cross; after the same.
- The Death of the Virgin; after the same.
- The Virgin and Infant seated on an altar.

GLOCKENDON, ALBERT, the younger, a glass painter, illuminator, and wood-engraver, lived at Nuremberg, where he is known to have been working from 1531 to 1543. He is probably identical with an Albert Glockendon of whom Neudörffer speaks as a brother of Nikolaus, and as a diligent illuminator and "half a poet." The Berlin Library possesses a Calendar, dated 1526, under this latter name, adorned with cuts and verses to each month. By the former (if they are really to be regarded as two distinct men) are a fine engraving of 'Two Honourable Women' (1531), and thirty-two plates of various Saints.

GLOCKENDON, GEORG, the elder, a wood-engraver and illuminator of Nuremberg, was working as early as 1480, and died in 1520. Two of his plates are, 'Mary surrounded by five holy Women,' and 'The Ascension of Christ' (1520).

GLOCKENDON, GEORG, the younger, who was born at Nuremberg in the year 1492, executed miniatures in the manner of Albrecht Dürer. He was also an engraver on wood. He died in 1553.

GLOCKENDON, NIKOLAUS, of Nuremberg, the son of Georg Glockendon the younger, studied under his father, and became a miniaturist of great merit. His works display much feeling and sentiment in addition to great technical knowledge; they are, however, often incorrect in drawing. In the Royal Library at Aschaffenberg there is a Missal, painted by Glockendon for Albrecht of Brandenburg, Archbishop of Mayence, for which he received 500 gulden. It contains twelve illuminated borders to a calendar, with pictures representing the twelve months, and numerous miniatures after Schongauer, Albrecht Dürer, and Cranach. On the last page of the missal is written the following inscription, "Ich Niklas Glockendon zu Nurenberg hab disse Bhuch illuminiert und vollent im jahr 1524." The Aschaffenberg Library contains also a prayer-book with designs by Glockendon. This artist died in 1560; the date of his birth has not been recorded. He had twelve sons, all of whom he brought up to his own profession.

GLOVACHEVSKY, KIRIL, a Russian painter, born at Korop in 1735, studied at Kiew, but afterwards went to St. Petersburg, where he became a Professor of the Academy of Fine Arts, and died in 1823.

GLOVER, GEORGE, an engraver, was born about the year 1618. He worked chiefly for the booksellers, and engraved several portraits of persons distinguished in English history. They are executed in a bold, open style, though without much taste. He also engraved some frontispieces and emblematical subjects; but his portraits are his best works. The following are by him:

James I.
Charles I.
Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I.
Mary, Daughter of Charles I.
Charles II.
Catharine, Queen of Charles II.
James II.
Mary Beatrice, Queen of James II.
Oliver Cromwell.
Francis Russell, Earl of Bedford.
William Russell, Duke of Bedford.
Algernon Percy, Earl of Northumberland.
Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex.
Henry Rich, Earl of Holland.
Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford.
James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh.
Sir Thomas Urquhart.
Sir Edward Dering. 1640.
Sir James Campbell.
Sir Henry Oxenden of Barham.
Sir Anthony van Dyck.
John Pym, M.P. for Tavistock.
John Fox, the Martyrologist.
Lewis Roberts, merchant. 1637.
John Goodwin, presbyter. 1642.
William Bariff. 1643.
John Lilburne. 1641.
Henry Burton, Rector of St. Matthew's, Friday Street. 1643.
Natt. Witt, an idiot.

GLOVER, JOHN, a landscape painter in water-colours, was born at Houghton-on-the-Hill, Leicestershire, in 1767. He received no instruction in art, and in 1786 became writing-master at Appleby Free School. He, however, employed all his spare time in drawing, and in 1794 removed to Lichfield, where he devoted himself to practising and teaching art. In 1805 he came to London, and joined the newly-formed Water-Colour Society, of which he was President in 1815. He resigned his membership in 1818, and having been an unsuccessful candidate for Academy honours, he, in 1824, assisted in founding the Society of British Artists, where he exhibited till 1830. In the following year he emigrated to Australia, occasionally sending home works until his death in 1849 at Launceston, Tasmania. Glover's art was fashionable, and his works commanded high prices during his lifetime. He occasionally painted in oils, but his fame rests on his work in water-colours. Amongst his best drawings are:

Durham Cathedral. (Earl of Durham.)
Loch Lomond.
Tivoli. (South Kensington Museum.)
Windsor Castle. (The same.)
Landscape: Windsor Castle in the distance. (The same.)
River Scene. (The same.)

Matlock Bath—Mist clearing off.
Chepstow Castle.
Landscape near Civitā Vecchia.
Elter Water.
Wingfield Manor, Antrim.

GLUME, JOHANN GOTTLIEB, who was born at Berlin in 1711, and died in 1798, was a pupil of Pesne and Harper. He painted historical and genre subjects and landscapes, and also etched several portraits, &c.

GMELIN, WILHELM FRIEDRICH, an engraver, was born at Badenweiler in 1745, and studied under Christian von Mechel in Basle. He went to Rome in 1788, and died there in 1821. His engravings after Claude Lorrain and Poussin are of a high order of merit. His best plates are:

The Temple of Venus; after Claude Lorrain.
The Mill; after the same.
Landscape with the Flight into Egypt; after the same.
Acis and Galatea; after the same.
The Waterfalls of Tivoli; two plates.
The Villa of Mæcenat at Tivoli; two plates.
The Grotto of Neptune at Tivoli; two plates.
Waterfall of Velino. 1795.
The Lake of Albano near Rome. 1796.
Rinaldo and Armida; after G. Poussin.
View of Pozzuoli; after Hackert.

GNOCCHI, PIETRO, was a native of Milan, who was born about 1550, and, according to Morigia, flourished about the year 1595. He was a scholar of Aurelio Luini, and surpassed his instructor in the elegance and taste of his figures. Lanzi conjectures that this artist may be the painter called Pietro Luini, as it was not unusual at that time for the disciple to adopt the name of his master. His best performance is his picture of 'Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter,' in the church of San Vittore at Milan.

GÖBELL, GERRIT HENDERIK, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Raalte in 1786, and died at Deventer in 1833. The Amsterdam Museum has a 'Winter Landscape' by this artist.

GÖBEL, KARL PETER, an Austrian portrait and historical painter, born at Würzburg in 1791, was educated at the Academy at Vienna, where he died in 1823. The Vienna Gallery has a picture by him of 'Jacob blessing the Sons of Joseph.' Besides this may be mentioned his 'Moses,' and 'Death of Dido.'

GOBERT, PIERRE, a French portrait painter, was born at Fontainebleau in 1666. He became an academician in 1701, and died in Paris in 1744. There is by him in the Madrid Gallery a portrait of Louis XV. when Dauphin.

GODBY, JAMES, an English engraver, lived at the beginning of the 19th century. He prepared the illustrations for 'The Fine Arts of the English School,' 1812, and engraved also Raphael's 'Miraculous Draught of Fishes.'

GODDARD, JOHN, was an English engraver, of the 17th century. He engraved some frontispieces, maps, and other subjects, for the booksellers. One of his best prints is the portrait of Martin Billingsley, a writing-master, dated 1651, which is prefixed to his copy-book. Strutt mentions a small upright print of a woman standing, under which is inscribed Vetura, and another its companion.

GODDYN, PIETER, a Flemish painter, was born at Bruges in 1752. He was educated at the Bruges Academy, and afterwards in Rome, and in 1782 won the first prize at Parma, for the best picture from a scene in Virgil's 'Æneid.' In 1784 he returned to his native city, where he died in 1811.

GODEFROID, MARIE ELÉONORE, a daughter and pupil of the painter Ferdinand Joseph Godefroid, was born in Paris in 1778. In 1795 she became a teacher of art and music in the Institute of St. Germain; but in order to devote herself more entirely to painting she renounced this position and entered the atelier of Gérard, whom she assisted in his works, while she also independently painted portraits in oil, water-colour, and pastel. She had an elder brother a painter, who completed her education after their father's death. She died in Paris in 1849.

GODEFROY, —, was a French miniaturist, who worked at Fontainebleau early in the 16th century, and rivalled Fouquet, Beauneveu, the Pascals, and other celebrated artists of that time. In 1519-20 he executed for Francis I. the miniatures in the fine manuscript of Cæsar's 'Commentaries,' of which the first volume is now in the British Museum, the second in the National Library at Paris, and the third in the collection of the Duke d'Aumale. He also painted those in the beautiful manuscript of the French translation of the 'Triumphs' of Petrarch, which is in the library of the Arsenal in Paris.

GODEFROY, FRANÇOIS, a French designer and engraver, was born at Rouen in 1748, and died in Paris in 1819. He was the father of Jean Godefroy, and one of the best scholars of Le Bas, under whose tuition he engraved landscapes after Casanova and Claude Lorrain, genre pieces after Fragonard, and historical subjects from the Revolution in North America. Among his best plates are:

- Landscape with a Herd of Cattle; after Villemont.
- A pair of Landscapes, called 'Le Temple des Amours,' and 'La Tour des deux Amans;' after Lantara.
- A View of the Village of Moutiers Travers; after Chatelet.
- Amusement of Brabant; after Teniers.
- The Georgian Bath; after L. de La Hire.
- A pastoral Landscape; after Casanova.
- A Landscape, with a Waterfall; after Le Prince.
- A Landscape; after Claude Lorrain.

GODEFROY, JEAN, a French engraver, the son of François Godefroy, was born in London in 1771, and was a scholar of J. P. Simon. He engraved the works of the most eminent French painters of his time; particularly those of Gérard, Prud'hon, Carle Vernet, Isabey, and Chaudet. There are also by him engravings after Raphael, Correggio, Poussin, and the Carracci. He died in Paris in 1839. He is said to have been also a painter. The following are among his best plates:

- Cupid and Psyche; after Gérard.
- The Battle of Austerlitz; after the same. 1813.
- Ossian with his Harp charming up Pictures of Phantasy; after the same.
- The Congress of Vienna; after Isabey. 1819.
- Bonaparte at Malmaison; after the same.
- The Death of Hippolytus; after Carle Vernet.

GÖDELER, ELIAS, (JOHANN,) an Austrian historical and landscape painter, as well as an architect, was born in 1620. He painted in oil and in fresco principally at Nuremberg, Baireuth, and Hildburghausen, and died in the last-named town in 1693.

GODEMAN, an English monk of the latter half of the 10th century, was a miniature painter, who executed thirty designs in gouache and gold in a Benedictional of Bishop Athelwold of Winchester, now in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire, and in a Benedictional and a Missal now in the Library at Rouen.

GODETS, ANTOINE DES. See DES GODETS.

GODEWYCK, MARGARITA, born at Dordrecht in 1627, was a pupil of Nicolaas Maes, and painted landscapes and flower-pieces. She possessed a remarkable talent of executing similar subjects in needle-work. She died at Dordrecht in 1677.

GODFREY, G., an English artist, engraved, among other things, some of the plates for Grose's 'Antiquities' in 1785.

GODFREY, RICHARD B., an engraver, was born in London in 1728. He engraved several views and antiquities, and some English portraits for Bell's 'British Theatre' and the 'Antiquarian Repository;' among them the following:

- Edward, the Black Prince.
- Thomas, Duke of Gloucester.
- Margaret, Countess of Salisbury.
- Sir Henry Upton, British Minister in France.
- Simon Forman, astrologer.
- Sir Anthony Weldon, historian.
- John Evans, astrologer.
- Abraham Cowley, poet.
- Richard Cromwell, son of the Protector.

GODWIN, JAMES, an English designer for illustrated books, was born early in the 19th century. He studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, and exhibited there and at the Society of British Artists between the years 1846 and 1851 some works, among which was his 'Hamlet and Ophelia.' He died in London in 1876.

GOËBOUW, ANTOON. See GOUBAU.

GOEDAARD, JOHANNES, born at the beginning of the 17th century in Middelburg, where he died in 1668, painted insects and other objects of natural history.

GOEDIG, HEINRICH, (or GOEDIGEN,) a painter and engraver, was a native of Brunswick, who in 1558 went to Dresden, and entered the service of the Elector of Saxony. In the Ducal Art Cabinet at Gotha is a little book containing thirteen miniature pictures by him representing scenes from the life of Christ. His most important work as an engraver is a series of subjects taken from the History of Saxony and published in 1597-98, but these plates are surpassed by seven historical landscapes which he executed about the same time. After 1598 every trace of the artist disappears.

GOEIMARE, JAN, a landscape painter, was a native of Flanders, who flourished at the beginning of the 17th century.

GOEKINDT, PIETER, (or GOETKINT,) an amateur painter, was a native of Antwerp, who flourished about 1581, and was the first master of Jan Brueghel.

GOEREE, J., was a Dutch engraver, who resided at Amsterdam about the middle of the 17th century. He engraved a variety of frontispieces and other book plates, which are chiefly, if not entirely, from his own designs.

GOESIN, PIERRE ANTOINE FRANÇOIS DE, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Ghent in 1753. He was Professor at the Academy, and Director of the Institute at Ghent, but he abandoned art in order to take the management of the printing office which had been carried on by his family for upwards of a century. He died in 1831.

GOESTELINE, WILLEM, a native of Brussels, painted in 1463 an altar picture in the church of St. Nicholas at Ghent.

GOETHE-MEYER, JOHANN HEINRICH. See MEYER.

GOETZ, GOTTFRIED BERNARD, a German painter and mezzotint engraver, was born at Kloster-Welchrod, in Moravia, in 1708. He was instructed in painting by Eckstein, and afterwards was a scholar of Johann Georg Bergmüller, at Augsburg, where he died in 1768. His works as a painter are little known out of his own country; but he has scraped some plates in mezzotint, among which are the following:

The Emperor Charles VII.; after a picture by himself.

Bust of Louis XV.

St. Amandus; after J. G. Bergmüller.

St. Walburg; after the same.

GOIEN, JAN VAN. See GOYEN.

GOLCHI, PETER, is mentioned by Walpole as having painted in England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

GOLD, CHARLES, a colonel of the Royal Artillery, was an English amateur draughtsman. He entered the army in 1790, and after having served in India and the Netherlands, and at Waterloo, retired from the service in 1825, and died at Leamington in 1842. He published in 1806 'Oriental Drawings,' representing Indian costumes, &c.

GOLDAR, JOHN, an engraver, was born at Oxford in 1729, and died of apoplexy in Hyde Park, London, in 1795. He engraved several humorous subjects, among which is a set of four plates, after John Collet, called 'Modern Love.' He also engraved a print of 'Ships after an Engagement,' after Wright.

GOLDING, RICHARD, a line-engraver, was born in London of humble parentage in 1785. He was apprenticed in 1799 to an engraver named Pass, for seven years, but left him after five, when his indentures were transferred to James Parker, who, however, died shortly after; Golding completing some of the plates he had left unfinished. Rapidly improving in his profession, Golding soon after obtained through a Mr. Fuller, an American artist, for whom he had engraved a plate, an introduction to West, for whom he executed a plate of the 'Death of Nelson.' He also became known to Smirke, from whose paintings he executed many beautiful engravings for book illustration; among the best are those for editions of 'Don Quixote' and 'Gil Blas.' In 1818 he engraved for Sir Thomas Lawrence his portrait of the 'Princess Charlotte of Wales,' a very fine plate, for which he received much praise, so that he now became famous, and obtained many commissions. Some years after, however, he seems to have become apathetic, and discontinued work almost entirely. He died at Lambeth in 1865 in comparative poverty. The chief of his larger works are:

St. Ambrose refusing the Emperor Theodosius admission to the Church; after Paolo Veronese.

A Peep into Futurity; after Maclise.

The Princess Charlotte of Wales; after Sir Thomas Lawrence.

The Princess Victoria (the Queen) in her ninth year; after Westall.

The Princess Victoria (the Queen); after Fowler. 1830.

Henry Calvert, Esq.; after T. Phillips.

Thomas Hammersley, Esq.; after Hamilton.

GOLDSCHMIDT, HERMANN, a painter, but more distinguished as an astronomer, was born at Frankfurt-on-the-Main in 1802. A visit to Holland in 1832 decided him to devote himself to art, and he then studied under Schnorr and Cornelius at Munich. In 1834 he took up his residence in Paris, where his 'Romeo and Juliet' was purchased by the state. He became an astronomer in 1847, and has left a name in that science by his discovery of thirteen of the asteroidal planets. He died at Fontainebleau in 1866.

GOLE, JACOBUS, a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1660, and died in the same city in 1737. There are by him several prints, some of which are executed with the graver, and others in mezzotint; the former are the better. Among them are the following:

LINE-ENGRAVINGS.

Charles XI., King of Sweden. 1685.

Duchess de La Vallière. 1685.

Mahomet IV., Sultan of Turkey.

Kara Mustapha, Grand Vizier.

Abraham Hellenbroek, Minister of the Gospel.

Nicolas Colvius, Pastor of the Walloon Church; after B. Vaillant.

MEZZOTINT PORTRAITS.

Charles III., King of Spain.

Frederick, King of Poland.

George Augustus, Elector of Brunswick-Luneburg.

Charles, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel.

Cornelis Tromp, Admiral of Holland.

Balthasar Becker.

SUBJECTS IN MEZZOTINT.

Peasants smoking; after Adriaen van Ostade.

Dutch Boors regaling; after Adriaen Brouwer.

The Tooth-drawer; after Teniers.

The Schoolmaster; after E. Heemskerk.

Heraclitus; after Cornelis Dusart.

GOLS, CONRAD (or GOLTZIUS), an engraver, was working at Cologne at the end of the 16th century. There are known of his works:

St. Bernard with the Instruments of the Passion.

The History of Susannah; seven plates.

The Annunciation.

The Seven Sacraments.

GOLTZIUS, HENDRIK, a painter and an engraver both on metal and on wood, was born at Mülbrecht, in the duchy of Jülich, in 1558. His father, Johann Goltzius, was an eminent glass-painter, who instructed him in the first principles of art; and he was taught engraving by Dirk Cuerenhert. His progress was such, that he soon surpassed his master, who employed him to engrave some plates, and he also executed several for Philipp Galle. In his twenty-first year he married a wealthy widow, the mother of Jakob Matham, which enabled him to establish a printing office of his own, but did not advance his happiness, and in fact the continued domestic discord so preyed upon his health that it led to his travelling to southern lands. He passed through Germany to Italy, where his studies were particularly directed to the works of Michelangelo, Raphael, and Polidoro da Caravaggio. A too vehement desire to imitate the style of Michelangelo led him frequently into outrageous and extravagant designs, which are not always compensated by the extraordinary excellence of his graver. During his residence at Rome, he engraved several plates after Raphael, Polidoro, and others; and on his return to Holland he settled at Haarlem, where he engraved several plates from the Flemish and Dutch masters. He imitated with the greatest success the styles of Albrecht Dürer, Lucas van Leyden, and other admired old masters, and produced a set of six large plates, called the 'Masterpieces of Goltzius,' not because they are his best productions, but as showing how perfectly he could copy the particular manner of those artists whose works were held in higher estimation than his own. He had reached his forty-second year when he commenced painting. His first picture represented the 'Crucifixion,' with the Virgin Mary and St. John, and it is commended by Van Mander for the excellence of the colouring, and the boldness of the design. He died at Haarlem in 1617. His principal pictures are:

Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Adam and Eve.
"	"	The Circumcision of Christ.
"	"	The Adoration of the Magi.
"	"	The Baptism of Christ.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	Juno receiving the eyes of Argus. 1615.

Goltzius is more famous as an engraver than a painter, and his prints amount to more than five hundred in number; they are frequently marked with the cipher  The following are his principal plates:

PORTRAITS.

Henndrik Goltzius.
Henry IV., King of France; oval. 1592.
Frederick II., King of Denmark; oval. 1588.
William, Prince of Orange, in armour, with an emblematical border.
Charlotte de Bourbon, Princess of Orange.
Dirk Cuerehert; after his own design.
Gerbrand Adriaansz Brederods; with an oval border of laurels.
Hans Bol, painter of Mechlin; in an ornamental border.
Jan Stradan, painter.
Philipp Galle, engraver.
Pieter Forest, or Forestus, physician. 1586.
Justus Lipsius. 1587.
Johannes Zurenus; after M. van Heemskerck.
M. de La Faille; very highly finished.
Madame de La Faille, with a Skull; the companion. 1589.
Christopher Plantin, the printer.
Françoise d'Egmont, with her hand on a Skull; oval.
Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester; oval. 1586.
S. Sovius, without his name; inscribed, Bene agere et nil timere. 1583.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS FROM HIS OWN DESIGNS.

Judah and Tamar; circular; supposed to be one of his earliest plates.
The Life and Passion of our Saviour; twelve plates, executed in the style of Albrecht Dürer; H. Goltz fec. 1597. There is a set of copies after these, in a stiff, formal style.
Christ and the Apostles; fourteen plates. 1598.
Six large plates, known by the name of the 'Masterpieces of Goltzius.' They are executed in the style of each of the masters he wished to imitate, and are as follow:
The Annunciation; in the style of Raphael.
The Visitation; in imitation of Parmigiano.
The Annunciation; in the manner of Bassano.
The Circumcision; in the style of Albrecht Dürer.
The Adoration of the Magi; in imitation of Lucas van Leyden.
The Holy Family; in the manner of F. Barocci.
The Nativity; unfinished and extremely scarce. 1615.
The Adoration of the Magi.
The Murder of the Innocents; very scarce; the plate was not finished.
The Repose in Egypt; H. Goltzius fec. 1589.
The Woman of Samaria. 1589.
The Wise Men's Offering; a curious composition.

The Infant Jesus holding a globe, with a glory of Angels; H. Goltz fec. 1597.

The Temptation of St. Anthony.

A Female Saint, holding a book; very scarce. Some parts of the plate are merely traced.

A set of fifty-two plates for the 'Metamorphoses' of Ovid. It is supposed that Goltzius was largely assisted by his scholars in these plates.

A set of ten plates of Eight of the Heroes of ancient Rome, with the introduction and conclusion. 1586. Engraved in a free, bold style, with fine backgrounds.

Venus reclining against a Tree, holding a bunch of grapes, whilst Cupid presents to her a handful of corn; a circular plate, of highly finished and beautiful execution.

Three plates; Bacchus, Venus, and Ceres; dedicated to Cornelis van Haarlem.

Three plates; Juno, Minerva, and Venus; ovals. 1596. Mars and Venus. 1585.

Three plates; Jupiter and Juno, Neptune and Amphitrite, and Pluto and Proserpine.

Pygmalion and his Statue. 1593.

Mercury and Argus; a small plate, very scarce.

Nine plates of the Muses; each with four verses. 1592.

Three plates of the Graces.

The Three Fates; in circular plates.

The Apollo Belvedere, with the Portrait of the Designer, in half-length.

The Hercules Commodus.

The Farnese Hercules.

The three prints last mentioned, after the famous antique statues, are executed with surprising beauty and energy.

Hercules holding his Club; in the back-ground are represented his labours. 1589. In this plate Goltzius has overcharged the outline of the figure in the most barbarous manner, the parts are scattered, and the whole is without effect.

The Judgment of Midas. 1590.

The seven Cardinal Virtues; Faith, Hope, Charity, Justice, Prudence, Fortitude, and Temperance; in seven plates.

Three fine plates, of Diligence, Patience, and Wisdom; personified by female figures.

Labour and Diligence; represented by a male and female figure. 1580.

An emblematical subject of Christian Prudence, in a female figure, richly clothed; small circular, highly finished.

The Blind leading the Blind; circular.

The Chariot of War; an immense composition; Henricus Goltzius fecit; very scarce.

The Boy and Dog. The boy is supposed to be the portrait of the son of Theodoor Frisius, a painter of Venice, to whom Goltzius dedicated the print. It is considered one of his finest plates.

Corydon and Sylvia; a pastoral.

A Mountainous Landscape, with the story of Dædalus and Icarus; an etching.

The dead Christ, with the Four Evangelists at the Tomb; after A. van Blocklandt.

GOLTZIUS, HUBRECHT, (or GOLTZ,) an eminent artist and learned antiquary, born at Venloo in 1526, was the son of an obscure painter of Würzburg, named Rüdiger, who taught him the rudiments of design, and placed him under the tuition of Lambert Lombard of Liège. He assumed his mother's name of Goltz, which he Latinized into Goltzius. Lambert Lombard had, during a long residence in Italy, made drawings from the most celebrated remains of antiquity: these were given to Goltzius to copy, and they inspired him with a wish to visit Italy himself. He therefore went to Rome, and resided there several years. On his return he settled at Bruges, where he published several antiquarian works embellished with prints, in which he was assisted by Josse Gielegeun of Courtrai, who executed the woodcuts. Little is known of his works as a painter, but Van Mander commends a set of pictures by him, representing the history of the Golden Fleece, painted for the House of Austria. All he did must have been executed before 1557. In 1563 he published at Bruges his work entitled 'C. Julius Caesar,' with forty-six copper-plates of ancient coins, &c. In 1566 he issued at Bruges another work entitled 'Fasti Magistratum et Triumphorum Romanorum,' with two hundred and thirty-four plates and woodcuts. His collected works appeared at Antwerp in 1644-45, in five volumes, as 'Romanæ et Græcæ Antiquitatis Monumenta ex priscis numismatibus eruta.' Goltzius died at Bruges in 1583.

GOLTZIUS, JAKOB, an engraver, who was working at the close of the 16th century, was probably a relative of Hendrik Goltzius. Two plates, engraved after the latter, are known of his work: 'Pallas in the midst of a number of Warriors,' and 'A young Man endeavouring to bribe an old Woman into Love.'

GOLTZIUS, JULIUS, a son of Hendrik Goltzius, flourished about the year 1580. The following engravings are by him:

The Good and Bad Shepherd; a set of middle-sized plates; after Marten De Vos.

Christ appearing to the Magdalen; after F. Zuccherò.

Part of the plates for Boissard's 'Habitus Variorum Orbis Gentium.' 1581.

The Virgin suckling her Child; after M. De Vos.

The Good Samaritan; after H. Bol.

The Evangelist Matthew; after A. van Blocklandt (one of a series of four).

GOMEZ, FRANCISCO, was the son and pupil of Martin Gomez. He executed six pictures for the Carmelite Friars in Granada, but in 1750 he went to America, and died in Mexico about 1755.

GOMEZ, JACINTO, born at San Ildefonso in 1746, was a pupil of Francisco Bayeu. He was appointed chamber painter to Charles IV., and died in 1812. In the Madrid Gallery is a picture by him of 'The Angelic Hierarchy adoring the Holy Spirit.'

GOMEZ, JUAN, was a Spanish historical painter in the service of Philip II. in 1593. He painted the large picture of 'The Martyrdom of St. Ursula and her Companions,' which was designed and traced by Pellegrino Tibaldi to supply the place of the same subject by Luca Cambiaso, which had been removed to the old church of the Escorial. He painted also several subjects from the Life of St. Jerome. He restored the 'Annunciation,' and the 'St. Jerome penitent,' by Federigo Zuccherò, which Philip had rejected, and ordered to be retouched. He died in 1597.

GOMEZ, JUAN DE ALFARO Y. See ALFARO.

GOMEZ, LUCIANO SALVADOR. See SALVADOR GOMEZ.

GOMEZ, MARTIN, a Spanish painter, was a brother of Sebastian Gomez, and flourished in the latter part of the 16th century. He lived at Cuenca, for the cathedral of which city he painted several pictures.

GOMEZ, SEBASTIAN, called EL MULATO DE MURILLO, born in 1646, was a mulatto servant of the celebrated Murillo. From witnessing the exercise of his master's talents he conceived a liking for art, and passed his leisure time in efforts to follow it, which were successful. After the death of Murillo, in 1685, he painted some pictures for the churches and convents at Seville. In the portico of the convent of the Mercenarios Descalzos, there is a painting by him of 'The Virgin and Infant Christ'; and at the Capuchins, 'Christ bound to the Pillar.' There are several other works by him at Seville, where he died in 1682. In the Hermitage at St. Petersburg is a picture of 'St. Francis.'

GOMEZ, SEBASTIAN, a painter of Granada, who flourished about the middle of the 16th century, was instructed in the school of Alonso Cano, but by no means approached him in his workmanship. A picture by him of 'The Virgin with Angels and St. Dominick' is at the monastery of San Pablo at Seville, and one of 'St. Rosa of Viterbo preaching' is in the Franciscan convent at Ecija.

GOMEZ, VICENTE SALVADOR. See SALVADOR GOMEZ.

GONDOLACH, MATTHÄUS, (or GUNDELACH,) a portrait and historical painter of Hesse-Cassel, was for some considerable time in the service of the Emperor Rudolph II. at Prague, and died at Augsburg in 1653. The Vienna Gallery contains a 'Madonna and Child with Saints,' dated 1614.

GONSALVEZ, NUNO, who was court painter to King Alfonso of Portugal (1438-1481), painted the altar of St. Vincent in the Cathedral of Lisbon, and 'Christ at the Pillar' in the convent of the Trinity in the same city. He apparently studied in Italy, as he was a good imitator of the great masters of that country.

GONZAGA, —, (or GONSAGO,) a scene-painter, who also executed landscapes and perspective pictures, worked for theatres in Italy, and from 1794 to 1804 in St. Petersburg. He is known to have been living in 1827.

GONZALEZ, BARTOLOMÉ, was born at Valladolid in 1564, but he visited Madrid when young, and became a pupil of Patricio Caxes. He was employed by Philip III. to paint the portraits of different branches of the Austrian royal family, for the palace of Pardo, and on the death of Castello he was made painter to the king. There are many of his works in the Escorial, at Valladolid, and at Burgos. Of his historical works, the principal are the angles in the church of the Augustines at Madrid; and an allegory of the Arts, in the royal collection. In the Madrid Gallery are portraits of Queen Margaret of Austria, wife of Philip III., and the Infanta Clara Isabella Eugenia, daughter of Philip II. He died at Madrid in 1627.

GONZALEZ, CRISTOBAL, a Spanish painter, lived at Madrid about 1590, and executed several pictures for the convent of the Barefooted Carmelites.

GONZALEZ, FERRAN, was a painter and sculptor of Toledo, who died in 1399.

GONZALEZ, FRANCISCO MIGUEL, was an engraver, and one of the founders of the school of design at Seville about the year 1660.

GONZALEZ, JUAN GIACCHINETTI. See GIACCHINETTI GONZALEZ.

GONZALEZ, PEDRO RUIZ. See RUIZ GONZALEZ.

GONZALEZ BECERRIL, JUAN, a Spanish painter, who lived at Toledo in the 15th century, was the pupil of Pedro Berraguette, whose daughter he married. He assisted his father-in-law in decorating the cloisters of Toledo cathedral in 1498.

GONZALEZ DE CEDILLO, ANTONIO, a Spanish painter, born at Toledo about 1635, studied at Madrid under Rizi. He then went to Rome, where he occupied his time in copying the best masters, and on his return to Spain painted several pictures rich in colouring and pure in design. He died about 1680.

GONZALEZ DE LA VEGA, DIEGO, was born at Madrid in 1622, and was a scholar of Francisco Rizi, whose style he followed. After marrying early and soon becoming a widower, he entered the convent of the Fathers of the Saviour. There are many of his works in the public edifices at Madrid, and some of his easel pictures in the private collections. In the cloister of the Franciscans are several pictures by him of the Life and Passion of our Saviour; and in the convent of the Religiosas Mercenarias, are some subjects from the Life of the Virgin. He died at Madrid in 1697.

GONZALEZ RUIZ, ANTONIO, a Spanish painter, was instructed first under Hovasse at Madrid, and afterwards successively in Paris, Rome, and other Italian towns. In 1752 he was made director of the Academy of San Fernando, and in 1757 court painter. He died in 1785. He was a member of the Academies of Valencia and St. Petersburg. His pictures are to be seen in Madrid and Salamanca.

GONZALEZ VELAZQUEZ, ALEXANDRO, was the second of three brothers, all painters, the sons of Pablo Velazquez Gonzalez, a native of Andujar, who practised carving at Madrid. He was born at Madrid in 1719, and assisted his brother Luis in the coronation decorations in 1746, and in many subsequent works. He painted some frescoes in the Bernardine and other nunneries at Madrid, and in conjunction with one Guillermo l'Anglois (probably a Frenchman), he painted a ceiling in the palace from the designs of Mengs. He was also an architect. He had just completed some scenery for the theatre in the Calle del Principe, when he died at Madrid in 1772.

GONZALEZ VELAZQUEZ, ANTONIO, the youngest of the three sons of Pablo Velazquez Gonzalez, and the most famous, was born at Madrid in 1729. He was sent with a pension from the crown to study at Rome, where he became the pupil of Giaquinto Corrado, and acquired some reputation by a fresco which he painted in the church of the Trinitarian friars of Castile, and a picture of the 'Anointing of King David,' which he sent to the new Royal Academy at Madrid. In 1753 he returned to Spain to adorn with frescoes the chapel of Our Lady of the Pillar in the cathedral of Zaragoza. From there he went to Madrid, and assisted his brothers in painting the domes of the church of the Incarnation and of the Royal Salesian Nunnery. He likewise executed a picture of the 'Assumption' for the cathedral at Cuenca. In 1754 he was made deputy-director in the Academy, and in 1765 full director, and in 1757 he was appointed court-painter. In the New Palace he executed an allegorical fresco on the ceiling of the Queen's ante-chamber, and in another saloon a fresco of 'Ferdinand and Isabella receiving the New World from the hands of Columbus.' He executed many other paintings in oil and fresco in various churches and convents, and as court-painter executed several portraits, including that of Charles III. He died at Madrid in 1793, leaving three sons, of whom the eldest and youngest were painters, and the second an architect.

GONZALEZ VELAZQUEZ, LUIS, the eldest of the three sons of Pablo Velazquez Gonzalez, was born at Madrid in 1715. He was one of the earliest students in the School of Art, established in 1744, and in 1746 he furnished the decorations for the streets and the theatre of Buenretiro at the coronation of Ferdinand VI., who appointed him his painter in ordinary. He was a member and director of the Academy of San Fernando, and died at Madrid in 1764. The frescoes on the dome of the church of San Marcos were esteemed his best work, but are pronounced to be very feeble.

GONZALEZ Y TAVE, FEDERICO, was born at Cadiz in 1823, and showed so much talent when young that the municipality paid his expenses to Madrid and Paris. Upon his return he became a successful painter of portraits, made many copies of the works of Van Dyck, Velazquez, and Murillo, and obtained great praise for his picture of 'Pedro I. consulting his Horoscope,' now in the Cadiz Museum. He died at Cadiz in 1867.

GOOCH, T., was an English animal painter, who exhibited pictures of horses and dogs at the Royal Academy from 1777 to 1802, when he retired to Lyndhurst in Hampshire.

GOOD, THOMAS SWORD, an English genre painter, born at Berwick in 1789, was brought up as a house-painter, but subsequently devoted himself to art, and produced works in the style of Wilkie. He came to London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1820 to 1833, when having inherited some property he retired to Berwick, where he died in 1872. Amongst his works are:

A Scotch Shepherd. 1820.

Practice. 1823.

Music.

Fishermen.

The Industrious Mother.

Idlers. 1829.

The Truant. 1830.

Medicine. 1831.

The Newspaper.

No News.

Fisherman with a Gun.

Study of a Boy.

GOODALL, EDWARD, a line-engraver, was born at Leeds in 1795. Entirely self-taught, he at an early age practised both engraving and painting, but having attracted the attention of Turner, he received from that master a commission to engrave from his pictures as many plates as he would undertake, and by these engravings Edward Goodall is chiefly known. Among the best may be mentioned those after the great landscape painter's 'Tivoli,' 'Cologne,' 'Caligula's Bridge,' 'Old London Bridge,' and 'Richmond Hill,' and others in the 'England and Wales' and 'Southern Coast' series, besides some of the exquisite little vignettes illustrating Rogers's 'Italy' and 'Poems.' He also engraved many plates for the 'Art Journal,' and several after the works of his son, Frederick Goodall, R. A. He died in London in 1870, leaving behind a family of artists, three of his sons being well-known painters, and one of his daughters having exhibited several pictures at the Royal Academy. Besides his plates after Turner, the following are his most important works:

Raising the Maypole; after Frederick Goodall.
The Swing; after the same.
The Angel's Whisper; after the same.
The Soldier's Dream; after the same.
The Piper; after the same. (Art Union of London.)
A Summer Holiday; after the same.
Cranmer at the Traitor's Gate; after the same.
The Happy Days of Charles the First; after the same.
The Castle of Ischia; after Stanfield. (Art Union of London.)
The Bridge of Toledo; after David Roberts.
Amalfi; after G. E. Herring.
The Chalk Waggoner; after Rosa Bonheur.
Evening; a composition; after Cuypp. (Pye's National Gallery.)
An Italian Sea-Port; after Claude Lorrain. (The same.)
The Marriage Festival of Isaac and Rebecca; after the same. (The same.)
The Market Cart; after Gainsborough. (The same.)
The Ferry; after F. R. Lee. (Finden's Royal Gallery of British Art.)

GOODALL, FREDERICK TREVELYAN, the eldest son of Frederick Goodall, R. A., born in 1848, was a student of the Royal Academy, where he gained, in 1870, the gold medal for his painting of 'The Return of Ulysses.' He soon after went to Italy, but unhappily lost his life by an accident at Capri in 1871.

GOODALL, HOWARD, the second son of Frederick Goodall, R. A., was born in 1849. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1870, 'Nydia in the House of Glaucus,' and in 1873, 'Capri Girls winnowing.' This promising young artist died at Cairo in 1874.

GOODRICKE, MATTHEW, (or GOTHERICKE,) is mentioned as a painter in the reign of Charles I. of England.

GOODWIN, EDWARD, a landscape painter in water-colours, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1802 to 1808. In 1806, he was an unsuccessful candidate for admission to the Water-Colour Society, but exhibited at its open exhibitions from 1814 to 1816.

GOODYEAR, JOSEPH, a line-engraver, was born at Birmingham in 1799. He came to London, and studied under Charles Heath, and was subsequently employed on Finden's 'Royal Gallery of British Art,' for which he engraved the 'Greek Fugitives,' after Eastlake. He also executed several plates for the 'Keepsake.' He died in London in 1839.

GOOL, JAN VAN, a Dutch painter and writer on art, born at the Hague in 1685, studied under Terwesten and Simon van der Does. His cattle pieces are praiseworthy, but not to be considered as masterpieces. He is better known by his 'Lives of the Artists of the Netherlands,' published in 1718, in continuation of the work of Houbraken. He died at the Hague in 1763. In the Rotterdam Museum is a picture of a 'Girl milking a Cow.'

GOOVAERTS, HENDRIK, a Flemish painter, was born at Mechlin in 1669, but on his father's death he went to reside in Antwerp, where he commenced his artistic studies. In his twentieth year he travelled through Germany, exercising his art in Frankfort and other cities. He then went to Prague and Vienna, at each of which cities he resided about three years, and then travelled through Hungary and Slavonia. After an absence of nearly ten years he returned to Antwerp in 1699, when he was made free of the Corporation of St. Luke. He died at Antwerp in 1720. In the Antwerp Gallery is a picture of the 'Junior Archers' Guild inaugurating the portrait of their chief, Jean Charles de Cordes,' dated 1713.

GORDON, Sir JOHN WATSON, a Scotch portrait painter, the eldest son of Captain James Watson, R. N., was born at Edinburgh in 1790. He was originally intended for the army, but having studied in the Trustees' Academy, he preferred an artistic career, and at first turned his attention to historical painting. It was not long, however, before the exigencies of life compelled him to devote himself to portraiture, and on the death of Raeburn in 1823, he became the chief portrait painter in Scotland, when he assumed the name of Gordon. He had a considerable share in the foundation of the Royal Scottish Academy, of which he was one of the earliest members, and he became its president in 1850, at the same time being knighted and appointed Queen's 'Linner.' His works were also exhibited in London, where he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1841, and an Academician in 1850. He died at Edinburgh in 1864. Amongst his portraits are the following:

Earl of Hopetoun.	} Archers' Hall, Edinburgh.
Earl of Dalhousie.
Principal Lee.	(Edinburgh University.)
Sir James Hall.	(Royal Society, Edinburgh.)
Lord Murray.	} (National Gallery of Scotland.)
Lord Cockburn.
Sir William Gibson Craig, Bart.
Sir John George Shaw Lefevre.
Sir William Johnston, Lord Provost of Edinburgh.
Lord Rutherford.
Sir Walter Scott, Bart. (unfinished).
A Grandfather's Lesson.
Roderick Gray, Provost of Peterhead.
Fancy Portrait of a Lady in White Satin.
Professor Ferrier.	(United College, St. Andrews.)
Sir David Brewster.	(National Gallery.)
David Cox.	(Birmingham and Midland Institute.)
Thomas De Quincey.	(National Portrait Gallery.)

GORDOT, CLAUDE MARIE, was a French painter of the 18th century, by whom there is in the Musée Calvet, at Avignon, a picture of the Pope's Palace at Avignon, dated 1774.

GORE, CHARLES, an English marine draughtsman, flourished about the end of the 18th century. There are several of his drawings in the Cracherode Collection in the British Museum.

GORGASUS, an ancient Greek modeller and painter, was engaged along with Damophilus, about B.C. 490, in adorning the Temple of Ceres at the Circus Maximus in Rome in both branches of his art. It is stated that he worked upon the left and Damophilus upon the right side of the edifice.

GORI, ANGIOLO, a Florentine painter of the 17th century, painted genre subjects, and fruit and flower pictures. He was a pupil of Chiavistelli, and in 1658 was engaged with others in decorating the corridor of the Public Gallery at Florence.

GÖRIZ, CHRISTIAN, was a native of Vienna, who flourished in the 17th century, and painted Italian views.

GORTZIUS. See GELDORP.

GOSSART, JAN, (or GOSSAERT,) commonly called MABUSE, was born about 1470 at Maubeuge, a small town in Hainault. He frequently signed his pictures JOANNES MALBODIUS, and he is registered in the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp as JENNYN VAN HENEGOUWE (John of Hainault). He probably studied in the school of Quentin Massys, and, as long as he painted in the Flemish style, he equalled that master in power of colour and execution. It is frequently stated that he visited England and worked here, but there is nothing to bear out the statement. The picture at Hampton Court, which was formerly supposed to represent three children of Henry VII., is now generally accepted as that of three children of Christian II. of Denmark. He entered the Guild at Antwerp in 1503, and in 1508 went to Italy with his patron Philip of Burgundy, and there took to copying the works of Michelangelo and Leonardo da Vinci, and was the first painter of his country who introduced the composite style of Italianised Flemish art which marks this epoch of painting in the Netherlands. He returned to the Netherlands about 1509, and after that appears never to have left his native land. He was employed by Margaret of Austria and Christian II. of Denmark. He died at Antwerp in 1532. His works are numerous. In the Antwerp Gallery, his Flemish style is illustrated in the 'Four Maries returning from the Sepulchre,' and in the 'Upright Judges.' In the Berlin Gallery, two diptychs display the composite art, half Flemish, half Italian, of Mabuse. They represent 'Adam and Eve,' and 'Neptune and Amphitrite.' The latter is signed by the painter 1516. In England there are two good specimens of his earlier style—'The Adoration of the Magi,' at Castle Howard, and the 'Children of Christian II.' at Hampton Court. His fondness for introducing a profusion of architectural detail into his pictures is illustrated in his 'St. Luke painting the Virgin,' at Prague.

The following is a list of Mabuse's principal works in the European galleries:

GOSSÉ, NICOLAS LOUIS FRANÇOIS, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1787. He studied under Vincent in the École des Beaux-Arts, and died at Soncourt in 1878. His best pictures are:

The Adoration of the Magi.
The Birth of Christ.
St. Vincent of Paola.
The Death of St. Vincent Ferrer. (Vannes Cathedral.)
Napoleon receiving the Queen of Prussia at Tilsit.
The Meeting of Napoleon and the Emperor Alexander at Erfurt.

GOSSWYN, GERHARD, a Flemish flower and fruit painter, born at Liège in 1616, was a pupil of Gerhard Douffet. Whilst still very young he went to Italy, and worked for a lengthened period in Rome and Paris, and became the first art instructor of the Dauphin, afterwards Louis XV. He died at Liège in 1691.

GOTHERICKE, MATTHEW. See GOODRICKE.

GOTTI, BARTOLOMMEO, a Florentine painter, who flourished in the 17th century, was a pupil of Ghirlandaio. He went to France and worked for Francis I.

GOTTI, VINCENZO, a native of Bologna, was born about 1580, and became a scholar of Dionysius Calvaert at the time that Guido Reni studied under that master. At twenty years of age he went to Rome, in company with Guido, and there painted some pictures. He was then invited to the court of Naples, where he passed the remainder of his life. This painter possessed so ready an invention, and such surprising facility, that Orlandi states, from a list of his works, found after his death, that he had painted no fewer than two hundred and eighteen pictures for public positions in the different towns of the kingdom of Naples. He died at Reggio in 1636.

GÖTTING, ANDREAS, a painter who flourished at the close of the 16th and beginning of the 17th century, is the author of a picture in the Rotterdam Museum, representing 'Diana surprised by Actæon;' signed and dated 1607.

GÖTTLANDT, PETER, called also PETER VON RODDELSTET, was a painter and engraver from the town of Roddelstet (Rudestedt?), who was working at Weimar from 1548 to 1572, where he was made court painter in 1553. He both painted and engraved on metal and on wood the portraits of the three Electors Johann Friedrich. Besides these and other portraits, there are among his engravings:

The Victory over Death and Hell. 1552.
The Fall of Man; after L. Cranach. 1552.
The Prophet Jonah. 1552.
Madonna in a Landscape. 1555.
The Redemption; after L. Cranach. 1556.

GÖTZENBERGER, JACOB, an historical painter, was born at Heidelberg in 1800, and educated after 1820 in Düsseldorf under Cornelius, and after 1824 in Munich. It is stated that so early as 1823 Cornelius could pass off as his own a painting by this artist. He was employed, together with Hermann and E. Förster, to decorate with frescoes the hall of Bonn University, and in 1828 he visited Rome and Naples to gain ideas for this work. He returned in 1832, and executed his undertaking, painting alone the designs for Jurisprudence, Medicine, and Philosophy, and that for Theology in conjunction with his two collaborators. After this he obtained the two appointments of court painter at Baden and inspector of the gallery at Mannheim. He visited Paris and London in company with Cornelius, and on his return executed a new cycle of frescoes in the chapel at Nierstein in Rhenish Hesse, as well as in the drinking hall at Baden-Baden, the latter of which, painted in 1844, represented legends from the Black Forest. An offence led to his dismissal from his offices, upon which he proceeded to England, where he painted both portraits and frescoes, and especially distinguished himself by his performances in Bridge-water and Northumberland Houses. The last of these works was accomplished in 1863-5. His death occurred at Darmstadt in 1866.

GÖTZLOFF, KARL WILHELM, a landscape painter, was born at Dresden in 1803, and became a member of the Academy there in 1835. He, however, went to Italy in 1823, and remained there painting principally the scenery of the country. He died at Naples in 1866.

GOUBAU, ANTOON, (GOBAU, or GOEBOUW,) who was born at Antwerp in 1616, is said to have studied under one Jan de Farius. He was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke in 1636-37. He visited Italy in later life, and was there much impressed by the works of Jan Asselyn, whose style he afterwards copied. In 1668, he received as a pupil the young Nicolas de Largillière, and afterwards Petrus Cornelis Hessels. Goubau died at Antwerp in 1698. His works, which are rather scarce, are noteworthy for good drawing and colouring, but more especially for excellence of composition. The Antwerp Gallery possesses two good examples of this master, 'Artists studying from Ruins near Rome,' signed and dated 1650, and a 'Market-scene in the Piazza Navona in Rome,' dated 1680; and in the church of St. Jacques is a 'Last Supper.' In the Brunswick Museum is a 'Landscape with old ruins;' at the Hague is an 'Italian Landscape;' and in the Museum at Lille is an 'Italian Market-place.' Specimens of his early style, which are camp scenes, are in the galleries at Meiningen and Prague.

GOUBAU, FRANS, born at Antwerp in 1622, is supposed to have studied under Gerard Zegers, and was free of the Corporation in 1649. He painted for the Carmelite Church a picture of 'St. Agabus building the first Chapel to the Virgin;' and for the church of St. Willebrod, a portrait of Pieter Luycx, both of which pictures have disappeared. In the Antwerp Gallery is the 'Adoration of the Sacrament,' dated 1650, and in the church of St. Jacques a 'Dead Saviour,' and a portrait of Frans van den Bossche, Dean of St. Jacques. Goubau died about 1678.

GOUDA, CORNELIS VAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Gouda in 1510, and was the best known scholar of Marten van Heemskerck. He died in 1550.

GOUDT, HENDRIK, a distinguished amateur artist of a noble family of Holland, and a Count of the Palatinate, was born at Utrecht in 1585. A passionate admiration for art led him to an early application to drawing, and when he was young he went to Rome in search of improvement. Arrived in that capital, he was one of the most assiduous students of his time, and daily frequented the Academy to draw from the model. He contracted an intimacy with Adam Elsheimer; and purchased some of his most finished works, which he has engraved in a style peculiar to himself, and perhaps better adapted to express the polished finish and the admirable effect of chiaro-scuro of the originals, than any other that could have been adopted. His plates are wrought entirely with the graver, and their extraordinary effect is produced not by the usual mode of deepening and strengthening the stroke, but by delicately crossing and re-crossing them several times in the shadows. The following are the seven prints by him, after Adam Elsheimer, as described by Strutt:

Ceres drinking from a Pitcher. An old woman appears holding a candle at the door of a cottage, and a boy naked standing by her, is laughing and pointing at the goddess, for which contempt he was metamorphosed into a frog. This print was well copied by Hollar. It is distinguished by the name of 'The Sorcery.'

The Flight into Egypt; a night scene.

The Angel with Tobit; who is drawing a fish by his side.

The Angel with Tobit crossing a stream of water; Tobit holds the fish under his arm. Hollar has copied this print with much success.

Baucis and Philemon entertaining Jupiter and Mercury; a small plate, nearly square.

Aurora, representing the Dawn of Day; a small landscape. The effect is very beautiful.

The Beheading of St. John the Baptist in Prison; a very small oval print, very scarce.

GOULDSMITH, HARRIET. See ARNOLD.

GOUPY, BERNHARD, a French miniature painter, was the brother of Joseph Goupy, and like him he practised in London about the middle of the 18th century.

GOUPY, JOSEPH, a French painter and engraver, was born at Nevers in the beginning of the 18th century. He came to England when he was young, and about 1725 was engaged together with Tillemans in painting scenes for the Italian Opera. He taught drawing to Frederick, Prince of Wales, and to Prince George, afterwards King George III., who on his accession allowed him a small pension. He resided here the remainder of his life, and died in London at an advanced age in 1763. He excelled in painting landscapes in water-colours, which he treated with great spirit and intelligence. His pictures in the style of Salvator Rosa have considerable merit. He etched several plates in a very spirited and masterly style, some of which are from his own designs. Among others, the following are by him:

Mutius Scaevola burning his hand before Porsena; from his own design.

Diana hunting with her Nymphs; after Rubens.

St. Philip baptizing the Eunuch; after Salvator Rosa.

St. John preaching in the Wilderness; after the same.

The Calling of St. Andrew to the Apostleship, in a landscape; after Pietro da Cortona.

A grand Landscape, with the story of Pyramus and Thisbe; after N. Poussin.

A View of Castel Gandolfo, and of the Campagna near Rome; after Bolognese.

A set of eight Landscapes; after Salvator Rosa.

GOUPY, LOUIS, was a miniature painter and copyist, who practised in London early in the 18th century. He was the nephew, and, probably, the pupil of Bernard Lens.

GOURAND, CLAUDE. See GOYRAND.

GOURDEL, PIERRE, a native of Paris, who lived in the 16th century, was painter to Henry III. He drew all the birds in a work by Pierre Belon entitled 'Histoire de la Nature des Oyseaux,' Paris, 1555.

GOURMONT, JEAN DE, a French painter and engraver, was living in 1557, and is supposed to have worked chiefly for the illustration of books. There is a picture in the Louvre assigned to this artist, entitled 'The Nativity,' and there is a portrait engraved by him of Charles, Duke of Bourbon.

588

GOUSBLOOM, C., (GOUSELOM, GOUTSBLOEM, or GOUDTSBLOEM,) was an obscure Dutch engraver, by whom there are portraits of the naval heroes Jan van Galen and M. H. Tromp, after Jan Lievens, and others.

GOUT, JOHANN FRANZ, a landscape and architectural painter, and an etcher, was born at Berlin about the middle of the 18th century. He travelled through Germany and Switzerland, and became theatrical painter at Darmstadt; he also painted Swiss landscapes in fresco. In 1782 he designed sixty plates of Ruins near Spire for Counsellor Merk at Darmstadt. He died after 1812.

GOUWEN, WILLEM VAN DER. See VAN DER GOUWEN.

GOVAERTS, A., was a landscape painter of the 17th century, who adopted the style of Savery, on what has been called a mixture of those of Jan Brueghel and Paulus Bril. Mention may be made of the following works:

Augsburg. Gallery. Landscape with Peasant's Cottage.
Brunswick. Gallery. Landscape with the Four Elements
as Nymphs. 1624.

Hague. Museum. Oak Forest. 1612.

Milan. Breva. A Wood, with Abraham and Isaac.

GOVERT, —, a painter of landscapes with humorous figures, is stated by Van Mander to have been a pupil of Gerrit Pietersz at Amsterdam at the commencement of the 17th century.

GOVERTZ, THEODORUS, was a portrait painter of Utrecht, and the master of H. Verschuuring and T. Camphuysen, who lived about the middle of the 17th century.

GOWER, GEORGE, was an English portrait painter, who was appointed in 1584 Queen Elizabeth's sergeant-painter in oils for life.

GOWI, I. P., appears to have been a painter of the Antwerp school, who flourished in the 17th century, but the dates of his birth and death are unknown. The Madrid Gallery has two pictures by him of the story of 'Hippomenes and Atalanta,' and 'The Battle of the Titans.'

GOYA Y LUCIENTES, FRANCISCO JOSÉ DE. This peculiar genius and imaginative painter was born at Fuendetodos in Aragon, March 30th, 1746. His parents were humble, living on the produce of a small piece of land surrounding their cottage. Here Francisco lived to the age of sixteen without any knowledge of art, when his passion for painting was awakened by a monk of Santa Fé near Zaragoza, after which he got admitted into the studio of José Luxan Martinez, who had been educated in Italy. Here he distinguished himself not so much in the studio as in the streets, in the quarrels of painters and confraternities, sometimes ending in bloodshed. After one of these fights he saw the emissaries of the Inquisition approaching, and having some reason to fear them, he there and then took to his heels and escaped to Madrid. Even at that late time the different provinces of Spain resembled distinct countries, so he lived in safety till similar exploits exposed him to new dangers. He was struck down by the blow of a poniard in the back, and had to secrete himself till he recovered, when he made his way to Italy. He settled down in Rome, where he met Louis David, with whom he fraternized, exchanging ideas not only on art, but also on religion and politics. In 1774 he returned to Spain, married, and began industriously to follow his profession.

This sketch of Goya's youth indicates the character of his painting: bizarre and wild, with a gleam, so to say, of infernal splendour in his choice of beauty. In his execution, he is the only Spaniard of extraordinary quality during the latter half of the 18th century and the beginning of the 19th. His works are numerous—church pictures in fresco and in oil; incidents in life of a highly fantastic kind; about 200 portraits; and many miscellaneous works, came from his hand. Etchings and engravings in aquatint also, now much prized, were executed by him. Of these 'The Caprices' are the most surprising, showing humanity in all the stages of brutality and ugliness, with a mélange of beauty and demonology quite unexampled. All through the occupation of Spain by the French, and during their expulsion by Wellington, he lived quietly without taking any part in public affairs. He had been made 'pintor de camera' by Charles IV. in 1789, and in 1814, on the return of Ferdinand VII., he published 'The Disasters of War,' in seventeen designs, as repulsive and fascinating as it is possible to imagine. He also engraved thirty-three plates of scenes in the Bull-ring. Not the least valuable productions of his graver are his etchings of the five great equestrian portraits, the 'borrachos,' 'meninas,' dwarfs, and single figures, executed by Velazquez. The British Museum possesses an exceedingly fine collection of Goya's etchings and aquatints. He died at Bordeaux, April 16th, 1828. His principal paintings are:

GOYEN, JAN VAN, who was born at Leyden in 1596, studied under Jan Nicolaï, Schilderpoort, Jan De Man, Hendrik Klok, and Willem Gerritsz, all unimportant masters. While still young, he made a journey through France, and on his return received some final instruction from Esaias van de Velde. After a short stay at Haarlem he settled at Leyden, where in 1618 he married Annetje Willems van Raelst. About 1631 he went to the Hague, and in 1640 was elected a member of the Painters' Guild. He died at the Hague in 1666. Van Goyen was one of the earliest of the Dutch landscape painters, and has etched a few landscapes. He was father-in-law to Jan Steen. The following are some of his principal works:

GOYET, EUGÈNE, a French historical and genre painter, was born at Chalon-sur-Saône in 1798, and died in Paris in 1857. His best pictures are 'The Death of St. Paul,' 'St. Francisca,' and a portrait of Pope Pius IX.

GOYET, JEAN BAPTISTE, an historical and genre painter, the father of Eugène Goyet, was born at Chalon-sur-Saône in 1779, and died in Paris in 1854. He was self-instructed. A 'Virgin and St. Anne' by him was exhibited at Paris in 1855.

GOYRAND, CLAUDE, (or GOURAND), a French engraver, was born at Sens about 1620, and died in 1662. He resided some time at Rome, as appears from the inscription on one of his plates. There are by this artist a variety of neat and spirited etchings of landscapes and views after Callot, Della Bella, and others, of which the following are the principal:

A set of twenty Landscapes, &c.; after Callot.

A set of four Views; the Castle of Bicêtre, the Invalides, the Ruins of an old Tower, and the Fountain in the Garden of Tivoli.

Four Landscapes; after Della Bella.

Eight Views in Paris and its environs; after the same. 1645.

The Chapel of Santa Maria Maggiore at Rome; after the same.

A small Head with an ornamental border; worked with the graver.

GÖZ, JOSEPH FRANZ FRIEDRICH, a painter and etcher, was born at Hermannstadt in 1754, and after studying jurisprudence, was for some time in the state service, but went in 1779 to Munich, then to Augsburg, and in 1791 to Ratisbon, where he died in 1815. He brought out a series of character pictures in 160 etchings from his own designs, entitled 'Impassioned Outlines for Friends of Art and the Drama' (Augsburg, 1784). He is also known by his scenes from 'Bavarian Popular Life,' in gouache, and by various portraits of notables, some etched and some painted in oil.

GOZZI, MARCO, an Italian landscape painter, was born about 1759, and died about 1839. There are nine landscapes by him in the Brera at Milan.

GOZZOLI, BENOZZO, the son of a doublet maker, was born at Florence in 1420. He followed Fra Angelico to Rome, and having acted in 1447 as his assistant at Orvieto, he in 1449 applied, but unsuccessfully, for permission to finish Fra Angelico's frescoes in the cathedral of that city. In the same year he went to Montefalco, and there painted in the church of San Fortunato a 'Virgin and Child,' the 'Apotheosis of St. Fortunatus,' an 'Annunciation,' and 'St. Thomas receiving the Girdle;' the last-named is now in the Museum of St. John Lateran at Rome. By 1452 he had completed the frescoes in the hexagonal choir of the monastery of San Francesco at Montefalco. These decorations consist of a triple course of twelve scenes from the life of St. Francis, five medallions of illustrious Dominicans, and portraits of Petrarch, Dante, and Giotto, besides numerous figures of saints and angels. Benozzo also decorated the chapel of St. Jerome, in the same monastery, with a fresco of the 'Madonna and Child' that simulated an altarpiece, the 'Crucifixion,' the Four Evangelists, scenes from the life of St. Sebastian, and various figures of saints and angels. It is considered probable that he remained at Montefalco until 1456, in which year he executed a 'Virgin and Child,' between SS. Peter, John the Baptist, Jerome, and Paul,' with a predella representing the 'Resurrection,' with SS. Thomas, Laurence, Sebastian, and Bernard, which is now in the Academy at Perugia. Soon afterwards he returned to Florence, where he was employed to decorate the walls of the chapel in the palace of the Medici, now the Riccardi Palace. He there painted an immense fresco which covers the walls of the body of the chapel; it represents the Magi, with a long train of attendant knights, pages, servants, hunters, and followers of every description, wending their way through a splendid landscape towards Bethlehem. The sanctuary of the chapel is decorated with various groups of angels, who are represented as being in a beautiful garden typifying the heavenly Eden. The altar-piece is lost, but the predella, containing the 'Resurrection,' and the 'Marriage of St. Catharine,' is in the Uffizi Gallery at Florence. About 1464, Benozzo went to San Gimignano, where he executed a large series of frescoes in the church of Sant' Agostino, under the patronage of Fra Domenico Strambi, called Parasinus. His first production there was a painting of 'St. Sebastian,' represented standing erect on a pillar, with a long mantle held by angels so as apparently to shield a crowd of people from the thunderbolts cast by the Eternal, whilst the Virgin baring her breast, and the Saviour showing His wounds, seem likewise to implore the Divine pity. This subject was probably intended to commemorate the delivery of the city from the plague in 1464. Beneath the above design is a 'Crucifixion,' and four adoring saints, with twelve medallions and a miniature likeness of Parasinus, the donor of the frescoes. Gozzoli next decorated the choir of the same church with a triple course of seventeen scenes from the life of St. Augustine, and other designs from the lives of Tobit, St. Sebastian, and St. Bartolus, as well as figures of various saints and martyrs. His assistant in this immense work was Giusto di Andrea. Having finished his commissions for Sant' Agostino, he in 1465 decorated the space between the portals of the Collegiata with the 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian,' and figures of Christ and the Virgin, in a glory of Seraphim and Cherubim, with figures of different saints and martyrs. In 1466 he painted the two Madonnas and saints which are now in the churches of Santa Maria Maddalena and Sant' Andrea in San Gimignano; as also the 'Marriage of St. Catharine,' in the church of San Francesco at Terni. He remained at San Gimignano until 1467, when he restored the frescoes of Lippo Memmi, in the Palazzo del Podestà in that town. Early in 1469 Benozzo commenced his largest and most important work, the frescoes in the Campo Santo at Pisa. These consisted of a series of twenty-four designs, three of which are now obliterated, drawn from Bible History, commencing with the curse of Ham, and including the lives of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Esau, Joseph, Moses, the fall of Jericho, the story of David and Goliath, and the visit of the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon. This enormous work took Benozzo and his assistants, among whom was Zanobi Macchiavelli, sixteen years to complete, the last payment being made in May, 1485. During the execution of this work, the authorities of the Campo Santo, in testimony of their appreciation of Gozzoli's talents, presented him in 1478 with a tomb therein, in order that he might rest in the midst of the glorious achievements of his life. Notwithstanding this immense undertaking, he yet found time to decorate a chapel on the road to Melegnano, near Castel Fiorentino, in 1484, with frescoes of the 'Virgin and Child, with Saints,' over the altar, and also the 'Death, Burial, and Ascension of the Virgin,' and the 'Gift of the Miraculous Girdle to St. Thomas.' In 1497 he valued the frescoes of Alessio Baldovinetti in the Gianfigliuzzi Chapel in Santa Trinità at Florence. Benozzo Gozzoli died in 1497 or 1498. The following are some of his extant paintings:

Dublin.	National Gallery.	History of Lucretia.
Florence.	Riccardi Pal.	Procession of the Magi (fresco). 1450.
"	Uffizi.	A Predella.
London.	National Gallery.	Virgin and Child enthroned, with Angels and Saints.

GRAAF, HANS, (or GRAF,) born at Vienna in 1680, was a scholar of Van Alen, and painted fairs and market-places, horses, and other animals. He was also a good landscape painter. He died at Vienna in 1734. A 'Tower of Babel' by him is in the Landauer Bröderhaus at Nuremberg.

GRAAF, JOSTA, (or GRAVE,) a painter of landscapes and views of cities, fortified places, &c., lived at the end of the 17th century, and was an officer in the service of Holland. In the Cassel Gallery are two landscapes by this artist.

GRAASBEEK, JOOST VAN. See CRAESBEECK.

GRAAT, BAREND, (or GRAET,) a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1628. Whilst very young he was placed under the care of his uncle, a reputable painter of landscapes and animals, under whom he made rapid progress. The pictures of Pieter De Laer, called Bamboccio, were then in the highest estimation, and he applied himself to study and imitate the style of that master, in which he was so successful, that some of his pictures were mistaken for those of Bamboccio. The success he met with in that branch of the art disposed him to attempt historical painting, in which he was not unsuccessful. To perfect himself in the design of the figure, he established a kind of school or academy in his house, where his contemporary artists and himself occupied themselves in drawing from life. The Dutch biographers speak highly of his talents in historical painting, and particularly commend a picture he painted for the Council-chamber at Amsterdam, representing 'Time discovering Truth.' Another admired picture by him was 'David and Bathsheba.' A 'Home Scene,' in the Queen's collection at Buckingham Palace, is also much praised. He also painted portraits with great success, and produced some admired pen-and-ink and pencil drawings, as well as etchings upon copper. He died at Amsterdam in 1709.

GRAAUW, HENDRIK, a Dutch historical painter, was born at Hoorn, in North Holland, in 1627. He was successively the scholar of Pieter De Grebber and of Jacob van Kampen the younger, and on leaving those masters, he was employed by Prince Maurice of Nassau to paint four frescoes in the cupola of the Palace in the Wood, which established his reputation as one of the most promising artists of his time. Ambitious of improvement, and elated with the description he had heard of the wonders of Italy, he resolved to visit that country, and in 1648 he embarked for Leghorn, and made the best of his way to Rome. For three years he was assiduously employed in designing; and he returned to Holland with an ample store of materials for his future studies. On establishing himself at Amsterdam, he was loaded with commissions. He painted for the family of Bronckhorst a series of historical and fabulous subjects, of which two, the 'Triumph of Julius Cæsar,' and the 'Education of Bacchus,' were particularly admired. He resided chiefly at Amsterdam and Utrecht, and died at Alkmaar in 1682.

GRACE, Mrs., a portrait painter and copyist, whose maiden name was Hodgkiss, was born early in the 18th century. She was self-taught, and exhibited at the Society of Artists from 1762 to 1769, but in the latter year she retired with a competence to Homerton, where she died about 1786.

GRADO, FRANCESCO DE, an engraver, who resided chiefly at Naples, flourished about 1690. He engraved the plates of the 'Illustrious Personages' published at Naples in 1693, and executed part of the portraits for Bellori's 'Vite de' Pittori, Scultori, et Architetti moderni,' 1672.

GRAEF, TIMOTHEUS DE. See DE GRAEF.

GRAET, BAREND. See GRAAT.

GRAF, HANS. See GRAAF.

GRAF, HANS, (or GRAVE,) was a wood-engraver from Amsterdam, who worked at Frankfort-on-the-Main, where in 1553 he executed a view of that city for the widow of the painter Konrad Faber, and also engraved on wood a plan of the same, which Faber himself had designed. He likewise worked on Sebastian Münster's 'Cosmographia.'

GRAF, URS, who has also been known by the names of URS GAMPERLIN or GEMBERLIN, and VAN GOAR, was a wood-engraver, who at early periods in his life was a goldsmith, painter, and engraver on copper. He was born at Solothurn between 1485 and 1490, and after working with a goldsmith at Zurich, he in 1515 took part in the Swiss war in Lombardy, and again in 1522, being taken prisoner in the following year. He died at Basle between 1529 and 1535. He appears to have been a wild and reckless character, but he managed to execute 327 woodcuts, chiefly book illustrations, many of which are marked with one or other of the annexed monograms: VG, U The earliest of these was a set of twenty-five woodcuts for the 'Passion of our Saviour,' printed at Strassburg by Johann Knoblauch in 1506. They are neatly cut, but very incorrectly drawn. He has written the names of the different figures over their heads, as was not unusual at the time. Single plates of his are, 'The Monk crowned by two Bishops,' 'Death lying in wait,' 'The Satyr Family,' and 'The Raising of Lazarus.' He also produced a few copper-plates and etchings, as well as nielli. The Basle Art Collection, and the Albertina at Vienna, possess many of his pencil-drawings.

GRAFF, ANTON, a portrait-painter, was born at Winterthur in Switzerland in 1736, and died at Dresden in 1813. He studied under Johann Ulrich Schellenberg in his native town, but soon went to Augsburg, and thence, on the invitation of the court, to Dresden, where he was appointed court-painter in 1766. He was often summoned to Berlin, Leipsic, and other places, where he painted many of his more celebrated contemporaries, as Lessing, Herder, Moses Mendelssohn, Schiller, Gluck, Weisse, and Frederick William II. The following also are by him:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Two Portraits of Johann Joachim Spalding.
Brunswick.	Museum.	Portrait of Friedrich Albrecht, Prince of Anhalt-Bernburg.
Dresden.	Gallery	His own Portrait.
"	"	Portrait of Frederick Augustus, King of Saxony.
"	"	Portraits of Karl Hommeyer and his wife.
"	"	Portraits of Christian Voight and his daughter.
"	"	Portrait of Johann Jakob Mesmer.
Gotha.	Gallery.	Portrait of Eckhoff.
Leipsic.	Museum.	Portrait of Frau Gabain.
Munich.	Gallery.	His own Portrait.

GRAFF, JOHANN ANDREAS, a painter and engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1637, was instructed in art under Häberlin and the flower painter Marrel, in Frankfort, after which he studied for two years in Vienna and four years in Rome. In 1664 he returned to Nuremberg, where he married the artist Maria Sibylla Merian. Twenty years later he removed to Frankfort, but returned to Nuremberg, where he died in 1701. He designed and engraved numerous landscapes, plans, and figure subjects, among which are:

Interiors of the churches of St. Lawrence and St. Sebald at Nuremberg.

The Römerberg at Frankfort.

John Maurice, Prince of Nassau-Orange. 1658.

GRAFF, KARL ANTON, a landscape painter, the son of Anton Graff, was born at Dresden in 1774, and was first instructed there under Professor Zingg, but he afterwards devoted six years to travelling in Switzerland and Italy. He died in 1832. His best works were mountain landscapes from Bavaria and Switzerland.

GRAFF, MARIA DOROTHEA HENRICA. See GSELL.

GRAFF, MARIA SIBYLLA. See MERIAN.

GRAFFICO, CAMILLO, was a native of Friuli, who flourished about the year 1588. He engraved several plates of devotional subjects, among which is one representing the 'Holy Family,' after Bernardino Passari. He worked entirely with the graver, in a style resembling that of Cornelis Cort, but very inferior to it.

GRAFFIONE, GIOVANNI, a Florentine painter; born 1455; pupil of Baldovinetti. He painted a 'God in Glory' over the door of the hospital of Santa Maria degli Innocenti in Florence. Died 1527.

GRAHAM, G., an English engraver, worked in the latter half of the 18th century. He produced some of the illustrations for Campbell's 'Pleasures of Hope' in 1799, and also some of Rowlandson's works. He engraved chiefly in the dotted manner, but the following mezzotint plates are also by him:

John, Earl of Bute; after Ramsay.

Mrs. Collier; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Van Tromp; after Rembrandt.

Poverty; after Rising.

GRAHAM, JOHN, an English historical painter, was born about 1706. He studied in Paris, London, and Italy, and finally settled at the Hague, where he was still living in 1776.

GRAHAM, JOHN, a Scottish historical painter, born in 1754, was at first apprenticed to a coach-painter in Edinburgh, but coming to London he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he exhibited from 1780 to 1797. In 1798 he was appointed master of the Trustees' Academy in Edinburgh, where he had amongst his pupils Wilkie, Allan, Burnett, and Watson Gordon. He died at Edinburgh in 1817. His chief works are:

Daniel in the Lions' Den. 1780.

Una. 1783.

Ceres in search of Proserpine. 1786.

The Escape of Mary, Queen of Scots, from Lochleven.

1788. (Stationers' Hall, London.)

King David instructing Solomon. 1797.

The Disobedient Prophet. (National Gallery of Scotland.)

GRAHAM-GILBERT, JOHN, a Scottish portrait painter, the son of a West India merchant named Graham, was born at Glasgow in 1794. When about twenty-four years of age he came to London, and having entered the schools of the Royal Academy, he gained in 1821 the gold medal for painting, afterwards proceeding to Italy to study the old masters, especially those of the Venetian school. The collection of pictures which he formed was bequeathed by his widow, who died in 1877, to the city of Glasgow, and forms a most valuable feature of the Corporation Galleries. After having been in Italy two years he returned to London, but in 1827 he went to Edinburgh, and was elected a member of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1830. Soon after this he married and settled in Glasgow, at the same time adding his wife's name, Gilbert, to his own. He was an occasional contributor to the Royal Academy in London from 1844 to 1864, having also exhibited a few pictures there after his return from Italy. He died at Yorkhill, near Glasgow, in 1866. He executed many fancy studies of young girls, especially Italian, and other subjects, besides many portraits; his drawing was good and natural, and his colouring rich in tone, his portraits especially recalling the Venetian richness of painting. Among his subject pictures may be mentioned 'Females at a Fountain' (Royal Academy, 1846), 'A Roman Girl' (Royal Academy, 1864), and a portrait of Charles Lawson, Provost of Edinburgh, exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in 1866, the year of his death. In the National Portrait Gallery is a portrait of Sir Walter Scott by him, and in the National Gallery of Scotland are:

Sir John Watson Gordon, P.R.S.A.

John Gibson, R.A., sculptor.

An Italian Nobleman.

The Bandit's Bride.

GRAHL, KONRAD, (GRAHLEN, or GRAHLEIN,) was an engraver on metal and wood, who lived at Leipsic about 1620, working chiefly for booksellers.

GRAMBS, JOHANN VALENTIN, a portrait painter, born at Frankfort-on-the-Main in 1630, was a follower of the style of Van Dyck. His works were much admired, and amongst them was the portrait of the Empress Eleonora Magdalena, third consort of Leopold I., which was engraved by Kilian.

GRAMMARSEO, PIETRO, a native of Montferrat, in Piedmont, flourished about 1523, in which year he painted an altar-piece, which is in the conventual church of Casale.

GRAMMATICA, ANTIVEDUTO, born at Siena in 1571, was a disciple of Domenico Perugino. Several of his works are in the public edifices at Rome. In the church of Santa Maria in Trastevere there is a picture of the 'Virgin and Infant in the clouds, with Angels, and St. Hyacinth below ;' and in San Giacomo degli Incurabili is a fine picture of the 'Nativity,' with the 'Adoration of the Shepherds.' His talents raised him to the presidency of the Academy of St. Luke, but of this distinction he was deprived, on account of a nefarious attempt to dispose of a picture by Raphael belonging to the Academy, and to substitute for it a copy which he had made. He did not long survive this disgrace, and died at Rome in 1626.

GRAN, DANIEL, an historical painter, born at Vienna, or Mähren, in 1694, studied under Ferg and Wernle at Vienna, and afterwards under Ricci at Venice, and Solimena at Naples. Upon his return from Italy he executed a great number of large ceiling frescoes, mostly of an allegorical character, in the imperial palace, and in various castles, churches, and cloisters. He also produced several oil paintings, of which the Vienna Gallery possesses a 'Holy Family,' and the Karlskirche a 'St. Elizabeth,' and left some good pen-and-ink drawings. He died at St. Pölten in 1757.

GRANACCI, FRANCESCO, a Florentine painter, was born at Florence in 1477. He was a fellow-pupil with Michelangelo in the studio of Ghirlandajo, and was much attached to the former, whose style he at first greatly imitated. Granacci was one of the artists who went to Rome to assist Michelangelo in the Sistine Chapel, but when the master, finding he could not manage to get on with his assistants, shut both the door of the chapel and that of his own house against them, Granacci was justly incensed. He is said to have evinced his acquirement of the principles of Michelangelo in his picture of 'St. Zenobius and St. Francis, with the Virgin and Infant in the Clouds ;' but still more in his 'Assumption,' formerly in San Pier Maggiore, and now in the Rucellai palace, in which the figure of St. Thomas is entirely in the style of that master. He died at Florence in 1543. Not many pictures by this artist remain, but his principal works are :

GRANDHOMME, JACQUES. See GRANTHOMME.

GRANDI, ERCOLE DI GIULIO, commonly called ERCOLE DA FERRARA, whose works have been confused with those of Ercole di Roberto, was a native of Ferrara. He was in the service of the Duke of Ferrara from 1492 till 1499, and died in 1531. He was a disciple of Lorenzo Costa, and was the author of 'St. Sebastian, with other Saints and Patrons,' in San Paolo, Ferrara; of an 'Adoration of the Kings,' in the Ferrara Gallery; of a 'St. George and the Dragon,' in the Corsini Gallery, Rome; and also of 'The Conversion of St. Paul,' and a 'Madonna and Child with Saints,' in the National Gallery, London. Other pictures by him are in private collections in Italy.

GRANDI, ERCOLE DI ROBERTO, was a partner with his brother as a painter and gold-beater in Ferrara in 1479. He was in the paid service of the Duke of Ferrara, and was frequently employed in painting chests. He built a triumphal car; decorated the garden lodge of the Duchess; and in 1494 painted the likeness of Hercules I. for Isabella of Mantua. He was a disciple and imitator of Mantegna, and executed, amongst other works, the decorations (since destroyed) of the Garganelli chapel in San Pietro, Bologna, finished about 1483, and much admired by Michelangelo. He also, it is said, finished a view of Naples in 1490-93. He died before 1513. The following works also are ascribed to him :

Dresden.	Gallery.	Betrayal of Christ.	} Parts of the predella of an altar-piece by Lorenzo Costa, formerly in San Giovanni in Monte, Bologna.
"	"	Procession to Golgotha.
Liverpool.	Royal Inst.	Pietà. (Part of the predella of the same altar-piece.)
Modena.	Gallery.	Lucretia.
Ravenna.	Gallery.	Christ on the Mount of Olives.
Venice.	Correr Mus.	Christ on the Cross, with the Virgin and St. John the Evangelist.

A full account of the Grandis is given in Crowe and Cavalcaselle's 'History of Painting in North Italy,' 1871; i. 530-534.

GRANDIN, JACQUES LOUIS MICHEL, a French historical painter, born at Elbeuf in 1780, was a pupil of David, but he adopted a style differing considerably from that of his master. He mostly painted idylls and mythological scenes. The date of his death is not known.

GRANDJEAN, JEAN, was born at Amsterdam in 1752, and after instruction under Jacobus Verstegen and Jurriaan Andriessen, as well as at the Academy of his native city, where he obtained three prizes, proceeded first to Düsseldorf, and then in 1779 to Italy. He painted landscapes, portraits, and historical subjects, and has also left one etching of a 'Bacchanal.' He died at Rome in 1781.

GRANDVILLE, JEAN IGNACE ISIDORE, whose real name was GÉRARD, a French designer and lithographer, was born at Nancy in 1803. He first studied miniature painting under his father, and then under Mansion and Hippolyte Lecomte, but abandoning this branch of art, he devoted himself to the then newly-discovered invention of lithography. He soon obtained a large practice, and illustrated a great number of periodicals and books. His later years were clouded with domestic misfortune, and he died in a lunatic asylum at Vanves, near Paris, in 1847. Besides the journals and books which he illustrated, the following are a few of the works he published on his own account :

Le Dimanche d'un bon Bourgeois.
Les Métamorphoses du Jour. 1828.
Les Animaux peints par eux-mêmes. 1841.
Les petites Misères de la Vie humaine. 1842.
Un autre Monde. 1843.
Cent Proverbes. 1844.
Les Fleurs animées. 1846.

GRANELLO, NICCOLÒ, who was probably the step-son of Giovanni Battista Castello, called Il Bergamasco, flourished in the 16th century. He especially excelled in battle-pieces, which he executed in conjunction with other artists, as Tabaron and Cambiaso, and among which are the 'Battle of St. Quentin,' in the Escorial, and the 'Battle of Higuera,' after a painting by Dello, in the Alcazar at Segovia. He was the half-brother and instructor of Fabrizio Castello, and died at Madrid in 1593.

GRANET, FRANÇOIS MARIUS, a French architectural and historical painter, was born at Aix in 1775. His father, who was a mason, apprenticed him to an Italian painter who chanced to stop at Aix while upon a tour, and after having learnt the rudiments of art from him, he entered the school of the landscape painter Constantin, and afterwards the atelier of David at Paris. He there won a prize with the picture of 'The Court of a Monastery,' and then proceeded in 1802 to Rome, where he passed many years of his life. On returning to Paris for the first time in 1819, he brought with him a copy of his 'Choir of the Capuchin Monastery,' which met with such extraordinary admiration that he was compelled to execute fifteen or sixteen variations of it. Louis XVIII. gave him the decoration of the Legion of Honour in the same year, and afterwards the order of St. Michael; while in 1826 he became conservator of the paintings in the Louvre, in 1830 a member of the Institute, and in 1833 an officer of the Legion of Honour. After the revolution of 1848 he returned to Aix, where he died in 1849. He bequeathed to the town his property, and presented his pictures as the foundation of a museum; at the same time setting apart a yearly allowance of 1500 francs for the education in art of a youth of that town, and a further sum of money for establishing in the hospital for incurables two beds for masons as a memorial of his father. His paintings consist chiefly of the interiors of churches and other buildings, set out with historical scenes, and in this line he is considered to have been wholly unrivalled. The following are among his best works:

Poussin uncovering the painting of the 'Communion of St. Jerome.'
 Jacques Stella painting the Madonna on the wall of his Prison Cell. 1810. (Leuchtenberg Gallery.)
 The Choir of the Capuchin Monastery in the Piazza Barbarini at Rome. (Buckingham Palace.)

 His own Portrait. (The same.)

GRANGER, DAVID, an engraver, practised in London in the early part of the 17th century. There is by him a 'St. George,' after Raphael.

GRANGER, JEAN PERRIN, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1779, and died in the same city in 1840. He was educated under Allais and Regnault, and in David's school, and he executed pictures from ancient mythology and from Greek and Roman history, as well as several of a sacred character. His 'Adoration of the Kings,' in Notre-Dame de Lorette at Paris, partakes of the style of Paolo Veronese. In the Bordeaux Museum is a picture of 'Ganymede;' in the Dijon Museum one of 'Homer and Glaucus;' and in the Leipsic Museum, 'Apollo and Cyparissus.'

GRANT, SIR FRANCIS, a portrait painter, was born at Kilgraston in Perthshire in 1810. He was the fourth son of Francis Grant of Kilgraston, and was educated at Harrow, with the intention that he should study for the bar, but he preferred the pursuit of art, and adopted it as a profession. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1834, and among his early works were hunting meets, of which his liking for field sports rendered him a faithful delineator. He subsequently devoted himself to full-length portraits, and became the fashionable portrait painter of the day, most of the celebrities of his time sitting to him. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1842, and an Academician in 1851. On the death of Sir Charles Eastlake in 1866, and after the refusal of the office by Maclise and Sir Edwin Landseer, he was chosen President of the Academy, and knighted, honours which he owed more to his urbanity and social position than to his art. He died, after several years' suffering, in 1878, at Melton Mowbray, where he was buried, his family declining the honour of a grave in St. Paul's Cathedral. The following is a list of some of his chief works:

The Breakfast at Melton. 1834.
 Count D'Orsay. 1836.
 The Meeting of H.M. Staghounds at Ascot Heath. 1837. (Earl of Chesterfield.)
 The Melton Hunt. 1839. (Duke of Wellington.)
 Equestrian Portrait of Queen Victoria. 1840. (Army and Navy Club.)

 Viscount Palmerston.
 John Gibson Lockhart.
 Viscount Gough.
 Lord Chancellor Truro.
 Lord Chancellor Campbell. (National Portrait Gallery.)
 Lord Chief Baron Pollock.
 Sir William Erle.
 George Moberley, Bishop of Salisbury.

GRANT, WILLIAM JAMES, an historical painter, was born at Hackney in 1829. At about the age of sixteen he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, and within two or three years exhibited his first work, 'Rabbits,' and was from that time a frequent exhibitor, sending in 1852 'Samson and Delilah;' in 1858, 'The Last Trial of Madame Palissy;' in 1860, 'The Morning of the Duel;' and in 1861, 'The Last Relics of Lady Jane Grey.' He was a promising artist, but died in 1866, at the early age of thirty-seven.

GRANTHOMME, JACQUES, a German engraver, born at Heidelberg, flourished about the year 1600. Little more is known of him than that he was educated in France in the school of Thomas De Leeuw and Rabel, and that being expelled as a Huguenot, he settled at Frankfort, where, as well as at Heidelberg, he worked as an engraver, in the style of Sadeler and Cornelis Cort. Some writers speak of three artists of this name, and attribute to them the plates of Jean de Gourmont and Jan Georg van Vliet. Granthomme is known to have executed eighty-two plates, of which the best are his portraits. He worked entirely with the graver, and usually marked his plates with one of these ciphers:  or . The following are his principal prints:

Portrait of Henry III.

Louis XIII.

Charles IX.

James I., King of Great Britain.

Pope Sixtus V.

Frederick IV., Count Palatine of the Rhine.

Henry of Bourbon, Prince of Condé.

Thirteen Portraits of the Doctors and Reformers of the Church; or, as they are often styled, the Heresiarchs; after a painter whose initials are P. M.

The Narrative of the Good Samaritan; four plates.

The Marriage of Henry IV. and Catharine de' Medici.

The Infant Dauphin strangling a Serpent. 1601.

Adam and Eve.

Venus and Adonis; four plates.

Laocöon.

The Murder of the Innocents.

The Apostles; twelve small prints; after his own designs.

The Rape of Helen; copied from the print by Marc-Antonio, after Raphael.

GRANVILLE, —, was an English engraver, who flourished about the year 1760. He executed landscapes, among which are some plates from the pictures of Thomas Smith of Derby.

GRANVILLE, MARY, (Mrs. DELANY,) an English portrait painter and copyist, who was a great favourite with George III., was born in 1700. She was first married to a Mr. Pendarves, and secondly to Dr. Delany, Dean of Down. She died in 1788. There is a very good portrait of the Duchess of Queensberry by her.

GRASDORP, WILLEM, a painter of fruit and flowers, who resided at Amsterdam, was a scholar of Ernst Stuken in 1710. His pictures are held in great estimation, and are to be found in some of the finest private collections in Holland. There is a picture by him in the Brunswick Gallery, and another in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg.

GRASHOF, OTTO, an historical, genre, portrait, and animal painter, was born at Prenzlau in 1812. He was educated at Düsseldorf under Schadow, and afterwards resided some years in Russia, Mexico, and La Plata, but finally settled in 1845 at Cologne, where he died in 1876. He had been blind from 1861. Some of his best known works are:

The Battle of Schumla. 1848.

Russian Bears in a Forest.

The Guardian Angel. 1845.

Russian Pilgrims.

Portrait of Franz Liszt.

Christ and the Samaritan Woman. 1846.

Wolves by a dead Horse. 1847.

St. Wapitz of Novgorod.

Fight of a Tscherkessan and a Russian.

Till Eulenspiegel.

Scene from 'Nathan the Wise.'

GRASSI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, lived at Udine in the 16th century, and practised there both as an architect and painter. His first known painting there was the altar-piece of the church of San Cristoforo, executed in 1547. In 1554 he painted on the front of the Casa Sabbatini frescoes representing the Medusa, and Jove and Vulcan. In 1556 he painted the organ in the cathedral with designs representing the 'Annunciation,' the 'Nativity,' the 'Marriage at Cana,' and 'Christ healing the Sick;' and in 1569 he executed the decorations of the castle of Udine, which are now nearly ruined. He died after 1578. Two paintings of his are:

Buia. Church. Martyrdom of St. Lawrence. 1558.

Gemonia. Church. Organ Shutters. 1577.

GRASSI, JOSEPH, an historical and portrait painter, born at Udine in 1756, was made professor at the Dresden Academy in 1800, and in 1817 director of the Royal Saxon Pensioners at Rome. He died at Dresden in 1838. His portraits are much esteemed, and he was particularly successful with those of females. The Dresden Gallery possesses two of his paintings, 'St. John the Baptist,' and 'St. Peter.'

GRATELLA. See FILIPPI, SEBASTIANO.

GRATELOUP, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French engraver, was born at Dax in Gascony in 1735, and died in the same town in 1817. He executed portraits in the manner of Savart and Ficquet, among which are:

Rousseau; after J. Aved.

Adrienne Lecouvreur; after C. A. Coypel.

Montesquieu; after Dassier.

Descartes; after F. Hals.

Dryden; after Kneller.

Bossuet (two portraits); after Rigaud.

Fénélon; after Vivien.

GRATI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Bologna in 1681, and was a scholar of Giovanni Gioseffo dal Sole. There are several of his pictures in the churches at Bologna, of which the most esteemed are 'The Virgin and Child, with St. Francis, St. Joseph, and St. Gaetano, with a glory of Angels,' in Santa Maria Incoronata; and 'St. Anne teaching the Virgin to read,' in San Giacomo Maggiore. He died in 1758.

GRATIANI, BARTOLOMMEO, the son of Guido Gratiani, settled in Perugia in 1319, and painted for the church of Montelebato.

GRATIANI, GUIDO, superseded Diotisalvi in 1287, 1290, and 1298 as painter of the books of the Biccherna. He is mentioned as the painter of a banner, and he executed in 1295 a 'Majesty, between St. Peter and St. Paul,' in the Public Palace of Siena, and gilded three hundred letters for an image of the Virgin. In 1302 he executed the portraits of twelve forgers for the front of the Tribunal of Justice.

GRATIANI, MINO, a brother of Bartolommeo, painted in 1289 a 'Virgin and Saints' for the Hall of the Great Council in the old Public Palace of Siena, and in 1303 a 'St. Christopher.' In 1298 he produced the portraits of several false witnesses. His name is not found in the public records after 1329.

GRATTON, GEORGE, an Irish genre painter, flourished at the beginning of the 19th century, and in 1807 was awarded 100 guineas by the Dublin Society for his 'Beggar Woman and Child.' He afterwards removed to London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1812, 'The Guard Room,' 'The Gathering,' and 'Noon Tide.' No trace of him exists after this date. There is a water-colour view of 'Christ Church, Dublin,' by him, in the South Kensington Museum.

GRAVE, ALDE. See ALDEGREVER.

GRAVE, HANS. See GRAF.

GRAVE, JAN EVERT, a designer and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1759, and died there in 1805. He was a scholar of Jakob Cats and Jan Punts, and chiefly executed landscapes and views of towns.

GRAVE, JOSUA. See GRAAF.

GRAVELOT, HENRI, whose original name was D'ANVILLE, a French designer and engraver, was born in Paris in 1699. He was the brother of the geographer D'Anville, but he assumed the name of Gravelot on coming to England, whither he was invited in 1733, by Claude Du Bosc, to assist him in the plates for the 'Religious Ceremonies,' which he published in English, copied from Picart. Gravelot returned to France in 1745, but was soon in England again, and after a highly successful course here, he finally settled in Paris in 1754, where he died in 1773. He was an excellent draughtsman, and made designs for ornaments, and drawings of ancient buildings, monuments, &c., with great taste. He etched several plates for books; among which were those for Sir Thomas Hanmer's edition of Shakespeare, some of which were from his own designs, and others after Francis Hayman. He also engraved the plates for Theobald's Shakespeare, from his own designs. He is also well known as one of the earliest caricaturists. His best plate is a view of Kirkstall Abbey.

GRAVELOT, HUBERT FRANÇOIS BOURGUIGNON. See BOURGUIGNON-GRAVELOT.

GRAVES, ROBERT, a line-engraver, was born in London in 1798. At an early age he manifested a strong predilection for art, and studied in the life-school held in Ship Yard, Temple Bar, until 1812, in which year he became a pupil of John Romney, the engraver. Afterwards he made for collectors many copies in pen-and-ink of rare portraits by Hollar, Van de Passe, and others; but at length he devoted himself entirely to engraving. In 1836 he was by an unanimous vote elected an Associate Engraver of the Royal Academy, on which occasion he presented as his diploma work the portrait of Lord Byron, after Thomas Phillips. This and the 'Highland Whiskey-Still,' after Sir Edwin Landseer, are his two most successful engravings. Besides a great number of portraits and book-illustrations, he engraved several plates after Wilkie, Landseer, and Mulready, for the Author's Edition of the 'Waverley Novels,' and others for the 'Literary Souvenir,' 'Iris,' 'Amulet,' 'Keep-sake Français,' and 'Forget-Me-Not.' He died in London in 1873. His plates generally are characterised more by their refinement and delicacy, and in these qualities they can scarcely be surpassed, than by any remarkable vigour of line. The following are his most important works:

The Enthusiast; after T. Lane. 1831.

Mathematical Abstraction; after the same. 1833.

The Musical Bore; after R. W. Buss. 1834.

The Romance; after the same.

The Venetian Girl; after J. Wood. 1836.

Lord Byron; after Thomas Phillips. 1836.

The Abbottsford Family; after Sir David Wilkie. 1837.

The Examination of Shakespeare before Sir Thomas Lucy on a charge of deer-stealing; after Sir George Harvey. 1839.

A Castaway; after the same. 1841.

The Highland Whiskey-Still after Sir Edwin Landseer. 1842.

The First Reading of the Bible in the crypt of Old St. Paul's; after Sir George Harvey. 1846.

Lord Nelson; half-length; after Abbott. 1847.

The Baron's Charger; after J. F. Herring. 1850.

The Highland Cradle; after Sir Edwin Landseer. 1850.

Haidee, a Greek Girl; after Sir Charles Eastlake. 1850.

The Princess Amelia; after Sir Thomas Lawrence. 1855.

The Princess Victoria Gouramma of Coorg; after Winterhalter. 1857.

Cromwell resolving to refuse the Crown; after C. Lucy. 1858.

The Sisters; after Sir Charles Eastlake. 1859.

The Princesses Mary, Sophia, and Amelia, daughters of George III.; after J. S. Copley. 1860.

The Slide; after Webster. 1861.

The Origin of the Harp; after MacIose. 1862.

The Good Shepherd; after Murillo. 1863.

The Immaculate Conception; after the same. 1865.

Paolo and Francesca da Rimini; after Sir John Noel Paton. 1866.

Hon. Mrs. Graham; full-length; after Gainsborough. 1866.

The Blue Boy (Master Burrell); after the same. 1868.

Mrs. Lloyd, afterwards Mrs. Peter Beckford; full-length; after Sir Joshua Reynolds. 1868.

Mrs. Siddons; half-length; after Gainsborough. 1869.

Via Dolorosa; after Raphael (?). 1869.

Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire; full-length; after Gainsborough. 1870.

Mrs. Beaufoy; full-length; after the same. 1872.

Lady Bowater; full-length; after the same. 1872.

GRAY, —, an English engraver of little celebrity, executed a set of views for a work published about 1727, entitled 'Thirty different Drafts of Guinea,' by William Smith, Surveyor to the Royal African Company of England. There is a frontispiece to the work, representing an Elephant, which is etched in the style of Hollar, very superior to the plates by Gray.

GRAY, PAUL, an Irish draughtsman on wood, was born at Dublin in 1842, and there passed his earlier years; but when about twenty-one years of age he came to London. He showed some skill as a painter, but having to support his mother he was driven to become a wood-engraver. He designed the illustrations to Charles Kingsley's 'Hereward,' and he also contributed many of the cartoons to 'Fun.' He, however, suffered from bad health, and died at the early age of twenty-four, in 1866.

GRAZIA, LEONARDO, known as LEONARDO DA PISTOJA, was a native of Pistoja, and a scholar of Giovanni Francesco Penni, a distinguished disciple of Raphael. His family name appears to have been Grazia, from an inscription on a picture of the 'Annunciation,' by him, in the chapel of the sacristy of the cathedral of Lucca. He painted historical subjects and portraits, but particularly excelled in the latter. His works are to be found chiefly at Rome, Naples, and Lucca. According to Zani he flourished from 1516 to 1540; but there is a doubt whether there were not two painters of the same name who lived about the same time.

GRAZIADEI. See PESCIA.

GRAZIANI, ERCOLE, a Bolognese painter, was born at Bologna in 1688. He was brought up in the school of Donato Creti, whose style he improved by a grander character of design, a more harmonious colouring, and a greater freedom of hand. His powers approximate to those of Marc Antonio Franceschini and others that issued from the school of Cignani. He was an artist of unusual assiduity, and painted a prodigious number of pictures for the public edifices at Bologna and Piacenza. The churches at Bologna abound with his works, of which the most esteemed is his celebrated picture of 'St. Peter consecrating St. Apollinaris amidst an assemblage of the primitive Christians.' Cardinal Lambertini, Archbishop of Bologna, on becoming Pope, as Benedict XIV., commissioned Graziani to paint a replica of this picture for the church of Sant' Apollinare at Rome, where is also his 'Baptism of Christ.' In San Bartolomeo di Reno, at Bologna, are two admired pictures by him of the 'Marriage of St. Catharine,' and 'St. Anne teaching the Virgin to read.' In the church of La Purità is the 'Ascension;' and in the Madonna delle Rondini is the 'Annunciation,' one of his most celebrated works. He died in 1765.

GRAZIANI, PIETRO, was a painter of battles, who flourished at Naples in the 18th century.

GRAZZINI, GIOVANNI PAOLO, born at Ferrara about the year 1570, passed the first and greater part of his life as a goldsmith. He learned the rudiments of design, as was at that time usual with those of his profession, and being intimate with Carlo Bononi, he was prompted by the celebrity of his friend to make an essay of his own powers in painting, though he had already passed the prime of life. His first public performance, which occupied him eight years, was a picture of 'St. Eloy,' which Lanzi says was painted for the Scuola degli Orefici. Barotti, in his description of the works of art in Ferrara, places it in the church of San Giuliano, and adds, that Carlo Bononi embellished it with four angels at the corners, in chiaroscuro, and that Scarzellino environed it with nine small pictures of the principal actions of the saint. Grazzini also painted several easel pictures, which were much esteemed by his fellow-citizens. He died in 1632.

GREBBER. See DE GREBBER.

GRECCHI, MARC ANTONIO, was a native of Siena, whose works are dated from 1590 to 1634. There is a picture by him, mentioned by Lanzi, in a church at Foligno, representing the 'Holy Family.' It is painted in a style resembling rather the Bolognese taste of Tiarini, than that of any of the Sienese painters.

GRÉE, PIETER JAN BALTHASAR DE, a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp in 1751, was a pupil of Geeraerts, from whom he acquired the taste for painting bas-reliefs, and in this line he gained a reputation. About 1786 he went to Ireland, and settled in Dublin, where he died in 1789.

GREEN, AMOS, a flower and landscape painter, who flourished in the latter half of the 18th century, was the brother of Benjamin Green. He was born at Hales Owen, and died at York in 1807.

GREEN, BENJAMIN, a mezzotint engraver, born at Hales Owen about 1736, was probably the elder brother of Valentine Green. He was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, with whom he exhibited from 1765 to 1774, and he taught drawing at Christ's Hospital. He died in London about 1800. He engraved the plates in Morant's

'History and Antiquities of the County of Essex,' 1768, as well as the following prints:

The Horse before the Lion's Den; after Stubbs. 1768.
The Lion and the Stag; after the same. 1770.
The Horse and the Lioness; after the same. 1774.
Portrait of Lord Pigot; after the same.
Portrait of Miss Baldwin; after Kettle.
Portrait of Henry Townshend; after Hudson.

GREEN, BENJAMIN ROBERT, a water-colour painter, born in London in 1808, was the son of James Green, the portrait painter. After having been educated in the schools of the Royal Academy, he became a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours. He taught much, and was for many years Secretary of the Artists' Annuity Fund. He died in London in 1876. There is a water-colour drawing by him of the 'Interior of Stratford-on-Avon Church' in the South Kensington Museum.

GREEN, JAMES, a portrait painter, was born at Leytonstone in 1771. He at first practised in water-colours, and belonged to the Associated Society of Water-Colour Artists, but afterwards exhibited at the British Institution, where he obtained a prize of £60 in 1808. His later works appeared at the Royal Academy. He died at Bath in 1834. There are portraits by him in the National Portrait Gallery of Thomas Stothard, the painter, and Sir John Ross, the Arctic navigator.

GREEN, JOHN, an engraver who worked in the 18th century, was a native of Hales Owen. He was brother to Benjamin Green, and a pupil of James Basire. Some of the plates in Borlase's 'Natural History of Cornwall,' and on the Oxford Almanacks are by him. He died about 1757. Among other portraits, the following are by him:

Thomas Rowney, M.P.

Thomas Shaw, D.D., Master of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford.
William Derham, D.D., Canon of Windsor.

GREEN, JOSHUA, was a water-colour painter, by whom there is a drawing of 'Ullswater Head' in the South Kensington Museum. The dates of his birth and death are unknown.

GREEN, MARY, a miniature painter, born in 1776, was the second daughter of William Byrne, the landscape engraver, and wife of James Green, the portrait painter, whom she married in 1805. She studied under Arlaud, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1795 to 1834. She died in 1845. There are good portraits by her of Queen Adelaide and Lady Alicia Peel.

GREEN, VALENTINE, a mezzotint engraver, was born at Hales Owen, near Birmingham, in 1739. He was intended by his father for the profession of the law, for which purpose he was placed under a respectable practitioner at Evesham, in Worcestershire, with whom he passed two years; but having a taste for drawing, he abandoned his office, and, without his father's concurrence, became a pupil to an obscure line-engraver at Worcester. His progress in that branch of engraving not succeeding to his wishes, he came to London in 1765, and turned his attention to scraping in mezzotint, in which, without the aid of an instructor, he arrived at a perfection which has seldom been equalled. Green participates with MacArdell and Earlom in the merit of having been the first artists who gave consequence and variety to the particular mode of engraving to which they devoted themselves; and it is worthy of remark, that Green's celebrated prints of 'Hannibal' and 'Regulus,' after the pictures by West in the Royal Collection, were the first plates of equal magnitude and importance that had appeared. These were succeeded by several others of similar consideration, which will ever rank among the ablest and most energetic efforts of mezzotint. This indefatigable artist, by his unremitting exertions during a period of upwards of forty years, produced nearly four hundred plates, engraved from the works of the most celebrated painters, ancient and modern. In 1789 he obtained a patent from the Duke of Bavaria, giving him the exclusive privilege of engraving and publishing prints from the pictures in the Düsseldorf Gallery; and in the year 1795, he had published twenty-two prints from that collection. The enterprise promised to remunerate him amply for so spirited an undertaking, but unfortunately, during the siege of that city by the French in 1798, the castle and gallery were laid in ruins, and a very valuable property belonging to him was destroyed. Other speculations, flattering in their outset, were lost to him by the overwhelming eruption of the French Revolution, of which Green thus became one of the innumerable victims. In 1767 he was elected a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists of Great Britain; and in 1775 one of the six Associate Engravers of the Royal Academy. On the foundation of the British Institution he was appointed keeper; and his zealous exertions to promote the purposes of that institution contributed greatly to its success. Valentine Green died in London in 1813. The following are among his most important works:

GREEN, WILLIAM, an engraver, was born at Manchester in 1761. He originally practised as a surveyor, and then came to London to study engraving; but he afterwards settled in the Lake district, and drew and engraved many views of its scenery. He died at Ambleside in 1823. There is by him in the South Kensington Museum a water-colour drawing of 'Raven Crag, Thirlmere.'

GREENBURY, —, a portrait painter, employed by Charles I. as a copyist, is mentioned by Sir Theodore de Mayerne, and by Walpole. He died about 1670. There is in New College, Oxford, a portrait of Arthur Lake, Bishop of Bath and Wells, by him, dated 1626.

GREENHILL, JOHN, a portrait painter, was born at Salisbury in 1649. He was one of the ablest scholars of Sir Peter Lely, and before he was twenty copied Van Dyck's picture of 'Thomas Killigrew and his Dog,' now in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire, so well that it was mistaken for the original. His heads in crayons were much admired; and he appears to have been more employed in that way than in oil. He would probably have reached a high position in the art, had he not fallen a victim, in the prime of life, to an intemperate and dissolute course of life. He died in London in 1676. There are in the National Portrait Gallery portraits by him of Charles II., and of Anthony, first Earl of Shaftesbury. He also etched a portrait of his brother, Henry Greenhill, the mathematician.

GREENWOOD, JOHN, a painter and mezzotint engraver, was born at Boston, in Massachusetts, in 1729. In 1752 he migrated to Surinam, and thence to Holland, arriving in England in 1763. Here he exhibited engravings at the Incorporated Society of Artists from 1764 to 1776, when he became an auctioneer. He died at Margate in 1792. Amongst the plates he engraved are:

The Curious Maid; after a picture by himself.
Amelia Hone; after Hone.
John Wesley; after the same.
George Whitefield; after the same.
An Old Man; after Eeckhout.
Rembrandt's Father; after Rembrandt.
Simon Fokke; after Buys.

GREENWOOD, THOMAS, the son of John Greenwood, the painter and engraver, was for many years at the close of the 18th century, chief scene-painter at Drury Lane Theatre. He died in 1797.

GREFF, HIERONYMUS, a German engraver, was a native of Frankfurt, who flourished early in the 16th century. He is supposed to have been a pupil of Albrecht Dürer; but this conjecture probably arose from his having copied some of the designs of that artist with great exactness; among which are the woodcuts of the 'Apocalypse,' copied in 1502 in the same size as the originals. He is sometimes called 'Hieronymus of Frankfort,' and he usually marked his prints with the monogram

GREGORI, CARLO, an Italian engraver, was born at Florence in 1719. He learned engraving from Johann Jakob Frey at Rome, and among his principal plates are those after the paintings by Bernardino Barbatelli, called Poccetti, in the chapel of St. Philip Neri at Florence. He engraved also several plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino,' as well as many after the pictures in the collection of the Marquis Gerini, and some portraits. He died at Florence in 1759. The following plates are by him:

PORTRAITS.

- Francesco Maria, Grand-Duke of Tuscany; after Campiglia.
Eleonora Vincentina of Gonzaga, his consort; after the same.
Sebastiano Bombelli; after a picture by himself.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

- The Image of the Virgin; after a design by Fratta.
Saint Catharine; after Bartolozzi.
Fourteen plates of the Life of St. Philip Neri; after Bernardino Barbatelli.
The Three Marias at the Sepulchre; after Raphael.

GREGORI, FERDINANDO, the son of Carlo Gregori, was born at Florence in 1743. After receiving some instruction in engraving from his father, he went to Paris, where he became a pupil of J. G. Wille, and afterwards returned to Florence, where he died about 1804. He engraved several plates, of which the following are the principal:

- Portrait of Carlo Gregori; after his own design.
La Madonna della Sedia; after Raphael.
The Holy Family under a Palm Tree, surrounded by Angels; after C. Maratti.
Venus sleeping; after Guido.
St. Sebastian bound to a Tree; after the same.
Venus, with Cupid mounted on a Dolphin; after Casanova.
Two Groups of Sculpture; after Cellini.
The Holy Family; after Andrea del Sarto.
The Stoning of Stephen; after L. Cardi.
The Death of St. Louis Gonzaga; after Cipriani.

GREGORIO, Fra, a Polish miniature painter of the 17th century, worked in Rome for the house of Barberini, and afterwards in London for Charles I. and his Queen in 1640. He was also a carver in ivory.

GREGORIO, MARCO DI, who was born at Resina in 1829, studied in the Art School at Naples. In 1868 he went to Egypt, where he remained for three years, made several studies, and painted a drop scene for the theatre at Cairo. He died at Resina in 1876.

GREGORIO DI CECCO. See CECCO.

GREGORIUS, ALBERTUS JAKOB FRANS, a portrait painter, and director of the Academy at Bruges, was born in that city in 1774, and after 1802 was a scholar of David at Paris. He painted, amongst others, the portraits of Napoleon, Louis XVIII., Charles X., and Louis Philippe. He returned to Bruges in 1835, and died there in 1853.

GREIG, GEORGE M., a water-colour painter, was an artist better known in Scotland than in England, who confined himself almost entirely to painting picturesque interiors and old buildings. He exhibited some sketches of the interior of Holyrood Palace at the Royal Academy in 1865, and died at Edinburgh in 1867.

GREIN, KASPAR ARNOLD, was born at Brühl, near Cologne, in 1764. He was instructed under J. M. Metz, in Cologne, where from 1794 he lived as a teacher of drawing, and died in 1835. He was especially successful as a flower-painter, but was clever also in portraits, landscapes, still-life, and historical subjects. The Wallraf-Richartz Museum at Cologne contains one of his pictures.

GREISCHER, M., a German engraver mentioned by Basan, is said to have engraved several plates after various masters, which are signed with the annexed monogram: . One of them is a print of 'The Virgin and Infant Christ, with St. John,' after F. Barocci.

GRENIER DE SAINT-MARTIN, FRANÇOIS, who was born in Paris in 1793, studied in David's school, and devoted himself to historical subjects. Later in life he painted genre and fancy subjects, many of which are well known from engravings and lithographs. He died in Paris in 1867. Amongst his pictures may be mentioned:

- The Marriage Project.
The Sailor with his Boy.
The Strolling Players with the Stolen Child.
The Recovered Child.
The Old Vagabond; (from Béranger).
The Poacher fallen asleep on the Watch.
The Little Wood Thieves.
Prudence. (Compiègne.)

GRENVILLE, JONES, an Irish engraver, was born at Dublin in 1723. He chiefly executed landscapes, among which are two after Poussin.

GRESLY, GABRIEL, a French genre painter, was born at L'Isle-sur-les-Doubs about 1710, and died at Besançon in 1756. There are examples of his art in the Museums of Dijon and Besançon.

GRESSE, JOHN ALEXANDER, born in London of Swiss parentage in 1741, was first instructed by Gérard Scotin, the engraver, but afterwards studied for some years under Cipriani, as well as under Zuccarelli. He was one of the first students who attended the Duke of Richmond's gallery, and in a short time afterwards he entered the Academy in St. Martin's Lane. Though possessed of considerable talents, he was not sufficiently assiduous to distinguish himself in the higher branches of painting; and as he inherited a small fortune at the death of his father, he relinquished the more arduous exercise of the profession, and became a drawing-master, in which pursuit he acquired great reputation and extensive employment, and in 1777 was appointed drawing-master to the princesses. In the early part of his life he etched the figures, &c., for Kennedy's 'Description of the Antiquities and Curiosities in Wilton House,' 1769, in which he had the advantage of being assisted by Bartolozzi. There are also four other etchings by this artist, a 'View of Framlingham Castle, Suffolk;' a 'Cottage;' a 'St. Jerome;' and a 'Satyr sleeping,' after Nicolas Poussin. Gresse died in London in 1794. On account of his corpulency he was known among his comrades by the name of 'Jack Grease.' In the South Kensington Museum is a water-colour drawing by him of 'Llangollen Bridge.'

GREUT, JOSEPH, noticed by Strutt as the engraver of a portrait of Hieronymus Bartholomeus, is supposed to have been a German, and to have worked chiefly for booksellers.

GREUTER, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, the son of Matthäus Greuter, was born at Rome about the year 1600, and was instructed by his father, whom he surpassed. He died in 1660. He engraved the plates for the 'Flora' of P. Ferrari, as well as the following prints:

Portrait of Giovanni Battista Marino; after S. Vouet.
Hercules in the Garden of the Hesperides; after Pietro da Cortona.
Marc' Antonio Colonna carried in triumph by Sea Gods; after the same.
The Forge of Vulcan; after Lanfranco.
The Hesperides arriving in the Port of Naples, with their Fruit borne by Tritons; after the same.
Apollo and the Muses; after A. Camassei.
The Virgin and Infant, with St. Francis kneeling; after his own design.
The Death of St. Cecilia; after Domenichino.
The Growth of Christianity; after Romanelli.
Battle-piece; after A. Tempesta.

GREUTER, MATTHÄUS, a German engraver, was born at Strassburg about the year 1564. After receiving some instruction in his native city, he travelled to Italy, by way of Lyons and Avignon, in both of which cities he was for some time employed. He resided chiefly at Rome, where he engraved several plates, executed in a neat style, though his design is generally incorrect. He died in 1638. Some of his plates are wrought entirely with the graver; others are etched, and finished with the graver, in a slighter style. He signed his prints sometimes with his name at length, and sometimes with the monogram . The following are his principal works:

Pope Sixtus V.
Cardinal Serafino Olivaro Razalio.
The Virgin seated, with the Infant Jesus and St. John; after F. Barocci.
St. Mary Magdalen seated, holding a Book, and leaning her hand on a Skull; after Luigi Gaetano. 1584.
Venus standing on a Globe, with Figures emblematical of Virtue and Vice; after his own design. 1587.
The Fall of Phaeton; after W. Dietherlin. 1588.
The Burning of Troy; after Lanfranco.
The grand Cavalcade of the Emperor Charles V.; engraved conjointly with Lucas Vorsterman.
A set of small plates of Insects; etched in a style like that of Gaywood.
View of Strassburg in 1587; after D. Speckla.

GREUZE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French genre and portrait painter, was born at Tournus, near Macon, in Burgundy, on the 21st August, 1725, and from his eighth year amused himself with drawing, although his father at first opposed his inclinations. His earliest regular instruction in art was due to a Lyonnese painter, Gromdon—his maternal grandfather—who took him to Lyons, and eventually to Paris, where he studied in the Academy. His first picture, 'A Father explaining the Bible to his Children,' obtained a great success, and it was for some time doubted whether he was really the painter. His subsequent productions dispelled these doubts, and in 1755, his picture of 'L'Aveugle trompé' procured his acceptance by the Academy, on the nomination of Pigalle, the sculptor. He then passed a short time in Italy, and his sojourn there affected his style for a time, but did not leave any permanent traces. On his return, he continued to exhibit at the Academy, without fulfilling the required academic conditions, and he was at length, after repeated warning, excluded from the Salon of 1767. It was not till after he had produced his 'Severus reproaching Caracalla' (now in the Louvre) in 1769, that he was admitted into the Academy, and then not in the highest class as a painter of history, but in the ranks of the genre painters. At this rebuff, Greuze withdrew in dudgeon, and did not exhibit again until after the Revolution. But it was then too late: the classic school reigned supreme, and, moreover, age had begun to tell on his art. Troubles fell thickly upon him in his latter years: the competence he had saved was dissipated by failures, and his nature was not such as to attract friends. He died in indigence in Paris on the 21st of March, 1805. Greuze has with justice been styled the painter of the bourgeoisie: his happiest efforts are taken from the daily life of the middle classes, e. g.—'The Father's Curse,' 'The Broken Pitcher,' 'The Village Bride,' 'The Sleeping Girl,' &c. He was the painter whom it pleased the Encyclopædists to honour, and it is, therefore, necessary to receive with considerable caution a statement such as Diderot's, that "he was the first who thought of bringing morality into art." Indeed, charming as his works are, they often suggest doubts as to his sincerity, and give rise to an impression that he, equally with his contemporaries, was influenced by the pursuit of mere prettiness. Still, however, to give him his due, Greuze merits some recognition of his efforts after a more natural style than the false and sickly sentiment of the sham pastorals with which the Bouchers and the Fragonards were inundating French art.

An account of Greuze and of his works is to be found in M.M. de Goncourt's 'Art du XVIII^e siècle.' The following paintings by him are to be found in the chief European collections:

GRÉVEDON, PIERRE LOUIS, known as HENRI, a portrait painter and lithographer, was born in Paris in 1782, and died there in 1860. He was instructed under Regnault, and at first painted historical pieces and scenes from popular life, but before long he devoted himself wholly to lithography, in which he produced portraits and fancy heads.

GREVEN, ANTON, a portrait and genre painter, was born at Cologne in 1810, and after studying at Düsseldorf betook himself to Munich, where he was exciting high hopes of future distinction, when he died at Cologne in 1838. Among his best paintings are:

Monks drinking.
The Coffee Quaffers.
The Knight and his Lady Love; (from Uhland).

GREVILLE, Lady LOUISA AUGUSTA, the eldest daughter of Francis, first Earl of Warwick, was born in 1743, and married in 1770 to William Churchill, Esq. She etched after Salvator Rosa, Annibale Carracci, and others, and the Society of Arts awarded her gold medals in 1758, 1759, and 1760, for various drawings.

GRIBELIN, SIMON, a French engraver, was born at Blois in 1661. He was instructed in engraving in Paris, and came to England in 1680; but it was above twenty years before he was noticed. The first work that raised his reputation was a plate he copied from Gérard Edelinck's fine print of 'Alexander entering the Tent of Darius,' after Le Brun. This was followed in 1707 by a set of the Cartoons of Raphael at Hampton Court, which had some success, being the first complete set that had appeared; but the plates were on too small a scale for the grandeur of the subjects, and the contracted powers of Gribelin, both in execution and drawing, were wholly inadequate to express the sublimity of Raphael. He afterwards published several plates after pictures in the Royal Collection; but his prints give no idea of the style of the masters after whom they are engraved. He also produced some portraits, and a variety of other subjects. He died in London in 1733. The following are his principal prints:

PORTRAITS.

William III.; after Fowler.
Queen Mary II.; after the same.
William, Duke of Gloucester; after Kneller.
Queen Anne.
Frederick, Prince of Wales.
George Granville, Lord Lansdowne.
James Butler, Duke of Ormonde; after Dahl. 1713.
Thomas Herbert, Earl of Pembroke.
The Duke of Schomberg.
The Earl of Shaftesbury; after Clostermann; prefixed to the 'Characteristics.'
Sir William Dawes, Archbishop of York; after the same.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Cartoons; seven small plates; after Raphael. On the title is the portrait of Queen Anne, and the representation of the room at Hampton Court in which the paintings then hung.
The Apotheosis of James I.; after the ceiling at Whitehall by Rubens; in three plates.
Hercules between Virtue and Vice; after P. Matheis.
The Adoration of the Shepherds; after Palma.
Esther before Ahasuerus; after Tintoretto.
Apollo and the Muses; after the same.
The Birth of Jupiter; after Giulio Romano.

GRIEF, ANTON, (GRIF, GRIFIR, or GRYEF,) a Flemish painter of wooded landscapes with dead game, dogs, and accessories of the chase, was born at Antwerp in 1670. His pictures are small, but painted with spirit and well coloured, though somewhat too sombre. He lived at Brussels, and died there in 1715, but there are no particulars of him recorded, though from his style it is conjectured that he was a pupil of Frans Snyders. There seem to have been two painters of the same name, but whether father and son is unknown. Among his works are:

Dijon.	Museum.	Game.
Lille.	Museum.	Vegetables and Fruit.
Paris.	Louvre.	Landscape, with dead Game.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Trophies of the Chase.
"	"	Poultry-yard.

GRIEGO, EL. See SERAFIN; and THEOTOCOPULI.

GRIEVE, JOHN HENDERSON, a scene-painter, was born in 1770, and died in 1845.

GRIEVE, WILLIAM, a scene-painter, was born in London in 1800. He was the son of J. H. Grieve, and as a boy began scene-painting at Drury Lane Theatre, where, and at Covent Garden, he made his reputation, notably by the scenery for 'Masaniello' and 'Robert le Diable.' He died in London in 1844.

GRIF, ANTON. See GRIEF.

GRIFFIER, JAN, called OLD GRIFFIER, was born at Amsterdam in 1645, and first placed under a flower-painter; but his taste leading him to landscape, he became a scholar of Roeland Rughman, whose works were then highly esteemed. He preferred, however, the brighter and more agreeable style of Ruisdael and Lingelbach, and he studied their pictures more than those of his master. In a short time he became a very pleasing painter of landscapes and views of the Rhine, in which he particularly excelled.

Jan Griffier came to England soon after the fire of London, and his pictures being much admired, he met with great encouragement. His favourite subjects were views of the Thames; and in order that he might study nature more intimately, he purchased a yacht, embarked his family and his pencils, and passed his whole time on the river between Windsor and Gravesend. After staying here many years, he sailed in his own yacht for Rotterdam, but was shipwrecked, and lost the produce of his industry in England. Nothing daunted, he built a new yacht, and sailed from port to port, studying with earnestness. He returned to England in 1687, found a liberal patron in the Duke of Beaufort, and died in London in 1718. His best known works are:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	A River Scene.
Augsburg.	Gallery.	River and Mountain Views.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Two Rhine Views.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	Two Winter Scenes.
Cambridge.	Fitzwilliam } Museum. }	Landscape.
"	"	Dogs and Game.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Fifteen Landscapes.
Gotha.	Gallery.	Winter Landscape.
Hampton Court.	Palace.	Ruins.
"	"	View of Windsor Castle.
Paris.	Louvre.	Two Views on the Rhine.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Landscape.

GRIFFIER, JOHN, a landscape painter, the son of 'Old Griffier,' was born in the latter part of the 17th century. He practised in London, and excelled in his copies of Claude's works. He died in London about 1750. The only two pictures of this artist, at present known to be extant, are in the Marquis of Bute's Collection. They are both imaginary river scenes, and one is dated 1743.

GRIFFIER, ROBERT, the son of Jan Griffier, was born in London in 1688, and instructed by his father. His pictures, like the early works of the latter, represent views on the Rhine, with boats and figures, very neatly painted, and agreeably coloured. He resided for many years in Amsterdam, but late in life he returned to England, and died here in 1750. There is a 'Landscape' by him in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg.

GRIFFITH, MOSES, a draughtsman, born in Carmarthenshire in 1749, was the servant of Pennant, the antiquary, for whom he drew and engraved illustrations for some of his works. In 1801 he published on his own account some etchings of Welsh scenery. He was living in 1809. There is a 'Landscape' by him, in water-colours, in the South Kensington Museum.

GRIFIR, ANTON. See GRIEF.

GRIFOL, FRANCISCO, was a Valencian painter of religious daubs for the people. In the course of his practice he learned to paint landscapes, marine views, and fruit pieces of some merit, but in spite of this success, he came to poverty, and died in the public hospital at Valencia in 1766.

GRIGNON, CHARLES, an English portrait and historical painter, was born in London in 1754. He studied under Cipriani, and in the schools of the Royal Academy, where he obtained the gold medal in 1776 for his 'Judgment of Hercules.' In 1782 he went to Rome with the Academy studentship, and thenceforth chiefly resided in Italy. There he painted 'The Death of Captain Cook,' and a portrait of Lord Nelson. He purchased several fine pictures in Italy, notably the Altieri Claudes, which were sent to London. He exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1770 and 1784, and died at Leghorn in 1804.

GRIGNION, REYNOLDS, an English engraver of the 18th century, executed the plates for Baskerville's edition of Addison, Pennant's 'Scotch Tour,' &c. He died at Chelsea in 1787.

GRIGNON, CHARLES, probably a relative of Jacques Grignon, was born in London, of foreign parentage, in 1716. He was one of the committee appointed in 1755 to arrange for the establishment of the Royal Academy. He engraved several plates in a masterly style; some of which were executed in conjunction with his contemporaries. Among his earliest works were several of the plates for the celebrated anatomical work of Albinus, published by Knapton in 1757. He engraved also some of the plates of the 'Antique Statues,' after the designs of Dalton, as well as the tapestries of the Vatican, published in 1753. There are some good examples of his art in the illustrations to 'Bell's British Poets,' especially those after Stothard. He died at Kentish Town, near London, in 1810. The following prints are also by him:

A View taken from the Star and Garter at Richmond; after Heckel.

Two perspective Views of the Foundling Hospital; after Valée.

The Election; four plates; after Hogarth; engraved conjointly with Le Cave and Aveline.

Garrick, in the character of Richard III.; engraved in conjunction with Hogarth. 1745.

Phryne and the Philosopher Zenocrates; after Salvator Rosa.

GRIGNON, JACQUES, a French engraver, flourished about the year 1680. The best of his works are portraits, some of which possess great merit. They are executed entirely with the graver, in a neat, clear style. In his plates of historical subjects he is less successful, as his drawing is very incorrect, and his management of the lights and shadows heavy and without effect, particularly in his plates after Poussin and the Carracci. He engraved some of the plates for a work entitled 'Les Tableaux de la Pénitence,' after the designs of Chauveau. The following portraits are also by him:

Francesco Maria Rhima; an ecclesiastic.

Pierre Barbereau, Doctor in Theology; after Ph. de Champaigne.

Jacques Cœur, Seigneur de St. Fargeau.

Jean Bureau, Mayor of Bordeaux.

GRIGOLETTI, MICHELANGELO, was born at Rorai Grande di Pordenone in 1801, and was educated at the Academy at Venice, of which he, in 1839, became a professor. In 1824 he first came out with historical paintings of his own, and a church picture by him in Sant' Antonio at Trieste excited much attention. In 1837 he executed a like work for the new cathedral at Erlau, and in 1846 an altar-piece for that at Gran in Hungary. He died at Vienna in 1870. Among his works, in addition to some portraits, may be mentioned:

Erlau. Cathedral. The Archangel Michael.

" " " Holy Family.

Gran. Cathedral. Ascension of the Virgin.

Treviso. Sig. Sugana. An Odalisque.

Trieste. S. Antonio. St. Anne with the Virgin and Child.

" Herr Caal. The Prodigal Son.

" Sig. Sartorio. Francesca da Rimini.

Vienna. Gallery. Francesco Foscari committing his Son to Prison.

GRILLANDAIO. See BIGORDI.

GRIMALDI, ALESSANDRO, the son and scholar of Giovanni Francesco Grimaldi, flourished in the latter half of the 17th century, and painted landscapes in the style of his father, but did not equal him in execution. He appears to have etched a good many of his father's figures. There is an etching by him entitled 'An Allegory upon Religion,' which is in the style of Pietro Santi Bartoli; and another of the 'Brazen Serpent,' after his own design.

GRIMALDI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, called IL BOLOGNESE, was born at Bologna in 1606, and studied under the Carracci, in whose academy he became a skilful designer of the figure; though his inclination led him later on to landscape painting, in which he endeavoured to rival Annibale Carracci and Titian. He next went to Rome, where he soon rose to distinction, and was taken under the protection of Innocent X., who employed him in the Vatican, and in his gallery at Monte Cavallo. These commissions were executed so satisfactorily, that Prince Pamfili, nephew to the Pope, engaged him to decorate his villa of Bel Respiro, which he embellished with some admirable landscapes with figures, in the style of the Carracci. His reputation reached Paris, whither in 1648 he was invited by Cardinal Mazarin, and where Louis XIV. employed him in the palace of the Louvre, and rewarded him with his accustomed munificence. On his return to Rome, after the death of his protector, Innocent X., he was equally patronized by his successors, Alexander VII. and Clement IX., and was one of the most successful artists of his time. He was twice appointed president of the Academy of St. Luke. His death occurred at Rome in 1680. Many of his pictures are in the Colonna Palace at Rome and the Vienna Gallery, and the following also are preserved:

Darmstadt.	Gallery.	Baptism of Christ.
Edinburgh.	Nat. Gall.	Landscape.
Paris.	Bibl. Nat.	Landscapes.
"	Louvre.	Landscapes.
"	"	The Washerwomen.
Rome.	Quirinal.	Scenes from the Old Testament.
"	Borghese Pal.	Series of Landscapes.

Grimaldi also left a number of etchings, among which the following may be named:

- A set of four small Landscapes.
- A grand Landscape, with Buildings, and in the foreground Figures at play; Gio. Fran. Grimaldi Bolognese inv. et fec.
- A grand Landscape, with Buildings and Fishermen; signed as above.
- A Landscape, with the Baptism of Christ.
- A Landscape, with Ruins and Figures.
- A mountainous Landscape, with Figures.
- Two upright Landscapes; after Annibale Carracci.
- A set of four Landscapes; after the same.

GRIMALDI, WILLIAM, an English miniature painter, born in Middlesex in 1751, studied under Worldge, and afterwards at Paris. He first exhibited at the Free Society of Artists, and then at the Royal Academy. He practised successively at several country towns, and in Paris from 1777 to 1785. He then settled in London, and became miniature painter to several members of the Royal Family. He died in London in 1830.

GRIMANI. See JACOBSZ, HUBERT.

GRIMBALDSON, WALTER, a landscape painter of no repute, practised early in the 18th century.

GRIMM, LUDWIG EMIL, a painter and etcher, was born at Hanau in 1790. He was the younger brother of Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm, and was educated under Karl Hess at Munich, as well as at the Academy in that city. In 1840 he published a hundred of his own etchings, comprising landscapes, historical and genre subjects, portraits, and heads, under the title of 'The Story-teller' ('Die Mährchenzählerin'), and in 1854 another thirty as a supplement. He died in 1863 at Cassel. Among his other etchings are:

- Portraits of Luther and Melanchthon; after L. Cranach.
- The Brothers Grimm. 1823.

Gipsy Life.

Children's Games in Electoral Hesse.

Entertainment of Artists at Munich. 1812.

GRIMM, SAMUEL HIERONYMUS, a water-colour painter and draughtsman, born at Burgdorf, in the canton of Berne, in 1734, was taught by his father, a miniature painter. He settled in London about 1778, and was much employed in topographical work, such as Burrell's 'Sussex,' the Society of Antiquaries' 'Vetusta Monumenta,' &c. He made a large number of pen-and-ink sketches, shaded with indian-ink or bistre, or tinted with water-colours, in the counties of Northumberland and Durham, Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, and the environs of London, which are correct, although somewhat stiff and weak. He occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy some subject pictures, and also published caricatures. He died in London in 1794. There are at the South Kensington Museum the following water-colour drawings by him:

The North Foreland Lighthouse.

Mother Ludlam's Hole, near Farnham. 1781.

GRIMMER, ABEL, perhaps a son of Jakob Grimmer, is known by two pictures: a 'Christ at the house of Martha and Mary,' dated 1614, in the Brussels Gallery, and a picture dated 1604 in possession of Herr Van Lerius, Antwerp. Grimmer entered the Guild of St. Luke in the latter city in 1592.

GRIMMER, HANS, who studied under Matthäus Grünewald, flourished at Mayence towards the close of the 16th century. The portraits by him which remain testify to his excellence as an artist. The Vienna Gallery has one of Adam von Puechhaim, painted in 1570, and in the chapel of St. Maurice at Nuremberg there are two—one of a man, and the other of a woman. In the Städel Institute at Frankfort are two wings of a picture, of which the centre is missing.

GRIMMER, JAKOB, was born at Antwerp in 1510, and was for some time a disciple of Matthys Cock, but afterwards studied under Christian Queborn. He was a reputable landscape painter, and was received into the Academy at Antwerp in 1546. He died in the same city in 1560. His pictures are generally embellished with buildings and ruins, in which he excelled. A 'Legend of St. Eustace,' in the Brussels Gallery, is attributed to him, and in the Ghent Museum there is an 'Adulteress before Christ.'

GRIMOU, ALEXIS, (GRIMOUX, or GRIMOUD,) born at Romont, in the canton of Fribourg, Switzerland, about 1680, was the son of one of the Swiss guards at Versailles. He had no master, but acquired his art by copying the works of Van Dyck and Rembrandt in a broker's shop. His portraits and genre pictures were very popular; but the irregularity of his life and his eccentricities prevented his attaining the eminence which he might otherwise have done. He painted many pictures of women playing and singing, and was admitted to the Academy at Paris in 1705, but he left it in disgust at the mediocre pictures of the other associates, and took his picture to the Academy of St. Luke, where he was admitted on payment in 1709. He died in Paris in 1740. The Louvre contains a portrait of himself, a 'Toper,' a 'Female Pilgrim,' and two portraits of young soldiers. In the Kunsthalle in Carlsruhe there are two half-length portraits of women; in the Städel Institute at Frankfort, the portrait of a young man; in the Avignon Museum, three portraits of ladies; in the Dulwich Gallery, a portrait of a lady; in the Dresden Gallery, a 'Boy blowing a whistle'; and in the Bordeaux Museum, a 'Monk,' a 'Young Pilgrim,' and an 'Instrument Player.'

GRINGONNEUR, JACQUEMIN, a French miniature painter, is known to have flourished from 1392 to 1420, and to have executed various games of cards for Charles VI. The National Library at Paris possesses seventeen cards belonging to one of these games. The picture at Versailles of the family of Jean Juvenal des Ursins, who died in 1431, is attributed to him.

GRISOLFI, GIOVANNI. See GHISOLFI.

GRISONI, GIUSEPPE, was born at Florence about the year 1700, and was a scholar of Tommaso Redi. The rising merit of the disciple is said to have occasioned so much jealousy and uneasiness in the master, that it shortened his life. He painted historical subjects and portraits; but particularly excelled in the latter, of which his own portrait, in the Gallery at Florence, is a fine specimen. He died in 1769.

GROBON, MICHEL, a French genre and landscape painter and engraver, was born at Lyons in 1770, and studied painting under Prud'hon, and engraving under J. J. de Boissieu. His works are much in the style of the old painters of the Netherlands, and he also etched, in the manner of his master, a plate of 'The Interior of a Forest.' He died at Lyons in 1853.

GROEGER, FRIEDRICH CARL, a portrait painter and lithographer, was born at Ploen, in Holstein, in 1766. He was a self-taught artist, and settled down to work in Hamburg, where he died in 1838. In the Dresden Gallery is his own portrait.

GROENENDAEL, CAMILLE, a Belgian historical and portrait painter, was born at Lierre in 1785, and after studying at the Antwerp Academy and in Paris he returned to his own country in 1814 an accomplished artist, and died at Antwerp in 1834. His portraits are considered his best works. Those of M. and Mme. van Donick are in the Antwerp Gallery.

GROENEWEGEN, GERRIT, a painter and etcher, was born at Rotterdam in 1754, and studied under Muys. He became noted for his pictures of ships and marine views, and died at Rotterdam in 1826. His works are rare, but eighteen plates of Dutch marine views, etched in Bakhuizen's manner, are known to be by him, as also twelve of Dutch costumes.

GROENSVELD, JOHAN. See GRONSVELT.

GROGAN, NATHANIEL, an Irish landscape painter, born at Cork about the middle of the 18th century, was originally a wood turner, and also served in the army during the American war. On his return to Cork he taught drawing, and endeavoured to gain a living by art. He engraved a set of views in the south of Ireland, and died at Cork about 1807. His best known works are, 'An Irish Fair,' and 'An Irish Wake.'

GROGNARD, ALEXIS, a French portrait painter, was born at Lyons in 1765, and died in the same city in 1840. He was a pupil of Vien, and director of the school of Fine-Arts at Lyons.

GROISEILLIEZ, MARCELIN DE, a French landscape painter and etcher, born in Paris in 1837, studied under Boyer and Pasini, and became skilful in the delineation of southern landscapes. He died in Paris in 1880. Among his paintings are:

A Morning on the Banks of the Sédelle.
The Banks of the Gardon.
The Beach at St. Malo.
The Plain of Samois, near Fontainebleau.

He also etched, 'Recollections of Beuzeval.'

GRONIGIUS, GERHARD, was a Dutch engraver of the middle of the 16th century, whom Strutt mentions as having etched ten plates, emblematical of the 'Life of Man,' from ten to a hundred years. The drawing is incorrect, and the outline hard; but they are not devoid of merit.

GRÖNINGEN, GIOVANNI DI. See SCHWARTZ, HANS.

GRÖNLAND, THEUDE, a painter of landscapes and still-life, was born at Altona in 1817. He went to the Academy in Copenhagen in 1833, and then resided three years in Italy, three years in England, and twenty-five years in Paris. From 1868 he lived at Berlin, where he collected many students around him, and died in 1876.

GRONSVELT, JOHAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at the Hague about the year 1650. He etched several views and landscapes, after Berchem, Van Goyen, Lingelbach, and others; and engraved some historical subjects and portraits. The following are his principal prints:

Dorothy, Countess of Sunderland; after Van Dyck.

A Girl with a Cat; after Abraham Bloemaert.

A Man sleeping on a Barrel; after Brouwer.

The Adoration of the Magi; after Paolo Veronese.

Christ before Pilate; after A. Schiavone.

A set of six Landscapes; after Berchem.

A set of four Landscapes; after the same.

A set of twelve Oriental and Italian Harbours; after J. Lingelbach.

Six Dutch Landscapes; after Verboom.

Cows; after A. van de Velde.

GROOMBRIDGE, WILLIAM, a water-colour painter, practised in the latter part of the 18th century. He painted landscapes and moonlight scenes with cattle and figures.

GROOS, GERHARD and GEORG DE. See DE GROOS.

GROOT, JAN DE. See DE GROOT.

GROPIUS, KARL WILHELM, a decorative painter, was born at Brunswick in 1793, but went when young to Berlin and painted for the exhibitions of his father, after which he travelled through Germany and Switzerland, and made himself acquainted in Paris with the arrangement of Daguerre's diorama. Next he travelled in Italy and Greece, and made numerous landscape and architectural sketches. After his return he opened, in 1827, a diorama in Berlin in connection with a permanent exhibition of paintings. He was at the same period appointed court theatrical painter, in which office he produced some superior decorations from the designs of Schinkel. He was considered the first wit in Berlin, where he died in 1870.

GROS, ANTOINE JEAN, Baron, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris, March 16th, 1771. His early surroundings were artistic, for his father, Jean Antoine Gros, was a miniature painter, and his mother drew in crayons. In such an atmosphere, it is not surprising that his inclination to art was soon developed. In 1785 he commenced to study seriously by becoming a pupil of David, and in 1792 he competed unsuccessfully for the 'prix de Rome.' His desire to visit Italy was not, however, to be frustrated. Notwithstanding the death of his father, and the want of means, he resolutely overcame all obstacles, and, having obtained a passport through David, arrived at Geneva in 1793. He devoted himself assiduously to study, and was fortunate in obtaining good introductions. He at length, in 1801, attracted the notice of Bonaparte, then in command of the French army in Italy, by his picture of 'Bonaparte at the Battle of Arcola.' From him he received an honorary staff appointment, and he was also employed in the collection of works of art for the adornment of the French galleries. Compelled to quit Milan by the reverses to the French arms, he took refuge in Genoa, and in the siege of that city he underwent severe hardships. On his return to Paris in 1801, he commenced the series of works on which his fame rests:—'Bonaparte visiting the Plague-stricken at Jaffa' (1804); 'The Battle of Aboukir' (1806); 'Napoleon at Eylau' (1808); 'The Battle of the Pyramids' (1810); 'Francis I. and Charles V. at St. Denis' (1812). On the Restoration, Gros—ever faithful to the traditions of the Classic School, and to his master David—took over the atelier of the latter, and was much occupied in instruction: more than four hundred pupils passed through his studio. He also endeavoured to obtain the recall of his master from banishment, and had a medal struck in his honour, which he took to Brussels and presented to him. Gros did not, however, lack under the Bourbons the patronage he had received under the Empire. For several years he was much occupied with the pictures in the dome of the Panthéon, and honours and offices were freely bestowed on him, culminating in the title of Baron. But, though official approval of his works was not wanting, his art was violently and incessantly criticized by partisans of the Romantic School. These criticisms reached such a point on the appearance of his 'Hercules and Diomedes' in 1835, and, aggravated by the state of his health, had such an effect on him, that he committed suicide on June 26th in that year. His body was found in the Seine, near Meudon, and was buried in Père-la-Chaise, Paul Delaroche and others pronouncing funeral orations over his grave. Although Gros was in one sense always a strict adherent to the canons of classicism, yet he was one of the first of David's pupils to abandon classic and mythologic scenes. It has been aptly remarked that he painted classic forms underneath modern costume. His style is bold and full of movement, and his colouring, though not unfrequently exaggerated, is a great improvement on the coldness of the founders of the Classic School. The following are some of Gros's principal works:

Besançon.	Museum.	Girl bathing. 1791.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Embarkation of the Duchess of Angoulême. 1816.

GROSE, FRANCIS, a topographical draughtsman, was born in 1731 at Richmond, in Surrey, where his father was a jeweller. He was of independent means, and devoted to antiquarian pursuits, on which he published several learned works. He occasionally exhibited tinted drawings of ruins, &c., at the Royal Academy. In one of his visits to Scotland, he became 'The chiel amang ye taking notes' of Burns. He died at Dublin in 1791.

GROSNIER, Mlle., a French lady, is mentioned by Basan as the engraver of several plates; but they are wholly unknown.

GROTEFEND, ADOLPH, a miniature painter, was born at Klausthal in Hanover, in 1812. He for a time studied law at Göttingen University, but his love for art caused him in 1836 to proceed to Munich to fit himself for a portrait painter. In this line he was becoming conspicuously successful, when ill-health drove him in 1846 to Italy, and he died at Florence in the following year.

GROTH, —, a German painter, flourished in England in the reign of George II. He painted in water-colours and enamel, but was not very proficient.

GROUX, CHARLES CORNEILLE AUGUSTE DE, (or DEGROUX,) a Belgian genre and historical painter, was born at Commines in France in 1826, and studied at the Brussels Academy under Navez. He at first produced pictures from popular life, but afterwards took to historical subjects, in which he was less successful, and he finally returned to his former department. He decorated the market-place of Ypres. His death occurred at Brussels in 1870. Among his paintings are:

Ash Wednesday.
Grace before Meals. (Brussels Gallery.)
The Doctor's Visit.
The Death of Charles V.
The Citizens of Calais before Edward III.

GROZER, JOSEPH, a mezzotint engraver, was born about 1755, and probably died before 1799. He practised in London, and amongst his works are:

Shepherds with a Lamb; after Sir J. Reynolds. 1784.
Master Braddyll; after the same. 1786.
Mrs. Mackenzie of Seaforth; after the same. 1787.
Innocence; after the same. 1788.
William, Earl Fitzwilliam; after the same. 1786.
Lady St. Asaph and Child; after the same. 1792.
Miss Johnson, dancing; after the same. 1792.
James, Earl of Cardigan; after Romney. 1792.
Lady Charlotte Legge; after the same. 1799.
The Duke and Duchess of York; after Singleton. 1797.
Robert, Lord Hobart; after Sir Thomas Lawrence. 1796.

GRUND, JOHANN JAKOB NORBERT, a German painter and author, was born at Gunzenhausen, in Anspach, in 1755. He originally intended to become a Jesuit, but afterwards devoted himself to miniature painting. He subsequently went to Italy, and was appointed a professor in the Academy at Florence. He published in 1789, 'An Artistic Tour to Rome,' and in 1810, 'The Painting of the Greeks.' He died about 1815.

GRUND, NORBERT, a German painter of landscapes, cattle, fairs, battles, &c., born at Prague in 1714, was the son of a painter, and studied at the Vienna Academy under Ferg. He was of a vagrant nature, and in his latter years his carelessness and improvidence reduced him to want. He died at Prague in 1767. In the Dresden Gallery are two pictures, 'Country Dances,' and 'A Gathering at a Table in a Garden.'

GRUNDY, THOMAS LEEMING, a line-engraver, was born at Bolton in 1808. He was at first apprenticed to a writing engraver, and then came to London, where he was employed on the Annals then in fashion. He afterwards worked for Doo and Goodall, and died in London in 1841.

GRÜNER, WILHELM HEINRICH LUDWIG, a German line-engraver, was born at Dresden in 1801. He commenced life as a scene-painter, but afterwards studied engraving under Ephraim Gottlieb Krüger in Dresden, and from 1826 to 1836 in Milan, under Longhi and Anderloni. He resided in Rome from 1837 to 1841, when he came to England, and remained here until 1856, in which year he was made director of the Cabinet of Engravings at Dresden, where he died in 1882. Besides his 'Decorations of the Garden Pavilion at Buckingham Palace,' 1846, and other important works, he engraved many separate plates, especially after the works of Raphael and Overbeck, by which he gained much reputation. Among his chief works are:

Portrait of Giulio de' Medici (?); after Raphael. 1835.
The Vision of a Knight; after the same.

La Fornarina; after the same.

Christ's Agony in the Garden; after the same. 1849.

The Ansidei Madonna; after the same. 1856.

The Conversion of Saul; after the same. 1864. (Arundel Society.)

Christ, the Good Shepherd; after Overbeck.

Hagar in the Wilderness; after the same.

Moses defending the Daughters of Jethro; after the same.

GRÜNEWALD, E., was an engraver of Darmstadt, who studied under Frommel, and produced some praiseworthy landscape plates about 1825.

GRÜNEWALD, HANS, was the brother of Matthäus Grünewald, but nothing authentic is known of him. A portrait of Maximilian I., in the Vienna Gallery, is ascribed to him.

GRÜNEWALD, MATTHÄUS, who was born probably in Frankfort, settled in Aschaffenburg, where he was employed by the Archbishop Albrecht of Mayence. He seems to have died about the year 1530, and to have been, after Dürer and Holbein, the greatest German painter of the period, though but little of his life is known. His most important work is an altar-piece of six panels, which was executed for the church of SS. Maurice and Mary Magdalene at Halle, but afterwards transferred to the church of SS. Peter and Alexander at Aschaffenburg. It is now in the Munich Gallery. The centre picture represents the 'Conversion of St. Maurice by St. Erasmus,' and the wings contain the figures of St. Lazarus, St. Mary Magdalene, St. Martha, St. Chrysostom, and St. Valentinian.

There is another work in the church of Our Lady at Halle, of which the centre picture, representing the 'Virgin in Glory,' the inner sides, and perhaps the outer sides, are assigned to Grünewald. A 'Rosary' in the chapel of St. Anthony in the cathedral of Bamberg, and the wings of altar-pieces at Heilsbronn in Franconia, and at Annaberg in Saxony, are also assigned to this master.

GRUSS, JOHANN, an historical painter, born early in the 19th century, was a native of Bohemia. Among his works are a 'Virgin and Child,' a 'Sleeping Jesus,' and 'St. Aloysius.' He died at Vienna in 1872.

GRÜTZNER, EDUARD, born at Great Carlowitz in Silesia in 1846, was the son of a peasant. He was destined for the church, but Hirschberg, an architect of Munich, induced him in 1864 to repair to that city, where his first work was a ceiling in a private house. He showed great humour in his pictures, 'The Cloister Cellar,' 'Wine Tasting,' 'Sleepless Nights,' and especially in his representation of Falstaff and other characters in the 'Merry Wives of Windsor.' He died in 1878.

GRYEF, ANTON. See GRIEF.

GRYPMOED, GEERLIG, born at Zwolle in 1760, learned the art of drawing from A. D. Prudhomme. He afterwards went to Amsterdam, where he studied under H. Meyer and Troost van Groenendoele, who employed him largely in painting curtains. He also painted landscapes. He died in 1788.

GSELL, MARIA DOROTHEA HENRICA, the daughter of Johann Andreas Graff and Maria Sibylla Merian, was born at Nuremberg in 1678. She painted flowers and insects, and was acquainted with Hebrew. She married the portrait and still-life painter Gsell, and accompanied him to St. Petersburg, where they both worked for the Academy of Sciences, and where she died in 1745.

GUADALUPE, PEDRO FERNANDEZ DE. See FERNANDEZ.

GUALDO, MATTEO DA, a painter of the Umbrian school, was born at Gualdo Tadini, but the dates of his birth and death are alike unknown. A genuine fresco by him is at Santa Maria della Circa, near Sigillo; it represents a 'Madonna and Child,' with a dog in the arms of the latter, also a 'Lady of Mercy.' In SS. Antonio e Jacopo of Assisi, are some frescoes by him, although now very much damaged; they include a 'Madonna,' dated 1468. These works are executed somewhat in the style of Benozzo Gozzoli.

GUALDORP, GORTZIUS. See GELDORP.

GUARANA, JACOPO, (or incorrectly VARANA,) was a painter of the Venetian school, who was born at Verona in 1727, and became a pupil of Sebastiano Ricci, G. B. Tiepolo, and especially of Carlo Cignani. The Academy of Copenhagen offered him the position of first painter, and the Empress of Russia also invited him to her court from her admiration of the work he painted for her; but he could not be induced to leave his own country. He died at Venice in 1808, having been a member of the Academies of Venice, Florence, and Bologna. The following are among his paintings, the first two being in oil, the others in fresco:

The Sacrifice of Iphigenia. (Painted for the Empress of Russia.)

The Heart of Jesus. (San Paolo, Venice.)

The Virtues. (Patriarch's Palace, Venice.)

St. Mark. (Doge's Palace, Venice.)

Apotheosis of St. Martin. (San Martino, Venice.)

The Dome of San Vitale, Ravenna.

He also etched several plates, and supplied the designs for the engravings in the work entitled 'Oracoli della Religione pagana,' published at Venice in 1792. His son, VINCENZO GUARANA, who was born at Venice in 1750, and died there in 1815, painted in the style of his father, but did not equal him.

GUARDI, FRANCESCO, a Venetian painter, was born at Venice in 1712, and died there in 1793. He was a scholar of Canaletto, and excelled in architectural views of Venice, but his works are less accurate in perspective and details than are those of his master. The following pictures by him are in the chief European galleries:

Bergamo.	Academy.	Three Views in Venice.
Berlin.	Gallery.	View on the Grand Canal, Venice.
"	"	Two Views of San Michele, Venice.
"	"	View on the Lagoons.
Brussels.	Gallery.	Interior of San Marco at Venice.

GUARDOLINO, IL. See NATALI.

GUARIENTI, PIETRO, a painter of Verona, was born before 1700. He was a pupil of Crespi, but followed the study of the great masters of the various countries in which he travelled, seeking to acquire the faculty of painting in every style. He settled in Dresden, and died there before 1769.

GUARIENTO, a painter of Padua, was living in the 14th century, and is known to have been amongst the first artists employed to decorate the Great Hall of Council at Venice in 1365. His work there was a 'Paradise,' and incidents from the war of Spoleto. These paintings were effaced to make room for the successive designs of Gentile Bellini and of Titian. In the Eremitani at Padua may still be seen many frescoes by this artist representing the Life and Passion of Christ, the life of St. Augustine, and several subjects from the Old Testament. According to Brandeolese, Guariento flourished about 1360 at Padua, and was buried there in the church of San Bernardino. He died before 1378. There are preserved of his works:

Bassano.	Pinacoteca.	A Crucifixion, with the Virgin and Saints.
Padua.	Academy.	Six portions of frescoes, with subjects from the Old Testament.

GUARINO, FRANCESCO, who was born at Solofra, near Naples, in 1612, was a pupil of Massimo Stanzioni. He painted in the church of his native town, and died at Gravina in 1651. In the Naples Museum there is by him a picture of 'Susanna.'

GUASTA, BENVENUTO and GIROLAMO DEL. See DEL GUASTA.

GUBBIO, ODERIGI DA, was a miniature painter, who is said to have been born at Gubbio, near Perugia, in 1240. No undoubted work by him is now in existence, although some miniatures contained in two Missals of the Virgin and of St. George, in the Archivio de' Canonici di San Pietro, at Rome, are strongly supposed to be by him. He painted at Gubbio in 1264, at Bologna in 1268, and in Rome in 1295. According to Vasari, he made the acquaintance of Giotto in Rome, and died there in 1299. He has been mentioned with much praise by Dante, who calls him the 'Glory of Agobbio,' and represents him as expiating in Purgatory the pride with which his skill had inspired him.

GUBITZ, FRIEDRICH WILHELM, a wood engraver, was born at Leipsic in 1786, and was a member of the Academy of Berlin, where he died in 1870. The cuts in his 'Volkskalender,' issued from 1835 to 1869, are much admired, as is also his portrait of the Saviour, after Lucas Cranach. He also published some 'Plays and Poems,' a newspaper called 'Der Gesellschafter,' and a volume entitled 'Occurrences.'

GUCCIO DEL SERO. See AGHINETTI.

GUCHT, VAN DER. See VAN DER GUCHT.

GUDIN, JEAN ANTOINE THÉODORE, a French marine painter, was born in Paris in 1802. He attended for some time the atelier of Girodet-Trioson, but left it and enrolled himself in the Romantic School, in company with Géricault and Delacroix. He restricted himself entirely to landscapes and marine subjects. His first success dated from about the year 1822, and in 1827 he produced 'The Burning of the "Kent," East Indiaman,' and 'The Return of the Fishermen,' two of his best pictures. Gudin's works are remarkable for vigorous, but, too generally, exaggerated, treatment. He painted between the years 1838 and 1848 a series of ninety marine subjects for the Galleries at Versailles, where many of them still are. They record the achievements of the French navy in Algeria, whither Gudin was sent by Louis Philippe. Early in life he travelled in the East, in Russia, and in Germany, but he spent much of the latter part of his life in Scotland. He also practised the arts of etching and lithography. He died at Boulogne near Paris, in 1880. Among his best works are:

The Hurricane of the 7th of January, 1831, in the Roadstead of Algiers. 1835.

Coast Scene. (Brussels Gallery.)

Breton Coast. 1845. (Berlin National Gallery.)

A Smuggler's Felucca. 1845. (The same.)

The Ship in Distress.

Shipwreck on the Coast of Genoa. (Leipsic Museum.)

View of Havre. (Avignon Museum.)

Explosion of the Emperor's Fort at Algiers.

View of Constantinople, taken from Pera.

The Boarding of the English galeot 'Hazard' by the 'Courier.'

Devotion of Captain Desse. (Bordeaux Museum.)

GUDMUNDSSON, SIGURD, an Icelandic painter, born at the farm of Helluland in 1833, entered the Copenhagen Academy in 1849, and on his return to Iceland in 1858, produced almost a revolution in the manners and costumes of the island. He died at Reykiavik in 1874.

GUÉ, JULIEN MICHEL, a French landscape and historical painter, born in St. Domingo in 1789, was a pupil of David and of Lacour. The Bordeaux Museum possesses the 'Death of Patroclus,' and there are other works by this artist at Versailles, Compiègne, and Rheims. He died in Paris in 1843.

GUELARD, B., a French painter and etcher, is mentioned by Basan as the engraver of several plates after Oudry, J. F. van Bloemen, &c. He lived in Paris about 1730.

GUÉRARD, EUGÈNE CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French landscape painter and lithographer, was born at Nancy in 1821. He was a pupil of Paul Delaroche and of Dieudonné Pierre of Nancy, in which city he died in 1866.

GUERARDS, MARC. See GEERARTS.

GUERARDS, N., a French engraver, who flourished about the year 1700, executed the plates for a work entitled 'Les Edifices antiques de Rome,' published at Paris in 1682, after the designs of A. Des Godets, who engraved the frontispiece. He also engraved the frontispiece to a book of ornaments, published by Pierre Bourdon in 1703; and a small plate of 'Soldiers marching,' in imitation of Callot.

GUERCINO. See BARBIERI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO.

GUÉRIN, CHRISTOPHE, a draughtsman and engraver, born at Strassburg in 1758, was a pupil of Jeulain and P. Müller. He became conservator of the Museum, and a Professor of the School of Design at Strassburg. He died in 1831. His chief works are:

Cupid disarmed; after Correggio.
The Dance of the Muses; after Giulio Romano.
The Angel leading Tobit; after Raphael.
Two Landscapes; after De Louthembourg.

GUÉRIN, FRANÇOIS, a French historical and genre painter, was a native of Paris. He exhibited first at the Academy of St. Luke in 1751, and became an Academician in 1761, his reception work being 'A Market.' He continued to exhibit at the Salon until 1783, but in 1791 he was residing in Strassburg, where he died, but in what year is not known.

GUERIN, GABRIEL CHRISTOPHE, a son of Christophe Guérin, was born at Kehl in 1790. He was a pupil of Regnault, and in 1817 received the gold medal for his 'Death of Polynices.' He painted a 'Burial of Christ' for the church of St. Francis of Assisi in Paris, and he succeeded his father as conservator of the Museum, and Professor of the School of Design at Strassburg. He died at Hornbach in Bavaria in 1846.

GUERIN, JEAN, a miniature and water-colour painter, born at Strassburg in 1760, was a brother of Christophe Guérin. He went to Paris, where he became a pupil of Regnault, and soon gained a reputation, as well as the protection of Queen Marie Antoinette, whose cause he espoused so warmly as to cause him to be banished from Paris. He returned to that city at the beginning of the Consulate, and devoted himself to miniature painting. He died at Obernay in 1836.

GUÉRIN, JEAN BAPTISTE, the second son of Christophe Guérin, was born at Strassburg in 1798. He was a pupil of his father and of Regnault, and practised in his native city, but the year of his death is not recorded.

GUÉRIN, PAULIN JEAN BAPTISTE, a French portrait and historical painter, born at Toulon in 608

1783, was the son of a blacksmith, which trade he at first followed, but showing a disposition for art he went to Paris, where he entered the studio of Vincent, and supported himself with the greatest difficulty, till he gained a reputation by his picture of 'Cain after the death of Abel.' He died in Paris in 1855. Among his other works are:

The Dead Christ in the Lap of the Virgin. 1817.
Anchises and Venus. 1822.
Adam and Eve driven out of Paradise. 1827.
Christ crucified. 1834.
Ulysses fighting with Neptune. 1824.
Anne of Austria, Regent of France, with her two sons,
Louis XIV. and the Duke of Orleans.
Portrait of Louis XVIII., full-length.
Portrait of Charles X., full-length.

His son and pupil, FÉLIX PIERRE ANTOINE GUÉRIN, who was born in Paris in 1825, painted portraits, and died in Paris in 1865.

GUÉRIN, PHILIBERT JEAN PIERRE, a French landscape painter, born at Marseilles in 1805, was a pupil of Paulin Guérin. He exhibited at the Salon from 1824 to 1844, and died in Paris in 1846.

GUÉRIN, PIERRE NARCISSE, Baron, a French historical painter, was born in Paris on the 13th March, 1774. In his early years he showed but little inclination to art, and it was owing to his parents that he entered the studio of Brenet. His progress, however, was small, until he became the pupil of Regnault. With this master he found his vocation, and at the competition of 1797 he obtained one of the three prizes. The disturbed state of Europe did not at once permit of his pursuing his studies at Rome, and while waiting at Paris he produced his 'Return of Marcus Sextus,' which, on being exhibited in 1799, was crowned by his brother artists. On arriving at Rome, his weak health soon compelled him to remove to Naples, where he remained about a year. On his return to Paris, he resumed his studies with such success that in 1803, while still a pupil, he received the cross of the Legion of Honour. He was received into the Institute on the return of the Bourbons in 1815, and in 1816 was appointed director of the French School at Rome, but his health did not allow him to accept the appointment. At the next vacancy he was again offered the post, which he accepted, though the state of his health allowed him only to attend to the duties of his office, and prevented his applying himself to any of his own works during his stay in Rome. On his return to Paris in 1829, he was created a Baron, and he devoted himself for the next two or three years to his own art. Contrary to the advice of his physicians and friends, he accompanied Horace Vernet to Rome, where he died on the 16th July, 1833, and was buried in the church of the Trinità dei Monti. Guérin's art reached its highest point in the 'Marcus Sextus.' In his later works he lost the vigour which characterized his earlier productions, and affected a spurious energy, which has—not without reason—been called theatrical. This may in some degree have arisen from his custom of sketching the actors at the Théâtre Français. The following is a list of Guérin's chief works:

Angers.	Museum.	Death of Priam. (Sketch.)
		St. Louis. (Sketch.)
Avignon.	Museum.	Portrait of Charles X.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Pyrrhus and Andromache. (A small replica of the Louvre picture.)

Compiègne. Palace.	St. Geneviève.
Hampton Court. Pal.	Portrait of Louis XVIII.
Paris. Louvre.	The Return of Marcus Sextus. 1799.
" "	Offering to Æsculapius. 1802.
" "	Hippolytus and Phædra. 1802.
" "	Pyrrhus and Andromache. 1810.
" "	Æneas and Dido. 1813.
" "	Clytemnestra. 1817.
Rennes. Museum.	Ulysses.
Valenciennes. Mus.	Death of Marshal Lannes.
Versailles. Gallery.	The Revolt of Cairo. O.J.D.

GUERINI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, (or GUERRIERI,) a native of Fossombrone, in the Roman state, flourished about the year 1650. It is not said under whom he studied, but he painted historical pictures in the style of Caravaggio and Guercino. Lanzi mentions several of his works in very favourable terms, particularly a picture in the Filippini at Fano, of 'St. Charles contemplating the Mysteries of the Passion,' with two laterals, representing subjects from the life of that saint. There are many of his paintings in his native town, and a 'St. Sebastian cured by St. Irene' particularly is attributed to him. He had the peculiar taste to introduce into each of his pictures the portrait of one of his lady-loves.

GUERNIER, DU. See DU GUERNIER.

GUERNIER, RENÉ, was probably a native of France. According to Florent Le Comte he excelled in engraving ornaments and grotesque figures.

GUEROULT, GUILLAUME, is mentioned by Strutt as the engraver of a set of woodcuts for a Bible, published at Paris in 1564, and dedicated to Catharine de' Medici.

GUERRA, CRISTOFORO. See CHRIEGER.

GUERRA, GIOSEFFO, (or QUERRA,) a painter of Venice, was one of the best scholars of Solimena. He painted numerous large historical pictures for churches and monasteries in the kingdom of Naples, but having resorted to the trick of copying paintings disintombed at Herculaneum, and selling them as originals, he was detected and compelled to flee to Rome, where he died in 1761.

GUERRA, GIOVANNI, a painter, engraver, and architect, was born at Modena in 1544, and went in his eighteenth year to Rome, where he painted, in conjunction with Cesare Nebbia, a large part of the pictures commissioned by Pope Sixtus V. He then for some time devoted himself to trade, and when he had thereby lost all his means he returned to art, and brought out a series of forty-eight plates entitled 'Varie Acconciature di Teste usate da nobilissime Dame in diverse Città di Italia.' He also prepared the model for the Scala Santa in Rome, and the designs for several churches in Modena, as well as a great number of drawings from subjects in the Old and New Testaments, and from Greek and Roman history, in readiness for engraving. He died at Rome in 1618.

GUERRIERI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO. See GUERINI.

GUERRINI, GIACOMO, was born at Cremona in 1718, and while quite young painted 'The Beheading of St. John the Baptist' for the Oratory of St. Jerome in his native city. He afterwards executed for the church of Sant' Agostino, 'The Meeting of St. Joachim and St. Anna' and 'The Presentation in the Temple.' Some of the churches in Milan also possess paintings by him. He died in 1793.

GUERTIÈRE, FRANÇOIS DE LA. See DE LA GUERTIÈRE.

GUEST, DOUGLAS, an English historical and portrait painter, practised in the early part of the 19th century. He studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, and in 1805 gained the gold medal for his 'Bearing the dead body of Patroclus to the Camp, Achilles's Grief.' He occasionally exhibited at the Academy from 1803 to 1817, and again in 1834 and 1838. He painted the 'Transfiguration,' an altar-piece for the church of St. Thomas, Salisbury, and in 1829 published a work on the decline of historical painting.

GUEVARA, FELIPE DE, was an amateur painter, who acquired the friendship of Titian when he accompanied the Emperor Charles V. to Bologna to receive the imperial crown from Clement VII. He distinguished himself as a cavalry officer in the expedition to Tunis in 1535, and was the author of 'Commentaries on Painting,' published in 1788. He died at Madrid in 1563.

GUEVARA, JUAN NIÑO DE, born at Madrid in 1632, was the son of a captain of the guards of the Viceroy of Aragon, under whose patronage he was placed as a disciple of Miguel Manrique, a Fleming, who had been educated in the school of Rubens. He afterwards studied at Madrid, under Alonso Cano, and became a very reputable artist, adopting a style that partook of the character of both his masters, uniting with the grandeur and correctness of Alonso Cano the splendid and brilliant colouring of the head of the Flemish School. His principal works are at Malaga, Granada, and Cordova. In the church of La Caridad at Malaga, is a fine picture of 'The Triumph of the Cross'; and in the cathedral, 'The Ascension of Christ,' and 'The Assumption of the Virgin.' At Cordova, in the cloister of the Augustines, there are some pictures of the life of the founder of the order, and several portraits, which are compared by Palomino to those of Van Dyck. He died at Malaga in 1698.

GUGLIELMI, GREGORIO, a painter born at Rome in 1714, was a pupil of Conca; but he was little known in his native city on account of his having gone when young to Vienna, Dresden, and St. Petersburg. He executed a few frescoes in the hospital of Santo Spirito at Rome, but others that gained more attention in the cities named above, as well as at Augsburg and in the castle of Schönbrunn. His works in oil were feeble. He died at St. Petersburg in 1773.

GUIBAL, NICOLAS, a painter and architect, born at Lunéville in 1725, was the son of Barthélemy Guibal, a sculptor. He worked at first at sculpture under his father, but afterwards abandoned it for painting, and studied under Claude Charles at Nancy, but came in 1741 to Paris, and then studied under Natoire. In 1745 he was made a pensioner of the Academy, and won the second prize. In 1749 he proceeded to Stuttgart, and in 1752 Duke Charles Eugene sent him to Rome with a commission to execute for him four paintings. He there improved himself under Rafael Mengs, so that on his return in 1755 he was appointed by the duke first court painter and architect, professor of painting, and director of the picture gallery. He was made an Academician in 1784, on the completion of his 'Aurora' on the ceiling of the gallery of Apollo in the Louvre, and died at Stuttgart in the same year. His best work is the ceiling above the marble staircase in the Palace at Stuttgart. Other paintings by him are in the bath-house at Schwetzingen, in the former dining-hall of the Academy (now the king's private library), in the halls at Hohenheim and Monrepos, in the Ordenskapelle of Ludwigsburg Castle, and in the churches of Gmund, Zwiefalten, and Solothurn. Guibal wrote the 'Éloge de Mengs' (1780), and 'Éloge de Nicolas Poussin' (1783).

GUICHARD, JOSEPH ALEXANDRE, a French marine painter, born at Marseilles about 1830, was a pupil of Isabey and Durand-Brager. He died in his native city in 1877. Amongst his works are:

- Souvenir of Villafranca. 1866.
- The Fisherman's Return. 1869.
- Sunrise at the Martigues. 1870.
- The Marriage of Camacho.

GUIDI, RAFFAELLO, an Italian engraver, was born at Florence in 1540, and died probably about 1613. His plates are executed entirely with the graver, which he handled in a masterly manner, and from his style it would appear that he was instructed by Cornelis Cort or Agostino Carracci. The following are his principal prints:

- David playing on the Harp; after Giuseppe Cesari.
- Dædalus and Icarus; after the same.
- The Crucifixion; after Christoph Schnoartz.
- The Entombment of Christ; after F. Barocci.
- Aeneas carrying his father Anchises; after the same.
- Jupiter; after Polidoro da Caravaggio.
- Vulcan; after the same.
- The Madonna seated, distributing Rose Garlands to various Ecclesiastical Orders.

GUIDI, TOMMASO, commonly called MASACCIO, the son of the notary Ser Giovanni di Simone Guidi, was born at Castel San Giovanni di Valdarno, in 1401, and is thought by some to have studied under Masolino. That he was precocious in the display of his talent, is shown by the fact that about 1417 he went to Rome, where he received a commission from Cardinal San Clemente to decorate a chapel that still bears his name. Masaccio painted there a 'Crucifixion,' and different scenes drawn from the lives of St. Catharine and St. Clement. When at Rome he painted several pictures, amongst others one which represented 'Pope Martin V. with the Emperor Sigismund and the Virgin, between four Saints,' which was, in after years, much admired by Michelangelo. In 1421 he was received into the Guild of the Speziali at Florence, and twice painted the portrait of Giovanni di Bicci de' Medici, who returned to power in Florence in 1420. In the interval extending from 1423 to 1428, he adorned the Brancacci Chapel in the Carmine with frescoes, twelve in number, which represent scenes drawn from the Bible, and from the life of St. Peter; these prove his great skill as an artist, and also that he had really studied the sister arts of architecture and sculpture. He died at Rome about 1428, at the early age of twenty-six. Masaccio's paintings are all far in advance of his time, and foreshadow the rules which afterwards guided art in the 16th century. Of his other paintings and frescoes, not previously mentioned, there remain at the Carmine a portion of a design in the cloisters, representing part of a procession, that has recently been recovered from beneath the whitewash. The galleries of Berlin, Munich, and Modena possess paintings attributed to him, and the National Gallery has a portrait considered to be that of Masaccio himself.

GUIDO, ASCANIO, an Italian engraver, flourished about the year 1567. There is a print by him of the 'Last Judgment,' after Michelangelo, rather smaller than the plate engraved by Martino Rota, and not much inferior to it in merit. It is dated 1567, two years previous to that by Rota.

GUIDOBONO, BARTOLOMMEO, called 'Il Prete di Savona,' was born at Savona in 1654. His father, Giovanni Antonio Guidobono, who was majolica painter to the court of Savoy, taught him his own art. He then became a priest, (whence his sobriquet,) but his love of art caused him to relinquish that office. Having seen some pictures by Benedetto Castiglione, he copied them with so much exactness, that it was difficult to distinguish the reproductions from the originals. He afterwards visited Parma and Venice, studying the works of the best masters, and on settling at Genoa, he was much employed in that city. He particularly excelled in painting animals, flowers, and fruit; and he was no despicable designer of the figure, as he has shown in some fabulous subjects in the Palazzo Centurioni. Some of his best pictures are in the Palazzo Brignole Sale; among them that of 'Lot and his Daughters.' He died at Turin in 1709.

GUIDOLINO. See FIESOLE, GIOVANNI DA.

GUIDONE DA GHEZZO. See SIENA, GUIDO DA.

GUIDOTTI, PAOLO, called 'IL CAVALIERE BORGHESI,' was born at Lucca in 1569, and went when young, in the pontificate of Gregory XIII., to Rome, where he improved the instruction already received by studying the great works of art in that city. He was employed by Sixtus V. in several fresco works in the library of the Vatican, in the Scala Santa, and in the Palace of San Giovanni in Laterano. He distinguished himself as a sculptor as well as a painter; and for some productions in that art was honoured by Paul V. with the permission to take the name of 'Borghese,' and was made a knight of the order of Christ. He was also an architect, and in fact he boasted of the knowledge of fourteen arts; but in spite of all these he was reduced to great misery, and died in 1629 from a fall while attempting the additional art of flying. There are several of his works in the public edifices at Rome. In San Girolamo degli Schiavoni, is a picture of 'St. Matthew'; and in the cupola of Santa Maria de' Monti, the 'Assumption of the Virgin.'

GUIDUCCI, ANGELO, a landscape painter and etcher, lived at Rome about 1750. He engraved two portraits of Joseph II. of Austria, and others after Van Dyck, as well as two plates representing peasants.

GUIGNET, JEAN ADRIEN, a French historical and landscape painter, was born of French parentage, at Annecy in Savoy in 1816. Against his father's wishes he went to Paris, and studied under his brother, Jean Baptiste Guignet, and under Blondel; but it was not until after some years of uphill work that he succeeded in achieving a position. In style he inclined considerably to that of Decamps. He died in Paris in 1854. Amongst his works are:

- Moses exposed on the Nile. 1840.
- St. John the Baptist preaching. 1842.
- Salvator Rosa amongst the Brigands. 1844.
- Joseph explaining Pharaoh's Dream. 1845. (Rouen Museum.)
- Xerxes bewailing his Army. 1846.
- Don Quixote playing the Fool. 1848.
- Travellers surprised by a Bear.
- Hagar in the Desert.

Episode in the Retreat of the Ten Thousand.
The Defeat of Attila by Aetius.
Belshazzar's Feast.

GUIGNET, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French historical and portrait painter, born at Autun in 1810, was the brother of Jean Adrien Guignet, and studied under Regnault. He died at Viriville in 1857. Amongst his portraits are:

General Pajol.
Gilbert Louis Duprez, the tenor.
James Pradier, the sculptor.

GUIGOU, V., a French engraver, flourished about the year 1676. He engraved some bird's-eye views of châteaux and other buildings in France, which are executed in a neat but stiff style. He also engraved several portraits for books.

GUILLAIN, SIMON, a French sculptor, who for amusement practised etching, was born in Paris in 1581, and died in the same city in 1658. There are the following prints by him:

A set of twenty plates of the Life of St. James; after Annibale Carracci.

Eighty plates of the Ories of Bologna; after Annibale Carracci, engraved in conjunction with Alessandro Algardi.

GUILLAUME, Le Frère, known as 'Le Prieur,' and 'Il Prete Gallo,' was a French painter, who was born at Marseilles in 1475, and died at Arezzo in 1537. Being implicated in some criminal affair, he entered holy orders, and accompanied Frère Claude to Rome, and there assisted him in his works for Pope Julius II. He was afterwards employed and protected by Cardinal Silvio Passerini at Cortona, and he visited Florence, Castiglione, Perugia, and Arezzo, establishing himself in the last-mentioned town. He was one of the best glass painters in his time, and worked equally well in oil and fresco. Vasari was his pupil.

GUILLEBAULT, SIMON, a French historical painter, was born at Le Mans in 1636. He chiefly executed Scriptural subjects, among which was 'The Triumph of the Church,' painted for his reception at the Academy in 1687. He died at Le Mans in 1708.

GUILLEMARD, SOPHIE, a pupil of Regnault, was born in Paris in 1780, and from 1801 to 1819 exhibited at the Salon historical pictures, as well as some portraits and genre subjects; amongst them were 'Alcibiades and Glycerion,' and 'Joseph and Potiphar's Wife.' The date of her death is not recorded.

GUILLEMART, —, was an obscure French engraver, who was chiefly employed in engraving portraits for the booksellers. Among others is that of Setani, Abbé of St. Geneviève.

GUILLEMIN, ALEXANDRE MARIE, who was born in Paris in 1815, studied under Gros, and became a painter of genre subjects. He died at Bois-le-Roi, near Fontainebleau, in 1880. The following are a few of his works:

Huntsman and Milk-woman. 1844.
The old Sailor. 1845.
Sunday Morning. 1864.
La Trilla; souvenir of Upper Aragon. 1869.
Los Pordioseros; souvenir of Upper Navarre. 1877.
Sunday Morning in Brittany.
Women of the Pyrenees.

GUILLEMOT, ALEXANDRE CHARLES, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1786. He was a pupil of Allais and of David, and in 1808 obtained the 'prix de Rome' for his picture of 'Philip, the physician, discovering the cause of Antiochus's illness in his love for Stratonice.' In 1819, after his return from Rome, a first-class medal was awarded to Guillemot for his picture of 'Christ raising the Widow's Son at Nain.' His last important work was the 'Stoning of St. Stephen.' In the Palace at Compiègne is a picture of 'Mars surprising Rhea Sylvia.' He died in Paris in 1831.

GUILLOT, —, a French landscape painter, who flourished in the 17th century, was a pupil of Fouquières, and worked with considerable success under Sébastien Bourdon at the Tuileries.

GUILLO, VICENTE, a painter of the Valencian school, was born at Alcalá de Gilbert, about 1660, and at one time lived at Barcelona. The hospital of Santa Tecla at Tarragona possessed a good 'Adoration of the Kings,' dated 1690. He executed some frescoes in the Sagrario of his native town, in the hermitage of San Pablo at Albocacer, and in the church of San Juan del Mercado at Valencia, where he is said to have died in 1701 of disappointment at having been superseded by Palomino. AGUSTIN GUILLO, who does not appear to have been related to Vicente, contributed about the same time some indifferent frescoes to the same church, and to the Dominican convent at Valencia. The latter left a son, FLORENCIO GUILLO, a painter even feebler than himself.

GUINACCIA, DEODATO, born at Messina about the year 1510, became the best and most renowned pupil of Polidoro da Caravaggio, when he visited that city, after the sacking of Rome. After the death of Polidoro he was engaged to complete the fine picture of the 'Nativity,' in the church of Alto Basso, which was left unfinished by that master. In the church of the Pellegrini is a picture of Guinaccia's own composition, representing the 'Trinity,' and another of the 'Transfiguration' is in San Salvatore de' Greci. He founded a school which flourished for a long time in Messina, and many of its scholars attained celebrity.

GUIRRI, VICENTE, a native of Valencia, became a friar in the Augustine convent of that city in 1608, and devoted his time to prayer and penitence, and to the execution of devotional pictures within its walls, till 1640, when he died.

GUIRRO, FRANCISCO, a Spanish historical painter, was born at Barcelona in 1630, and died there in 1700. His principal work was a 'St. Monica,' in the convent of the Recollets, which places him in the first rank of the better Spanish artists.

GUISONI, FERMO, a native of Mantua, who worked between the years 1540 and 1568, was educated in the school of Giulio Romano. He became one of the favourite disciples of that great master, from whose cartoons he painted in the dome of the cathedral the 'Calling of St. Peter and St. Andrew to the Apostleship,' esteemed one of the finest compositions of Giulio. In the church of Sant' Andrea, there is a fine picture of his own composition, representing the 'Crucifixion.'

GUISONI, RINALDO, who was possibly a brother of Fermo Guisoni, and was a pupil of Giulio Romano, flourished at Mantua in the 16th century.

GUITARD, PEDRO, a Spanish painter, was born in Catalonia about 1540. In 1576—79, he executed six pictures in oil from the life of St. Peter, for the high altar of the church of San Pedro, at Reus.

GUIZZARDI, GIUSEPPE, an Italian painter, born at Bologna in 1779, made himself famous by a picture of 'Æsculapius,' which is now in the Museum of that city. He died at Bologna in 1867.

GULDENMUND, HANS, an old German engraver on wood, flourished at Nuremberg from about 1520 to 1540. His works are extremely numerous, more than 200 being known, of which the best are, 'The Triumphal Procession of Charles V. in 1537,' and a bust portrait of Hans Sachs. The first work which brought him into notice, and which appeared in 1526, was an emblematical print of 'The Course of the World,' in which Greed, as the companion of Tyranny, is flaying an Ass, which throws out its legs, and brings Dissimulation to the ground.

GULIELMUS, a painter, who flourished about 1138, worked in the cathedral of Sarzana, and also, it is believed, executed the figures upon the façade of that at Modena.

GULSTON, ELIZABETH, was an English amateur etcher in the beginning of the 19th century, who copied several of her father's collection of portraits at Ealing Grove, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1795 to 1801. She died before 1840.

GÜTLINGER, JOHANNES GUMPOLT, (GÜTLINGER, or GILTINGER), a painter of the 15th century, was probably born at Augsburg. Several altar-pieces by him are still in St. Ulrich's Church in that city. He was paid 400 florins for his work upon St. Michael's altar, which is a sufficient evidence of the value set upon his productions.

GUNDELACH, MATTHÄUS. See GONDOLACH.

GUNKEL, FRIEDRICH, a native of Cassel, painted historical subjects in the style of Cornelius, among which may be named the 'Battle of the Granicus.' He died by suicide at Rome in 1876.

GUNST, PIETER VAN, a Dutch line-engraver, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1667, and died in 1724. He worked entirely with the graver, and from the style of his prints, it is probable that he formed it upon that of the Drevets. His best plates are his portraits, and they form the larger part of his productions. His greatest work was a set of ten full-length portraits, after Van Dyck, of Charles I., his Queen, and some of the English nobility. Arnold Houbraken, the father of the celebrated engraver of that name, came to England to make the drawings from the pictures. Van Gunst also engraved a set of portraits for Larrey's 'History of England.' The following are his principal plates:

PORTRAITS AFTER VAN DYCK.

Charles I.
Queen Henrietta Maria.
William Villiers, Viscount Grandison.
Lucy Percy, Countess of Carlisle.
Viscount Chaworth.
Margaret Smith, Lady Herbert.
Ann, Countess of Chesterfield.
Lady Wharton.
Elizabeth, Countess of Lindsey.
Arthur Goodwin, of Winchendon, Bucks.

VARIOUS PORTRAITS.

King William III.; after Brandton.
Queen Mary II.; after the same.
Queen Anne; after Kneller.
George, Prince of Denmark; after Wissing.
John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough; after A. van der Werff.
George I.; after Kneller.
Earl of Peterborough; after the same.
John Locke; after Greenhill.
John Dryden; after Riley.

He also engraved nine plates of the 'Loves of the Gods,' after Titian, the same subjects that Smith has scraped in mezzotint.

GÜNTHER, CHRISTIAN AUGUST, a designer and etcher on copper, was born at Pirna in 1760, and died at Dresden in 1824. He first drew from nature, but Professor Zingg observed his talent and took him into his school. His coloured drawings won much admiration at the Dresden Academic exhibitions. He also painted portraits in pastel. His etchings were mostly landscapes—among them are 'The Baggage Waggon,' after Zingg, and two after Wouwerman and Dietrich for the third volume of the Dresden Gallery.

GÜNTHER, MATTHÄUS, (or MATHÄ GINDTER), was born at Bisenberg in Bavaria in 1705, and after studying under Cosmas Damian Asam in Munich, took to imitating the style of Johann Holzer, with whom also he passed some time. He was director of the old Academy at Augsburg, where he died in 1791. His best known productions were ceiling pictures in churches and halls.

GURK, EDUARD, an Austrian painter, born at Vienna in 1802, accompanied the Archduke Friedrich on the expedition to Syria, and on remaining there for the sketching of memorable spots, he died of the plague in 1841. His chief works are architectural views in water-colours, which are in the possession of the Emperor of Austria.

GUTEKUNST, JOHANN GOTTLÖB, a painter and photographer, was born at Tübingen in 1801. He manifested an early taste for art, and received assistance from King William of Würtemberg, which enabled him to study for three years in Italy, and at the end of that term he adorned his patron's pleasure-palace at Rosenstein with frescoes representing the story of 'Cupid and Psyche.' After 1849 he associated photography with water-colour painting. He died at Stuttgart in 1858.

GÜTERBOCK, LEOPOLD, was a German genre painter, who died at Berlin in 1881. His mediæval subjects are often very humorous.

GUTIERREZ, ESTACIO, was a native of Valladolid, who was appointed painter to Philip III. in 1605. He died at Madrid in 1609.

GUTIERREZ, GENNARO, engraved some plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino,' and a large upright plate of the 'Virgin and Infant in the Clouds,' after Carlo Maratti, executed in a neat style, in the manner of Johann Jakob Frey, though inferior. He flourished about the year 1760.

GUTIERREZ, JUAN SIMON, was born in Seville about 1644, and succeeded in copying Murillo's style of colouring so exactly that it is sometimes difficult to distinguish their productions. The drawing of his pictures, however, is very inferior. In the Liverpool Institution is a picture of 'St. Francis in ecstasy,' and in the Seville Gallery one of 'Christ surrounded by the Virgin and Angels.'

GUTIERREZ, EL LICENCIADO PEDRO, was a Spanish engraver who lived at Granada about the middle of the 17th century. Engravings by him are contained in the 'Life of St. Eufrasio,' by Antonio Torrones de Robres, published in 1657.

GÜTLINGER, JOHANNES GUMPOLT. See GÜTLINGER.

GUTTENBERG, HEINRICH, a German engraver, the brother and pupil of Karl Gottlieb Guttenberg, was born at Wöhrd, near Nuremberg, in 1749. Through his pupils Geissler and Reindel he founded a new school of engraving at Nuremberg. He lived many years in Paris, returning home, however, on the outbreak of the Revolution, but again repairing to the French capital after order was restored. He died at Nuremberg in 1818. He engraved several plates in the style of his brother; among them are the following:

St. Francis; after Rembrandt.
The Burgomaster; after the same.
Charles V.; after Van Dyck.
The Deposition from the Cross; after Rubens.
The Women below the Gateway; after Bega.
A Dutch Family; after the same.
A Repose in Egypt; after Barocci.
A Mountainous Landscape; after Dietrich.

GUTTENBERG, KARL GOTTLIEB, a German engraver, was born at Wöhrd, near Nuremberg, in 1743. He was the elder brother of Heinrich Guttenberg, and a pupil of J. G. Wille, at Paris, and has engraved several plates, in the neat style of that artist. From 1780 till the Revolution he lived in Paris, but afterwards returned to Nuremberg, where he died in 1790. His principal works were the plates he executed for the 'Voyage pittoresque du Royaume de Naples,' by the Abbé de St. Non. There are also by him:

Portrait of Catharine II., Empress of Russia; after Rotari.
Wilhelm Tell; after Füssli.
Le petit Boudeur; after Greuze.
L'Invocation à l'Amour; after Théolon.
The Chemist; after Mieris.
The Dance; after P. Bol.
The Evening Party; after Rembrandt.
The Death of General Wolfe; neatly copied from the print by Woollett.
Two Views in Switzerland; after Schutz.
The Eruption of Monte Novo; after Fragonard.
The Harbour of Ostend.

GUTTENBRUNN, L., was a native of Dresden, who came to England about the year 1789. He painted portraits and small historical subjects, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1790 to 1795, when he went to St. Petersburg, by the recommendation of the Russian Ambassador. He was a member of the Academy of Florence, whence it may be presumed that he had studied in Italy.

GUYARD, ADÉLAÏDE. See VINCENT.

GUYOT, LAURENT, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1756, was a pupil of Le Grand and Tillard. He died in 1806.

GUZMAN, JOSEF COBO Y. See COBO.

GUZMAN, JUAN DE, known as Fray JUAN DEL SANTISSIMO SACRAMENTO, was born at La Puente de Don Gonzalo, near Cordova, in 1611. After studying some time at Cordova he went to Rome, but did not devote much attention to the antique, or the works of Raphael; colouring, and mathematics as applicable to architecture and perspective, being his chief objects. He returned to Spain in 1634, and went to reside in Seville; where he signalized himself more by turbulence, and dexterity in the management of arms, than in the skilful use of the pencil. The consequence was, that having taken part in a revolt, and having been unsuccessful, he was obliged to seek refuge in the convent of the Carmelitas Calzados, or Shod Carmelites, and assume the habit as a lay brother. His restless character caused him soon to be sent from that establishment to the Carmelitas Descalzos, or Barefooted Carmelites, and he received orders to reside in the convent of Aguilar, where a severer discipline effected a change in his behaviour, and he now appeared in the character of a humble and pious monk. He took the name of Fray Juan del Santissimo Sacramento, and had permission to exercise his talent as a painter in decorating the walls of the convent, and other establishments appertaining to the order. At intervals he employed himself in translating Pietro Accolti's 'Practical Perspective' from Italian into Spanish, to which he added notes correcting the errors of the author; and it is said that he even engraved plates illustrative of the work, which, however, was never published. In 1666 he went to Cordova to paint pictures for the monastery of his order in that city, which he accomplished so much to the satisfaction of the bishop, that he retained him to decorate his episcopal palace, and other places in his diocese. He remained at Cordova till 1676, when he returned to his convent at Aguilar, where he died in 1680. His merit as a painter is but small.

GUZMAN, PEDRO DE, called GUZMAN EL COXO ('the lame'), was a Spanish painter of the beginning of the 17th century, a pupil of Patricio Caxes, who was also court-painter to Philip III., and helped to decorate for him the Palace of El Pardo.

GWINN, JAMES, born in the county of Kildare, was originally a coach painter. He came to London in 1755, and gained his livelihood by decorating the lids of snuff-boxes in enamel. He fell into great want, and was found dead in his room in 1769.

GYLES, HENRY, a glass painter, who also painted historical subjects and landscapes, worked chiefly at York, where he resided from 1640 to 1700, and established a school of glass painting. His own portrait in crayons, by himself, is in the British Museum.

GYSBRECHTS, CORNELIUS N., was a painter of Hamburg at the beginning of the 17th century. In Schleissheim Palace is a painting by him of 'Transiency, with her Attributes,' by the side of his own portrait; whilst in Augsburg there is a 'Vanitas' by him. He succeeded well with subjects of still-life, of which specimens are to be seen in the Cassel Gallery.

GYSELS, PEETER, (GYSENS, GYZELS, or GYZENS,) a Flemish painter, born at Antwerp in 1621, was a pupil of J. Boots. He entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1642, becoming a master therein in 1649, and was most successful in painting flowers, fruit, still-life, and small landscapes. He died at Antwerp in 1690 or 1691. Among his best works are:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	A Town.
Antwerp.	Gallery.	Still Life (known as 'Le Cercueil de Pierre Gysels').
Berlin.	Gallery.	View of a Village Street.
Brussels.	Gallery.	Dead Game in a Landscape.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Five Rustic Scenes, two Landscapes, and one still-life piece.
Hague.	Museum.	Game, with Hunting Implements.
London.	Bute Coll.	Dead Game.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	A Garden.

H

HAACH, LUDWIG, a German historical painter, was born at Dresden in 1813, and entered the Academy there in 1830. In 1837, having studied under Hildebrandt at Düsseldorf, he painted his famous 'Christ in the Storm,' and 'Isaac and Rebekah.' His last work, 'The Three Kings before Herod,' he left unfinished. He went in 1841 to Rome, where overwork brought on an illness, from which he died in the following year. He left eight plates of etchings.

HAAG, GEORG MARCEL, a German historical and portrait painter, was born at Bopfinger in Würtemberg in 1652. He first studied under H. Schönfeld at Augsburg, but afterwards went for improvement to Rome, and then to Venice, where he became influenced by Paolo Veronese. On his return in 1682, he painted for the principal church at Nördlingen a picture of 'Mary Magdalene washing the Saviour's Feet with her Tears.' He also executed an 'Epitaphium' to his father at Bopfingen, where he died in 1719. He painted likewise several good portraits.

HAAG, J. F. C., a German portrait painter, was painter to William, Prince of Orange, and hereditary Stadtholder of Friesland, whom he accompanied to the Hague, when he became Stadtholder of the United Provinces. He died at the Hague in 1759.

HAAG, TETHART PHILIPP CHRISTIAN, a son of J. F. C. Haag, was born at Cassel in 1737. He was instructed by his father, and painted portraits and other subjects; but he excelled in painting horses, by which he gained a great reputation. He was appointed Director of the Academy at the Hague, where he died in 1812.

HAAN, DAVID DE. See DE HAAN.

HAANEBRINK, WILLEM ALBERTUS, a Dutch genre painter, was born at Utrecht in 1762. He painted conversation pieces, and formed a choice collection of the drawings of contemporary masters, which was dispersed after his death. He was a member of the Academy of Amsterdam, and secretary of the College of Design at Utrecht, where he died in 1840.

HAANEN, CASPARIS, who was born at Maastricht in 1778, painted interiors of churches. In 1812 he was living at Oosterhout, but in 1830 he removed to Amsterdam, where he died in 1849. His sons, George Gillis and Remigius, painted respectively genre subjects and landscapes, and his daughters, Elisabeth Alida and Adriana Johanna, genre subjects and flowers.

HAANEN, ELISABETH ALIDA, afterwards KIERS, born at Utrecht in 1809, was at first a pupil of her brother, George Gillis Haanen, and at a later period painted from life. She was especially successful in conversation pieces with light falling upon them. In 1838 she was made an honorary member of the Academy of Arts at Amsterdam, where she died in 1845.

HAANSBERGEN, JOHANNES VAN. See HAENSBERGEN.

HAARLEM, CORNELIS VAN. See CORNELISZ, CORNELIS.

HAARLEM, GERRIT, or GERHARD VAN, called also GEERTGEN VAN SINT JANS (a diminutive of Gerrit van Sint Jans, which name was probably applied to Gheerardt David, a greater pupil of the same instructor)—in English GERARD OF ST. JOHN, and in Italian GERARDO DA SAN GIOVANNI—is believed to have lived about the period from 1460 to 1488, and to have been a pupil of Albert van Ouwater, who was apparently the earliest Dutch painter of whom anything authentic is known. He obtained the name of 'Sint Jans' from the monastery of the Knights of St. John at Haarlem, where he chiefly resided, though not a monk. According to Van Mander he lived only the twenty-eight years above named, yet he executed several admired works. The best of them was a triptych altar-piece in the church of St. John at Haarlem. The principal picture represented the 'Crucifixion,' and on the folding-doors were the 'Descent from the Cross' and the 'Resurrection.' The expression of grief on the faces of the Maries and the Apostles was superior to any production of the time. The Munich Gallery contains a very similar altar-piece, together with the two wings of a third. In the cathedral of Haarlem there is a view of that edifice painted by him. Two pictures in the Vienna Gallery are also attributed to Geertgen; one represents 'The Legend of the Bones of St. John the Baptist,' and the other is a 'Pietà.' This last is in the style of Quentin Massys. There is but little doubt that he painted the 'Expiatory Offering' in the Amsterdam Museum, as well as the 'Adoration of the Magi' in the Museum at Prague, and 'Christ in the tomb surrounded by the instruments of the Passion,' in the Archiepiscopal Museum at Utrecht. In the Gallery at Modena is a 'Crucifixion' assigned to this artist, the composition of which is confused, but it is executed in a careful, though hard and mechanical, manner.

HAARLEM, THIERRY DE. See BOUTS, DIERICK.

HAAS, CHRISTIAN PETER JONAS, a Danish engraver, the son of Jonas Haas, was born at Copenhagen in 1754, but the date of his death is not known. He was a pupil of Preisler, and engraved portraits and illustrations to books of travels.

HAAS, JOHAN JAKOB GEORG, a Danish engraver, and son of Jonas Haas, was born at Copenhagen in 1756. He attended the Academy of that city, and in 1776 obtained the large gold medal for his engraving of 'The Prophet Elisha upon Mount Carmel,' after his own design. He then engraved the plates to Biehl's translation of 'Don Quixote.' In 1777 he proceeded to Paris, and completed his studies under Nicolas de Launay. In 1782 his engraving of 'Hercules causing Diomedes to be torn to pieces by his own Horses' procured his election to the Paris Academy, and in the year following he obtained the same honour at Copenhagen, and was also made court engraver. He engraved the 'Review of Prince Frederick of Denmark,' after Lorentzen, and the 'Northern Scenes' of the same painter; also the allegorical pictures of Abildgaard and a portrait of Winslöv. He died in 1817.

HAAS, JOHAN MENO, a Danish engraver, the son of Jonas Haas, was born at Hamburg in 1752. He studied under his father and at the Copenhagen Academy under Preisler, and afterwards went to Paris to complete his education under De Launay. In 1786 he was appointed to engrave the pictures in the Berlin Gallery, and after this he worked for booksellers and art dealers. He was made a member of the Academy at Berlin in 1793, and died in that city in 1833. Among his chief plates, besides some landscapes after Poelenborch, there are:

The Expulsion of Hagar; after Govert Flinck.

The League of the German Princes; after Bernhard Rode. 1793.

Frederick the Great on Horseback; after U. L. F. Wolff. 1808.

Frederick William II., King of the Prussians; after Cunningham.

HAAS, JONAS, an engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1720. He went to Copenhagen, where he worked for the booksellers, and died in 1774.

HAAS, PETER, a fourth son of Jonas Haas, was a pupil of Preisler, and engraved portraits and views for guide books.

HAAS, WILLIAM FREDERICK DE. See DE HAAS.

HAASTERT, IZAAK VAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Delft in 1753. He was instructed by a Venetian painter of the name of Geronimo Lapis, who resided at Delft, and he became a good painter of landscapes and views of cities, as well as of animals, some plates of which he engraved. He was at the same time a poet and a naturalist, and he translated a work on Physiognomy. He died at Delft in 1834.

HABELIUS, —, was a German painter of the 17th century, who resided at Cologne, and by whom there is in the Wallraf-Richartz Museum a picture of 'Two Rat-catchers.'

HABENSCHADEN, SEBASTIAN, a Bavarian animal painter and etcher, as well as a modeller in wax and clay, was born at Munich in 1813. He was first instructed by the enamel painter Adler, but in 1829 he attended the Munich Academy, and then commenced painting animals from nature, pursuing his studies in the neighbourhood, as well as in the Alps. He also etched fifteen plates of animals. He died at Munich in 1868. Among his best paintings are the following:

Cows at Pasture. 1838.
View of the Alps. 1844.
Cows in the Stream. 1847.
Hay-making. 1850.
Morning by Land.
Morning in the Mountains. 1854.
Female Peasant with Cows.
Railway-making through the Forest. 1864.

HABERMANN, IGNAZ, a draughtsman, was a native of Prague, who with his brother Karl made drawings of several Bohemian castles. He afterwards became a monk, and died about 1810. KARL HABERMANN died about 1812.

HABERT, NICOLAS, a French engraver, born in Paris about the year 1650, was much employed by the booksellers, and engraved several portraits of literary characters and other celebrated persons. He also engraved an emblematical print, in the style of Antoine Masson, which he dedicated to that artist. The following portraits are by him:

PORTRAITS.

James II.; after Kneller.
Maria Louisa of Orleans, Queen of Spain; after Philippe de Champagne.
Cornelis Jansenius, Bishop of Ypres; after the same.
Louis Maimbourg, a celebrated Jesuit; after his own design. 1683.
Félix Vialart, Bishop of Chalons; after the same.
John Milton.
John Dun, called Scotus.
Old Parr. 1715.

HABERZETTEL, JOSEPH, a Russian painter, who was a German by birth, lived for several years in England, where he exhibited a picture of 'St. John preaching in the Wilderness,' painted in 1828. He died in 1853.

HABRON, a Greek painter, whose date is unknown, is mentioned by Pliny as having painted 'Friendship' and 'Concord,' and likenesses of the gods.

HACCOU, JOHANNES CORNELIS, born at Middelburg in 1798, was a student of the Academy in that town, and at the same time a pupil of J. H. Koekkoek, under whom he made rapid progress. He painted winter and moonlight scenes, lakes with vessels, and landscapes, all with considerable talent. After visiting France, Germany, and Switzerland, he established himself in London, where he died in 1839.

HACKAERT, JAN, one of the ablest landscape painters of the Dutch school, was born at Amsterdam probably in 1636, but it is not known by whom he was instructed. He visited Switzerland and Germany, and there painted the choicest views from nature. On his return to Holland he executed some admirable landscapes from the places he had visited, in which there is an extraordinary effect of sunshine piercing through the rocks and foliage. He died at Amsterdam in 1699. Philip Wouverman, Adriaan van de Velde, Jan Lingelbach, and Nicolaas Berchem, painted figures in Hackaert's landscapes. A 'Landscape, with Dogs and Hunters,' a joint work of Van de Velde and Hackaert, in the Steengracht Collection at the Hague, is of great merit; and there is a similar picture in the Munich Gallery. In the Dresden Gallery is 'A Road leading by a group of lofty Trees, with Figures;' in the Rotterdam Museum, a 'Mountainous Landscape,' with figures by Lingelbach; in the Berlin Gallery, an 'Italian Landscape,' with figures by Van de Velde; and in the Amsterdam Gallery there is a 'Forest,' with figures by Lingelbach, and the 'Ash-tree Avenue,' a sylvan view by Hackaert, with figures by Van de Velde, a subject often repeated by these two artists. There is a 'Landscape' at Stafford House, formerly in the Orleans Gallery, and another in the possession of Sir Robert Lloyd Lindsay. A 'Stag Hunt,' with figures attributed to Berchem, is in the National Gallery. There is a set of six charming etchings of landscapes by this painter, from his own designs, executed in the style of Waterloo, but far inferior.

HACKERT, GEORG ABRAHAM, the youngest brother and pupil of Jakob Philipp Hackert, was born at Prenzlau in 1755, and was instructed in Berger's school at Berlin. In 1782 he entered the service of the King of Naples in conjunction with his eldest brother, and in 1786 he established himself as a printseller and engraver at Naples, where he died in 1805. He engraved several landscapes and views, chiefly from the designs of Jakob Philipp Hackert; among them are the following:

View of the Environs of Carpentras.
The Ruins of the Aqueduct at Frejus.
Two Views of the Ruins of the Bridge of Augustus at Narni.
Two Views of Tivoli.
View of Rome, from the Villa Mellini
View of Castellammare.
View of the Bay of Naples.
Morning and Evening; after Gaspard Poussin.

HACKERT, JAKOB PHILIPP, a Prussian landscape painter and engraver, was born at Prenzlau in Uckermark in 1737. He was the son of a portrait painter, Philipp Hackert, who gave him his first instruction, and in 1753 sent him to Berlin, where he at first practised decoration with his brother, Johann Gottlieb Hackert, and then studied landscape painting at the Academy under Le Sueur. In 1762 he commenced a course of studies from nature at Stralsund and the adjacent Prussian island of Rügen; and two years later he went to Stockholm. In 1765 he repaired to Paris, where he met with so much employment that he sent for his brother Johann Gottlieb to join him from Berlin. Three years later the two brothers visited Rome, and in 1770 Naples, where they painted several views of an eruption of Vesuvius. While in Rome Jakob Philipp was commissioned by the Empress Catharine II. to paint a picture of the 'Victory of the Russian Fleet over the Turkish at Tchesme, and the Burning of the latter.' In 1774, after the death of his brother, he paid a second visit to Naples, after which he travelled in Sicily, Upper Italy, and Switzerland, and in 1782, with his brother Georg Abraham, entered the service of the King of Naples. He was afterwards a severe sufferer from the military turmoils that prevailed; but in 1803 he was able to purchase a small estate in the vicinity of Florence, in which city he died in 1807. He executed an immense number of oil paintings and sepia drawings, besides many pictures in gouache, but he obtained greater reputation than he deserved, being rather a clever mannerist than a genius in art. Four of his brothers distinguished themselves as artists. Hackert etched a variety of plates from his own designs, among which are the following:

Twenty-one Views in Pomerania and the Island of Rügen. 1763—1764.
Six Views in Sweden.
Six Views in Norway.
Four Views in the Kingdom of Naples. Rome, 1779.
Ten Views round Horace's Villa.

HACKERT, JOHANN GOTTLIEB, an animal painter, was born in 1744. He studied in Berlin under Le Sueur, and after working with his brother Jakob Philipp Hackert in Italy, he in 1772 came to England, and exhibited several of his pictures at the Royal Academy in 1773, in which year he died at Bath.

HACKERT, KARL LUDWIG, a third brother of Jakob Philipp Hackert, was a landscape painter in oil and gouache, who was born at Prenzlau in 1740. He spent some time with his brother at Rome, but in 1778 he settled at Geneva, and afterwards at Lausanne, where, in 1800, he committed suicide. There is a picture by him of 'Geneva,' dated 1782, in the South Kensington Museum.

HACKERT, WILHELM, the fourth brother of the above family, was an historical and portrait painter who was born in 1748, and worked for some time under Mengs. He afterwards went to Russia, where he died in 1780, in the position of an academical drawing-master.

HADEMAR, a talented miniaturist of the monastery of Reichenau, flourished about the year 912.

HADFIELD, MARIA CECILIA LOUISA. See COSWAY.

HADIK, JOHANN BAPTIST, Count, a connoisseur of painting, who was born in 1755, and held the post of Imperial Art-Chamberlain at Vienna, executed some historical drawings in water-colours, one of which, in 1785, procured his election as an honorary member of the Academy.

HAEBERLEIN, LEONHARD, a German fruit and flower painter, flourished in the 17th century. He worked at Ulm in 1643, and afterwards at Nuremberg.

HAEBICH, JOHANN RUDOLPH, a German painter and engraver, the son of Christoph Haebich, was born at Ulm in 1683, and died there in 1722.

HAECKEN, ALEXANDER VAN, a Dutch painter and mezzotint engraver, was born in 1701, and appears to have been living in 1748. He resided some time in London. Several of his portraits possess considerable merit; among other plates by him are the following:

The Five Senses; after Amigoni.
George II., King of Great Britain; after the same.
Caroline Wilhelmina, his Queen; after the same.
William Augustus, Duke of Cumberland; after the same.
Charles Hamilton, Viscount Binning; after Richardson.
James Keith, Prussian Field-Marshal; after Ramsay.
General Wade; after J. van der Banck.
General Wentworth; after Ramsay.
Johann Christoph Pepusch, musician; after C. Lucy.
Carlo Broschi, called Farinelli; after the same.

HAEFTEN, NICOLAAS VAN, sometimes called WALRAVEN, a painter of portraits and genre subjects, and an engraver, flourished from 1677 to 1709, according to the dates on his prints. Nothing of his history is accurately known, but it is supposed that he was a native of Gorcum. His subjects are of a low kind, chiefly of smokers and tipplers of both sexes. Weigel mentions thirty-nine prints by him, some of which are in mezzotint, and others etched and finished with the graver. He painted and engraved his own portrait, which bears his name and that of the place of his birth. The Suermondt Collection at Aix-la-Chapelle has a painting of 'Fish' by him.

HAELSZEL, JOHANN BAPTIST, a German fruit and flower painter, was born in 1712, and died in 1777. There are several examples of his art in the Vienna Gallery.

HAELWEGH, ADRIAAN, apparently a son of Albert Haelwegh, was an engraver in the service of the Landgraves George II. and Louis VI. of Hesse. There are plates by him bearing the dates 1662 and 1677. The portrait of Francesco Maria of Etruria is one of his best works.

HAELWEGH, ALBERT, a Flemish engraver, was born about the beginning of the 17th century, and received his art instruction abroad. He resided some time at Copenhagen, where, in 1647, he was appointed court and university engraver, and executed numerous portraits of distinguished Danish personages. Between 1643 and 1672 he is stated to have produced ninety-one portraits after Karel van Mander, Wuchters, and Ditmar. He died at Copenhagen in 1673. Among other portraits, the following are by him:

Christian IV., King of Denmark; after K. van Mander.
Christian V., King of Denmark; after A. Wuchters.
Sophia Amelia, Queen of Denmark; after the same.
Louis, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel; after Duarte.
The Duke of Argyll, in armour.
Rev. George Walker, Governor of Londonderry.
Jacob Oldenburg, Phil. Doct.; after A. Houbraken.

HAEN, ABRAHAM DE. See DE HAEN.

HAENDEL, MAXIMILIAN, a portrait painter, was a native of Bohemia, who was born in 1696, and died in 1758.

HAENSBERGEN, JOHANNES VAN, a Dutch painter, born at Utrecht in 1642, was a scholar and imitator of Cornelis Poelenborch, whom he nearly equalled in the delicacy of his pencil and clearness of his colouring, though inferior to him in design. His landscapes are admired, but in later life he devoted himself to portrait painting, in which he was highly successful, especially with the heads of ladies. He died at the Hague in 1705. Among his pictures are:

Augsburg.	Gallery.	The Man with the Death's Head.
Berlin.	Gallery.	A Portrait.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Adoration of the Shepherds.
"	"	Adoration of the Magi.
"	"	The Assumption.
"	"	Angels announcing the Birth of Jesus to the Shepherds.
"	"	Landscape.
Stuttgart.	Gallery.	Diana and Callisto.

HAERT, HENRI VAN DER. See VAN DER HAERT.

HAESKEL, —, a Dutch or Flemish portrait painter, flourished about the middle of the 17th century. He probably visited England, as some of his portraits have the character and costume of persons of distinction in this country, and his manner of painting has a strong resemblance to that of Dobson.

HAF, JOHANN LORENZ, a wood-engraver, was born at Schwäbisch Hall in 1737, and died at Berlin in 1802. He executed some silhouettes which met with great approbation, and three series of cuts and descriptions of animals, published at Berlin in 1792.

HAFFNER, ANTON MARIA, the son of a Swiss soldier, was born at Bologna in 1654. He studied figure-drawing under Canuti, and perspective under Mitelli, who considered him one of his best pupils. He went with Canuti to Rome, and painted in the church of San Domenico e Sisto, and afterwards proceeded to Genoa, where he painted in the Spinola Palace. While decorating the church and convent of St. Philip Neri at Genoa, he determined to embrace the monastic life. His last work was the fresco for the Balbi Oratory in Genoa, in which city he died in 1732.

HAFFNER, FÉLIX, a French painter of landscapes and Alsatian scenes, was born at Strassburg in 1818. He studied under Sandmann, and long resided in his native place, but after the Franco-German War of 1870 his option was for France, and he left Alsace. He died at Mesnil-Amelot in 1875. The following are amongst his works:

Gathering Tobacco, Alsace.

Wild Boar ravaging a field of Maize.

Goats surprised.

Pond at Meinau, near Strassburg. 1857.

Halt of Gipsies. 1858. (Valenciennes Mu eum.)

Market of Schelestadt.

HAFFNER, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a native of Augsburg, was born in 1668, and died in 1754. He executed several engravings, and by him we have a book of ornaments, executed in a coarse indifferent style.

HAFFNER, JOHANN HEINRICH, the brother of Anton Maria Haffner, was born at Bologna in 1640, and first followed his father's profession of arms, but afterwards abandoned it for art. He studied under Canuti and Mitelli, and with the former painted in Rome the decorations of the Altieri and Colonna palaces. In 1696, with Franceschini and Quaini, he was summoned to Modena to decorate the Grand-Duke's palace with frescoes. In Genoa and Savona he worked with Guidobono. He died in 1702.

HAFFNER, MELCHIOR, a German engraver, flourished about 1680. He worked principally for booksellers, and his chief performance was a set of portraits for the 'Templum Honoris reseratum,' published at Vienna in 1673, by Theophilus Spizelius. He also engraved a frontispiece for the 'Bibliotheca Realis Universalis,' published at Frankfurt in 1685, which represents the interior of a large library.

HÄFFNER, KARL, was a landscape painter, who died at Munich in 1873. His best works comprise:

Waterfall at the Kochelsee.

Misty Morning.

Sketch near Brannenburg.

Approaching Storm at the Wendelstein.

HAGEDORN, CHRISTIAN LUDWIG VON, a German amateur engraver, as well as a writer upon art, was born at Hamburg in 1713, and was a brother of the poet Friedrich von Hagedorn. In 1763 he was made director of the Academy at Dresden, and died in that city in 1780. He sometimes marked his etchings with the cipher ED. The following is a list:

Six sheets of Heads and Caricatures, called 'Erster Versuch' (First Essay); dated 1744.

Six sheets of studies of Heads, containing thirty-six Heads; dated 1744.

Thirty-six Landscapes; dated 1744 and 1745.

Six sheets, containing seven Landscapes, called 'Neue Versuch'; dated 1765.

HAGELSTEIN, JAKOB ERNST THOMANN VON. See THOMANN VON HAGELSTEIN.

HAGEMAN, CARL GUSTAF, a Swedish historical painter, was born in 1805, and died in 1868.

HAGEN, JORIS VAN DER. See VAN DER HAGEN.

HAGENS, CHRISTOPH, an obscure Dutch engraver, lived about the year 1644. In that year he engraved a portrait of Sir William Davidson, resident in Holland for Scotland, drawn by himself, from the life at Amsterdam.

HAGER, CHRISTOPH, was a landscape painter, who was for forty years in the service of the court of Würtemberg. He died in 1806.

HAHN, GUSTAV ADOLPH, a German painter, was born at Altenburg in 1819, and died at Dresden in 1872. There is by him in the Dresden Gallery a view of 'Kriebstein Castle, in Saxony.'

HAHN, HERMAN VAN, a Dutch painter, was born about 1636. There is by him a picture of 'Dead Game' in the Vienna Gallery.

HAID, JOHANN ELIAS, the son of Johann Jakob Haid, was born at Augsburg in 1739, and instructed in mezzotint engraving by his father. Besides a number of portraits, he executed prints after Caravaggio, Cranach, Rembrandt, and other masters. He died in 1809. The following are some of his principal prints:

PORTRAITS.

Johann Jakob Haid, painter and engraver; after Graff.

Anton Graff, painter; after himself. 1766.

Johann Koella, painter; after himself. 1776.

Johann Winkelmann; after Liotard. 1782.

SUBJECTS.

The Nativity; after Rembrandt.

The Raising of Lazarus; after the same.

The Old Man giving Admonition; after Joseph Christ.

HAID, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, the brother of Johann Lorenz Haid, was born at Augsburg in 1710, and was instructed by his brother. He came to England when he was young, and engraved some plates in mezzotint for Boydell. He also executed several plates, which possess great merit, after his return to Germany. He died at Vienna in 1776. The following are among his principal prints:

PORTRAITS.

George II., King of Great Britain.

Maria Theresa, Empress of Germany.

Joseph II., Emperor of Germany; after Weickart. 1770.

Lord Camden; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Garrick, in the 'Farmer's Return'; after Zoffany.

Foote, in the character of Major Sturgeon; after the same.

Jacques Antoine Arlaud, painter; after Largillière.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

Virginia; after Sir Nathaniel Dance.

Absalom's Submission to his Father; after F. Bol.

Abraham offering up his son Isaac; after Rembrandt.

HAID, JOHANN JAKOB, a German portrait painter, and engraver in mezzotint, who was born at Süssen, near Geisslingen, in the duchy of Würtemberg, in 1703, went when young to Augsburg, where he became a pupil of Ridinger. He painted portraits with success, and distinguished himself by his plates for the 'Pinacotheca Scriptorum nostra' 617 ætate literis illustrium,' which, to the number of one hundred, with lives written by Jakob Brucker, were published in folio at Augsburg, in 1741-55. He died at Augsburg in 1767. He engraved in all some 300 mezzotint portraits, as well as some historical subjects. Among his best prints are the following:

Carl Ludwig, Count of Hohenlohe.
Christoph Friedrich, Baron von Seckendorf.
Felix Meyer, painter.
Egidius Verhelst, sculptor.
Johann Karl Hedlinger, medallist.
Marcus Friedrich Kleinert, painter.
Georg Brandmüller, painter.

HAID, JOHANN LORENZ, a painter, designer, and mezzotint engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1702, and died in the same city in 1750. He was a pupil of Georg Philipp Rugendas, and worked extensively in the atelier of Gottlieb Heiss. One of his best paintings was his portrait of Magdalena, widow of Mathias Gross.

HAID, JOHANN PHILIPP, an engraver, son of Johann Lorenz Haid, was born at Augsburg in 1730. He resided with his uncle Johann Gottfried at Vienna for several years, and on his return to Augsburg was appointed teacher in the art school. He died in 1806.

HAID, MARIANNA, a miniature painter, was born at Danzig in 1688. She was the daughter of a famous goldsmith at Berlin, and in 1705 she married the painter Christoph Joseph Werner, and settled at Dresden, where she died in 1753.

HAILLECOURT, CAROLINE ANNE, a French miniature painter, was born at Metz in 1817, and died in the same city in 1869. She was a pupil of Madame de Mirbel and of Maréchal, and exhibited at the Salon from 1840 to 1863.

HAINES, WILLIAM, an English miniature painter, born in 1778, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1808 to 1840, when, having succeeded to some property, he retired to East Brixton, where he died in 1848.

HAINES, WILLIAM HENRY, a landscape and genre painter, was a frequent contributor to the Royal Academy, British Institution, and Society of British Artists from 1843. He died in 1884.

HAINZEL, JOHANN FERDINAND, a Bavarian historical painter, was born at Augsburg in 1621, and died in the same city in 1671. He was first instructed by Strauss, and afterwards went to Italy. His works were much esteemed.

HAINZELMANN, ELIAS, a German engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1640. After learning the first principles of design in his native city, he went to Paris, where he became a pupil of François de Poilly, whose style he followed with great success. He died at Augsburg in 1693. Although not very correct in drawing, his prints, and particularly his portraits, possess great merit. The following are among his best plates:

PORTRAITS.

St. Francis Xavier.
Aegidius Strauch, Theologiæ Doctor; after A. Stech.
Marcus Huber, Reipubl. Augustanæ Senator.
David Thomann von Hagelstein, Juris consultus; after F. De Neve.
Carl, Baron von Friesen.
Gabriel Miller, Juris consultus; after J. U. Mayr.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Virgin presenting Pinks to the Infant Jesus; after Raphael.
Christ appearing to Mary Magdalene; after Albani.
St. Francis praying before a Crucifix; after Domenichino.

The Virgin, with the Infant sleeping, and St. John, called the 'Silence'; after Annibale Carracci.

The Holy Family, with St. John presenting a Lamb to the Infant Christ; after Sébastien Bourdon.

The Holy Family, with the Virgin washing Linen; after the same.

The Holy Family, with St. John presenting an Apple to the Infant Jesus; after the same.

HAINZELMANN, JOHANN, born at Augsburg in 1641, was the brother of Elias Hainzelmann, whom he accompanied to Paris. He was instructed by François de Poilly. He afterwards became court engraver at Berlin, in which city he died in 1693. There are by him a variety of subjects after various masters, as well as a number of portraits, among which are the following:

PORTRAITS.

John III. Sobieski, King of Poland; J. Hainzelman del. et sculp. 1684.

The Elector Frederick William; after De Clerck.

Philippe Dufour, Chevalier. 1682.

J. B. Tavernier, Baron d'Aubonne, in an oriental dress; J. Hainzelman del. et sculp. 1679.

Claude Le Peletier, Minister of State. 1687.

M. F. Le Tellier, Marquis de Louvois; after F. Voet.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Infant Jesus embracing the Virgin; after Annibale Carracci.

The Virgin and Child, with St. John; after J. Guillebault.

The Annunciation; after Sébastien Bourdon.

The Holy Family; after the same.

The Repose in Egypt; after the same.

Christ and the Woman of Samaria; after N. Poussin.

HAKEWILL, JOHN, a landscape, portrait, and decorative painter, was born about 1740. He studied under Wale, and in the Duke of Richmond's Gallery, and obtained prizes from the Society of Arts in 1763 and 1764. Some of his portraits appeared at the Spring Gardens Exhibitions from 1765 to 1773. His chief practice was in house-decoration. He died in 1791.

HAKEWILL, MARIA C., a portrait painter, was born in the latter part of the 18th century. She married James Hakewill, the architect, whom she accompanied to Italy, where they spent two years, 1816 and 1817, and she exhibited at the Royal Academy, British Institution, and Society of British Artists, between 1808 and 1838. She died at Calais in 1842.

HAL, JACOB VAN, a Flemish historical painter, was inscribed in the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1681-82, and became its dean in 1705. He was the master of Jacob De Wit, and died in 1750. There was a 'Nativity' by him in the Jesuit College at Antwerp, and there is still in the church of St. Jacques 'The Fall of the Manna.'

HAL, NICOLAS VAN, was born at Antwerp in 1668, and died in 1738. His early historical pictures were esteemed, but his later productions are not held in much estimation. He also introduced nymphs and genii into the pictures of Hardime and other flower painters.

HALBEECK, JAN VAN, a Dutch engraver, who worked first in Paris, and afterwards at Copenhagen, engraved a variety of prints, among them a set of grotesque ornaments, dated 1618, and a large plate of the Heads of the Roman Emperors, from Julius Cæsar to Ferdinand II. He died about 1630.

HALBOU, LOUIS MICHEL, a French engraver, born in Paris in 1730, was a pupil of N. G. Dupuis, and was living in 1803. He executed, among others, the following plates:

Le jeune Aubergiste; after Coquelet.
 Le galant Boulanger; after the same.
 Le Buvreur trop grave; after F. Mieris.
 La Toilette du Savoyard; after Murillo.
 Le Temps perdu; after P. A. Wille.
 Les Intrigues amoureuses; after Schenau.
 Le beau Commissaire; after Eisen.
 La jolie Charlatane; after the same.
 Le Sultan galant; after Jeaurat.
 La Sultane favorite; after the same.

HALBREITER, ULRICH, was born at Freising in 1812. He belonged to the school of Cornelius, and at first worked at the frescoes, after that master, of Patriarchs, Prophets, and Ecclesiastics in the Ludwigskirche at Munich, as well as the Fathers of the Church after Hermann. After this he spent three years at Athens, painting historical pictures in the Royal Palace. He next travelled till 1845 in Egypt, Syria, and Palestine, in the course of which tour he made numerous historical and architectural sketches, including a 'Panorama of Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives,' and the 'Holy Handkerchief' for King Louis's Album. He afterwards established a silversmith's workshop in Munich, where he died in 1877. His principal oil-paintings were the 'Coronation of the Virgin' and the 'Ascension of the Virgin' (1851).

HALDENWANG, CHRISTIAN, a German landscape engraver, born at Durlach in 1770, was articled to Christian von Mechel, an engraver and dealer in art goods at Basle. He lived five years in this establishment, destitute of every means that could promote his education as an artist; for it was rather a factory than a school of art. The examples set before him were only French engravings, or pieces of Mechel manufacture. He, however, obtained a sight of some of Middiman's 'Select Views in Great Britain,' and others by Woollett, which were probably presents from those artists to Mechel. The sight of these prints excited in Haldenwang a desire to imitate them, and he determined to make Woollett his model. During the latter part of his time he made some attempts at aquatint, which, though injurious to his health, had beneficial results; for some well-executed works of this class obtained the notice of the Chalcographic Society, and he went to Dessau in 1796, where he remained for eight years, producing many beautiful landscapes, and improving his skill in that style of engraving. The reputation he acquired induced the Margrave Charles Frederick of Baden to appoint him engraver to the court of Carlsruhe, but during the time the French had the ascendancy in Germany, he was obliged to work for the booksellers. It was then that he executed the views in the 'Rhenish Pocket-book,' and the two masterly engravings for the 'Travels in Brazil' of Prince Maximilian of Neuwied. He also executed four landscapes, after Claude and Ruysdael, for the 'Musée Napoléon.' He died at Bad Rippoldsau in 1831. His best-known engravings are:

Two Waterfalls; after Ruysdael.
 The Four Divisions of the Day; after Claude Lorrain.
 The Return of the Cattle; after the same.
 Landscape with Diogenes; after Poussin.
 The Flight into Egypt; after Elsheimer.

HALDER, CHRISTOPH, who was born in 1592, and died at Nuremberg in 1648, was a pupil of Georg Gärtner. There is by him a picture of 'Ruins' in the Dresden Gallery.

HALEN, ARENT VAN, (Latinized AQUILA—'Arend' meaning 'a sea eagle,') was a painter, engraver, and modeller in wax, who excelled in mezzotint. He painted and engraved the portrait of Lambert Bidlo, the poet, and started, under the title of 'Pan Poeticon Batavum,' a collection of portraits of Dutch poets, of which 200 are by himself. He died at Amsterdam in 1732. His best portraits are those of Jan van Huysum, Gerard de Lairesse, and Isaak Moucheron. He marked his plates Aquila fecit (or sculpsit), or A. V. H.

HALEN, PIETER VAN, a landscape painter, flourished at Antwerp about 1660. His landscapes, in which he sometimes imitated Claude, were generally enlivened with a number of small figures. Several of his pictures were brought to England, but they are now rare. It is said that he also painted historical and bacchanalian subjects.

HALES, JOHN. See HAYLS.

HALFPENNY, JOSEPH, a water-colour draughtsman, who was born at Bishopsthorpe in 1748, worked for several years as a house painter at York, but afterwards taught drawing. He published 'Gothic Ornaments in the Cathedral Church of York,' 1795, and 'Fragmenta Vetusta,' 1807. There is in the South Kensington Museum a water-colour drawing by him of 'The Bridge, Fountains Abbey.' He died in 1811.

HALL, CHARLES, a line-engraver, was born about 1720. He was brought up as a writing engraver, but he aspired to a higher branch of art, and he was much employed in engraving portraits, coins, medals, and other antiquities. He died in London in 1783. His portraits are his best works; among them are the following:

Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey.
 Henry Fitzallan, Earl of Arundel; after Holbein.
 Catharine, Marchioness of Buckingham; after Magdalena van de Passe.
 Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke; after Simon van de Passe.
 Sir Francis Wortley, Bart.; after Hericks.
 Sir George Barnes, Lord Mayor of London.
 William Harvey, Clarendieux King at Arms.
 Thomas Goodrich, Bishop of Ely, Lord Chancellor.
 Queen Mary; after Marshal.
 Sir Anthony More; after the same.
 Alexander Sterling; after the same.

HALL, JAMES, a Scottish advocate and amateur portrait painter, the son of Sir James Hall, Bart., was born in 1797. He was more a patron of art than an artist, and he greatly befriended Wilkie in his earlier days, before he had made a name. After the death of the painter he presented his palette to be placed on the pedestal of the statue erected to the memory of Wilkie, in the hall of the National Gallery. Hall was an occasional exhibitor of landscapes at the Royal Academy, and also at the British Institution, between the years 1835 and 1854, but he did not give enough attention to painting to become a very successful artist. He painted a full-length portrait of Sir Walter Scott (whose MS. of 'Waverley' Hall gave to the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh), and also received sittings from the Duke of Wellington. He died at Ashiestel, Selkirkshire, in 1854.

HALL, JOHN, a line-engraver, was born at Wivenhoe, near Colchester, in 1739. He came to London at an early period of his life, and having exhibited considerable talent for drawing, was placed under the care of Ravenet, the engraver, with whom at the same time was W. W. Ryland. There is still extant a pen-and-ink drawing by Hall, executed at the age of seventeen, which only a good judge could distinguish from engraving:

the subject is 'Two Children with a Cat,' from a French print. His first friends in London were Sir Stephen Theodore Jansen, and Jonas Hanway. On the decease of Woollett he was appointed historical engraver to George III., upon which occasion he presented to the king his print of the 'Battle of the Boyne.' He executed also several plates for the collection of Alderman Boydell. Hall died in Soho in 1797. His portrait by Gilbert Stuart is in the National Portrait Gallery. The following are his principal plates:

HALL, JOHN H., an American engraver, born at Cooperstown, New York, began engraving in 1826. He afterwards practised at Albany and Lancaster, from whence he removed to New York. In 1849 he went to California, where he died. He executed some engravings for a 'Manual of Ornithology of the United States and Canada.'

HALL, PIERRE ADOLPHE, a French portrait painter, who worked in oil and pastel, as well as in miniature and enamel, was born at Boras, in Sweden, in 1739, and studied under the German masters Eckhardt and Reichardt. He settled in Paris in 1760, and exhibited many of his works at the Salon from 1769 to 1789, but on the outbreak of the Revolution he left France, and his name was inscribed on the list of "émigrés." He died in penury at Liège in 1793. Hall displayed a wonderful delicacy of outline, and great taste in colouring, so much so that he has been called the Van Dyck of miniature painters. In the Louvre there are miniatures by him of the Prince of Conti and of a young lady.

HALLBLAD, ERIK, a Swedish painter, was born at Fahlun in 1720. He went to Stockholm in 1737, where after three years he entered the studio of the painter Olof Arenius, but his chief success was in the restoration of pictures. He died in 1814.

HALLÉ, CLAUDE GUY, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1652, and studied under his father, Daniel Hallé. He became an Academician in 1682, his reception work being 'The Re-establishment of the Catholic Religion at Strassburg,' now in the orthopædic establishment at Chaillot. In 1687 he painted, as a 'mai' for the cathedral of Notre-Dame, 'Christ driving the Money-changers out of the Temple.' For the same church he painted one of his best works, representing the 'Annunciation.' He worked for the Palaces of Meudon and Versailles, and supplied some designs for the tapestry manufactory of the Gobelins, among which was 'The Submission of the Doge of Genoa to Louis

XIV.,' which is now at Versailles. He died in Paris in 1736. In the Louvre is 'St. Paul preventing the Jailor of Lystra from killing himself,' a finished sketch for a picture painted for the church of St. Germain-des-Prés.

HALLÉ, DANIEL, a French painter, born at Rouen, was in 1631 received as a sworn apprentice in the corporation of master-painters of that city. Among his works are a picture of 'St. John about to be thrown into the Caldron of boiling Oil,' presented in 1662 as a 'mai' to the cathedral of Notre-Dame by the corporation of Goldsmiths; 'The Birth of Christ,' in the Rouen Museum; and 'The Miracle of the Loaves,' in St. Ouen at Rouen. He died in Paris in 1675.

HALLÉ, NOEL, the son and scholar of Claude Guy Hallé, was born in Paris in 1711. He was the pupil of Restout, and obtained the first prize of the Academy in 1736, with means to go to Rome. He was received into the Academy in 1748, on which occasion he presented 'The Dispute between Minerva and Neptune as to the name of Athens,' now at Fontainebleau. In 1771 he was made sub-inspector of the tapestry manufactory of the Gobelins, and in 1775 director of the French School at Rome, and in 1777 he obtained the cross of the order of St. Michael. He died in Paris in 1781. His best painting is 'St. Vincent-de-Paul preaching,' in the church of St. Louis at Versailles. There are by this painter a few etchings from his own designs, among which are 'Antiochus thrown from his Chariot,' and a companion print. In the Louvre are his pictures of 'Autumn,' 'Cimon the Athenian inviting the People to enter his Gardens,' and 'The Genii of Poetry, History, Physics, and Astronomy.'

HALLEMAN, THOMAS, a Dutch portrait and historical painter, flourished at Rotterdam about 1691, but little is known of his life.

HALLER, PHILIPP, a native of Innsbruck, was born in 1698, and died in 1772. He studied at Venice under Piazzetta, in whose style he painted several altar-pieces and portraits.

HALLER VON HALLERSTEIN, CHRISTOPH JAKOB, a miniature painter and etcher, born at Hilpoltstein, near Nuremberg, in 1771, was designed for the law, but evincing a taste for art, he was placed under Heidehoff at Stuttgart. He afterwards visited Switzerland, painting many views there, and in 1799 he went to Berlin, where he drew portraits upon vellum, painted upon ivory, and was employed by the royal family. In Berlin alone he painted 284 portraits in three years, and executed 61 drawings, 54 engravings, and 795 sketches. In 1812 he was in Paris, and was next made keeper of the picture gallery at Nuremberg. He engraved 182 plates, of which five are church pictures, six are views of Berlin, and twelve are playing cards. He died at Nuremberg in 1839.

HALLET, GILLES. See ALÉ.

HALLEZ, GERMAIN JOSEPH, a Belgian portrait painter, was born at Frameries, near Mons, in 1769. He studied at the Mons School of Design, where he obtained every possible prize, and then devoted himself to portraits in pastel, crayons, and oil. He travelled all over France in company with an art dealer, and on his return he was summoned to Brussels to paint the Emperor of Austria and other exalted personages. In 1796 he became professor at the Central School of the department of Jemappes, and afterwards director of the Mons Academy. In 1839 he settled at Brussels, where he died in the following year. He executed some allegorical and genre pictures, but was mainly engaged as a portrait painter.

HALLIDAY, MICHAEL FREDERICK, an amateur painter, was the son of a captain in the Royal Navy, and held an official post in the House of Lords. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1853, and continued to do so from time to time up to 1866. He died in 1869. Among his best pictures may be mentioned, 'The Measure of the Wedding Ring,' exhibited in 1856; 'The Blind Basket-maker with his first Child,' 1857; and a 'Bird in the Hand,' 1864.

HALLIER, NICOLAS, a French painter and sculptor, was born in Paris in 1635, and died in the same city in 1686. He was made an Academician in 1663, when he painted a portrait of Louis Testeliù.

HALLMANN, ANTON, a painter and architect, was born at Hanover in 1812, and studied first in that city under Hellner, and then at the Munich Academy. In 1833 he made his way on foot to Rome, and in the following year to Naples, where he was engaged upon a work on 'The Norman Buildings in Calabria and Sicily,' which was published after his death. After his return in 1839 to Munich, he went to St. Petersburg, where he prepared designs for the decoration of the Church of Isaac. He next visited successively London, Paris, and Berlin, seeking employment as an architect, which he failed to obtain, though medals were awarded him in the two first of these cities. He therefore returned in 1841 to Rome, where he met with success as an architectural painter. At this period he executed five pictures in tempera from the Song of Mignon, and began his essay upon 'The Art Efforts of the Present Day.' In 1842 he visited Dresden, and then returned to Rome, where he painted for the King of Prussia 'A Day at Cyprus' and 'A Ruined Villa by Moonlight.' He was on his way home with the latter picture when he died at Leghorn in 1845.

HALLS, JOHN J., was a portrait and historical painter, who practised at Colchester till 1799, when he came to London and obtained a large connection as a portrait painter. In 1813 he was awarded a prize of £200 at the British Institution for his 'Raising of Jairus's Daughter.' He exhibited at the Royal Academy and British Institution from 1791 to 1827. The date of his death is not known. Amongst his works were:

Fingal assailing the Spirit of Loda. 1798.
 Lot's Wife turned into a Pillar of Salt. 1802.
 Hero and Leander. 1808.
 Danaë. 1811.
 Portrait of Rev. Dr. Parr.
 Portrait of Lord Chief Justice Denman. (National Portrait Gallery.)

HALM, FELIX, a Bavarian painter, was born at Munich in 1768, and died in 1810. He painted principally landscapes with ruins and old castles.

HALPAX, MICHAEL. See HALWACHS.

HALPEN, PATRICK, an Irish line-engraver, practised from 1778 to 1786. He was largely engaged on vignette illustrations for books. His son, who was a portrait painter, studied at the Dublin Academy, and practised in that city, and in London.

HALPIN, FREDERICK, an American portrait painter, was born at Worcester, in England, in 1805, and went in 1842 to New York. He painted mostly portraits in stipple, in the execution of which he was tasteful and successful. He died at Jersey City in 1880.

HALS, DIRK, the brother of Frans Hals, was born at Haarlem before 1600, and studied under Abraham Bloemaert. His works, which may be traced from 1624 to 1653, usually represent soldiers, cavaliers, and women, eating, drinking, dancing, or listening to music. He died at Haarlem in 1656.

HALS, FRANS, the elder, the contemporary and rival of Van Dyck, was born, probably at Antwerp, about 1580 or 1581. His parents were descendants of an old patrician family of Haarlem, impelled by the troubles of the period to seek refuge in Antwerp. They returned to the former city some time before the year 1600, and Frans Hals is said to have entered the studio of Karel van Mander, who died in 1606. If this be correct, he was not a pupil of Rubens, who only returned to Antwerp in 1609. About 1610, Hals married a young lady named Anneke Hermanszoon, and in the following year a son was born, who was christened Herman. Five years later Hals was summoned before the magistrates for ill-treating his wife, and on that occasion severely reprimanded for drunken habits and violent conduct. The poor lady died a few weeks afterwards, and in the following year Hals was married to Lysbeth Reyniers, reputed to have been a woman of irregular and doubtful character. A few days after the marriage their daughter Sara was born. The couple appear to have lived very happily together for nearly fifty years, and brought up a large family. For many years before his death records appear of the painter's sufferings from poverty and debt, and in the end he derived his subsistence from relief allotted to him by the city administration. Hals died at Haarlem in 1666. He had seven sons, five of whom were painters, and three daughters. His widow survived him for many years. In July 1675, she obtained relief from the corporation to the extent of fourteen sous a week; but after this nothing is heard of her. In the mean time the sons, following their father's profession, attained some distinction. The works of Frans Hals are distinguished for life and humour, and his delineation of laughter is entirely his own. He is considered by some writers the founder of the distinctive school of Dutch genre painting. He preferred small canvases and half-length figures, and was peculiarly happy in the expression of character in his portraits. His reputation was much raised by his 'Doelenstukken' of the Civic Guard, and the 'Banquet of Adriaansdoelen Officers,' and others, in the prevailing form of Dutch portraiture of his time. Among his pupils were the portrait painters Verspronck and Van der Helst, the society painters, with Dirk Hals at the head of them, and among them some of Frans's sons, and, on the other hand, the painters of the peasant world such as Adriaan van Ostade. Some of the best architectural and still-life artists, as well as the most celebrated genre painters of Holland, Metsu, Ter Borch, and Steen, arose directly or indirectly from the studio of Hals, a view of which exists in a picture by Job Berck-Heyde in the Haarlem Museum. It shows the interior of the studio, in which a number of young and middle-aged men are drawing from a nude model, and it is dated 1652. The old master is greeting Wouverman, a former pupil; round the table sit Dirk Hals; Herman, Johannes, Frans, and Nicolas, the sons of old Frans; Dirk van Deelen, Pieter Modyn, Gerrit Berck-Heyde, and the painter of the picture. Of these Gerrit Berck-Heyde was the only one still young enough to be a pupil; the presence of the others testifies to the reputation of the old master to whose studio they continued to resort for instruction in their art. The following works of Frans Hals are in European galleries:

HALS, FRANS, the younger, the most famous of the sons of Frans Hals the elder, flourished from 1637 to 1669. He painted portraits and still-life, and worked in the style of his father, whom he sometimes copied. His best-known pictures are a 'Piper and a Violin Player,' in the Gallery at Schwerin, 'Playing and Singing Boys,' in the Brussels Gallery, and representations of still-life at Berlin and Utrecht.

HALS, HERMAN, the eldest son of Frans Hals the elder, was born at Haarlem in 1611, and died in 1669. He painted conversation pieces.

HALS, JOHANNES, a son of Frans Hals the elder, was born at Haarlem, and died in 1650. He was known by the name 'Gulden Ezel (golden easel),' and painted figures and genre subjects.

HALS, NICOLAS, the youngest son of Frans Hals the elder, was born in 1628. He painted peasants and landscapes.

HALS, REYNIER, a son of Frans Hals the elder, was born in 1627, and died before 1689. He was a mediocre painter of genre subjects, and one only of his pictures has been discovered, 'A Young Girl eating stew from an earthen pot.' Probably many others of his works pass under the name of his uncle, Dirk Hals, or of some other painter.

HALTER, CHRISTOPH, a German historical painter, was born at Nuremberg in 1593. He was a pupil of Georg Gärtner, and died in 1648.

HALWACHS, MICHAEL, (HALPAX, or HALWAX,) an Austrian historical painter, studied at Venice under Johann Karl Loth, called Carlotto, and in 1700 settled at Prague, where he painted several pictures. He died in Austria in 1715, or perhaps later. Among his works are 'St. Barbara,' painted for the Benedictine church of St. Nicholas in Prague, and 'St. Cecilia,' 'David,' and 'St. Florian,' for the Minorite church of St. James.

HAM, JAN BAPTIST, who was born at Middelburg in 1771, studied at the Academy of his native town, but afterwards went to Liège, where he entered the studio of Le Franc, a genre painter. He afterwards returned to his native town, where he died in 1802.

HAMBACH, JOHANN MICHAEL, was a painter who flourished at Cologne from 1672 to 1686. He had the faculty of imitating lifeless objects to deception, and among his subjects were tables set out with dishes, and groups of weapons and harness; two of these pictures are to be seen in the Wallraf-Richartz Museum at Cologne.

HAMILTON, ANTON IGNAZ, the son of Johann Georg Hamilton, born at Vienna in 1694, was instructed by his father, and adopted the same class of subjects for his paintings—chiefly horses and still-life. He was for seven years in the service of the Duke of Saxe-Weimar, and was afterwards court painter to Augustus III., King of Poland and Elector of Saxony. He died at Hubertsburg in 1777.

HAMILTON, CARL WILHELM, the third son and pupil of James Hamilton, was born at Vienna in 1668, or more probably at Brussels in 1670, and died at Augsburg in 1754. He entered the service of Bishop Alexander Sigmund of Augsburg, for whom he painted many pictures. His works represent birds, plants, and reptiles, after the model of Van Schriek.

HAMILTON, FERDINAND PHILIPP, the eldest son of James Hamilton, was born at Brussels in 1664. Though he studied under his father, he was influenced more by the style of Weenix and other Dutch masters, than by his parent's instruction and example. He settled at Vienna, and, like his brother Johann Georg, was appointed painter to the Emperor Charles VI. He died at Vienna in 1750. He painted chiefly animals and birds of prey, frequently engaged in strife; but he occasionally chose still-life for his subjects. He was the best painter of this family of Scoto-Flemish artists settled in Germany.

The following are among his best works :

Frankfort.	Stadel.	A Bunch of Grapes.
Munich.	Gallery.	Dead Game.
Vienna.	Gallery.	A Leopard defending its prey against a Vulture. 1722.
"	"	Dead Game.
"	"	Turkeys and Fox.
"	"	Three Chamois. 1722.
"	"	Four Vultures. 1723.
"	"	Animals. 1724.
"	"	Wolf and Dead Stag. 1720.
"	"	Dead Game. 1749.

His son, JOHN HAMILTON, was an animal painter, who died at Vienna about 1750.

HAMILTON, GAVIN, was descended from the Hamiltons (or De Hamiltons) of Murdieston, and was born at Lanark in 1730. After receiving a liberal education he went to Italy, and resided at Rome the greater part of his life. He was more distinguished for his promotion of the fine arts, than for his skill as a painter. His best pictures are subjects from Homer's 'Iliad': 'Achilles grasping the dead body of Patroclus, and rejecting the consolation of the Grecian Chiefs,' 'Achilles parting with Briseis,' 'Achilles dragging the body of Hector tied to his Car,' 'Andromache weeping over the body of Hector,' and an 'Apollo,' are among his most esteemed works. In 1773 he published at Rome an interesting work, the 'Schola Italica Picturæ,' for the purpose of demonstrating the progress of the art from the time of Leonardo da Vinci to the period which succeeded the school of the Carracci. He died at Rome in 1797.

HAMILTON, HUGH DOUGLAS, an Irish portrait painter, was born at Dublin about 1734. He studied under James Mannin, and at first worked in crayons in Dublin, and then in London, obtaining a good connection. In 1778 he went to Italy, where he remained several years, and under the advice of Flaxman, took to painting in oils. On his return to Dublin, in 1792, he was elected a member of the Royal Hibernian Academy. He died at Dublin in 1806. Amongst his works are :

Dean Kirwan preaching.	(Royal Dublin Society.)
Medusa.
Prometheus.
Cupid and Psyche.
Mrs. Hartley.
Major Stanley.
Lady Horton. 1773.
Edward, 12th Earl of Derby. 1773.	} (Earl of Derby, Knowsley Hall.)
Charles Brodrick, Archbishop of Cashel.
Richard, Lord Edgeworth.
William Magee, Archbishop of Dublin.
William, 1st Lord Plunket, Lord Chancellor of Ireland.
Lord Edward Fitzgerald. (Duke of Leinster.)
Rt. Hon. Lesley Forster, Speaker of the House of Commons of Ireland.	} (Mansion House, Dublin.)
Colonel Sankey, Lord Mayor of Dublin.

HAMILTON, JAMES, who was born at Murdieston, Fifeshire, about 1640, excelled as a painter of fruit and still-life. He left England during the Commonwealth, and settled in Brussels, where, after a sojourn of some years in Germany, he died about 1720. His descendants are often called either De Hamilton, as natives of Brussels, or more frequently Von Hamilton, from their residence in Germany.

HAMILTON, JAMES, who was born in Ireland in 1819, went to America at an early age, and settled in Philadelphia. He was brought up to commercial pursuits, but early displaying a talent for art, he adopted it as a profession. In 1854 he came to England, but returned to America in 1856. He furnished the illustrations for Dr. Kane's 'Arctic Explorations,' the 'Arabian Nights,' 'Ancient Mariner,' and other popular works. Among his paintings may be named 'The Capture of the Serapis,' 'Old Ironsides,' 'Wrecked Hopes,' and 'Egyptian Sunset.' He died in 1878.

HAMILTON, JOHANN GEORG, the second son and pupil of James Hamilton, was born at Brussels in 1666. He was employed by Frederick I. of Prussia, and painted for the Emperor Charles VI. at Vienna, where he died about 1733. His pictures chiefly represent horses and stags: occasionally he painted dead animals and hunting weapons. There are five works by him in the Vienna Gallery, a 'Dead Hare' in the Munich Gallery, and four pictures of horses in the Dresden Gallery.

HAMILTON, JOHN, an amateur landscape painter, flourished in the latter half of the 18th century. In 1766 he was a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, and afterwards secretary and vice-president. He etched the illustrations for Grose's 'Ancient Armour and Weapons.'

HAMILTON, WILLIAM, an historical painter, was born of Scottish parentage in Chelsea in 1751. When very young he accompanied Antonio Zucchi to Italy, and after a residence of some years at Rome, he returned to England, and soon distinguished himself as a painter. Hamilton was extensively employed in the publication of Boydell's Shakespeare, Macklin's Bible and British Poets, and Bowyer's English History, both to the approbation of his employers, and the admiration of the public. His coloured drawings may be placed among the most tasteful and effective efforts in that style. He also painted a considerable number of portraits, especially of theatrical personages, as well as the panels of Lord Fitzgibbon's state carriage, now in the South Kensington Museum. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1774, and became an Associate in 1784, and an Academician in 1789. He died in London in 1801. There are two water-colour drawings by him in the South Kensington Museum, 'Eve and the Serpent' (1801), and 'Gleaners' (1796).

HAMMACHER, —, an historical and portrait painter of Oldenburg, was invited by the Prince-Bishop to Breslau, to paint pictures of the Saints, to which class of work his devout character was well suited. He also executed a large number of portraits. He died at Breslau in 1865.

HAMMER, CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, a German topographical draughtsman and engraver, was born at Dresden in 1775, but the date of his death is not known. He painted views in Dresden, St. Petersburg, London, and other places, in oil, water-colours, and sepia, with much skill and truthfulness.

HAMMER, JÖRG, an historical painter, studied at Munich under his father, and made his first attempt in 1570. He died in 1610.

HAMON, JEAN LOUIS, a French subject painter, was born May 8th, 1821, at St. Loup, a hamlet in the parish of Plouah, in Brittany. His early surroundings were of the humblest: his father was employed in the customs, and the family occupied a little cottage on the sea-shore. He was originally intended for the priesthood, and it was to the Brothers of the Christian Doctrine that he owed his elementary instruction. His artistic tendencies, however, soon developed, and he was enabled by a modest pension of 500 francs to proceed to Paris in 1840. By the advice of Ingres, he studied for some time in the Louvre, but his systematic art-training did not begin till he entered the studio of Delaroche. During the period of his studentship, he eked out his scanty resources by painting 'Stations of the Cross' for a miserably small remuneration. He continued his studies under Gleyre, when that painter took over Delaroche's atelier, and he found in him a constant friend. Through him, he obtained some commissions, which somewhat improved his condition, and from 1849 to 1852, as a ready means of subsistence, he designed for the Sèvres manufactory, obtaining at the London Exhibition of 1851 a medal for an enamelled casket. He was always partial to the ceramic art, and he also practised another branch of applied art, fan-painting, in which he produced some charming designs. Although he first exhibited at the Salon in 1848, his works did not attract notice till 1853, when he produced his idyll, 'My sister is not there,' for which he was awarded a medal, and in 1855 he received the Legion of Honour. Throughout his life he suffered more or less from illness, and added to this, he had the troubles occasioned by his own simple-mindedness and good-natured encouragement of worthless friends, who preyed upon him. His affairs at length became so involved, that in 1862 he found himself compelled to quit France. He spent some time in Rome, and in 1865 settled at Capri, where he sojourned several years. Having discharged his liabilities, he returned to Paris in 1871, married, and settled at St. Raphael, where he built himself a house. His happiness was not, however, long-lived, for his health again gave way, and he died May 29th, 1874, when about to seek a cure at the waters of Vichy. The characteristic of Hamon's art is its grace and tenderness. This may perhaps cause a want of power in some of his pictures, but the Arcadian charm of his subjects is a great relief from the coldness and pretence of the classic school to which he belonged. His colour is subdued and unobtrusive, and he greatly delighted in delicate grey and silvery tones. The following is a list of his principal works:

The Tomb of Our Lord. 1848. (Marseilles Museum.)
The Roman Placard. 1849.
The Seraglio. 1849.
The Puppet-Show. 1852. (Luxembourg Gallery.)
My sister is not there. 1853.

HAMON, PIERRE PAUL, a French genre, portrait, and still-life painter, was born at Livarot, Calvados, in 1817. He studied under Cogniet, and died in 1860 at Lisieux, in the Museum of which place are two pictures of 'Dead Game' by him.

HAMPE, CARL FRIEDRICH, a German genre painter, was born at Berlin in 1772. He studied at the Berlin Academy, especially under Niedlich and Frisch, and was afterwards drawing-master to the Royal Family. He died at Berlin in 1848. The Berlin National Gallery contains the following pictures by him:

Luther's Room in Wittenberg. 1821.

Fountain in the Courtyard of a Castle. 1819.

Feudal Castle by Moonlight. 1817.

HANCKÉ, CHARLES HENRI, a French painter and lithographer, born at Bouxviller in 1808, was a pupil of Pferrdorff and Lesourd-Beauregard. He went to Paris, and for fifteen years managed the famous lithographic establishment of M. Fromentin. Several lithographs of views on the Rhine and Moselle were executed by him. He died at Bouxviller in 1869.

HANCOCK, ROBERT, an engraver, was born at Burslem in Staffordshire about 1731, and died in 1817. He was employed in the pottery works at Battersea, where he possibly learned engraving from Brooks or Frye. Thence he returned to his native town, but afterwards practised as an engraver in mezzotint, Valentine Green being his pupil. The latter part of his life was passed at Worcester and Bristol, where he engraved some small portraits for booksellers, but not in mezzotint. He engraved in mezzotint several portraits, among which are the following:

General William Kingsley; after Sir J. Reynolds.

Lady Chambers; after the same.

Miss Day, afterwards Lady Fenhoulet; after the same.

William Hopley, Verger of the Cathedral of Worcester; after J. Wright.

Edward Schofield, a dwarf; after the same.

Robert Hancock, engraver, of Worcester; after the same. Only one impression of this plate was taken.

R. Lovett; after the same.

HAND, RICHARD, a native of Warwickshire, practised for some time in Ireland, painting landscapes and fruit. He afterwards applied himself to glass-painting, and settled in England, where he died before 1817.

HAND, THOMAS, a landscape painter, studied under George Morland, and became one of his boon companions. He made clever copies of his master's works, which he palmed off as genuine originals; but he occasionally exhibited sporting and rustic pictures at the Royal Academy from 1792 to 1804, after which year his name disappears.

HANDASYDE, CHARLES, a miniature and enamel painter, flourished about the end of the 18th century. In 1765 he gained a Society of Arts' premium, and he exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1776. He mezzotinted two portraits of himself.

HANDEL, MAXIMILIAN, a German painter, born at Prague in 1696, was a pupil of Kupetzky, and died at Vienna in 1759. There are by him in the Vienna Gallery a portrait of an old man, and another of a young man in a black cloak.

HANDERIOT, FRANÇOIS, a French engraver mentioned by Florent Le Comte, executed, among other prints, a plate representing 'St. John thrown into the Caldron of boiling Oil,' after Le Brun.

HANDMANN, EMMANUEL, a Swiss painter of portraits and historical subjects, was born at Basle in 1718. He studied first under Schnetzler at Schaffhausen, and then under J. Restout at Paris. After four years' sojourn in Italy, he returned to his native place, and died in 1781.

HANFSTÄNGL, FRANZ, was born in the village of Baiernrain, in Upper Bavaria, of very poor parents, in 1804. In 1816 he went to Munich, and entered a drawing school, and afterwards the smaller Academy. He next devoted himself to lithography, under the tuition of Senefelder, and in 1834 he went to Paris to learn Lemercier's system of printing from stone. In 1835 he was appointed to make lithographic copies of the paintings in the Dresden Gallery. It was at this time that an insurrection occurred at Dresden, and as Hanfstängl's house was occupied by insurgents he was himself threatened with death, from which he was saved only by his possession of a presentation snuff-box containing the portrait of the King of Prussia. Besides his oil paintings and water-colour sketches, he interested himself greatly in taking measures for the reproduction of paintings, and with a view to this, devoted himself to the perfection of a galvanic apparatus. Photography, however, took the place of it, and to the practice of that branch of art he devoted himself with equal zeal, so that he was selected from among twenty-two candidates to photograph the principal paintings in the Munich Gallery. He received the honorary distinction of Counsellor to the Duke of Saxe-Coburg. His death occurred at Munich in 1877.

HANGEST, EGBERT MARINUS FREDERIK DE. See DE HANGEST.

HANNAN, WILLIAM, was a native of Scotland, who served his apprenticeship to a cabinet-maker, but afterwards devoted himself to painting. He came to London, and was patronized by Lord Le Despenser, who employed him to paint several of the ceilings at his seat at West Wycombe; one being from a design by Cipriani. Woollett engraved some of his landscapes. He died at West Wycombe in 1775.

HANNAS, MARC ANTON, an engraver, was a native of Augsburg, who lived at the end of the 16th and the beginning of the 17th centuries, and by whom are the following plates:

The Resurrection.
The Scourging of St. Francis.
Ecce Homo.
The Steps of Age.

HANNEMAN, ADRIAAN, a Dutch portrait painter, was born at the Hague in 1611. He was a pupil of Jan van Ravesteyn, and an imitator of Van Dyck, and he distinguished himself as a portrait painter at the Hague, but the encouragement given to the arts by Charles I. induced him to visit England soon after Van Dyck's arrival in this country. His talents procured him immediate employment, and, during a residence here of sixteen years, he painted the portraits of several of the nobility, and greatly improved his style by studying and copying the works of Van Dyck. He returned to Holland on the commencement of the civil wars, and resided at the Hague, where he became court painter to Mary, Princess of Orange, and in 1665 director of the Academy. He died there in 1680. Hanneman occasionally painted historical subjects, of which the best is an emblematical picture of 'Peace,' in the council-chamber of the States at the Hague. He painted a portrait of Charles II., before the Restoration, of which there is an engraving by Hendrik Danckerts. At Hampton Court are portraits of Peter Oliver, the celebrated miniature painter, Mary, Princess of Orange, and William III., when young. In the Vienna Gallery are portraits of Charles I. and Van Dyck; in the Rotterdam Museum, one of Johan De Witt, 1652; and in Frankfurt, two portraits.

HANNEMAN, WILLEM, a portrait painter, and the son of Adriaan Hanneman, flourished in the reign of Charles I., but died young.

HANRICH, SAMUEL GOTTLIEB, was a native of Neusol in Hungary, and a pupil of Kupetzky. He was a great traveller, and in the year 1726 he was working at Berlin, from whence he went to Brunswick, and afterwards came to London.

HANSCH, ANTON, a landscape painter, who was originally a maker of artificial flowers, was born at Vienna in 1815, but did not devote himself to art until 1837. He studied the old masters, and also painted from nature, with the help of Prof. Mossmar's instructions. He travelled in Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, and the Tyrol, and was most successful in his mountain scenery. His love of art was so great that he often spent nights upon the rugged hills of the Lower Alps, or took refuge in the poorest huts from the mountain storms, whilst he pursued his observation of nature. Pictures from his brush are in the Emperor of Austria's collection, and in the Vienna and other galleries. His smaller ones are the more successful. He died at Salzburg in 1876. Among his best pictures are the following:

Lake Constance at Sunset.
Pine Forest in Salzkammergut.
Sketch by the Golling Cascade.
After the Storm.
View from the Wilds of Styria.
Alpine Forest.
Glacier of the Oetz Valley.
The Wetterhorn.
View on the Koenig See. 1849. } Vienna Gallery.
Glaciers on the Jungfrau.

HANSELAERE, PIETER VAN, born at Ghent in 1786, was a pupil of Huffel in the Academy of that city, but went in 1809 to Paris to study under David. In 1814, his 'Abel's Sacrifice' gained the first prize for historical painting, which provided him with the means for passing a year in Italy, where he produced many beautiful pictures, and was made court painter to the King of Naples, and a member of the academies of that city and of Rome. After his return he was, in 1829, appointed professor in the Academy of Design at Ghent, in which city he died in 1862. Several churches in Belgium possess altar-pieces by him, and the Museum at Ghent has his 'Martyrdom of St. Stephen.'

HANSEN, CARL CHRISTIAN CONSTANTIN, born at Rome in 1804, was the son of Hans Hansen, a Danish portrait painter, who was born in 1769, and died in 1828. He at first studied architecture under Hesch, but soon gave it up in favour of painting, both genre and historical, and from 1835 to 1844 he resided at Rome. He died at Copenhagen in 1880. His best works are the frescoes in the vestibule of the University of Copenhagen, which represent scenes from Greek Mythology.

HANSEN, KAREL LODEWYK, born at Amsterdam in 1765, was a scholar of Pieter Barbiers, and became a member of the Amsterdam Academy. He painted landscapes, views of cities and villages, and also interiors. He died at Amsterdam in 1840.

HANSEN, LAMBERT JAN, a son of Karel Lodewyk Hansen, was born at Staphorst in 1803, and died in 1859. He was a pupil of Pieneman, and painted interiors.

HANSKEN, KLEYN. See ELBURG, HANSJE VAN, and also VEREYCKE.

HANSONN, CHRISTIAN HEINRICH, born at Altona in 1791, was self-taught, and led a wandering life as house painter, portrait painter, and clown, till he went with a Danish painter, Bravo, to Rome, where he remained seven years. After that he returned to his native city, by the aid of which he was enabled again to visit Italy. From 1830 to 1845 he resided at Munich, where he painted most of his historical pictures. In 1845 he visited Austria and Italy, and in 1850 he returned to Altona, where he died in 1863. Among his works may be named, a 'Magdalen,' 'The Raising of the Widow's Son at Nain,' 'Christ on the Mount of Olives,' and 'The Fisher.'

HANTZSCH, JOHANN GOTTLIEB, a Saxon genre painter, was born at Neudorf, near Dresden, in 1794. In 1811 he entered the Dresden Academy, and in 1815 he removed to the atelier of the renowned portrait and historical painter, Professor Rössler. For a long time he worked in very straitened circumstances, in conjunction with his future brother-in-law, Peschel, and made the valuable acquaintance of Ludwig Richter, Ernst Oehme, Rietschel, and Otto Wagner, the decorative and landscape painter; he was also helped considerably by Quandt; but he was chiefly employed in later life as a drawing-master. He died at Dresden in 1848. The Berlin National Gallery contains a painting by him entitled 'At the Dentist's,' dated 1839.

HANZELET. See APPIER.

HAPPEL, PETER HEINRICH, a landscape painter, was born at Arnsberg in Westphalia in 1813, and died at Düsseldorf in 1854. Among his pictures may be named 'The Way to the Village,' 'A Mill,' and 'A View in the Isar Valley.'

HARDENBERG, WILLEM SCHUBERT VAN. See EHRENBURG.

HARDIME, PIETER, a Dutch painter, born at Antwerp in 1678, was a scholar of his brother Simon Hardime, whom he altogether surpassed. He resided chiefly at the Hague, but spent some time successively at other towns in Holland as well as in Prussia. Having married the sister of the abbot of the Bernardines, near Antwerp, he was commissioned to paint four large pictures for that convent, representing the 'Four Seasons,' in which he introduced the fruits and flowers special to each. In conjunction with Terwesten, who painted the figures, he ornamented the apartments of the Hotel of the Count of Wassenaer. Towards the latter part of his life he retired to Dort, where he died in 1758.

HARDIME, SIMON, a Dutch painter, born at Antwerp in 1672, was the son of an Italian, and an elder brother of Pieter Hardime. He was a pupil of Crepu, and was a successful flower painter, an excellent specimen of his work being in the palace at Breda. He was working in London in 1720, and died here in 1737. In the Bordeaux Museum are two pictures by him of 'Flowers.'

HARDING, CHESTER, a portrait painter, was born at Conway, Massachusetts, of poor parentage, in 1792. He served in the war of 1812, and after having employed himself in cabinet-making and sign-painting, he took to portrait painting. In 1823, and again in 1843, he visited England. Among his portraits are those of Presidents Madison, Monroe, and Adams, Samuel Rogers, General Shearman, Daniel Webster, and several others. He died at Boston in 1866.

HARDING, EDWARD, an engraver, who was a son of Sylvester Harding, engraved some of his father's works, as well as some plates for the 'Biographical Mirrour.' He died in 1796, when only twenty years of age.

HARDING, GEORGE PERFECT, a water-colour painter, the son of Sylvester Harding, practised as a portrait painter, and occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1802 to 1840. He is, however, distinguished chiefly by his water-colour copies of English historical portraits, of which he executed a great number. He also furnished the illustrations for many historical and antiquarian publications, such as the works of Lodge, Jesse, Moule, Neale, Brayley, &c. He died at Lambeth in 1853.

HARDING, JAMES DUFFIELD, a landscape painter in oil and water-colours, was born at Deptford in 1798. At the age of fifteen he received a few lessons from Prout, but failing to satisfy himself, he resolved to abandon the idea of becoming a painter. He was then placed under John Pye, the engraver, but after a year's trial he returned to painting. In 1818 he was awarded a medal by the Society of Arts, and in the same year he first exhibited at the Water-Colour Society, of which he was elected an Associate in 1821, and a full member in 1822. He left the Society in 1847 in order to become a candidate for the Associateship of the Royal Academy, but failing to obtain Academical honours, he returned to it in 1857. Harding throughout his life had full employment as a teacher of drawing, and as such inculcated various theories, which did not always meet with a ready acceptance. He also devoted considerable attention to lithography in connection with the many works on art which he published. He died at Barnes in 1863. Amongst his works are:

PAINTINGS IN OIL.

The Alps from between Lecco and Como.
The Jungfrau.
Anglers on the Loire.
View of Fribourg. (Sir T. Brassey.)

PAINTINGS IN WATER-COLOURS.

The Falls of Schaffhausen.
On the Moselle. (Sir R. Wallace.)
The Park.
Pollards in Windsor Meadows. (South Kensington Museum.)
Tintern Abbey. (The same.)
Landscape with Hovels. (The same.)

HARDING, J. W., an engraver, practised in the latter part of the 18th century, chiefly in the dotted manner, and was engaged upon the works of Angelica Kauffmann and her contemporaries. He was the author of 'Sketches in North Wales,' published in 1810.

HARDING, SAMUEL, an engraver, who was a son of Sylvester Harding, executed some of the portraits in the 'Biographical Mirrour,' published 1795—1798.

HARDING, SYLVESTER, a miniature painter, was born at Newcastle-under-Lyme in 1745. Early apprenticed to a distasteful trade, he ran away and joined some strolling players. In 1775 he came to London, and began to practise as a miniature painter, exhibiting at the Academy from 1777 to 1802. He subsequently engaged in the publication of various works, illustrated and otherwise. He died in London in 1809.

HARDIVILLER, CHARLES ACHILLE D', a French historical, portrait, and genre painter, born at Beauvais in 1795, was a pupil of David, and became drawing-master to the Duke of Bordeaux. The date of his death is not given.

HARDORF, GEROLD, an historical and portrait painter, born near Hamburg in 1769, received his first instruction in art in that city from Anton Tischbein, and after 1788 from Casanova at Dresden. Returning in 1796 to Hamburg, he was appointed professor, and he there painted two fine altarpieces for the church of St. Maria Magdalena—the 'Crucifixion,' and the 'Institution of the Last Supper.' A noticeable earlier work of his was 'Cain after the Murder of his Brother,' painted in 1794. He died at Hamburg in 1864. His sons RUDOLF and GEROLD were also painters, the former gaining distinction as a sea painter.

HARDY, BERNHARD KASPAR, an amateur enamel painter and modeller in wax, who held the post of 'Domvikar' at Cologne, was born in that city in 1726, and died there in 1819. His best painting in enamel is the 'Redeemer,' after Carlo Dolci. He also produced oil pictures, and works in gilded bronze, besides a large number of models in wax.

HARDY, FRANÇOIS and GILLES, two brothers, who lived at Liège about 1550, are noticed by Balkema as having been the first to abandon the old style of painting to follow that of Lambert Lombard.

HARDY, THOMAS, was an English portrait painter and engraver, who flourished about the end of the 18th century. Amongst his portraits are:

Lady Cavendish, as a child, playing with a dog.
John Horne Tooke. (National Portrait Gallery.)

Amongst his engravings, which are chiefly in mezzotint, are:

John, Duke of Dorset; after Sir Joshua Reynolds. 1799.
Prince William of Gloucester; after Beechey. 1802.
Arthur Blayney; after the same.
John Moody; after himself. 1792.
John Reeves; after himself. 1793.
Sir Henry Gould; after himself. 1794.

HAREFELDT, BERNARD, (HAREVELD, or HARDTFELD), an indifferent Flemish engraver, flourished at Antwerp about the middle of the 17th century. One of his prints was the 'Crucifixion,' after Rubens.

HARGRAVE, —, was a mezzotint engraver, who practised early in the second part of the 18th century.

HARGREAVES, THOMAS, a miniature painter, was born at Liverpool in 1775. He came to London in 1793, and was articled as an assistant to Sir Thomas Lawrence for two years, but his health failing, he subsequently returned to Liverpool, where he had a large practice. His works appeared at the Liverpool Academy, at the Royal Academy, and at the Society of British Artists, of which he was a member from its foundation. He died at Liverpool in 1846, leaving three sons who followed his profession. One of them, GEORGE

HARGREAVES, was from 1824 to 1846 a member of the Society of British Artists, and died in 1870. Amongst the miniatures of Thomas Hargreaves are:

Sir Thomas Lawrence.
Mrs. Hargreaves. 1794.
Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone and his sister as children.
Lord Edward Fitzgerald.
James Bartleman, the musician. 1817. (South Kensington Museum.)
Mrs. Denison.

HARI, JOHANNES, a Dutch artist, who painted portraits in oil, miniature, pastel, and water-colours, and also conversation pieces, was born at the Hague in 1772. In 1794 he received a gold medal from the Academy of his birthplace, and in 1835 became a member of that of Amsterdam. In the course of thirty-one years he took 1200 portraits. He died in 1850.

HARINGHS, DANIEL, a good portrait painter, was born at Loosduynen in 1636, and died in 1706. He was several times elected a director of the Academy at Prague.

HARINGHS, MATHYS, a portrait painter of Leeuwarden, was working in that place from 1636 to 1644. His portraits are said to have been excellent likenesses, and well painted.

HÄRLIN, FRIEDRICH. See HERLIN.

HARLINGEN, PIETER VAN. See FEDDES.

HARLOW, GEORGE HENRY, an historical and portrait painter, was born in London in 1787. His father, an East India merchant, died some months before his birth, and he was therefore left entirely to the care of his mother. After he had received some small share of education at grammar schools, and at Westminster, his mother, discovering his predilection for painting, placed him with Hendrik De Cort, the landscape painter. Finding that he made but little progress under De Cort, he left him for the studio of Samuel Drummond, with whom he remained about twelve months, when he grew desirous of another instructor, and by the advice of the Duchess of Devonshire was placed under the care of Sir Thomas Lawrence. The terms on which he was received by this fashionable portrait painter would seem strange in any other profession. He was to pay one hundred guineas yearly, as a pupil; that is to say, "for permission to have access to Sir Thomas's house at nine o'clock in the morning, with leave to copy his pictures till four o'clock in the afternoon, but to receive no instruction of any kind." It appears, however, that the master soon perceived the talents of the pupil, and availed himself of them by employing him to prepare some of his pictures in the dead colouring, and to advance copies. He remained with Lawrence about eighteen months, and it is allowed that he entered more largely into the peculiar style and character of that master's performances than any other of his pupils. His success must be attributed solely to himself; for Lawrence, though he employed him in forwarding portraits, never condescended to instruct him further than how to accomplish that drudgery. It seems that they separated on not very amicable terms; and as a quarrel with Lawrence was a quarrel with the Royal Academy, the result was that when Harlow afterwards offered himself as a candidate for the Associateship, he was rejected: Fuseli was the only member who voted in his favour, vindicating himself by observing, that "he voted for the talent, and not for the man." Harlow first exhibited at the Academy in 1805. His earliest works were historical, 'Bolingbroke's Entry into London,' and 'The Quarrel between Queen Elizabeth and Essex.' As these attempts were not very successful, he was induced to paint portraits; and as he had considerable facility of hand, skill in drawing, and generally caught peculiarities of character, he soon obtained many sitters. But the work that first attracted the attention of the public was the 'Hubert and Prince Arthur,' which he painted for a Mr. Leader. This person's knowledge, or judgment, it seems, was not in accordance with that of the public, for he returned the picture to the artist in exchange for portraits of his daughters. The success of his portraits, and the praise, without patronage, which his historical attempts obtained, induced Harlow to try a blending of the two styles in one subject; and, accordingly, he commenced what is called 'The Trial of Queen Catharine,' or, more properly, 'The Kemble Family,' which was painted for Mr. Welch, the professor of music. Its popularity was very great; and the print which was engraved from it in mezzotint by George Clint had an extensive sale, both in England and on the continent. In 1818, Harlow went to Italy to acquire the art of drawing the human figure with purity and taste; and he astonished the Italian artists by the rapidity with which he copied the 'Transfiguration' of Raphael. Canova complimented him by saying, that "it seemed rather the work of eighteen weeks than of eighteen days," the time in which he made this correct and beautiful copy, of the same size as the original. He was introduced to the Pope by Canova, and was elected a member of the Academy of St. Luke, to which he gave his picture of 'The Presentation of the Cardinal's Hat to Wolsey in Westminster Hall.' He returned to London early in 1819, and in a few days was attacked by an affection of the throat, which terminated his life in his thirty-second year. Harlow's exhibited works were almost wholly portraits, many of them being of small size. Among others were those of Benjamin West, Sir William Beechey, Northcote, Stothard, Fuseli, and Miss Stephens, afterwards Countess of Essex.

HARMS, AUGUST FRIEDRICH, a son of Johann Oswald Harms, was a painter, by whom there is an altar-piece, 'The Ascension,' in Brunswick Cathedral. He also painted landscapes and architectural pieces, several examples of which are to be found in Brunswick and Copenhagen. On his father's death he removed to Cassel, where he died in 1745. Two pictures of 'Dead Game' by him are in the Brunswick Gallery.

HARMS, JOHANN OSWALD, a landscape and architectural painter, was born at Hamburg in 1642. He was a pupil of Ellerbrock, and lived some time in Rome, where he became successful in imitating Salvator Rosa. He afterwards worked in Dresden at theatrical decoration, and died at Hamburg in 1708. Paintings by him are to be met with in Brunswick and Schwerin. He also etched nine plates of ruins, and eight of theatrical scenes and landscapes (1678).

HARNIER, WILHELM VON, an amateur portrait painter, was born at Darmstadt in 1801, and died at Munich in 1838. Among his portraits is that of Admiral Codrington. In the Darmstadt Gallery are copies by him after Leonardo da Vinci and Raphael.

HARO, JUAN DE, was a Spanish painter who flourished at Madrid, but nothing is known of him except that he was engaged in 1604, with Luis de Carbalhal and Pantoja de La Cruz, to paint the altar-pieces of the Augustine College founded by Cardinal Quiroga in the town of Madrigal. Ceán Bermudez notes especially a 'St. Thomas of Villanueva,' signed by Haro, at a side altar, and considers it equal in drawing, colour, and composition to the works of his better-known contemporaries. Several pictures in other parts of the church appear to be by the same hand.

HARP, GERARD VAN. See HERP.

HARPER, ADOLF FRIEDRICH, born at Berlin in 1725, was instructed by his father, Johann Harper. He then devoted eight years to travelling in France and Italy, and in particular improved his talents for drawing and painting from nature by studying under Richard Wilson at Rome. After this he entered the service of the Duke of Württemberg, and in 1759 became court painter, but having in this capacity to execute a large amount of mechanical work, such as door-pieces and arabesques, his capabilities as an artist soon exhibited a falling off. Among his earlier and better works is the 'Garden Theatre in the Villa Madama at Rome' (1760). He was esteemed as a teacher at the Academy of Fine Arts at Stuttgart, of which he was rector in 1771-2 and 1785-94. He died at Berlin in 1806.

HARPER, JOHANN, born at Stockholm in 1688, was a pupil of Meytens and Kraft. In 1712 he went to Berlin, where in 1716 he was appointed court painter. He died at Potsdam in 1746.

HARRADEN, R. B., an English draughtsman and engraver, practised in the first half of the 19th century. He aquatinted Girtin's views of Paris (1802), and supplied the drawings for 'Cantabrigia depicta' published in 1809. He occasionally exhibited at the Society of British Artists, of which he was a member from 1824 to 1849.

HARRATH, JOSEPH, a German animal and landscape painter, flourished at Munich between 1706 and 1725.

HARRER, HUGO PAUL, an architectural and landscape painter, was born at Eberswalde in Silesia in 1836. He at first studied architecture for three years, but then took up painting. His first pictures appeared at Nuremberg; thence he went to Munich, and from 1861 lived in Italy on account of his health, but afterwards returned to Germany, and lived during the years 1867-68 at Düsseldorf, working four weeks with Oswald Achenbach. Besides his architectural and landscape pieces, he painted several small genre pictures with great success. He died at Rome in 1876.

HARREWYN, FRANCISCUS, a Flemish draughtsman and engraver, born at Brussels in 1680, was a pupil of Romeyn De Hooghe, but was very inferior to his instructor. The following portraits are by him:

John IV., King of Portugal.
Henry of Lorraine, Duke of Guise.
Margaret of Valois.
Albert, Archduke of Austria, kneeling, with St. James by his side; after Rubens.
Isabella, Infanta of Spain, kneeling, with St. Margaret presenting to her a Crown of Flowers; after the same.

HARREWYN, JACOBUS, a Flemish draughtsman and engraver, flourished in the latter part of the 17th century. He engraved two views of Rubens's house at Antwerp, and many of the plates for Le Roy's 'Castella et Prætoria Nobilium Brabantie,' published at Antwerp in 1694. He died after 1701.

HARRIET, FULCHRAN JEAN, was a French historical painter, who was born in Paris, and studied under David. He obtained the 'prix de Rome' in 1798 for his picture of the 'Battle of the Horatii and Curiatii,' and he proceeded to Rome in 1803, but died there in 1805. Amongst his other works are:

Portrait of Himself. 1802.
Androcles and the Lion. 1802.
Horatius Cocles at the Sublician Bridge. 1805.
Hylas carried away by the Nymphs. 1805.

HARRIS, J., an English engraver, who flourished at the end of the 17th century, engraved some architectural views for the fourth volume of the 'Vitruvius Britannicus,' published in 1739, and, in conjunction with John Kip, some large plates of views of gentlemen's seats. There is also by him a plan of the 'Encampment of the Royal Army on Hounslow Heath,' dated 1686.

HARRIS, J., a water-colour painter, was born in the latter half of the 18th century, and worked in the early tinted manner. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1802 to 1813, and died in 1834. There is a water-colour drawing of 'Shipping' by him, dated 1795, in the South Kensington Museum.

HARRIS, MOSES, a natural history draughtsman, was born in 1731, and his works are dated 1766 to 1811. He was engaged for twenty years in drawing, engraving, and colouring the plates for 'The Aurelian; or, Natural History of British Insects,' published in 1766, with his own portrait prefixed to it.

HARRISON, GEORGE H., a landscape painter in water-colours, born at Liverpool in 1816, was the son of Mrs. Harrison, the flower painter. He came to London about 1830, supporting himself by the sale of his drawings of various subjects, and received good advice from Constable. He commenced exhibiting at the Royal Academy in 1840, and was elected an Associate of the Water-Colour Society in 1845. He had considerable practice as a teacher, and tried various methods and various subjects, but finally adhered to landscape painting in water-colours. He died in 1846.

HARRISON, MRS. MARY, a flower and fruit painter in water-colours, was born at Liverpool in 1788. Her maiden name was Rossiter, and she married in 1814. Owing to pecuniary losses and her husband's ill-health, she became the entire support of her family of twelve children. She was an original member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, where she exhibited up to her death in 1875. Wild flowers were her forte, and she made long pedestrian excursions in search of them.

HARRISON, WILLIAM FREDERICK, the eldest son of Mrs. Harrison, the flower painter, died at Goodwick, near Fishguard Bay, South Wales, in 1880. He was an occasional contributor to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy and the Dudley and other Galleries.

HARRISS, D., a water-colour draughtsman, practised in the tinted manner at Oxford about the end of the 18th century. He exhibited a 'View of a Country Seat' at the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1799.

HART, SOLOMON ALEXANDER, an historical painter, born at Plymouth in 1806, was the son of a goldsmith, who had studied under Northcote. In 1820 father and son removed to London, where the former acted as teacher of Hebrew, and the latter was apprenticed to Samuel Warren, the line-engraver. Turning from engraving to painting, he became a student of the Royal Academy in 1823, and began his career as a miniature painter; his first contribution to a public exhibition being a miniature of his father at the Royal Academy in 1826. He contributed several pictures to the exhibition of the Society of British Artists, among which was 'The Elevation of the Law,' originally called 'Interior of a Polish Synagogue,' painted in 1830, which is now in the Vernon Collection, National Gallery. From 1828 to 1844 he exhibited at the British Institution, and in 1830 he sent to the Academy a picture of 'Isaac of York in the Donjon of the Castle of Reginald Front-de-Bœuf,' which attracted considerable attention, and was followed in 1831 by 'English Nobility receiving the Communion of the Catholic Church.' He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1836, and an Academician in 1840. In 1841 and 1842 he visited Italy, and made a collection of sketches. He was appointed Professor of Painting in the Royal Academy in 1854, and held that office until 1863; and in 1865 he was elected Librarian, which office he held till his death, which took place in London in 1881. In the South Kensington Museum is a drawing by him of 'Othello and Iago.'

HARTKAMP. See SMITS, LUDEWYK.

HARTLEY, Miss M., was an amateur etcher, who executed from the life a charming etching of Jedidiah Buxton, the celebrated arithmetician, dated 1764, and a landscape, dated 1761.

HARTMANN, CHRISTIAN FERDINAND, an historical painter, was born at Stuttgart in 1774. He at first devoted himself to medicine, but soon abandoned it for art, and studied painting under Hetsch, going to Rome in 1794. He attained celebrity by his 'Eros and Anteros,' painted in 1803, which was followed by 'Æneas hastening from Troy to the Battle-field.' He made a second journey to Italy in 1820-23, after which he was appointed director of the Academy at Dresden, where he died in 1842. Among his later pictures are:

Hector's Farewell.
The Erlkönig. (Stuttgart Gallery.)
Death robbing a Mother of her Child. (The same.)
Hector and the Trojan Women.
Portrait of Matthison.
Portrait of Quandt.
Portrait of Himself. (Dresden Gallery.)

HARTMANN, FRANZ, the son of Johann Jakob Hartmann, was born at Prague at the beginning of the 18th century, and died young in 1730. He was taught by his father, and imitated the style of Jan Brueghel. His paintings were much esteemed in Bohemia, but are now very rare.

HARTMANN, JOHANN DANIEL WILHELM, who was born at St. Gallen in 1793, and died there in 1862, was clever at painting crests in water-colours, and also small birds and insects. In 1844 he published a collection of shells in coloured lithographs. Some of his heraldic productions are to be seen in the town library of St. Gallen.

HARTMANN, JOHANN JAKOB, who was born at Kutenberg, in Bohemia, in 1680, painted at Prague, about 1716, works in imitation of Jan Brueghel. In the Vienna Gallery are four landscapes by him with scenes typical of the Four Elements. He died about 1730.

HARTMANN, JOHANN JOSEPH, a landscape painter, was born at Mannheim in 1753. He was a pupil of Franz Kobell, and about 1776 went to Switzerland to study from nature, where he executed some admired paintings, among which is one in water-colours of the 'Bieler-See and Island of St. Peter.' The 'Cascade of Rondchâtel' is among his best oil pictures, and is noticeable for his excellent delineation of the fir-tree. He died at Cottet in the canton of Vaud in 1830.

HARTMANN, MATHIAS CHRISTOPH, a genre painter, was born in 1701, and studied under Fues at Nuremberg. He became very clever at depicting comic Jewish scenes such as 'Veitel Itzig in the Dead Man's Shirt' (1827), and 'Fischelguschel putting a stop to the Mouth Harmonica' (1830). He also practised etching, one of his best plates being 'The Sluggard' (1818). He died in 1839.

HARTWAGNER, MICHAEL, an historical painter, was born at Degendorf in Bavaria, and studied at the Academy in Munich, in which city he died in 1775. He painted altar-pieces, portraits, and historical subjects, and also executed several engravings, among which are:

The Death of St. Andrew; after J. K. Loth.

Three plates of architectural subjects; after F. de Couvillers.

Diana and Actæon.

Perseus liberating Andromeda.

HARTZOEKER, THEODOOR, a Dutch historical painter, was born at Utrecht in 1696, and studied in Italy under Balestra. He died at Utrecht in 1740.

HARVEY, Sir GEORGE, a Scottish historical, genre, and landscape painter, was born at St. Ninian's, Perthshire, in 1806. He was first apprenticed to a bookseller, but soon turned his attention to art, and studied in the Trustees' Academy in Edinburgh. On the foundation of the Royal Scottish Academy he was elected an Associate, and he became an Academician in 1829. He made his greatest reputation by his pictures of the Covenanters, but his subjects of Scottish life gained also great popularity. In his early as well as in his more mature works, landscape held a prominent place, and in his later years he devoted himself to this branch of art. He succeeded Sir John Watson Gordon in 1864 as the President of the Royal Scottish Academy, and was knighted in 1867. He died at Edinburgh in 1876. The following are among his chief works:

The Covenanters preaching. 1830. (Glasgow Corporation Galleries.)

A Castaway.

The Examination of Shakespeare before Sir Thomas Lucy on a charge of deer-stealing.

The Battle of Drumclog. 1836.

Sabbath Evening. 1841.

A Highland Funeral. 1844.

The Alarm.

The Covenanters' Communion. } (National Gallery of Scotland.)

Quitting the Manse.

Dawn revealing the New World to Columbus.

The First Reading of the Bible in the crypt of Old St.

Paul's. 1847.

The Night Mail.

The Curlers.

Children blowing soap-bubbles in Grey Friars' Churchyard, Edinburgh.

Bunyan imagining the Pilgrim's Progress in Bedford Gaol. 1857.

Loch Awe and Ben Cruachan.

Scottish Moorland.

Glen Dhu, Isle of Arran. 1866.

The Mountain Pool. 1867.

Glen Falloch. 1869.

HARVEY, WILLIAM, a wood-engraver, born at Newcastle in 1796, was at the age of fourteen apprenticed to Thomas Bewick, and helped his master with his woodcuts for 'Æsop's Fables.' In 1817 he came to London, and became a pupil of Haydon, executing on wood a large cut of the 'Death of Dentatus' by that artist, an engraving still considered remarkable. About 1824 he relinquished engraving, and devoted himself to making designs for woodcuts and copper-plates. Among his best designs are those for the 'Arabian Nights,' and the tasteful vignettes for Northcote's 'Fables.' He also designed the illustrations for Charles Knight's 'Shakespeare,' the 'Babes in the Wood,' 'The Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green,' Hood's 'Eugene Aram,' and many other works. He died at Richmond in 1866.

HASENCLEVER, JOHANN PETER, a genre painter, born at Remscheid, near Solingen, in 1810. At the age of seventeen he was sent to school at Düsseldorf, and soon after to the Academy, in order to complete his studies as an architect, but by the encouragement of Schadow he devoted himself to painting, in which he was at first so unfortunate that his master began to doubt his talent. After having painted portraits for some time in Remscheid, he began to study again in Düsseldorf, and this time with increasing success. In 1838 he went for some years to Munich, and lived with the flower painter Preyer, with whom he in 1840 undertook a journey to Northern Italy. Hasenclever soon after settled down finally in Düsseldorf, where he died in 1853. The following pictures by him are in German galleries:

Berlin. Nat. Gallery. Wine-Testing. 1843.

Düsseldorf. Gall. The Reading-Room. 1843.

Munich. Gall. Testing Wine.

Hieronymus Jobs under Examination. (From the 'Jobiad.')

HASENPFLUG, KARL GEORG ADOLPH, an architectural painter, was born at Berlin in 1802. His father being only a shoemaker in a humble way, his course at the outset was a difficult one; but Gropius, the decorative painter, discovered his talent, and took him to his atelier. He also attended the Academy; but after all the largest portion of his instruction was self-acquired. In 1823 he first attracted attention with a large painting of 'A Cathedral of the Fifteenth Century,' which was purchased by King Frederick William III., and is now in the Berlin National Gallery. In 1832-3 he painted interior and exterior views of Cologne Cathedral; and from 1837 he devoted himself mainly to ruins of monasteries and fortresses, together with cathedral centres. He died at Halberstadt in 1858. The Berlin National Gallery has views of Erfurt and Halberstadt Cathedrals.

HASSEL, JACOB VAN, who flourished about 1650, painted landscapes and rivers; the views being principally in the environs of Rome.

HASSEL, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, worked about the end of the 17th and beginning of the 18th centuries. His portrait was painted by Kneller, and George Lambert studied under him. He was living in 1707.

HASSEL, WILLIAM, an engraver, living in England in 1770, engraved five plates after Bampfylde for C. Anstey's 'Epistola Familiaris,' 1776.

HASSELGREN, GUSTAF ERIK, a Swedish historical painter, was born at Stockholm in 1781, and studied in the Academy of that city. He afterwards went to Berlin, Dresden, Vienna, and for five years to Italy, returning home in 1816, when he became a professor of the Academy at Stockholm, where he died in 1827. The subjects of most of his pictures are taken from the history of Sweden.

HASSELL, EDWARD, a landscape painter, was the son of John Hassell, the engraver. He flourished in the first half of the 19th century, and exhibited at the Society of British Artists, of which he was elected a member in 1841, and afterwards its secretary. He died at Lancaster in 1852. He frequently painted in water-colours, and amongst his works in that medium are the following:

Dublin.	Nat. Gallery.	Rue Martinville, Rouen.
"	"	On the Conway, North Wales.
"	"	Clock Tower, Rouen.
"	"	Pont du Paut, on the Sleden.
"	"	St. Maclou, Rouen.
"	"	Croix de Pierre, Rouen.
London.	South Kensington Museum.	Barrow, Derwentwater.

HASSELL, JOHN, a draughtsman and engraver in aquatint, flourished during the latter part of the 18th and the earlier years of the 19th centuries. He died in 1825. The following works are by him:

- 'Picturesque Guide to Bath and Bristol Hot-Wells.' 1793.
- 'Tour of the Isle of Wight.' 1790.
- 'Life of George Morland.' 1806.
- 'Tour of the Grand Junction Canal.' 1819.
- 'Rides and Walks round London.' 1820.

HASSLWANDER, JOSEPH, an historical painter, born at Vienna in 1812, was the son of a watchmaker, which trade he at first followed, but he afterwards took to art, and entered the Academy. He died at Scheibbs, in Lower Austria, in 1878.

HASTINGS, THOMAS, an amateur etcher, practised in the earlier part of the 19th century. He held an office in the Customs at Liverpool, and published the following works, illustrated by himself:

- 'Vestiges of Antiquity.' 1813.
- 'Etchings from the Works of Richard Wilson.' 1825.
- 'The British Archer.' 1831.

HATCH, GEORGE W., an American line-engraver, was born in the State of New York, and studied under A. B. Durand. He was a good designer and engraver, especially of bank-notes.

HATFIELD, RICHARD, a line-engraver, was born in London in 1809. He studied under Edward Finden, but his eyesight failing, he retired from the practice of his profession some time before his death, which took place in London in 1867. His principal work is 'Cordelia and the Physician,' after Gilbert Stuart Newton.

HATTIGH, JAN BAAK. See BAAK HATTIGH.

HATTIN, JOHN, (or HATTINS,) was an obscure English engraver, by whom, among other things, there is a small plate of a 'View of Old St. Paul's.'

HAUBENSTRICKER, PAUL, was an historical painter and engraver, who flourished at Vienna about 1780, who executed the following plates:

- Calvary; after M. J. Schmidt.
- St. Jerome; after the same.
- St. Paul and St. Anthony; after the same.

HAUBER, JOSEPH, a painter and engraver, born at Geratsried, near Kempten, in 1766, was the son of a carpenter, but he attended the Vienna Academy, and studied further in Munich, where he copied several pictures by Rubens, Mieris, Gerard Dou, and Van Dyck. He painted also portraits, as well as large pictures from sacred history, and there are more than fifty altar-pieces by him in Munich and Upper Bavaria. He became at length a professor at the Academy of Munich, where he died in 1834. His best painting, 'The Dying Saviour,' is well known through Bode's lithograph.

HAUBER, WOLFGANG, a pupil of Altdorfer, was of the South German School, and flourished from 1515 to 1540. His pictures, which are few in number, fall little short of the works of Holbein and Dürer, but he is chiefly known by his engravings. A portrait of Anton Hundertpfundt by him is in the National Gallery of Ireland.

HAUBLIN, NICOLAS, was an engraver, who worked at Frankfort and Leipzig between 1660 and 1680. He engraved several portraits.

HAUCK, AUGUST CHRISTIAN, a portrait painter, was born at Mannheim in 1742, and died at Rotterdam in 1801. There is a portrait of Vice-Admiral Jan Arnold Zoutman by him in the Amsterdam Museum.

HAUCK, FRIEDRICH LUDWIG, a portrait painter, the elder brother of August Christian Hauck, was born at Homburg in 1718, and studied under his father, who was court painter in that town. He afterwards travelled for improvement in Germany and England, and settled in 1744 in Frankfort, from whence he made a tour through Holland. He died at Offenbach in 1801. He was best known by his portraits, but also executed conversation pieces.

HAUDEBOURT, ANTOINETTE CÉCILE HORTENSE, whose maiden name was Lescot, was born in Paris in 1784. She was a pupil of Lethière, but passed a number of years in Italy, where she became acquainted with the architect Haudebourt, whom she married in 1820. Her pictures chiefly represent Italian popular life, but her 'Kissing the Feet in St. Peter's at Rome' (1812) and 'Confirmation by a Greek Bishop' (1814) are successful imitations of the style of Granet. Another of her best works is the 'Saltarello.' She died in Paris in 1845. In the Louvre is her own portrait, painted in 1825.

HAUENSTEIN, JOHANN, a landscape painter, was born at Tiegelfelden in the Canton of Aargau in 1775. In 1806 he went to Rome, where he painted several landscapes, and made many drawings in sepiæ of Rome and its environs.

HAUER, JEAN JACQUES, a French historical and still-life painter, was born at Algesheim in 1751, and died in Paris in 1829. His principal pictures are the 'Death of Marat,' the 'Portrait of Charlotte Corday,' now in the galleries of Versailles, which Hauer commenced during the trial, and finished afterwards in the cell where she awaited execution, and the 'Passage of the Duchess of Angoulême at Blois in 1823,' in the Blois Museum.

HAUER, HANS, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1586. There is by him a set of woodcut portraits of the Electors of Saxony, executed in conjunction with Moses Thym. He also engraved some small copper-plates, among which is a portrait of Daniel Sennert, Professor at Wittenberg, dated 1612. He died at Nuremberg in 1660. He marked his prints JH.

HAUER, JOHANN THOMAS, a mezzotint engraver and drawing-master, was born at Summerin in Hungary in 1748, and studied at Augsburg. His drawings are mostly either historical or architectural: one of the best is a 'Sacrifice in the Temple of Vesta.' He died about 1818.

HAUER, RUPRECHT, an architectural painter, was the son and pupil of Hans Hauer. He afterwards studied at Rome, and there are by him views of the 'Interior of St. Peter's, Rome,' and the 'Interior of the Court House in Nuremberg.' He died in 1667.

HAUGHTON, MOSES, born at Wednesbury, in Staffordshire, in 1734, was brought up as an enamel painter under a Mr. Holden. He afterwards went to Birmingham, and was employed in the manufactory there as an ornament of tea-boards; but his forte lay in the delineation of still-life in water-colours, in which department he was unequalled. As he was a man of quiet, unpretending habits, who passed the greater part of his life at his native place, his superior talents were known only to a few. He died at Ashted, near Birmingham, in 1804. His son, MATTHEW HAUGHTON, engraved some of the ornaments to the first edition of Roscoe's 'Life of Lorenzo de' Medici.'

HAUGHTON, MOSES, a miniature painter, the nephew of the elder painter of the name, was born at Wednesbury about 1772. He was a pupil of George Stubbs, the animal painter, but studied also at the Royal Academy, and became the friend and associate of Henry Fuseli, of whom he painted and engraved a portrait in 1808. He had a masculine style of painting on ivory and prepared paper, that gave his portraits, though in water-colours, the appearance of oil pictures. Fuseli's estimate of Haughton's abilities may be conjectured by his entrusting him with the engraving of his Miltonic pictures, which Haughton carried out with all the spirit of the originals. He was till 1848 a frequent exhibitor at the Academy, but more, perhaps, for the sake of old associations, than from a desire of display. His talent was not confined to miniature. He likewise painted in oil Scriptural and rural subjects, which are generally of a pathetic or sentimental character, and show an intimate acquaintance with nature. Some of his works have been engraved; among others, two very beautiful amatory subjects, entitled 'The Love Dream,' and 'The Captive.'

HAULROYE, RIQUIER, a French ornamental and historical painter, as well as an able miniaturist, was born at Amiens, and died in 1479.

HAUSEGGER, SIGMUND VON, a draughtsman, was born at Montona, in Istria, in 1838, and died in 1864. He was a pupil of Karl Rahl, and is known by his illustrations to the 'Nibelungen Lied,' his large cartoon, 'The Twilight of the Gods,' and his 'Compositions from the Edda,' in ten plates.

HAUSER, ÉDOUARD, a painter of landscapes and scenes of Alpine life, was a native of Basle, who died at Havre in 1864.

HAUSHOFER, MAXIMILIAN, a landscape painter, the son of a schoolmaster, was born at Nymphenburg in 1811, and in 1829 entered the University of Munich to study jurisprudence; he, however, also practised drawing and painting, and in 1833 determined to devote himself wholly to art. In 1834 he exhibited his first picture, 'Evening on the Chiemsee,' a lake which he continued to represent in his paintings for thirty years. The years 1835 to 1857 he spent in Italy and Sicily, and from that date lived principally upon the Fraueninsel, in the Chiemsee. In 1841-43 he made three tours to the Rhine and Upper Austria, and in 1844 was called to Prague as professor, when he commenced ransacking the Bohemian Forest for subjects for his pictures. He died at Prague in 1866. The following are among his best works:

The Lake of Agnano. 1835.
Sabbath Morning on the Chiemsee. 1839.
The Nun on the Banks of the Lake.
Sabbath Stillness. 1842.
The Blöckensteiner-See. 1845.
Distant Prospect from the Arber.
View, with the Walhalla. 1850.
The Eibsee at the Foot of the Zugspitze. 1855.
(Emperor of Austria.)
The Walchensee. 1856.
The Klönthaler-See. 1858.
The Vierwaldstätter-See. 1859. (Vienna Gallery.)

HAUSSARD, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1680, and died in the same city in 1749. He successfully imitated the style of Benoît Audran. His best prints are those which he engraved for the Crozat Collection, viz.:

The Creation of Eve; after Giulio Romano.
Jupiter and Semele; after the same.
An Allegorical Subject; after Sermoneta.
Christ driving the Money-changers from the Temple; after Bart. Manfredi.
An Assembly at Table; after the same.
Moses striking the Rock; after G. F. Romanelli.
The Rich Man and Lazarus; after Domenico Feti.
The Virgin and Infant; after De La Fosse.
Pan and Syrinx; after J. Courtin.
The Old Man in the Arm-chair; after Teniers.
The Old Woman; after the same.
St. Michael; after Raphael.

HAUTIER, LOUIS HENRI, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1801, and died there in 1839. He was a pupil of Ingres, and among his works were subjects taken from Sir Walter Scott's novels of the 'Abbot' and 'Kenilworth.'

HAUZINGER, JOSEPH, was born at Vienna in 1728, and became a pupil of Paul Troger and Daniel Gran, in connection with the former of whom he executed the frescoes in the cathedral at Brixen. Specimens of his separate work are to be seen in the palace chapels at Pressburg and Ofen, in the chapel of King Stephen, and in the University Hall at Tynau. His best painting is 'The Child Jesus going up to Jerusalem with his Parents' (1782). He was court painter and professor at the Academy of Vienna, where he died in 1786. In the Vienna Gallery is a picture of 'Eight Children playing.'

HAVELL, DANIEL and ROBERT, were English engravers in the early part of the 19th century. They produced conjointly, in 1812, 'Picturesque Views on the Thames.' Robert engraved also 'Views in India' (1837), and Daniel the plates for an 'Account of the Theatres of London' (1826).

HAVELL, F. JOHN, an engraver, was born, and practised, in London. He died in 1840, having for some years lost his reason.

HAVELL, WILLIAM, a water-colour landscape painter, was born at Reading in 1782. He was not allowed to follow art without some opposition on the part of his father, who was a drawing-master; but in the year 1804 he became one of the original members of the Water-Colour Society, and he also occasionally painted in oil, exhibiting his works in that medium at the Royal Academy. In 1816 he accompanied Lord Amherst's mission to China, and subsequently went to India, where he stayed some years, and made some money. He returned to England in 1825, and, after a visit to Italy, devoted himself to oil painting. But his later years were clouded with anxiety and reverses; his art was no longer successful, and he lost his savings, finally becoming a pensioner on the Turner Fund of the Royal Academy. He died at Kensington in 1857. Havell occupies a prominent place amongst the founders of the English water-colour school; the excellence of his colour and his mode of treatment fully entitling him to that position. At the South Kensington Museum there are the following water-colour drawings by him:

View of Hastings. 1815.

Windsor.

Kilgerran Castle, Pembrokeshire.

HAVERMAN, MARGARETHA, the daughter of a schoolmaster, was born at Amsterdam in 1720, and was a scholar of Jan van Huysum, who is said to have been jealous of her skill. An unhappy love affair caused her to remove to Paris, where she died in 1795.

HAVEUS, THEODOR, a Dutch painter, who was born at Cleves in the 16th century, came over to England in the reign of Elizabeth, and distinguished himself as a painter, sculptor, and architect.

HAVEUS, THEODORE, was an English portrait painter of the time of Charles II. There are portraits of himself and of another person at Caius College, Cambridge. He also practised as an architect, but must not be confounded with the elder Theodor Haveus, who came to England in the reign of Elizabeth, and also worked at Cambridge as an architect and sculptor.

HAWARD, FRANCIS, an engraver, born in 1759, entered the schools of the Royal Academy in 1776, and was elected an Associate Engraver in 1783, from which time he occasionally sent his works to the exhibitions. He at first practised in mezzotint, but afterwards adopted the stipple manner. He died at Lambeth in 1797. Amongst his best works are:

MEZZOTINT.

Charles, Earl Cornwallis; after W. Gardner.

Juno, Hebe, Flora, and Zephyr; four plates, after W. Hamilton.

Psyche and Zephyr; after the same.

Urania and Olio; after the same.

Euphrasia; after the same.

James Ferguson; after Northcote. 1776.

Master Bunbury; after Sir Joshua Reynolds. 1781.

STIPPLE.

The Infant Academy; after Sir Joshua Reynolds. 1783.

Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse; after the same. 1787.

George IV., when Prince of Wales; after the same. 1793.

Cymon and Iphigenia; after the same. 1797.

HAWEN, LAMBERT VAN, (HAGEN, or HAUEN,) a Norwegian painter and architect, born at Bergen in 1630, was a son of Salomon van Hawen, a sculptor and painter. He studied at Copenhagen, and afterwards went to Italy, where he studied painting and architecture from 1653 to 1670. On his return to Copenhagen he was appointed Inspector of Painting by Christian V., whose portrait he painted in coronation robes. He painted also 'The Death-bed of a Lady of Rank.' He died at Copenhagen in 1695.

HAWEN, MICHAEL VAN, a brother of Lambert van Hawen, was a native of Bergen, who studied at the Academy of Copenhagen. He afterwards travelled in Italy, and on his return was appointed court painter. He flourished from 1664 to 1671.

HAWKER, EDWARD, a portrait painter, was born about 1640, and died about 1723. He succeeded to Lely's house and studio, and became a poor knight of Windsor. Amongst his portraits are those of the Duke of Grafton and of Titus Oates.

HAWKINS, GEORGE, an architectural draughtsman, was born in 1810. He commenced a series of drawings of the ancient abbeys of Yorkshire from sketches by W. Richardson, but this he had not completed at the time of his death, which took place in London in 1852.

HAY, DAVID RAMSAY, a Scottish decorative painter, was born at Edinburgh in 1798, and was there apprenticed to a decorative and heraldic painter. After having painted a few pictures which did not succeed, he confined himself to ornamental art. He also wrote a book on the 'Principles of Beauty in Colouring,' and several other works on the same subject, as well as on the mathematical study of the human figure. He died at Edinburgh in 1866.

HAYD, ANNA MARIA. See WERNER.

HAYDON, BENJAMIN ROBERT, an historical painter, was born at Plymouth in 1786, and became a student of the Royal Academy in 1804. In 1807 he exhibited his first picture, 'A Riposo of the Holy Family,' and in 1809 the 'Death of Dentatus,' now in the possession of the Marquis of Normanby, for which he received a prize of one hundred guineas from the directors of the British Institution. This was followed by 'The Judgment of Solomon,' which was exhibited at Spring Gardens in 1814, and for which the directors of the British Institution again voted him a prize of one hundred guineas; it was subsequently sold for six hundred guineas. Haydon had previously quarrelled with the Royal Academy as a body, or he might now have become a member. His ambition was to be the founder of an elevated school of art, but his impetuosity of temper frustrated his views, and he had to contend with settled prejudices, and the undermining influence of persons of weight in society, whose dislike of the man induced them to depreciate his works. This he could not brook, for knowing the incompetency of his detractors as artists, he boldly, but imprudently, retorted on them, and openly declared war. His frequent tirades irritated his enemies, and furnished them with weapons which they too successfully used to crush his efforts, though they could not humble the man. Haydon now painted several large pictures of an ambitious character, which he exhibited independently of the Academy; he was successful in some, but by others he lost. The most popular was 'Christ's Entry into Jerusalem,' painted in 1820, by which he gained nearly three thousand pounds. The picture is now in America. His struggles involved him in pecuniary embarrassments; and in 1827 a public subscription was made for his relief, when he gave this melancholy account of the fate of his great pictures: "My 'Judgment of Solomon' is rolled up in a warehouse in the Borough; my 'Entry into Jerusalem,' once graced by the enthusiasm of the rank and beauty of the three kingdoms, is doubled up in a back room in Holborn; my 'Lazarus' is in an upholsterer's shop in Mount Street; and my 'Crucifixion' in a hay-loft in Lisson Grove." He was now an inmate of the King's Bench prison (a disaster which befell him a second time in 1830, and a third time in 1835), and here he painted the 'Mock Election' that was held there; this was purchased by George IV. for five hundred guineas; and its companion, 'Chaining the Member,' was bought by Mr. Francis of Exeter for three hundred guineas. Another picture of the same period was his 'Pharaoh dismissing Moses,' which Mr. Hunter, an East India merchant, purchased for five hundred guineas. It is needless to inquire why Haydon should have remained embarrassed when he could obtain such prices, but so it was. He now attempted portrait painting, in which he was sure to fail of success; he painted vigorous likenesses, but disdained to flatter, and represented only such beauty as he found. Some of his heads of men of intellect, done in black chalk, are admirable. His pictures of the 'Reform Banquet,' and the 'Anti-Slavery Society,' are merely collections of portraits. 'Napoleon at St. Helena' was one of his most successful works; of this he made four copies, three of which were ordered by Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Devonshire, and the Duke of Sutherland. His 'Wellington at Waterloo' did not receive the like approbation. He exhibited a cartoon as a candidate to paint a fresco in the new Houses of Parliament; but his usual ill luck attended him; the judges appointed by royal commission did not understand, or else overlooked, his work. This was the death-blow to his hopes. He made a last effort to vindicate his claims to distinction, and exhibited his 'Banishment of Aristides,' and 'Nero playing on the Lyre while Rome is burning'; but once more he met only with neglect from his looked-for patrons. His pictures of 'Marcus Curtius plunging into the Gulf,' and 'Alexander the Great encountering a Lion,' are noble productions, worthy of ancient Greece, though not to the taste of the present age. Haydon vindicated the correctness of the action in the former by a diagram, which at once convicted of ignorance the self-styled critics of the day. At the time of his death he was employed on a large picture of 'Alfred the Great and the First English Jury.' But before it was finished, broken-hearted and driven to despair, he fell by suicide in 1846, not leaving his equal as an English historical painter behind him. The National Gallery possesses his 'Punch' or 'Mayday,' painted in 1829, and 'The Raising of Lazarus,' painted in 1821-23; but these have been temporarily removed from the collection under the National Gallery Loan Act; the 'Lazarus' is now at Plymouth, the 'Punch' at Leicester. In the South Kensington Museum is a picture of 'Christ's Agony in the Garden,' and a chalk drawing. Haydon's 'Autobiography and Journals' were edited by his widow in 1847, and his 'Life' was written by Tom Taylor, and published in 1853. His 'Thoughts on the relative value of Fresco and Oil Painting, as applied to the Architectural Decorations of the Houses of Parliament,' appeared in 1842, and his 'Lectures on Painting and Design,' in 1844-46.

HAYE, DE LA. See DE LA HAYE.

HAYER, GEORG, (or HAUER,) a German painter, was a native of Breslau, who flourished between 1590 and 1614. He painted views of Breslau, the 'Catafalque of the Emperor Rudolph II.,' and a 'Waterpot from the Marriage at Cana.'

HAYES, JOHN, a portrait painter, born in 1786, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1820, and in later life painted some subject pictures. He died in 1866.

HAYES, MICHAEL ANGELO, an Irish painter of military subjects in oil and water-colours, born at Waterford in 1820, was the son of Edward Hayes, R.H.A. He first appeared at the Royal Hibernian Academy in 1840, with 'The Deserter,' and was elected a member in 1854, subsequently acting as secretary from 1856 to 1870. He was also an Associate of the Institute of Painters in Water-

Colours. He was accidentally drowned at Dublin in 1877. Amongst his best works are:

The Charge of the 3rd Light Dragoons at Moodtree.

St. Patrick's Day at Dublin Castle.

The Installation of the Prince of Wales as Knight of St. Patrick.

The Charge of the 16th Lancers at Aliwal.

HAYES, WILLIAM, an English animal painter, worked in the latter part of the 18th century. He had a large family, and was never able to raise himself above poverty. He published the following works:

The Natural History of British Birds. 1775.

Portraits of the rare Birds in Osterley Park. 1794.

HAYES, WILLIAM JACOB, an American landscape and animal painter, was born at New York in 1830. He received his first instruction from John R. Smith, but was self-taught as to the higher development of his talents. He made his first exhibition at the New York Academy in 1850, and became in 1853 an associate of the same, but withdrew from it four years later. In 1860 he travelled to the sources of the Missouri to study the habits of the animals on the prairies, and most of his pictures represent the beasts of the chase amidst charming landscapes; one of which, a 'Wandering Buffalo Herd,' he himself lithographed. He also painted some pictures of orchids. He died at New York in 1875.

HAYEZ, FRANCESCO, an Italian historical painter, was born at Venice in 1791. He studied under Maggiorotti, and then at the Academy of Venice; after which he went to Rome, where he won the first prize from the Academy of St. Luke. He afterwards went to Milan, where he was appointed a professor of the Academy. He painted frescoes in the Vatican at Rome, and 'Rinaldo and Armida' for the Academy of Venice. He died at Milan in 1882.

HAYLEY, ROBERT, an Irish animal painter, worked in the 18th century. He studied in the Dublin School under Robert West, and his favourite medium was chalk. He died in Dublin about 1770.

HAYLS, JOHN, an English portrait painter, lived in the reign of Charles II., and, according to Walpole, possessed an extraordinary talent for copying the pictures of Van Dyck, and was a rival of Sir Peter Lely. At Woburn there are some portraits of the Russell family, painted by him, and in the National Portrait Gallery is a portrait of Samuel Pepys. He died in London in 1679.

HAYM, NICCOLÒ FRANCESCO, was an Italian engraver, who resided in London in the year 1719, and etched the plates for a work on medals which he then published, entitled 'Tesoro Britannico.'

HAYMAN, FRANCIS, an historical painter, born at Exeter in 1708, was a pupil of Robert Brown, and after leaving that master, was much employed in making designs for the booksellers, among which were those for Sir Thomas Hanmer's edition of Shakespeare, and for editions of Milton, Pope, and 'Don Quixote.' As a painter, he is principally known by the pictures he painted for Vauxhall, which were considered the best of his works. He was one of the foundation members of the Royal Academy, exhibiting at its exhibitions from 1769 to 1772, and was librarian from 1771 until his death, which took place in London in 1776. There is by him the 'Finding of Moses,' at the Foundling Hospital, London, and a portrait of himself in the National Portrait Gallery. He etched a few small plates, one of which represents 'Falstaff seated on a Drum.'

HAYMAN, JAMES, an animal painter, was born in London in 1814. Although showing an early predilection for art, it was not till 1837 that, through the assistance of friends, he was enabled to devote himself entirely to its pursuit. He then received some instruction from Lance, and from 1840 exhibited at the Royal Academy, at the British Institution, and at the Society of British Artists. After much suffering from weak health, he died in 1849.

HAYMAN, N., was an English portrait painter, who flourished in the 16th century. There is a portrait by him of Thomas Tallis, the composer of church music.

HAYNES, JOHN, an engraver, executed many of the illustrations for Drake's 'Eboracum,' published in 1736.

HAYNES, JOHN, a painter and etcher, was born at Shrewsbury in 1760. He studied under Mortimer, from whose works he etched, and he also copied from Reynolds. After a voyage to Jamaica, he settled as a drawing-master at Shrewsbury and Chester, and died in the latter city in 1829.

HAYNES, WILLIAM, an English engraver and painter, was a native of Sussex, who practised in London about 1800. Amongst his plates are:

The Introduction of Slop into Shandy's parlour; after Romney.

Portrait of Louis XVI.

Portrait of Marie Antoinette.

HAYNSWORTH, WILLIAM, an English engraver, lived about the middle of the 17th century. He has left a portrait of Richard Cromwell, 'Lord Protector of the Commonwealth,' and a copy of a print by Jérôme David.

HAYTER, CHARLES, a portrait painter in crayons and miniature, flourished about the beginning of the 19th century. He published in 1813 an 'Introduction to Perspective,' which subject he taught to the Princess Charlotte. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1786 to 1832.

HAYTER, Sir GEORGE, an historical and portrait painter, the son of Charles Hayter, was born in London in 1792. He studied in the schools of the Royal Academy, and in 1815 gained a prize of £200 at the British Institution for his 'Prophet Ezra.' Soon after this he went to Italy, and studied at Rome till 1819, when he returned to London, and practised portrait and historical painting till 1826, when he again visited Italy. He did not come back to England till 1831, having visited Paris on his way, where he painted portraits of many French notabilities. Hayter received many court honours: in 1816 he was appointed miniature painter to the Princess Charlotte; in 1837, portrait painter to Queen Victoria; in 1841, Her Majesty's historical painter; and in 1842 he was knighted. He died in London in 1871. Amongst his chief works are:

Trial of Lord William Russell. 1825. (Woburn Abbey.)

The Trial of Queen Caroline.

The Meeting of the first Reformed Parliament. (National Portrait Gallery.)

The Coronation of Queen Victoria.

The Marriage of Queen Victoria. (The Queen.)

The Christening of the Prince of Wales. (The Queen.)

Angels ministering to Christ. 1849. (South Kensington Museum.)

Joseph interpreting the Chief Baker's Dream.

Three daughters of Edward, 13th Earl of Derby. (Knowsley Hall.)

HAYTLEY, E., an English portrait and landscape painter, flourished in the middle of the 18th century. Amongst his works are:

Greenwich Hospital. 1746. (Foundling Hospital, London.)

Chelsea Hospital. 1746. (Foundling Hospital, London.)
Peg Woffington as Mrs. Ford.

HAYWARD, J. S., an amateur landscape painter in water-colours, flourished at the beginning of the 19th century, and was an honorary exhibitor at the Royal Academy from 1798 to 1816. Amongst his exhibited works were views in Italy and the following:

Diana and Actæon.

Breaking up the Camp, Southsea Common.

Mount's Bay—Evening.

HAZLEHURST, THOMAS, a miniature painter, practised at Liverpool from 1760 to 1818, and exhibited at the Liverpool Exhibitions. His miniatures are clever and highly finished.

HAZLITT, JOHN, a miniature painter, born at Wem, in Shropshire, in 1768, was the elder brother of William Hazlitt, the art-critic. He practised in London, and exhibited at the Academy from 1788 to 1819. He died at Stockport in 1837. There is a miniature in oil of Joseph Lancaster by him in the National Portrait Gallery.

HAZLITT, WILLIAM, a painter and art-critic, the son of an Unitarian minister, was born at Maidstone in 1778. He was a student at the Unitarian College, Hackney, and at first adopted painting as a profession, but he soon devoted himself to the literature of art, on which his reputation rests. He published 'Sketches of the principal Picture Galleries in England,' 'Notes of a Journey through France and Italy,' 'Conversations of Northcote,' 'Criticisms on Art,' and other works. He died in London in 1830. There is a portrait of Charles Lamb by him in the National Portrait Gallery.

HEAD, GUY, a native of Carlisle, was the son of a house painter in that city. He was instructed in the elements of design, and through the patronage of a gentleman was enabled to visit Italy and Rome, where he was residing in 1794. He appears to have formed an idea, that the best method of study was constant employment in copying the works of the old masters; and he consequently has left very numerous reproductions of the most celebrated pictures of the Italian and Flemish painters. He painted some original pictures, which are not without merit, but he is better known as a copyist. He died in London in 1800.

HEAPHY, THOMAS, who was born in London in 1775, began life as a dyer, but his love for art led him to practise engraving, until he subsequently devoted himself to painting in water-colours. In the earlier part of his career he enjoyed more patronage in his branch of art than any other artist of the day. His 'Hastings Fish Market,' exhibited in 1809, caused a great sensation; and his scenes of low life found ardent admirers among the connoisseurs in vulgarity. The artist, however, became disgusted with his own productions, and turned to paint portraits of Queen Caroline, the Princess Charlotte, Prince Leopold, and a large picture of the Duke of Wellington and his staff, the print of which is well known. In 1831 he visited Italy, and made many copies of celebrated works of art, which are said to be admirable. Heaphy was undoubtedly a man of talent, but his reputation would have been greater had he been less versatile. He did not confine himself to painting; he was equally expert at quarrying for stone, constructing a pleasure-boat, building a house, devising an improved axle, or laying down a railway. He was an intractable man: he exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1800 to 1804, but was afterwards continually opposing it; he was one of the earliest members of the old Water-Colour Society, but seceded from it in 1812; then, after lending a willing hand to found, in 1824, the Society of British Artists, of which he was the first president, he in 1829 withdrew from the connection. In the South Kensington Museum are water-colour drawings by him of 'The Wounded Leg,' and 'Coast Scene with Figures.' He died in 1835. Miss HEAPHY, his eldest daughter, exhibited miniatures at the Royal Academy from 1822 to 1845; as did also Miss ELIZABETH HEAPHY from 1838 to 1844. See also MURRAY, ELIZABETH.

HEAPHY, THOMAS FRANK, a portrait and subject painter, the son of Thomas Heaphy, was born in 1813. He began life as a portrait painter, in which branch he achieved some success, but later on in life he turned his attention more especially to historical and subject painting. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1831, and continued to contribute from time to time; he was also a member of the Society of British Artists, and contributed many articles to various periodicals. He died in 1873. The following are amongst his best works:

The Infant Pan educated by the Wood Nymphs. 1850.
The Parting of Catharine and Bianca. 1853.
Kepler in poverty taken for a Fortune-Teller. 1863.
Mary Stuart at Tutbury Castle. 1872.
Palissy the Potter taken for a Coiner. 1864.
An Unexpected Inheritance. 1865.
A Series of the Peasant Girls of various Countries.

HEARNE, THOMAS, a topographic draughtsman, was born at Brinkworth, near Malmesbury, in 1744. He came to London very early in life, and was articled to William Woollett, the engraver, with whom he remained for six years, assisting him in many of his works. He did not long continue the practice of engraving; for at the expiration of his term with Woollett, he went as draughtsman with Lord Lavington, who had been appointed Governor of the Leeward Islands, and remained nearly five years in the West Indies. On his return to England his fondness for antiquity led him to the study of Gothic architecture, combined with landscape, and in 1777 he engaged with Byrne in that valuable work, 'The Antiquities of Great Britain,' for which he made the whole of the drawings. He made drawings also for other publications; but it is in private collections that his works are chiefly to be found; and though, from the care and fidelity with which they are executed, they are not numerous, they are eminently distinguished for some of the best qualities of the art. He died in London in 1817. The following drawings are at South Kensington:

A Village Alehouse.
Ranger's Cottage, Hyde Park.
View of Richmond.
Shipping.
Dutch Shipping.
Caister Castle, Norfolk.
Monastery Gate, St. Alban's.
Wooded Glen, Downton, Herefordshire.

HEATH, CHARLES, a line-engraver, and the youngest son of James Heath, was born in 1785. He was for a short time, like Robert Graves and some other engravers, a member of the Society of British Artists. He acquired much reputation by the small plates which he engraved for the 'Keepsake,' 'Picturesque Annual,' and 'Book of Beauty,' which he conducted, and he afterwards superintended the production of many works of the same class. Amongst his pupils and assistants were Doo and Watt. He died in London in 1848. Among his principal works are:

Ecce Homo; after C. Dolci.
Portrait of Benjamin West; after Newton.
The Girl at the Well; after Westall.
Lady Peel; after Sir Thomas Lawrence.
The Bride; after C. R. Leslie.
Europa; after Hilton.
Views of Richmond; after Hoiland.
The Shakespeare Gallery. 1836-37.
Illustrations of 'Ivanhoe'; after Westall.
Illustrations of 'Lalla Rookh'; after the same.

HEATH, JAMES, a line-engraver, born in London in 1757, was apprenticed to Joseph Collyer. His works are numerous, and his earlier productions, which are much esteemed, are to be found as illustrations, mostly after Stothard and Smirke, in the 'Novelist's Magazine,' Bell's 'British Theatre,' and 'British Poets,' and various other publications. He was elected an Associate Engraver of the Royal Academy in 1791, and was appointed engraver to the King in 1794. He died in London in 1834, having for years retired from the profession. Among his larger works are the following:

Mrs. Siddons; after Sir Thomas Lawrence.
The Apotheosis of Handel; after Rebecca.
Lord Nelson; after Abbott.
St. Christopher; after Elsheimer.
St. John; after Guido Reni.
Portrait of John Philip Kemble.
The Death of Nelson; after West.
General Washington; after Stuart.
The Good Shepherd; after Murillo.
The Riots of 1780; after Wheatley.
The Death of Major Pierson; after Copley.
The Dead Soldier; after Wright, of Derby.
The Drowned Fisherman; after Westall.
Scenes from Shakespeare; after Peters and Smirke.

HEATH, WILLIAM, a draughtsman, born in 1795, supplied the illustrations for his own 'Life of a Soldier' (1823), and Sir John Bowring's 'Minor Morals' (1834). He died at Hampstead in 1840.

HEAVYSIDE, JOHN SMITH, a wood-engraver, born at Stockton-on-Tees in 1812, was chiefly employed on illustrations for antiquarian works, especially those of John Henry Parker. He died in London in 1864.

HEBBELYNCK, ANSELMUS, better known as ANSELMUS VAN HULLE, was born at Ghent in 1594, but settled in Holland, and was in 1648 sent by Prince Frederick Henry of Orange to Münster to portray the plenipotentiaries there assembled at the close of the Seven Years' War; his portraits were afterwards engraved. He subsequently became court painter to the Emperor Ferdinand III. He died in 1665. Some of his subjects were taken from sacred history, as 'The Dead Christ in the Lap of the Virgin,' which is in the Ghent Museum.

HEBENSTREIT, SIGMUND, was a native of Munich, who flourished about 1580. He painted in oils principally for churches and convents.

HEBERT, WILLIAM, a line-engraver, practised in London in the latter part of the 18th century.

He studied under Vivares, published a set of six small landscapes in 1750, and gained a premium at the Society of Arts in 1760.

HECKLE. See HÜCHLE.

HECK, NICOLAAS VAN DER. See VAN DER HECK.

HECKE, ABRAHAM, (or HECKIUS,) was an engraver and goldsmith of Amsterdam, who lived from the second half of the 16th century till some way into the 17th. He engraved a set of ornaments for goldsmiths and jewellers, dated 1634, and a plate of 'The Three in the Fiery Furnace.'

HECKE, JOHAN VAN DEN. See VAN DEN HECKE.

HECKEL, CATHARINA, born in 1699, was an etcher, though she also painted miniatures. She married Hieronymus Sperling of Augsburg, the engraver, and died in 1741.

HECKEL, G. VAN, a Dutch painter, flourished about the year 1660. He is not mentioned by any of the art historians, but, from the style and character of his pictures, it is probable that he was a scholar of Gerard Dou. He painted subjects similar to those of that artist.

HECKENAUER, LEONHARD, a German engraver, born at Augsburg about the year 1640, was a pupil of Bartholomäus Kilian. He travelled in Italy and other countries, and upon his return established a school for the study of the living model. He died at Munich in 1704. His portrait of the Elector of Treves is said to have been a masterpiece. He engraved several of the plates for the 'Academia Artis Pictoriæ,' published by Sandrart in 1683. His brother, JAKOB WILHELM HECKENAUER, was court engraver at Brunswick, and executed a set of prints from the pictures in the Brunswick Gallery, published in 1710. He died at Brunswick about 1720.

HECKIUS, ABRAHAM. See HECKE.

HECQUET, ROBERT, a French engraver, was born at Abbeville in 1693, and died there in 1775. He resided several years in Paris, but was not very eminent in the art. There are by him an upright plate of a 'Woman Bathing,' after Nicolas Poussin, and four small plates, copied from the large prints of the 'Labours of Hercules,' by Rousselet, after Guido.

HEDA, CORNELIS KLAASZ, a Dutch painter, flourished early in the 17th century. In 1605 he was at the court of the Emperor of Germany, and was then engaged to go as painter to the court of Persia. He never, however, reached that country, but at last found himself at Rajpore in India, where he remained for many years in the service of the sovereign of that state, whom he put in communication with the East India Company. His name does not occur after 1618.

HEDA, WILLEM KLAASZ, who was born at Haarlem in 1594, painted occasionally historical subjects, but chiefly pictures of fruit, flowers, fish, meat, and articles of the breakfast-table, which he executed in a masterly manner. Three subjects of this class, by him, are in the Munich Gallery, and one in the Dresden Gallery. Two of these are signed and dated; one 1623, the other 1634. In the Louvre there is 'A Dessert,' signed and dated 1637. The date of Heda's death is not known, but he was still living in 1678, for in that year his portrait was painted by De Bray.

HEEDE, VIGOR VAN, the younger brother of Willem van Heede, was born at Furnes in 1661. He accompanied his brother to Italy, where he did not long remain, but returned to Flanders, and painted historical pictures, and subjects of still-life. He died at Furnes in 1708.

HEEDE, WILLEM VAN, was born at Furnes, in Flanders, in 1660. It is not known under whom he studied; but he travelled, when young, through France to Italy, where he resided a considerable time, and left many proofs of his ability as an historical painter at Rome, Naples, and Venice. On his return to Flanders he was invited by the emperor to the court of Vienna, where he ornamented the imperial palace with several of his works. He died at Furnes in 1728. Willem and his brother Vigor painted an altar-piece for the Walpurgis church at Furnes, where they are buried.

HEEM, DE. See DE HEEM.

HEEMS, N. VAN, was a painter of Rotterdam, who made admirable copies of the pictures of Adriaan and Pieter van der Werff.

HEEMSEN, JAN VAN. See HEMESSEN.

HEEMSKERK, DAVID, a decorative painter, was the son of Jan Heemskerk. He was born at Haarlem in 1730, and was enrolled in the Guild of St. Luke in 1748.

HEEMSKERK, EGBERT VAN, the elder, called 'The Peasant,' was a Dutch painter, who was born at Haarlem in 1610. He painted the interiors of Dutch alehouses, with boors regaling or quarrelling, of which there are two examples in the Louvre, and one in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg. These subjects he treated with some ability; but Brouwer and Teniers altogether surpassed him. He died in 1680.

HEEMSKERK, EGBERT VAN, the younger, probably the son of Egbert van Heemskerk the elder, was born at Haarlem in 1645, and studied under Pieter De Grebber, but followed his father's style. He settled in England in the reign of King William III., and was patronized by the Earl of Rochester. He painted drunken scenes and country sports with considerable humour, and sometimes incantations, spectres, and similar eccentricities, in which he showed a ready invention and some ingenuity, but his colouring was cold and heavy. He died in London in 1704. In the Frankfort Gallery are pictures of 'A Beggar's Meal,' and 'Don Quixote and Sancho Panza.'

HEEMSKERK, HENDRIK, was a Dutch painter of landscapes, who flourished in the 17th century.

HEEMSKERK, JAN, a decorative painter, was born at Haarlem in 1687, and died suddenly from a fall in 1740.

HEEMSKERK, MARTEN. See VEEN.

HEEMSKERK, SEBASTIAAN, a native of Rotterdam, painted interiors and village scenes in the style of Molenaer. He seems, according to Vosmaer, to have left Haarlem, and to have become a pupil of Rembrandt. He was living at an advanced age in 1691.

HEENCK, JABEZ, a painter of birds, was born at the Hague in 1752, and was a pupil of Schouman. He died at Leyden in 1782.

HEER, MICHAEL. See HER.

HEERE, LUCAS DE. See DE HEERE.

HEEREMANSZ, FRANS and J., were two brothers, who flourished at Haarlem about 1670, and painted still-life subjects and landscapes.

HEERNEYSSEN, ANDREAS. See HERNEYSSEN.

HEERSCHOP, HENDRIK, a painter and engraver, born at Haarlem in 1627, was a pupil of Willem Heda in 1642, and a master in the Guild of St. Luke in 1648. He is said to have taken lessons from Rembrandt. He engraved some plates about 1652, amongst them one of 'The Sleeping Venus.' There is a picture by him in the Cassel Gallery, representing a 'Soldier and a Woman playing at Cards,' and a portrait of a 'Moor,' dated 1659, is in the Berlin Gallery. He was still living in 1672.

HEFELE, —, according to Walpole, was a native of Germany, who came to England as a soldier in King William's Dutch troops; and having obtained his discharge, remained here several years. He painted landscapes, flowers, and insects, in water-colours, but without much knowledge of chiaroscuro. He died about 1710.

HEGI, FRANZ, an engraver, was born at Lausanne in 1774. His father, JOHANN HEGI, was also an artist, but dying whilst Franz was still a child, the latter was brought up in the Lausanne Orphanage. About 1796 he went to Basle, where he remained for six years, and worked mostly for P. Birrmann. He then went to Zurich, where he produced a number of landscapes in aquatint. He particularly excelled in representations of the middle ages, as may be seen in his 'Scenes from the Life of a Knight.' In 1822 he went to Paris, and there illustrated Oswald's 'Voyage pittoresque en Sicile' with many aquatint plates. He died at Zurich in 1850.

HEGRET, THEODORUS, a landscape and historical painter, was born at Mechlin in 1643, and was a scholar of Cornelis Beerings. There are pictures by him in some of the churches and convents of his native city.

HEICKE, JOSEPH, an Austrian painter and lithographer, was born at Vienna in 1811, and after having studied at the Academy of that city, travelled in 1842 in Italy and Hungary. He painted landscapes and animals, and published in 1844 a 'School of Figures' and 'School of Animals,' lithographed by himself. He died at Vienna in 1861.

HEIDECKER, KARL WILHELM VON, (or HEIDEGGER). See HEYDECK.

HEIDEGGER, BASTIAN, a draughtsman, goldsmith, and medallist, was born at Zurich in 1520, and flourished at Vienna from about 1556 to 1559. He prepared the designs, and partly cut the blocks, for an old German military work.

HEIDEGGER, JOHANN JAKOB, an engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1752, and died in 1781.

HEIDELOFF, ALFRED, a decorative painter, was born at Weimar in 1802. He was the son of the court painter Karl Heideloff, (born 1770, died 1814,) and a pupil of the court architect Reiner, but he studied further under Ciceri and Chatillon in Dresden and Paris. He died young in 1826, but his designs and sketches preserved in the Weimar Library give evidence of considerable talent.

HEIDELOFF, FRANZ JOSEPH IGNAZ ANTON VON, a painter and sculptor, was born at Hanover in 1676, and worked at different times in Amsterdam, the abbey of Werden, Heidelberg, and Mannheim. He lived at Cologne from 1718 to 1734, and then removed to Mayence, where he carried on a very successful private academy, and where he died in 1772.

HEIDELOFF, JOSEPH VON, the younger, a grandson of Franz Joseph von Heideloff, was born at Mayence in 1781, and became a pupil of Brand at Vienna, where he settled as a landscape painter, and became a member of the Academy. He died after 1827. One of his best paintings is a 'View in the Prater,' in the Vienna Academy.

HEIDELOFF, KARL ALEXANDER VON, a painter, engraver, and architect, was born at Stuttgart in 1788. He was the youngest son of Victor Wilhelm Peter von Heideloff, and was taught successively by his father, J. Gotthardt von Müller, Seele, and others. King Frederick commissioned him to produce a series of drawings of the costumes of the country, and for this purpose he conducted elaborate researches among the mediæval monuments of Württemberg and Swabia. After this King Louis of Bavaria found him occupation which caused him to settle at Nuremberg, where in 1822 he appointed him professor of the Polytechnic School and conservator of the art treasures. Heideloff also started the Albrecht Dürer Society in that city, and was the builder of many important edifices there. He died at Hassfurt in 1865. Among his oil paintings are 'The Emperor Maximilian at the Grave of Duke Eberhard,' in the royal palace at Stuttgart, and 'Ritter Toggenburg,' in the possession of Count Fries. He engraved four plates in illustration of Koch's 'Poems' and Herman's 'Appearances of the Good Shepherd.' He also accomplished a large amount of literary work, which, however, related almost exclusively to architecture.

HEIDELOFF, NIKOLAUS WILHELM VON, an engraver, the brother of Victor Wilhelm Peter von Heideloff, was born at Stuttgart in 1761, and when eleven years of age entered the Karlsakademie there, and studied engraving under J. Gotthardt von Müller. In 1784 he went to Paris in the service of Duke Charles Eugene to finish a plate under Berville's inspection; but he quitted his employer and gained his living for a time as a miniature painter, till the Revolution caused him to flee to England, where he gave valuable assistance to the bookselling business of the Messrs. Ackermann. He engraved many of the designs of his brother Victor, and in 1815 he was appointed director of the Picture Gallery at the Hague. He died subsequently to 1838.

HEIDELOFF, VICTOR WILHELM PETER VON, a painter, sculptor, and architect, the grandson of Franz Joseph von Heideloff, was born at Stuttgart in 1757, and in 1771, entered the Karlsakademie, where he studied under Guibal, Harper, and Scotti. In 1780 he was appointed court painter, and travelled in Italy during the years 1782 to 1786. After this he successively became painter to the theatre, professor, and teacher at the Karlsakademie. He died at Stuttgart in 1816. Among his paintings are 'The Four Seasons,' in the royal palace at Stuttgart; two of the paintings on the ceilings in the dining-hall of the Academy; and an altar-piece executed for Rothweil. He designed the views and interiors of Hohenheim Castle, which were engraved by his brother Nikolaus von Heideloff and J. C. Stadler.

HEIDENREICH, GUSTAV, an historical painter, was born at Berlin in 1819 and studied first under A. F. König at Breslau, and then under Wach in his native city, where he died in 1855. His best paintings are those executed for the wall of the northern saloon in the New Museum at Berlin—'Hertha and Odin,' 'The Game of the Water-Witches,' 'The Battle of the Giants,' &c.; and the classical frieze in the saloon of Greek Antiquities in the Old Museum.

HEIGEL, JOSEPH, a miniature painter, was born at Munich in 1780. He studied at the Munich Academy, and then, after travelling through Europe, settled in Paris, where he died in 1828.

HEIGEL, MARTIN, (or HEIGL,) was a native of Constance, who settled at Munich, where he died in 1776. He studied at Munich under Zimmermann, and painted altar-pieces and frescoes.

HEIGHWAY, R. a miniature painter, practised in London, Lichfield, and Shrewsbury, and exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1787 and 1793.

HEIL, DANIEL VAN, a Flemish painter, was born at Brussels in 1604. It is not known under whom he studied, but he had acquired considerable reputation as a landscape painter, when he changed the subjects of his pictures for conflagrations, which he represented with surprising effect, and of which there is an example in the Museum at Lille. He occasionally painted winter-pieces, of which there is an example in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg. Houbraken speaks highly of two pictures by Van Heil, representing the 'Burning of Sodom' and the 'Destruction of Troy.' He died in 1662.

HEIL, JAN BAPTIST VAN, the youngest of the brothers Van Heil, was born at Brussels in 1609. He painted historical subjects, but more especially portraits; that of the Spanish general Cautelmus he afterwards engraved. He was living in 1661.

HEIL, LEONARD VAN, a younger brother of Daniel van Heil, was born at Brussels in 1605. He painted architectural subjects, flowers, and insects, but he is more known as an architect than a painter.

HEILMANN, JOHANN KASPAR, a painter, who was born at Mühlhausen, in Alsace, in 1718, studied under Doggeler at Schaffhausen, and afterwards worked at the Bishop of Basle's court at Bruntrut. With the proceeds of this engagement he went to Rome, and some copies he made from the works of Domenichino brought him to the notice of the French ambassador, Cardinal de Tencin, who took him in 1742 to Paris, where he found constant occupation in portrait painting, so that he laid aside the historical department. He died in Paris in 1760.

HEIM, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, a French historical painter, was born at Belfort in 1787. At the early age of eleven he obtained the first prize for drawing at Strassburg, and in 1803 he went to Paris to study painting under Vincent, and there, in 1807, he won the first prize with his 'Theseus overcoming the Minotaur.' He then studied at Rome, and upon his return obtained the gold medal of the first class, and became in 1829 a member, and in 1831 a professor of the Academy. In 1859 he sent to the Salon sixty-four portraits of members of the Institute, which drawings were at his death presented to the Louvre. He died in Paris in 1865. His best pictures include:

Two Ceilings in the Louvre.

The Paintings in the Conference Hall of the Chamber of Deputies.

The Defence of the Castle of Burgos. (Versailles Gallery.)

His own Portrait.

Arrival of Jacob in Mesopotamia. 1814. (Bordeaux Museum.)

The Martyrdom of St. Hippolytus. 1822.

A Scene from the Destruction of Jerusalem. 1824. (Louvre.)

Charles X. distributing the Prizes to the Artists at the close of the Exhibition of 1824. 1827. (Louvre.)

HEIM, MATTHIAS, a Bavarian painter and engraver, was born in 1782, and studied at Munich under Wagenbauer. He painted several landscapes, and died at Munich in 1827.

HEIMBACH, CHRISTIAN WOLFGANG, was a German painter, who flourished from 1637 to 1660.

There are by him pictures in the Brunswick and Cassel Galleries of Queen Christina of Sweden.

HEIMERDINGER, FRIEDRICH, a German painter of subjects of still-life, was born at Altona in 1817. He studied in the Academy at Düsseldorf under Ferdinand Theodor Hildebrandt from 1839 to 1842, and at Munich from 1842 to 1845, after which he settled in Hamburg, and there established a successful school of art. His careful and highly finished works have many admirers, especially in England. He died at Hamburg in 1882.

HEIMLICH, JOHANN DANIEL, a landscape painter and engraver, was born at Strassburg in 1740, and died in 1796. He engraved a series of views in the environs of Paris in 1765, and others in the environs of Strassburg in 1774.

HEINCE, ZACHARIE, a French painter and etcher, probably descended from the Swiss family of the name, was born in Paris in 1611. In 1648 he prepared the drawings for François Bignon's 'Portraits des Plénipotentiaires à la Paix de Münster,' and in 1650 for the same artist's 'Galerie des illustres Français du Palais Royal.' He became an Academician in 1663. His principal pictures were 'The Conversion of Lydia,' 'Simon the Magician offering Money to St. Peter,' 'mais' painted for the cathedral of Notre-Dame in 1664 and 1665. He etched after Primaticcio the 'Mater Dolorosa,' a 'Children's Bacchanal,' and 'The Handsome Merchant,' and died in Paris in 1669.

HEINE, LODOWYK, a Flemish historical painter, was a native of Courtrai, who flourished in the 16th century. He was a pupil of Pieter Vlerick, whose style he imitated.

HEINE, WILHELM JOSEPH, a genre painter, was born at Düsseldorf in 1813, and attended the Academy of that city from 1827 to 1835. He had already raised great hopes by his expressive and excellently drawn pictures, when he died in 1840 at the age of twenty-seven. Others of his best productions are:

The Poacher. 1834.

The Smuggler. 1834.

Peasant's Cottage. 1836.

Divine Service in a Prison. (Berlin National Gallery, and Leipzig Museum.) 1837.

HEINECKE, CATHARINA ELIZABETH, a flower and portrait painter, was a native of Lübeck, who was born in 1685, and was still living in 1755.

HEINEL, JOHANN PHILIPP, a Bavarian genre and landscape painter, was born at Bayreuth in 1800, and studied at the Munich Academy under Langer from 1820 to 1826. He at first painted historical subjects, one of which was 'Ossian and Malwina;' he next took to portraits and genre subjects from popular life, as 'The Bride,' and 'The Bagpiper;' and lastly to landscapes with figures, amongst which were a 'Rocky Landscape, with Tyrolese Caravan,' and a 'Mountain Lake, with Girl in a Boat.' He also executed seven etchings and eleven lithographs, nine of which were views in Switzerland. He died at Munich in 1843.

HEINISCHECK, MATTHIAS, was born at Hamburg in 1708, and lived subsequently at Bayreuth, from whence, in 1741, he proceeded to Potsdam, where he decorated three rooms in the old palace. He afterwards returned to Bayreuth, where he died in 1772.

HEINITZ, IGNAZ FRANZ, a German fruit and flower painter, was born in 1657, and died at Weimar in 1742.

HEINRICH, a Bohemian monk, was born at the beginning of the 17th century, and engraved plates and title-pages for devotional books.

HEINS, D., was a German painter and engraver, who came to England, and resided at Norwich, about the year 1740. He painted the portraits of several members of the corporation, some of which he engraved in mezzotint. One of his best prints is a half-length portrait of Thomas Gooch, Bishop of Norwich, dated 1741. A miniature in oil by him of the poet Cowper's mother was exhibited at the National Portrait Exhibition of 1868. He was still living in 1779.

HEINS, JOHN, the son of D. Heins, was born at Norwich about the year 1740. His father apprenticed him to a stuff manufacturer; but, without his parent's approbation, he became a painter of portraits, both in oil and in miniature. He succeeded better in engraving. His plates are etched with the dry point in a style resembling that of Worlidge. He also made the drawings of the views and monuments for Bentham's 'History of Ely.' Among his engravings are a 'Cat with Kittens,' after Collet; and the portraits of Mr. Grose and his wife. He died at Chelsea in 1771.

HEINS, W. C., who was probably a German, flourished about the year 1640. He engraved several portraits, the most important of which are those he executed for Boissard's 'Bibliotheca Chalcographica.'

HEINSIUS, JOHANN ERNST, a German painter, was a native of Hildburghausen, who was living in 1787. There is by him in the Louvre a portrait of Madame Victoire, fifth daughter of Louis XV.

HEINSIUS, JOSEPH. See HEINZ.

HEINTSCH, JOHANN GEORG, was born in Silesia about 1647. His style is very similar to that of Sceta, and he is especially admired for the beauty and grace of his female heads. In 1678 Heintsch removed to Prague, where he remained, executing works for churches and convents, until his death in 1713. Most of his works are in that city. 'Christ disputing with the Doctors,' in the Gallery of the Estates; the 'Virgin,' painted in 1696 for the church of the Karlsbof; and 'Christ after the Temptation ministered to by Angels,' in the refectory of the monastery of Strahow, are worthy of much praise.

HEINZ, JOSEPH, the elder, born at Basle in 1565, was instructed first by Johann von Aachen, and afterwards at the Academy of his birthplace. In 1590-94 he worked at the court of the Emperor Rudolph II. at Prague, and was sent by that monarch to study in Italy. He died at Prague in 1609. His best paintings are:

Leda.

Artemisia with the Ashes of Mausolus. (Augsburg Gallery.)

The Rape of Proserpine. (Dresden Gallery.)

Diana surprised in the Bath by Actæon. (Vienna Gallery.)

Venus and Adonis. (The same.)

The Crucifixion. (The same.)

Portrait of the Emperor Rudolph II. 1594. (The same.)

HEINZ, JOSEPH, the younger, (HEINSIUS, ENS, or ENSO,) the son and pupil of the elder Joseph Heinz, lived from about 1590 (or 1600) to 1660. He afterwards studied under his step-father, Matthäus Gondolach, and became a painter of subjects which the Italians style 'capricci.' He acquired celebrity in Venice by some highly imaginative pictures, partaking of the style of Salvator Rosa, Civetta, Carponi, and the devilry of Hell Brueghel.

640

They represent allegorical fictions, in which are introduced sphinxes, chimera, and monsters of grotesque shape. Subsequently, however, he painted several altar-pieces, one of which, adorning the church of Ognissanti, is extremely beautiful; it represents 'The Two Maries at the Sepulchre.' Some of his pictures have been brought to England, and have been puzzles, both in regard to the subjects and the master. His son, DANIEL HEINZ, also worked in Venice as a painter.

HEINZMANN, KARL FRIEDRICH, a landscape painter, was born at Stuttgart in 1795. He was a pupil of Seele, but in 1814 he entered the Würtemberg military service, and afterwards obtained royal assistance to study landscape painting under Kobell at Munich. In 1822 he issued a series of lithographic views in Southern Bavaria, and after that painted on porcelain, but finding that this employment impaired his sight, he returned to oil and water-colour painting. He died at Munich in 1846.

HEISS, ELIAS CHRISTOPH, a German painter and engraver in mezzotint, was born at Memmingen, in Swabia, about the year 1660. In 1704 he came to Berlin, and was court painter there for a while, but he resided for a longer period at Augsburg, where he also followed the business of a printseller, which enabled him in later life to purchase an estate near Memmingen, where he died in 1731. He was one of the first of the German artists who practised mezzotint engraving on any considerable scale. He engraved several very large plates, of which some are upwards of three feet high, and more than two feet wide. The following are his principal plates:

PORTRAITS.

Peter the Great, Czar of Russia.

Frederick Augustus I., King of Poland; after Hoyer.

Bishop Schönborn of Würzburg (executed conjointly with B. Vogel.)

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

St. Paul and St. Anthony, the first Hermits.

Christ praying on the Mount; a large plate, after C. Maratti.

The Virgin and Infant, on a globe; after the same.

The Adoration of the Shepherds; after the same.

The Annunciation; after J. G. Bergmüller.

HEISS, GOTTLIEB, the pupil and nephew of Elias Christoph Heiss, was born in 1686, and died at Augsburg in 1740. He engraved several plates of historical subjects.

HEISS, JOHANN, a German historical painter, was born at Memmingen in 1640, and died at Augsburg in 1704. He studied under Schönfeld, and painted historical subjects, several of which are in the Augsburg churches. 'The Departure of the Israelites from Egypt' is in the Dresden Gallery, and the following are in the Brunswick Gallery:

Scipio granting Freedom to Alluci. s. 1679.

The Death of Dido.

Neptune and Venus.

HEKEL, AUGUST, a German engraver, born at Augsburg about 1690, was the son of a chaser in gold and silver, and followed that profession with success. He came to England, and was considered the first artist of his time in that line. He drew views in water-colours, some of which were engraved by Bowles and Sayer. He etched eight small plates of Richmond and its environs; a 'Horse,' after Wootton; and a 'Book of Flowers.' His death took place at Richmond in 1770. He had a sister who engraved, in a neat style, some plates for Kilian's Bible. Sullivan engraved after him a drawing of the 'Battle of Culloden.'

HEKKING, WILLEM, a Dutch fruit and flower painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1796, and died in 1862.

HELAND, MARTEN RUDOLF, a Swedish engraver, was born at Stockholm in 1766, and attended the Academy of that city as well as that of Paris. In 1809 he returned to Stockholm, where he committed suicide in 1814. An excellent plate by him, from his own design, is 'The Skating Match at Haga.'

HELLART, JACQUES. See HELMONT.

HELD, JOHANN EHRENFRIED, a German painter, was born at Zittau in 1752, and in 1777 went to Dresden, where he painted portraits, as well as some historical pictures and landscapes. He was still living in 1828.

HÈLE, ISAAK DE LA. See DE LA HÈLE.

HELENA, a daughter of the Egyptian Timon, lived in the 4th century B.C., and painted a picture of 'The Battle of Issus,' which was placed in the Temple of Peace in the time of the Emperor Vespasian.

HELFENRIEDER, CHRISTOPH, who lived in the early part of the 17th century, was court painter at Munich. He married Ursula Tannauer, whose beauty occasioned illicit visits from an officer, whom Helfenrieder accordingly murdered. After this he fled to a cloister in Vintschgau, where he executed several paintings. He then repaired to Meran, where he died in 1635. In the church of that town is an altar-piece by him representing 'SS. Fabian, Sebastian, and Roch.'

HELLART, JACQUES, a French historical and portrait painter, was a native of Rheims. He studied at Rome at the same time as Le Brun, and was received into the Academy in 1677, at the same time as Isaac Delacroix, with whom he founded the Academy of Rheims. There are some pictures by him in the Cathedral, the Church of St. Jacques, and the Museum at Rheims. He died in 1719.

HELLEMANS, PIERRE JEAN, a Belgian landscape painter, was born at Brussels in 1787, and studied under J. B. Deroy. The cattle in many of his works were inserted by Eugène Verboeckhoven. He died at Brussels in 1845. His wife, JEANNE MARIE JOSÉPHINE HELLEMANS, who was born in 1796, and died in 1837, was a fruit and flower painter. Amongst his pictures are:

Brussels. Gallery. On the Borders of the Forest of Soignies.

Hamburg. Museum. Landscape in Guelderland.

Mechlin. Museum. View in the Forest of Soignies.

HELLESEN, HANNE, or JOHANNE, a Danish fruit and flower painter, was born in 1801, and died in 1844. There is by her in the Copenhagen Gallery a 'Vase filled with Flowers.'

HELLWEGER, FRANZ, who was born at Lorenzen in the Tyrol, in 1813, was a pupil of Hess at Munich. In 1843 he visited Rome; and after his return he assisted Cornelius in his cycle of frescoes in the Ludwigskirche at Munich, and Schraudolph in his frescoes in the Cathedral of Spire. Hellweger was chiefly occupied in painting for churches: some of his best works are at Bruneck and Ischl. He died at Innsbruck in 1880.

HELMAN, ISIDORE STANISLAS, a French engraver, was born at Lille in 1743, and died in Paris in 1809. He was a pupil of J. P. Le Bas, and amongst his best plates are four after Moreau, for the 'Monument du Costume.' The following engravings are also by him:

The Opening of the States General at Versailles after Monnet.

The Oath of the Jeu-de-paume; after the same.

The Taking of the Bastille; after the same.

The Fête of the Federation; after the same.

The Tenth of August, 1792; after the same.

The Execution of Louis XVI.; after the same.

Joseph and Potiphar's Wife; after Lagrenée.

Susannah and the Elders; after the same.

The Death of Cleopatra; after the same.

The Useless Precaution; after Le Prince.

The Useless Lesson; after the same.

The French Quack-Doctor; after Bertaux.

The German Quack-Doctor; after the same.

The Temple of the Sibyl at Tivoli; after Robert.

An 'Essai sur l'œuvre d'Helman,' by Henri Viennet, appeared in the 'Revue universelle des Arts' for 1864-5, tome xx., pp. 263-274.

HELMBREKER, THEODORUS, born at Haarlem in 1624, was the son of an organist, who destined him to the study of music, but his disposition leading him to painting, he was placed under the tuition of Pieter De Grebber, at the time that Sir Peter Lely was a scholar of that master. After the death of his father, he went to Venice, where he was patronized by the Senator Loredano, for whom he painted several pictures. He soon after visited Rome, where he was taken under the patronage of the Cardinal de' Medici. He next visited Florence and Naples, and after a residence of several years in Italy, returned to his native country, where he was loaded with commissions, which he found it difficult to execute. In spite of this flattering encouragement, however, his desire of revisiting Rome prevailed, and on his return to that city he was employed for two years by the Jesuits, for whom he painted some of his finest pictures. He sometimes painted subjects as large as life; but he is more successful in his easel pictures, representing markets, fairs, and views in Rome, with groups of poor, to whom the monks are distributing alms or food. He occasionally resembles Bamboccio in the subjects and tone of his pictures. He died at Rome in 1694.

HELMONT, LUCAS VAN. See GASSEL.

HELMONT, MATHEUS VAN, was born at Brussels in 1653, and was probably a pupil of the younger Teniers. He excelled in painting fairs and Italian markets, with workshops, mountebanks, &c., in a style that makes it probable that he had visited Italy. He resided some time in Paris, where his works were admired by Louis XIV., for whom he painted some of his best pictures. He died at Antwerp in 1719. Among his works are:

Brussels. Arenberg } A large Fair.
Gallery.

Brunswick. Gallery. Scene from Home Life.
Cobbler's Workshop.

Copenhagen. Gallery. An Alchemist.

Lille. Museum. Interior Scene.

Stockholm. Gallery. Three Scenes at Inns.

HELMONT, SEGERS JACOBUS VAN, the son and scholar of Matheus van Helmont, was born at Antwerp in 1683. It does not appear that he received the instruction of any other master than his father, but he improved himself by studying the best models, and consulting nature in everything. He painted historical subjects with great success, but his principal pictures are in the churches at Brussels, where they hold a respectable rank among the works of the Flemish school. In the church of St. Mary Magdalene is a fine picture of the 'Martyrdom of St. Barbara,' designed and painted in the style of Van Dyck; in the church of St. Michael is the 'Triumph of David'; and at the Carmelites is one of his most esteemed works, representing 'Elijah sacrificing before the Priests of Baal.' The Museum of Ghent contains a 'Christ on the Cross' by him; in the Darmstadt Museum are pictures of 'Peasants playing Cards' and a portrait of Canon von Krufft of Cologne; and in Modena is a picture of 'A Priest distributing Bread and Wine.' He died at Brussels in 1726.

HELMSDORF, FRIEDRICH, a German landscape painter, was born at Magdeburg in 1784, and removed in 1809 to Strassburg, where he obtained a large number of pupils. He died at Carlsruhe in 1852. Two of his best paintings are 'Tasso's Oak' and 'Lake Nemi,' painted during his visits to Italy.

HELST, VAN DER. See VAN DER HELST.

HELT-STOKADE, ALBERT VAN, a brother of Nicolaas van Helt-Stokade, painted landscapes in the style of Berchem.

HELT-STOKADE, NICOLAAS VAN, was born at Nimeguen about 1614, and was a scholar of the elder David Ryckaert, whose daughter he married. His first pursuit was landscape painting, but being more inclined to figure subjects, he applied himself to historical painting, in which he had acquired some celebrity, when he determined to visit Italy in search of improvement, and passed several years at Rome. Here his talents soon recommended him to public attention, and he was employed in painting some pictures for the palaces and private collections, particularly for Christina, Queen of Sweden. After a residence of eight years at Rome, he went to Venice, where he improved his style of colouring by the study of the works of the best masters of the Venetian school. On his way back to Holland he visited Paris, and there met with so much encouragement that he was induced to remain for some time in that city, where he was appointed one of the painters to the king. He died in 1669, after his return to his native country. The historical pictures by Helt-Stokade are generally of large dimensions; some of them have had the honour of poetical commendation from his countrymen, particularly those of 'Andromeda chained to a Rock,' 'Clelia passing the Tiber,' and 'Joseph distributing Corn to his Brethren,' the last-named being in the Amsterdam Town-hall. He was distinguished also as a portrait painter, and he inserted the figures in the landscapes of Wynants, Hackaert, and W. De Heusch. There are three etchings by him: 'Cephalus and Aurora,' 'Susannah bathing,' and the portrait of A. van Opstat, after Van Dyck.

HELTERHOF, PHILIPP, a German painter, was born at Ham, in Bavaria, in 1725, and died in 1807. He studied at Munich under Zimmermann, and with him he was engaged in several works.

HELWIG, —, a German miniature painter, was born at Spangenberg, in Hesse, about 1673, and studied at Rome. He resided at Cassel, where he died in 1715.

HEME, LODEWYK, a native of Courtrai, and a pupil of Pieter Vlerick, flourished in the latter part of the 16th century. He painted architectural and perspective subjects in the manner of his master, and is perhaps the author of a remarkable picture of 'St. Martin' in the church of that name at Courtrai.

HEMELRAET, PHILIPPUS AUGUSTUS, (or EMELRAET,) a Flemish landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1612. He went to Italy when young, and passed several years at Rome. On his return to Antwerp, he distinguished himself by painting large landscapes in a superior style, and was engaged by the ablest historical painters to introduce his landscapes as the backgrounds of their pictures. Such is the case in Biset's 'William Tell,' in the Brussels Gallery. In the church of the Barefooted Carmelites at Antwerp were some capital landscapes by Hemelraet, painted in a grand style, and of a fine effect. He died at Antwerp in 1668.

HEMERICH, C. H., an engraver, who from his name was probably a German, resided in London about the beginning of the last century. There is by him a set of butterflies and insects, after Roesel.

HÉMERY, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1751, but the date of his death is not known. His best works are a portrait of Gaspard Netscher, after himself; 'La Marchande des noisettes' and 'La Marchande des œufs,' after Touzé; the 'Inauguration of the Statue of the King on the Place Louis XV.,' after De Machy; 'Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette before the bust of Henry IV.,' an elegant allegorical vignette after Quéverdo; and the 'Creation of Eve,' after Camillo Procaccini, dated 1782, one of the most admired engravings of the modern French school. He also worked for the 'Cabinet Poullain.' His sisters, MARGUERITE and THÉRÈSE ELÉONORE, who practised the same art, married respectively the engravers Nicolas Ponce and Charles Louis Lingée, and are noticed under those names.

FRANÇOISE ELÉONORE HÉMERY, who engraved 'The Three Graces,' after C. van Loo, in 1772, and LOUISE ROSALIE HÉMERY, who engraved after Greuze a 'Head of a laughing Child' and a 'Head of a crying Girl,' were probably likewise sisters of this artist.

HEMESSEN, JAN VAN. See SANDERS, JAN.

HEMLING, HANS. See MEMLING.

HEMMER, JOHANN SEBASTIAN BERNHARD, a German painter, born at Coburg in 1745, was a pupil of Nothnagel at Frankfort. He returned to Coburg and established himself as a miniature and water-colour painter. He died about 1810.

HEMSEN, JAN VAN. See SANDERS, JAN.

HENAREJOS, DOMINGO VALDIVIESO Y. See VALDIVIESO.

HENDERSON, JOHN, the eminent tragedian, was born in London in 1747. He studied in Shipley's school, and under D. Fournier, and he gained a medal at the Society of Arts in 1762, but afterwards abandoned art. He died in London in 1785.

HENDRIKS, WYBRAND, was born at Amsterdam in 1744, and educated at the National Academy of Design. He then lived for a time in the country, until he received the appointment of keeper of then Teyler Art Cabinet at Haarlem. He painted landscapes, portraits, and interiors; but the pictures by him which are most prized are flower-pieces and subjects of dead game, in the manner of Weenix. There is a view of Haarlem by him in the Museum at Amsterdam. He died at Haarlem in 1831.

HENGEL, H. F. VAN, a Dutch painter, born at Nimeguen in 1705, studied under Herman van der Myn, and painted landscapes and conversations of a cabinet size. Either the public disregarded his works, or he was so enamoured of them as not to part with them, that he retained them, as a collection, to the time of his death, when they were sold with the pictures of other masters belonging to him. He died at Utrecht in 1785.

HENGSBACH, FRANZ, a German landscape painter, was born at Werl in Westphalia in 1814. He was from 1833 to 1840 a student of the Düsseldorf Academy under J. W. Schirmer, and painted in the style of the older landscape painters of that school many works of much excellence in drawing and colour, the subjects of which were drawn from the picturesque scenery of the Tyrol, Salzkammergut, Upper Bavaria, and Switzerland. He died at Düsseldorf in 1883. Among his best pictures are:

View of Salzburg. 1841.

Staufen near Salzburg. 1842.

Mills in the Tyrol. 1846.

The Lake of Hallstadt. 1848.

Waterfall in Upper Bavaria. 1850.

Limburg on the Lahn by moonlight.

Evening on the Lago Maggiore. 1880.

Lausanne and the Lake of Geneva.

HENGST, WILLEM, was a native of Nimeguen, who studied in Paris under Rigaud and Largillière. He afterwards returned to his own country and took to portrait painting. He died at Cuyk on the Meuse about 1780 or 1785.

HENGSTENBURGH, HERMANUS. See HENSTENBURGH.

HENNE, EBERHARD SIEGFRIED, a German engraver, was born in 1759, and at first studied theology, but afterwards turned his attention to art, which he pursued at Leipzig under Oeser, Bause, and Liebe, and later on at Berlin under Rode and Chodowiecki. In 1793 he engraved his principal plate, 'The Sacrifice of Iphigenia,' after Van Loo; and a little after this a number of illustrations to Archenholz's 'Handbook of the Seven Years' War.' In 1808 the military embroilments drove him to Brunswick and Westerborg, where he mainly devoted himself to painting landscapes. After the Peace of Tilsit he returned to Berlin, where he died in 1828. Among his other plates are:

The Parting of Louis XVI. from his Family; after Chodowiecki.

Jesus breaking the Bread to the Disciples at Emmaus; after Rode.

The King and Prince taking leave of the dying Queen Louise.

HENNE, PICART, a portrait and historical painter, born in Hainault, was painter to the Duke of Burgundy in 1401. He is probably the same as Pierre Henne, who in 1417 or 1418 painted the portrait of Margaret of Burgundy, Countess of Hainault. He resided at Mons, and worked for the town of Rœulx in the years 1395-96 and 1412-13. He died before 1422.

HENNEBERG, ANDREAS, (or HENNEBERGER,) was probably one of the family of artists of that name settled at Geisslingen. In 1575 he was court painter at Munich, and took portraits at about that date for the ducal court. He died about 1594. There was a DOROTHEA HENNEBERG, who in 1590 held the same office at Munich, and who also painted portraits in oil and water-colours.

HENNEBERG, RUDOLPH FRIEDRICH, a German historical painter, was born at Brunswick in 1825. He was intended for a barrister, and therefore studied law at Göttingen and Heidelberg from 1845 to 1848, and acted as local judge in his native city. In 1850-51 he commenced the study of painting at the Antwerp Academy, afterwards working under Thomas Couture in Paris, where he remained till 1860. He then travelled in Italy for two years, visiting Rome, Naples, Florence, and Venice, and occupying himself with copying the old masters, especially Titian; he next settled down for a time at Munich. He went to Berlin in 1866, but on account of his health he had to go again to Italy in 1873, and returned, as an incurable, to his native city, where he died in the autumn of 1876. He executed some wall paintings in the Villa Warschauer in Charlottenburg, and was a member of the Berlin Academy. His most important picture is the celebrated 'Hunt after Fortune,' a copy of which exists in the Bethnal Green Museum, London; the original, dated 1868, being in the National Gallery at Berlin.

HENNEBERGER, HANS, a card painter, was born at Mühlhausen, in Prussia, in the latter part of the 16th century, and was placed under Adam Lange, who taught him every branch of art, and of art workmanship. On the death of his master he succeeded him in the post of court painter, and completed the decoration, commenced by Lange, of the Muscovite Saloon in the palace at Königsberg, which he adorned with portraits and heraldic designs. He also painted portraits in oil, but he was most largely employed in the execution of patents of nobility. He died in 1601.

HENNEQUART, JEHAN, (or HENNEKERT,) was a Flemish painter, who worked at Lille about the middle of the 15th century, and was a contemporary of Pieter Coustain.

HENNEQUIN, BAPTIST, a Flemish painter, flourished at Bruges about 1468.

HENNEQUIN, PHILIPPE AUGUSTE, a French historical painter, was born at Lyons in 1763, and studied under David in Paris. He obtained the 'grand prix de Rome,' but on the outbreak of the French Revolution his avowal of partisanship with the revolutionists obliged him to quit Italy. He went to Lyons, where he was imprisoned, but managed to escape, and got to Paris, where he owed his safety to his friends. After several disagreeable experiences from the same cause, which repeatedly brought his life into danger, he in 1794 abandoned politics and devoted himself wholly to art. On the restoration of the Bourbons in 1814 he migrated to Liège, and there painted 'The Devotion of the Three Hundred Citizens of Franchimont,' of which he engraved the sketch. Thence he removed to Tournai, where he settled as director of the Academy, and had Gallait among his pupils. He died at Leuze, near Tournai, in 1833. Amongst his principal works are:

Angers.	Museum.	Crime pursued by Remorse.
"	"	Time.
"	"	Fright.
Lyons.	Museum.	Saul and the Witch of Endor.
Orleans.	Museum.	Truth and Justice mounting to Heaven.

Versailles. Gallery. Battle of the Pyramids. 1806.
 " " Allegory of Napoleon I.
 " " Portrait of Marquis of Pérignon.

HENNIG, GUSTAV ADOLPH, a German historical painter, was born at Dresden in 1798, and began his studies at the Academy there, after which, with royal assistance, he completed them at Rome. Returning to his own country, he was made first professor and then director of the Leipzig Academy, and in 1840 professor in that of Dresden. He died at Leipzig in 1869. One of his best paintings is 'Christ purifying the Temple.'

HENNIG, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, was born at Berlin in 1778, and engraved several views of that city and the neighbourhood. In the Dresden Gallery is a picture of 'The Finding of Moses.'

HENNING, CHRISTIAN, born at Erfurt in 1741, went to Hoorn, in Holland, where he executed some paintings for the theatre of Amsterdam, and with his brother Gottfried managed a tapestry manufactory. He died at Zeist in 1822.

HENNING, CHRISTOPH DANIEL, a painter and engraver, was born in 1734 at Nuremberg, where he also died. Among his best works were views of Nuremberg, and portraits of Joseph II. and Pope Pius VI.

HENRI. See GRÉVEDON.

HENRICH, GASPARD, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Oudenarde in 1550, and died in Italy.

HENRICI, JOHANN JOSEPH KARL, a native of Schweidnitz in Silesia, was born in 1737. He worked as a theatre painter in Bohemia, and afterwards went to Vienna and Venice, where he devoted himself to miniature painting. He executed frescoes, conversation pieces, portraits, and architectural subjects. He died in 1823.

HENRIET, CLAUDE, who was born at Châlons-sur-Marne about 1540, was summoned about 1586 to the court of Charles III., Duke of Lorraine, at Nancy, where he died in 1603. He painted portraits and historical subjects, but principally excelled in glass painting. The windows of the cathedral at Châlons and of St. Étienne-du-Mont at Paris are his most important works. He was also the instructor of Callot.

HENRIET, ISRAEL, who was also known by his Christian name of ISRAEL alone, was born at Nancy about 1590. He was the son of Claude Henriet, a glass painter, who taught him the rudiments of design, and sent him for improvement to Rome, where he studied some time under Antonio Tempesta. Upon his return to France he established himself in Paris as a print-seller, and published some of his own plates, as well as those of Callot, Della Bella, and Israel Silvestre, who were all employed by him. He engraved a few plates of views and small subjects, in which he imitated the style of Callot. He instructed Louis XIV. in drawing, and died in Paris in 1661.

HENRIQUEZ, BENOÎT LOUIS, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1732. He was a pupil of N. G. Dupuis, and was admitted into the Academy in 1779. He spent some time at St. Petersburg, where he appears to have been engraver to the Emperor. He died in Paris in 1806. Among portraits and other subjects by him are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Louis XIV.; after Rigaud.
 Louis XVI.; after J. Boze.
 Louise Marie Adélaïde, Duchess of Chartres; after Duplessis.

 Love; after Greuze.

HENRIQUEZ, EMMANUEL, was born in the neighbourhood of Nogueira, in Portugal, in 1593. He executed several pictures, and in 1618 entered the Society of Jesus. He died in 1653.

HENRY LE LORRAIN was a French painter of history, who painted in 1507 an 'Assumption' for the Church of the Cordeliers at Nancy.

HENRY, BON THOMAS, a French portrait painter, was born at Cherbourg in 1766. He was a pupil of Landon and of Regnault, and died in Paris in 1836. He founded the Museum at Cherbourg.

HENRY, JEAN, a French marine painter, born at Arles in 1734, was a pupil of Kapeller and J. Vernet. He died at Toulouse in 1784. Examples of his sea-pieces may be seen in the Museums of Grenoble, Marseilles, Toulon, and Havre.

HENRY, SUSANNA, a daughter of the celebrated artist Daniel N. Chodowiecki, and wife of a Brandenburg ecclesiastic, named Henry, was a painter who in 1812 became a member of the Berlin Academy. She was still living in 1818.

HENRY JULIUS, Duke of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, an amateur painter, was born in 1564, and reigned from 1589 to 1613, in which year he died. There is a 'Wooded Landscape' by him in the Brunswick Gallery.

HENSBERG, JEROM VAN, who flourished in 1662, is mentioned by Professor Christ as an engraver.

HENSCH, GOTTHILF FRIEDRICH, a portrait and miniature painter, was born at Andreasberg in the Harz in 1732. He practised his art in various cities of Germany, and finally settled at Brunswick, dying about 1785.

HENSEL, WILHELM, a German historical and portrait painter, was born at Trebbin in 1794. He at first studied architecture, but afterwards took to painting under Frisch, the director of the Berlin Academy, and in 1812 exhibited his first work, 'Christ on the Mount of Olives.' He served for two years in the army (1813-15), but after the close of the war with Napoleon, he returned to art, and by his exertions supported his mother and brother, finding time also to write poetry. In 1823 he was enabled to visit Italy, where he remained for five years, studying and copying the works of the old masters. After his return to Berlin, in 1828, honours came quickly to him; he became a member of the Academy, court painter, and professor of painting. He was also decorated with the Order of the Red Eagle, the Hohenzollern Order, the Order of Leopold, &c. He is stated to have painted more than a thousand portraits of distinguished men of his time. He died at Berlin in 1861, through an injury received in saving a man's life. Amongst his chief works are:

The Good Samaritan. (Royal Palace, Berlin.)
 Christ before Pilate. (Potsdam.)
 Miriam playing the Timbrel. 1839. (The Queen.)
 Christ in the Wilderness. 1839.

Christ meditating on his Mission. (Bridgewater Gallery, London.)

Christ and the Woman of Samaria.

The Duke of Brunswick at the Ball on the Eve of the Battle of Waterloo.

Among the portraits which he painted are:

Frederick William IV., King of Prussia.

Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.

The Prince of Wales when a Child.

HENSTENBURGH, HERMANUS, was born at Hoorn, in North Holland, in 1667. He studied under Johannes Bronkhorst, and soon surpassed him; still he was for a long time compelled to earn his living at a pastry-cook's, till Matheus Terwesten made his merits known. He excelled in the painting of flowers, fruit, birds, snails, &c. in water-colours, as well as in gouache and oil. He died at Hoorn in 1726.

HERACLEIDES, a Greek painter, was a native of Macedon, who went in B.C. 168 to Athens, where he had a great reputation for his paintings in encaustic.

HÉRAULT, ANTOINETTE. See under CHATEAU, GUILLAUME.

HÉRAULT, CHARLES ANTOINE, a landscape painter, born in Paris in 1644, was the son and pupil of Antoine Hérault, a painter, and brother-in-law to Noël Coypel, whom he accompanied to Rome in 1672. He was received into the French Academy in 1670, and died in Paris in 1718.

HERBEL, KARL, a painter of Nancy, who flourished about 1680, produced several battle pieces depicting the deeds of Charles V., Duke of Lorraine. He also worked some time at Vienna for the Emperor Leopold I. Elias Hainzelmann engraved after him the portraits of Duke Charles and his consort Eleonora. He died in 1703.

HERBERT, ALFRED, a marine painter in water-colours, was the son of a Thames waterman. He was at an early age apprenticed to a bookbinder, but left that trade to follow the profession of an artist. His pictures were chiefly views on the Thames and coast scenes, which he executed with a masterly hand, showing true genius. Though a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy and the Suffolk Street Exhibition, his productions never sold well, and he died in poverty in 1861. The South Kensington Museum has 'A Wreck off Appledore' and 'A Man-of-War off Dover.'

HERBERT, ARTHUR JOHN, a subject painter, the son of John Rogers Herbert, R.A., was born in 1834, and studied under his father. He was showing much promise, when he died of fever at Muriac, in Auvergne, in 1856. There is a water-colour drawing of 'Barnstaple' by him in the South Kensington Museum. He exhibited at the Royal Academy:

Don Quixote's first impulse to become a Knight-errant. 1855.

Philip IV. of Spain knighting Velazquez. 1856.

HERBERT, CYRIL WISEMAN, the youngest son of John Rogers Herbert, R.A., was born in London in 1847. On his father's return to England he was sent to Oscott College, and then to King's College, London, while his artistic training was conducted by his father. In 1868 he went to Italy, and in 1882 he became Curator of the Antique School in the Royal Academy. He died in London in 1882, a week's illness terminating a career of the brightest promise. He exhibited at the Royal Academy:

Homeward after Labour. 1870.

As Idyl. 1871.

Returning to the Fold. 1874.

Escaped Home. 1875.

HERBIG, WILHELM, a German historical painter, was born at Potsdam towards the close of the 18th century. He was a pupil, and afterwards vice-director, of the Berlin Academy, and died in 1861. His best-known pictures are 'The Spinner' and 'A Family saving itself from an Inundation.'

HERBST, JOHANNES, (or HERBSTER,) was a painter of Strassburg, who flourished about 1468, but abandoned art at the time of the Reformation, from an idea that it tended to the adoration of images.

HERBSTHOFFER, KARL, was a genre painter, born at Pressburg in 1821, who studied at the Vienna Academy under Amerling, and died in Paris in 1876. His works were in the style of the French rococo painters, and among them were:

Plundering of a Church.

The Challenge.

Knights at an Armourer's.

The Arrest.

HERCK, JACQUES MELCHIOR VAN, a Flemish painter of flowers, was the pupil and son-in-law of P. G. Verbruggen, whose works he copied. He was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1694-5, and filled the office of dean in 1720, 1733, 1734, and 1735.

HERDER, C., a Dutch historical and portrait painter, was born in 1550 at Gröningen, where he also died in 1609. He was at Rome with Karel van Mander.

HERDMAN, WILLIAM GAWIN, a landscape painter, was born at Liverpool in 1805. He was self-taught, and very early in life he began sketching the old buildings of his native city, so that by the time he was twenty years of age he had made about three hundred drawings, two series of which he published in 1843 and 1856, with historical text, as 'Pictorial Relics of Ancient Liverpool.' Topographical views and interiors were his forte, but the reformation of perspective was the great object of his life for the last twenty or thirty years. His views were first broached in the 'Art Journal' in 1849, and gave rise to much criticism, for he rejected the present system on finding that the representations of objects by its rules on the picture did not coincide with the results of vision or of sketches made by the hand and eye. In 1853 he published his 'Treatise on the Curvilinear Perspective of Nature.' He published also a folio volume of 'Studies' in 1858, and other works in prose and verse. He was for some years a member of the Liverpool Academy, and was the founder of shilling art-unions. He died at Liverpool in 1882.

HEREAU, JULES, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1839. He spent some time in England, and painted several views on the Thames. He was killed on the railway at Auteuil in 1879. Amongst his works are:

The End of the Village; winter scene. 1855.

The Shepherd and the Sea. 1864. (Montpellier Museum.)

The Impending Storm. 1865. (Amiens Museum.)

The Shepherd's Song. 1866. (Rouen Museum.)

The Beach at Honfleur. 1872.

The Thames at London Bridge. 1873.

The Thames at Gravesend. 1873.

Banks of the Meuse. 1879.

HERFORD, LAURA, who was born in 1831, was the first female student of the Royal Academy, and to her the opening of the schools to women in 1860 was greatly due. She exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1864 until her death in 1870.

HERGENRÖDER, GEORG HEINRICH, a German painter, was born at Darmstadt in 1736, and died about 1794. There are pictures of 'Girls bathing' and 'A Robber's Cave' by him in the Cassel Gallery.

HERING, GEORGE EDWARDS, who was born in London in 1805, was the younger son of a German bookbinder, who was the head of the family of Von Heringen of Brunswick, but who had settled in London. He lost his father while still a youth, and after completing his education in Germany, was placed in a banking-house, but his dislike of the desk and his natural love for art soon induced him to obtain the permission of his family to quit the bank, and return to Germany to study painting. He went first to Munich in 1829, thence through the Tyrol to Venice, in which city he specially delighted; then through Italy, and to Constantinople, Smyrna, and the East,—making everywhere studies and sketches, which afterwards bore ample fruit. On his return to Rome, where he was very popular with his fellow-workers of all nationalities, he met with Mr. Paget, and with him and another friend made a tour through Hungary and Transylvania and to the Carpathian Mountains. The results of this journey were his illustrations to Mr. Paget's 'Hungary and Transylvania,' 1839, and a volume of 'Sketches on the Danube, in Hungary and Transylvania,' published in 1838. On his return to England, after an absence of seven years, he settled in London, where, with the exception of a few short visits to Italy, he chiefly resided. In 1847 he published 'The Mountains and Lakes of Switzerland, the Tyrol, and Italy.' Though a resident for the greater part of his life in England, its scenery afforded him, comparatively, but few subjects. He died in London in 1879. From 1836 until the year of his death, he contributed every year to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, sending in all eighty-seven works, of which the following were among the best:

The Ruins of the Palace of the Cæsars. 1836.

Amalfi. 1841. (The Queen.)

Venice. 1848.

The Brig over the Burn, Perthshire. 1851.

Angera, Lago Maggiore. 1854.

Returning from Torcello. 1859.

There is a small 'Bridge over a Stream,' dated 1847, by him in the South Kensington Museum.

HERING, JOHANN GEORG, was a painter of Eschwegen in the 16th century, who studied under Christoph Müller at Cassel, and in 1587 travelled in Italy for further improvement. In 1620 he became court painter at Prague; he also worked considerably for the monastery of Strahow.

HÉRISSET, ANTOINE, a French engraver, flourished about the year 1740. He engraved some of the plates for Monicart's 'Versailles immortalisé,' 1720-21, and also some plates of fortifications, published in 1757. There are also two prints of scenes in the life of St. Vincent of Paola, after J. F. de Troy, etched by Hérisset, but finished by Jeaurat.

HERISSON, LOUIS FRANÇOIS, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1811, and died in the same city in 1859.

HERLE, WILHELM VON. See WILHELM, Meister.

HERLEN, FRIEDRICH, (HÖRLIN, HERLIN, or HERLEIN), a German painter, flourished from the middle to the close of the 15th century. He was at Ulm about 1449 and 1454, then at Rothenburg, and in 1467 he settled at Nördlingen, where he died probably in 1499 or 1500. His pictures are in the manner of the school of Rogier van der Weyden, and he was also an imitator of Van Eyck, so that it seems safe to assume that he studied in the Netherlands. There are sixteen pictures by him in the church of St. George at Nördlingen; namely, 'The Virgin enthroned,' an 'Ecce Homo,' 'The Magdalene washing the Saviour's Feet,' 'The Appearance of Christ,' several Saints and Donators, and 'The Crucifixion,' painted upon gold ground—the dates ranging from 1462 to 1488. There is also a grand triptych in the choir of the cathedral of Meissen which is attributed to him, but unfortunately, like the above, it has been injured by restoration. He executed similar works in the church and town-hall of Rothenburg, in the church at Bopfingen, and apparently in that at Dinkelsbühl. A 'Christ on the Cross' by him is in the Vienna Gallery, and a small 'Offering of the Three Kings' is in the possession of Herr von Holzschuher of Augsburg. His grandson, JESSE HERLEN, was also a painter, though inferior; a 'Last Judgment' by him is in the church of St. George at Nördlingen. He was born in 1500 or 1501, and died in 1575. Another FRIEDRICH HERLEN, the great-grandson of the first, died at Nördlingen in 1591.

HERMAN, who succeeded as bishop of Winton in 1045, and as bishop of Sherborne in 1050, and removed the see to Salisbury, is stated to have decorated with miniatures some manuscripts of his own writing. He died before 1080.

HERMAN OF ITALY. See SWANEVELT.

HERMANN, JOSEPH, born at Freiburg in Breisgau, in 1735, was the son of a shoemaker. He studied philosophy and theology for a time, and then, against the wish of his father, became a painter, and imitated the works of Baldung, Holbein, Abel Stimmer, and Maratti. He was especially skilful in the representation of beautiful heads and of storms at sea. The date of his death is unrecorded.

HERMANN, KARL, was a painter born at Oppeln, who in 1820 was at Rome, where he produced an admired copy of the 'Madonna' of Francia in the Borghese Palace. He made also some copies of Raphael, among which was one of the 'Madonna della Casa Tempi' in the Munich Gallery. His works were mainly historical and genre subjects, but he was also a good portraitist and designer. He died at Breslau in 1845.

HERMANN, KARL HEINRICH, who was born at Dresden in 1802, first studied art in the Academy of his native city. He then removed to Düsseldorf and became a pupil of Cornelius, whom he accompanied, after some years spent in decorating the Aula at Bonn and elsewhere, to Munich. There he was employed in executing in fresco the designs of Cornelius in the Glyptothek and the Ludwigskirche. Among the best of his own compositions are the 'Ascension of Christ' in the Protestant church, the frescoes from Eschenbach's 'Parcival' in the Königsbau, and above all the 'Victory of the Emperor Louis the Bavarian at Ampfing,' which is one of the series of historical frescoes in the arcades of the Hofgarten at Munich, one of the drawings of which is in the Frankfort Gallery. In 1844 he was summoned to Berlin, where he decorated the Klosterkirche with figures of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Evangelists, and the Apostles Peter and Paul. In 1854 he completed fifteen large pictures illustrative of the history of the German people. Hermann died at Berlin in 1880.

HERMANS, FRANÇOIS, a Dutch allegorical painter, born at Maestricht, flourished in the 18th century. He was an elder brother of Louis Hermans.

HERMANS, LOUIS, a Dutch fruit and flower painter, was born at Maestricht in 1750, and died there in 1833. He worked with his brother François Hermans.

HERMANS, MATTHIAS, a Dutch painter of history and architecture, was a nephew of François Hermans. He was born at Maestricht in 1789, and died in 1842.

HERMANT, JEAN, born at Troyes in 1451, was a famous glass painter, who executed for the cathedral at Troyes a window representing 'The Baptism of St. John.'

HERMES, ISAAC, was a Spanish painter, who in 1587 executed paintings for the high altar and other parts of Tarragona Cathedral.

HERMOGENES, was a native of Africa, who lived about A.D. 200. He was a contemporary of Tertullian, who wrote a book against him, condemning his opinions and his paintings.

HERNANDEZ, ALEXEO. See FERNANDEZ.

HERNE, WILLIAM, was an artist who was appointed serjeant-painter to Queen Elizabeth in 1572.

HERNEYSSSEN, ANDREAS, was a painter of Nuremberg, who in 1578 was admitted into the Brotherhood of St. Luke at Würzburg. In 1574 he produced the portrait of Hans Sachs, now in the Wolfenbüttel Gallery, and in 1576 he decorated with paintings the abbey church of Allersbach, in Lower Bavaria. In 1580 he painted the ceiling of the cathedral in that town, and in 1587 the Brunnen at Nuremberg.

HEROLD, JOHANNA HELENA, a painter in water-colours, born at Frankfurt in 1668, was the daughter of Johann Andreas Graff, who married Maria Sibylla Merian. She painted insects and flowers equally well with her mother, whom in 1684 she accompanied to West Friesland, and in 1699 to Surinam. Shortly after this she was married to the merchant Herold, with whom in 1702 she paid a second visit to the latter place, where she painted plants, butterflies, &c. for her mother's 'Metamorphosis Insectorum Surinamensium,' published in 1705. She died at Amsterdam, but in what year is not known.

HÉROULT, ANTOINE DESIRÉ, a French landscape painter, was born at Pont-l'Évêque (Calvados) in 1802, and died in Paris in 1853. He painted both in oil and in water-colours. Among other works he exhibited the following:

- View of London. 1841.
- View of the Thames at Greenwich. 1842.
- View at Honfleur. 1843.
- View near Cherbourg. 1844.
- Forest of Fontainebleau. 1852.

HERP, GUILLIAM VAN, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1614. In 1626 he was apprenticed to Darman Wortelmans at Antwerp, and two years later to Hans Birmans in the same city. In 1637-8 he became a master in the Guild of St. Luke, and was afterwards much influenced by the works of Rubens. His pictures are not numerous; they usually represent interiors, with persons of the middle class; Scriptural subjects by him are rare. He sometimes put figures into Van Delen's architectural pieces, as in an interior of a church in the collection of Lord Caledon. He died at Antwerp in 1677. The following pictures are ascribed to him:

- Berlin. Gallery. A Satyr in the midst of a Peasant's Family.
- Brussels. Arenberg Gallery. } A Peasant Family.
- Dulwich. Gallery. Figures with Sheep at a Well.
- London. Bridgewater Gallery. } Boors regaling.
- " Marquis of Bute's Coll. } Men and Women regaling themselves.
- " " } A Repast (companion to the above).
- Stockholm. Museum. Christ's Entry into Jerusalem.
- Vienna. Harrach Coll. } Soldiers and Peasants.

In addition to these, Waagen and other writers mention a picture by Van Herp, in the National Gallery, of 'Monks distributing bread to the poor at the door of a Convent'; it is not now, however, exhibited.

HERPE, JAN VAN, a painter of religious subjects, was born at Ghent in 1432. He entered the Painters' Guild at Ghent in 1463, and died in 1486.

HERPIN, LÉON, who was born at Granville in 1841, began life as a land-measurer, but afterwards studied under Daubigny, J. André, and Busson, and evinced a talent for landscape painting. He died in 1880. He exhibited amongst other pictures the following:

- The Marne at Chennevières.
- The Bridge of Sèvres. 1876.
- Paris from the Bridge of Saints-Pères. 1878. (Luxembourg Gallery.)
- Paris from the Pont-Neuf in 1878. (Hôtel de Ville, Paris.)

HERR, MICHAEL, is said by Doppelmayr to have been born in 1591 at Metzgingen, in Würtemberg, but Neudörffer reckons him among Nuremberg painters. He appears to have gone early in life to Nuremberg, and afterwards to Italy. In 1620 he returned to Nuremberg, where he painted in 1622 an allegorical picture of 'The Seven Liberal Arts, with Mars and Justice,' also a memorial picture in St. John's churchyard. He died at Nuremberg in 1661.

HERREGOUTS, DAVID, an historical painter, was born at Mechlin in 1603. He was received into the corporation of painters in his native city in 1624, but afterwards established himself at Ruremonde, where he was made a member of the Guild of St. Luke in 1647, and died at a date unknown. In the church of St. Catharine at Mechlin is a picture of 'St. Joseph awakened by an Angel.'

HERREGOUTS, HENDRIK, an historical painter, the son and pupil of David Herregouts, was born at Mechlin in 1633. He resided for some years in Italy, and returned home through Germany, working at Cologne in 1660. In 1664-5 he was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp, and in 1666 into that at Mechlin. In 1679-80 he was settled in Antwerp, where he died in 1724. There are several of his works in the churches at Antwerp, Brussels, Liège, Louvain, and Bruges. In the cathedral at Antwerp is a fine picture by him of 'The Martyrdom of St. Matthew.' At Bruges, in the church of St. Anne, is his best work, 'The Last Judgment,' an immense picture, with figures larger than life, grandly composed, and in a bold style of design.

HERREGOUTS, JAN BAPTIST, the son and pupil of Hendrik Herregouts, is said to have been a native of Ruremonde. He was received into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1677-8, but settled at Bruges, where many of his best works are still to be found. He painted in the style of his father, and though inferior to him in some respects, his works possess considerable merit. He was one of the founders of the Academy at Bruges, where he died in 1721. The following are his best pictures: in the church of St. Anne, at Bruges, 'The Virgin and Infant in the Clouds, with a Glory of Angels'; in the church of the Carmelites, 'The Presentation in the Temple,' and, at the principal altar, 'The Virgin and several Saints kneeling before Christ,' which is considered his chef-d'œuvre. There are a few etchings by this artist, executed in a free, slight style; among which is 'St. Cecilia surrounded with Angels.'

HERREGOUTS, MAXIMILIAN, was a Flemish artist, who painted a picture with the date 1674, representing 'A Kitchen with a Woman making Pancakes.'

HERRERA, —, called 'el Rubio,' or 'the Red,' the eldest son of Francisco de Herrera the elder, was born at Seville at the commencement of the 17th century. He was a promising painter of signboards and other fanciful subjects, but died young.

HERRERA, ALONSO DE, a Spanish painter, lived at Segovia in 1579, and was an intimate friend of El Mudo. In 1590 he painted for the high altar of the church of Villacas six pictures on subjects chosen from the life of Christ, which, according to Cean Bermudez, were well drawn and well coloured.

HERRERA, BARTOLOME DE, a brother of Francisco de Herrera the elder, was a portrait painter, who flourished at Seville about 1639.

HERRERA, FRANCISCO DE, the elder, a Spanish painter, was born at Seville about 1576, and studied art under Luis Fernandez to such good purpose that he soon became famous. He was the first to introduce the vigorous style of painting, which was afterwards adopted by Velazquez. The boldness of his pictures was equalled by the impetuosity of his temper, which was at times so violent as to drive away all his pupils, among whom was Velazquez. Being fond of engraving medals, he is said to have perverted his talent to coin false money, and on being suspected he took refuge in the sanctuary of the Jesuits' College, and while there he employed his time in painting a picture of 'The Triumph of St. Hermengild,' its patron, which is now in the Museum at Seville. On Philip IV. visiting the College in 1624, the picture was shown to him, and when he heard of the artist's offence he pardoned him, with a warning not again to abuse his powers. On his return home he resumed his old occupations, but his temper became so violent that his children fled from him, his son robbed him and went to Rome, and his daughter became a nun. He painted several pictures for the churches in Seville, among which were 'St. Peter,' in the Cathedral; 'St. Basil,' now in the Museum; a 'Last Judgment' for the church of San Bernardo; and four large historical pictures for the hall of the Archbishoppal Palace. He also executed several frescoes, none of which, however, long survived him, except those in the vault of San Buenaventura. One of his frescoes he himself engraved. In 1650 he removed to Madrid, where he found Velazquez in the height of his fame, and he died there in 1656. In the Louvre is a picture of 'St. Basil dictating his Doctrine'; in the Berlin Gallery is a study of one of the heads in the preceding work; and in the Dresden Gallery is 'St. Matthew.'

HERRERA, FRANCISCO DE, the younger, second son of Francisco de Herrera the elder, was born at Seville in 1622, and was brought up in his father's studio. Owing, however, to his father's violence he fled to Rome, where he studied architecture and perspective, and painted 'bodegones,' and his fish were considered so excellent that he was called in Italy 'il Spagnuolo degli pesci,' or, 'the Spaniard of the fish.' On the death of his father in 1656 he returned to Spain, and settled at Seville, where he painted a large composition representing 'The Four Doctors of the Church adoring the Host,' and 'The Immaculate Conception,' which was placed in the cathedral, as was also a picture of 'St. Francis' for the chapel of that Saint. In 1660 or 1661 he removed to Madrid, according to Cean Bermudez, through jealousy of Murillo, and there he was employed by the Carmelite friars to paint, as an altarpiece for their church, 'The Triumph of St. Hermengild,' which is now in the Madrid Gallery. He next painted some frescoes in the church of San Felipe el Real, which attracted so much attention that he was employed by Philip IV. to paint the dome of the Chapel of Our Lady of Atocha, and was afterwards appointed painter to the king. In the reign of Charles II. he was appointed master of the royal works, and as such was engaged at Zaragoza in the renovation of the Cathedral of El Pilar. He died at Madrid in 1685.

HERRERA, ISABEL DE. See SANCHEZ COELLO.

HERRERA BARNUEVO, SEBASTIANO DE, a Spanish painter, sculptor, and architect, was born at Madrid in 1619. He was the son of a sculptor, Antonio de Herrera Barnuevo, and was placed in the atelier of Alonso Cano. He was taken into the service of Philip IV., and to him was intrusted the decoration of the Chapel of Our Lady of Atocha. In the Escorial is a 'St. Barnabas,' and in the Louvre 'Two Travelling Musicians.' He also executed several engravings. He died at Madrid in 1671. His son, IGNACIO, followed in his father's footsteps.

HERREYNS, DANIEL, a son and pupil of Jaques Herreyns, was a painter and engraver, born at Antwerp in 1678. Among his plates are:

Eurydice bitten by the Snake.
Orpheus playing his Lyre.
Geometry.
The Camel.
A Painter's Atelier.

HERREYNS, GUILLAUME JAKES, a Flemish historical and portrait painter, the great-grandson of Jaques Herreyns, was born in 1743 at Antwerp. He studied in the Academy of that city, obtaining various distinctions, and in 1765 became one of its six directors. In 1767 he removed to Mechlin, where he founded the Academy in 1771. His teaching exercised a most beneficial influence on the development of the modern Flemish School, and his reputation spread. He was visited by the Emperor Joseph II., and by Gustavus III. of Sweden, by the latter of whom he was appointed his historical painter. After the French invasion in 1794, Herreyns was appointed professor in the Central School of the department of Deux-Nèthes, but in 1800 he returned to Antwerp, and resumed his teaching in the Academy. He died at Antwerp in 1827. Amongst his works are:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	The dying Christ.
"	"	Four Portraits of Ecclesiastics.
"	Cathedral.	Christ and the Disciples at Emmaus. 1808.
Deurne.	Church.	Purification of the Virgin.
"	"	Scenes from the Life of St. Rombold.
Mechlin.	Museum.	Portrait of a Canon.
"	"	Portrait of Emperor Joseph II.

HERREYNS, JAKES, (or HERRYNS,) a Flemish historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1643, and studied under Norbert van Herp. He was made a master of the Guild of St. Luke in 1676, and painted many frescoes, as well as many historical pictures for churches in Belgium; amongst them was the 'Miracle of St. Raymond of Peñafort,' for a church in Antwerp. He supplied the figures in the landscapes of Van der Cruys and other painters. He also engraved several plates: 'Venus seeking to detain Adonis,' 'Venus before the corpse of Adonis,' and 'Christ washing the Disciples' Feet.' He died at Antwerp in 1732.

HERRING, BENJAMIN, an animal painter, was the son of John Frederick Herring. He died in 1871.

HERRING, JAMES, an American portrait painter, illustrated, with Longacre, the 'National Portrait Gallery,' published at Philadelphia in 1834-39. He died in Paris in 1867.

HERRING, JOHN FREDERICK, an animal painter, was born in Surrey in 1795. Until the age of eighteen, his life was passed in London, and he then found employment in coach-painting at Doncaster. He next worked as a stage-coachman, and for four years drove the 'York and London High-flyer'; but he devoted all his leisure time to painting, becoming known as the 'artist-coachman.' By the assistance of friends, he at length gave up the reins, and obtained some instruction from Abraham Cooper, the only art education he ever received. His earlier works were confined to race-horses, and for thirty-three successive years he painted the winners of the St. Leger. He left Doncaster in 1830, and, after a stay of about three years at Newmarket, settled in London. From this period the scope of his art widened, and he produced the works on which his reputation rests, exhibiting at the Royal Academy from 1826, at the British Institution, and also at the Society of British Artists, of which he was a member from 1841 to 1852. His art was very popular, and he received commissions from George IV., Queen Victoria, and the Duke of Orleans. He died in 1865 at Tunbridge Wells, where he had spent his latter years. Amongst his chief works are:

The Farmer's Daughter.
The Ferry.
Returning from Epsom.
The Derby Day.
Mazeppa.
Peveril of the Peak.
Going to the Fair.
The Society of Friends.
Members of the Temperance Society.
The Frugal Meal. (National Gallery, London.)
Waiting for Master.
The Baron's Charger.
The Horse Fair.
The Market Day.
A Group of Ducks. (Glasgow Gallery.)
The Deer-stalker. (The same.)
A Black Horse drinking from a Trough. (National Gallery, Dublin.)

HERRLEIN, JOHANN ANDREAS, was born at Würzburg in 1720, and became court painter to the prince-bishop of Fulda, at which place he died in 1796. The subjects of his pictures were landscapes, hunting scenes, country dances and assemblages, and nymphs bathing, in the style of the Flemish painters. Pictures by him are in the Städel Institute at Frankfurt, and in the Galleries of Darmstadt and Cassel.

HERRLIBERGER, DAVID, an engraver, was born at Zurich in 1697, and studied in that town under J. Melchior Füssli, at Augsburg under J. D. Herz, and at Amsterdam under B. Picart. He died in his native town in 1777. Among his best productions are the 'Schweizerischer Ehrentempel,' 1748, and the 'Helvetische Topographie,' 1754-73. He was also a dealer in works of art.

HERRYNS, JAKES. See HERREYNS.

HERS, JOHANN DANIEL. See HERZ.

HERSENT, FRANÇOIS ETIENNE, a nephew of Louis Hersent, and a pupil of Couture, was known as a painter of battle-scenes. He was born in Paris in 1823, and died at Fontaines-Plain-Pied, near Bourges, in 1880, having for some years relinquished his profession.

HERSENT, LOUIS, a French historical and portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1777. He studied under Regnault, and obtained the second prize of the Institute in 1797. Owing to ill health, he was for a short time compelled to forego the pursuit of art. His first exhibited picture was 'Narcissus beholding himself in the Water.' He was elected a member of the Institute in 1822, but in his latter years he painted very little. He died in Paris in 1860. Amongst his works are:

Narcissus. 1802. (Cambray Museum.)
Achilles delivering up Briseis. 1804.
Atala poisoning herself. 1806.
Fénélon bringing back to a Peasant a stolen Cow. 1810.
The Taking of Landshut. 1810. (Versailles Gallery.)
Las Casas sick. 1814.
The Death of Bichat. 1817.
Louis XVI. relieving the poor in 1788. 1817. (Versailles Gallery.)
Daphnis and Chloe. 1817.
Gustavus Vasa blessing the Ranks. 1819. (Destroyed by the mob at the Palais Royal in 1848.)
Duke of Bordeaux in his Cradle. (Versailles Gallery.)
Ruth and Boaz. 1822.
Monks of St. Gothard feeding the poor. 1824.
Henry IV. of France. 1827. (Grand Trianon, Versailles.)

His wife, whose maiden name was LOUISE MARIE JEANNE MAUDUIT, also distinguished herself as an historical and portrait painter. She was born in Paris in 1784, and was a pupil of Meynier. She died in Paris in 1862. Some of her pictures are at Fontainebleau, and others have been engraved by Tardieu.

HERTEL, GEORG LEOPOLD, an engraver, who worked at Augsburg in the second half of the 18th century, was the brother of Johann Georg Hertel. He executed some engravings after Rembrandt, Majotto, Castiglione, and Boucher.

HERTEL, JOHANN GEORG, an engraver, was a native of Augsburg, who flourished in the latter half of the 18th century. He engraved after Boucher, Oudry, Rembrandt, Hillegaert, etc.

HERTERICH, HEINRICH JOACHIM, a German painter, etcher, and lithographer, was born at Hamburg in 1772. He was a son and pupil of Johann Andreas Herterich, and worked in pastel and in miniature, being skilful in drawing likenesses, and especially landscapes. In 1818 he, in conjunction with J. M. Speckter, started the first lithographic printing-office in Germany. He died at Hamburg in 1852.

HERTERICH, JOHANN ANDREAS, was born at Bayreuth in 1725. He was self-taught, and worked in oil, pastel, miniature, and crayons. In 1769 he settled at Hamburg, where he died in 1794.

HERTOCKS, A., an engraver, was born in the Netherlands, but practised in London from 1626 to 1661, or later. He was principally employed by the booksellers in engraving portraits and frontispieces. His portraits are his best prints, but they are more valued for their rarity than their merit. He engraved a frontispiece to the 'Eikon Basilike,' and another to the complete works of Charles I.; also that for Evelyn's 'Sculptura.' Among others the following portraits are by him:

Charles I. kneeling, holding a Crown of Thorns; after P. Fruytiers.

Charles II. when Prince of Wales.

Sir Edward Nicholas, Secretary of State; after Hanne-man.

Sir Francis Wortley, Bart. 1652.

Henry Rolle, jurist; prefixed to his 'Abridgment.'

Robert Rawdon, a Governor of St. Thomas's Hospital.

William Chamberlaine, M.D. and poet; prefixed to his 'Pharonnida.'

Hugh Crompton, poet.

Alexander Brome, poet. 1661.

Gideon Harvey, M.D.

Edward Waterhouse, jurist and antiquary.

HERTZINGER, ANTON, (or HERZINGER,) a painter and engraver, was born at Fallbach, in Austria, in 1763, and educated at the Academy in Vienna. In 1802 he was working at the Clemen-tinum in Prague, and for some time he lived at Dresden. He painted and engraved genre subjects, landscapes, and animal pieces, the last especially well, and on the model of J. H. Roos. He died at Prague in 1832.

HERTZÖCKER, THEODORUS, a Dutch painter, was born at Utrecht about 1696. He went to Italy, and put himself under the tuition of Balestra. He afterwards was in Rome, and then returned to his own country, where he died in 1741.

HERVIER, ADOLPHE LOUIS, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in the early part of the 19th century, and studied under Eugène Isabey. He exhibited at the Salon in 1849, and occasionally afterwards, but he did not meet with much success. He likewise etched a few plates of marine subjects and landscapes. His life was one of continued suffering, and he died in 1879. The following are amongst his best productions:

View of Dover. 1844.

Return to Harbour. 1855.

Village of Guevilly; autumn. 1855.

HERZ, JOHANN DANIEL, the elder, was a German engraver, born at Nuremberg in 1599. He etched several plates after his own designs, and from the works of Rottenhammer and other masters, among which is a large etching of 'St. Paul preaching at Athens,' from a composition of his own. He died in 1635.

HERZ, JOHANN DANIEL, the younger, a designer and engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1693, and became director of the Academy in that city, where he died in 1754. Among his best plates are:

The Annunciation.

The Discovery of the Cross by St. Helena.

The Assumption of the Virgin.

HESPERUS. See SEUTER, DANIEL.

HESS, EUGEN, a Bavarian genre painter, was born at Munich in 1824. He was first instructed by his father, Peter Hess, and afterwards at the Academy of his native city, but he also spent some time in Brussels, and afterwards in Paris. His earlier paintings were taken from scenes of modern life, but at a later period he had recourse to the middle ages for his subjects. He has left also four superior etchings. He died at Munich in 1862. The following are among his paintings:

Family in a Hunter's House. 1846.

The Hunter's Morning Greeting. 1848.

First Instructions in Hunting. 1850.

Visit to the Cloister.

The Robber arrested.

The Invasion at Dachau. (Munich Gallery.)

Shakespeare brought before the Lord of the Manor as a Poacher.

The Message after the Battle. (His masterpiece.)

HESS, FRANZ LEONHARD, a native of Pressburg, who painted in miniature and fresco, was born in 1777. The date of his death is not known.

HESS, HEINRICH MARIA VON, a German historical and fresco painter, was born at Düsseldorf in 1798. He was the second son and at first a pupil of Karl Ernst Christoph Hess, with whom he went in 1806 to Munich, where, in 1813, he entered the Academy of Arts. His first great paintings, a 'Burial of Christ' and a 'Holy Family,' executed in 1817, attracted much attention, and procured him the patronage of Queen Caroline, who bought the former. In the years 1817-21 he painted also for the Queen, 'Christmas Eve,' a life-sized 'Charity,' and several Madonnas. Besides these, he painted for the Leuchtenberg Gallery at St. Petersburg 'Faith, Hope, Charity,' and in other places 'St. Cecilia,' and several portraits. In 1821 he went to Italy, and during his sojourn in Rome, in 1823, he painted the 'Parnassus,' the figures of which are nearly life-size. On his return in 1826 he was appointed professor in the Munich Academy, and painted 'Daphne in the arms of Apollo.' He had already been so successful in glass painting, that Louis I. of Bavaria placed him at the head of an institute for the advancement of the same. In 1826 he made the designs for the painted windows of Ratisbon Cathedral; and in 1827 he commenced cartoons for the Allerheiligenkirche in Munich, which he finished in 1837. From 1849 until his death he was Director of the Royal Galleries. One of his pictures, 'Christmas Eve,' is to be found everywhere in Bavaria, both in the palace and in the cottage; the original is in the possession of Baron Eichthal. He died at Munich in 1863. The following paintings by him are in the Modern Gallery of that city:

Apollo and the Nine Muses upon Parnassus.

Portrait of a Florentine Lady of Rank.

The Virgin and Child with Angels.

The Sculptor Thorvaldsen.

Country Pilgrims in sight of St. Peter's at Rome.

The Last Supper. (Left unfinished at the artist's death.)

HESS, HIERONYMUS, a Swiss painter and designer, was born at Basle in 1799, and studied under Koch in Italy, where he gained a reputation for truthful and careful drawing, and especially for his humorous representations. His principal works were, 'The Murder of the Emperor Albert by Hans of Swabia,' and 'The Battle of the Swiss and French at St. Jakob,' which is to be seen at Basle, together with two designs by him for glass-paintings. He died at Basle in 1850.

HESS, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, was a native of Bohemia, who flourished in 1652 at Prague, where he died in 1693. He painted chiefly altar-pictures; and specimens of his art are to be found in the churches of St. Ægidius and St. Nicholas at Prague.

HESS, JOHANN MICHAEL, a painter and etcher, was born at Erlau in 1768. He studied in 1789 at the Vienna Academy under Maurer, and in 1794 obtained the first prize for his painting of 'Priam entreating Achilles for the Body of Hector.' In the same year he was appointed professor of drawing at the Engineers' Academy. He died about 1830. He etched several plates from Roman history, and produced among others the following paintings:

St. Stephen.

The Assumption of the Virgin.

St. John the Baptist. (Church of the Episcopal Seminary, Erlau.)

Baptism of St. Stephen. (Gran Cathedral.)

HESS, KARL, a German landscape, genre, and animal painter, was born at Düsseldorf in 1801. He was the third and youngest son of Karl Ernst Christoph Hess, by whom he was at first instructed in engraving, but, encouraged by his brother Peter and by the animal painter Wagenbauer, he devoted himself to painting, and joined the school of Munich, in which city he chiefly resided till his death at Reichenhall in 1874. He excelled in depicting Alpine and forest scenery, and amongst his best works are:

Tyrolese Landscape. } Berlin National Gallery.

Cattle in a Pasture. }

An animal piece—on the Starnbergersee.

HESS, KARL ADOLPH HEINRICH, a German painter and engraver, was born at Dresden in 1769, and learned drawing from the engraver Krüger, and painting from Klass. He devoted himself to painting horses and military subjects, and after travelling in Russia, Hungary, Turkey, and England, he attained to considerable eminence in this branch of the art. He settled for a time at Berlin, but removed to Vienna in 1800. He died at Wilhelmsdorf, near Vienna, in 1849. He painted in oil, pastel, and water-colours, and also drew with the pen and etched. Among his best works are 'The Riding School,' in twelve plates (1807), and the following paintings:

The March of the Uralian Cossacks.

Studies for Horse Connoisseurs.

Horses' Heads. 1825.

HESS, KARL ERNST CHRISTOPH, a German engraver, was born at Darmstadt in 1755. He was at first intended for an armourer, but went afterwards to Mannheim, where he studied metal-chasing under his brother-in-law, Hohleisen. The Elector Maximilian of Bavaria, having been presented with a hunting knife, upon which a 'Hunt' had been engraved by Hess, afforded him in 1776 the means of studying engraving at Augsburg. In the following year he went to Düsseldorf to assist on the 'Gallery' which was being prepared by Krahe. His first engraving after Rembrandt gave so much satisfaction that he was immediately elected an extraordinary member of the Academy, of which he became a professor in 1782. After a journey to Italy, he produced the 'Ascension of the Virgin,' after Guido; 'The Market Crier,' after Gerard Dou; the portraits of Rubens and his Wife, and his admired plate of Raphael's 'Holy Family.' He died at Munich in 1828.

HESS, LUDWIG, a Swiss landscape painter and engraver, was born at Zurich in 1760, and spent some time at the trade of his father, a butcher, in the course of which work, however, he managed to find opportunity to practise painting. At length he became acquainted with Salomon Gessner, and was by him induced to become an artist. He visited Florence and Rome in 1794, and four years later took also to engraving. He died at Zurich in 1800. His paintings are very generally taken from the Alps, and are especially noticeable for the good effect of the water and of the figures. He also painted Italian views. Among his best works are:

Mont Blanc.

The Grütli.

Tell's Chapel.

HESS, MAX, a Bavarian historical painter, was born at Munich in 1825. He was a son of Peter Hess, and received his first instruction in his native city, but afterwards in Paris and Düsseldorf, where he maintained himself as a decorative painter, and in addition as an actor, singer, and kettle-drummer. He died at Lippspringe in 1868. Among his best works are:

Puritans upon the Watch.

Italian Nobility beneath a Veranda.

The Alexander Frieze at Schulte's Exhibition in Düsseldorf (in grisaille).

Düsseldorf Torch Procession. (Completed by Oswald Achenbach for the Prince of Hohenzollern.)

HESS, PETER VON, a German battle painter, was born at Düsseldorf in 1792. He was the eldest son and pupil of Karl Ernst Christoph Hess, with whom he went to Munich in 1806. During the campaigns of 1813-15 he was attached to the staff of Prince von Wrede; and after the end of the war he visited Vienna, and travelled in Italy and Switzerland, making many sketches. By command of King Max he accompanied his son, King Otho, to Greece. The result of this journey was his thirty-six wall-paintings, representing the 'Liberation of Greece,' in the arcades of the Hofgarten at Munich, and also an oil-painting of the 'Entry of King Otho into Nauplia,' in which he introduced a number of portraits of his contemporaries. Shortly afterwards he went to Russia, where he painted for the Emperor the most memorable battles of the war of 1812. He was a member of the Academies of Munich, Berlin, Vienna, and St. Petersburg, and died at Munich in 1871. The following are among his best works:

Berlin.	Nat. Gall.	Festival of St. Leonard in Bavaria. 1825.
"	"	Market Scene. 1825.
"	"	Cossacks plundering. 1820.
"	"	Market Waggon attacked by Uhlans. 1829.
"	"	Greek Soldiers of the War of Independence. 1829.
Munich.	Gallery.	Forty oil sketches for the frescoes in the Hofgarten, illustrating the Greek War of Independence.
"	"	The Entry of King Otho into Nauplia in 1833.
"	"	The Entry of King Otho into Athens in 1835.
"	"	Battle of Austerlitz.
"	"	Herd of Horses in Walachia.
"	"	The Robber Barbone and Family defending themselves against Gendarmes.
"	"	The Chamois Hunter.

HESSE, ALEXANDRE JEAN BAPTISTE, a French historical painter, the son of Henri Joseph Hesse, was born in Paris in 1806. He studied under his father and under Baron Gros, and then spent some time at Venice. He was intrusted with the mural paintings illustrating the life of St. Francis of Sales at the church of St. Sulpice, Paris, which he completed in 1860, and on the death of Ingres, in 1867, he succeeded to his fauteuil at the Institute. He died in Paris in 1879. Amongst his chief works are:

Funeral Honours paid to Titian. 1833.
Leonardo da Vinci giving liberty to some birds. 1836.
Girl carrying fruit on a silver dish. 1838. (Nantes Museum.)
Death of President Brisson. 1840.
Portrait of M. Barthe. (Narbonne Museum.)
Henry IV. on his death-bed in the Louvre. (Grand Trianon, Versailles.)
The Triumph of Pisani. 1847.
Apotheosis of St. Louis.
The Sermon on the Mount.
The Two Foscari. 1853.
Adoption of Godfrey of Bouillon by Alexander Comnenus. (Versailles Gallery.)

HESSE, HENRI JOSEPH, the elder brother of Nicolas Auguste Hesse, and the father of Alexandre Hesse, was born in Paris in 1781. He was a pupil of David and of Isabey, and died in Paris in 1849. He painted portraits and miniatures, among which was a portrait of the Duchess of Berry.

HESSE, NICOLAS AUGUSTE, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1795. He was a pupil of his brother, Henri Joseph Hesse, and of Baron Gros, and obtained in 1818 for his picture of 'Philemon and Baucis' the 'prix de Rome.' He painted 'Mirabeau in the Assembly of June 23rd, 1795,' 'Mary swooning at the Grave of Christ' (1845), and in the Hôtel de Ville, 'The Proclamation of the Concordat,' and also a great many religious and decorative works for churches—Notre-Dame de Lorette, Ste. Clotilde, and St. Sulpice, among others—and galleries. On the death of Delacroix, in 1863, he was elected to fill the vacancy in the Academy; he was also a member of the Institute. He likewise executed some paintings on glass, and made cartoons for the windows of the Lady Chapel in St. Eustache. He died in Paris in 1869.

HESSE-CASSEL, AUGUSTA, Electress of, consort of the Elector William II., was daughter of King Frederick William II. of Prussia, and sister of the Duchess of York. She was a good portrait painter, and an honorary member of the Berlin Academy. She was born at Berlin in 1780, and died at Cassel in 1841.

HESSELL, LEONHARD HEINRICH, a painter and engraver, was born at St. Petersburg in 1757. He lived at Nuremberg, where he painted portraits and silhouettes. He also engraved the portraits of Wieland, Henriette Händel, and C. G. Müller.

HETSCH, GUSTAV FRIEDRICH, a painter and architect, was the son of Philipp Friedrich Hetsch, and was born at Stuttgart in 1788. In 1822 he became professor at Copenhagen, where he designed several important buildings, and painted some superior architectural pictures. He also wrote a 'Guide to Perspective.' He died at Copenhagen in 1864.

HETSCH, PHILIPP FRIEDRICH, was born at Stuttgart in 1758, and, in opposition to his father's wishes, obtained admission into the School of Art, where he studied under Guibal and Harper. In 1780 he became court painter, and shortly afterwards proceeded to Paris, where he studied for two years under Vien, Vernet, and David. In 1785 he proceeded to Rome, where he painted 'Tullia driving over her Father's dead body.' He obtained the highest honours both at Rome and Paris, both of which he visited twice, and in 1816 he repaired to Leipzig, Dresden, and Berlin. He executed an admired genre picture, 'King Frederick with his Suite before the Summer Palace of Monrepos.' He died at Stuttgart in 1839. His historical pictures show the influence of David's school, and among them are the following, most of which are in the possession of the King of Württemberg.

Brutus sees the Ghost of the murdered Caesar. (Darmstadt Museum.)
The Blind Œdipus, led by his Daughters.
Brutus and Portia.
Odin at the Gate of Hell.
Christ's Ascension. (Stuttgart.)
Achilles and Briseis.
Andromache and Astyanax.
The Departure of Regulus.
Daniel in the Lions' Den.
Marius upon the Ruins of Carthage.

HETZER, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a painter, was born at Nuremberg in 1540. He took up his abode at Venice, where he died in 1565.

HEUDE, NICOLAS, a portrait painter, was born at Le Mans. He was admitted into the French Academy in 1672, but was expelled in 1673 for having established himself in England without the king's permission. His reception picture was a portrait of the Prince of Condé as Hercules, supported by Valour and Victory, now in the Versailles Gallery. He died in London, but nothing is known of his life or works in England.

HEUDELLOT, JEAN, a French engraver of no great celebrity, was born at Montpellier about 1730, and was residing in Paris about the year 1760. There are by him a few plates after Adriaan van Ostade and Lingelbach; as well as the portrait of Margaretha van Goyen, after a picture by Jan Steen, her husband.

HEUMANN, GEORG DANIEL, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1691. He became engraver to the English court as well as to the Göttingen Academy, and worked after Desmarées, Henkel, and others. His best plate is a 'Peace Banquet,' after a picture by Sandrart in the town-hall of his birthplace. He engraved several portraits of German celebrities, as well as a set of architectural views of the churches, &c. at Vienna, published by Johann Andreas Pfeffel, at Augsburg, in 1724. He died in 1759. He had a brother, JOEL PAUL HEUMANN, also an engraver, who was born in 1690, and died in 1756.

HEUNERT, FRIEDRICH, a German landscape painter, was born at Soest in 1808. He studied at Düsseldorf under J. W. Schirmer, and distinguished himself by his small pictures of Westphalian and mountain scenery. He also painted in water-colours, and taught drawing and painting. He died at Düsseldorf in 1876.

HEUVICK, CASPAR, born at Oudenarde in 1550, went to Italy and studied under Lorenzo Costa, producing some good pictures, on a large scale, for churches and other public buildings. He died in 1611.

HEWLETT, JAMES, was an English flower painter in water-colours, who practised at Bath, and exhibited at the Royal Academy and elsewhere from 1799 to 1828. His works were esteemed in his day for colour and botanical accuracy. There are some groups of flowers by him in the South Kensington Museum.

HEYDE, GERRIT and JOB BERCK. See BERCK-HEIJDE.

HEYDE, JAN VAN DER. See VAN DER HEYDEN.

*HEYDECK, KARL WILHELM VON, (called HEIDEGGER,) a Bavarian landscape painter, was born at Saarlautern, in Lorraine, in 1788. He was the son of a Swiss officer in the French service, named Heidecker, who fled with his family during the French Revolution to Zurich. He attended the high school there, received drawing lessons from Professor Mayer, and was encouraged in his efforts by the artists Huber, Conrad Gessner, and Lavater. In 1798 he went to his great-uncle Von Scheid at Zweibrücken, and entered the military academy at Munich in 1801. In 1805 he took part in a campaign as lieutenant in the artillery, and was in time promoted to a captaincy, and ultimately to the rank of lieutenant-general. In 1810 he went as a volunteer to Spain, and served throughout the wars with Napoleon. In 1826 he went to Greece to take part in the War of Independence, and remained till 1829 as a military governor, returning to the same country in 1833 as a member of the council of regency. Before this time he had renewed his connection with art, and painted many oil pictures; in 1835 he himself counted ninety-six. He painted also the fresco 'The Horses of the Sun,' after Cornelius, in the Glyptothek at Munich, and worked likewise at lithography and etching. He died at Munich in 1861. Among his paintings are the following:

Berlin.	Nat. Gall.	Tyrolean Woodcutters. 1823.
"	"	Greek Soldiery, near Corinth. 1829.
Munich.	Gallery.	The Lion Gate at Mycenæ.
"	"	The Bridge at Cuenca in Spain.
"	"	View of the Acropolis of Athens.
"	"	Italian Fishermen drawing in their Nets.
"	"	The Ascent to the Acropolis at Athens.
"	"	Two Asses.

HEYDEN, VAN DER. See VAN DER HEYDEN.

HEYLAN, FRANCISCO, and his son BERNARDO, and daughter ANA, were engravers of repute in Seville and Granada during the period from 1624 to 1652. Ana Heylan executed a title-page, rich in design, but carelessly finished, of Our Lady of the Conception issuing from a bursting pomegranate, for Bermudez de Pedraza's 'Historia eclesiastica de Granada,' printed in 1638.

HEYLBRUCH, MICHEL VAN, was a painter and engraver of Ghent, who in 1713 engraved the 'Death of Dido,' after Sébastien Bourdon. He worked in Verona, and died in 1753, over a hundred years of age.

HEYLEN, GONZALES VAN, was a native of Antwerp, who flourished from about the year 1694 until his death in 1720. He engraved on wood several frontispieces, with a small alphabet for a Prayer-book, and other book cuts.

HEYMANS, JOHANNES, an historical and still-life painter, born at the Hague in 1757, was the pupil of a tapestry painter named Davranche. He was living in 1805.

HEYN, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, (or HEYNE,) a miniature painter, who was a native of Pomerania, was born in 1754, and died at Dresden in 1800.

HEYNRICSZ, ROELOFF, was a Dutch historical painter, who worked at Utrecht in 1523.

HEYWOOD, —, an English portrait painter, practised in the time of the Commonwealth. There is by him a portrait of Thomas, third Lord Fairfax.

HIBBART, WILLIAM, an etcher, resided at Bath about the year 1760. There are a few portraits etched by him in a style which resembles that of Worlidge. The following are among them:

Antoine Watteau, painter.
Laurence Delvaux, sculptor.
Samuel Derrick, of Bath.

HIBON, AUGUSTE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1780, and died there in 1857. He was a pupil of Percier and of Fontaine, and devoted himself to architectural subjects.

HICKEL, ANTON, an Austrian portrait painter, was born at Böhmisch-Leipa in 1745, and studied under his brother Joseph Hickel, and in the Vienna Academy. In 1777 he travelled through the Tyrol into Switzerland and France, where he painted the Queen Marie Antoinette and the Princess of Lamballe. When the Revolution broke out he removed to England, and in 1793 he commenced a remarkable picture of the interior of 'The House of Commons,' with ninety-six life-size portraits of the members, and William Pitt addressing the House, which occupied him two years. This he took with him when he quitted England, and it is now in the Vienna Gallery, but a photograph from it is exhibited in the National Portrait Gallery. One of his best works is a portrait of the poet Klopstock. He died at Hamburg in 1798.

HICKEL, JOSEPH, an Austrian portrait painter, was born at Böhmisch-Leipa in 1734 or 1736. In his twelfth year he already painted in oil, and to his fifteenth year belongs an altar-piece in the church of Hirschberg in Bohemia. At the age of twenty he went to Vienna, where he attended the Academy, and was soon largely employed by the Court. In 1768 the Empress Maria Theresa sent him to Milan, Parma, and Florence, to take the portraits of some of the nobility, and upon his return he painted the Emperor Joseph II. several times. More than 3000 portraits by him are known, among which are those of the Empress Maria Theresa, the Elector Charles Theodore, and the painter Winck. He died at Vienna in 1807.

HICKEL, JOSEPH, who was born at Schrobenehausen in Bavaria in 1781, studied at Munich under Hauber. He painted portraits, family pieces, and historical and mythological subjects. The date of his death is unknown.

HICKEY, THOMAS, an Irish portrait painter, was born at Dublin, and studied in the Academy of that city, but he practised in London in the latter half of the 18th century, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1772 to 1792. He went to Italy, and afterwards to China with Lord Macartney. There are the following portraits by him:

Dublin.	Mansion House.	John, fourth Duke of Bedford.
"	"	George, first Marquis Townshend. 1769.
London.	Garrick Club.	Mrs. Abington.
"	Magdalen Hospital.	Mr. Justice Park.

HICKFORD, —, was an English artist who lived at Florence between 1730 and 1740. He was the first master of Cipriani.

HIDALGO, JOSEF GARCIA. See GARCIA HIDALGO.

HIDDINGA, —, a water-colour painter, was a native of Hamburg. He studied under Amama, and died in 1793.

HIEBEL, JOHANN, was born at Ottobeuern in Algau in 1681, and studied first under Johann Siegelbein at Wangen, and then successively under Kaspar Sing at Munich and the Jesuit Pozzo at Vienna. He adopted the style of the latter in his architectural and fresco paintings. In 1709 he settled at Prague, and worked with Byss in the house of the Count von Thun, and also, independently, in churches and other buildings in that city, where he died in 1775.

HIEN, DANIEL, a painter of hunting pieces, as well as of still-life, flowers, vegetables, fish, &c., was born at Strassburg in 1725, and died at Zweibrücken in 1773. Some of his works are in the Galleries of Augsburg and Schleissheim.

HIGHMORE, ANTHONY, the son of Joseph Highmore, was educated by his father as a landscape painter, and some of his views of Kensington and Hampton Court were engraved by Tinney. He died after 1780.

HIGHMORE, JOSEPH, an historical and portrait painter, was born in London in 1692. He was the son of a coal-merchant, and as he showed an inclination for art, it was at one time his father's intention to permit him to gratify his propensity, but for some reason he changed his purpose, and in 1707 young Highmore was articled to an attorney, but much against his inclination, so that in about three years he began to indulge his taste, and to employ all his leisure hours in drawing, and in the study of geometry and perspective. To make himself acquainted with anatomy, he attended the lectures of Cheselden; and at the same time he frequented the Painters' Academy, then held in Great Queen Street, under the direction of Sir Godfrey Kneller, who noticed him particularly, and distinguished him by the name of the young lawyer. On the termination of his clerkship, instead of frequenting the courts, he commenced painting as a profession, and settled in the city, where his reputation and business increased so much that he removed to Lincoln's Inn Fields in 1723. An opportunity soon offered of introducing himself advantageously to persons of distinction, by his being engaged by Pine to make the drawings for his prints of the Knights of the Bath, on the revival of that order in 1725. He painted the portraits of several of the Knights, particularly a fine picture of the Duke of Richmond, attended by his three esquires, with a perspective view of Henry VII.'s chapel, now at Goodwood. He was afterwards commissioned by George I. to paint the portrait of the Duke of Cumberland, which was engraved in mezzotint by John Smith. In 1732 Highmore visited the continent, chiefly for the purpose of seeing the Düsseldorf collection of pictures, and at Antwerp had the satisfaction of studying some of the finest works of Rubens, his favourite master. In 1742 he painted portraits of the Prince and Princess of Wales, for the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. The publication of 'Pamela' gave birth to a series of pictures by Highmore, which were engraved and published by subscription in 1745. His principal historical pictures were, 'Hagar and Ishmael,' presented by him to the Foundling Hospital; 'The Good Samaritan'; 'The Finding of Moses'; and 'The Graces unveiling Nature.' He retired from the profession in 1761. Highmore was the author of several literary works; among which were 'A critical Examination of those two Paintings [by Rubens] on the Ceiling of the Banqueting-house at Whitehall,' 1754, and 'The Practice of Perspective, on the Principles of Dr. Brook Taylor,' 1763. He died at Canterbury in 1780. There are portraits of Samuel Richardson and Dr. Stebbing by him in the National Portrait Gallery.

HIGHMORE, THOMAS, serjeant-painter to King William III., was the uncle of Joseph Highmore, the portrait painter, and the master of Sir James Thornhill, who succeeded him as serjeant-painter in 1719-20.

HIGHMORE, THOMAS, an engraver, was born in Suffolk in 1796. His works were chiefly of an architectural character, and he was employed on a portion of the plate of Hayter's 'Coronation of Queen Victoria.' He died at Islington in 1844.

HILAIRE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French draughtsman, was a pupil of Le Prince. He lived in Paris, and exhibited at the Salon and other exhibitions between 1780 and 1796. Several of his drawings have been engraved.

HILARIUS, a painter and scholar from Bithynia, flourished at Athens in the time of the Emperor Valens (A.D. 364-379). He is said by Eunapius to have been equal to Euphranor as an artist. He and his family were murdered by barbarians in the neighbourhood of Athens.

HILDEBRANDT, EDUARD, a German landscape painter, born at Dantzic in 1818, was the son of a poor house painter. At the age of thirteen he lost his father, and formed the design of becoming a sailor, but his mother and guardian kept him to his father's trade, and after some three years he was apprenticed to Meyerheim. In his nineteenth year he travelled on foot to Berlin, hoping to enter the Academy, but was unable to pay the fees, and as the genuineness of his productions was suspected, the director refused to admit him without payment. He entered the studio of Krause, where he soon made such progress in landscape and sea pieces that he was able in his twenty-second year to travel to Denmark, Norway, England, Scotland, and Ireland. In 1841 he reached Paris, where, having exhausted his money, he was compelled at first to work for a subsistence; but he was received by Isabey into his atelier, and in six months had a studio of his own. After gaining a small gold medal in Paris in 1843, he was invited to Brazil by Humboldt, whence he brought back many water-colour and oil paintings, which are now in the possession of the Emperor of Germany. After fresh travels through England, Scotland, the Canaries, Spain, and Portugal, he in 1849 returned to Berlin with more than a hundred water-colour sketches; and in 1850, by order of the king, he set out once more for Italy, Malta, Egypt, Nubia, the Sahara, Palestine, Turkey, and Greece. In 1853 he started upon another artistic journey through Switzerland, the Tyrol, and Italy. In 1854 he was made Professor of the Berlin Academy, and in 1855 elected a member. In 1856 he joined the Arctic Expedition, and in the Brussels Exhibition of 1858 obtained for his 'North Cape' the largest gold medal, whilst his 'Sea of Marmora' won the same at Amsterdam. In 1862-64 he made a voyage round the world, from which he returned laden with views of Egypt, India, China, Japan, and California. In 1866 he opened an exhibition in London of over 400 water-colour paintings, which met with great success, and was repeated at the Crystal Palace in 1868. Naturally his sketches were at times hastily drawn, and somewhat incomplete; but his love of nature, his artistic conception, and the purity of his colouring amply compensate for any defects. His work and constant travelling undermined his health, and he died at Berlin in 1868.

Four series of chromolithographs of Hildebrandt's 'Aquarelle' have been executed by Steinbock and Loeillot, and published with explanatory text at Berlin between the years 1868 and 1880, and his 'Reise um Erde,' edited from his journals by Ernst Kossak, was published in 1867, and has often been reprinted. Fuller particulars respecting his life and works may be found in Arndt's 'Eduard Hildebrandt, der Maler des Kosmos,' Berlin, 1869; and in Bruno Meyer's 'Studien und Kritiken,' Stuttgart, 1877, pp. 376-473. The following are among his more distinguished paintings, the four first being in the Berlin National Gallery, and several of the others in the Royal Collection in the same city:

Stormy Sea with Boats.
The Coast of Normandy.
Winter Landscape.
Sea-shore at Evening.
The Castle of Kronborg, near Helsingør.
Evening in the Bay of Rio Janeiro.
Tropical Rain.
Brazilian Primeval Forest.
Evening at Madeira.
The Peak of Teneriffe.
A Look over the Sea.

By the Fish-Pond.
Benares at early Dawn.
Evening in Siam.
Chinese Fishers.

HILDEBRANDT, FERDINAND THEODOR, an historical, portrait, and genre painter, was born at Stettin in 1804. He was the son of a book-binder, but went in 1820 to the Academy at Berlin, and became acquainted with Ludwig Devrient, through whom he took to dramatical painting. In 1823 he was a pupil of Wilhelm von Schadow, whom he followed in 1826 to Düsseldorf, where he acted in 1832 as assistant master, and in 1836, after Kolbe's death, as professor. In 1829 he visited Belgium and Holland in the company of Schadow, and later on frequently by himself, and there studied the Dutch masters. He was a member of the Academies of Berlin and Vienna. His pictures from Shakespeare, especially that of 'The Murder of the Sons of Edward IV,' were very popular. At the age of fifty he was prevented by illness from proceeding with his work, and he died at Düsseldorf in 1874. Among his paintings are the following:

SUBJECTS.

Faust and Margaret in the Dungeon. 1825.
King Lear lamenting Cordelia. 1826.
Romeo and Juliet. 1827. (Berlin Royal Collection.)
Tancred and Clorinda. 1828.

Prince Frederick of Prussia.

HILDEBRANDT, FRITZ, a younger brother of Eduard Hildebrandt, was born at Dantzig in 1819. He began life at sea, but did not abandon his natural fondness for drawing, and when about eighteen years of age went to St. Petersburg, where he was employed in the decoration of the Winter Palace, then in progress of construction. In 1840 he returned home, and in the following year studied as a marine painter under Wilhelm Krause at Berlin. In 1844 he removed to Paris, where he worked for a year under Eugène Isabey, and obtained the gold medal at several exhibitions. He undertook several journeys while resident in that city, and in the winter of 1855 started for the sake of his health to Naples, but died on the way at Rome. His works are almost exclusively to be found in France.

HILDEGARDUS, a painter of Cologne, is known by his 'Tables of the Rosary,' executed in 1523 for the Dominican Monastery at Dortmund in Westphalia, and which represented the 'Seven Joys and Seven Sorrows of the Virgin,' together with her genealogy. Two of these tables contained the 'Family of St. Anne' and the 'Birth of Christ,' as well as the genealogy and death of the Virgin. There is a strong resemblance between these and the works of the brothers Dünwege.

HILDITCH, GEORGE, a landscape painter, the son of a well-known silk-mercator, was born in London in 1803, and from early boyhood took to drawing and painting from nature. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1823, and from that time until 1856 he was a constant contributor to its exhibitions, as well as to those of the British Institution and Society of British Artists. He took the Society of Arts gold medal, large silver medal, and small silver medal. His style is original, with much of the power and truth to nature of Patrick Nasmyth, but pictures painted by him during a visit to France in 1836 have been mistaken for the works of Bonington. The subjects of his pictures were selected chiefly from Richmond and its vicinity, North and South Wales, France, and Germany. Many of them are in the collections of the Dukes of Devonshire and Sutherland, and the Earls of Dysart and Wharfedale. He died in London in 1857.

HILFELING, KARL GUSTAF GOTTFRIED, a Swedish draughtsman, born in Ostergothland, 1740. He went to Copenhagen, and in 1785, at the king's expense, he travelled through Denmark, making drawings of the principal monuments and architectural features. These drawings are in the Royal Library at Copenhagen. He died at Sköfde, 1823.

HILL, DAVID OCTAVIUS, a Scottish landscape painter, the son of a bookseller, was born at Perth in 1802. Showing a taste for art, he was sent to Edinburgh as a pupil of Andrew Wilson, and exhibited there as early as 1823. In 1830 he became one of the foundation members of the Royal Scottish Academy, and was elected to the office of secretary, a post he held for nearly forty years. His earlier works illustrated the manners of the Scotch peasantry; but he afterwards devoted himself almost exclusively to landscape painting. Among his most important pictures were 'The Ruins of Dunfermline Palace' (1854); 'Edinburgh from Mons Meg' (1852), the first picture exhibited by him at the Royal Academy; 'Windsor Castle—summer evening'; 'The Valley of the Nith'; 'A Lonely Shore—summer afternoon'; and 'Signing the Deed of Demission and Act of Separation,' a large composition differing entirely from most of his other works, and containing no less than 470 portraits: this work, which occupied several years in its execution, was bought by a number of the leading laymen of the Free Church for £1500, and placed in the hall of the Free Presbytery at Edinburgh. In 1841 he published 'The Land of Burns,' a series of sixty landscapes. He died at Edinburgh in 1870, aged sixty-eight, having suffered in health for several years previously. A notice of his life and works appeared in the 'Art Journal' for 1869.

HILL, FRIEDRICH JAKOB, a painter, was born in 1762 at Darmstadt, where he was court painter. His works are mostly in miniature.

HILL, JAMES, better known as J. J. HILL, a portrait and subject painter, was born at Birmingham in 1811. After studying at the Academy under J. V. Barber, he practised for some years in his native city, but removed to London in 1839, and was elected a member of the Society of British Artists in 1842, from which time until his death he was a constant and popular contributor to its exhibitions. He was successful in his likenesses, and obtained many commissions, yet after a time he devoted himself mainly to fancy figures, many of the most effective of which were Irish subjects, and at a still later period he changed the character of his work to landscape, in combination with figures and animals. Here also, as in the other branches of art, he achieved a distinct success. He died at Highgate in 1882.

HILL, JOHN, was an aquatint engraver, who produced some good plates of lake views after Charles Dibdin. He emigrated to America, where he was living in 1822.

HILL, THOMAS, a portrait painter, born in 1661, was a pupil of Faithorne. He practised in London, and died at Mitcham in 1734. There are portraits of Humphrey Wanley by him at the National Portrait Gallery, the Bodleian Library, and the Society of Antiquaries, London.

HILLER, J., was an engraver, who worked at Prague from 1716 to 1746. He executed a series of thirty-one plates entitled, 'Omnes Sancti Ordinis Prædicatorum, quorum cultus ab Ecclesia Romana est probatus,' after G. Severoni.

HILLESTRÖM, CARL PETER, a Swedish painter and draughtsman, was the son of Per Hilleström. He was born at Stockholm in 1775, and died in 1812.

HILLESTRÖM, PER, a Swedish genre and historical painter, was born in Roslagen in 1732. He studied in Paris, but returned to his native country in 1750, and became a professor in the Stockholm Academy, of which he was made director in 1805. He died in 1816.

HILLIARD, LAWRENCE, a miniature painter, was the son of Nicholas Hilliard. He enjoyed the continuation of the patent granted to his father, and died about the middle of the 17th century.

HILLIARD, NICHOLAS, a miniature painter, born at Exeter in 1547, was the younger son of Richard Hilliard, who served the office of high sheriff of the county of Devon in 1560. He was brought up to the business of a goldsmith and jeweller, to which his inclination added that of painting in miniature. Walpole states that Hilliard seldom painted his miniatures upon ivory, but usually upon card, and sometimes even upon the backs of playing cards. He studied the works of Holbein, as being the best models he could follow. He was appointed goldsmith, carver, and portrait painter to Queen Elizabeth, whose portrait he painted several times. He was not less favoured by James I., who appointed him, by patent, his principal drawer of small portraits, and embosser of medals in gold. That his works were greatly admired at the time, appears from Dr. Donne's allusion to them in his poem of 'The Storm,' in which he says:

"A hand, or eye,
By Hilliard drawne, is worth an history
By a worse painter made."

Hilliard also wrote an essay on miniature painting, and in 1587 engraved the great seal of England. He died in London in 1619. Many of his miniatures are in the Royal Collection at Windsor Castle, and there is one of Queen Elizabeth by him in the National Portrait Gallery.

HILLIGAARD, PAUWELS VAN, an historical painter, was a native of Holland, where he died in 1658. He painted battles, skirmishes, and drunken brawls. There is a picture by him in the Museum at Amsterdam, which represents 'Prince Maurice dismissing the Trained Bands in 1618.'

HILLNER, CHRISTOPH, who was born at Breslau in 1745, lived when young at Sans Souci, where his father served as orange gardener. In 1763 he went to Berlin to learn the rudiments of art under B. Rode, with whom he remained two years, and then returned to Potsdam, and studied in the picture gallery at Sans Souci. Ten years after this he made a journey to Rome, and completed his art education under Pompeo Batoni, copying, among other works, 'The Battle of Constantine and Maxentius.' In 1777 he commenced visiting the other cities of Italy, and went from Turin to Paris, thence to Antwerp, and through Holland back to Potsdam. Here he started an Institute of Design, at which in 1798 he became professor of pencil drawing. He died at Potsdam in 1812.

HILLS, ROBERT, an animal and landscape painter in water-colours, was born at Islington in 1769. He studied for a time under Gresse, and first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1791. He was one of the founders of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1804, subsequently acting as its secretary, and, with the exception of a break of five years from 1819 to 1822, was a most prolific contributor to its exhibitions. He sometimes worked in conjunction with Robson and Barret. He died in London in 1844. There is in the British Museum a collection of 1240 etchings of animals by him, and he also published in 1816 'Sketches in Flanders and Holland.' At the South Kensington Museum there are by him:

Deer in a Landscape (the landscape by George Barret, the younger).
The Broken Plough. 1804.
Landscape with Cattle. 1807.
The Ox Team. 1810.
Two Wild Boars in a Wood. 1826.
Stags in Knole Park. 1827.
Cows and Sheep.

HILTON, WILLIAM, the elder, a portrait painter, was born about the middle of the 18th century. He first practised as a scene painter, and afterwards as a portrait painter at Norwich, Lincoln, and London. He was the father of William Hilton, R.A. He died in 1822.

HILTON, WILLIAM, an historical painter, was born at Lincoln in 1786. He received lessons from his father, who was a portrait painter; and was a pupil of John Raphael Smith, the crayon draughtsman and mezzotint engraver. He first exhibited in 1803, and from 1806 he attended the schools of the Royal Academy, where he studied anatomy, and made himself complete master of the human figure. That he was imbued with a truly poetic feeling is evidenced by his choice of subjects; and he selected such as would admit the introduction of the most beautiful human forms: the Rapes of Proserpine, Ganymede, Europa, and Amphitrite; and Hebe, Comus, and others, as described by Milton and Spenser, his favourite authors. It has been remarked that fewer of Hilton's pictures have been engraved than of those of most artists of celebrity; many of them are falling into hopeless decay, as the 'Sir Calepine' and 'Edith' in the National Gallery, owing to the perishable nature of the pigments which he used. Hilton was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1813, and an Academician in 1819, and in 1827 he succeeded Thomson as keeper. His manners were singularly mild and amiable, and he was much beloved by the students of that institution. He married in 1828 the sister of his fellow-pupil, Peter De Wint, but had the misfortune to lose his wife in 1835. He died in London in 1839, and was buried in the churchyard of the Savoy. Among many pictures by him of great excellence may be named:

The Triumphal Entry of the Duke of Wellington into Madrid.
Comus. 1823.
The Rape of Europa. 1818.
The Rape of Ganymede. 1818. (Royal Academy.)
Serena rescued by the Red Cross Knight, Sir Calepine. 1831. (National Gallery.)
Edith and the Monks discovering the Body of Harold. 1834. (The same.)
The Meeting of Abraham's Servant with Rebekah at the Well. 1833. (The same; but lent to the Corporation of Leicester.)
Cupid disarmed. 1828. (The same; but lent to the Corporation of Oldham.)
Venus seeking Cupid at the Bath of Diana. (Sir Richard Wallace, Bart.)
Nature blowing Bubbles for her Children. 1821.
The Infant Warrior.
The Magdalene washing the Feet of Christ.
The Crucifixion. 1827. (Corporation of Liverpool.)
Christ crowned with Thorns. 1825. (Purchased by the Directors of the British Institution, and placed in St. Peter's Church, Pimlico; but since bought by the Royal Academy out of the Chantrey Fund.)
The Angel delivering St. Peter from Prison. 1831.
Lazarus. (At Newark.)
Una, with the Lion, entering Corceca's Cave. 1832.
The Murder of the Innocents. 1838.

HINCHLIFF, JOHN JAMES, a landscape engraver, the son of John Elley Hinchliff, the sculptor, was born in 1805, and was employed during many years by the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty. Among his best engravings are those which he executed for Beattie's 'Castles and Abbeys of England,' Neale's 'Seats of Noblemen and Gentlemen,' and Gastineau's 'Picturesque Scenery in Wales.' He died at Walton-by-Clevedon, Somersetshire, in 1875.

HINCKS, WILLIAM, an Irish painter and engraver, was born at Waterford about the middle of the 18th century. He supplied illustrations for an edition of 'Tristram Shandy,' and drew and engraved a series of designs relating to linen manufacture. He came to London, and occasionally exhibited portraits, historical subjects, and miniatures at the Royal Academy from 1781 to 1797.

HINDE, THOMAS, an engraver who flourished about the year 1645, executed a few portraits, among which are the following:

Charles II., when Prince of Wales, on horseback.
Prince Rupert.
Robert Rich, Earl of Warwick.
Thomas, Lord Fairfax, on horseback.

HINZ, JOHANN GEORG, (or HINTZSCH,) a still-life painter, was a native of Hamburg, who flourished in the 17th century. He was living in 1670. There is a picture by him in the Copenhagen Gallery.

HIRE, DE LA. See DE LA HIRE.

HIRE, JEAN GEORGES, a French fruit and flower painter, was born at Mülhausen in 1777, and died at Logelbach, near Colmar. He exhibited at the Salon from 1812 to 1838.

HIRN, MARIAN, an engraver, was born at Obermiemingen in the Tyrol about 1780. He learned drawing under Peter Denifle at Innsbruck, and afterwards studied at Vienna, where he died in 1801 at the early age of twenty years. There is a portrait by him of the celebrated soprano singer Marchesi, executed in the dotted manner.

HIRSCH, ALPHONSE, a French portrait painter, was born in Paris in 1843. He was a pupil of Meissonier and of Bonnat, and exhibited at the Salon from 1869 some excellent portraits, as well as a few genre subjects and etchings. He died in Paris in 1884.

HIRSCHELY, KASPAR, a painter, was born at Prague about 1701, and died there in 1745. He studied under Angermayer, and painted animal pieces and landscapes, both in oil and in water-colours, with much talent. Several of his works are in the gallery at Schleissheim.

HIRSCHMANN, ANDREAS, a portrait painter, was born at Burkunstadt in 1729, and lived chiefly at Bamberg. His son, JOHANN BAPTIST HIRSCHMANN, born in 1770, was also a portrait painter in pastel and in miniature.

HIRSCHMANN, JOHANN HIERONYMUS, a landscape painter, was born at Nuremberg in 1708, and studied under Bommel and Ermels. In 1729 he went to Ratisbon, and in 1731 to Berlin, where he spent the rest of his life, and died in 1790.

HIRSCHMANN, JOHANN LEONHARD, was a painter of Nuremberg, who came to England and worked in the style of Kneller. He died in his own country after 1730. There is by him in the National Portrait Gallery a painting of the Princess Sophia, only daughter of King George I., afterwards Queen of Prussia, and mother of Frederick the Great.

HIRSCHVOGEL, AUGUSTIN, (or HIRSSFÖGEL), a German painter in enamel and engraver, was born at Nuremberg about the year 1503. He was the son of Veit Hirschvogel the elder, a glass-painter, who instructed him in the rudiments of design. Besides being himself an etcher and enameller, he practised wood-engraving, glass-painting, pottery, engineering, geometry, and authorship. He spent a considerable time in Venice, and in 1530 settled in Vienna, where he died in 1569. There are several etchings by this artist, which possess considerable merit, particularly his landscapes. He usually marked his plates with the cipher HF, with the date. The following are his principal prints :

- A set of six Mountain Landscapes, with castles. 1546.
- A Landscape, with a Canal and a Stone Bridge. 1525.
- A View of a Village by the side of a River, with a Wooden Bridge. 1546.
- A Landscape, with a figure representing the Death of Cleopatra. 1547.
- Two Views of Sea-ports, with Shipping. 1549.
- Part of the Murder of the Innocents; after a sketch by Raphael, different from that by Marc-Antonio. 1545.
- A Vase, with goldsmith's ornaments. 1543.
- A Sword, the handle ornamented with eagles' heads, and the scabbard with goldsmith's ornaments.

His brother, VEIT HIRSCHVOGEL the younger, and his nephew, JOSIAS SEBALD HIRSCHVOGEL, were both good engravers; the former died in 1553, and the latter in 1589.

HIRT, FRIEDRICH CHRISTOPH, a portrait and landscape painter, born at Durlach in 1685, was the son of Michael Konrad Hirt. He was a pupil of his father, and painted portraits in Largillière's manner, as well as very pleasing landscapes. He travelled extensively in Germany and France, and then settled at Frankfort, where he died in 1763. He had a son, HEINRICH HIRT, born in 1727, who likewise painted portraits and landscapes.

HIRT, MICHAEL KONRAD, (or HIRTH), who was court painter at Berlin from 1646, produced historical pictures and portraits, the latter in some cases upon silver and gold. Jacob von Sandrart and others have engraved after him.

HIRT, WILHELM FRIEDRICH, was born at Frankfort in 1721, and studied art under his father, Friedrich Christoph Hirt. In 1757 he became court painter to the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, after whose death he travelled in Switzerland, drawing and painting extensively from nature. His landscapes were somewhat stiff, but his cattle and figures were superior; these he supplied to the pictures of C. G. Schütz. He died at Frankfort in 1772. The Städel Institute there contains two woody landscapes by him, dated 1750, and two landscapes with cattle, 1768; other works of his are at Cassel and Mannheim. He was also a restorer of paintings.

HIRTZ, HANS, was a painter of Strassburg, who worked between 1421 and 1460. Several works by him were known in his native city in the 17th century, but they have since disappeared.

HISPANO, MARCOS, a Spanish painter, who died at Madrid in 1679, was a member of the Order of St. Augustine. He executed several religious pictures.

HITMAYER, JOHANN BAPTIST, a native of Salzburg, was born in 1751. He travelled through Germany, and eventually settled in Munich, where he died in 1810. He painted portraits, historical subjects, and altar-pieces.

HIXON, JAMES THOMPSON, a water-colour painter, was born in 1836. He was elected an associate of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1866, and spent the next year at Algiers, but he died of consumption at Capri in 1868, and was buried at Naples.

HJALTELIN, THORSTEIN ILLIA, was born in Iceland in 1771, and was the "sixteenth living son" of his parents. After many adventures he was placed under J. F. Weitsch in Salzdahlen, and became an accomplished landscape painter. He settled afterwards in Germany, residing at Brunswick and at Halle, where he died in 1815.

HOADLY, SARAH. See CURTIS.

HOARE, —, an engraver who worked about the time of Charles I., is known by having engraved some of Evelyn's Italian sketches.

HOARE, PRINCE, a portrait and historical painter, was born at Bath in 1755. He studied under his father, William Hoare, R.A., then in the schools of the Royal Academy, and finally at Rome under Mengs. He exhibited a few pictures, but failing to obtain success, he turned his attention to literature, publishing several works on art, and also writing some plays. In 1799 he was appointed honorary foreign corresponding secretary of the Royal Academy. He died at Brighton in 1834. His portrait is in the Uffizi at Florence. Amongst the works on art which he wrote are :

Academic Annals. 1805-9.

An Inquiry into the present State of the Art of Design in England. 1806.

The Artist. 1809-10.

Epochs of the Fine Arts. 1813.

HOARE, SIR RICHARD COLT, Bart., an amateur landscape painter, was born in 1758. He succeeded to his father's baronetcy in 1787, and died at his seat, Stourhead in Wiltshire, in 1838. Several of the views in Coxe's 'Monmouthshire' are after pictures by him, but he is better known as the historian of Wiltshire.

HOARE, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, was born at Eye, in Suffolk, in 1706. He received a liberal education, and was placed under Grisoni, an Italian painter residing in London. He afterwards went to Rome and attended the school of Francesco Imperiale, the disciple of Carlo Maratti, and associated much with Pompeo Batoni. He remained abroad for nine years, and then returned to London with many copies and studies of the works of the best masters. Finding no encouragement for historical painting, he had recourse to portraiture, which he practised at Bath with considerable success. He painted 'Christ bearing His Cross,' for the church of St. Michael there; and the 'Pool of Bethesda,' for the Octagon Chapel. He was eminent as an artist in crayons, and produced many elegant figures in that manner. On the formation of the Royal Academy he was chosen one of the foundation members, and was a constant exhibitor for many years. He died at Bath in 1792. He etched a few plates for his amusement, among which are the following portraits :

Maria Walpole, Duchess of Gloucester; after Reynolds.

William Warburton, Bishop of Gloucester.

Sir Isaac Newton.

Ralph Allen, of Bath; from the life.

HOART, JEAN BAPTISTE AUGUSTE, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1800, and died there in 1847. He was a pupil of Guérin, and was principally engaged in painting portraits.

HOBBEMA, MEINDERT, a Dutch landscape painter, born in 1638, possibly at Amsterdam, was a contemporary of Jacob van Ruisdael, and not improbably a pupil of Salomon van Ruisdael. The fact that such distinguished artists as Berchem, Lingelbach, Van de Velde, and Wouverman executed the figures and animals in his pictures, show in what repute he was held by his fellow-artists, though the general public seem to have been very slow in giving to him the position which he now holds among Dutch masters. His most frequent scenes are villages surrounded by trees, with winding pathways, and a water-mill generally forms a prominent object. The composition of his pictures is particularly truthful, and they are characterised by a warm and golden tone. No details of his life are known, except that he married in 1688, and died in poverty at Amsterdam in 1709. Among his chief pictures are the following:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	A Water-mill.
Antwerp.	Gallery.	A Water-mill.
Berlin.	Gallery.	A Wooded Landscape.
Bordeaux.	Museum.	Landscape.
Brussels.	Gallery.	Haarlem Wood. 1663.

HOBDAY, WILLIAM ARMFIELD, a miniature and portrait painter, was born at Birmingham in 1771. He practised in London, Bath, and Bristol, residing in the latter place several years. Although he had considerable private means, and his works commanded good prices, his extravagance involved him in continual pecuniary difficulties which culminated in bankruptcy. He died in 1831.

HOCH, GEORG FRIEDRICH, was a native of Dresden, who flourished about 1780. He worked at Rome and Paris, and painted battle-pieces. He had a brother, JOHANN JAKOB HOCH, who painted portraits and landscapes.

HOCHHECKER, FRANZ, a landscape painter, was born at Frankfort in 1730. His master was the elder Schütz, and he died in 1782. In the Cassel Gallery are three landscapes by him.

HÖCHLE, JOHANN BAPTIST, was born at Klingenu, in the canton of Aargau, in 1754, and worked at the trade of a potter until 1770, in which year he was sent, through the influence of the Abbot of St. Blasien, to receive instruction in art from the court painter Morat. He then spent some time at Augsburg under the historical painter Hartmann, and in 1780 he followed the advice of Dörner at Munich to devote himself to genre subjects instead of the ecclesiastical branch of historical painting. After this he became court painter to the Elector Charles Theodore, and in 1802 to the Emperor Francis, to whom he had sent a picture of his coronation at the Römer in Frankfort. He painted for the Emperor a number of portraits at Vienna, where he died in 1832.

HÖCHLE, JOHANN NEPOMUK, a battle painter, the son of Johann Baptist Höchle, was born at Munich in 1790, and was first instructed by Kobell. In 1804 he commenced a course of study at the Vienna Academy, and then placed himself under the battle painter Duvivier. In 1815 he went in the suite of the Emperor Francis to Paris, and in 1819 visited Rome and Naples. A year later he went to Buda and Pesth to make sketches of the encampment of cavalry there. He succeeded his father as court painter, and died at Vienna in 1835. His best oil paintings are:

The Battle of Aspern.

The Crossing of the Vosges by the Allied Troops: the Emperor Francis on the Summit. (Vienna Gallery.)

Some Battle Pictures. (Lichtenstein Gallery.)

He also executed a few lithographs, and many pen-and-ink drawings overlaid with water-colours, among which are:

Festival in the Prater. 1814.

The Emperor Francis in Venice. 1818.

Horse-race at Simmering. 1817.

HÖCKER, ADALBERT LONGIN, was born at Alben-dorf, in the province of Glatz, in 1761. In 1783 he attended the Dresden Academy, and then settled at Breslau. At the Silesian Carlruhe he decorated the theatre, and at Oels both the theatre and the prince's palace. He also painted landscapes. There is no mention of the date of his death.

HÖCKERT, JOHAN FREDRIK, a Swedish painter, was born at Jönköping in 1826. He commenced studying jurisprudence, but at the same time practised drawing under Boklund, and at length entered the Academy of Painting. In 1846 he accompanied Boklund to Munich, where he produced a picture of 'Banditti,' and in 1849 travelled in Lapland, where he found rich material for genre pictures. In the following year he proceeded to Paris, and entered into an engagement with Max Hess; and in 1853 painted 'Queen Christina giving orders for the Execution of Monaldeschi,' for which work he received a stipend which enabled him to prolong his stay in the French capital. In the course of the years 1857 to 1861 he travelled in Holland, Belgium, England, Dalecarlia, Spain, Italy, and North Africa. He died at Göteborg in 1866. Among his principal paintings are:

Divine Service in a Lapland Chapel. 1855.

Return from the Chase in Lapland.

Interior of a Laplander's Hut. 1857. (Stockholm National Museum.)

Laplanders' Wedding. (The same.)

Portrait of the Bey of Tunis. 1861.
Country-woman at her Fireside. (London International Exhibition, 1882; now at Stockholm.)
Portrait of Charles XV. of Sweden.
The Dead Body of Charles XI.
Burning of the Palace in Stockholm in 1697.

HOCKNER, JOHANN GASPAR, a German engraver, who resided at Dresden about the year 1655, was chiefly employed by the booksellers, for whom he engraved a number of portraits.

HODGES, CHARLES HOWARD, a mezzotint engraver, was born in England in 1764, but about 1788 he left this country and went to Holland, where he resided until his death. He was probably a pupil of John Raphael Smith, and he engraved after Van Dyck, Metsu, and Rembrandt. One of these plates was the 'Shipbuilder,' after Rembrandt, in the Royal Collection. He also painted portraits, which were considered excellent likenesses, and many eminent men of the day sat to him. He died at Amsterdam in 1837. The following are the most important among his engravings:

George IV., when Prince of Wales; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Lavinia, Countess Spencer; after the same.

Sir Abraham Hume, Bart.; after the same.

Lady Dashwood and Child; after the same.

Henry Hope, of Amsterdam; after the same.

Mrs. Williams Hope; after the same. 1788.

John Lee, Attorney-General; after the same.

Mrs. Musters; full-length; after the same.

Joshua Sharpe; after the same.

Rev. Thomas Warton, poet laureate; after the same.

William IV., when Duke of Clarence; full-length; after Hoppner.

Frederick, Duke of York; after the same.

John Wolcot ("Peter Pindar"); after Opie.

William Wilberforce; after Rising.

Count Schimmelpenninck; after himself. 1806.

A Gipsy Boy; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.

The Infant Hercules; after the same. 1793.

Children spouting Tragedy; after R. M. Payne. 1785.

Children spouting Comedy; after the same. 1786.

HODGES, JOHN, a mezzotint engraver, flourished in the latter half of the 18th century, and died in London in 1802.

HODGES, WILLIAM, a landscape painter, was born in London in 1744. His father was a blacksmith in Clare Market, Drury Lane, but the son was a scholar of Wilson, and on leaving his instructor was engaged as a draughtsman to accompany Captain Cook in his second voyage round the world, during which he drew many interesting views of the countries discovered or visited by that navigator. On his return he painted for the Admiralty some views in Otaheite and the other islands in the Pacific Ocean. A few years afterwards he went to India, where he resided till 1784, and returned with a considerable fortune. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1776, and continued to do so until 1794, having been elected an Associate in 1786 and an Academician in 1787. Hodges continued the exercise of his talents in London for a few years after his return, but soon after 1790 he engaged in some commercial concern in the west of England. He died at Brixham in 1797.

HODGINS, HENRY, a scene painter, was a native of Dublin. He was a pupil of Robert Carver, and was for many years engaged at Covent Garden Theatre as principal scene-painter. He died at Maidstone in 1796.

HODGSON, CHARLES, an artist of the Norwich school, who flourished at the beginning of the 660 present century, and was principally employed in teaching. He contributed pictures of interiors to the exhibitions of the Norwich Society.

HODGSON, EDWARD, a flower and fruit painter, was born at Dublin in 1719. He practised in London, and exhibited a few times at the Free Society of Artists, and at the Royal Academy. He died in London in 1794.

HODGSON, THOMAS, a wood engraver, was employed by Bewick in 1776. His name appears on one of the cuts in Hawkins's 'History of Music.'

HOECGEEST, GEERAERT VAN, a Dutch architectural painter, who is supposed to have been a son of Joachim Otto Hoegeest, the portrait painter, was admitted as a foreigner into the Guild of St. Luke at Delft in 1639. He painted church interiors, and was perhaps a pupil of B. van Bassen, after whom he etched a single plate. In the Hague Museum are two pictures by him; one representing the interior of the Nieuwe Kerk at Delft (1650), the other the monument of William I., Prince of Orange, in that church (1651). The Antwerp Gallery has another interior of the Nieuwe Kerk at Delft, and the interior of a Protestant church, and the National Gallery of Scotland has an architectural subject by him. Kramm appears to be in error in conjecturing that this artist's Christian name was Cornelis.

HOECGEEST, JOACHIM OTTO, a Dutch portrait painter, who flourished at the Hague, entered the Guild of St. Luke in 1610, and was dean in 1626, but he died before 1656. In the Town Hall at the Hague is a picture attributed to him of the 'Two Flags of the City Guard of the Hague.'

HOECKE, VAN DEN. See VAN DEN HOECKE.

HOEFNAGEL, JAKOB, the son of Joris Hoefnagel, was born at Frankfort in 1575. He engraved a set of about fifty plates of beasts, birds, flowers, insects, &c., from the designs of his father, begun in 1592, when he was seventeen years of age. He also executed some plates from his own compositions, and from those of other masters. He was court painter to the Emperor Rudolph in 1607.

HOEFNAGEL, JORIS, (or HOEFNAGELS), who was born at Antwerp in 1545, was the son of a diamond merchant, who intended to bring him up to the same business, but afterwards abandoned that project, and permitted him to follow his inclination for art. Having made some progress in design, he travelled through Germany, Italy, and Spain, where he made drawings from the ancient monuments and other notable objects; and on his return to Flanders published a volume of plates, engraved from the designs he had made during his journey. He then completed his studies under the instruction of Jan Bol, and afterwards applied himself to painting animals, plants, and insects. He united with his art the business of a dealer in jewels, but when Antwerp was plundered by the Spaniards, the artist and his father were pillaged of everything they had, and took refuge in Bavaria, where Joris exercised his talent as a means of subsistence. The Elector, having seen some of his pictures, took him under his protection, and he remained at Munich eight years, in the course of which time he adorned with miniatures a missal, now in the Imperial Library at Vienna. He was then employed at Prague by the Emperor Rudolph, for whom he illustrated four books upon natural history. Finally he settled at Vienna, where he divided his time between art and Latin poetry, and died in 1601.

Joris Hoefnagel was also an engraver. Besides some views and maps for books, he executed a map, or plan, of Bristol, and in conjunction with Franz Hogenberg and Simone Novellani, he engraved the plates for Braun's 'Civitates Orbis Terrarum,' published at Cologne in 1572; and some of the plates for the 'Theatrum Orbis Terrarum' of Abraham Ortelius, issued in 1570. He used several monograms, but marked some of his works G. Houf.

HOET, GERARD, a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Bommel in 1648. He was the son of a glass-painter, and studied under his father, Moses Hoet, and afterwards under Warnard van Rysen and Cornelis van Poelenborch. In 1672, when the French took possession of Bommel, he was obliged to take refuge at the Hague, where he was employed by General Salis in ornamenting saloons, and painting ceilings in some of the principal hotels. He painted also cabinet pictures of historical and fabulous subjects, which were much admired. He afterwards visited Amsterdam, where he met with equal encouragement; and after passing some time in that city, as well as in France, he was invited to Utrecht by M. van Zuylen, one of the most zealous patrons of art of his time, for whom he painted some of his best pictures. He founded at Utrecht, in conjunction with H. Schook, a school of design or academy, of which he was appointed director; and he conducted it with great credit to himself and advantage to the students for several years. At the age of sixty he went back to the Hague, and decorated a saloon with 'The Seven Christian Virtues.' He died at the Hague in 1733. Among his best paintings are:

Amsterdam.	Gallery.	Two Landscapes.
"	"	Marriage of Alexander and Roxana.
"	"	Homage rendered to Alexander.
"	"	Family Scene.
Cassel.	Gallery.	The Queen of Sheba giving presents to Solomon.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	The Death of Dido.
"	"	Admetus at the death-bed of Alcestis.
Dresden.	Gallery.	A Girl seated on a ruined Wall.
Glasgow.	Gallery.	The Guilt of Callisto.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Moses striking the Rock.
"	"	Rape of the Sabinas.
"	"	Diana in the Bath.

The following engravings by him may also be mentioned:

The Love of Paris and Ceneone.
The Love of Aminta and Thestylis.
Bacchus brought up by the Nymphs.
Arcadian Landscape.
The Love of Dametius and Galatea.

Gerard Hoet had two sons, GERARD and HENDRIK JACOB, the former painted portraits, and the latter flowers and fruit in the style of Van Huysum. Gerard died at the Hague in 1760.

HOEY, JAN DE. See DE HOEY.

HÖFEL, BLASIUS, an Austrian engraver on metal and wood, was born at Vienna in 1792. He underwent many hardships at the commencement of his career, but he succeeded in attending the Vienna Academy, and became a pupil, assistant, and at length son-in-law of Quirin Mark. In 1820 he was appointed professor of free-hand drawing at the Neustadt Military Academy, and afterwards became a member of the Academy of Vienna. He made some important discoveries in the technical department of wood-engraving. His death occurred at Salzburg in 1863. Among his engravings are:

Portrait of the Empress Maria Theresa.
The Empress Caroline Augusta; after Stieber.
Other portraits of the Imperial Family.
The Lamentation over the Body of Christ; after Andrea del Sarto.
Portrait of an old Woman; after Waldmüller.

HÖFEL, JOHANN NEPOMUK, the elder brother of Blasius Höfel, was a painter born at Pesth in 1788. He was first instructed by Krafft, and in 1804 entered the Vienna Academy. There in 1811 he received the prize for historical painting on account of his picture of 'Ægeus recognizing his son Theseus by the mark on his sword.' In 1818 he visited Italy, calling at Munich on his return. The subjects of his pictures were partly taken from profane history, as 'The Sons of Diogenes of Rhodes victorious at Olympia' (1820), and partly from sacred history, as in the case of a large number of altar-pieces. He painted also portraits. He died at Vienna in 1864.

HÖFER, HEINRICH, was born at Eisfeld in Thuringia in 1825, and after working for a time at porcelain painting, devoted himself to landscapes under Carl Milner at Munich in 1850. He died in that city in 1878, having in the course of his career travelled in the Tyrol, Switzerland, and Upper Italy. Among his paintings are cited:

The Wetterhorn.
Winter Landscape with Hunting Figures.
The Fraueninsel in the Chiemsee.

HOFF, JOHANN NIKOLAUS, a German engraver, was born at Frankfort in 1798, and died in the same city in 1873. He was also a teacher of drawing, and executed superior engravings of:

The Entombment; after Perugino.
The Virgin and Child with St. Catharine; after Leonardo da Vinci.
The Madonna; after Vincenzo da San Gimignano.

HOFF, KONRAD, a German architectural painter, was born at Schwerin in 1816, and studied at the Academies of Dresden and Munich. He was at first a decorator and scene-painter, but later he confined himself to architectural subjects and interiors. He died at Munich in 1883. Among his numerous works may be mentioned:

The Sacristy of a Church. 1861.
Staircase in the Château of Schleissheim. 1862.
The Room of a Cardinal. 1862. (Schwerin Museum.)
Santa Maria dei Miracoli, Venice, by moonlight. 1864.
In the Cathedral of Torcello. 1865.
School of San Rocco, Venice. 1867.
Santa Maria della Salute, Venice. 1867.
Bed-chamber of the Emperor Charles VII. in the Château of Schleissheim. 1867.

HOFFMAN, FRANCIS, was probably a native of Germany, but he resided in England about the year 1711. He etched in a coarse, tasteless style a plate containing the portraits of Henry St. John, William Bromley, and Robert Harley. There is a portrait of Francis Hoffman, drawn and engraved by himself, on which he is styled the inventor of ships with three bottoms.

HOFFMAN, JONAS, a Swedish painter, was born at Örebro in Sweden in 1731, and worked chiefly in Paris and Italy, returning to his native land in 1770. He died at Stockholm in 1780.

HOFFMANN, ANSELM FRANZ, a decorative and architectural painter, was born at Mayence in 1708, and died at Frankfurt in 1782.

HOFFMANN, AUGUST, a German engraver, was born at Elberfeld in 1810, and resorted in 1826 to the Düsseldorf Academy, where he commenced learning the engraver's art under Thelott. After this he made further progress under Keller, and produced three plates for the Art Union of the Rhine Provinces and Westphalia, viz., 'The Church-goer,' after L. Blanc (1835), 'The Abduction,' after Lessing (1836), and 'Christ in the Lap of the Virgin,' after Schadow. After this he engraved Lessing's 'Preaching of the Hussites' for Raczyński's 'Histoire de l'Art moderne en Allemagne,' and in 1838 proceeded to Munich, Berlin, and Paris. Hitherto he had pursued the half-finished style of engraving, but he now turned to that of complete execution. He died at Berlin in 1872. The following are his principal plates:

The Madonna and Child with St. Anne; after Giulio Romano. 1851.
 The Madonna of the Cymbal; after the same.
 The Flower Girl; after Magnus. 1852.
 Macbeth arming for his last Battle.
 Hubert attempting to put out Prince Arthur's Eyes. } after Kaulbach,
 Death of King John in the Garden of } for the 'Shake-
 Swinstead Abbey. } speare Gallery.'
 Charlemagne; after Kaulbach's cartoon.
 Joseph making himself known to his Brethren; after Cornelius.
 The Madonna, with St. Jerome and St. Francis; after Raphael.

HOFFMANN, GEORG ANDREAS, who was born at Burgbernheim in 1754, was a painter who was deaf and dumb, but who learnt drawing at the Leipsic Academy during his stay in the Heineck Institute, and copied oil paintings under the guidance of Professor Casanova at Dresden, in particular the 'Notte' of Correggio. In 1799 he sent from Rome copies from Raphael for exhibition at Berlin. He was also a good portrait painter. He died about 1808.

HOFFMANN, HANS, was a painter of Nuremberg, who flourished from 1548 till his death at Vienna in 1600. He entered the service of the Emperor Rudolph at Prague in 1584. He was a good imitator of Dürer, and worked best in water-colours. He has left a portrait of Hans Sachs, and was also a painter of flowers and insects.

HOFFMANN, JOHANN DANIEL, a German painter, was born at Wiesbaden in 1729, and died in 1777. He resided chiefly at Frankfurt, where he painted portraits and historical pictures.

HOFFMANN, JOHANN LEONHARD, a German painter, was born at Neustadt in 1740. He entered the University of Erlangen, where in 1799 he became drawing master. He travelled through Germany, Poland, Russia, and Italy, and painted principally landscapes and miniatures. He died about 1812.

HOFFMANN, JOSEPH, the son and pupil of Valentin Hoffmann, was born at Cologne in 1764. After leaving his father he studied at Düsseldorf under Krahe and Langer, receiving the prize for decorative painting, and in 1793-4 he painted friezes in the choir of the Martinskirche. In 1797 he went for study to Paris, and in 1800 received, in conjunction with August Nahl, one of the prizes offered by Goethe for a painting of 'The Theft of the Horses of Rhesus by Ulysses and Diomedes; and again in the following year for 'Achilles at the Court of Lycomedes recognized by Ulysses in his Female Disguise.' In 1805 he won the same prize with 'Hercules cleansing the Stables of Augeas.' One of his happiest compositions was a sketch representing the Emperor Napoleon in intercourse with his officers. In the audience chamber of the castle at Weimar he painted on the ceiling 'Diana with her Attendants upon the Chase.' He died at Cologne in 1812.

HOFFMANN, NIKOLAUS, who was born at Darmstadt in 1740, and died in 1822, is represented in the Gallery of that city by two pictures; a 'Schoolmistress teaching little Girls,' and a 'Schoolmaster teaching Boys.' He was instructed by Seekatz, whose style he followed so closely that their respective pictures could not be distinguished.

HOFFMANN, SAMUEL, was born at Zurich in 1592, and learned the elements of design under Gotthard Ringgli. The celebrity of the school of Rubens induced him to visit Antwerp, and place himself under that painter, and such was his progress, that he became eminent as a painter of history and portraits, even at a period when Antwerp was the residence of so many renowned artists, and on his return to Switzerland he met with extensive employment, particularly in portraits. He painted also fruit, game, and still-life. He died at Frankfurt in 1648. Among his paintings are the following:

Darmstadt.	Gallery.	Pyramus and Thisbe.
		Portrait of a Jeweller.
Frankfort.	Römer.	The Birth of Erichthonius.
	Städel Inst.	Female Portrait.
Zurich.	Museum.	The Tribute Money.

HOFLAND, THOMAS CHRISTOPHER, a landscape painter, was born at Worksop, in Nottinghamshire, in 1777, and he received some instruction in art from John Rathbone, who was then considered a good landscape painter. After spending some years at Derby as a teacher of drawing, he visited London for the purpose of copying pictures at the British Institution. Finding that his copies sold, he determined on settling in London, which he did in 1811. In 1814 the governors of the British Institution awarded him one hundred guineas for the best landscape, 'A Storm off the Coast of Scarborough,' which was purchased by the Marquis of Stafford. In 1815 he removed to Richmond, in 1817 to Twickenham, and in 1823 back to London. He made many copies of Claude, Poussin, Wilson, and Gainsborough, and painted lake scenery, which was considered excellent. He was employed for some time at White Knights by the Duke of Marlborough, to paint a series of pictures to illustrate a description of that place; but it appears that the result was greatly injurious to the artist, and dishonourable to the peer. In 1839 he wrote 'The British Angler's Manual,' and immediately afterwards he visited Italy, under the patronage of the Earl of Egremont, and made many sketches of the beautiful scenery of Naples, Castellamare, Pompeii, Rome, Tivoli, and Florence. There he was attacked by fever, which obliged him, after five months' absence, to return to England; and though he rallied for a time, he died at Leamington in 1843. He was one of the originators of the Artists' Fund; and also, in conjunction with Linton, Glover, Holmes, and others, projected and carried into effect the building of the Gallery of the Society of British Artists in Suffolk Street. There is by him in the South Kensington Museum a water-colour drawing of 'Hampstead Heath.'

HOFLAND, THOMAS RICHARD, a landscape painter in water-colours, the son of T. C. Hofland, was born about 1816. He was for some years a teacher of drawing, and exhibited a very few works at the Royal Academy. He died in 1876.

HOFMAN, PIETER, a Dutch painter, was born at Dordrecht in 1755, and died in 1837. He was a pupil of Ponce, and painted landscapes, ornaments, fruit, &c.

HOFMANN, JOHANN BENEDIKT, was a painter of the first half of the 18th century, who was born at Sorau in Lusatia, and who executed a number of ceiling pieces in the French style of his day, as well as some good portraits. He died at Dantzig in 1745.

HOFMANS, PIETER, surnamed JANITZER, a painter of battle-pieces, who flourished about 1660, was a native of Antwerp, who was banished from his own country, and travelled in Turkey and Italy. When he was in Italy he became the pupil of Bourguignon, and was known by the name of 'Giannizzero.'

HOFNAS, JOHANN WILHELM, (or HOFNASS,) was born at Ahaus, in the bishopric of Münster, in 1727. In his sixteenth year he was apprenticed to a glass-painter of Westphalia, but in 1753 he went to Rome and studied under Mengs. After seven years in that city he returned home, and was appointed court painter to the Elector Palatine, and professor at the Mannheim Academy. He died in 1795, having declined in reputation in his later years. He has left many portraits and family groups in Mannheim, Mayence, &c.

HOFNAS, LORENZ, (or HOFNASS,) the son of Johann Wilhelm Hofnas, was born at Mannheim in 1772, and died at Ratisbon in 1837. He excelled principally in miniature painting and sepia drawing, and his productions in the latter style were much sought after. His drawings were principally of the saints.

HOGARTH, WILLIAM, the eminent painter and engraver, was born in London, in Ship Court, Old Bailey, on the 10th of December, 1697. He was the younger son of Richard Hogarth, who was educated at St. Bees, and afterwards kept a school in his native county of Westmoreland; but, as this proved unsuccessful, he removed to London, where he resumed his profession, adding to it that of a literary hack and corrector of the press. From his earliest days William Hogarth had a predilection for art, as he himself says, and so at his own request he was apprenticed about the year 1712 to Ellis Gamble, a silversmith, who kept a shop in Cranbourne Alley, Leicester Fields. On the expiration of his apprenticeship in 1718 he turned his attention to engraving. His first employment seems to have been the engraving of arms and shop bills, and his earliest known work was his own card, bordered with two figures and two Cupids, and inscribed 'W. Hogarth, Engraver, April y^e 23^d, 1720.' From this he passed to prints for books, among the earliest of which were six engravings for King's 'History of the Heathen Gods.' In 1724 was published 'Burlington Gate,' which, as it unites a satire on the passion for masquerades with a burlesque of Kent, the architect, is supposed by Ireland to have been a kind of admission ticket to Sir James Thornhill's Academy in Covent Garden, which was opened in that year, and which Hogarth used to attend. In 1726 he first became known in his profession by his plates for Butler's 'Hudibras;' and in 1727-8 he won an action against a tapestry worker named Morris, who refused to pay him for a design on canvas for the 'Element of Earth,' which he had ordered, on the ground that the designer was "an engraver and no painter." After this date we find Hogarth turning his attention to oil painting, and producing small conversation pieces. Among his works in this line up to the year 1733 were 'The Wanstead Assembly,' a scene from Gay's 'Beggar's Opera,' a scene from Dryden's 'Indian Emperor,' 'The Committee of the House of Commons examining Bambridge,' and 'The Politician.' In 1729 he ran away with Sir James Thornhill's only daughter, and they were married in Paddington Church. In 1733 he removed to a house in Leicester Fields, and in 1734 he established his reputation as a painter of domestic history by the series of 'A Harlot's Progress.' This work, which is said to have appeased his wife's father, was quickly followed by 'A Rake's Progress.' Owing to piratical imitations of these two works, he obtained in 1735 an Act which vested in artists an exclusive right in their own designs, and restrained the reproduction of them without consent. In 1736 he painted on the staircase of St. Bartholomew's Hospital 'The Good Samaritan' and the 'Pool of Bethesda,' and engraved 'The Company of Undertakers, or Consultation of Physicians,' and the 'Scholars at a Lecture.' In 1738 were issued the engravings of the 'Four Times of the Day,' and 'Strolling Actresses dressing in a Barn,' as well as the plates to Jarvis's translation of 'Don Quixote.' To 1740 and 1741 belong 'A Distrest Poet' and 'The Enraged Musician,' the former having been issued first in 1736, and to 1742 belongs 'Taste in High Life.' In 1745 Hogarth advertised his pictures for sale by a kind of auction, to which the ticket of admission was the etching known as 'The Battle of the Pictures.' In the same year the six pictures of 'The Marriage à la Mode' were completed and the engravings issued. In this work Hogarth's art culminated, and nowhere can there be found a finer example of his own peculiar style. These pictures were bought at one of Hogarth's auctions by Mr. Lane of Hillingdon, near Uxbridge, for £126. In 1797 they were purchased at Christie's for £1381 by Mr. Angerstein, with whose collection they passed into the National Gallery. In 1746 he painted the portrait of Simon, Lord Lovat, who was executed in that year. To 1747 belong 'The Stage Coach, or Country Inn Yard,' and the series called 'Industry and Idleness.' In 1748 took place the famous journey to France, an account of which was written by one of the party, and from which resulted 'The Roast Beef of Old England,' published in 1749, to which year belongs also 'The March to Finchley,' 'Beer Street' and 'Gin Lane,' 'The Four Stages of Cruelty,' 'Paul before Felix,' and 'Moses brought to Pharaoh's daughter,' belong to 1751 and 1752, after which time he produced nothing of note except the four 'Election' pictures, now in the Soane Museum, Lincoln's Inn Fields. In his later years Hogarth took to writing. His book, 'The Analysis of Beauty,' had the following origin. In his own portrait, painted in 1745, he drew a serpentine line on a palette in the corner, with the words, "The line of beauty and grace," which gave rise to so much discussion that this book was written in explanation, its purpose being to fix the fluctuating ideas of taste by establishing a standard of beauty. In 1756 he painted an altar-piece for St. Mary Redcliffe at Bristol, which is now in the Clifton Museum, and in 1757 he was appointed serjeant-painter to the king, in succession to his brother-in-law, John Thornhill. In the same year he announced his determination to devote himself to portrait painting, which, however, in 1759-60 he appears to have abandoned in favour of the graver. Before doing so, he was requested by Lord Charlemont to paint one more picture. The subject was to be chosen by the artist, and the result was the picture known as 'The Lady's Last Stake,' or 'Picquet,' or 'Virtue in Danger.' This picture was so much admired that, at the request of Sir Richard Grosvenor, he undertook another on the same terms, and the subject selected was Boccaccio's 'Sigismonda,' mourning over the heart of Guiscardo. When it was finished, Sir Richard Grosvenor declined to take it, and the picture was left on the artist's hands. It was sold after Mrs. Hogarth's death to Alderman Boydell for fifty-six guineas, and formed one of the prizes of the Shakespeare Gallery. It eventually passed into the possession of Mr. Anderson, by whom it was bequeathed to the National Gallery. In 1762 he issued the plate known as 'Credulity, Superstition, and Fanaticism,' which was an adaptation of a previous design entitled 'Enthusiasm;' and in the same year, on the accession to power of Lord Bute, he published 'The Times, Plate I,' which drew down upon him the anger of Wilkes, the editor of the 'North Briton,' and in the seventeenth number of that paper he was assailed both as a man and an artist. In the following year Hogarth retaliated by a portrait of Wilkes, and the poet Churchill published his attack. This was answered by a print entitled 'The Bruiser.' The end was now drawing near, and 'The Bathos,' published in 1764, was Hogarth's last published work. On the 25th of October in that year he was removed from the house at Chiswick, which he had bought for use in the summer months, to his house in Lincoln's Inn Fields, but he died the same night, October 26th, 1764. He was buried in Chiswick churchyard, where a monument was erected by his friends, and the epitaph on it written by Garrick. His principal pictures are:

HOGENBERG, ABRAHAM, was probably the son of Franz Hogenberg, whom he assisted in the plates he engraved for the 'Theatrum Orbis Terrarum' of Abraham Ortelius. He engraved some frontispieces for the booksellers; among others, one for a 'Commentary on the Book of Kings,' published at Cologne in 1635. He was at that city in 1590, and was still living in 1653. There is by him a portrait of Wolfgang William, Duke of Bavaria, on horseback, after Geldorp; and he was probably the engraver of a 'Hercules and Omphale' after B. Spranger, which is marked with A. and a helmet.

HOGENBERG, FRANZ, who was probably the son of Hans Hogenberg the elder, was born at Mechlin, and came to England with his brother Remigius about 1560, unless the date on his portrait of Queen Mary proves him to have come earlier. About 1577 he settled at Cologne, where he produced many spirited plates representing the events of the 16th century, in which the oppressors of his country are not spared. He was a Protestant, and was made a citizen of Hamburg in 1585: he visited Copenhagen in 1588, and died at Cologne in 1590. The following engravings also are by him:

Portrait of Mary I., Queen of England; inscribed Veritas temporis filia. 1555.
 The Maps of Gaul and Belgium, in Saxton's Atlas.
 Part of the views in Braun's 'Civitates Orbis Terrarum,' printed at Cologne in 1572; engraved in conjunction with Simon Novellanus and Joris Hoefnagel.
 The Funeral of Frederick II., King of Denmark; dated 1592; engraved in conjunction with Simon Novellanus; in twenty-one plates.
 Sixteen plates for the 'Res Gestæ' of Frederick II. of Denmark. 1589.
 An emblematical print of Charity.
 Portrait of Gerhard Mercator.
 Portrait of Gebhard Truchsess, Archbishop and Elector of Cologne.

HOGENBERG, HANS, the elder, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born probably at Mechlin in 1500. After learning the rudiments of his art he travelled in Italy, and then returned to Mechlin, where he painted some scenes from the history of Joshua and Caleb in the church of St. Romuald. He painted also a well-known frieze representing the 'Entry of the Emperor Charles V. into Bologna,' but all his works have perished. He died at Mechlin in 1544.

HOGENBERG, HANS, the younger, was a Flemish painter and engraver, who died about 1595. His works were long confounded with those of Hans Hogenberg the elder. There is by him a set of six subjects from the 'History of Tobit,' dated 1594.

HOGENBERG, JOHANN, was a relation of Abraham Hogenberg, and flourished at Cologne about the year 1600. He engraved several portraits, and some historical subjects, executed in a clear, neat style, resembling that of Crispyn van de Passe, though much inferior. Among other plates the following are by him:

Gulielmus Fabricius.
 Johann Adam, Electoral Prince Archbishop of Mayence.
 Lothar, Electoral Archbishop of Treves.
 Georg Radzivil, Cardinal, Bishop of Cracow.
 The Scourging of Christ; after M. De Vos.
 Twelve plates of Birds and other Animals.

HOGENBERG, NIKOLAUS, an engraver, who was probably a son of Hans Hogenberg the elder, died in 1539.

HOGENBERG, REMIGIUS, who was probably the son of Hans Hogenberg the elder, and a native of Mechlin, came to England about the year 1560, and in 1573 engraved the portrait of Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, in whose service he appears to have been retained. This portrait was supposed by Vertue to have been the first engraved in England. Remigius Hogenberg worked entirely with the graver, and the few prints that are known by him are more sought after for their extreme rarity than for their merit. The following are among them :

The Portrait of Archbishop Parker, seated at a table, with a book open, and a bell by the side of it; a coat of arms at each of the four corners. 1573.

A large Genealogy of the Kings of England, from the Conquest to Queen Elizabeth. 1574.

Henry IV., King of France and Navarre.

Francis of Valois.

Charles, Duke of Lorraine.

HOGENHUIZEN, ELIZABETH GEORGINE VAN, a fruit and flower painter, was a native of the Hague. She was born in 1776, and died in 1794.

HÖGER, JOSEPH, an Austrian landscape painter, was born at Vienna in 1801, and entered the Academy school of landscape under Mössmer, receiving before long the prize. After this he was influenced by Rebell, and especially by his brother-in-law Gauermann, yet he was in the main a follower of nature, which he zealously studied in Styria, the Southern Tyrol, and Upper Austria. He for some time taught drawing in the family of the Prince of Liechtenstein. In 1843 he was admitted a member of the Academy of Vienna, and in 1850 became professor. He died in the same city in 1877. He published a 'School of Landscape Drawing,' a series of 'Studies of Trees,' and a 'School of Water-Colours.' His oil paintings were greatly admired, but his water-colour and pencil drawings are superior. Among the most important of the latter are :

Chapel in Ramsau. (Count Beroldingen.)

View of Patschkau. }

Sketch near Lundenburg. } (Count Genois.)

A Wilderness. (Herr Ernst.)

HOGG, JACOB, an English engraver, flourished in the latter half of the 18th century. There are several plates in the dotted manner by him after Angelica Kauffmann, Kirk, and others.

HOGUET, CHARLES, a landscape and marine painter, born at Berlin in 1821, was the son of a French ballet-master. In 1839 he became a pupil of Wilhelm Krause, and went afterwards to Paris to E. Ciceri; in 1841 he accompanied Eduard Hildebrandt to England, but went back to Paris to study under Isabey, the uncle of Ciceri, and there gained the second class gold medal. After 1848 he lived at Berlin, where in 1869 he was elected a member of the Academy, and obtained the gold medal at the exhibition. He died at Berlin in 1870. According to his own estimate he painted 224 oil pictures, exclusive of sketches, water-colour drawings, &c. The Berlin National Gallery contains two paintings by him, 'The Last Windmill on Montmartre,' and 'The Wreck' (1864).

HOHE, FRIEDRICH, a lithographer and painter, was born at Bayreuth in 1802. His father was a painter, and became his first instructor, but in 1820 he commenced attending the Munich Academy.

666

From 1823 till near the close of his life he devoted himself entirely to lithography. In 1826 he visited Italy in company with Karl Rottmann, and two years later he undertook the publication of the 'Leuchtenberg Gallery,' and afterwards took part with Hanfstängl in that of the 'Dresden Gallery.' Late in life he attempted landscape painting, but without much success. He died at Munich in 1870. Among his lithographs may be mentioned :

The Entry of King Otho into Nauplia; after Peter Hess. Selections from the Paintings of living Artists at Munich.

Illustrations of German classical Ballads and Romances; in conjunction with A. Brügger.

The Old Stag; in twelve plates.

HOHE, NIKOLAUS CHRISTIAN, a portrait and historical painter, the elder brother of Friedrich Hohe, was born at Bayreuth in 1798. He is best known by his discovery, uncovering, and partial restoration of the wall-paintings at Schwarzhof near Bonn, which are now in the Berlin Museum. He made similar disentanglements in Cologne Cathedral, and various other edifices in the district. He was appointed drawing-master to the University, and court painter. He died at Bonn in 1868.

HOHENBERG, MARTIN, usually, but incorrectly, known as MARTIN ALTOMONTE, was born of German parents at Naples in 1657. When fifteen years of age he entered at Rome the studio of Baciccio, with whom he remained five years. He then studied under Carlo Maratti, and in the Roman Academy of Arts. In 1684—about which time he Italianized his name into Altomonte—he was appointed painter to John III. Sobieski, King of Poland, for whom he painted at Warsaw some pictures illustrating the exploits performed by Polish soldiers against the Turks. In 1703 he went to Vienna, and four years later became a member of the Academy. He painted numerous excellent altar-pieces for the convent of the Holy Cross at Linz, where he spent the latter part of his life. He died there in 1745, and was buried in the convent church. The Vienna Gallery has a 'Susannah' by him, painted in 1709. His works are also found in Warsaw, at Linz, and in other towns in Austria.

HOHENLOHE-KIRCHBERG, FRIEDRICH KARL LUDWIG, Prince of, an amateur artist, was born at Kirchberg in 1751. His first instructor seems to have been Valentin Tischbein, but he afterwards studied under Oeser at Leipsic. He had been a captain of horse in the Austrian army, but a contusion received at a review caused him to abandon the service, and devote himself exclusively to his favourite pursuits of painting and drawing, and occasionally carving in ivory. His miniature likenesses obtained much praise. He died at Weickersheim in 1791.

HOHNECK, ADOLF, a painter and lithographer, was born at Taubenheim, in Saxony, in 1808, and from 1838 to 1841 attended the Academy at Düsseldorf. He painted genre pictures and landscapes, and also lithographed portraits with much success. He died at Dresden in 1879.

HOIN, CLAUDE JEAN BAPTISTE, a French painter and engraver, born at Dijon in 1750, was a pupil of Devosge and Greuze. He was a member of the Academies of Toulouse and Dijon, and keeper of the Museum at Dijon, to which at his death he bequeathed some pictures. He died at Dijon in 1817. The Museums of both places possess his portrait. The following engravings are by him:

The Toilet of Venus; after Boichot.
Hercules and Omphale; after the same.
The Death of a Monk; after Fragonard.
The Death of St. Mary Magdalene; after Greuze.
The Apotheosis of Mirabeau.
His own Portrait.

HOLAART, J., a native of Dordrecht, was born about 1716, and died in 1772. He painted portraits, and also executed some mezzotint engravings.

HOLANDA, ANTONIO DE, a Portuguese miniature painter of the early part of the 16th century, is known only from his son Francisco's book, 'Pintura Antiqua,' from which it appears that among other works he executed a very striking portrait of Charles V., which so pleased that monarch that he declared it to be more faithful than the one by Titian.

HOLANDA, FRANCISCO DE, the son and scholar of Antonio de Holanda, was born at Lisbon in 1515. He held the post of drawing-master to the sons of John III. of Portugal, and was employed by that monarch to illuminate various books in the royal library. He discovered a new and brilliant method of laying on colours which had long eluded the experiments and researches of his father. Notwithstanding its anticipation at Rome by Giulio Clovio, the discovery induced the king to send him to study in Italy, and on his way thither he had an interview with the Emperor Charles V. at Barcelona. He executed careful plans of all the fortified places on his route for the service of his master the Infanta Don Luis, and for the Archbishop of Funchal one of the whole city of Rome. For the Queen of Portugal he copied by stealth the celebrated picture of Christ, attributed to St. Luke, and preserved in the church of St. John Lateran. During his residence at Rome and his subsequent two years' travel through Italy and Florence, he devoted himself to copying the treasures by which he was surrounded, and enjoyed the friendship of many distinguished personages, amongst others, of Michelangelo, Vittoria Colonna, Giulio Clovio, Baccio Bandinelli, Pierino del Vaga, and Sebastiano del Piombo. On his return to Portugal in 1548, he wrote an account of ancient painting, dedicated to the king, in which he gives a most amusing relation of himself, the arts, and the artists with whom he associated: for egotism it rivals the 'Life of Benvenuto Cellini'; but the work is full of good humour, and information to be found nowhere else. Count Raczyński published a French translation of it in his 'Arts en Portugal,' under the title, 'Manuscrit de François de Hollande.' It was also translated into Castilian in 1563; and this version, never printed, still lies in the library of San Fernando in Madrid. Francisco afterwards added to his work a dialogue on drawing from nature, the result of a visit to a painter, Blas de Perea. His last work was a memorial on the state of Portuguese art, addressed to King Sebastian of Portugal in 1571. There is in the library of the Escorial an album of drawings by Francisco, which begins with a portrait of the reigning pontiff, and another of Michelangelo, both illuminated. These are followed by drawings of the most beautiful monuments of ancient Rome, such as the amphitheatre of Vespasian, Trajan's column, &c.; views in Venice and Naples; the amphitheatre at Narbonne; and other subjects. He probably died about 1584.

HOLANDA, RODRIGO DE, a Spaniard, was in 1591 appointed painter to Philip II., with an allowance of 100 ducats, which was continued to him at the accession of Philip III. in 1599, in consideration of his services.

HOLBEIN, AMBROSIUS, the elder brother of Hans Holbein the younger, was born about 1494. He probably went with his brother from Augsburg to Basle, and in 1517 he was admitted into the Guild 'Zum Himmel.' Soon after this he must have gone away, or more probably died, as his name no longer appears in the city archives, and no date but 1517 or 1518 appears on his pictures. These dates are to be seen on the metallic pencil sketches in the Basle Museum. Besides these the Museum at Basle has two pictures, namely, 'Two Death's Heads behind a trellised window,' and a 'Suffering Saviour.' At Munich is a picture of 'Joseph and the wife of Potiphar.' He seems to have been engaged as was his brother in designing title-pages, and to Ambrosius was entrusted 'Apelles' Representation of Calumny,' as is shown from the monogram with the date 1517. There is also a title-page designed by Ambrosius representing 'Death and the Soldier.'

HOLBEIN, HANS, the elder, was the son of Michael Holbein, a leather-seller, who settled at Augsburg in 1448. The year of his birth is unknown, but it was probably about 1460. The name of his master also is unknown, but he first formed his style on the models of the school of Rogier van der Weyden, which he subsequently tempered by studying Italian and local tradition. It cannot be said when Holbein commenced his art, but we find him inscribed on the rolls of Augsburg in place of his father Michael in 1494. From that time till his death at Isenheim in 1524, he spent alternate periods of prosperity and depression, and he was being constantly summoned for the payment of small sums. His earliest known works were scenes from the Life of the Virgin, painted for the abbey of Weingarten, which were afterwards distributed to four altars in the cathedral of Augsburg. To these earlier years belong the 'Virgin and Child, with two Angels,' in the St. Moritz Kapelle, and a 'Virgin and Child enthroned, with Angels,' in the Landauer Brüderhaus at Nuremberg. To the year 1499, in which year he was made a citizen of Ulm, belong the 'Death of the Virgin' in the Basle Museum; 'The Coronation of the Virgin,' with the 'Nativity' and 'Martyrdom of St. Dorothea' on the wings, and a series of scenes from the Passion in the Augsburg Gallery. In 1501 he visited Frankfurt, and painted for the Dominicans a large altarpiece comprising 'The Last Supper,' 'Christ entering Jerusalem,' the 'Jews expelled from the Temple,' the 'Root of Jesse,' the 'Tree of the Dominican Order,' and seven scenes from the Passion—all of which are now in the Städel Institute at Frankfurt. In the following year he painted an altarpiece for the abbey of Kaisheim, near Donauwörth, consisting of eighteen or twenty panels, of which the 'Crucifixion,' 'Descent from the Cross,' and 'Entombment,' are now in the Munich Gallery. To this period belong the twelve scenes from the Passion in the Fürstenberg collection at Donaueschingen, and the 'Transfiguration,' and 'Christ crowned with Thorns,' in the Augsburg Gallery. In 1504 were painted the scenes from the Life of St. Paul. In 1506, 1507, and 1508, Holbein was still engaged at Augsburg executing works for the St. Maurice church and convent. About the last-named year he is reported to have been invited to Basle to be consulted about the decorations of the new Town Hall, which were carried out between the years 1508 and 1521, and following years. In 1516 he is commonly said to have settled in or at least visited Basle with his three sons. In 1521 he was still living, but is said to have died in or about 1524. In the Museum at Basle are nine drawings and three Passion pictures assigned to him. Ruskin has said of him that he was complete in his intellect, and that what he saw he saw with his whole soul, and what he painted he painted with his whole might. The following is a list of his principal works:

Augsburg.	Cathedral.	Scenes from the Life of the Virgin. Four altar-piece wings from the abbey of Weingarten in Swabia.

HOLBEIN, HANS, the younger, was born at Augsburg in 1497. He was the son and pupil of Hans Holbein the elder, a painter of merit who excelled in portraiture, and to whom are now assigned many works which until recently were attributed to his son; among which may especially be mentioned the altar-piece of the 'Martyrdom of St. Sebastian' at Munich.

Nothing is on record of the early life of Hans and his brother Ambrosius, beyond the circumstance that they assisted their father, who was repeatedly in debt and difficulty up to the year of his death in 1524. In 1515, the brothers went to Basle, where the University was distinguished for the liberal welcome and encouragement that it gave to talent of every kind. There the young Holbeins found work in the designing of title-pages and initial letters for books, and between 1515 and 1528 Hans was designing title-pages for no less than five printers at Basle and another at Zurich; and in this connection his name is closely linked with the movement of the Reformation by the designs that he made in illustration of the new translations of the New Testament. He was also largely employed in decorating houses with wall-paintings; among the most famous of which are the 'Peasants' Dance' of the Eisengasse, and the frescoes for the Town Hall; but the greatest of his works of this kind is the 'Dance of Death' preserved to us in the engravings of Lützelburger. His genius for satire and caricature is conspicuous in all these works, but is perhaps most remarkable in the pen-and-ink illustrations that he made to the 'Praise of Folly' of Erasmus. He produced in the same period many paintings of sacred subjects and portraiture; and amongst the former, the most celebrated of all his works, the so-called Meyer Madonna of Darmstadt and Dresden, and the Solothurn Madonna. Both contain portraits, and it is deduced from those of the Solothurn picture that Holbein found his models for it in his own wife and child. Holbein was largely engaged at Basle in portrait painting, and the stirring times that are recorded on his canvases in the features of such men as Melancthon and Erasmus add greatly to their interest.

Holbein's intimacy with Erasmus led to his invitation by Henry VIII. to England. He commended him to the care of Sir Thomas More, and Holbein set out upon his journey in the autumn of 1526, escaping thus from Basle at a moment when it was prostrated by calamities, having suffered severely from the plague, from gunpowder explosion, and from a fanatical reaction against the Reformation, so that "so many painters had been obliged to take to other businesses, that the city would soon be unable to boast of any artists at all." It is interesting to recall that, from the circumstances of the time, and his own, it is more than probable that the great master made the land part of his journey from Basle to Antwerp or Calais on foot. It has been suggested that he rested at intervals, as at Frankfort or Antwerp, and provided funds for his progress by his work, and a beautiful drawing of his in the Stadel Institute at Frankfort is attributed to this circumstance. At Antwerp he met Quentyn Matsys, who was a friend of Erasmus. On his arrival in London, Holbein was received by Sir Thomas More into his house at Chelsea. His name was familiar to the Chancellor, not only through the introduction of Erasmus, but also by his illustrations to the edition of the 'Utopia' published at Basle in 1518. Holbein worked with great industry at the production of portraits, beginning with those of his host's family and friends. There is at Windsor Castle a collection of eighty-seven of his portraits of this period, drawn on tinted paper with coloured chalks, most of which were engraved by Bartolozzi, and published by Chamberlaine in 1792-1800. These, both historically and as works of art, are full of interest. No eminent man of the period in England escaped his pencil; the portraits of the family of his unfortunate host, preserved only in an original sketch at Basle, and in copies of the finished picture, have an exceptional interest, as illustrating the painter's method. Holbein took back the original sketch with him to Basle, to Erasmus, on his return in 1528. This time, again, he left behind him a city infested with sickness, and political troubles, but found matters scarcely more flourishing at Basle, where the fanatical fury of the Iconoclasts had occurred and brought discredit on the Reformation, with which Holbein and Erasmus were in sympathy. Erasmus escaped to Freiburg, Holbein remained at Basle, and on the 29th of August 1528, bought himself a freehold house for 300 gulden; no doubt out of the earnings of his London campaign. His first work was to paint a picture of his wife and children—a pathetic record of the times—its comparison with an earlier sketch in the Louvre showing the change worked by trouble upon his wife, from a happy healthy girl, to the sorrow-stricken mother of children with premature care in their features. Holbein remained at Basle two years, during which the city suffered from scarcity and from war. Floods and severe winters added to the terrible political troubles of the time, and it was in the winter of 1529-30 that the wolves came into the town for the last time in history. Under these circumstances, it is obvious that art could not prosper, and Holbein, no doubt, was glad to return to London, which it is probable that he did in 1531. He took up his residence with German merchants of the Steelyard in Thames Street, and some of his best portraits are among those that he made at this time of this fraternity, who were for a period his only patrons. About 1536 Holbein was court painter to Henry VIII., and was in high favour with that monarch, one of his commissions being the portrait of the Duchess of Milan, whom Henry desired to marry on the death of Jane Seymour. In 1538, on the occasion of an embassy with which he was entrusted by the king, he visited his wife and children at Basle, but he refused very liberal offers made to him by the municipality to induce him to remain. In 1543 he painted his last known work—a portrait of himself—and died in London of a pestilence that prevailed in that year. The following is a list of his most important works:

HOLBEIN, SIGMUND, the younger brother of Hans Holbein the elder, is thought to have been born about 1465—1470. He probably was never married, or if married he had no family. He is mentioned in the Register of Taxes for the years 670

1505 and 1509, in which latter date he is supposed to have removed from Augsburg, and to have settled in Berne, where he acquired the right of citizenship, and purchased a house and other property. There is only one signed painting of Sigmund Holbein's known, and that is an early work on a gold ground, representing the 'Virgin and Child enthroned,' with a choir of angels above, two hovering angels crowning the Virgin, and a third holding a green drapery behind her, now in the Gallery at Nuremberg. Two other works ascribed to this artist are in the Vienna Gallery, small portraits on wood, one representing an old man, and the other a young one. In the National Gallery is a portrait of a Swiss lady with a large white cap. Among the drawings at Berlin is a head of Sigmund Holbein, by Hans Holbein the younger. His will, made in 1540, bequeathing all his property to his nephew "Hansen Holbeyn the painter," is still preserved among the records of Berne. It is most probable that he died soon after making his will.

HOLDER, JOHANN MICHAEL, a miniature painter, was born at Hildrizhausen (Herrenberg) in 1799, and pursued his art first in the Black Forest, and next in Stuttgart, after which he betook himself to Munich, where he commenced a course of practical studies with the object of rendering the oil pictures of the old masters in their full depth of tone by means of water-colours upon ivory. This effort he pursued for about twelve years in the Galleries of Munich, Dresden, Prague, and Paris, being chosen an honorary member of the Dresden Academy for his reproduction of the 'Tribute Money' of Titian (1834). He afterwards associated photography with miniature painting, and gave a description of his special method in the 'Deutsches Kunstblatt' for 1856. He died at Stuttgart in 1861.

HOLDERNESSE, —, was a portrait painter who flourished in the time of Charles I., but his works are now unknown.

HOLDING, HENRY JAMES, a landscape painter, the youngest of a family of artists, practised in oil and water-colours at Manchester, where he exhibited, and obtained a local reputation. He died of consumption in Paris in 1872, aged 39.

HOLE, HENRY, a wood engraver who studied under Bewick, assisted him in his 'British Birds.' He engraved for a few other works, but, having succeeded to a fortune, did not long practise.

HOLE, WILLIAM, an engraver of little note, flourished about the year 1613. He was chiefly employed by the booksellers, and has left the following prints executed with the graver:

PORTRAITS.

- Henry, Prince of Wales*, son of James I.; full-length. Thomas Egerton, Viscount Brackley, Lord Chancellor. Sir John Hayward, LL.D. Martin Billingsley, writing-master. Giovanni Florio, Italian master to Anne of Denmark. Michael Drayton, prefixed to his 'Works.' The Frontispiece to Drayton's 'Polyolbion'.

HOLFELD, DOMINIQUE HIPPOLYTE, a French painter, born in Paris in 1804, was a pupil of Hersent and Abel de Pujol. He entered the École des Beaux-Arts in 1822, and in 1832 gained the second 'prix de Rome' with his 'Theseus recognized by his Father,' which is now in the Museum of Valenciennes. He exhibited from 1831 to 1870, his pictures being chiefly portraits and sacred subjects. Many of them have been lithographed. He died in Paris in 1872.

HOLL, ELIAS, was, according to Professor Christ, an engraver at Nuremberg, about the year 1638; but his plates, after Cesare Reverdino and others, are usually marked with an H, surmounted by an F. The baptismal name is evidently wrong, and there is probably a confusion with the Elias Holl who was an architect at Augsburg a little before this date.

HOLL, FRANCIS, an engraver, born in London in 1815, was the fourth son of William Holl, a well-known engraver, from whom he received his entire training. Many of his earlier works were from the crayon drawings of George Richmond, and among these were portraits of Archbishop Sumner, Lords Cranworth and Radstock, Dean Hook, and Samuel Rogers. He engraved also many private plates of the Queen and other members of the Royal Family, of which only two—small plates of the Prince Consort and the Princess Alice—have ever been published. He worked chiefly in the mixed style, although several of his plates are in the line manner. For several years he took leading parts in the theatrical performances at the St. James's Theatre in aid of the Artists' Benevolent Fund. In 1883 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, but died just a year afterwards at Milford, near Godalming, in 1884, leaving a son, Frank Holl, who had already attained the full rank of a Royal Academician. The following are his most important works:

Coming of Age in the Olden Time; after W. P. Frith.
The Railway Station; after the same.
The Origin of the Stocking Loom; after A. Elmore.
Come along; after J. J. Jenkins.
The Heavens are telling the Glory of God; after Margaret Gillies.
The Past and the Future; two plates; after the same.
The Sisters at the Holy Well; after F. W. Topham.
The Spinning Wheel; after the same.
My Mother bids me bind my Hair; after James Fisher.
The Duet; after J. Sant.
Morning and Evening; two plates; after A. Solomon.
Elizabeth, Duchess of Argyll; after J. Swinton.
The Marchioness of Stafford; after E. U. Eddis.
Saturday Morning and Saturday Night; two plates; after J. Absolon.

HOLL, WILLIAM, the elder, an engraver, was born in 1771. He studied under Benjamin Smith, and was employed in engraving from the antique marbles in the British Museum. He died in London in 1838. He was the father of William and Francis Holl, the engravers.

HOLL, WILLIAM, the younger, an engraver, the son of William Holl the elder, was born at Plaistow, in Essex, in 1807. Having studied under his father, he engraved many plates, succeeding especially in the stipple manner. Among works partly illustrated by him were Lodge's 'Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain,' Knight's 'Gallery of Portraits,' the Bible published by Messrs. Blackie of Glasgow, and an edition of Moore's 'Poems.' In 1851 he finished a large plate, 'An English Merry-making,' after W. P. Frith, for the Art Union of London, which was followed by 'The Village Pastor,' and 'The Gleaner,' after the same artist; 'Rebekah,' after F. Goodall; and by many portraits after drawings by George Richmond. He died in London in 1871.

HOLLAND, J., an engraver, flourished about the year 1755, and etched the 'Head of a Turk,' with some other plates.

HOLLAND, JAMES, a landscape painter, was born at Burslem in 1800, and in his boyhood painted flowers on pottery in the manufactory of James Davenport. He came to London in 1819, and for some time supported himself by teaching and by painting flowers, exhibiting flower pieces at the Royal Academy from 1824. It was not till after a visit to Paris in 1831 that he devoted himself to landscape painting, and his works henceforth are a record, brilliant in colours, of his various tours on the continent. He visited Venice, Milan, Geneva, and Paris in 1835; in 1837 he went to Portugal, for the 'Landscape Annual'; in 1845 to Rotterdam; in 1850 to Normandy and North Wales; in 1851 to Geneva; and in 1857 a second time to Venice. Besides the Academy, his works appeared at the Society of Painters in Water-Colours from 1835 to 1843; at the Society of British Artists, of which he was a member, from 1843 to 1848; and afterwards again at the Water-Colour Society, of which he was elected an Associate in 1856, and a full member in 1858, and also at the British Institution. Holland died in London in 1870. Amongst his works are:

HOLLAND, JOHN, was an engraver, who worked in the latter part of the last century. He engraved portraits after Faithorne and others, and compiled a 'Catalogue of Engraved British Portraits,' published under the pseudonym of Henry Bromley, in 1793.

HOLLAND, Sir NATHANIEL DANCE, Bart., who was born in London in 1734, was a son of George Dance the architect, who built the Mansion House. Having shown an early inclination for painting, he was placed under the tuition of Francis Hayman, and remained with him some time. He afterwards went to Italy, where he prosecuted his studies during eight or nine years. On his return to England he distinguished himself as a painter of historical subjects and portraits, and painted landscapes also with considerable success. In 1761 he became a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, and exhibited with them in 1763 his 'Dido and Æneas.' In 1768 he was appointed one of the foundation members of the Royal Academy. While in Italy he persistently followed Angelica Kauffmann with matrimonial propositions, but being unsuccessful, he on his return married Mrs. Dummer, the widow of a Hampshire gentleman, with whom he acquired a large fortune. He thereupon renounced his profession, was elected member of parliament for East Grinstead, took the additional name of Holland, and in 1800 was made a baronet. He afterwards exhibited, as an amateur, landscapes which would have done honour to any artist of his day. Many of his portraits pass for the work of Sir Joshua Reynolds. He died suddenly at Winchester in 1811. Amongst his best works are his portrait of 'Garriick, in the character of King Richard III,' in the collection of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, which was engraved in mezzotint by John Dixon; 'Timon of Athens,' which has been finely engraved by John Hall; 'Virginia,' scraped in mezzotint by Johann Godfried Haid; and a portrait of 'Omai,' engraved by Bartolozzi.

HOLLAR, WENCESLAUS, a celebrated engraver, was born at Prague in 1607. He was of an ancient family, and was well educated by his parents, with the intention of bringing him up to the profession of the law; but not liking that pursuit, and the civil commotions of his country breaking out, by which his family was plundered of everything at the taking of Prague in 1619, he had recourse to his disposition for drawing, and having taken refuge at Frankfort, he became a pupil of Matthäus Merian. At the age of eighteen he published his two first plates—'The Virgin and Child,' and an 'Ecce Homo.' He travelled through Germany, sketching and engraving the views of the cities and countries through which he passed, and making drawings from the principal pictures which he saw. His views of Strassburg, Frankfort, Cologne, Mayence, and other places, were greatly admired. The Earl of Arundel, who was sent as ambassador to Ferdinand II. in 1636, met with him at Cologne, and recognizing his genius, took him at once into his employment, and upon his return to England from his embassy in 1637, he brought Hollar with him. He here engraved several plates from the pictures in the Arundelian Collection. In 1638, Mary de' Medici arrived in England, to visit her daughter Henrietta Maria, the queen of Charles I. Accounts of her journey through Holland and entry into this country were published in French in 1639, with portraits and plates, etched by Hollar and others. In the same year was published the portrait of his patron, the Earl of Arundel, on horseback. In the following year appeared his beautiful set of twenty-six plates, entitled, 'Ornatus Muliebris Anglicanus,' representing the different habiliments of English women, of all ranks, in full-length figures: and in 1642, 1643, and 1644 were published his other sets of women in the dresses of the different nations of Europe. His labours were now interrupted by the outbreak of the Civil War, in which he took part with the Royalists and was made prisoner at Basing House in 1645. On obtaining his liberty he went to Antwerp, whither the Earl of Arundel had withdrawn, and taken with him his valuable collection. Hollar resided at Antwerp some years, and continued to engrave from the pictures of his patron, but upon the death of the latter he was under the necessity of working for the printsellers of Antwerp, for very small remuneration. Not meeting with encouragement, he ventured to return to England in 1652, where, though he met with employment, the low prices he received for his works barely afforded him a subsistence. The restoration of Charles II. brought back several of his friends, but the plague, and the fire of London, put a stop to all pursuit of art, and Hollar was reduced to a state of indigence and distress, from which all his perseverance could never after release him. He was about this time sent with Lord Howard to Africa, in the capacity of his Majesty's draughtsman, to make drawings of the town of Tangier, with the fort and adjacent country. On his return he received only a hundred pounds for his labour and expenses. In 1672 he travelled to the north, and made drawings of Lincoln, Southwell, Newark, York Minster, &c. He died in London in 1677, reduced to such a state of penury, that when in his last illness the bailiffs entered his room to take possession, the bed upon which he lay was the only piece of furniture remaining. The prints of Hollar are stated to amount to 2733. Some of them are now extremely rare, and command very high prices. They are generally etched, and are executed with surprising lightness and spirit. His point is free, playful, and at the same time firm and finished. Some of his views of abbeys, churches, and ruins are admirably executed; as are likewise his animals, furs, shells, insects, and still-life. His portraits and landscapes have also great merit. He sometimes signed his plates with his name and the date, and at other times used one or other of the following ciphers, WH. or WZ. The following is a list of his principal works, but a more complete catalogue will be found in Parthey's 'Wenzel Hollar,' published at Berlin in 1853-58:

HOLLENBACH, ANNA MARGARETHE. See REINERMANN.

HOLLIER, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French miniature painter, was born at Chantilly, and was a pupil of David and of Isabey. He died in Paris in 1845.

HOLLINS, JOHN, a portrait and subject painter, was born at Birmingham in 1798. He first exhibited in 1818, and in 1822 came to London, where he afterwards practised, with the exception of a visit to Italy from 1825 to 1827. He contributed largely to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, and in 1842 was elected an Associate. His earlier subject works were taken chiefly from the poets and novelists, but in his later years he inclined to landscape and figure subjects. He died in London, unmarried, in 1855.

HOLLIS, GEORGE, a line-engraver, was born at Oxford in 1792. He studied under George Cooke, and was engaged on Hoare's 'Wiltshire,' Ormerod's 'Cheshire,' Warner's 'Glastonbury Abbey,' &c. He published a series of views of Chudleigh and of the Oxford Colleges, and also, in conjunction with his son Thomas, 'Monumental Effigies of Great Britain,' 1840-42. He died at Walworth in 1842.

HOLLIS, THOMAS, a draughtsman, was born in 1818. He studied under H. W. Pickersgill, and in the schools of the Royal Academy. He assisted his father, George Hollis, in the production of the 'Monumental Effigies of Great Britain,' and died at Walworth in 1843.

HOLLOWAY, THOMAS, a line-engraver, was born in London in 1748. After receiving a good scholastic education among the Dissenters, he was apprenticed to a seal engraver; and his attention was confined chiefly to sculpture on steel, which was then the prevalent fashion, and he executed some superior specimens, particularly a head of 'Ariadne,' which gained him general praise. When he had completed his pupillage, seals and medals were, in part, abandoned, and he employed himself, without the assistance of a master, in acquiring a knowledge of the various ways of engraving on stone and copper, as well as on steel. He also spent many of his leisure hours at the Royal Academy, drawing and modelling in wax from the antique. His first subjects, as a copper-plate engraver, were chiefly portraits and embellishments for the magazines; but the work which drew public attention to him was the English translation of Lavater's 'Essays on Physiognomy,' by Dr. Hunter, minister of the Scots' Church, London Wall, which appeared in 1789-98, in five volumes quarto, with about seven hundred plates. This was followed by many engravings for the publications of Boydell, Macklin, and Bowyer; and by several portraits of distinguished Dissenting ministers, and illustrations for editions of the British Classics. The work, however, on which his reputation chiefly rests, is the set of the Cartoons of Raphael, which occupied him for many years. As decorative prints they are esteemed for their elaborate execution; but artists prefer the rougher freedom of Dorigny. Holloway, after an industrious and blameless life, died at Coltishall, near Norwich, in 1827.

HOLM, CHRISTIAN FREDERIK CARL, a Danish painter and etcher, was born at Copenhagen in 1804. He was the son of a goldsmith, whose art he was at first designed to follow, but he attended the Academy and devoted himself first to engraving and then under Gebauer to painting. His first works were historical compositions, but he afterwards took to animal painting. In 1829 he was in Dresden, and between 1830 and 1844 he three times resided for a while in Munich, and in 1839 and 1844 visited Rome. He also travelled in Sweden and Norway. His death occurred at Tivoli in 1846. In addition to history and animals he painted battles and hunting scenes, which he also etched, as did his wife ROSALIE HOLM (née PETIT, who was born in 1807, and died in 1873). Among his best paintings are cited:

Gustavus Adolphus at Lützen.
Queen Philippa defending Copenhagen.
The Battle of Heide.
Daniel Rantzau making himself master of Tureby Bridge.
(Copenhagen Gallery.)
Roman Peasants in a Tavern.
Italian Landscape, with Cattle reposing.
Reindeer Hunt.
Bears and Reindeer.
Wolves in the Snow.

HOLMAN, FRANCIS, a marine painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1774 and 1784 several pictures of storms and naval actions.

HOLMES, JAMES, a miniature and water-colour painter, was born in 1777. He was a member of the Water-Colour Society, and exhibited there from 1813 to 1822, and from 1819 at the Royal Academy. In 1829 he took an active part in the foundation of the Society of British Artists, where he exhibited till 1850. He had a large practice, and was a great favourite with George IV. He died in 1860.

HOLMES, P., was an engraver, who lived in London at the end of the 17th century. He engraved the greater part of the plates for Quarles's 'Emblems,' published in 1696.

HOLST, —, was a native of Hamburg, who flourished about the year 1700. He painted historical pictures in the style of Poelenborch.

HOLST, THEODORE VON, was born in London in 1810, and was descended from a Livonian family. When a child he manifested much skill in drawing; and having studied from the antique in the British Museum, he was admitted a student of the Royal Academy. As a mere boy, he was looked on as a marvel; in his tenth year he attracted the notice of Sir Thomas Lawrence, who gave him three guineas for one of his pencil sketches. Subsequently, he executed many drawings for Sir Thomas, several of which were supposed to be commissioned by King George IV. As a painter he followed the bent of his own genius, which neither public direction, the offer of commissions, nor privations, could alter. He could not disengage his mind from romantic and gloomy subjects, and very few of his productions were altogether free from eccentricity. His peculiar style is essentially German in conception, composition, and execution, and consequently not suited to the general taste in England. He left a large number of drawings and sketches, and some unfinished pictures. His picture of the 'Raising of Jairus's Daughter' has been engraved. He died in London in 1844.

HOLSTEYN, CORNELIS, the son of Pieter Holsteyn the elder, was born at Haarlem about the year 1620. His father instructed him in the rudiments of design; and he is said to have painted historical pictures with skill. Among them were 'The Triumph of Bacchus;' 'Lycurgus,' in the Orphanage at Amsterdam; and 'Pyramus and Thisbe,' and 'The Parable of the Vineyard,' in the Haarlem Museum. He engraved some plates from his own designs, and some of the prints for the celebrated collection called the 'Cabinet de Reynst,' published at Amsterdam about the year 1663. He was living at Amsterdam in 1651, and was dean of the Painters' Guild at Delft in 1661-62. The following plates are by him:

Infant Bacchanals; a frieze, in six sheets.

A Lady seated in a chair, richly habited, supposed to be the portrait of Isabella d'Este, Marchioness of Mantua; after a picture ascribed by some to Correggio, by others to Giulio Romano.

A Bath-room. (Cassel Gallery.)

HOLSTEYN, PIETER, the elder, was born in Schleswig about 1580, but early in life he went to Haarlem, and resided there until his death in 1662. He was an able designer, engraver, and glass-painter, and was distinguished for his beautiful representations of birds. Among his engravings the following have been cited, though it appears that some confusion exists between the elder and younger artists of the name:

PORTRAITS.

Johann Saenredam, engraver. 1602.

Cardinal Fabio Chigi; afterwards Pope Alexander VII.

Claes Heynderick. 1622.

Jacob van der Burch; oval.

Johann Ernst Pictorius, Counsellor to the Elector of Saxony.

Johann Huydecooper, Burgomaster of Amsterdam.

Johann Reyner, Historiographer of the Peace of Münster. 1648.

Albert Vinkenbrinck, sculptor.

SUBJECTS.

Charity.

Bathsheba.

HOLSTEYN, PIETER, the younger, a Dutch glass painter and engraver, was born probably at Haarlem in the early part of the 17th century, and was a son and pupil of Pieter Holsteyn the elder. He lived for some time at Zwolle, and then removed to Haarlem, where he died in 1687. He engraved a variety of portraits; the best of which is that of J. de La Chambre (1666). He also produced those of three of the plenipotentiaries at the congress at Münster.

HOLTZAPFFEL, JULES, a French painter, born at Strassburg in 1826, was a pupil of Cogniet, and exhibited from 1852 to 1865. He committed suicide in Paris in 1866.

HOLWORTHY, JAMES, a landscape painter in water-colours, was in 1804 one of the original members of the Water-Colour Society, at which he exhibited till 1813. He also occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy; but in 1824 he married a niece of Wright of Derby, and retired from the profession. He died in London in 1841. There are the following water-colour drawings by him in the South Kensington Museum:

Part of Raglan Castle.
Trees and Cattle.

HOLZER, JOHANN EVANGELIST, a German painter and engraver, the son of a miller, was born at Burgeis, in the Tyrol, in 1709. He studied first at Meran under Niklaus Auer, and afterwards worked at Augsburg under J. G. Bergmüller. He executed several oil and fresco works for the public places at Augsburg, among which are an 'Ecce Homo' and a 'Peasant's Wedding Party dancing at the Public-House,' the former of which procured him the citizenship of Augsburg. In 1740 he painted in Bonn the portrait of the Elector Clement, which being executed upon a panel, and cut close round the outline, was placed erect in the elector's apartment, and deceived many for that personage himself. He died in the same year while engaged in decorating with frescoes the elector's summer palace at Clemenswerth. Some of his pictures have been engraved by J. J. Nilson. There are some spirited etchings by him from his own designs, and after other masters; among them the following:

The Adoration of the Shepherds; after his own design.
The Ecce Homo; after the same.
The Virgin, with a Glory of Angels; after the same.
The Four Seasons; after Bergmüller.
The Adoration of the Magi; after the same.

HOLZER, JOSEPH, an Austrian landscape painter, was born at Vienna in 1824, and entered the Academy in 1840. He first studied in the school of engraving under Klieber, but afterwards joined the landscape school, and was a pupil successively of Ender and of Steinfeld. In 1846 he travelled in Germany, Belgium, and Switzerland, and in 1856 went to Munich, where he remained three years. But after all his teaching he adopted a style entirely his own, and produced landscapes true to nature and full of poetic feeling. He was a member of the Academies of Vienna and Venice. His death occurred at Vienna in 1876. Among his best landscapes are:

The quiet Nook in the Woods. (Emperor of Austria.)
Stag Hunt.
In the Vienna Forest.
View in Ramsau.
In the Beechwood.
View in the Little Carpathians.

HOLZHALB, JOHANN RUDOLPH, a Swiss engraver, was born at Zurich about the year 1730. He was principally employed in engraving portraits for the publications of his time, and executed several plates for Füssli's 'Lives of the Swiss Painters,' and Lavater's 'Physiognomy.'

HOLZMANN, JOHANN. See HULSMAN.

HOLZMANN, KARL FRIEDRICH, a Saxon painter and engraver, was born at Dresden in 1740. His father, who was a consulting stone-mason, wished him to follow the building line, but after his death the son took first to sculpture, and then under Dietrich to painting. He zealously followed portraiture, chiefly in profile and in water-colours. In the Bavarian war of succession in 1778-9 he painted most of the staff officers who visited Dresden, and altogether he executed more than 2000 portraits. He also practised etching in the style of Ugo da Carpi and Zanetti, and in that of Arthur Pond. His best work is entitled 'Reproductions in Chiaroscuro from the Designs of various Masters,' but he afterwards destroyed the plates, and reproduced them in aquatint. He died at Dresden in 1811.

HOME, ROBERT, a subject and portrait painter, was born in London about the middle of the 18th century. He was a pupil of Angelica Kauffmann, and also studied at Rome. He practised for some time in Dublin and London, and about 1790 went to India. There he remained several years, becoming portrait and historical painter to the King of Oudh, and amassing a considerable fortune. He died about 1836. There is a picture by him at Hampton Court representing 'The King of Oudh receiving Tribute.'

HON, HENRI, a Flemish painter, was born at Ley Pommereul in 1809. He painted principally sea-pieces, but is better known by his treatises on astronomy, geology, etc. He died in 1872.

HOND, ABRAHAM, (or HONDUS,) a Dutch painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1638. He came to England in early life, and after leading a dissipated career, died in London in 1695. His favourite subjects were huntings and animals. He painted also conflagrations; but his chief excellence was in the representation of dogs, in which few artists have surpassed him. The chief of his works are:

Avignon.	Museum.	A Wounded Heron pursued by Dogs.
Dresden.	Gallery.	A Cavalry Engagement.
Florence.	Uffizi.	Setting out for the Chase.
Glasgow.	Gallery.	Swan attacked by Dogs.
New York.	Museum.	Wild Boar Hunt.
Petersburg.	Hermitage.	Four Hunting Scenes.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	A Wild Boar defending itself against Dogs.
		A Bear attacked by Dogs.
Vienna.	Gsell and Artaria Collections.	Paintings of Dogs.

There are a few etchings by Abraham Hond, executed with uncommon fire and animation; they are highly esteemed, and are now become scarce. Among others there are:

A Boar-hunt; very fine.
A set of Huntings of various animals.

HOND, HENDRIK, (or HONDUS,) the elder, a Dutch engraver, was born at Duffel, in Brabant, in 1573, and is said to have been a pupil of Jan Wierix, and of Jan Vredeman De Vries. He was still living at the Hague in 1662. He engraved a great number of portraits, chiefly of the principal Reformers, and a collection of 149 artists, mostly Flemish; also several landscapes, and other subjects, after Dürer, Holbein, Zuccaro, Brueghel, &c. His plates are usually marked with this cipher, Th. but many have the name Hond, as for instance a portrait of Henry IV. of France (1630). The following engravings are by him:

PORTRAITS OF REFORMERS.

John Wiclif.
Philipp Melanchthon.
Johann Bugenhagen. 1599.
John Knox.
Jean Calvin.
Geronimo Savonarola.

PORTRAITS OF PAINTERS AND ENGRAVERS.

 St. John preaching in the Wilderness; after the same.
 A View of the Hague; after the same.

HOND, HENDRIK, (or HONDIUS,) the younger, the son of Jodocus Hond, was born in London about the year 1588. He was instructed by his father, and completed some of the plates which the latter left unfinished at his death. Hendrik Hond died about 1658. A print of 'The Funeral Procession of Charles V.' is attributed to him, though there is some difference of opinion as to the works which belong respectively to this artist and to the elder painter of the same name, and there are a considerable number of portraits by him which bear a mark very similar to that of the elder Hendrik Hond. The following are among them:

Queen Elizabeth.
 James I.
 Charles I.
 John Bale, Bishop of Ossory.
 Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury.
 Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury.
 William, Prince of Orange.
 Mary, Princess of Orange.
 Sir Richard Spencer, Ambassador.
 Sir Ralph Winwood, Secretary of State.

HOND, JODOCUS, or JOSSE, (or HONDIUS,) was a Flemish engraver, born at Wacquen in 1563. The troubles in the Low Countries obliged him to leave his home when he was twenty years of age, and he came to England in 1583, where he engaged in various arts, such as making mathematical instruments and printing-type, and engraving maps, charts, &c., as well as some portraits. He married in London in 1586, and afterwards went to Amsterdam, where he produced four maps for Sir Francis Drake's West Indian Voyage, which were first published at Leyden in 1588. He died at Amsterdam in 1611. It is recorded of him that at eight years of age he painted on ivory, and engraved on metal from his own designs. He sometimes marked his plates with the cipher , and sometimes added a dog or hound barking, in allusion to his name, with the motto 'Sub cane vigilante.' There are by him the following engravings:

Queen Elizabeth.
 Henry IV. of France.
 Sir Francis Drake, with two hemispheres.
 Thomas Cavendish, the famous navigator.
 Several Maps for Speed's 'Collection'; with some figures.
 Some Plates for the 'Atlas Major' of G. Mercator, with his portrait.

HOND, WILLEM, (or HONDIUS,) a Dutch engraver, the son of Hendrik Hond the elder, was born at the Hague in 1600, and afterwards removed to Dantzic, where he was made court painter by Ladislaus IV. of Poland. He afterwards returned to his own country, where he died in 1652. He engraved some of the celebrated portraits of artists from the drawings of Van Dyck. He sometimes marked his plates with the cipher , but more frequently signed them with his name. The following portraits are by him:

Ladislaus IV., King of Poland. 1637.
 Louisa Maria, Queen of Poland; after J. van Egmont.
 John Casimir, King of Poland; after Schulze.
 Charles, Prince of Poland, Bishop of Breslau; after the same.
 Prince Maurice of Austria. 1613.
 Bernard, Duke of Saxe-Weimar.
 Theodorus van Weerdenburg.
 Hendrik Cornelis Longkuis; after J. Mytens.
 Frans Francken, the younger, painter; after Van Dyck.
 His own Portrait; after the same.

HONE, CAMILLUS, a portrait painter, was the younger son of Nathaniel Hone. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1777 to 1780, and then practised for some years in the West Indies, but after his return he held a Government appointment in Dublin. He died in 1837.

HONE, HORACE, a miniature painter, the son of Nathaniel Hone, was born about 1755. He practised in water-colours, oils, and enamel, but his miniatures are his best works. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1772, and in 1779 was elected an Associate. For about ten years from 1791, he practised at Dublin, but with this exception he followed his profession in London, where he had a large and fashionable practice. In 1795 he was appointed miniature painter to the Prince of Wales. He died in London in 1825.

HONE, NATHANIEL, was born in Dublin in 1718. He was entirely self-taught, but he nevertheless attained a solid reputation for painting in oil, as well as in miniature and in enamel. He painted also some subjects of caricature; one of which representing 'Two Monks making merry' he engraved in mezzotint. Hone was one of the foundation members of the Royal Academy in 1768, but a picture of his called 'The Conjuror' was in 1775 refused admission by that body from its suspected reflection upon Sir Joshua Reynolds as a plagiarist; as was another that appeared to be an attack upon Angelica Kauffmann. He consequently in that year got up an exhibition of 70 paintings of his own, though he afterwards exhibited again at the Academy, and continued to do so constantly up to the time of his death, which occurred in London in 1784. Some interesting notes from his diaries for the years 1752 and 1753 were printed in the 'Antiquary' for June, 1884.

HONTHORST, GERARD VAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Utrecht in 1590. He studied under Abraham Bloemaert, but when he was about twenty, he went to Italy and settled in Rome, where he acquired with perfect success the style of Caravaggio. His pictures met with great favour at Rome, where he gained the name of 'Gerardo dalle Notti,' from the circumstance of his painting principally night pieces. He also executed several religious works, and decorated with frescoes the church of Santa Maria della Scala. On his return to Utrecht, he was elected dean of the Guild of St. Luke in 1623, and he opened a school which was largely attended, among his scholars being, according to Walpole, the Queen of Bohemia and her children. He soon gained such a reputation as to attract the notice of Charles I., who invited him to England, where he was employed in 1628 in painting the palace of Whitehall with allegorical pictures. While in this country he painted also several portraits. On his return to Holland, he decorated the palace of the Hague, the House in the Wood, and Ryswick. For the King of Denmark also he painted a series of pictures illustrating Danish history. In his latter years he devoted himself entirely to portrait painting. He died at Utrecht in 1656. His facility gave rise to an extraordinary number of works in every department, among which the following are the principal:

HONTHORST, WILLEM VAN, the brother of Gerard van Honthorst, was born at Utrecht in 1604, and was also educated under Abraham Bloemaert. He accompanied the Princess Louisa Henrietta of Orange, wife of the Great Elector, to Berlin in 1650, where he laboured till 1664, when he returned to Holland. Although he occasionally painted historical pictures in the style of his brother, he is better known as a portrait painter. There are in the Berlin Gallery portraits of William II., Prince of Orange, and his consort, the Princess Mary, daughter of Charles I. of England. He died at Utrecht in 1666.

HONUFRIIS, CRESCENTIUS DE. See ONOFRIO.

HOOCH, PIETER DE. See DE HOOCH.

HOOD, JOHN, a marine painter, was a shipwright, who lived at Limehouse in the 18th century, and practised in water-colours. Houston engraved after him a naval engagement.

HOOD, THOMAS, the well-known poet and humourist, was born in London in 1799. He studied engraving under Le Keux, but his fame rests on his literary works. He, however, was also a comic draughtsman, and produced the illustrations for his 'Whims and Oddities,' 'Hood's Magazine,' 'Comic Annual,' &c. He died in London in 1855, and was buried at Kensal Green.

HOOFT, NICOLAAS, was born at the Hague in 1664. His parents were in easy circumstances, and encouraged his disposition for art by procuring him the best means of improvement. He was first placed under the tuition of Daniel Mytens, and afterwards studied under Augustinus Terwesten. He painted historical subjects and portraits with considerable success, and was for some years director of the Academy at the Hague. He died in 1748.

HOOGERHEYDEN, ENGEL, a native of Middelburg, was born in 1739. He was originally a sailor, but owing to an accident he took to art, and became a marine painter. He died at Middelburg in 1809.

HOOGERS, HENDRIK, a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Nymwegen in 1747. He was a dealer in leather, and practised art by way of recreation merely, yet with such success that the Society 'Felix Meritis' at Amsterdam awarded him in 1801 their first gold medal for a 'Dutch landscape on a Summer Morning.' He died at his birthplace in 1814.

HOOGHE, ROMEYN DE. See DE HOOGHE.

HOOGHSTOEL, JEAN MARIE, was born in Paris in 1765. He was a pupil of David, but spent most of his time in restoring pictures.

HOOGSTAD, GERARD VAN, (or HOOSTADT), a Flemish painter, was born at Brussels in 1625. Little more is known about him, but there are several of his works in the churches at Brussels, particularly some pictures of the 'Passion of Christ,' in the collegiate church of St. Gudule.

HOOGSTRAATEN, ABRAHAM VAN, a portrait painter, born at the Hague, was a pupil of Daniel Haringhs, whose style he followed. He died at the Hague in 1736.

HOOGSTRAETEN, DIRK VAN, was born at Antwerp in 1596. He was taught drawing, with the view to his becoming a goldsmith, but his inclination leading him to painting, he studied the works of the best Flemish masters, and became a successful historical painter, without the aid of any instructor. He lived some time at the Hague, but died at Dordrecht in 1640.

HOOGSTRAETEN, JAN VAN, the younger brother of Samuel van Hoogstraeten, was born at Dordrecht in 1629. He painted historical subjects and portraits, and a genre picture by him, which represents 'Two Women, one with a jug and the other with a pipe,' is in the Vienna Gallery. He was received into the Painter's Guild at Dordrecht in 1649, and was employed for some years by the Emperor of Austria, in whose service he died, at Vienna, in 1654.

HOOGSTRAETEN, SAMUEL VAN, the son of Dirk van Hoogstraeten, was born at the Hague in 1627, and received the first part of his education under his father, but afterwards went to Amsterdam, where he entered the school of Rembrandt. He was a Mennonite, from which sect he was expelled in 1656, for marrying without leave, and wearing a sword. He first applied himself to portrait painting, and finding the dark though vigorous style he had acquired under Rembrandt did not please the generality of his sitters, he adopted one more clear and agreeable, and met with great encouragement in that branch at the Hague and at Dordrecht. Later on he painted landscapes, flowers, fruit, and subjects of still-life, in the style of Pieter De Hooch. In 1651 he visited Vienna and Rome, and about 1663 came to London, where he found numerous admirers. He was a good poet, and, moreover, wrote an excellent work upon painting, entitled 'Introduction to the High School of Art.' He returned to Dordrecht, where he opened a school, and was afterwards made director of the Dutch Mint. He died at Dordrecht in 1678. Some of his finest paintings are:

Amsterdam. Van der Hoop } The Sick Girl.

Museum.

Hague.

678

Gallery. Lady walking in a Court.

Vienna.

Gallery. The old Jew.

"

Inner Court of a Fortress.

He engraved several plates, amongst which were his own portrait, and that of John of Leyden, after Rembrandt; and also six plates to his own poem of 'Schoone Rozelijn.'

HOOGZAAT, JAN, was born at Amsterdam in 1664, and was educated in the school of Gerard de Lairesse, who regarded him as one of his ablest disciples. By the recommendation of his master he was employed to paint the ceiling of the Burghers' Hall in the council-house at Amsterdam, and he chose for the purpose an allegorical subject. He was afterwards employed by William III. to paint several pictures for the palace at Loo. He died at Amsterdam in 1712.

HOOP, DOUWE DE, a native of Workum in Friesland, was an historical and still-life painter. He was born in 1800, and died at Amsterdam in 1830.

HOOPER, S., was a draughtsman, who flourished in the 18th century, and made many of the drawings for Gough's 'Monumental Antiquities.'

HOORN, GERARD VAN, (or HOORNE), a famous painter on glass of the 16th century, was a native of Friesland, but he worked principally at Florence.

HOY, DE. See DE HOEY.

HOPFER, DANIEL, a German engraver, was the son of a painter, and he is stated to have removed about the year 1495 from Kaufbeuren to Augsburg, where he was working in 1531. There are by him a number of spirited etchings, but he chiefly excelled in ornamental buildings and decorations. Daniel Hopfer was the eldest of three brothers, who worked in the same manner, but he was the ablest and the most industrious of the three. They marked their plates with the initials of their names, and between the two letters they introduced a hop-plant, in allusion to their name, 'Hopfen' being the German for the hop. The Abbé Des Marolles mistook it for a candlestick, and called them the 'Masters of the Candlestick.' The mark of Daniel Hopfer is annexed. The following are his principal prints:

David cutting off the head of Goliath.
David playing on the Harp before Saul. 1531.
The Woman taken in Adultery.
The Last Judgment.
The Presentation in the Temple.
The Holy Family, with St. Elizabeth and St. John.
Christ curing the Blind Man.
The Crucifixion of Christ between the Two Thieves.
Another Crucifixion, with the Virgin and St. John.
St. Christopher.
The Representation of an Altar. 1527.
A large Altar, with the Virgin, Christ, and St. John.
Venus, with Cupid playing on a Mandolin.
A Combat of Marine Monsters; copied from Andrea Mantegna.
Five Swiss Soldiers.
Several Village Festivals.
Grotesque Figures dancing; of various sizes.
The Fountains, ornamented with figures.
Military Ornaments, with grotesque figures.

PORTRAITS.

Martin Luther. 1523.
Claus Sturzenbecher.
Charles, King of Spain; a medallion.

The Nuremberg art-dealer, David Franck, published 230 plates engraved by the three brothers Hopfer, under the title 'Opera Hopferiana.' Several are after Mantegna, and others are mythological; among the latter is one representing 'Fauns and Satyrs keeping a Vintage.'

HOPFER, HIERONYMUS, the younger brother of Daniel Hopper, flourished from 1520 to perhaps 1535. His plates are etched in the manner of his brother, but they are inferior to the works of the latter. He copied several of the prints of Albrecht Dürer, though not very successfully; but some of his plates from his own designs possess considerable merit. He marked his prints with the initials I. H. on a tablet, with the same plant between the letters as was used by his brother. The following are by him:

PORTRAITS.

Franz von Sickingen, with a German inscription.
Wolfgang Juriger.
Pope Julius II.; a bust.
Pope Innocent VIII.; the same.
The Emperors Charles V. and Ferdinand I.; on one plate.
Leopold Dick, jurist.
Erasmus Roterodamus.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

Samson slaying the Lion.
The Virgin suckling the Infant Jesus.
St. Hubert; copied from Albrecht Dürer.
St. Jerome; from the same; rather smaller than the original.
St. George standing upon the Dragon; from his own design.
An Emblematical Print, representing several naked figures, with Diana in the front, holding a moon in her right hand, and a flambeau in her left; from the same.
Hercules strangling Antæus; after Mantegna.
Roma. Pallas seated, holding the figure of Victory.
The English and French Armies before the Battle of Agincourt.
A Roman Battle; after Giulio Romano.
The great Cannon; after Albrecht Dürer.

HOPFER, JOHANN BERNHARD GOTTFRIED, a German painter and designer, was born at Redensee in Franconia in 1716, and studied under his father and under Johann C. Sperling. In 1754 he went to Berlin, and was appointed Prussian heraldic painter, painter of the Johannite Order, and draughtsman to the Academy of Science. He drew physical, anatomical, and mathematical subjects with great exactness. His death occurred at Berlin in 1789.

HOPFER, LAMBERT, was a younger brother of Daniel and Jeronymus Hopper, to whom he was inferior in every respect. He etched several plates from the woodcuts of Albrecht Dürer, and various subjects from his own designs. His prints are marked with the initials L. H. on a tablet, and sometimes with the hop-plant. The following are by him:

The Fall of Adam and Eve.
A set of fifteen small plates of the Life and Passion of Christ; copied from the woodcuts of Albrecht Dürer.
Christ praying in the Garden; with an arabesque border.
A Triton on a Sea-horse, and Cupid on a Dolphin; from the same.
The Conversion of St. Paul.
Three circular subjects, on the same plate; a Man caressing a Woman, Paris dying on Mount Ida, St. Jerome praying.
An arabesque ornament, with four candelabra; esteemed his best print.

HOPFER, WOLFGANG LUDWIG, a painter of Nuremberg, was born in 1648, and studied first under Georg Strauch, and then at Vienna under Johann Spielberger. He next proceeded to Italy, where he remained nine years. He painted battlefields in the style of J. P. Lembke, and became court painter to the Elector Palatine. He died in 1698.

HOPLEY, EDWARD WILLIAM JOHN, a subject painter, was born in 1816. He was originally intended for the medical profession, but turned his attention to art and practised first at Lewes and then in London. His works were exhibited at the Royal Academy and at the British Institution. He died in London in 1869. Amongst the works which he exhibited were:

Psyche. 1851.
A little Bit of Scandal. 1853.
Sappho. 1860.
The Spanish Coquette. 1863.
The Race for the Apple.
A Primrose from England. (Australian Scene.)
Puck and the Moth.
A Daughter of Eve.
Portrait of Professor Owen. 1869.

HOPPNER, JOHN, a portrait painter, was born at Whitechapel of German parentage in 1758, and was a choir-boy in one of the royal chapels. In 1775 he entered the Royal Academy as a student, and obtained a medal for his scene from 'King Lear.' In 1793 he became an Associate, and in 1795 was elected an Academician. His style of portrait painting appears to have been founded on a study of the works of Sir Joshua Reynolds; but he was very far from being a copyist. Occasionally, indeed, he imitated his manner, and formed his pictures on similar principles, but he atoned for the plagiarism by his original graces. The prevailing fashion of the day, together with his own narrow circumstances in early life, led him to direct his attention almost exclusively to portrait painting; but he would have been still more successful in landscape, as the backgrounds introduced in his portraits afford alone sufficient evidence, without considering the beautiful sketches in chalk, with which he was accustomed to employ his leisure hours. At Hampton Court are a picture entitled 'The Comic Muse,' and a full-length portrait of Mrs. Jordan, the actress; in the National Gallery is a portrait of Jane Elizabeth, Countess of Oxford; in the National Portrait Gallery are those of Henry, third Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Grenville, William Pitt, and William Smith, the actor; and in the South Kensington Museum is a portrait of Miss Mary Linwood. In his portraits of children he was peculiarly happy, and scarcely less so with those of ladies, but in those of men he was too constrained. He died in London in 1810.

HOPPNER, LASCELLES H., a portrait and subject painter, was the son of John Hoppner. He studied in the Royal Academy, where he was awarded the gold medal in 1807 for his 'Judgment of Solomon,' and where he exhibited from 1811 to 1815. Two of his works are at Holland House, Kensington.

HOPWOOD, JAMES, the elder, an engraver, was born at Beverley about 1752. He was self-taught, and it was not till about 1797 that he was able to come to London, where he worked with James Heath. In his later years he was secretary to the Artists' Fund. He died in 1819.

HOPWOOD, JAMES, the younger, an engraver, the son and pupil of James Hopwood the elder, was born in 1795. He published a series of portraits in Paris.

HÖRBERG, PER, was born at the Grange of Öfra On, in Småland, Sweden, in 1746. His parents were so poor that he was obliged to return to the work of a shepherd, after he had in his fourteenth year been apprenticed to a painter; but at length he succeeded in attending the studios at Gothenburg and other towns, and in 1784 the Academy at Stockholm. In 1797, after twice gaining the prize, he was made a member of the Academy, and court painter, and King Charles XIV. awarded him a pension. He painted both sacred and profane subjects. Among the former, of which eighty-seven specimens are known, may be named a large altar-piece of the 'Ascension' in the church of Östra Husby. Of the latter more than 600 are known, beside fresco paintings. He died at Falla in 1816. He was also a talented musician, and invented a new description of violin.

HORČICKA, FRANZ, a Bohemian historical and portrait painter, was born in 1776, and became director of the Gallery of Count Colloredo Mannsfeld. He died at Prague in 1856.

HOREBOUT, GERARD, is supposed to have been born at Ghent about 1480. He is believed to have been a pupil of Van der Meer. In 1510 he received a certain sum from the town of Ghent for a map of the city with its environs. From 1516 to 1521 he was working for the Princess Margaret of Austria, but his principal patron was Lievin Huguenois, Abbot of St. Bavon, for whom he executed, according to Van Mander, two pictures, 'A Scourging,' and 'A Descent from the Cross.' He left his own country to come to England, where he was appointed painter to Henry VIII., and died in London in 1540.

HOREBOUT, LUCAS, the son of Gerard Horebout, was an historical, portrait, and miniature painter. He accompanied his father to England, but seems to have died in 1544, very shortly after his father.

HOREBOUT, SUZANNE, the daughter of Gerard Horebout, was born in 1503. She also accompanied her father to England, where she became distinguished for her portraits. She married John Parker, a king's archer, and died at Worcester in 1545.

HOREMANS, JAN JOZEF, the elder, a Flemish painter of conversation pieces, masquerades, peasant gatherings, &c., was born at Antwerp in 1682. He studied at first under the sculptor, Michiel van der Voort, but from about 1694 to 1700 under Jan van Pee. He became in 1706 a master of the Guild of St. Luke. One of his best works, representing a 'Woman with two Children,' is in the Brunswick Gallery; others are at Antwerp, Cassel, Christiania, Darmstadt, and Dresden. He died at Antwerp in 1759.

HOREMANS, JAN JOZEF, the younger, the eldest son of Jan Jozef Horemans the elder, was born at Antwerp in 1714. The subjects he painted are similar to those of his father, but they are from the higher grades of society. His pictures, which have, occasionally, a slight analogy to those of Hogarth, are not uncommon in England. He entered the corporation of St. Luke in 1767, and was still living in 1790.

HOREMANS, PIETER JACOB, brother of Jan Jozef Horemans the elder, was born at Antwerp in 1700, and went to Munich in 1725. Two years later he was appointed court painter to the Elector Charles Albert, afterwards the Emperor Charles VII., and painted court festivals, portraits of persons of rank, conversation pieces, and fruit. He died at Munich in 1776. Some of his works are at Augsburg and Christiania.

HORION, ALEXANDRE DE, a portrait painter, was born at Liège about 1591. He followed the practice of ornamenting his portraits with beautiful accessories, and this, it is said, was the cause of the fashionable patronage he enjoyed. He painted also some sacred subjects for churches at Liège, and the convent of St. Clara. He died in 1659.

HÖRLING, JOHAN FREDRIK, a Swedish portrait and historical painter, was born at Stockholm in 1718, and died there in 1786. In the later years of his life he was much in Italy.

HÖRMANN, JOSEPH IGNAZ, a German landscape painter and engraver, was born at Obergünzburg in Bavaria about 1775, and died at Augsburg in 1820. He painted views in his own neighbourhood, and also wild flowers. He was a teacher of drawing and possessed a talent for caricature.

HORNEMAN, CHRISTIAN, a Danish miniature painter, was born at Copenhagen in 1765, and in 1782 entered the Academy of that city. From 1787 to 1803 he was travelling in Germany and Italy, and on returning home was appointed in 1804 court miniaturist, and in the following year admitted a member of the Academy. He died at Copenhagen in 1844. He also produced pastel portraits of the singer Gerstäcker, Prince Christian, and Thorvaldsen, and miniatures of Juel and Professors Wendt and Kuhlau.

HORNES, JACOB VAN, a Flemish historical painter, born at Mechlin in 1618 or 1620, was a pupil of Beerings. He was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1643, and was dean in 1669-70. In 1665 he painted a fresco representing 'The Holy Sacrament surrounded by Angels,' for the church of St. John at Mechlin.

HORNING, HANS (or HORNUNG). See HÜRNING.

HORNUNG, JOSEPH, a Swiss historical painter, was born at Geneva in 1792. He was first put to wood-engraving, and then to the making of watch-cases; but his love for painting prompted him to obtain instruction from an artist of the French classical school. Under this master he made good progress in drawing, but his romantic tastes did not harmonize with the narrow views of that school, and he consequently took an independent course. He next tried landscape painting, but with little success; and then, on the advice of Töpffer, had recourse to genre subjects. He produced a series of pictures of Savoyard popular life which gained him repute both in his own country and in France. Soon, however, he returned to the historical branch, and from 1835 onwards painted a long succession of pictures bearing upon the Reformation and other events of the 16th century. He died at Geneva in 1870. The following are among his works:

Savoyards feasting.
The jovial Cobbler.
The little Chimney-sweep.
Calvin working at the Geneva Fortifications.
Farel's last Visit to Calvin.
Calvin's last Moments. 1835. (Geneva Gallery.)
Servetus led to Execution.
Froment preaching upon the Molard.
Beza reading the Bible before Jeanne d'Albret.
Catharine de' Medici receiving the Head of Coligny.
The Morning after the Eve of St. Bartholomew.
Luther at the Diet of Worms.

HORNY, FRANZ, a landscape painter, was born at Weimar in 1797. He went to Rome in 1817, after having stayed one year at Munich, and Baron Rumohr took him with him to Olevano, where he died in 1819. His paintings of the environs of Rome, of the mountains of the Sabines and of Olevano, are excellent for beauty and precision of outline. He also showed great talent for the painting of ornaments and arabesques.

HORSBURGH, JOHN, a Scottish line engraver, was born at Preston Pans in 1791. He studied drawing at the Trustees' Academy in Edinburgh, and was afterwards apprenticed to Robert Scott, the landscape engraver. Among his best works are a portrait of Mackay the actor, as 'Baillie Nichol Jarvie,' after Sir William Allan; two portraits of Sir Walter Scott, one by Sir Henry Raeburn and the other by Sir Thomas Lawrence (the latter of which was published in the 'Art Journal' for 1858); 'Prince Charles reading a Despatch,' after Simson; and a portrait of Burns, after Taylor, engraved for the Royal Scottish Association. He engraved also several fine plates after Turner, including the vignettes to the illustrated edition of Sir Walter Scott's works. He executed a number of other plates for book illustrations up to 1854, and died at Edinburgh in 1869.

HORSCHOLT, THEODOR, a Bavarian painter of battle scenes and animal life, was born at Munich in 1829. He studied for a year and a half at the Academy of his birthplace, under Anschütz, and then established himself independently, though he continued to attend the atelier of Albrecht Adam to improve himself in horse painting, and also had the advantage of Kaulbach's instruction. He was himself a hunter, and his first pictures were hunting pieces from the Bavarian mountains, such as 'Game Shooting' (1850), and the illustrations to Boner's 'Chamois Hunting.' In 1852 he went to Stuttgart to prepare studies of horses from the royal stables. In the following year he travelled in Spain and Algeria with the famous novelist Hackländer and the architect Leins, and upon his return painted 'The Halt before Algiers' and 'A Caravan in the Desert.' In 1858 he joined the army in the Caucasus, and after five years' military life he returned to Munich, and painted his large picture of 'Schamyl as prisoner before Prince Alexander Bariatinski,' and the 'Storming of Schanze on Mount Gunib.' He also produced many pen-and-ink sketches of scenes in the Caucasus, which have been admired fully as much as his paintings, and have been reproduced by photography. In 1867 he took a first prize in Paris, and he was a member of the Academies of St. Petersburg, Munich, and Vienna. He died at Munich in 1871.

HORSUBOIS, NICOLAS, was a French painter, who gained the first 'prix de Rome' in 1701, with the 'Exposing of Moses.' Several of his pictures are at Fontainebleau.

HORSFORD, A. J., an American subject painter, was born towards the middle of the 19th century. He exhibited 'Lady Teazle' at the Royal Academy in London in 1859. He died at New York in 1877.

HORST, G., is a name found on two works in the Berlin Gallery, 'The Blessing of Jacob,' and 'The Continence of Scipio'; from which it appears that Horst was a pupil or imitator of Rembrandt. His colouring, however, is wanting in clearness. He flourished from about 1640 to 1650.

HORST, NICOLAAS VAN DER. See VAN DER HORST.

HORSTOK, JOHANNES PETRUS, was born at Overveen, near Haarlem, in 1745. He was a pupil of Jelgersma and P. Barbiere the elder. He painted portraits, interiors, and historical subjects. He resided chiefly at Alkmaar and Haarlem, at which latter place he died in 1825.

HORTEMELS, FRÉDÉRIC, a French engraver, was born in Paris about the year 1688. Some of his plates are almost entirely executed with the graver, and have very little etching; but his best prints are those in which he has united equally the point with the burin. These have an unusually mellow effect, and possess considerable merit. His best plates were engraved for the Crozat Collection. Among others, the following are by him:

Portrait of Philip, Duke of Orleans; after Santerre.

PLATES FOR THE CROZAT COLLECTION.

Christ bearing His Cross; after Giorgione.

The Wise Men's Offering; after Paolo Veronese.

The Marriage of St. Catharine; after the same.

The Virgin in Meditation; after Domenico Feti.

The Birth of St. John the Baptist; after Tintoretto.

The Death of Abel; after A. Sacchi.

Christ and the Woman of Samaria; after B. Garofalo.

The Descent of the Holy Ghost; after Gaudenzio Ferrari.

His daughter, LOUISE MADELEINE HORTEMELS, who also was an engraver, became the wife of Charles Nicholas Cochin.

HOSEMANN, THEODOR, a German genre painter, was born at Brandenburg in 1807. He at first worked in the lithographic establishment of Arnz and Winckelmann, with the latter of whom he migrated from Düsseldorf to Berlin, and afterwards studied under Cornelius and Schadow. He acquired considerable reputation by his illustrations for children's books, and became in 1857 a professor in the Berlin Academy. He died at Berlin in 1875. Amongst his works are:

Fishermen's Children.

Convoy of Criminals.

A Violin Player. (Ravené Gallery, Berlin.)

Workpeople dancing.

The Return to Work.

Card Players.

HOSSENFELDER, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, a German painter, was born at Crossen in Silesia in 1706. He painted animals, more especially horses, and worked for a time at Frankfort-on-the-Oder; then, in 1775, at Berlin, and from 1777 at St. Petersburg, where he became a teacher at the Academy of Painting, and died in 1780.

HOSKINS, JOHN, was a portrait painter of London, but little is known of his life. He lived in the reign of Charles I., and in Graham's 'English School' it is said "that he was bred a face painter in oil, but afterwards taking to miniature, far exceeded what he did before; that he drew King Charles, his Queen, and most of the court, and had two considerable disciples, Alexander and Samuel Cooper, the latter of whom became much the more eminent limner." Though he was surpassed in his portraits by Samuel Cooper, he was an artist of great merit. Horace Walpole mentions a son of Hoskins of the same name, who also painted miniatures. The father marked his pictures thus, HH.; the younger Hoskins with the initials

J. H. The elder Hoskins died in 1664.

HOSSE, HENRIETTE, the daughter of the sculptor Hosse, was born at Eisenach in 1795, and died at Munich in 1823. She exhibited paintings at Weimar in 1821, and a copy by her of Giulio Romano's 'Madonna of the Basin' is still in the Dresden Gallery.

HOSSON, F. C. DE, was born at Bentheim in 1717. He was a pupil of his father, who was court painter at Bentheim, and painted portraits and historical subjects. He travelled through Germany, and finally settled at Groningen, where he died in 1799.

HOSTE, ADRIAEN. See DE WEERT.

HÖTZENDORF, JOHANN SAMUEL, an Austrian painter, was born at Sulzbach in 1694, and died in Vienna in 1742. He painted in the Abbey of Göttweih pictures of St. Benedict and Bishop Altmann, and views of the old and new chapter-house.

HOUASSE, MICHEL ANGE, (or HOVAS,) son of René Antoine Houasse, was born in Paris in 1675, became an Academician in 1707, and died at Arpajon, in France, or in Spain, in 1730, with the title of first painter to Philip V. His principal works executed at Madrid are:

Portrait of the Infant Don Philip, Duke of Parma.

Portrait of a young Infanta.

Sacrifice in honour of Bacchus.

A Bacchanal.

A Holy Family.

HOUASSE, RENÉ ANTOINE, was born in Paris in 1645. He was a pupil of Le Brun, and became a member of the Academy in 1673, and director of the French Academy at Rome in 1699. After the accession of Philip V. he spent some time at Madrid. He executed several works at Versailles and in the Trianon, and died in Paris in 1710.

HOUBRAKEN, ARNOLD, a painter and biographer of the Dutch artists, was born at Dordrecht in 1660. He was well educated, and showing an inclination for painting, he was placed under Willem Drillenburg, and was afterwards instructed by Samuel van Hoogstraeten. He painted portraits and small pictures of historical subjects, which were more esteemed in point of design than of colouring. He came to England to make the drawings of the portraits by Van Dyck, which were engraved by Pieter van Gunst. He is best known by his work published in Dutch in 1718, entitled, 'The Great Theatre of the Dutch Painters,' with their portraits, in three volumes. In the Städel Institute at Frankfurt is a portrait of Herr Rudolph von Loen. He died at Amsterdam in 1719. There are some etchings by Arnold Houbraken, after his own designs; among which are the following:

Jupiter and Semele.

Heraclitus and Democritus.

A set of slight etchings of Boys, with vases.

Vertumnus and Pomona. 1699.

Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus; in the manner of Rembrandt.

An emblematical subject, representing three Women looking at a Child lying in a sort of Basket, encircled by a Serpent; A. Houbraken pinx. et fecit.

HOUBRAKEN, JACOBUS, a Dutch engraver, was the son of Arnold Houbraken, and was born at Dordrecht in 1698. He appears to have formed his style by study of the works of Nanteuil, Drevet, and Edelinck. He excelled in portraits, in which he was principally employed; and although his plates are not all equally excellent, many of them have never been surpassed. Raphael Morghen, the great Italian engraver, remarks that "no engraver has ever equalled, and probably will not equal, the Dutchman Jacobus Houbraken, in the manner of imitating the flesh and the hair by means of the graver." He died at Amsterdam in 1780. A catalogue of his works, with a supplement, has been published by A. Ver Huell under the title, 'Jacobus Houbraken et son œuvre,' Arnheim, 1875-77, 8vo. The number of his portraits is very considerable, and many of those of English characters are well known by the 'Heads of Illustrious Persons of Great Britain,' published in London in 1743-52, with Lives by Dr. Birch. The following are some of his other works:

PORTRAITS.

His own Portrait; after J. M. Quinkhart.

Jacob van Hoorn; after the same.

Gustaaf Willem, Baron van Imhof, Governor-General of Dutch India.

Ferdinand van Collen, Burgomaster of Amsterdam. 1727.

Hermannus Alexander Roël, Doctor in Theology.

Petrus Burmannus, Professor at Utrecht. 1727.

Hieronymus David Gaubius, physician. 1744.

Joannes Conradus Rücker, jurist. 1736.

Gulielmus Jacobus's Gravesande, mathematician; after Van Dyck.

Sigebertus Haverkamp, professor at Leyden; after Mieris.

Joan de Witt, Grand Pensionary of Holland; after Netscher.

Johann Rudolph Fesch, of Basle; after Huber.

Henriette Wolters, paintress; after herself.

Cornelis Troost, painter; after himself.

Jacob Campo Weyerman, painter, and author of the 'Lives of the Dutch Artists.'

Nicolaus Verkolje, painter; after a picture by himself.

He engraved also the portraits to the biographies of his father, and the two following plates for the Dresden Gallery:

Portrait of Daniello Barbaro; after Paolo Veronese.

The Sacrifice of Manoah; after Rembrandt.

HOUCKGEEST. See HOBCEEST.

HOUEL, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1819. He was a pupil of Couder, and entered the École des Beaux-Arts in 1838. He exhibited chiefly portraits from 1839 to 1849. He died in Paris in 1849.

HOUEL, JEAN PIERRE LOUIS LAURENT, a French landscape and animal painter, and engraver, was born at Rouen in 1735. After studying engraving under Le Mire, he devoted himself for a time to painting, studying under Casanova. He travelled through Italy, Sicily, and Greece, making sketches on his way, and in 1782-87 published 264 plates in bistre of Sicilian views, under the title 'Voyage pittoresque des îles de la Sicile, de Malte et de Lipari.' He was a member of the Royal Academy of Painting at Paris, where he died in 1813.

HOUGHTON, ARTHUR BOYD, a subject painter, was born in 1836. In the early portion of his career he devoted himself chiefly to book illustration, contributing to Dalziel's 'Arabian Nights,' 'Fun,' 'The Graphic,' &c. He exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1860 to 1870; and he was elected an Associate of the Water-Colour Society in 1871. He died at Hampstead in 1875. He inclined to the mediæval in style: excelling in drawing, but weak in colouring, owing probably to an imperfection in his eyesight. Amongst the works which he exhibited were:

OIL PICTURES.

A Fisherman. 1860.

Here I the Sands. 1861.

The Mystery of Folded Sleep. 1864.

Mending the Jack-in-the-box. 1866.

Boy Martyrs. 1867.

John the Baptist rebuking Herod. 1870.

WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS.

The Enchanted Horse. 1875.
 The Transformation of King Bedr. 1875.
 Hiawatha and Minnehaha.
 In Captivity.

HOUSEMAN, CORNELIS. See HUYSMANS.

HOUSEMAN, F., was a mezzotint engraver, by whom there is a portrait of Nancy Parsons, afterwards Lady Maynard.

HOUSMAN, JAKOB. See HUYSMANS.

HOUSTON, JOHN ADAM, an historical and genre painter, was born in Wales of Scottish parentage in 1813. He was educated at the Trustees' Academy in Edinburgh, and afterwards studied in Germany and Paris. Between 1840 and 1858 he resided in Edinburgh, where he was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1842, and an Academician in 1845. From 1840 to 1877 he was a frequent exhibitor at the Society of British Artists, the Royal Academy, and the British Institution, as well as at the Dudley Gallery and the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, of which society he became an associate in 1874, and a full member in 1879. He died in London in 1884. His pictures are striking in design, and brilliant and harmonious in colour. The best known among them are:

The Good Samaritan. (National Gallery of Scotland.)
 An Incident of the Crusades.
 The Jew Curiosity Dealer.
 The Secreting of the Regalia of Scotland.
 A Border Raid.
 Roslyn Glen.
 Sunday in the Highlands.
 What's o'clock?
 Prospero and Miranda.
 The Foragers.
 Early Sorrow.
 The Captured Banner.
 Faithful unto Death.
 A sad Story.
 Fugitives from Culloden.
 After the Foray.

HOUSTON, RICHARD, an engraver in mezzotint and in the chalk manner, was born in Ireland in 1721, and studied in Dublin under J. Brooks, but settled in London when quite young. He was a dissipated character, and was for many years confined in the Fleet Prison by the printseller Sayer, who had advanced him money. The accession of George III. in 1760 caused his release, and he appears to have remained in London till his death in 1775. There are a great number of portraits and miscellaneous subjects by him, many of which are highly esteemed. The following are his principal prints:

PORTRAITS.

George II.; after Worlidge.
 Queen Charlotte; after Mary Benwell.
 Henry Pelham, Chancellor of the Exchequer; after Hoare.
 Admiral Byng; after Hudson.
 General Wolfe; after Penny.

AFTER SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS.

Charles, Lord Cathcart.
 Philip Dormer Stanhope, Earl of Chesterfield.
 John Manners, Marquis of Granby.
 Richard Robinson, Archbishop of Armagh.
 Eliza, Duchess of Argyll, with her son.
 Maria Walpole, Duchess of Gloucester, with her daughter.
 Lady Selina Hastings.
 Charles, Duke of Marlborough.
 Caroline, Duchess of Marlborough, with Lady Charlotte Spencer.
 Mary, Duchess of Ancaster.
 Elizabeth, Duchess of Northumberland.

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

The Virgin and Child; after Raphael.
 The Temptation of St. Anthony; after Teniers.
 An old Man, with a beard; after Rembrandt.

 An old Woman plucking a Fowl; after the same.
 A Man holding a Knife; after the same.
 The Pen-cutter; after the same.
 The Philosopher in Contemplation; after the same.
 The Gold-weigher; after the same.
 Christ and the Woman of Samaria; after the same.
 Avarice and Innocence; after Mercier.

HOUTMAN, CORNELIS, was a Dutch painter of fruit and flowers, who died at Maarssen, near Utrecht, in 1806.

HOVAS, MICHEL ANGE. See HOUASSE.

HOVE, BARTHOLOMEUS JOHANNES VAN, a Dutch painter, was born at the Hague in 1790. He was a pupil of Breckenheimer, and painted chiefly interiors; and the Museums of the Hague and Rotterdam have examples of his style. He died in 1880.

HOVE, F. H. VAN DEN. See VAN DEN HOVE.

HOVE, HUBERTUS VAN, who was born at the Hague in 1814, was a son and pupil of Bartholomeus Johannes van Hove. He painted the interiors of churches, architectural and perspective views, and afterwards kitchen pieces. He died at Antwerp in 1865. There is a 'View on the Sea-shore, near Rotterdam,' by him, in the Rotterdam Museum.

HÖVEMEYER, AUGUST, a Bavarian historical painter, was born at Bückeberg in 1824, and at first assisted his father, who was a decorative painter. In 1848 he entered the Academy at Munich and studied under Kaulbach and Schwind, but his style was rather that of Cornelius. His first picture was 'The Expulsion from Paradise' (1854), and this was followed by 'Christmas Eve,' allegorical frescoes in the railway station at Würzburg and in the Federal Palace at Berne, eight compositions from the history of Cupid and Psyche, in the Leipsic Museum, 'The Deluge' (1860), and three historical pictures (1863) in the Neue Pinakothek at Munich. In 1864 he went to Italy, where he copied Raphael's 'School of Athens,' and Titian's 'Venus.' In 1866 he painted his 'Prometheus bound,' furnished the cartoons for three frescoes in the villa of Baron Karg, at Reichenhall, and executed several frescoes and oil paintings in the hall of the railway station at Munich. His last work was 'The Life of Psyche.' He died at Munich in 1878.

HOWARD, FRANK, a designer and draughtsman, a son of Henry Howard, R.A., was born in 1805. After having been for some time a pupil of his father and a student in the Royal Academy, he became an assistant in the studio of Sir Thomas Lawrence. He first exhibited at the Academy in 1825, and for the next eight years continued to send Scriptural and poetical subjects. After this he did not exhibit for several years; but in 1842 he sent 'The Adoration of the Magi,' and several other pictures. About this date he removed to Liverpool, where he passed the rest of his life in teaching and lecturing (for which he had some natural talent), as well as painting, but gaining a very inadequate income. In 1843 he sent to the exhibition of designs for the decoration of the Houses of Parliament three cartoons, for one of which—'Una coming to seek the assistance of Gloriana'—he received one of the extra prizes of £100. He also published several works on the practice of painting. He died at Liverpool in 1866, in much distress.

HOWARD, HENRY, a painter of poetical and classical subjects, was born in London in 1769. He was taught the first rudiments of art by Philip Reinagle, and in 1788 was admitted a student of the Royal Academy. In 1790 he obtained the silver medal for the best drawing from the life, and the gold medal for the best historical picture, the subject being 'Caractacus recognizing the dead Body of his Son.' The next year he went to Italy, and from thence sent to the Academy a picture of the 'Dream of Cain,' the figures larger than life. When in Italy, he joined Flaxman, and John Deare, another sculptor of great ability, in making a set of accurate outlines of the most celebrated works of antique sculpture; each corrected the other's sketches, until one was admitted to be perfect; they were then traced off. Many of them remained in Howard's possession until his decease. On his return to England he was engaged on the series of finished drawings from antique sculpture for the Dilettanti Society, and in making designs for groups and bas-reliefs to be executed in silver. He was also extensively engaged in illustrating the Poets and Essayists for the publications of the day. In 1800 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1808 an Academician. He became secretary to that institution in 1811, and professor of painting in 1833, and the duties of these offices he fulfilled until a few months previous to his decease, which occurred at Oxford in 1847. His fame would have been more widely spread if some of his larger compositions of high poetical character had been engraved on an adequate scale. As Professor of Painting at the Royal Academy, he delivered a course of lectures to the students, which are remarkable for the views they take of art in its higher qualities, as well as for the clearness and elegance of their diction. They were published, with a memoir, by his son, Frank Howard, in 1848. He also painted some fine landscapes, one of which, a 'View in Knowle Park,' is in the possession of Lord Leconfield. The following are some of his best-known works:

The Flower Girl. (National Gallery; but lent to the Corporation of Stockport.)

The Pleiades. (Duke of Sutherland.) A replica of this picture long formed the chief ornament of the Leicester Gallery.

The Birth of Venus, and Fairies on the Sea-shore. (Sir Matthew White Ridley.)

The Solar System. The original of this subject was exhibited in 1796 as 'The Planets drawing light from the Sun;' a duplicate picture was painted for Mr. Morrison; and an adaptation of the composition to a circle, twelve feet in diameter, decorates the ceiling of the Duchess of Sutherland's boudoir at Stafford House.

Sabrina. (South Kensington Museum.)

Pygmalion. (The same.)

Peasants of Subiaco returning from the Vineyard on a Holiday. (The same.)

The House of Morpheus. (Lord Leconfield.)

A series of pictures from Milton's 'Comus,' of which Sabrina is the chief personage, and a 'Riposo.' (Mr. T. W. Budd.)

The Story of Pandora. (Soane Museum.)

A Lady in Florentine costume. (Lord Colbourne.) Of this portrait of the painter's daughter there is a duplicate in the possession of Lord Kennedy.

Hebe feeding the Bird of Jove.

Love listening to the flatteries of Hope.

Hylas carried off by the Nymphs. (Lord Leconfield.)

Venus carrying off Ascanius.

The Moon unveiling her Light.

HOWARD, HUGH, an Irish portrait painter, was born at Dublin in 1675. After travelling through Holland and Italy, he practised for some years in Dublin; but obtaining a Government appointment, he gave up painting and devoted himself to the formation of a collection of prints, drawings, &c., part of which has been recently purchased by the British Museum. He died in London in 1737.

HOWARD, WILLIAM, an engraver, flourished in the latter part of the 17th century. From the resemblance of his style to that of Hollar, it is probable that he may have been a pupil of that master. He engraved, among other things, a set of sea-pieces, with shipping, dated 1665. His plates are signed either with his name at length, or with his initials joined in a cipher.

HOWE, JAMES, a Scottish animal painter, was born at Skirling in Peeblesshire, of which parish his father was minister, in 1780. He was apprenticed to a house painter in Edinburgh, but employed his spare time in painting panoramic exhibitions and animals. He came to London and painted the horses of the royal stud, but afterwards returned to Scotland, and was commissioned by Sir John Sinclair to paint various breeds of cattle. In 1815 he visited Waterloo, and produced a successful picture of the battle. He died at Edinburgh in 1836.

HOWES, JOHN, a miniature painter, exhibited portraits and subject pictures at the Royal Academy from 1772 to 1793.

HOWISON, WILLIAM, a Scottish engraver, was born at Edinburgh in 1798. He was educated at Heriot's Hospital, and having learned engraving as an apprentice to Wilson, he was employed by D. O. Hill to engrave several of his works. He became an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1838, and died at Edinburgh in 1850. His best plates are:

The Curls; after Sir G. Harvey.

The Covenanters' Communion; after the same.

The Polish Exiles; after Sir W. Allan.

The First Letter from the Emigrants; after T. Faed.

HOWITT, SAMUEL, a self-taught artist, born about 1765, was distinguished for his skill in designing wild animals and hunts. He also etched several prints from his own drawings of sports, in a free and animated style. He died suddenly in London in 1822. In the South Kensington Museum are:

"In full cry."

A Council of Animals.

Lion and Lioness.

HOWLETT, BARTHOLOMEW, an engraver and draughtsman, was born at Louth in 1767, and learnt engraving as an apprentice to James Heath. He published 'Views in the County of Lincoln' (1805), and 'Plan and Views of the Abbey of St. Denys' (1812); and was also engaged on Frost's 'Hull,' Bentham's 'Ely,' Wilkinson's 'Londina Illustrata,' &c. He died at Newington in 1827, leaving a large collection of drawings of seals for monastic and religious houses, and others for works on Clapham, and St. Katharine's in the Tower.

HOWSE, GEORGE, a landscape painter in water-colours, was elected in 1837 a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, where he exhibited largely architectural subjects. He died in 1861. There are several of his works in the Dublin National Gallery.

HOYE, NIKOLAUS VAN, (HOY, or HOI,) a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1626, and died at Vienna in 1710. He was imperial court painter, and two battle-pieces by him are in the Vienna Gallery. In conjunction with J. van Ossenbeck, Frans van der Steen, and others, he engraved the plates, after the pictures in the collection of the Archduke Leopold, for the work known as the 'Teniers Gallery,' published at Brussels in 1660.

HØYER, CORNELIUS, a Danish miniature painter, was born near Copenhagen in 1741, and attended the New Academy of that city from 1754 to 1763, after which he studied further under Massé and Alwen in Paris, and then travelled to Rome. On his return journey in 1767 he stopped a considerable time at Dresden, where he was received as a member of the Academy for his picture of 'Psyche throwing a Light upon the sleeping Cupid.' After his arrival at Copenhagen he received, in 1770, the same academical honour there for his portraits of Saly and Pilo, and was also appointed court miniaturist, and in 1777 secretary of the Copenhagen Academy. He worked from 1780 to 1797 at St. Petersburg, where the Empress Catharine II. presented him with a costly diamond ring. He died at Copenhagen in 1804. His son, CHRISTIAN FÆDDER HØYER, who was born in 1775, and died in 1855, was a painter of Copenhagen who studied at Rome. A 'Hero' by him (1811) is in the Copenhagen Museum.

HOYER, DAVID, was a painter of Potsdam who in 1706 took the portrait of the King of Prussia, and was thereupon made court painter. Another portrait by him, about 1693, is in the Berlin Gallery.

HOYER, L., a French historical painter of the 18th century, is known by some works in the church at Grasse, representing 'St. Roch,' and 'St. Agnes,' and 'The Education of Orphans.'

HOYNCK, OTTO, a Dutch portrait painter, who was born at the Hague and flourished in the 17th century, was a pupil of Arnold van Ravesteyn. In 1661 he became a member of the Corporation of St. Luke, and soon after came to England, where he died.

HOYOS, GASPARD DE, a Spanish historical painter, was a pupil of Becerra. He worked at Astorga, and died in 1569.

HUARD, FRANÇOIS, a French painter, was a native of Salon (Bouches-du-Rhône). He studied painting without a master, and received only some advice from Granet. He died in 1830. His principal works are:

Portrait of Louis XVIII. (Hôtel de Ville, Arles.)

The Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary.

Interior of the Cloister of St. Trophino, at Arles.

HUARD, LOUIS, was a native of Aix in Provence. He lived chiefly at Brussels, and painted landscape, still-life, and historical subjects, but he died in London in 1842.

HUARD, PIERRE, a French painter, was a native of Paris, and a pupil of Legay. He exhibited architectural subjects at the Salon from 1831 to 1855, and painted upon porcelain for the manufactory of Sèvres. He was director of the School of Design and Museum of Antiquities at Arles. He died in Paris in 1857.

HUAULT, JOHANN PETER and AMICUS, two brothers, were miniature and enamel painters from Geneva, who from 1686 to 1700 were in the service of the court of Berlin. The Chamber of Art of that city contains the following works by them:

A large Medallion painted upon gold, with a copy of Le Brun's 'Alexander in the Tent of Darius.'

Two Watches richly painted in enamel.

Medallion Portrait of a Personage of Rank.

HÜBER, FRANZ MICHAEL, was an artist of Innsbruck, who became court painter to Karl Philipp of the Palatinate, Governor of the Tyrol. He took part with the brothers Waldmann in decorating the Hercules Room in the old palace at Innsbruck (1711), and also painted frescoes in a room in the Starn Monastery. He died in 1746.

HUBER, JOHANN, a Swiss amateur painter, was born at Geneva in 1722. He produced several sketches representing scenes in the life of Voltaire. He died in 1786.

HÜBER, JOHANN BAPTIST, a painter of Neustift, near Brixen, studied in Rome after Salvator Rosa, and after his return executed a number of wall pictures in the cloisters at Neustift, representing the Canonical Virtues. In 1687 he painted architectural pictures in the theatre at Brixen. He died in 1690.

HUBER, JOHANN CASPAR, a Swiss painter, was born at Glattfelden, in the canton of Zurich, in 1752. He was the son of a butcher, but was instructed in landscape painting by J. H. Wüst, and then visited Basle and Strassburg, seeking further improvement at Frankfort under Hufnagel. After remaining there four years he spent two in Amsterdam, and thence repaired to Düsseldorf, where he was admitted a member of the Academy. He returned to Switzerland in 1789, and died at Zurich in 1827. His sea views in water-colours are delicately executed and spiritedly figured, but his Swiss landscapes are hardly equal to them.

HUBER, JOHANN DANIEL, a Swiss landscape and animal painter, was born at Geneva in 1754, and died in 1829. He was self-taught, and from his earliest years he showed his talent in silhouettes, and so he determined to devote himself to art. He painted both in oil and in water-colours, and also etched some horses in landscapes.

HUBER, JOHANN JOSEPH, a Bavarian painter and engraver, born at Augsburg in 1730, was a pupil of Bergmüller and G. B. Götz. He was appointed in 1784 director of the Academy of his native city, where he died in 1815. He left frescoes in the Catholic churchyard at Augsburg, friezes in the churches of Oberhausen and Kobel in the same vicinity, and others in the hall of the Academy. He also left etchings of 'The Four Quarters of the World,' represented in half-length figures.

HUBER, JOHANN RUDOLPH, was born at Basle in 1668. He was the son of Alexis Huber, a member of the council of that place, and in 1682 he was placed under Kaspar Mayer. On the death of that master he became a pupil of Joseph Werner, under whom he studied until he was nineteen, when his instructor advised him to visit Italy. He resided some time at Mantua, afterwards went to Verona and Venice, and finally visited Rome. He resided six years in that city, and then travelled through France; and on his return to Switzerland in 1693 he settled in Basle and met with immediate encouragement. He was engaged by the Margrave of Baden-Durlach to paint a large family picture, and in 1696 he was invited to Stuttgart, and appointed principal painter to the Duke of Württemberg, who employed him in several large historical subjects and ceilings for his palace. He was, however, principally occupied in portrait painting, in which his surprising facility obtained for him the title of 'The Tintoretto of Switzerland.' More than 3000 portraits are attributed to him. He died in 1748.

HÜBER, JOSEPH, was born at Imst, in the Tyrol, in 1730. In consequence of a bodily deformity his father placed him under an inferior painter, and then sent him to travel. He found better instruction from a master at Salzburg, and then started for Rome, but on his way was shipwrecked. He next studied at Prague under Brandel, and then, by his father's persuasion, settled down at home; but as a 'Madonna' which he painted was not to the paternal taste, he was forthwith expelled from the house. He died in 1772.

HUBER, JOSEPH IGNAZ, a designer and engraver, the son of Johann Joseph Huber, was born at Augsburg in 1759, and was instructed by Nilson in his own city, and by Wille in Paris. In 1792 he commenced the trade of an art dealer. Two of his best works are a 'Madonna' after Raphael, and 'La Vieille à la lampe,' after Gerard Dou.

HUBER, KONRAD, a German painter, was born at Altdorf, near Ravensburg, in 1750, and was first instructed under Brucker at Salmannsweiler, and Kuen at Weissenhorn, near Ulm. In 1773 he received the first prize at the Karlsruhle at Stuttgart, and then travelled in Italy, and on returning he settled at Weissenhorn, where he died in 1830. He painted religious pictures for the churches of Ottobeuren, Wiesensteig, and other places in Upper Swabia.

HUBER, THOMAS, was born at Rheinfels in 1700, and after attending the Berlin Academy, studied under Georg Liszewski. He painted a great variety of subjects, including history, landscapes, animals, flowers, fruit, and especially portraits; he also executed the frieze in the Chinese Garden at Sanssouci, from designs by Le Sueur. He became court painter, and died at Berlin in 1779.

HUBERT, FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, born at Abbeville in 1744, was a pupil of Beauvarlet, and engraved a variety of portraits, as well as a series of military costumes, after Graincourt. He died in Paris in 1809. Among his other subjects are:

La Nouvelle Héloïse; after Le Fèvre.
Le Retour de la Nourrice; after Gruze.
Le Cordonnier; after G. M. Krams.

HUBERTI, ÉDOUARD JULES JOSEPH, a Belgian landscape painter, who began life as a musician, was born in 1818, and first exhibited in the Brussels Salon of 1837. He died in 1880.

HÜBNER, BARTHOLOME, an engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1727, and studied under J. D. Herz. About 1770 he was working at Basle in the atelier of Christian von Mechel, under whose name he produced small portraits, amongst others that of the Chancellor Joseph Hofer, after Hickel. The date of his death is not stated, but he was still living at Basle in 1795. The following are some of his other works:

The Last Supper; after Holbein.
Holbein's Wife and two Children; after the same
Johann Froben, printer; after the same.
Sir Thomas More; after the same.
Desiderius Erasmus; after the same.
The Title-page to the 'Düsseldorf Gallery'; after Guibal.
The Emperor Joseph II. with the Archduke and other Generals on Horseback; after Christian Brand.

HÜBNER, JULIUS, a genre painter of Düsseldorf, was born in 1842. He was the second son of the celebrated painter, Karl Wilhelm Hübner, from whom he received his artistic education. He died at Düsseldorf in 1874. Among his pictures, which show a genuine sense of humour, are:

The new Barometer.
The great Bootjack.
The bad Memory.
Mother and Children.

HÜBNER, KARL, a German engraver and lithographer, was born at Berlin in 1797. He was a pupil of Professor Buchhorn, and in 1828 proceeded to Paris, where he lithographed a superior likeness of Frederick the Great. His last work was a drawing of Joan of Aragon, after Raphael. He died in Paris in 1831.

HÜBNER, KARL WILHELM, a genre painter, was born at Königsberg in 1814, and commenced his studies under Professor J. Wolf of that city. During the years 1837 to 1841 he sought further improvement at the Düsseldorf Academy under Schadow and Karl Sohn, and then began painting works bearing upon the social hardships of the age. These in the course of years increased in depth and sentiment, and it is said that one of his works, 'The Poacher's Death,' made such an impression that it led to the alteration of the German game laws. In 1874-5 he made a voyage to North America, and his style is said to have been sensibly improved thereby. He died at Düsseldorf in 1879. The following are among his principal paintings, some of which have been lithographed by Karl Wildt:

Silesian Weavers. 1845.
The Shooting Licence.
The Emigrant. 1846. (Christiana Museum.)
The Distraint. 1847. (Königsberg Museum.)
Rescue from Fire. 1854. (The artist's best work.)
The Outcast at the Church Door. 1867. (Berlin National Gallery.)
The Widow. (Düsseldorf Gallery.)
The Orphans.
The Seaman's Return.
By the Fireside.
Consolation in Prayer.
The Twins.

HÜBNER, RUDOLPH JULIUS BENNO, a German painter of sacred and historical subjects, was born at Oels in Silesia in 1806. He entered the Academy of Berlin, but afterwards studied under Schadow, and in 1827 went to Düsseldorf with his master. He afterwards returned to Berlin, and in 1839 went to Dresden, where he became Director of the Royal Gallery, and died in 1882. In the Stadel Institute at Frankfort is a picture of 'Job and his Three Friends,' and at Dresden 'The Golden Age.' Among his other pictures are:

The Departure of Naomi.
Christ and the Evangelists.
Samson pulling down the Pillars.
Boaz and Ruth.

HUCHTENBURGH, JAKOB VAN, the elder brother of Jan van Huchtenburgh, was born at Haarlem in 1639, and brought up in the school of Nicolaas Berchem. Under that master he made great progress; and on leaving his school travelled to Italy, and resided at Rome, where his talents met with encouragement, but he died there about 1667. Two Italian landscapes by him are in the Copenhagen Gallery.

HUCHTENBURGH, JAN VAN, (or HUCHTENBURGH,) a Dutch battle painter and engraver, was born at Haarlem, probably in 1646. He was a scholar of Thomas Wyck, and afterwards of his brother Jakob, who induced him in 1665 to go to Rome, where he passed two years. Returning through France to Holland, he remained some time in Paris, and studied under Van der Meulen. In 1670 Huchtenburgh returned to Haarlem, where he became a picture-dealer as well as an artist. Prince Eugene employed him to paint the battles of his campaigns with the Duke of Marlborough in 1708 and 1709, several of which he engraved, and published at the Hague in 1725. In 1711 the Elector Palatine invited him to his court, where he painted several pictures, and was honoured with a gold medal and chain. Jan van Huchtenburgh has also considerable merit as an engraver. He etched a great number of plates, some of which he strengthened with the graver. They are executed in a very spirited and masterly style; many of them are from his own compositions, and some after Van der Meulen and other masters. He also scraped seven plates in mezzotint, but it is now difficult to meet with good impressions of them. He died at Amsterdam in 1733. His paintings are to be met with at Brunswick, Copenhagen, and Frankfurt, as well as in the following collections:

Amsterdam.	Museum.	Portrait of William III., Prince of Orange.
		Cavalry Charge.
Berlin.	Gallery.	A Stag Hunt. 1674.
		Plundering a Village.
Brussels.	Gallery.	Cavalry Attack.
		Episodes of a Battle.
Cassel.	Gallery.	View of the Piazza Colonna in Rome.
		Siege of Namur.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Cavalry Fight.
		Cavalry Charge.
Hague.	Museum.	Portrait of Prince Eugene of Savoy. 1692.
		A Sortie of Troops.
		Attack on a Convoy.
London.	Nat. Gall.	A Battle.
Munich.	Gallery.	Cavalry Engagement.
		Military Convoy.
Paris.	Louvre.	Cavalry Charge.
		Siege of a Fortified Town.
Rotterdam.	Museum.	Cavalry Combat.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Siege of Namur.
	Czernin Coll.	Skirmish by Ruins.

Huchtenburgh sometimes signed his plates with his name, and frequently with the cipher FB. or

IVB. The following are the principal:

Combat of two Horsemen.
The Plunderers.
Halt of Travellers, before a Forge.
Halt of Sportsmen, in a landscape.
William III. reviewing his Army near Arnheim.
A set of four Battles; ovals; after Van der Meulen.
A set of six Mountainous Landscapes; after the same.
A Battle of Cavalry; after the same.
Another Battle of Cavalry; after the same.
View of Lille, with the French Army; after Van der Meulen; Hugtenburg et Baudouin fec.
The Taking of Dôle in Franche-Comté; after the same; Hugtenburg et Baudouin fec.; in two sheets.
Louis XIV. with his Guards, passing the Pont-Neuf; after Van der Meulen.
The Battle between the French and Germans in Italy; after D. Hoogstraeten; very fine.
A Horse-Fair in Holland; after the same; very fine.
Several Battles, and other subjects, in mezzotint.

HUCK, JOHANN GERHARD, a designer and engraver, was born in 1748, either in Hanover or the Netherlands. He worked for a time in the Düsseldorf Gallery, and in 1780 came to England; but finally he settled at Hanover, where he opened an academy.

and was living in 1812. The date of his death is unknown. One of his engravings was the portrait of Baron von Brabeck, after Anton Graff. He also left a drawing of 'Lady Jane Grey brought to the Scaffold.'

HUDSON, HENRY, was a mezzotint engraver, whose works bear dates from 1782 to 1793. No particulars of his life are known. Amongst his plates are:

Belshazzar's Feast; after Rembrandt.
David and Bathsheba; after Castelli.
Sir William Hamilton; after Reynolds. 1782.
Rescue from an Alligator; after Hoppner. 1786.
John Henniker; after Romney. 1786.
Industry and Idleness; after Morland. 1790.
Lord Macartney; after Mather Brown. 1790.
Lord Loughborough; after the same. 1793.

HUDSON, THOMAS, a portrait painter, was born in Devonshire in 1701. He was the scholar of Jonathan Richardson, and became his son-in-law. After the death of his instructor, he was for several years the most fashionable portrait painter of his time; but he is now chiefly remembered as the master of Sir Joshua Reynolds, by whom his popularity was eclipsed before he retired from the exercise of his profession. He acquired considerable wealth, and formed a fine collection of drawings by the old masters. He died at Twickenham in 1779. His best work is a large family picture of Charles, Duke of Marlborough, at Blenheim Palace. There are in the National Portrait Gallery pictures by him of George II., Händel, Edward Willes, and Matthew Prior, the latter after Richardson.

HÜE, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French landscape and marine painter, was born at Saint-Arnould-en-Yveline in 1751. He studied under Joseph Vernet and in Rome, and was received into the Academy in 1782. His subjects are principally storms, moonlights and sunsets, views of seaports, naval combats, and wrecks. He exhibited at the Salon from 1781 to 1824; but died in Paris at the close of the year 1823. There are a few pictures by him of a poetical or historical character; and some of his landscapes may be deemed classical. There are works by him in the Musée de la Marine in the Louvre. His son, ALEXANDRE LAURENT HÜE, who was also a landscape painter, exhibited at the Salon from 1810 to 1842.

HUERTA, DE LA. See DE LA HUERTA.

HUESCA, FRAY ANGEL DE, a Hieronymite monk of Saragossa, practised engraving. In 1737 he executed the title-page for Marton's 'Historia del subterraneo santuario del real monasterio de Santa Engracia de Zaragoza,' which represents the front of the church of that monastery.

HUET, JEAN BAPTISTE, a natural history painter, was born in Paris in 1745. He was a pupil of J. B. Leprince, and was received as an Academician in 1769. He exhibited from 1769 to 1802. A picture of 'Two Dogs' by him is in the Louvre, and examples of his art are in the Museums of Orleans, Nantes, and Rennes. He died in Paris in 1811.

HUET, NICOLAS, the elder, an animal painter, the father of Jean Baptiste Huet, was born about 1718, and exhibited in the Academy of St. Luke from 1751 to 1762. He died after 1780.

HUET, NICOLAS, the younger, the son of Jean Baptiste Huet, was born in Paris in 1770, and was a pupil of his father. He was commissioned to paint for the library of the Natural History Museum one hundred and twenty water-colour drawings, for the collection commenced in 1650 by the Duke of Orleans. He also executed several natural history designs for the great work on Egypt, which was published by the Government. He was still living in 1827.

HUET, PAUL, a French landscape painter, was born in 1804. He was a pupil of the École des Beaux-Arts, and also studied under Guérin and Gros. He not only painted in oil and water-colours, but also executed many etchings, wood-engravings, crayon drawings, and lithographs. His first success was obtained at the Salon of 1831, to which he sent nine oil paintings and four water-colour drawings. Among his pictures may be mentioned 'The Beach at Houlgatt' (1863), in the Bordeaux Museum; 'Fontainebleau' (1868); 'The Bather' (1867), 'Setting Sun, with a Fog, in Autumn' (1866), and the 'Inundation of St. Cloud' (1855), in the Louvre. One of his most important etchings is the 'Sources de Royal,' and among his wood-engravings may especially be mentioned those illustrating 'Paul and Virginia.' His death occurred from a fit of apoplexy in Paris in 1869. A long and appreciative notice of Paul Huet by Philippe Burty appeared in the 'Gazette des Beaux-Arts' for April, 1869.

HUEVA, BARBARA MARIA DE, was born at Madrid in 1733. Before reaching her twentieth year she had attained such skill in painting, that at the first meeting of the Academy of St. Ferdinand in 1752, on the exhibition of some of her sketches, she was elected an honorary academician, receiving the first diploma issued under the royal charter.

HUFFEL, PIETER VAN, an historical painter, was born at Grammont in 1769, and attended the Ghent Academy, where he obtained the first prizes in the various classes; he then studied under Herreyns at Mechlin, and afterwards proceeded to Paris. After returning to Ghent he was appointed director of the Academy, and died there in 1844. His pictures are found in the churches and museums of Ghent and Grammont, and his 'Holy Virgin in the Temple' was in 1817 awarded a gold medal by the Ghent Association for Fine Arts and Sciences. He painted also numerous portraits, of which 'Napoleon I. when First Consul' is in the Antwerp Museum.

HUGFORD, IGNAZ, was born in England in 1703, but settled at Florence while still young. He painted historical subjects, but his works are little esteemed. Lanzi, however, speaks favourably of a picture by him in the church of Santa Felicità, at Florence, representing 'St. Raphael'; some easel pictures by him of the same class are in the Florence Gallery. He died in 1778.

HUGGINS, WILLIAM, an animal painter, was born at Liverpool in 1820. He received his early artistic education at the old Liverpool Academy, and was well known in his native city as the 'Liverpool Landseer,' although he afterwards resided chiefly at Chester, Bettws-y-Coed, and Llanbedr. He suffered from partial paralysis during the latter years of his life, and died at Christleton, Chester, in 1884. Among his best works are 'The Disobedient Prophet slain by the Lion,' 'Daniel in the Lions' Den,' and 'Christian within sight of the Lions.'

HUGGINS, WILLIAM JOHN, a marine painter, was born in 1781, and in early life went to sea in the service of the East India Company. He occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy, and in 1834 was appointed marine painter to William IV. He died in 1845. There are three pictures of the 'Battle of Trafalgar' by him at Hampton Court.

HUGHES, HENRY, a wood-engraver, was born about 1796. Amongst the illustrated works for which he engraved the woodcuts is 'The Beauties of Cambria' (1823).

HUGHES, WILLIAM, a wood engraver, was born at Liverpool in 1793, and learned engraving as an apprentice to Henry Hole. He died at Lambeth in 1825. The following works contain specimens of his art:

Gregson's 'Fragments of Lancashire.'
Dibdin's 'Bibliographical Decameron.'
Rutter's 'Delineations of Fonthill.'
Ottley's 'History of Engraving.'
Johnson's 'Typographia.'

HUGHTENBURGH. See HUCHTENBURGH.

HUGUENY, LAURENT JOSEPH, a French painter, was born at Valenciennes in 1769, and died in 1814. There is in the Museum of his native town his own portrait painted by himself.

HUHN, KARL, was a painter who died in 1877 at Davos, and who had studied several years from the works of Delaroche and Comte. He was a professor in the Academy of St. Petersburg, and his chief work is 'The Eve of St. Bartholomew.'

HÜHNE, ANDREAS KASPAR, a German historical painter, was born at Hamburg in 1758, and after studying under Schönmann, went in 1774 to Italy, where he remained fourteen years, obtaining further instruction from Tischbein, Mengs, and Torelli. In 1789 Catharine II. invited him to St. Petersburg, where he became a professor at the Academy, and died in 1810. He painted numerous portraits, as well as scenes from Russian history.

HUILLIOT, CLAUDE, a French flower painter, was born at Rheims in 1632. He was received as an Academician in 1664, and died in Paris in 1702. There is a flower piece by this artist in the palace at Fontainebleau.

HUILLIOT, PIERRE NICOLAS, son of Claude Huilliot, was born in Paris in 1674, and was received into the Academy in 1722. His pictures were chiefly fruit and flower subjects. He died in 1751.

HULETT, J., an engraver, flourished in the earlier part of the 17th century. The following portraits are by him:

Mary, Queen of Scots; after Janet.
Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex.
Thomas, Lord Fairfax.

HULETT, JAMES, was an engraver, who worked chiefly for the booksellers, and executed several of the plates for Coetlogon's 'History of Arts and Sciences,' 1745, and for the 'Life of Queen Anne,' published by Walker. He also engraved the plates for one of the editions of Fielding's 'Joseph Andrews.' He died in London in 1771.

HULL, THOMAS H., a miniature painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1775 to 1800.

HULL, WILLIAM, was a landscape painter in water-colours, who practised in Manchester. He died in 1880.

HULLE, ANSELM VAN. See HEBBELYNCK.

HULLMANDEL, CHARLES JOSEPH, a lithographer, was born in London of German parentage in 1789. In 1818 he commenced his experiments in lithography, after instruction from Faraday, and made many great improvements in the art. To him are due a graduated tint, and the use of white in the high lights; he invented lithotint, and he used the stump on the stone. Besides reproductions of the works of Cattermole, Stanfield, Haghe, Roberts, Harding, Nash, and others, he published 'Twenty-four Views of Italy' in 1814, and furnished the illustrations for T. S. Boys's 'Architecture in Paris,' Kent's 'Britannia delineata,' and Pinelli's 'Roman Costumes.' He died in London in 1850.

HULME, FREDERICK WILLIAM, a landscape painter, was born at Swinton in 1816. He was the son of a Yorkshire artist of some reputation, from whom he received his early instruction in art. In 1844 he came to London, and was for a time occupied in making designs for engravers, and in 1850 he published 'A graduated Series of Drawing Copies in Landscape.' He painted much at Bettws-y-Coed, in a style not unlike that of Creswick, and likewise taught drawing and painting. He died in London in 1884.

HULSBERG, HENDRIK, a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam, but resided chiefly in London, where he was principally employed by the booksellers, and where he died in 1792. His best works were architectural views and buildings, which he executed in a neat style, but without taste. He engraved several plates for the first volume of the 'Vitruvius Britannicus,' and Sir Christopher Wren's Plans for St. Paul's Cathedral. There is also by him a large view of St. Peter's at Rome. He engraved also some portraits; among others, the following:

Sir Bulstrode Whitelock.

Robert Warren, Rector of Bow.

Joseph Warder, physician.

Aaron Hill; prefixed to his 'History of the Ottoman Empire,' 1711.

HULSDONCK, JACOB VAN, a Flemish flower painter, was born at Antwerp in 1582. He spent his youth at Middelburg in Zeeland, but in 1609 he became a master in the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp, where he died in 1647. His son, GILLIS VAN HULSDONCK, who was also a painter, resided in Holland from 1658 to 1670.

HULSEEN, FREDERIK VAN, (or HULSIUS), a Dutch engraver, was born at Middelburg in 1566, but afterwards settled at Frankfort. He resided some time in London, where he worked for the booksellers. Florent Le Comte says he was a disciple of Theodorus De Bry, and his style somewhat resembles that of his master. He engraved a variety of book ornaments; among others, the small quarto frontispieces, with figures, to Christopher Lever's 'History of the Defenders of the Catholique Faith,' published in 1627; and the frontispiece to May's translation of Lucan's 'Pharsalia,' 1631. There are also some portraits by him; among others:

Don Carlos, Infant of Spain.

George Carleton, Bishop of Chichester.

HULSEN, JEZAIAS VAN, a Dutch engraver, the brother of Frederik van Hulsen, was born at Middelburg in 1570, and died about 1640. He is said by Professor Christ to have resided at Stuttgart, where he published several grotesque engravings, drawn with much taste and accuracy. They are marked with his initials, E. V. H.

HULSMAN, JOHANN, (or HOLZMANN), a painter and engraver, was a pupil of Augustin Braun, and flourished at Cologne in the 17th century, being last heard of in 1646. He was regarded as one of the best colourists of the Rubens school. A conversation piece by him, dated 1644, is in the Nuremberg Town-hall; and a 'St. Veronica,' together with a portrait, in the Wallraf-Richartz Museum at Cologne. He has left an etching of 'The March of a large Troop of Gipsies,' in a woody landscape. He used the initials J. H. F. or a monogram.

HULST, FRANS DE. See DE HULST.

HULST, VAN DER. See VAN DER HULST.

HULSTER, JAN, was a Dutch portrait painter, who flourished in the 17th century. In 1656 he was living at the Hague.

HULSWIT, JAN, born at Amsterdam in 1766, was an excellent designer of landscapes, river scenes, and animals. His drawings are more numerous than his oil paintings; but of the latter he has left some beautiful specimens. There is a landscape by him in the Städel Institute at Frankfurt. He died at Amsterdam in 1822.

HUMBELOT, JACQUES, an indifferent engraver, resided at Paris about the year 1760, and executed some plates after Le Brun and other masters.

HUMBERT, JAN, a native of Amsterdam, was an historical and portrait painter. He studied at Paris, but afterwards returned to his own country, and worked at Amsterdam and the Hague, becoming chief of the School of Design in the latter city. He died in 1794.

HUMBERT, JEAN CHARLES FERDINAND, was a native of Geneva, who went to Paris, and entered the atelier of Ingres. He, however, on his return to Geneva abandoned the style of that master, preferring, as he said, "the fat cows and the powerful oxen of his native land." He died at Geneva in 1881.

HUMBERT, JULES EUGÈNE, a French painter, was born at Strassburg in 1821. He was a pupil of Picot and Gleyre, and exhibited decorative works at the Salon from 1851 to 1866. In 1851 he was appointed painter of figures at the Sèvres manufactory. He died in Paris in 1870.

HUMBERT DE SUPERVILLE, DAVID PIERRE GIOTTINO, a portrait painter, was born at the Hague in 1770. He was the son of a Protestant minister, and at first studied science, but preferring art he went to Italy, where he received the name of 'Giottino.' He devoted himself chiefly to drawing and engraving. He also published a work entitled 'Essai sur les signes inconditionnels dans l'Art,' 1827. He died at Leyden in 1849.

HUME, HENRY, a promising young landscape painter, was born in 1858, and died in 1881.

HUMMEL, JOHANN ERDMANN, a German painter and engraver, was born at Cassel in 1769, and was first instructed by Böttner. With the elector's assistance he in 1792 proceeded to Rome, where he chiefly took up the landscape and the antique departments, but also studied the works of the later great masters. After his return in 1799 he was patronised by the Electress Augusta of Hesse and through her influence he went in 1800 to Berlin, where he became in 1809 professor of perspective. He died at Berlin in 1852. He was successful in historical subjects, portraits, landscapes, and architectural pieces, especially in water-colours. One of his best paintings is his 'Evening Devotions of Bohemian Peasants' (1812). He engraved from his own designs twelve plates of 'Luther's Life and Apotheosis,' and published practical guides on art, including 'Die freie Perspektive,' 'Die

Schattenlehre,' 'Die Projektionslehre,' &c. In the Städel Institute at Frankfurt there is a picture by him of 'Children swinging in a Garden near Naples.'

HUMPHREY, OZIAS, a miniature painter, was born at Honiton, in Devonshire, in 1742, and was educated at the grammar school in that town. His passion for drawing was early and ardent, and his parents, yielding to his earnest importunity, sent him to London, where he frequented the drawing school of William Shipley, and profited by studying the casts from the antique statues, then recently imported from Italy, and made public for the benefit of students, by the liberality of the Duke of Richmond. He prosecuted these studies about three years, when the death of his father rendered it necessary for him to return to Devonshire. He was at that time particularly desirous of being placed with Sir Joshua Reynolds; but circumstances did not permit the gratification of his wishes, and he was engaged with Samuel Collins, a miniature painter of some eminence at Bath, with whom he resided two years, when his instructor removed to Dublin, and Humphrey succeeded to his practice in Bath. In the year 1763 he was encouraged and invited by Sir Joshua Reynolds to settle near him in London, which he did in the following year.

In 1766 he exhibited at Spring Gardens a portrait, in miniature, of John Mealing, the old and well-known model of the Royal Academy, which was greatly admired, and was purchased by the King, who also commissioned him to paint miniatures of the Queen, and other members of the royal family. He continued to practise this line of art with almost unexampled success, until the year 1772, when a fall from his horse gave his head so violent a shock, and impaired his whole nervous system so much, that he was unable to pursue his profession with the same efficiency that he had hitherto done. By the advice of his friends, he left England in 1773, accompanied by his friend Romney, and proceeded to Rome, where he resided four years, during which he studied oil painting.

In 1777 Humphrey returned to his native country, where he remained, painting generally in oil, until the commencement of the year 1785, when he embarked for India. It was suggested to him, on his arrival at Calcutta, that the field the most open to him was miniature, and that it would be advisable for him to confine himself to that branch of his profession. He visited the courts of Moorshedabad, Benares, and Lucknow, where he painted several large miniatures of princes, nabobs, and rajahs, and many other persons of high distinction. His bad state of health, however, obliged him to return, in 1788, to England, where he resumed miniature painting, and exhibited several works, which were greatly admired, and which confirmed his former reputation.

In the year 1779 Humphrey was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1791 an Academician. His sight was now so much affected, that he was obliged to relinquish miniature painting, and he made some experiments in crayons, in which he succeeded so well that he devoted to that branch of art his whole attention, and was for some time considered to be its chief representative. In the year 1797 his sight completely failed, and his portraits of the Prince and Princess of Orange were his last productions. The remainder of his life was passed at Knightsbridge till within a few months of his death, which took place in London in 1810. As an artist, Humphrey possessed considerable genius, which he improved by the most exemplary assiduity, and an attentive study of the best models. His design is tasteful and correct, and his colouring, especially in his miniatures and crayon drawings, is always rich and harmonious. His memorandum and account books are preserved in the British Museum.

HUMPHREY, WILLIAM, an engraver in mezzotint, was born about 1740, and was last heard of about 1795. There are several portraits by him, among which are the following:

Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire; after Reynolds.
Doctor Arne; after Dunkarton.
Colonel Richard King; after Kneller.
Madame Du Barry; after B. Wilson.

HUMPHREYS, HENRY NOEL, an artist and naturalist, was born at Birmingham in 1810. He long resided in Italy, and his first work appeared in 'Illustrations of the Scenery of Rome and its Neighbourhood,' by W. B. Cooke. On his return home from Italy, he made a series of drawings of British butterflies and moths, with their caterpillars, and the plants on which they feed, which were published with text by J. O. Westwood in 1844. He also published two volumes of illustrations of Froissart's 'Chronicles,' 1843; and, in connection with Owen Jones, 'The Illuminated Books of the Middle Ages,' 1848. He was also much occupied in making ornamental designs for books, and other illustrations. He died in London in 1879.

HUMPHREYS, WILLIAM, a line engraver, was born at Dublin in 1793. He went to America at an early age, and produced a large number of plates, in illustration of the works of American poets; he was also much employed at Philadelphia upon engraving vignettes for bankers' notes. He afterwards came to England, where he was employed on similar work, and engraved the head of Queen Victoria on some of the postage-stamps. Besides these minor works, he executed with great ability some important plates, as well as several illustrations for the 'Bijou,' 'Forget-me-not,' and other Annuals. During the latter years of his life, however, he gave up engraving as a profession, and became accountant in the musical firm of Messrs. Novello. He died in 1865 at Genoa, whither he had gone for the sake of his health. His most important works are:

The Reading Magdalene; after Correggio.
Kitty Fisher; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
The Coquette (Madame Schindler); after the same.
Master Lambton; after Sir Thomas Lawrence.
Sancho and the Duchess; after C. R. Leslie.

HUNÆUS, ANDREAS HERMAN, a Danish painter, who was deaf and dumb, was born at Kolding in 1814. In 1831 he entered the Academy, where two years later he produced his first portrait that attracted attention. From 1841 he devoted himself entirely to portrait painting, among his sitters being the Princess Dagmar and others. He died at Copenhagen in 1866. He painted also altar-pieces and genre pictures, one of the latter was 'On the Wall of Copenhagen on the Evening of the great Fast Day.'

HUNDERTPFUND, LIBERAT, was born in 1806. His parents intended him for the Church, but gave way to his great desire to be an artist, and allowed him to go to Vienna in 1822. In 1832 he settled in Munich, and for a long time worked at portrait painting unpaid, in order to gain experience. His stay there was so unfortunate that he intended to leave, and to try his fortune as a travelling artist, when he received an unexpected commission to paint the portrait of Dillis, the director of the Munich Gallery, for King Louis. This was the beginning of his career. He became a favourite portrait painter, and afterwards very successful in his genre pictures. He signed them '100$.' He died in 1878.

HUNGAR, JOHANN MICHAEL, was born at Rapperschwyl in 1634, and after studying in Milan travelled through the chief cities of Italy, and formed his style upon that of Annibale Carracci. In 1654 he returned and worked in the churches and convents of Switzerland and its adjacent states. He died in 1714. One of his best works is 'The Martyrdom of St. Laurence,' painted for the parish church of his birthplace.

HUNGERMÜLLER, JOSEPH, was born at Nuremberg in 1777. He was a decorative painter, and among his works were the ceilings of the Court Theatre at Munich, and the Cemetery Church. He died in 1820.

HUNIN, PIERRE PAUL ALOIS, a Flemish painter of genre subjects and interiors, was born at Mechlin in 1808. He at first studied under his father and F. De Brakelaer, and then went to Paris, where he placed himself under Ingres and Cogniet. He died in 1855. Amongst his works are:

The Distribution of Alms. (Brussels Gallery.)
A Young Girl praying for her Mother. 1834.
Reading the Will. (Berlin National Gallery.) 1845.
A Father's Blessing.

HUNKELER, HANS GEORG, a painter, was born in 1682 in the canton of Lucerne. He painted historical subjects and pictures for churches. He served in the Swiss Guard at Rome, and died in 1740.

HUNNEMAN, CHRISTOPHER WILLIAM, a portrait and miniature painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1777 till his death in the year 1793.

HUNT, CHARLES, a subject painter, was born in 1803. He occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions, one of his latest works being 'Make Way for the Grand Jury!' He died in 1877.

HUNT, WILLIAM HENRY, a still-life and subject painter in water-colours, was born in London in 1790. After considerable objection on the part of his father, a tin-plate worker, he was apprenticed to John Varley, and he also received much help in his early efforts from Dr. Munro. In 1807 he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he had first exhibited in the previous year. About this time he found employment in teaching, and in painting views of gentlemen's seats. He first exhibited at the Water-Colour Society in 1814 on the occasion of the split amongst its members, but he did not join the Society till 1824, when he was elected an Associate, and in 1827 a full member. Thenceforth he contributed regularly to its exhibitions, frequently sending from twenty to thirty drawings in a year. In his early period Hunt painted landscapes, poultry, and vegetables; he then inclined to humorous rustic subjects; and in his later years he painted fruit and flowers with a wondrous fidelity. He was deformed, and throughout his life he suffered greatly from weak health, on account of which he spent much time at Hastings, where he obtained many of his rustic subjects. He died in London in 1864. Amongst his works are:

The Attack.
The Defeat.
The Laboratory.
The Orphans.
An Itinerant.
Mulatto Girl.
The Ballad-Singer.
The Awakened Conscience. 1853.
The Cricketer.
A Cold Morning.
Contemplation. (Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool.)
The Combat.
The Barber's Shop.
Thy Kingdom come!
Devotion.
Reading the League.
Boy and Goat. 1836.
A Brown Study.
The Monk.
The Doubtful Coin.
The Valentine.
A Smoked Pilchard.
Hawthorn Blossoms and Bird's Nest.
Grapes, Melons, and Plums.
Dead Humming Bird.
Study of Hyacinths.
Study of Rose Grey—a Mushroom.

HUNT, WILLIAM MORRIS, an American painter, was born at Brattleborough (Vermont) in 1824. He was originally intended for a sculptor, but took to studying painting, first at Düsseldorf, and then under Couture at Paris, where he became intimate with Millet. In 1855 he returned to America, and resided for some time at Newport, but finally settled at Boston, where he had a large practice in teaching. He published in 1875 a work embodying his views, and entitled, 'Talks on Art.' He died in 1879. His early works were portraits, but he subsequently devoted himself successively to genre, to history, and finally to landscape. The following are amongst his best productions:

Girl by a Fountain.
The Bugle Call.
The Drummer Boy.
The Laughing Girl.
Flight of Night.
Discoverer.
Ormuzd and Ahriman. } (Albany Capitol.)
Ulysses and the Sirens. }
The Street Musician.
Child selling Violets.
Portrait of Abraham Lincoln.
Dinan, Brittany.

HUNTER, JOHN KELSO, a Scottish portrait painter, was born in 1803. He was a popular artist, and died at Pollokshields, near Glasgow, in 1873.

HUNTER, ROBERT, was an Irish portrait painter, who had a large practice in Dublin in the 18th century, and was instrumental in founding the school of art of the Royal Dublin Society. Amongst his portraits are:

Rev. L. Madden. 1745.
Earl of Buckinghamshire. (Mansion House, Dublin.) 1780.

HUOT, ADOLPHE JOSEPH, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1839. He was a pupil of Henriquel-Dupont and Cogniet, and in 1862 gained the 'prix de Rome.' He died at Cannes in 1883. Amongst his chief works are:

The Burial of St. Catharine; after Luini.
Portrait of Descartes; after F. Hals.
Portrait of a Young Girl; after Gérard.
The Florentine Poet; after Cabanel.
The Virgin of Deliverance; after Hébert.

HUQUIER, GABRIEL, a French engraver and art-dealer, was born at Orleans in 1695. A satirical piece against the Jesuits having been ascribed to him, he was compelled to flee to London, where he died in 1772. Much confusion appears to exist between this artist and his son Jacques Gabriel; in fact, the two worked conjointly, and some of the following plates assigned to the father were certainly the work of both:

The Five Senses; after Watteau.
 The Temple of Diana, and the Temple of Neptune;
after the same.
 The Triumph of Galatea; after the same.
 A Shepherd caught in a Storm; after the same.
 Four Pastoral subjects of the Seasons; after the same.
 The Four Elements; after the same.
 A large Pastoral subject; after Boucher.
 The Five Senses; after the same.
 The Four Seasons; after the same.
 Two Books of Studies; after the same.
 A series of sixty subjects from the Life of Christ; after Claude Gillot.

HUQUIER, JACQUES GABRIEL, the son of Gabriel Huquier, was born in Paris in 1725, and was a pupil of his father. In later life he came to England (where his father already was), and worked in London, exhibiting occasionally at the Royal Academy between the years 1771 and 1786. About 1783 he was living at Cambridge; but he died at Shrewsbury in 1805. He took portraits in crayons, and engraved a large number of plates, many of them in conjunction with his father; the first as well as the two last of the list given under that artist belong equally to the son, and perhaps others besides. Of the latter's separate execution are the following:

Le Répos champêtre.
 Le Sommeil.
 Le Réveil.
 Two Corps de Gardes.
 A Girl with a Bird, and The Infant Travellers; a pair.

HURD, NATHANIEL, an engraver, was born at Boston, in the United States, in 1730. In seal-cutting and die-engraving he was considered superior to any one in the colonies. Among his engravings is a descriptive representation of Hudson, a swindler and forger, standing in the pillory. He was probably the first to engrave on copper in the United States, and with a superior mode of execution he was quite 'Hogarthian' in his humour. He died in 1777.

HURDIS, JOHN HENRY, an amateur etcher, was born in 1800. He studied engraving under Heath, and made many etchings of the neighbourhood of Lewes, where he resided. He died at Southampton in 1857.

HURET, GRÉGOIRE, a French engraver, was born at Lyons about 1600. He was received as an Academician in 1663, his presentation work being the 'Théâtre de la Passion,' a series of thirty plates of the Passion of Christ, engraved from his own designs. He died in Paris in 1670. His works comprised subjects from sacred as well as contemporary history, and also allegorical pieces and portraits. He also wrote a work upon architecture. There are 420 plates known to have been engraved by him, among which are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Pierre Séguier, Chancellor of France.
 François de Bonne, Duke de Lesdiguières; after Du Monstier.
 Jacques Boyceau, Sieur de la Barauderie; after A. De Vries.

SUBJECTS FROM HIS OWN DESIGNS.

The Holy Family, with St. Catharine.
 Christ crowned with Thorns.
 The Stoning of Stephen.
 St. Peter preaching.

HURLSTONE, RICHARD, a portrait painter, practised in London towards the end of the 18th century. He obtained a Society of Arts' premium in 1764, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1771 to 1780. He was killed by lightning on Salisbury Plain.

HURLSTONE, FREDERICK YEATES, a portrait and historical painter, was born in London in 1800. He entered the schools of the Royal Academy in 1820, and in 1823 obtained the gold medal for his 'Archangel Michael and Satan contending for the body of Moses.' He also studied under Beechey, Lawrence, and Haydon. He occasionally exhibited at the Academy from 1821, and also at the British Institution, but the majority of his works appeared at the Society of British Artists, of which he was elected a member in 1831, and held the office of president from 1835 until his death. The range of his subjects was much enlarged by visits to Italy in 1835, to Spain in 1851-52, and to Morocco in 1854. Throughout his life he was much opposed to the Royal Academy, and at the parliamentary inquiry of 1835 gave evidence against that body. He died in 1869. Amongst his best works are:

The Enchantress Armida. (Bridgewater Gallery.)
 Peasant Girl of Sorrento. (The same.)
 The Game of Mora.
 The Prisoner of Chillon. (Lord Tankerville.)
 Boabdil mourning the fall of Granada.
 Columbus asking Alms.
 Margaret of Anjou, and Edward, Prince of Wales, after the Battle of Hexham.
 Constance and Arthur.
 Monks at the Convent of St. Isidore.
 Eros. (Marquis of Lansdowne, Bowood.)
 A Venetian Page. (Grosvenor House, London.)
 Haidee aroused from her Trance.
 Card-players in a Posada in Andalusia.

HÜRNING, HANS, (or HORNING, or HORNUNG,) a wood-engraver from Mutenau, came in 1461 to Nördlingen, where, in conjunction with the painter Friedrich Walter, he prepared a 'Biblia Pauperum' (1470), which is composed of a series of woodcuts, with short descriptions, depicting the history of the Old and New Testaments.

HURTER, JOHANN HEINRICH, a miniature painter in enamel, was born at Schaffhausen in 1734. In 1776 he was at the Hague, and the following year in Paris. He also visited London on the invitation of Lord Dartrey, and appears to have remained in England from 1779 to 1784, after which he returned to Switzerland. His works are mostly copies from Sir Joshua Reynolds and other portrait painters.

HURTER, KASPAR, was an historical painter, who flourished at Schaffhausen about 1623, and at Memmingen in 1627.

HURTREL, ARSÈNE CHARLES NARCISSE, a French historical and portrait painter, was born at Lille in 1817. He studied at Armentières and Lille, and in 1834 went to Paris to become a pupil of Ingres, whom he followed to Rome in 1835. He returned to France in 1840, and exhibited at the Salon from 1841 to 1861, in which year he died at Lille. Amongst his works are:

St. John the Baptist. (Lille Museum.)
 She is mad! (Donai Museum.)
 Coronation of the Virgin. (Church at Beaucamps.)

The Martyrdom of St. Chrysole. (Church at Commines.)
Jesus calling little children. (St. Etienne, Lille.)
'Un petit chou, s'il vous plaît.'

HUS, PIETER. See HUYS.

HÜSENER, AUGUSTE, an engraver, was born in 1789, and died at Berlin in 1877. She was a pupil of Buchhorn, and engraved the pictures by German artists in the Berlin Exhibition for the 'Pocket Calendar' of 1838 and 1841.

HUSMAN, JOHAN, a Danish engraver, was a native of Copenhagen, who flourished about 1674 until the close of the century.

HUSSARD, LOUIS CHARLES, was a French fruit and flower painter, who died in Paris in 1857.

HUSSEY, GILES, was born at Marnhull, in Dorsetshire, in 1710, and descended from a very ancient family. He commenced his studies with Richardson, but left him for Vincenzo Damini, a Venetian artist, with whom he went to Italy, where he was robbed of all his property by his master. He was, however, relieved from this distress, and enabled to prosecute his studies at Bologna and at Rome for several years. Not being satisfied with the instruction he received, he aimed at establishing some fixed principles; this led him in search of a theory, which ended in his adopting the ancient hypothesis of musical, or harmonic, proportions, as being the governing principle of beauty, in all forms producible by art, and even by nature. Delighted with this discovery, as he thought it, he continued his studies at Rome, with increasing pleasure and reputation. In 1737 he returned to England, but did not settle in London till 1742. He was now obliged to submit to paint portraits for a subsistence, and to experience the opposition of his professional brethren, whose envy was excited by his mastery and graceful performances. This treatment affected his spirits, and he left London for his native place, where, in 1773, by the death of his brother, he succeeded to the family estate, but after five years he resigned it to a relative, and led a retired and religious life till 1788, when he died at Beeston, near Ashburton, in Devonshire.

HUSSEY, PHILIP, an Irish portrait painter, was born at Cork early in the 18th century. He was self-taught, and practised in Dublin, where he died, in 1782.

HUSSON, JEANNE ÉLIZABETH. See CHAUDET.

HUTER, SIMON, a German artist, flourished about the year 1560. He engraved very neatly on wood, and executed several cuts from the designs of Jost Amman. His prints are by no means devoid of merit. They are usually marked with the cipher SF. He executed, conjointly with Virgilius Solis, part of a set of small cuts for the 'History of the Bible'; also, in conjunction with Jost Amman, part of the small prints for a work, entitled 'Neuwe Biblische Figuren,' printed at Frankfurt, in 1564, from the designs of Jost Amman.

HUTIN, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French painter, engraver, and sculptor, was born in Paris in 1715. He studied painting under François Le Moine, and in his twenty-first year obtained the great prize for historical painting, and went to Rome, where he spent seven years. After his return to Paris in 1746, he was received into the Academy. In 1748 he went to Dresden, and prepared drawings for the publication of the 'Dresden Gallery.' He became director of the Academy in that city, and died there in 1776. A frieze and a 'Crucifixion' by him are in the Court chapel at Dresden; and in the Gallery is the picture of a 'Girl with a Letter.' Of his engravings there are in particular thirty-five plates, entitled 'Recueil de différents Sujets composés et gravés par Charles Hutin,' Dresden, 1716.

HUTIN, PIERRE, a French designer and engraver, brother of Charles Hutin, studied sculpture in Paris, and then went to Dresden and assisted his brother in the preparation of the 'Dresden Gallery.' He also etched eight plates after his own designs, signed P. H. inv. et fec. 1754, and one after his brother.

HUYBERTS, C., was a Dutch engraver, who resided in England about the year 1696. He engraved some anatomical subjects, and the 'Triumph of Julius Cæsar,' in nine plates, after Andrea Mantegna.

HUYGENS, CONSTANTIJN, a draughtsman, born at the Hague in 1628, and died in 1697, was the eldest son of Constantijn Huygens, the poet. He executed several portraits, among which was one of his father, engraved by Cornelis Visscher. He has left also some engravings, among which may be named:

The Flight into Egypt; after Brueghel.

View of Messina; after the same.

Apollo and the Muses; after Frans Floris.

Portrait of Queen Mary of Hungary.

HUYGENS, LUCAS, who was a painter and an engraver on wood and metal, was born at Leyden in 1494. So early as his ninth year he engraved original compositions on copper, and in his twelfth year he painted the entire legend of St. Hubert. He received his instruction from Cornelis Engelbrechtsen, and by his fourteenth year he was already recognized as an artist of repute. He was continually out of health, but apparently did not allow this to hinder him in his work. He died in 1533. One of his best pictures is that of a 'Madonna enthroned,' in the Munich Gallery.

HUYS, LAMBERT, was a Flemish painter, who worked at the Hague about 1664. He is supposed to have died at Amsterdam.

HUYS, PIETER, a Flemish painter, was made a master of the Antwerp Guild in 1545, and was still living in 1571. He was an imitator of Quentin Massys, and there is a picture of 'The Bagpiper' by him in the Berlin Gallery.

HUYS, PIETER, (or Hus,) was a Flemish engraver who resided at Antwerp in the latter part of the 16th century, and by whom there are some small prints of Scriptural subjects, and the plates in the 'Monumenta Humanæ Salutis,' by Arius Montanus, 1571. It is possible that he may be identical with the painter of the same name.

HUYSMANS, CORNELIS, (also called HOUSEMAN,) was born at Antwerp in 1648. He was the son of Hendrik Huysmans, an eminent architect, who purposed bringing him up to his own profession, but dying when his son was very young, the latter was placed under the tuition of Gaspar De Witte. The landscapes of Jacques d'Arthois were then in the highest estimation, and Huysmans went to Brussels for the purpose of studying under that master, by whom he was kept so closely to drawing that he could only practise painting by night. The fine forest of Soignies, in the vicinity of that city, was the scene of his studies, and his pictures represent the most interesting views of it. He in 1682 settled at Mechlin, but removed to Antwerp in 1702. In 1716, however, he returned to Mechlin, where he resided the remainder of his life, and died in 1727. He is often called 'Huysmans of Mechlin.' He embellished the foregrounds of his pictures with plants, and the foliage of his trees is light and spirited. His pictures are decorated with figures and cattle, well drawn, and pleasingly grouped. They have, however, become very dark, and this has considerably diminished their value. His best work is 'The Disciples at Emmaus,' in the church of Notre-Dame at Mechlin. He supplied the figures in the landscapes of other painters, and the backgrounds in their historical pictures. There are pictures by him in the galleries of Antwerp, Berlin, Cassel, Dresden, Edinburgh, and Glasgow.

HUYSMANS, JACOB, (also called HOUSEMAN,) was born at Antwerp in 1656, and was probably related to Cornelis Huysmans. He was a scholar of Gillis Backereel, and became a good historical and portrait painter. He visited England in the reign of Charles II., and met with great encouragement, although Sir Peter Lely was then in the height of his fame. Among the beauties at Windsor is the portrait of a lady by this artist, which is little inferior to those by Lely. His best portrait, however, is considered to be that of Queen Catharine of Braganza, in Buckingham Palace. He also painted a very beautiful portrait of the Duchess of Richmond, in the habit of a cavalier in the time of the civil war; buff, with blue ribands. There are portraits of Queen Catharine of Braganza and of Colonel William Legge by him in the National Portrait Gallery. His portrait of Izaak Walton is in the National Gallery, and that of Lady Byron, or, according to some, Lady Bellasys, is at Hampton Court. He died in London in 1696.

HUYSMANS, JACOBUS CAROLUS, was born at Breda in 1776. He was a pupil of J. H. Fredericks, a flower painter of Breda, and in 1802 he went to study at Antwerp. He returned to Breda in 1804, and was appointed Director of the Military Academy, which post he had to resign in 1837, on account of his becoming totally blind. He died at Ginneken, near Breda, in 1859.

HUYSMANS, JAN BAPTIST, a Flemish landscape painter, the brother and pupil of Cornelis Huysmans, was born at Antwerp in 1654, and so early as 1677 was a master in the Guild of St. Luke. He appears to have been in Italy, and his paintings have often been sold as Ruissdael's. He died at Antwerp in 1716. There is a landscape on a large scale, dated 1697, in the Brussels Gallery, and others are in the Dijon Museum and the Schleissheim Gallery.

HUYSMANS, MICHEL, a Flemish painter, was one of the pupils of Jan van Hemishem. He was admitted as a master into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1535.

HUYSSING, HANS, was a Swedish painter who came from Stockholm to London in 1700, and painted the three eldest Princesses in their attire on the day of the Coronation of George II. He worked up to 1740, and died in England.

HUYSUM, JACOB VAN, the youngest son of Justus van Huysum the elder, was born at Amsterdam about the year 1687. His chief merit consisted in copying and imitating the delicate pictures of Jan van Huysum, which he did so successfully that they have sometimes been mistaken for the works of that master. He came to England in 1721, and would have been thought an excellent painter in his way, if his brother had not preceded him. He did not always copy the works of Jan, but painted similar subjects from his own designs, which, though less finished, and less delicately coloured, are not without great merit. He died in London in 1740.

HUYSUM, JAN VAN, a celebrated flower-painter, was the eldest son of Justus van Huysum, and was born at Amsterdam in 1682. He was instructed by his father, and it was not long before he could dispense with assistance. Having seen some of the best productions of De Heem and Mignon, he was ambitious of surpassing them, by an attentive study of the most exquisite flowers and fruits in nature. His taste in the arrangement of his groups is superior to that of any other flower-painter; and his pictures are so perfectly finished, that they seem to rival the velvet softness of nature. The fame of Van Huysum rose to the highest pitch, and the first florists of Holland were ambitious of supplying him with their choicest flowers for the subjects of his pictures. He usually arranged them in elegant vases, of which the ornaments and bas-reliefs were finished in the most polished and beautiful manner. His fruit-pieces, though admirable, are inferior to his flowers. Those painted on a clear or yellow ground are most esteemed, and are distinguished from his early works, which are usually on a dark one, by a superior style of pencilling, and a more harmonious colour. He frequently introduced a bird's nest, with eggs, into his pictures, which, as well as the insects, butterflies, dew-drops, &c., are represented with a truth and precision that give a perfect illusion. Jan van Huysum also distinguished himself as a landscape painter. His pictures of that description are painted in imitation of Glauber and De Lairese, and are more estimable for the neatness of their execution than originality of style or truth of colouring. Two Flower-pieces by him are in the National Gallery; a Fruit-piece is in the Dulwich Gallery; and a 'Bouquet' in the Bridgewater Gallery. Other paintings of Van Huysum's are to be met with at Amsterdam, Berlin, Copenhagen, Dresden, Dublin, Frankfort, Glasgow, the Hague, Munich, Paris, Stockholm, and Vienna. There are also admirable water-colour pictures and pencil drawings by him. He died at Amsterdam in 1749.

HUYSUM, JUSTUS VAN, the elder, a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1659. He was educated under Berchem, and painted landscapes with animals in his style; but he also executed portraits, battles, sea-pieces, and flowers, and the versatility of his talent rendered him successful in all, though he would probably have established a more solid reputation by devoting himself to one particular branch. His pictures of flowers and fruit appear to have been the most esteemed of his works. He died in 1716.

HUYSUM, JUSTUS VAN, the younger, was the younger brother of Jan van Huysum, and was born at Amsterdam about the year 1684. He painted battle-pieces with extraordinary spirit and facility; a specimen of which is to be seen at Brunswick. He was cut off in the bloom of life, at the age of twenty-two.

HYGIEMON, an early Greek monochromist, is one of the artists to whom some have assigned the invention of filling up the contour of the figure with a single colour.

HYRE, LAURENT DE LA. See DE LA HIRE.

HYRTL, JAKOB, an Austrian draughtsman and engraver, was born at Vienna in 1799. By the help of Prince Esterhazy, he studied design in the Academy of his native city, and engraving under Professor Fischer. He was afterwards engaged in bookselling. He died at Vienna in 1868. Among his plates are the following:

Bas-reliefs at Vienna of the Twelve Apostles.
Interior View of the Cathedral of St. Stephen at Vienna.
The Monument of the Emperor Frederick III.
View of Vienna; after J. Fischer.
View of the Campo Vaccino; after Benedixen.
Portrait of Mercadante.
The Catacombs; after Platzer.
In Prison; after Steenoyck.
The Port of Amsterdam; after Bakhuisen.
Christ before Pilate; after Honthorst.
Baglioni Malatesta; after Parmigianino.
The Enchanted Rose; after Machold.

IASER, MARIE MARGUERITE FRANÇOISE. See ROUCHIER.

IBBETSON, JULIUS CÆSAR, a landscape, marine, and figure painter, was born at Masham, in Yorkshire, in 1759. When seventeen years of age he painted a theatrical scene, which gained him reputation, and soon afterwards he came up to London, and worked for a time for picture-dealers. In the years 1785-87 he exhibited three views from the neighbourhood of London at the Royal Academy, and in 1788 accompanied Colonel Cathcart's embassy to China. On his return he recommenced sending pictures to the Academy; his works, in oil and water-colours, representing coast scenes, and afterwards landscapes with figures and cattle. In 1794 the loss of his wife, following upon that of eight of his eleven children, rendered him seriously ill, and brought on other troubles which led him to drinking and to debt. Four years later he had to flee to the north to escape his creditors, but he returned to London in 1800. In the next year he married again, and removed to the village of his birth, from whence in 1812 he sent his last pictures to the Academy. He died at Masham in 1817. Benjamin West called him "The Berchem of England." In the South Kensington Museum are the following examples of his art:

Tigers in a Jungle.
Jack in his Glory.
Landscape, with rustic bridge and stream.
The Mermaid's Haunt.
The Sailor's Return Home. (Water-colours.)
View in the Isle of Wight. (Water-colours.)

IBI, SINIBALDI, was an Italian painter, who flourished in the early part of the 16th century. He probably resided at Gubbio, and was a member of the Guild of Perugia in 1527. In 1507 he finished a picture of the 'Virgin and Child, between SS. Sebastian and Ubaldo,' for one of the altar-pieces in the cathedral of Gubbio, being then the companion of Orlando of Perugia. In the collection of the Marquis Ranghiasi at Gubbio is a canvas banner representing a 'Virgin of Mercy,' which is attributed to him, and in the Gallery at Perugia is an 'Annunciation' painted by him in 1528. The dates of his birth and death are alike unknown.

IDSINGA, WILHELMINA GERTRUDA VAN, was born at Leeuwarden in 1788. She studied under Van der Kooi, and painted portraits and made copies of the works of the old masters in such a way as to show considerable talent. She died in 1819.

IGLESIA, FRANCISCO IGNACIO RUIZ DE LA. See RUIZ DE LA IGLESIA.

IGNATIUS, OTTO, a Russian historical and still-life painter, was born at Revel in Esthonia in 1794. In the Hermitage at St. Petersburg is a picture of 'Eleanor of Este rewarding Tasso for his poem.' He died in 1824.

IGONET, MARIA MADDALENA, was a native of Genoa, who was working in Paris from 1752 to 1767. She executed a charming etching of 'Painting,' after Boucher, 'Sculpture,' after Pierre, and other subjects after Boucher, Étienne Jeaurat, Villebois, Mieris, and other masters.

IHLE, JOHANN EBERHARD, born at Esslingen in 1727, was a son and pupil of Johann Jakob Ihle, a portrait painter of some reputation. In 1749 he went to Nuremberg, and attended the Academy, of which in 1771 he was appointed director. He excelled in portraits and scenes from popular life. He died in 1814.

ILLESCAS, BERNABE XIMENEZ DE. See XIMENEZ DE ILLESCAS.

ILLIDGE, THOMAS HENRY, a portrait painter, was born at Birmingham in 1799. Having at an early age shown a taste for drawing, he was placed successively under Mather Brown and William Bradley. He seems at first to have preferred landscape painting, but having married early, and with a young family to support, he took to portrait painting, as he found it more profitable. He lived for many years in Liverpool, but removed to London in 1842, from which date he constantly exhibited portraits at the Royal Academy. Besides showing much talent as a portrait painter, he was a man of great abilities and refined cultivation, highly respected in private life. He died in London in 1851.

IMBERT, BERTRAND, was a French painter who flourished in the 16th century, and was living at Avignon in 1580 or 1600.

IMBERT, JOSEPH GABRIEL, a French painter, was born at Marseilles in 1654. He was a scholar of Charles Le Brun, and afterwards of A. F. van der Meulen. He had acquired considerable reputation as a painter of history, when he became a monk of the order of St. Bruno, at the Carthusian monastery of Villeneuve-lès-Avignon, in the thirty-fourth year of his age. He was afterwards chiefly employed in painting altar-pieces for the churches of his order, particularly that of his own monastery. His most esteemed work is the 'Calvary' over the high altar of the Carthusian church at Marseilles. He died at Villeneuve-lès-Avignon in 1740.

IMBERT DES MOTTELETTES, HENDRIK, was born at Bruges in 1764, and as he showed a decided talent for drawing, he was instructed in its elements by Garemyn. He then conceived the idea of embracing the monastic life, and with that purpose he went to France and entered a Capuchin monastery, but on the outbreak of the French Revolution he returned to his native city. He then devoted himself to copying the works of the great masters, and to the restoration of pictures. A copy by him of a fruit piece after Van den Broeck was purchased by the Empress Joséphine, and afterwards, by her son Eugène Beauharnais, conveyed with the rest of her collection to Munich. From 1803 to 1811 Imbert was too much occupied with his duties as a judge to devote any time to painting, but on his resignation in 1830 he again resumed his brush, and also applied himself to finish a 'Biography of Painters,' which occupied all his spare moments. He finished two volumes, but death overtook him in 1837, and so the work was stopped.

IMMENRAET, ANDRIES, a Flemish landscape painter, the youngest son of Philips Augustijn Immenraet, was born at Antwerp in 1662, but the date of his death is not known. Among other views he painted that of the 'Castle of Gaasbeek,' dated 1699.

IMMENRAET, MICHEL ENGEL, a Flemish historical painter, a son of Philips Augustijn Immenraet, was born at Antwerp in 1621. He was a member of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1663, and afterwards went to Holland, and died in poverty at Utrecht in 1683. A picture by him, representing 'The Continence of Scipio,' has been recently discovered at Antwerp.

IMMENRAET, PHILIPS AUGUSTIJN. The entry 'HEMELRAET' on page 642 of the present volume is incorrect. The artist's name should be as here given; the date of his birth should be 1627, and the date of his death, 1679. He had four sons, three of whom, Michiel Engel, Philips Augustijn, and Andries, were painters.

IMOLA, GIOVANNI DOMENICO DA. See FERRETTI.

IMOLA, INNOCENZO DA. See FRANCUCCI.

IMPARATO, FRANCESCO, was born at Naples about 1530. He was first a disciple of Giovanni Filippo Criscuolo, but afterwards studied under Titian, at Venice. On his return to Naples, he painted in that master's style a picture for Santa Maria Nuova, of the 'Martyrdom of St. Andrew.' His most esteemed work was his picture of 'St. Peter Martyr,' in the church dedicated to that saint. In San Severino is another fine picture of the 'Annunciation.' He was living in 1565.

IMPARATO, GIROLAMO, was the son of Francesco Imperato, and flourished at Naples. Having been instructed in the rudiments of art by his father, he went to Rome and then to Venice, where he passed some time with Tintoretto and the younger Palma. He afterwards travelled through Lombardy, and studied the works of Correggio at Parma. He died about 1620. His most esteemed work was his picture of 'La Madonna del Rosario,' with several Saints, and a glory of Angels, in the church of San Tommaso d'Aquino at Naples; another 'Virgin with Saints' by him is in San Severino in the same city.

IMPERIALI, GIROLAMO, was a native of Genoa, who flourished about the year 1640. He first applied himself to the study of painting, but quitted that pursuit to learn engraving under Giulio Bensi. There are several portraits and other etchings by him.

IMPERIATO, GIOVANNI, was a native of Asti, who flourished in the 14th century. In the accounts of the stewards of the Duke of Orleans at Asti, dated 1387, money is recorded as paid to Johannes Imperiato, a citizen of Asti, a painter, for painting twelve banners.

INCE, JOSEPH MURRAY, a water-colour painter, was born at Presteign in 1806. He studied with David Cox from 1823 to 1826, and then came to London. He occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy and at the Society of British Artists. About 1832 he was living at Cambridge, but inheriting some family property at Presteign, he afterwards resided and probably died there shortly before 1860. The following are specimens of his works:

London. South Kensington Museum.	} A suburban Street. 1832.
" "	Greenwich Hospital. 1833.
" "	Coasting Vessels, with Harbour. 1836.
Dublin. Nat. Gall.	The Vigil.

INDIA, BERNARDINO, the son of Tullio India, was born at Verona, probably about the year 1535, and after receiving his first instruction from his father, he completed his studies under Giulio Romano. His works are dated from 1568 to 1584, and consist of several ceiling pictures and other frescoes in the palaces of Verona and the Casa Tieni at Vicenza, and oil paintings of 'The Birth of the Saviour' and 'The Virgin with SS. Roch and Sebastian' (1579), in the church of San Bernardino, and 'The Fall of St. Paul' (1584), in SS. Nazario e Celso.

INDIA, TULLIO, was a native of Verona, who flourished about the year 1530. He imitated Paolo Veronese in his colourings. The frieze of the Casa Miniscalchi at Verona is by him, as also four Saints in San Giorgio.

INDUNO, DOMENICO, a painter, originally a goldsmith, was born at Milan in 1815, and studied at the Academy of that city, as well as under Sabatelli and at Rome. He tried successively the classical and romantic schools, but afterwards settled down to depict popular life at Milan. In 1848 he took part with the Revolutionists, and had in consequence to flee to Switzerland. Thence he passed to Tuscany, and did not return home until 1859. He died at Milan in 1878. Among his paintings are mentioned:

The Beggars.
The Conflagration.
Bread and Tears.
The Dead-house.
The Despatch.
The Smugglers.
The Soldier's Tear.
The Crown of Roses.
Samuel and David.

INEMER, FÉLIX VICTOR, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1801. He studied under Perron, Lethière, and Bertin, and died in Paris in 1865.

INGALTON, WILLIAM, a subject painter, was born at Worpleston, in Surrey, in 1794. He excelled in domestic and rustic scenes, and exhibited at the British Institution and at the Royal Academy from 1816 to 1823. Owing to ill health, he became an architect about 1825, and practised at Windsor. He died at Clewer in 1866.

INGEGNO, L'. See ALOVIGI.

INGEN, WILLEM VAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Utrecht in 1650 or 1651. After learning the rudiments of design in his native city, he was placed under Pieter De Grebber at Haarlem, and studied under him until he was twenty years of age, when he travelled to Rome, and there spent a year in the school of Carlo Maratti. He afterwards went to Venice, where the charm of Venetian colouring seems to have seduced him from due attention to drawing. On his return to Holland, he settled at Amsterdam, and painted portraits with considerable success. He died at Amsterdam, but the year of his death is not known.

INGHAM, CHARLES CROMWELL, a portrait painter, was born at Dublin in 1796. After studying for four years at the Dublin Academy, he went to the United States in 1817, and soon stood in the first rank as a portrait painter. He was a founder of the National Academy of Design, and for many years its vice-president. Besides a great number of portraits of the reigning beauties of New York, his 'Death of Cleopatra,' which first brought him into notice, 'Flower Girl,' 'Day Dream,' and 'Portrait of a Child' may be cited as good examples of his style. He died at New York in 1863.

INGLES, EL MAESTRO JORGE, chiefly spoken of as 'MASTER GEORGE,' is known by some church paintings executed at Granada about the year 1455, when the Marquis de Santillana employed him to decorate the side walls and the high altar of the chapel of the Buitrago Hospital, 'St. George' being painted upon the altar itself. From the common appellation of this artist, and still more from the fact of the word 'Ingles' being the Spanish for 'Englishman,' it is quite possible that he was a native of this country.

INGLES, JOSÉ, was born at Valencia in 1718, and became a pupil of Richarte, and subsequently vice-director of the Academy of his native city. He was a successful portrait painter, and has also left some ecclesiastical pictures in the monastery of La Merced, the church of the Augustines, and that of Campanar. He died at Valencia in 1786.

INGLIS, HESTER, practised as an ornamental designer in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. To the former she presented a copy in French of the Psalms of David in her own writing, which is now in the Library of Christ Church College, Oxford. Her manuscripts were very curious, and she also executed emblems, a collection of which is in the Royal Library.

INGOLI, MATTEO, called IL RAVENNATE, was born at Ravenna in 1587. He went young to Venice, where he became a scholar of Luigi Bensatti dal Friso, and studied the works of Palma and Paolo Veronese. He has left two altar-pieces in the church of San Mercedes, also a 'Corpus Christi' and a 'Last Supper' in Sant' Apollinare, and a 'Madonna in Glory' now in the Venice Academy. He fell a victim to the plague, which visited the Venetian states in the year 1631.

INGONI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born at Modena about 1528. He was a rival of Niccolò dell' Abbate, and worked at Rome, Perugia, and Modena. He died in 1608. Few of his works remain.

INGOUF, FRANÇOIS ROBERT, the younger brother of Pierre Charles Ingouf, was born in Paris in 1747, and was instructed in engraving by Flipart. He died in Paris in 1812. He executed a great number of vignettes for the booksellers, and some popular subjects from Benazech and Le Barbier. The following are noticeable among his works:

PORTRAITS.

Jean Jacques Flipart, engraver; a medallion.
Pierre Guillaume Simon, printer.
Bust of Jean Jacques Rousseau; from a model in wax.
Gerard Dou, playing the violin; after a picture by himself.
Armand Jérôme Bignon, master of the ceremonies; after Drouais.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The Nativity; after Raphael.
The same; after Ribera.
Canadians weeping over the Tomb of their Child; after Le Barbier.

A Boy giving a Bird to a Cat; after A. van der Werf.
The Winter Evening; after Freudenberg.
The Soldier on Furlough; after the same.
The Itinerant Merchant; after the same.
The Return of the Labourer; after Benazech.

INGOUF, PIERRE CHARLES, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1746. He was a pupil of Jean Jacques Flipart, in whose style he engraved several plates after different masters, but especially after Greuze. He died in Paris about 1800. Among others the following are by him:

Four Heads of various Characters; after Greuze.
La Paix du Ménage; after Greuze; etched by Moreau, and finished with the graver by P. C. Ingouf.
La bonne Éducation; after the same; by the same.
L'Innocence trompée consolée par l'Amitié (A young Girl caressing a Dog); after the same.
The contented Mother; after P. A. Wille.
The discontented Mother; after the same.
A Scene from 'Tom Jones'; after the same.
The Soap Bubbles; after Mieris.

INGRAM, JOHN, an engraver, was born in London in 1721. After learning the first principles of engraving in his native country, he went, in 1755, to Paris, where he greatly improved his style, and engraved several vignettes, and other ornaments of books, and some plates after Boucher and others. He was afterwards employed in engraving for the Academy of Sciences.

INGRES, JEAN AUGUSTE DOMINIQUE, a French historical painter, was born at Montauban on the 29th August, 1780. His father was a sculptor, and intended that his son should cultivate music as a profession. He actually made considerable progress in that art, and in subsequent years never lost his interest in it, but his predilection for painting proved the stronger. After having received some elementary instruction from Roques, a pupil of Vien at Toulouse, and from Vigan and Briant, two other local professors, he entered the studio of David at the age of seventeen. His version of 'Antiochus sending back the son of Scipio Africanus' obtained the second prize in 1800, and in 1801 he gained the first prize for his 'Achilles receiving the messengers of Agamemnon.' The state of the national finances did not permit of his at once proceeding to Rome, and he meanwhile pursued his studies with several other artists in a deserted Capuchin convent in Paris. During this period he and Greuze—strange contrast—were employed to paint portraits of Napoleon, then First Consul. At length, in 1806, he was enabled to set out for Rome, where he passed the next fourteen years, during which the individuality of his art was gradually developed. He was much influenced by the study of the works of Raphael, so that his style has been described as a combination of Raphael and David. In 1813 he married his first wife, who proved a wise and devoted companion, and he frequently owed much to her counsel. Besides the various easel pictures he produced during his stay in Rome, he painted a series of frescoes for the palace at Monte Cavallo. In 1820 he migrated to Florence, whence, after a stay of four years, he returned to Paris. There he settled, opened an atelier for students, and became the recognized leader of the Classicists against the Romanticists. During this period he painted the 'Apotheosis of Homer' for one of the Louvre ceilings. Tired at length of the incessant strife in support of his principles, he gladly quitted Paris in 1834, and accepted the directorship of the French School at Rome, to the duties of which he devoted himself assiduously. At the expiration of his seven years' term of office he returned to Paris, and was welcomed by his admirers with a banquet. He now began to reap the rewards of his indomitable perseverance. His position was established, and his works commanded good prices. Official recognition also was not lacking: he was promoted to the rank of Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1845, and to that of Grand Officer in 1855. In the Universal Exhibition of this latter year in Paris, an entire saloon was devoted to his works, and he and his chief opponent in art, Delacroix, were awarded gold medals. In 1849 he lost his first wife, and two years after he married again, finding in this second match a worthy successor to the partner of his earlier years. Ingres was a marvellous instance of an active old age; his well-known 'La Source' was produced in 1856, when he was seventy-five, and he painted up to about a week before his death, which took place in Paris on the 14th January, 1867. Personally, Ingres, it must be owned, was far from agreeable to those with whom he came in contact. This may perhaps be ascribed to the fact that his temper became soured in the long and arduous conflict he had to sustain on behalf of his cherished ideas. That he was, however, capable of inspiring sincere attachments is shown by the warm feeling which existed between him and his chief pupil, Hippolyte Flandrin. As regards his art, Ingres' weak point was his colour. It was in his figure drawing that he excelled, and the French classic school owes much to the grace which he imported into the cold and statuesque style of its founders. The following is a list of his chief works:

- Oedipus explaining the Riddle of the Sphinx.* 1808. (Louvre.)
Jupiter and Thetis. 1811. (Aix Museum.)
Christ delivering the Keys to St. Peter. 1820. (Louvre.)
Virgil reading the Æneid to Augustus. (Villa Miollis, Rome.)
The Sleep of Ossian. (Quirinal, Rome.)

La Source. 1856. (Louvre.)
Portrait of Himself. 1804.
The same. 1857. (Uffizi, Florence.) O. J. D.

Fuller particulars of Ingres and his works are to be found in the Vicomte Henri de Laborde's 'Ingres, sa vie, ses travaux, sa doctrine, d'après les notes manuscrites et les lettres du maître,' Paris, 1870, and in Charles Blanc's 'Ingres, sa vie et ses ouvrages,' Paris, 1870.

INMAN, HENRY, an American portrait, subject, and landscape painter, was born at Utica, New York, in 1802. He studied under J. W. Jarvis at New York, where he practised for several years, and rapidly attained eminence. In 1832 he married and settled at Philadelphia, where he had a large practice as a portrait painter. Specimens of this branch of his art are to be found in the New York City Hall, and other public buildings in America. About 1845 he visited Europe, and painted portraits of several English celebrities.

He died at New York in 1846. Amongst his best works are:—

PORTRAITS.

John James Audubon.
 Lafayette. (Albany Capitol.)
 Governor Van Buren. (New York City Hall.)
 William Wirt. (Boston Athenæum.)
 William Penn. (Independence Hall, Philadelphia.)
 Dr. Chalmers.

INNOCENTI, BATTISTA DEGLI. See NALDINI.

INSKIPP, JAMES, a subject painter, was born in 1790. He originally served in the Commissariat Department, but retiring with a pension, he practised as an artist, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1820 to 1841, and at the Society of British Artists from 1825 to 1835. The last twenty-five years of his life he spent at Godalming, where he died in 1868. He published in 1838 'Studies of Heads from Nature.' Amongst his works are:

- A Hencoop. 1840.
 A Windfall.
 A Surrey Peasant returning from Market.
 A Girl making Lace. (Bowood.)
 A Venetian Woman. 1835. (Deepdene, Dorking.)

INTERNARI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a native of Rome, was instructed in the school of Benefiale. He afterwards went to Dresden to make drawings of the works of the great artists. He then devoted himself to portrait painting. In 1756 he went from Dresden to Warsaw, where he died in 1761.

IRACE, SEVERO, a Neapolitan painter, flourished early in the 16th century, and was a disciple of Marco Calabrese. In the church of the Nunziata at Naples is an altar-piece by him, representing the 'Virgin and Child,' with a glory of Angels, and below St. Peter and St. Paul. It is signed with his name, and dated 1534.

IRALA YUSO, FRAY MATIAS ANTONIO, a Spanish painter, was born at Madrid in 1680. He belonged to a rich family at Guipuzcoa, but in 1704 he entered a Franciscan monastery at Madrid, wherein for the remaining forty-eight years of his life he was principally employed in painting pictures of the 'Virgin' and 'Holy Family' for the church of his monastery. He died at Madrid in 1753. Two of his best pictures are, 'St. Francis of Paola giving healing Herbs to the Sick,' at Madrid, and 'St. Thomas Aquinas,' at Alcalá de Henares.

IRELAND, SAMUEL, an engraver and designer, the date of whose birth is not recorded, was a mechanic of Spitalfields, who took to dealing in prints and copying them, till in 1760 he was awarded a medal by the Society of Arts. In 1782 he exhibited at the Royal Academy a drawing of 'Children,' and some landscapes in water-colours. In 1790 he brought out 'A Picturesque Tour through Holland, Brabant, and part of France,' and two years later 'Picturesque Views on the River Thames,' and then similar views on the Medway, Avon, Wye, and Severn—all compiled solely on the authority of others, or drawn from his own imagination, and worked by him in mezzotint. In 1794-99 he published 'Graphic Illustrations of Hogarth' (distinct from the similar work by another Ireland), and lastly, in 1800, 'Picturesque Views of the Inns of Court.' He died in London in 1800. He had a daughter, JANE IRELAND, who was a miniature painter.

IRIARTE, IGNACIO DE, was born in 1620 at Azcoitia, in the province of Guipuzcoa. Having got some knowledge of painting, he went in 1642 to Seville, and entered the school of the elder Herrera. He there learned to use colours, but owing to his incorrect drawing, he devoted himself to landscape painting, in which he attained to great celebrity. In 1646 he was residing at Aracena, but he afterwards returned to Seville. In 1660 he was appointed first secretary to the Academy of Seville, which position he again held from 1667 to 1669. He was for many years the intimate friend of Murillo, and the two artists frequently engaged in joint works, of which Murillo executed the figures, and Iriarte the backgrounds. This partnership was, however, dissolved in consequence of a dispute about a series of pictures on the life of David. The Royal Gallery and the National Museum at Madrid, the Louvre, and the Hermitage, possess examples of his art. In style he resembles Salvator Rosa. He died at Seville in 1685.

ISAACSZ, PIETER, was born in 1569 at Helsingör, in Denmark, where his father, originally of Haarlem, was residing as Dutch Consul. He was a scholar of Cornelis Ketel at Amsterdam, but afterwards studied under Johann von Aachen, and travelled with that master through Germany and Italy. Though he occasionally painted historical subjects, he was more employed as a portrait painter. He resided at Amsterdam till 1607, when he returned to Helsingör, where in 1614 he succeeded to his father's post. He died there in 1625.

ISABEY, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French miniature painter and lithographer, was born at Nancy in 1767. His first instruction was received from Girardet and Claudot, painters to the King of Poland. He went to Paris in 1786, and studied under Dumont, and subsequently under David. His means of living were at first precarious, but having obtained commissions for portraits of Marie Antoinette and the Dukes of Angoulême and Berri, he commenced a career of success, in which he had the good fortune to secure the patronage of each of the successive governments which flourished in France. Napoleon I. appointed him in 1805 first painter to the Empress Joséphine, and afterwards drawing-master to the Empress Marie Louise, cabinet draughtsman, and Director of Fêtes and Ceremonies. Talleyrand sent him to paint the portraits of the plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Vienna in 1814. Louis XVIII. and many of the European Sovereigns sat to him; Charles X. made him his cabinet painter; and Louis Philippe in 1837 appointed him Honorary Conservator of Public Museums. He died in Paris in 1855. Isabey has himself told the story of his life in his 'Mémoires,' portions of which have been published by M. Edmond Taigny in his 'Isabey, sa vie et ses œuvres,' Paris, 1859, 8vo. Among his works in public or royal collections are:

Baden Baden.	Gallery.	Portrait of the Grand-Duke of Baden; full-length.
Nancy.	Museum.	Portrait of Napoleon I. (in oil).
"	"	Portrait of the King of Rome, at the age of three.
Paris.	Louvre.	View of the Grand Staircase of the Louvre. 1817.
"	"	The First Consul holding a review in the court of the Tuileries. (Signed by Carle Vernet and J. Isabey.)
"	"	Portrait of Madame Thénon.
"	"	Portrait of Himself.
Versailles.	Gallery.	Napoleon I. visiting the Manufactory of the Brothers Sévène at Rouen.
"	"	Visit of Napoleon I. to the Manufactory of Jouy.
Windsor.	Castle.	The Congress of Vienna.

ISAC, JASPAR, a Dutch engraver, flourished from about 1613 to 1654, in which year he died in Paris, where he chiefly resided, and was employed in engraving frontispieces and portraits for the booksellers. Among his portraits are those of Charles Loyseau and Étienne Pasquier.

ISENDOORN, JAN VAN, was a native of Utrecht, who in 1630 gave to the hospital a picture representing 'Job tormented by the Devil.'

ISENMANN, GASPARD, a painter and Burgess of Colmar, flourished in 1462, in which year he painted for the church of St. Martin an 'Entombment,' which is now, with other pictures by him, in the Museum of that town.

ISIDORUS, is known by his painting of the miniatures in an Evangelium of 1170, which is now in the library of the Capitol at Padua.

ISRAEL. See HENRIET, ISRAEL.

ISSARTI, JOACHIM, a French historical painter, was born at Aurillac in 1814, and died at the hospital of Bicêtre in 1862.

ISSELBURG, PETER, a German engraver, was born at Cologne about the year 1580, and was probably a pupil of Crispijn van de Passe. He worked in his native city till 1612, then at Nuremberg, to which place, after a short time spent at Bamberg, he returned, and at which he continued to reside. He died at Nuremberg in 1630. He engraved some plates after Rubens and Gortzius Geldorp, and other works to the total number of 429. He was also much employed for the booksellers. There are by him:

- Portrait of James I.
- Christ and the Twelve Apostles; thirteen plates; after Rubens.
- View of the City of Coburg.

ITTENBACH, FRANZ, a German historical painter, was born at Königswinter, the small town at the foot of the Drachenfels, in 1813, and when nineteen years of age entered the Academy of Düsseldorf, then presided over by Schadow. He soon became imbued with the doctrines of that master, whom he accompanied to Italy in 1839. On coming back to Germany in 1842, he paid a visit to Munich, but returned to Düsseldorf, and from that time he chiefly resided there. On his art travels he was frequently accompanied by one or other of the brothers Karl or Andreas Müller, or by Ernst Deger—his fellow-thinkers on art matters. His works display a great simplicity both in design and execution, and a strong religious feeling, to which he strove, not unsuccessfully, to give effect. With the exception of a few portraits, he devoted himself entirely to the execution of altar-pieces. He was essentially a Roman Catholic church painter, and his works are to be found in the churches of many towns in Germany. Amongst the most important are the following: the 'Virgin enthroned' and the 'Ascension of the Virgin' (1858-61), both in the church of St. Remigius at Bonn; a 'Holy Family,' of the year 1861, in the castle chapel of Prince Liechtenstein at Vienna; four altarpieces (1865-68) in the church of St. Remigius at Breslau; and the 'Baptism of Christ,' in the garrison church at Düsseldorf. A fresco painting of 1844 by him is in the church of St. Apollinaris at Remegen; and another, executed ten years later, is in the church of St. Quirinus at Neuss; and in the National Gallery at Berlin there is a 'Holy Family in Egypt' of the year 1868, which has been engraved by R. Stang. Ittenbach was much patronized by the European courts, and received numerous honours and medals. He died at Düsseldorf in 1879.

IVANOV, ALEKSANDER ANDREVITCH, a Russian painter, born at St. Petersburg in 1806, was a son of Andrei Ivanov. He studied under his father, and at the Academy of St. Petersburg, in which city he died in 1858. Like his father he painted historical pictures, one of which, 'Christ appearing to Mary Magdalene,' is in the Hermitage.

IVANOV, ANDREI IVANOVITCH, who was born at Moscow in 1775, and died at St. Petersburg in 1846, was a pupil of the St. Petersburg Academy. An 'Episode in the Siege of Kiev' by him is in the Hermitage.

IVANOVITCH, FEDOR, one of a Kalmuck horde on the Russo-Chinese frontier, was born in 1765, and was presented by the Empress Catharine of Russia to the Princess Amalia of Baden, who brought him up as a painter. He was instructed at Carlsruhe by Melling, the court painter, and Becker, the inspector of the Gallery. He afterwards studied for seven years at Rome, and visited Greece and England before returning to Carlsruhe, where he was appointed court painter in 1806. In the Protestant church at Carlsruhe are several works of his representing Bible subjects, which are considered his best productions. He made for Lord Elgin drawings of the sculptures of the Parthenon. His death occurred at Carlsruhe in 1832. Among his etchings the most worthy of mention are:

The Taking down from the Cross; after Daniele da Volterra.

The Bronze Doors of San Giovanni at Florence, by Ghiberti; twelve plates.

J

JABIN, KARL G. GEORG, a German landscape painter, was born at Brunswick in 1828, and attended the Düsseldorf Academy in 1850-52. He died at Harzburg in 1864. His works chiefly consist of Swiss views.

JACKSON, JOHN, a portrait painter, was born at Lastingham, a small village in the North Riding of Yorkshire, in 1778. His father was a village tailor, and he pursued for some time the same occupation. It is believed that his first instruction in art was gained from the village schoolmaster. At the age of nineteen he ventured to offer himself as a miniature painter at York, and had the good fortune to obtain the patronage of Lord Mulgrave and the Earl of Carlisle. At Castle Howard he had the advantage of studying a magnificent collection of pictures, which was in itself a school; and he there copied Annibale Carracci's picture of 'The Three Maries.' He was also befriended by Sir George Beaumont. After going through the usual routine of study at the Royal Academy, he was for a time employed in painting and copying portraits for Cadell's 'Portraits of Illustrious Persons of the Eighteenth Century.' He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1815, and an Academician in 1817. In 1819 he visited Rome, in company with Sir Francis Chantrey, for whom he painted a fine portrait of Canova. His finest work is the portrait of Flaxman, which he painted for Lord Dover. His portrait of Lady Dover and one of himself are also among his best works. There is in the church at Lastingham a copy, made and presented by him to the place of his nativity, of the famous picture by Correggio, 'Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane,' which is in the possession of the Duke of Wellington. He died in London in 1831. In the National Portrait Gallery are portraits by him of Miss Stephens, the actress, afterwards Countess of Essex, of Sir John Soane, R. A., and of himself; as well as a copy of Sir Joshua Reynolds's portrait of Dr. John Hunter. In the South Kensington Museum are portraits of the artist and of Earl Grey, and six sketches in Holland and Belgium.

JACKSON, JOHN, a wood-engraver, resided for many years in Smithfield, and was much employed in the latter part of the 18th century in engraving illustrations for children's books.

JACKSON, JOHN, a wood-engraver, was born at Ovingham in 1801. He studied successively under Cosmo Armstrong, Bewick, and W. Harvey. He engraved for Knight's 'Shakespeare,' for Northcote's 'Fables,' and also published with Chatto, in 1839, a 'Treatise on Wood Engraving.' He died in 1848.

JACKSON, JOHN BAPTIST, a wood-engraver, was born in 1701. He was first apprenticed to Kirkall, from whom he learned his art. About 1726 he went to Paris, and worked some time for Papillon, but not meeting with much encouragement he proceeded to Rome, and thence to Venice, where he executed several woodcuts in imitation of the drawings of the great masters, and also engraved several book ornaments and vignettes. After an absence of twenty years in France and Italy, he returned to England, but finding no employment, he entered a paper-hanging factory at Battersea, where he is known to have continued till 1754, after which date he is lost sight of. Among his single prints is a 'Descent from the Cross,' after Rembrandt, executed in a very spirited style; but his principal work was a set of seventeen large cuts in chiaroscuro, published at Venice by Pasquali in 1745, under the title 'Titiani Vecellii, Pauli Caliar, Jacobi Robusti, et Jacobi de Ponte, Opera selectiora, a Joanne Baptista Jackson, Anglo, ligno caelata, et coloribus adumbrata.' Among these are the following:

St. Peter Martyr; after Titian.

The Descent of the Holy Ghost; after the same.

The Martyrdom of St. Mark; after Tintoretto.

The Murder of the Innocents; after the same.

The Presentation in the Temple; after Paolo Veronese.

The Marriage of St. Catharine; after the same.

Christ praying in the Garden; after Bassano.

The Entombment of Christ; after the same.

The Raising of Lazarus; after the same.

JACKSON, JOHN RICHARDSON, a mezzotint engraver, born at Portsmouth in 1819, was the son of a banker at Portsea. He became a pupil of Robert Graves, and at first studied line engraving, but this he soon relinquished for mezzotint. His later practice was chiefly in portraits, most of which were private plates. Some of these were exhibited at the Royal Academy between 1854 and 1876, and are characterized by careful drawing and brilliant and refined execution, combined with much richness of colour. He died at Southsea in 1877. The following are his best known plates:

Otter and Salmon; after Sir Edwin Landseer. 1847.
Bolton Abbey in the Olden Time; after the same.
Windsor Castle in the Present Time; after the same.
The Sweep; after F. D. Hardy.
Queen Victoria; after W. Fowler.
The Princess Royal and her Sisters; after Winterhalter.
The Duke of Edinburgh; after F. R. Saye.
Henry, Marquis of Lansdowne; after Sir F. Grant.
William Howley, Archbishop of Canterbury; after Mrs. Carpenter.
John Bird Sumner, Archbishop of Canterbury; after the same.
Marcus Gervais Beresford, Archbishop of Armagh; after Catterson Smith.
Archbishop Trench; after G. Richmond.
Walter, fifth Duke of Buccleuch; after the same.
Frederick, Marquis of Londonderry; after the same.
Sir Philip Grey Egerton, Bart.; after the same.
Earl of Radnor; after the same.
Lord Chancellor Hatherley; after the same.
Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Winchester; after the same.
Right Hon. John G. Hubbard, M.P.; after the same.
Sir Andrew Fairbairn; after G. F. Watts.
Robert Graves, A.R.A.; after R. W. Buss.

JACKSON, ROBERT, an engraver, mentioned by Thoresby in his 'Ducatus Leodiensis,' is said to have engraved some portraits in mezzotint, a woodcut of Algernon Sidney, &c.

JACKSON, SAMUEL, a water-colour painter, was born at Bristol in 1795. He was at first placed in the office of his father, a merchant, but having, on account of bad health, made a voyage to the West Indies, besides visiting Scotland and Ireland, he developed a taste for art, and at the age of thirty he became a pupil of Danby, who was then living at Bristol. In 1832 he became an Associate Exhibitor of the Water-Colour Society, and contributed landscapes annually up to 1848, when he withdrew from the Society. When between sixty and seventy he made a sketching tour in Switzerland, and on his return executed from the sketches then made some of his best works. He died in 1870. In the South Kensington Museum are a 'View looking down the Avon,' and 'Llanberis.'

JACKSON, WILLIAM, an amateur landscape painter, was born at Exeter in 1730. He was a friend of Gainsborough, whose life he wrote, and whose works he copied. He is better known as a musician, and as the composer of the popular 'Te Deum.' He died at Exeter in 1803.

JACOB, LOUIS, a French line engraver, was born at Lisieux, in Normandy, in 1712. He went when young to Paris, and was first a pupil of Gérard Scotin the younger, and afterwards of Jean Audran. The date of his death is unknown. The following plates for the Crozat Collection, among others, are by him:

Perseus and Andromeda; after Paolo Veronese.
The Departure of the Israelites from Egypt; after the same.
The Adoration of the Shepherds; after the same.
Rebekah and Eliezer; after the same.

JACOB, NICOLAS HENRI, a French draughtsman and lithographer, was born in Paris in 1782, and was a pupil of David, Dupasquier, and Morgan. In 1805 he became draughtsman to Prince Eugène Beauharnais at Milan, and in 1835 came to Paris and opened a school. He died in 1871. His best-known painting is one executed at Milan in 1809, representing 'The Parade of the Viceroy surrounded by his Staff.'

JACOBBER. See BER.

JACOBÉ, JOHANN, a German mezzotint engraver, was born at Vienna in 1733. He at first studied painting, but abandoned it for engraving, in which he was instructed by Schmutzer. He visited London in 1779-80 for the purpose of improvement, and here scraped a few plates. He engraved a great variety of prints after his return to Germany, and died at Vienna in 1797. Among others, the following plates are by him:

PORTRAITS.

Hon. Mary Monckton, Countess of Cork; full-length; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
Miss Meyer, as Hebe; full-length; after the same.
Louis, Count Belgiojoso; after the same.
Omai; full-length; after the same.
George, Viscount Sackville; after Romney.
William Hayley; after the same.
Joseph Adam, Prince of Schwarzenberg; after Kollonitz.
Elizabeth, Princess of Würtemberg.
Carlo Antonio Martini; after Mösner.
Franz Ferdinand Schröter; after Donat.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

Samson; after the same.
A Stag-hunt, by moonlight; after Casanova.
A Tiger killed by the Prince of Nassau-Siegen; after the same.

JACOBELLO DEL FIORE. See DEL FIORE.

JACOBI, BERNARDINO, commonly known as BUTTINONE, was a painter of Treviglio, who flourished in the 15th century. He frequently worked with Zenale, and, in fact, one artist did but little without the assistance of the other. They were both, it is said, pupils of Foppa; their works display a resemblance to the manner of the Paduan school, founded by Squarcione. Buttinone was living as late as 1507. Among works by him alone, may be mentioned:

Isola Bella. Borromeo } Madonna with Saints. (Signed Collection. } and dated 1468.)
Milan. Casa Borromeo. Portrait of a Man. (Ascribed to Buttinone.)
" Castelbarco Coll. Virgin and Child, with Saints. (Signed and dated 1454.)

The 'Holy Family,' which was signed and dated 1484, and was formerly preserved in the Carmine, Milan, is now no longer in existence.

The following is a list of works executed by Buttinone and Zenale conjointly:

Milan. S. Ambrogio. Virgin and Child, with Bishop and St. Jerome.
" S. Maria delle Grazie. } Figures of Saints. (Fragments of wall-painting.)
" S. Pietro in Gessate. } Scenes from the Life of St. Ambrose. (Signed "OPUS BERNARDINI BUTINONI ET BERNARDI DE ZENALIS DE TREVIGLIO.")
Treviglio. San Martino. Virgin and Child, with numerous Saints. (Painted in 1485.)

JACOBINI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian engraver, was born about 1730, and flourished at Florence about 1760. He engraved several plates for the 'Museo Fiorentino.' The following are by him:

An Angel protecting a Child from an Evil Genius; after A. Sacchi.

The Holy Family; after Raphael.

Group of Athletes; after the same.

The Virgin and Infant; after Sebastiano Conca.

St. Fidelis of Sigmaringen; after the same.

JACOBS, CORNELIS, was a Dutch painter of subjects of still-life, who flourished at Delft in the 16th century. He was a pupil of Cornelis van Haarlem.

JACOBS, DANIEL, was a Dutch amateur painter, who was a native of the Hague. He was a pupil of Willem Doudyns, and a member of the Corporation of St. Luke. He travelled in France and Italy, returned to his own country in 1685, and died at the Hague in 1691.

JACOBS, EGIDIUS, was a Dutch painter, who flourished at Antwerp in the 18th century. He was a pupil at the Antwerp Academy in 1784.

JACOBS, GERAARD, was a Dutch landscape painter, who flourished at Ter Vere, in Zealand, in 1766.

JACOBS, JACOBUS ALBERTUS MICHAEL, a Belgian marine and landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1812. He was originally intended for the printing trade, but his love of art prevailed, and he studied from the pictures in the Van der Schrieck Gallery at Louvain, and in the atelier of Ferdinand De Braekeleer at Antwerp. He journeyed for the purpose of study through Italy, Greece, and the East, as well as in Scandinavia and Russia, everywhere obtaining subjects for his pictures, which were generally views on the sea-coast. In 1847 he travelled with Wappers in Germany, but he finally settled at Antwerp, where he held for some time the post of professor of animal and landscape painting at the Academy. His death occurred at Antwerp in 1879. The following are among his best works:

Berlin.	Nat. Gallery.	Greek Sea. 1848.
Brussels.	Palais Ducal.	Waterfall in Norway.
Munich.	Neue Pinakothek.	Shipwreck of the 'Floridian' on the coast of Essex on the 28th of February, 1848.
"	"	Sunrise in the Archipelago.
"	"	View of the Harbour of Constantinople.

The Golden Horn. 1852.

Ruins of the Temple of Philæ in Nubia.

In the Gulf of Lepanto.

Sogne Fiord.

Entrance into Bergen Harbour.

JACOBS, LAMBERT, (or JACOBSEN,) was a Dutch painter of the 17th century, who was born at Leeuwarden. He was a pupil of Van Thulden, and painted historical and still-life subjects. He was a Mennonite by religion, and spent much of his time in preaching.

JACOBS, MARTIN FRANÇOIS, was a Flemish painter, who had a school at Brussels. He died in 1812.

JACOBS, PAUL EMIL, a son of the philologist, Christian F. W. Jacobs, was born at Gotha in 1803, and studied under Peter Langer at the Munich Academy in 1818-25. During the next three years he sought further improvement in Rome, then painted portraits at Frankfort for a time, and in 1830 proceeded to St. Petersburg, where for two years he pursued the same line of art, and where he became a member of the Academy, and was commissioned to paint the 'Ascension of Christ' and the 'Last Supper' for the church of the Smolna monastery. In 1834 he returned to Gotha, and was called to Hanover in the following year to paint historical pictures in the newly-restored palace. In 1838 he travelled in Greece, next went to Rome, and in 1840 settled again at Gotha, where he was appointed court painter. He was a third time at Rome in 1844, and a fourth in 1853, returning in 1857 to Gotha, where he died in 1866. He also lithographed a number of portraits. The following are some of his paintings in addition to those mentioned above:

Mercury outwitting Argus.

The Raising of Lazarus.

Sheherazade telling Stories to the Caliph.

The Crucifixion. (Augustinerkirche, Gotha.)

Judith and Holofernes.

The Silken Cord. (Rosenstein Summer Palace, Stuttgart.)

The Capture of Samson.

Luther at the Diet of Worms.

Sale of Greek Slaves. (King of Würtemberg.)

Susannah at the Bath.

JACOBS, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Brussels in 1780. He studied under A. Lens, and in the Brussels Academy, where in 1802 he obtained the prize for drawing from the life, as well as other rewards. He afterwards went to Rome, and while there he gained the prize of the Milan Academy for his 'Head of Pompey presented to Cæsar,' now in the Brussels Gallery. His health became impaired by his devotion to art, and he died at Rome in 1808, at the commencement of a career of much promise.

JACOBS, SIMON, a Dutch portrait painter, was born at Gouda in 1520. He was a scholar of Karel van Yperen, but imitated Tintoretto. He tried historical painting with success, but afterwards devoted himself to portraits, with which he attained a high position. He was killed at the siege of Haarlem in 1572.

JACOBSEN, JURIAEN, was born at Hamburg about 1610. When young he visited Antwerp, where he entered the school of Frans Snyders. He afterwards lived at Amsterdam, but appears to have travelled a good deal, especially in Switzerland. His animal paintings are very fine; one of the best, representing a 'Boar attacked by Dogs,' is in the Dresden Gallery, and a like subject in that at Copenhagen. His works are principally at Amsterdam, where he resided several years. He died at Amsterdam in 1664.

JACOBSZ, C. PHILIP, was a Dutch engraver, who flourished about the year 1767. He engraved several plates representing views in and near Amsterdam.

JACOBSZ, DIERICK, a portrait painter, who flourished about 1529, was a son of Jacob Cornelisz. He died in 1567. One of his portraits at Amsterdam contains a hand which excites universal admiration.

JACOBSZ, HUBERT, called GRIMANI, a Dutch portrait painter, was born at Delft in 1599. Having learned the rudiments of art in his own country, he went to Venice, where he studied the works of Titian. His talents recommended him to the patronage of the Doge Grimani, in whose employment he passed nine years. He afterwards returned to Holland, where he followed his profession with great success. He died at Briel in 1628 or 1629.

JACOBSZ, LUCAS, called LUCAS VAN LEYDEN, may be regarded as the patriarch of the Dutch school. The son of Huig Jacobsz, an obscure painter, he was born at Leyden in 1494, and had scarcely reached his ninth year, when he engraved some plates from his own designs, and having left the instruction of his father in order to study painting under Cornelis Engelbrechtsen, he astonished the artists of his time by his picture of 'St. Hubert,' painted when he was only twelve years old. In 1508, when he was fourteen, appeared his celebrated print of 'The Monk Sergius killed by Mahomet.' He painted in oil, distemper, and on glass; and treated with equal success history, landscapes, and portraits. His drawing of the figure is stiffly taken from the model, in the Gothic style then universally prevalent through Germany and Flanders, divested of grace and elegance; and though the expression of his heads is not without truth, it is marked with a vulgarity bordering on grimace. As a painter he was somewhat of a copyist, now inclining to the style of Mabuse, now to that of Massys. He was one of the first of the Dutch artists that had an incipient acquaintance with the principles of perspective. He was the friend of Albrecht Dürer, and he worked at Leyden, at Middelburg, and at Antwerp, where he was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1522, under the name of 'Lucas de Hollandere.' He died at Leyden in 1533. One of his most considerable works as a painter is his triptych of the 'Last Judgment,' with 'Heaven' and 'Hell' on the wings, an immense composition, in the town-hall at Leyden; 'Christ healing the Blind at Jericho,' dated 1531. The following are some of the best of his works, which are rarely met with:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	The Ring.
"	"	David and Saul.
"	"	St. Luke and St. Mark.
"	"	St. Matthew.
"	"	The Adoration of the Magi.
"	"	(Doubtful.)
"	"	The Adoration of the Magi, with St. George and the Donor. A triptych. (Doubtful.)
Berlin.	Gallery.	A Chess Party.
"	"	St. Jerome in penance.
Darmstadt.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Temptation of St. Anthony.
Liverpool.	Gallery.	Portrait of a young Nobleman, with the Conversion of St. Hubert.
London.	Buckingham Palace.	Adoration of the Magi.
Munich.	Gallery.	Virgin and Child, with the Donor and Mary Magdalene. 1522.
		The Annunciation. 1522.
Wilton.	Earl of Pembroke.	A Chess Party.

As an engraver, Lucas van Leyden claims particular attention. At a period when Albrecht Dürer had carried the art of engraving to perfection in Germany, and Marc Antonio in Italy, Lucas disputed the palm with those celebrated artists in the Low Countries. He learned the use of the point and graver from a goldsmith, and he carried the art to a surprising pitch of perfection for the short time that he lived. His style differs from that of Dürer, and seems to have been built on the manner of Israel van Mecheln. His figures are tall and meagre, the extremities rather mannered than correct, and though his attitudes are not ill chosen, they are generally stiff and ungraceful.

He engraved on wood as well as on copper, but the woodcuts are not very numerous. They are spirited and masterly, though inferior to those of Dürer. He usually marked his prints with the Gothic letter L, accompanied by the date, and these he sometimes placed on a tablet. The following is an ample list of his works, and comprises all his principal prints, fine impressions of which are now very scarce:

OLD TESTAMENT SUBJECTS.

The Creation and Fall of Adam and Eve; six plates. 1529.
 Adam and Eve driven from Paradise. 1510.
 Cain and Abel. 1524.
 Abraham and the Angels.
 Abraham sending away Hagar; one of his first plates; very scarce.
 The same subject, differently treated, and smaller; called 'The Little Hagar.'
 Lot and his Daughters. 1530.
 The History of Joseph; five plates. 1512.
 Jephtha and his Daughter.
 Esther before Ahasuerus. 1515.
 Samson and Delilah.
 The Triumph of David.
 David praying, with an Angel appearing to him. 1520.
 David playing on the Harp before Saul.
 Solomon worshipping Idols. 1514.
 Susanna and the Elders; one of his earliest prints.

NEW TESTAMENT SUBJECTS.

St. Joachim and St. Anne. 1520.
 The Annunciation.
 The Visitation.
 The Adoration of the Magi. 1513. Hendrik Goltzius has engraved the same subject, with little difference.
 The Repose in Egypt; one of his early prints.
 The Baptism of Christ; a composition of many figures.
 Christ tempted by the Devil. 1518.
 The Resurrection of Lazarus; one of his early prints.
 The Passion of our Saviour; fourteen plates.
 A set of nine circular prints of the Passion.
 Ecce Homo; a rich composition. 1510.
 The Crucifixion; one of his finest prints. 1517.
 Christ appearing to Mary Magdalene. 1519.
 The Prodigal Son.

SUBJECTS OF THE VIRGIN AND SAINTS.

The Virgin and Infant, with St. Anne. 1516.
 The Virgin and Infant, with a glory of Angels.
 The Virgin and Infant seated at the foot of a tree.
 The Virgin and Infant, in a landscape, with two Angels. 1523.
 The Holy Family, with St. Joseph presenting an apple.
 Christ and the Twelve Apostles; thirteen plates.
 The Four Evangelists; four plates. 1518.
 The Conversion of St. Paul. 1509.
 St. Peter and St. Paul; half-lengths. 1517.
 St. Peter and St. Paul, in a landscape. 1527.
 St. Christopher carrying the Infant Jesus. 1521.
 St. John the Baptist in the Desert. 1513.
 The Decollation of St. John.
 St. Jerome, with a book, a skull, and a lion. 1521.
 The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian.
 St. Anthony, the Hermit.
 The Temptation of St. Anthony. 1509. Very fine; engraved when he was fifteen.
 St. Francis receiving the Stigmata.
 St. George fighting the Dragon.
 Mary Magdalene in the midst of the Pleasures of the World; known as 'The Magdalene's Dance'; very fine, and extremely rare.
 Mary Magdalene in the Desert.
 St. Catharine; half-length. 1520.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The Monk Sergius killed by Mahomet, who is sleeping. 1508. Very fine; engraved when he was fourteen.
 The Seven Cardinal Virtues; seven plates. 1530.

The Death of Lucretia: by some called, The Death of Dido.

Pyramus and Thisbe. 1514.

Mars and Venus. 1530.

Minerva seated. This is supposed to have been his last plate, which he did not quite finish.

The Standard-Bearer.

A young Man at the head of an armed company, listening to a man who is speaking to him, with his hat in his hand.

The Wedding-Ring: an old Man putting a Ring on the finger of a young Woman; a highly-finished etching.

An old Woman, with a bunch of grapes.

The Musicians. 1524.

The Surgeon performing an Operation. 1524.

The Quack-doctor. 1523.

The celebrated print called the 'Uylenspiegel.' It represents a Man playing on the bagpipes, carrying two children in a basket, and a Woman with a child on her shoulder, leading an ass with panniers, in which are three more children. This group is preceded by the 'Uylenspiegel,' in the form of a boy, with a hood, having an owl on his shoulder, and carrying a pitcher and a staff. The extreme rarity of this print is well known, but its scarcity constitutes its chief value, for it is very inferior to many of Lucas van Leyden's other works. It was copied by Hondius and others; and Basan mentions another copy of it, without the name of the engraver, so exact, as easily to be mistaken for the original. It is dated 1520.

PORTRAITS.

The Emperor Maximilian I.; after a picture painted by Lucas when he visited Leyden. The head is executed with the graver, the rest etched, and in parts harmonized with the graver; very fine and scarce. 1520.

Lucas van Leyden; inscribed Effigies Lucae Leidensis propria manu incidere.

A young Man, half-length, with a cap and feathers, holding a skull; usually called his own portrait, though it bears no resemblance to the preceding one.

WOODCUTS.

The Kings of Israel; in chiaroscuro.

The Illustrious Women of the Old Testament.

Four large Tournaments.

JACOBUS, was a monk of the order of St. Francis, who executed in 1225 some mosaic work in a Byzantine manner in the tribune annexed to the Baptistery of San Giovanni in Florence. The author of this work must not be confounded with Jacobus de Turrata.

JACOBUS, a German engraver on wood, flourished about the year 1480. His principal works were sixteen or eighteen cuts of the 'Life of Christ,' some of which are signed 'Opus Jacobi.' Papillon mentions a large upright engraving by this artist, and says that it belongs to a set of allegorical prints relating to the history of Rome.

JACOMETTI, PIETRO PAOLO, who was a sculptor, founder, and architect, as well as a painter, was born at Recanati in 1580. He came of a distinguished family, but followed his taste for art in preference to taking the position that was open to him. He studied painting under Pomarancio, and assisted him in the frescoes of the cupola of the church at Loretto. Independently, he painted the 'Assumption of the Virgin.' He died in 1655.

JACOMETTO, a native of Venice, who died in 1472, was famous for his miniatures, portraits, and cabinet pictures.

JACONE. See JACOPO.

JACOPINO DA AREZZO. See AREZZO.

JACOPO, usually called JACONE, was a native of Florence, who flourished about the year 1525. He was a friend and coadjutor of Andrea del Sarto, whom he assisted in some of his works. He was employed upon fresco decorations for houses, and adorned the Buondelmonti Palace. A 'Madonna' in the Gesù at Cortona, and a 'St. Lucia' in the church of that saint at Florence, are attributed to him. He died in misery in 1553.

JACOPO DI CASENTINO. See LANDINI.

JACOPO DI MICHELE, known also as GERA, was a Pisan living in the 14th century, who is recorded to have painted thirty figures round the inner dome of the cathedral of Pisa in 1390, and to have assisted Turino Vanni in the decoration of the Tabernacle of the Font in the same building. No dates are known of his birth or death. There remain of his works:

Palermo. Church of the } Conception of the Virgin, be-Annunziata. } tween Saints.
Pisa. Academy. Madonna and Child, with Saints.

JACOPO DI NERITO. See NERITO.

JACOPONE DA FAENZA. See BERTUCCI.

JACOPSEN, H., a Flemish engraver, lived about the year 1620. He engraved a set of plates, chiefly portraits, for a 'History of the Netherlands,' published in that year.

JACQUAND, CLAUDIUS, a French historical, genre, and portrait painter, was born at Lyons in 1805. He studied in the Academy of that city, and was a pupil of Fleury-Richard. He first exhibited at the Salon in 1824, and had a good practice as a portrait painter. There are frescoes at St. Philippe-du-Roule, Paris, by him. He died in Paris in 1878. Amongst his works are:

The Condemnation of Galileo. (Amiens Museum.)

The Count of Comminges recognizing Adelaide. 1836. (Lyons Museum.)

Bonaparte at Nice.

Ransom of a Sicilian Family.

The Coronation of Charlemagne as King of Italy at Milan. 1837.

Henry of Burgundy receiving the Investiture of the Kingdom of Portugal.

Chapter of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem at Rhodes. 1839.

JACQUARD, CLAUDE, a French historical painter, flourished at Nancy at the end of the 17th century. He was a pupil of Claude Charles, and was employed by Charles V., Duke of Lorraine. His chief works are a fresco in the cupola of a church at Nancy, and a design for a ceiling which is in the Museum of that city.

JACQUART, ANTOINE DE, was probably a native of France. He is said by Florent Le Comte to have engraved small vignettes, with figures and grotesque ornaments, which he usually marked with the letters A. D. I. F.

JACQUEMART, of Hesdin, was a famous French miniaturist who resided at Hesdin. He executed in 1384 most wonderful miniatures for the Hours of the Duke John, and in 1400 others for the Hours of the Duke of Berry. The date of his death is not known.

JACQUEMART, ALBERT, a French flower painter, was born in Paris in 1808. He entered the École des Beaux-Arts, where he devoted himself to drawing. His first studies were entomology, botany, and conchology, and in 1840 he published the 'Flore des Dames,' and in 1841 the 'Nouveau Langage des Fleurs,' and other botanical works. In 1861-62 he put forth, in conjunction with M. Le Blant, his 'Histoire de la Porcelaine,' and in 1873 his 'Histoire de la Céramique.' He took a prominent part in the organization of the different French Exhibitions, and died in 1875.

JACQUEMART, JULES FERDINAND, a French etcher and painter in water-colours, was born in Paris in 1837. He was the son and pupil of Albert Jacquemart, the author of the 'Histoire de la Porcelaine,' for which he supplied the plates. Another work in which he was concerned was Barbet de Jouy's 'Gemmes et Joyaux de la Couronne,' for which he produced some masterpieces of etching. He etched, among other works, ten pictures in the Museum at New York, and supplied a numerous series of illustrations to his father's 'Histoire du Mobilier.' He appeared at the Salon of 1861 as a painter and engraver. Owing to an incurable disease of the lungs contracted in 1873 at Vienna, which obliged him to relinquish his profession as an etcher, and to spend his winters at Mentone, he devoted himself to water-colour painting, in which he obtained a great and well-merited success. He was one of the principal promoters of the Société des Aquarellistes. He died at Nice in 1880. The following is a list of his principal etchings from paintings which have appeared in the 'Gazette des Beaux-Arts':

Portrait of Sir Richard Wallace; after Baudry.
 Ouled-Nayls Horsemen; after Fromentin.
 Halt of Muleteers; after the same.
 Fruit and Fish; after J. Fyt.

 The Daughter-in-law; after Goya.

JACQUEMIN, a French artist, flourished at Nancy, and died in 1480.

JACQUES, Maître, an historical and miniature painter, went from Italy to Portugal, where he flourished in the reign of John I. (A.D. 1385-1433).

JACQUES, called 'LE MAÎTRE,' worked at the cathedral of Auch, and died in 1547.

JACQUES, of Auverette, a French historical and ornamental painter, was a native of Bourges. He died in 1523.

JACQUES, called LE BOUC, a French historical z z

and heraldic painter, flourished in Paris about 1540. He was also a genealogist and herald at arms. He was called the French Apelles, but no extant work can justify that title.

JACQUES, NICOLAS, a French miniature painter, was born at Jarville, near Nancy, in 1780. He entered the school of David and studied historical painting, but he was compelled by poverty to undertake something more lucrative. He then studied miniature painting under Isabey, whose friend he became. He executed the portraits of most of the Imperial family, especially those of the Empress Josephine, Queen Hortense, Marshal Bernadotte, and others. Among his other miniatures are those of Cuvier, Benjamin Constant, Cherubini, Mdlle. Mars, Sir W. Molesworth, Louis Philippe, &c. He died in Paris in 1844.

JADIN, LOUIS GODEFROY, a French painter, was born in Paris in 1805. He began his career as a painter of hunting subjects and still-life, his instructors being Abel de Pujol, Hersent, Paul Huet, Bonington, and Decamps. He travelled with Alexandre Dumas in the Mediterranean, and figures in 'Capitaine Pamphile.' His chief works are 'The Meet,' 'The Death Cry,' 'Dogs playing,' &c. He died in Paris in 1882.

JAGEMANN, FERDINAND, who was born at Weimar in 1780, was a son of Christian J. Jagemann, the librarian of the Duchess Amalie, and a brother of the actress Caroline Jagemann. He studied at the Weimar Academy under G. M. Kraus, and further improved himself at Vienna under Füger, and then in Paris and Rome. He was afterwards professor at Weimar, where he died in 1820. Among his best works are the portraits of Duke Karl August of Saxe-Weimar (in the Weimar Library), and of Goethe, Wieland, and Gall; as well as that of Schiller when dead.

JAGER, GERARD DE. See DE JAGER.

JÄGER, GUSTAV, a German historical painter, was born at Leipsic in 1808, and entered the Academy at Dresden, but in 1830 he went to Munich and studied under Schnorr von Karolsfeld. In 1836 he proceeded to Rome, and the year following returned to Munich. In 1847 he was appointed director of the Leipsic Academy, but was able after this to execute some important frescoes in Munich, Weimar, &c. His designs for the Cotta Bible are also much admired. He died at Leipsic in 1871. His principal oil paintings are:

Moses supported by Aaron and Hur during the Battle between the Amalekites and Israelites.
 The Dream of Sophronius.
 The Burial of Christ. (Leipsic Museum.)
 The Magdalene at the Feet of the Lord. (Dresden Gallery.)
 The Marriage of St. Catharine.

JÄGER, GUSTAV MARIA, an Austrian landscape painter and etcher, was born at Vienna in 1834, and died there in 1861. He studied at the Academy of that city, and his landscapes were chiefly taken from the neighbourhood of Meran.

JAGER, R., an obscure engraver, probably a Dutchman, has left an undated etching, representing the 'Fleets of Spain and Holland.'

JAGGER, CHARLES, an English miniature painter, was born in 1770, and practised at Bath, where he died in 1827.

JAGT, MARTINUS VAN DER. See VAN DER JAGT.

JAHN, JOHANN QUIBIN, who was born at Prague in 1739, was the son of a painter, and worked for some years as an assistant of Palko. He travelled in the Netherlands and France, and then settled at Vienna, where he was admitted a member of the Academy. He afterwards returned to Prague, where he died in 1802. He decorated various churches in Bohemia, Silesia, and Lusatia with altar-pieces, among which are a copy of the 'Notte' of Correggio, in the church at Liebesnitz, and 'St. Philip Neri,' in the cathedral of St. Veit at Prague. He was also a writer on art.

JAKOBSEN, JURIAEN. See JACOBSEN.

JAMBERS, THEODORUS, a Flemish genre and historical painter, was born in 1804, and was working in Brussels from 1833 to 1842. Two of his best known works are the 'Convalescent' and 'The Flight of Henrietta Maria, Queen of England.'

JAMES, GEORGE, a portrait painter, was born in London towards the middle of the 18th century. He studied at Rome, and then practised at Bath and in London. He became a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, with whom he exhibited till 1768, and in 1770 was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. In 1780 he removed to Bath, but inheriting property, and marrying a lady of fortune, he virtually ceased to practise in his later years. He died in France in 1795, from the effects of imprisonment during the Reign of Terror.

JAMES, WILLIAM, was a landscape painter, who became in 1766 a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists. He exhibited at Spring Gardens from 1761 to 1768, and at the Royal Academy from 1769 to 1771. He was a pupil and disciple of Canaletto. At Hampton Court there are the following views by him:

Fleet Ditch from the Thames.
London Bridge.
Greenwich Hospital.
St. James's Park.
Old Somerset House.
Old Savoy Palace.
Westminster Bridge.

JAMESON, ALEXANDER, an engraver, is supposed to have practised at Edinburgh. He engraved in 1728 the family group of 'George Jamesone, with his Wife and Son.'

JAMESON, ANNA, an English art critic and amateur artist, was born at Dublin in 1796. Her father was D. B. Murphy, the miniature painter. Her husband, whom she married in 1823, but did not live with long, was a barrister who held an appointment in Canada. She made various tours in Italy, Germany, and America. Her death took place at Ealing in 1860. The following is a list of some of the works on art she published, many of which were illustrated by herself:

Visits and Sketches at home and abroad. 1834.
Beauties of the Court of Charles II. 1833.
Sketches of Germany. 1837.
Handbook to the Public Galleries of Art in and near London. 1842.
Companion to the most celebrated Private Galleries of Art in London. 1844.
Memoirs of the Early Italian Painters. 1845.
Memoirs and Essays illustrative of Art, &c. 1846.
Decorations of the Garden Pavilion, Buckingham Palace. 1846.
Sacred and Legendary Art. 2 vols. 1848.
Legends of the Monastic Orders, as represented in the Fine Arts. 1850.
Legends of the Madonna, as represented in the Fine Arts. 1852.
Handbook to the Modern Sculpture, Crystal Palace. 1854.

History of Our Lord, as exemplified in Works of Art. Continued and completed by Lady Eastlake. 2 vols. 1864.

JAMESONE, GEORGE, the son of an architect and one of the earliest of the British painters, was born at Aberdeen in 1586. He is known to have studied in the school of Rubens at Antwerp, and to have been a fellow-pupil with Van Dyck, but the date of his visit to Flanders is not recorded. He was, however, according to Cunningham, back and established as a painter at Aberdeen in 1620. Three years later he painted a picture of himself, his wife Isobel Tosh, and his infant son. He found, both among the Covenanters and Cavaliers, many to sit to him for their portraits, but his works in landscape and history were not appreciated, and he was compelled to abandon these subjects for the more favoured portraiture. His fame soon spread, and he removed to Edinburgh, where he met with equal success. When Charles I. visited that city in 1633, the magistrates collected as many portraits by Jamesone as they could, and hung them on either side of the Netherbow Port, through which the procession would pass. The king was attracted, stopped, admired them, and subsequently gave the painter a sitting. Heedless of politics and civil war, Jamesone worked on till his death, which took place at Edinburgh in 1644; he was buried in the churchyard of the Grey Friars. He is unrepresented in the National Gallery, the National Portrait Gallery, and the National Gallery of Scotland. In the University of his native Aberdeen and in private collections throughout Scotland are numerous works by him—portraits of men celebrated in literature, politics, and war. For Sir Colin Campbell of Glenorchy (with whom he is said to have travelled abroad) he executed a series of portraits of great historic interest. They are now at Taymouth Castle, the seat of the Earl of Breadalbane, and include, amongst others, likenesses of Sir Duncan Campbell, John, Duke of Rothes, James, Marquis of Hamilton, and John, Earl of Mar. One of the numerous portraits of Jamesone by himself, a three-quarter length, wearing a hat as usual, is at Cullen House, the seat of the Earl of Seafield, where there is also an allegorical picture by him of the 'Fortunes of Charles I.'

JAMITZER, BARTHOLOMÄUS, (or JAMNITZER,) was a German engraver who, according to Professor Christ, resided at Nuremberg, and flourished about the year 1547. He is said by that author to have engraved some plates, which he marked with his initials and the date, but he has not specified the subjects. Zani says that he worked in 1571.

JAMITZER, CHRISTOPH, (or JAMNITZER, or GAMICZER,) who was most probably the son of Albrecht Jamitzer, and a nephew of Wenzel Jamitzer, was born at Nuremberg in 1563, and died in the same city in 1618. He was a goldsmith as well as an engraver. He published a set of grotesque subjects in 1600, and there are also by him the under-mentioned plates. His mark is .

His own Portrait, studying perspective.
A set of twelve plates of the Sports of Children.
Twelve plates of Children mounted on Sea Monsters.
Four plates of Children, with the Wings of Bats.
A Dance of four Children round a Tree.
A set of six Grotesque Subjects.

JAMITZER, WENZEL, (or JAMNITZER, or GAMICZER,) a goldsmith and engraver, was born at Vienna in 1508. At an early period he came with his brother and co-worker, Albrecht Jamitzer, who died in 1590, to Nuremberg, where he worked for the Emperor Charles V. and other potentates, and died in 1588. His etchings include a 'Triumphal Arch' (1551), now in the Berlin Museum, and probably forty plates of cups, cans, and other vessels, to be seen at Berlin and Prague. He designed 'The Apotheosis of the Emperor Maximilian II,' which was etched by Jost Amman, as were also the plates to a work written by him, entitled 'Perspectiva Corporum Regularium' (1568).

JAN, LANGEN. See BOCKHORST.

JAN, LAURENT, a French painter, was born in 1808. He was director of the School of Drawing and Mathematics in Paris, and was known not only in the world of art, but also in that of letters. He died in 1877.

JANDL, ANTON, a German historical and portrait painter, was born at Gratz in 1723, and after acquiring there the rudiments of his art, visited Vienna, Salzburg, Munich, and Spire. He also obtained much assistance from Franz Palko at Brünn. He was appointed town painter at Gratz, and died there in 1805. A number of altar-pieces in Styria are of his execution.

JANET. See CLOUET, FRANÇOIS.

JANET LANGE, ANGE LOUIS, a French historical painter, was born in Paris in 1816. He studied in the ateliers of Colin, Ingres, and Vernet, but he adopted principally the style of the latter. In the early part of his career he painted several sacred subjects. He was engaged for about twenty years on the 'Illustration' newspaper. He died in Paris in 1872. Among his principal works were:

The Abdication at Fontainebleau.
The Last Friend.
The Innocents of Lyons.
Episode in the Siege of Puebla.
Scene in the Crimean War.
Nero contending in a Chariot Race.

JANINET, JEAN FRANÇOIS, who was born in Paris in 1752, engraved many pieces in colours by means of several plates each imprinting one colour. He reproduced some of Ostade's coloured drawings in this manner, also a large view of Paris after Machy, portraits of Henry IV., after Pourbus, and of Sully, a 'Harvest Supper' after the younger Wille, 'Venus and Cupid' after Boucher, and 'Galatea on the Waters' after Edme Bouchardon. He died in Paris in 1813.

JANNECK, FRANZ CHRISTOPH, was born at Gratz in 1703, and was a pupil of Matthias Vangus. He worked for some time at Frankfort, and afterwards at Vienna, where he died in 1761. He was very successful in small historical and conversation pieces, and in landscapes and portraits. Prince Liechtenstein and Count Harrach possess pictures by him. In the Bordeaux Museum are two interiors, and in the Vienna and Darmstadt Galleries are landscapes.

JANOTA, JOHANN GEORG, a native of Bohemia, was born in 1747. When young, he was taken under the protection of Prince Liechtenstein, who sent him to study in Italy. Soon after his return he was admitted a member of the Academy of Vienna, where he died in 1780. He engraved some portraits, and several plates from the pictures in the Liechtenstein Gallery; among others the following:

PORTRAITS.

The Emperor Joseph II.
The Archduke Maximilian.

SUBJECTS.

Bust of a young Man, after Rembrandt.
Christ bearing His Cross; after Leonardo da Vinci.
St. Catharine of Siena praying; after Alessandro Allori.
The Funeral Pageant of Joseph Wenceslas, Prince of Liechtenstein.

JANSEN, JOHANNES MAURITZ, was a Dutch landscape painter, who was born, probably at Amsterdam, in 1812. He settled at Utrecht, where he died in 1857.

JANSEN, JOHANN MATTHIAS, was born at Potsdam in 1751, and studied drawing under Krüger at that place, where also he practised painting from the models in the gallery. In 1770 he went to Vienna, and in the following year to Rome. He proceeded to Paris in 1774, and after returning home was occupied in painting portraits, historical subjects, and theatrical decorations. The date of his death is not stated. The Brunswick Gallery possesses pictures by him.

JANSON, CORNELIS. See JANSSENS.

JANSON, JACOBUS, a Dutch painter and etcher, was born at Amboyna, in the East Indies, in 1729, but was brought to Holland by his parents when eight years of age. He became an engineer officer, but resigned his post from his preference for painting. He resided at Leyden, usually painting landscapes and cattle, and died there in 1784. A 'View of the Castle of Heemstede' by him is in the Amsterdam Museum. He also copied one or two of Paulus Potter's paintings, and etched a few plates from his own designs.

JANSON, JOHANNES CHRISTIANUS, the son of Jacobus Janson, was born in 1763. He was instructed in painting by his father, but preferring a military life, he entered the army in 1795, and made several campaigns in Germany. On the union of Holland with France, he left the service and settled at the Hague. He painted landscapes with cattle and figures, winter scenes, and various other subjects. Some of these he also etched. He died about 1820.

JANSON, PIETER, brother of Johannes Christianus Janson, was born in 1768, and also followed for a time the military profession, but being seriously wounded he retired, with the pension of a major, and settled at Arnheim, where he occupied himself in painting landscapes and cattle, and in etching animals. The date of his death is not known.

JANSSENS, ABRAHAM, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp about 1575. At the age of eighteen he became a pupil of Jan Snellinck, but he was not admitted as a master into the Guild of St. Luke until 1601. He was a contemporary of Rubens, and merits a place in the first rank after that master. Houbraken relates that he manifested a bitter enmity to Rubens, but the statement is now regarded as a fiction, as are that writer's disparaging remarks upon his course of life and the manner of his end. He died at Antwerp in 1632. There are many fine pictures by Abraham Janssens in the churches in Flanders. At Antwerp, in the church of the Carmelites, is an altar-piece of the 'Entombment of Christ,' and another of the 'Virgin and Child, with St. Catharine, St. Cecilia, and other Saints'; in the cathedral at Ghent, an 'Ecce Homo,' and a 'Descent from the Cross,' finely composed, and of the grandest effect. In the gallery of the Elector Palatine is one of his best works, representing the 'Raising of Lazarus.' Among his principal works are also:

Antwerp.	Gallery.	The Virgin and Child.
"	"	Scalds.
"	"	Adoration of the Magi.
Berlin.	Gallery.	Vertumnus and Pomona.
"	"	Meleager and Atalanta.
Brussels.	Gallery.	Old Age resting on Faith and Hope.
Cassel.	Gallery.	Diana and her Nymphs.
Vienna.	Gallery.	Venus and Adonis.
"	"	Apollo.

JANSSENS, ALEXANDER, a Flemish engraver, was probably related to Victor Honoré Janssens. There are by him a set of etchings of subjects from the life of Achilles, after pictures by his relative.

JANSSENS, CORNELIS, called JANSSENS VAN KEULEN, or JANSON VAN KEULEN, was born probably at Amsterdam, but possibly in London, in 1590. He had already reached considerable celebrity in his own country, when he visited England in 1618. Here he met with very flattering encouragement, and was taken into the service of James I., whose portrait he painted several times. His pictures are generally painted on panel, but he also worked in miniature. One of his finest portraits was that of Sir George Villiers, father of the famous Duke of Buckingham, one of his hands resting on a greyhound. Janssens was less employed after the arrival of Van Dyck, although he remained in England until 1648. He then settled at the Hague, but died probably, at Amsterdam, between 1662 and 1664. Some of his best pictures are:

Portrait of Charles I. (Chatsworth House.)
 Henry, Prince of Wales. (Kedleston Hall.)
 The Duke of Buckingham. (Welbeck Abbey.)
 William Harvey. (Royal College of Physicians.)
 Sir Christopher and Lady Neville. 1627. (Wroxton Hall.)
 Admiral Pennington. (Lord Tollemache.)

Other portraits by him are at Amsterdam, Berlin, Brunswick, Carlsruhe, Dresden, Dublin, the Hague, &c. The portrait of John Milton that belonged to Thomas Hollis, and of which there is an engraving by Cipriani, was by Janssens. It was painted when Milton was only ten years old, consequently in the first year of Janssens's arrival in England.

JANSSENS, CORNELIS, the younger, son of Cornelis Janssens van Keulen, was a portrait and miniature painter. He was the pupil of his father, and established himself at Utrecht, where he was living in 1670.

JANSSENS, DANIEL, was an architectural and decorative painter, who was born at Mechlin in 1636. In 1660 he was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Mechlin, and in 1666 into that at Antwerp. In 1680 he painted a grand triumphal arch for the festival of St. Rombaut. He died at Mechlin in 1682.

JANSSENS, HENDRIK, a Dutch engraver, who flourished about 1640, has left some plates of ornaments for goldsmiths and jewellers, enriched with figures and other embellishments. Some of his prints are from his own designs.

JANSSENS, HIERONYMUS, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1624. He was a pupil of Van der Lamén, and died at Antwerp in 1693. Most of his works were long ascribed to Victor Honoré Janssens, although the dates on some show them to have been executed before the birth of the latter. There are amongst them:

A Court Assemblage. (Louvre.)
 Court Ball. 1658. (Leleux Collection, Lille.)
 Trictrac. 1659.
 High Playing. 1660. (Le Brun-Dalbanne Collection.)

JANSSENS, JAN, a Flemish painter, flourished at Ghent in the 17th century. In the Church of St. Nicholas in that city is a 'St. Jerome' ascribed to this artist, and other works are in the Museum, while a 'Resurrection' is at Bruges.

JANSSENS, VICTOR HONORÉ, a Flemish painter, was born at Brussels in 1664. He was the son of a tailor, who intended to bring him up to his own business, but his love for art induced his father to place him under the care of an indifferent painter named Volders, with whom he studied seven years, and made extraordinary progress. Soon after leaving his master, the Duke of Holstein invited him to his court, and appointed him his painter, with a considerable salary. After passing four years in the employment of that prince, he obtained his permission to visit Italy, and was by him maintained in Rome for eleven years. He there formed an intimacy with Tempesta, and frequently painted the figures in his landscapes. The desire of revisiting his native country induced him to leave Rome, where he was in full employment and reputation, and he returned to Brussels. He had hitherto confined himself to small or easel pictures; but he was now called upon to exert his talents on a larger scale, being commissioned to paint several altar-pieces for churches in Brussels and other cities of Brabant. In 1718 he was invited to Vienna, and appointed painter to the Emperor of Germany, but after a residence of three years in that city he visited London. He died at Brussels in 1739. Among the most esteemed of his pictures are:

St. Roch curing the Diseased. (St. Nicholas, Brussels.)
 St. Charles Borromeo interceding with the Virgin for those infected with the Plague. (Church of the Carmelites.)
 The Sacrifice of Æneas.
 Dido ordering the Building of Carthage. (Brussels Gallery.)
 Fight between seven Women. (Ghent Museum.)
 Venus and Adonis. (Copenhagen.)

JANSSON, KARL EMANUEL, a Swedish painter, was born at Finnström, in Åland, in 1846. He learned the rudiments of painting under the Finnish artist Ekman at Åbo, and in 1862 came to Stockholm, where he pursued his studies under Boklund. In 1868 he obtained State assistance to enable him to proceed to Düsseldorf, where he gained two years' further tuition from Vautier. He received a medal at Vienna, and was a member of the Academy of St. Petersburg. He died at his native place in 1874. Two of his best paintings were:

An Åland Courtship.
 A Farthing in the Ålms Bag.

JANSZ, EGBERT, a German engraver, flourished about the year 1600. There are by him a set of small prints of animals, entitled 'Icones Venantium,' dated 1598, after Antonio Tempesta. He worked chiefly with the graver, in a style somewhat resembling that of Crispyn van de Passe.

JANTSCHA, LAURENZ, a landscape painter and etcher, was born at Rodein, in Carniola, in 1742. He was a pupil of Weirotter and Christian Brand, and of the Vienna Academy, at which he in 1801 became corrector of landscape drawing, and afterwards professor. He died at Vienna in 1812. He executed landscapes and views in the parks of Schönbrunn, Laxenburg, Neu Waldeck, &c., and a panorama of Vienna which obtained repute.

JANZ, JACOB, a Flemish painter, flourished at Haarlem in 1690. His name appears in the Guild in 1732.

JANZ, SIMON, was a Flemish portrait painter, who flourished about 1464. His name appears in a document of Leyden as having painted portraits of Philip of Burgundy, his wife, and the Count of Charolais.

JAQUET, known in Italy as GIACHETTO, and also as IL FRANCIOSE, was a French portrait painter of the 15th century, who is mentioned in conjunction with Jan van Eyck and Rogier of Bruges. At Rome he painted a life-like portrait of Pope Eugenius IV., which is preserved in the sacristy of Santa Maria sopra Minerva.

JAQUEVRART, (or JAQUORART,) was a miniature painter who worked with distinction at the French court at the beginning of the 15th century.

JAQUOTOT, MARIE VICTOIRE, a French porcelain painter, was born in Paris in 1778. She was attached to the manufactory at Sèvres, and painted among other things a dessert service which was given by Napoleon to the Emperor of Russia after the peace of Tilsit. She also executed on porcelain several designs after Raphael's works. She died in 1855.

JARDIN, KAREL DU. See DU JARDIN.

JARDINIER, CLAUDE DONAT, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1726. He was first instructed by Nicolas Dupuis, but was afterwards a pupil of Laurent Cars. He died in Paris in 1774. The following, among other plates, are by him:

The Virgin and Child; after C. Maratti.

The Genius of Glory and Honour, surrounded by Cherubs; after Annibale Carracci.

A Mother, with three Children; after Greuze.

Silence; after the same.

Two Soldiers playing at Cards; after Valentin.

JARENUS. An altarpiece in the Berlin Gallery, representing the 'Crucifixion' and other scenes in the life of Christ, painted on a gold ground, was ascribed by Dr. Waagen to an imaginary painter of this name, on the ground of its similarity to a 'Pietà' in the Earl of Pembroke's collection at Wilton House, bearing, as Passavant thought, the signature Jarenus P. Dr. Woltmann, however, has shown, in the 'Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft' for 1879 (ii. 422-424), that Passavant and Waagen mistook for the signature of the artist a fragment of the inscription 'Jesus Nazarenus Rex Judaeorum,' and, moreover, that the Wilton House picture differs both in style and in execution from that in the Berlin Gallery. The latter is now assigned to an unknown painter of the Westphalian school of Soest in the later years of the 15th century. The wings of the same altarpiece, which were formerly in the Berlin Gallery, have been transferred to the Museum at Münster.

JARMORINI, GIUSEPPE, an architect and painter of the Bolognese school, was born at Bologna in 1733. He was a pupil of Pietro Scandellari, and distinguished himself as a painter of ornaments. He died in 1816.

JARVIS, JOHN WESLEY, an American portrait painter, was born at South Shields in 1780. He was a nephew of the great John Wesley, and brought up by his uncle until he was five years old, when he was sent to his father, who had emigrated to Philadelphia. Dunlap, in his 'History of the Arts of Design in the United States' (1834), describes him as an artist of astonishing powers, but unfortunately of the most depraved habits. He was one of the best portrait painters of the day: eccentric, witty, and convivial. As far as can be gathered, he died in extreme poverty in 1834.

JASCHKE, FRANZ, a landscape painter and engraver of Vienna, was born at Rosenthal, near Glatz, in 1775. He became private painter to the Archduke Rainer, whom he accompanied on a tour through Hungary, Galicia, Transylvania, and Upper Italy, etching some seventy plates to illustrate the account of his travels. He died after 1836.

JASON. See TORENVLIET.

JASPERS, JAN BAPTIST. See GASPERS.

JAUREGUY Y AGUILAR, JUAN, a painter and poet, was born in Biscaya about 1570. He was sprung from a distinguished family, and was a knight of the Calatrava order, and Master of the Horse to Queen Isabella, consort of Philip IV. He visited Rome and studied the old masters, and afterwards furnished the designs for the engravings in Luis Alcazar's work, 'Investigatio Arcani Sensus in Apocalypsi' (1619). He also painted some excellent portraits, among others that of Cervantes. He wrote a poetic 'Dialogue upon Nature and Art,' and translated the 'Aminta' of Tasso. He died about 1640.

JAZET, EUGÈNE, a French mezzotint engraver, the son and pupil of Jean Pierre Marie Jazet, was born in Paris in 1816, and died there in 1856. His most important plates are:

Michelangelo and Raphael at the Vatican; after Horace Vernet.

Arabs in camp listening to a Story; after the same.

Last Moments of Queen Elizabeth; after Paul Delaroche.

Arabs surprised in the Desert by the Simoom; after Biard.

Peter the Great saved by his Mother; after C. Steuben.

JAZET, JEAN PIERRE MARIE, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1788. He was placed under his uncle Debucourt, who was especially devoted to aquatint, which Jazet brought to great perfection. He engraved the works of David, Gros, Grenier, Steuben, Guet, and others, but his great success was with his series of plates after the battle-pieces of Horace Vernet. He died in Paris in 1871.

JEAN, P., a miniature painter, was born in Jersey in 1755. He originally served in the navy, but after the American War practised as a miniature painter, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1787 to 1802, in which latter year he died at Hempstead, Kent.

JEANNIST, ÉMILE, a draughtsman and modeller, was born in Paris in 1813. He was for some time a pupil of Delaroche, and came to England about 1845 or 1846. After spending two years in London he went to Staffordshire, where he was employed by Mr. Herbert Minton of Stoke-upon-Trent. In the year 1850 he took charge of the Fine Art department of Elkington's works in Birmingham, where his early experience of metallic manufactures and his great taste had ample field for operation. He died at Birmingham in 1857.

JEANRON, PHILIPPE AUGUSTE, a French landscape painter, was born at Boulogne in 1810. He came to Paris in 1828, studied under Sigalon and Souchon, and received a medal in 1833. Under the Republican government of 1848 he was appointed, through his friend Ledru Rollin, to the charge of the Louvre, where he classified the pictures. He afterwards became director of the Academy at Marseilles, but in his latter years he fell into reduced circumstances. He died in Paris in 1877. Amongst his works are:

The Little Patriots. (Caen Museum.)
The Lighthouse.
The Harbour of Ambleuse. (Luxembourg Gallery.)
The Repose in Egypt.
View in the Limousin. (Lille Museum.)
View of Cape Griznez. 1852. (Boulogne Museum.)
The Camp at Equihen. 1854. (Chartres Museum.)
View of Cape Griznez: evening. 1854. (Aix Museum.)
Zouaves on the sea-shore.
The Blacksmiths of Corréze.

JEATURAT, EDME, a French engraver, was born in Paris in 1672, and died in the same city in 1738. He was a pupil of Bernard Picart. The following are his principal plates:

The Meeting of Jacob and Rachel; after P. F. Mola; for the Crozat Collection.
The Repose in Egypt; after the same; for the same collection.
The Finding of Moses; after Paolo Veronese; for the same.
Portrait of Pierre Puget, called the Michelangelo of France; after Puget the younger.
The Meeting of David and Abigail; after N. Vleughels.
The Resurrection; after the same.
Thetis plunging Achilles into the Styx; after the same.
Telemachus in the Island of Calypso; after the same.
The Triumph of Mordecai; after Le Clerc.
Christ among the Doctors; after the same.
Achilles discovered among the Daughters of Lycomedes; after the same.
St. John the Baptist baptizing; after N. Poussin.
Pan and Syrinx; after P. Mignard.
The Dead Christ on the knees of the Virgin; after Le Brun.

JEATURAT, ÉTIENNE, was born in Paris in 1699. He was a pupil of Vleughels, whom he followed to Rome. Received into the Academy in 1733, he became successively professor, rector, and in 1781 chancellor, and held the post of keeper of the royal pictures at Versailles. His various historical and genre pictures were engraved during his lifetime. He exhibited from 1737 to 1769, and died at Versailles in 1789. In the Louvre there is a picture by him of 'Diogenes breaking his Cup.' Others of his works are, 'The Mysteries of the Trinity,' 'St. Philip Neri,' and 'The Abduction.'

JEATURAT DE BERTRY, NICOLAS HENRI, was a nephew and pupil of Étienne Jeaurat. He chiefly painted ornaments, and was appointed painter to Marie Leszczinska, queen consort of Louis XV. He was received into the Academy in 1756, and was still living in 1793.

JEAVONS, THOMAS, a line engraver, was born in 1816. He confined himself for the most part to engraving from landscape subjects. One of his plates, 'Dutch Boats in a Calm,' after E. W. Cooke, R.A., was published in the 'Art Journal' in 1849. He retired to Welshpool, where he died in 1867.

JEENS, CHARLES HENRY, a line engraver, was born at Uley, in Gloucestershire, in 1827. He studied under Brain and Greatbach, and produced his first plate in 1848. He engraved postage stamps for some of the English colonies, and the vignettes for Macmillan's 'Golden Treasury' series. He died in 1879. Amongst his best plates are:

Joseph and Mary; after Armitage.
Lady Hamilton at the Spinning-Wheel; after Romney.
The Reverie; after Millais.
The Summer Gift; after Lance.
William, Lord Russell; after A. Johnstone.
The Walk at Kew; after Gainsborough.
Go, and sin no more; after E. Corbould.
The Jäger; after Foltz.
Liberation of the Slaves; after H. Le Jeune.
The Duenna; after G. S. Newton.
Leaving Home; after F. Holl.
Dante; after Gérôme.
The Controversy; after Elmore.
The Justice of the King; after John Faed.

JEFFEREYS, JAMES, was born at Maidstone in 1757. He was the son of a coach painter, who sent him to London, where he was placed under the tuition of Woollett, the engraver, but he afterwards applied himself to painting, and became a student of the Royal Academy. In 1774 he obtained the gold medal for the best historical picture, and in 1775 he was sent to Rome. After a residence of four years in Italy he returned to England, and in 1783 exhibited a picture representing the 'Destruction of the Spanish Batteries before Gibraltar,' which was much admired, and was engraved by Woollett. He died of a decline in 1784.

JEGHER, CHRISTOFFEL, a German wood engraver, was born about the year 1590. About 1620 he went to Antwerp, where he afterwards chiefly resided. He there attracted the notice of Rubens, who employed him to execute several cuts from his designs, which he intended to publish. They are cut with spirited strokes, in imitation of the cross hatchings with a pen, and produce a very powerful effect. After the death of Rubens, Jegher purchased the greater part of the blocks, and republished the prints on his own account. He also worked after the designs of other masters. He died in the Netherlands between 1660 and 1670. The following are all after Rubens (the best impressions are with the name of Rubens as the publisher, those with the name of Jegher substituted are the second, and less valuable):

The Bust of a Man, with a thick beard; in chiaroscuro.
Susannah and the Elders.
The Repose in Egypt; in chiaroscuro.
The Infant Jesus and St. John playing with a Lamb.
The Crucifixion; after F. Frank. 1637.
The Coronation of the Virgin.
Christ tempted by Satan.
Hercules destroying Fury and Discord.
Silenus drunk, supported by two Satyrs; the same subject was engraved by Bolswert.
The Garden of Love.

JEHANNET. See CLOUET.

JEHNER, ISAAC, a mezzotint engraver, was the son of a German gunsmith, who introduced the art of silver plating into England. He was born in Westminster in 1750, and when nine years of age met with a series of accidents which left him dwarfed and deformed for life. About 1770 he was apprenticed to an engraver, with whom he remained five years, after which he worked for a time as an assistant to William Pether. Besides engraving in mezzotint, he executed portraits in crayons and water-colours, as well as in oil, and likewise painted upon silk, practising in Exeter, Plymouth, Bristol, and London. There is no trace of him after 1806, in which year he published an autobiographical sketch of his career under the title of 'Fortune's Football,' in which he altered his name to that of Jenner. His principal plates are:

The Entombment of Christ; after Rubens.

The Incredulity of St. Thomas; after Correggio.

The Altar-piece of St. Mary Redcliffe, Bristol; after Hogarth.

An Allegory in commemoration of the Recovery of George III.; after his own design.

Mlle. Lemoine, in the character of Zelima; after the same.

William Henry, Marquis of Titchfield, afterwards Duke of Portland; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Girl with a Muff; after the same.

The Earl of Barrymore, as Cupid; after Cosway.

The Four Seasons; after Brueghel.

JELGERHUIS, JAN RIENKSZ, born at Leeuwarden in 1770, was both a painter and an actor. He painted landscapes, interiors of churches, marine subjects, and market-places. He died at Amsterdam in 1836.

JELGERHUIS, RIENK, a painter, designer, and engraver, was born at Leeuwarden in 1729. He practised portraiture in the crayon manner, and is stated to have produced no less than 7763. His drawings of 'The History of Joseph' are highly commended. But he worked also in oil, and was especially successful in representing musical instruments. As an engraver he executed numerous portraits in mezzotint. He died at Amsterdam in 1806.

JELGERSMA, JAKO HAJO, a painter of marine subjects, was born at Harlingen in 1702, and was a scholar of Vitrina. He settled at Haarlem, where he painted portraits, of which he executed a great number. His sea-pieces in sepia and bistre are capitally executed. He also executed pictures in 'grisaille' in the style of Jan De Witt. He died at Haarlem in 1795.

JENICHEN, BALTHASAR, was an engraver on metal and wood, who lived at Nuremberg, most of whose works bear dates between 1560—1577. He died before 1621. Among his various plates were the following:

Thirty-seven plates of the chief men of the Reformation period, such as Martin Bucer, Calvin, Camerarius, Erasmus, Huss, Luther, Melancthon, Paracelsus, Zwingli, Solis, and others.

Twenty-five plates of famous men and women, as Drake, Martin Schenk, Queen Elizabeth, etc.

Sixteen plates of the Dukes of Saxony.

Twenty-four plates of scenes in the Life of Christ.

Twenty-five plates of the Apostles.

Fifteen plates of the Life of the Virgin.

Fourteen plates of Saints.

Twelve plates of the Labours of Hercules.

Plates of the Seasons, Elements, and Senses.

Views of Tunis, Dulcigno, Goleta, Cyprus, Antivari, Corfu, Rome, Jerusalem, etc.

The Battle of Lepanto. 1571.

The Siege of Rochelle. 1572.

JENKENS, ANTHONY, was a native of England, who flourished about 1560, and engraved maps and plans.

JENKINS, D., an engraver, practised in London towards the end of the 18th century, and executed several plates after Angelica Kaufmann.

JENKINS, JOSEPH JOHN, a subject painter in water-colours, was born in London in 1811. He was the son of D. Jenkins, the engraver, who educated his son in the same profession, but delicate health compelled him to abandon its pursuit. In 1842 he joined the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, from which he afterwards seceded, and was in 1850 elected an associate of the older Society of Painters in Water-Colours, of which he became a full member in the following year, and was secretary from 1854 to 1864. He was a frequent contributor to the annual exhibitions, the subjects of some of his more popular works being derived from a lengthened visit to Lower Brittany in 1846. He also collected materials for a history of the Society, but this he did not live to complete. He died in London in 1885. Among his best known works are:

Going with the Stream.

Going against the Stream.

The Happy Time.

Both Sides of the Channel.

Hopes and Fears.

Love. (Royal Collection.)

Sleeping Companions.

Shrimpers. (South Kensington Museum.)

JENKINS, THOMAS, was a native of Devonshire, who studied in London under Hudson. He accompanied Richard Wilson to Rome, where he was residing in 1763; but as he did not succeed as an artist, he became a dealer in antiquities, and a banker. When the French occupied Rome in 1798 they confiscated his property, and he fled to England. He died at Yarmouth in 1798.

JENNER, ISAAC. See JEHNER.

JENNER, THOMAS, an engraver and printseller who flourished about the year 1650, executed the following portraits:

Oliver Cromwell.

Francis Manners, Earl of Rutland.

Sir William Wadd, Lieutenant of the Tower.

He also etched a plate of a large ship, called the 'Soverayne of the Seas,' dated 1653.

JENSEN, CHRISTIAN ALBRECHT, was born at Bredsted, in Schleswig, in 1792, and became a pupil of the Copenhagen Academy. About 1818 he was living at Rome and Venice, and in the next year was at Dresden copying Raphael's 'Madonna di San Sisto' and Titian's 'Venus.' In 1824 he was admitted a member of the Academy of Copenhagen, and he was afterwards appointed conservator of the engravings. He died in that city in 1870. A portrait by him of the flower painter Fritzsch is in the Thorvaldsen Museum, and two other portraits are in the Copenhagen Gallery.

JENSEN, JOHAN LAURENTS, a Danish flower painter, was born at Gjentofte in 1800, and studied under Fritzsch in the Copenhagen Academy. In 1822 he went to Paris, and then to Sèvres to study porcelain painting. After his return he was in 1825 admitted a member of his Academy, and appointed first painter in the porcelain manufactory. He also visited Rome and Naples. He died at Gjentofte in 1856. His works are of very unequal merit, as he produced them often too rapidly. Besides flowers he painted kitchen pieces and dead game. Three of his pictures are in the Copenhagen Gallery.

JENTZSCH, JOHANN MORITZ GOTTFRIED, a designer, painter, and engraver, was born at Hinter-Jossen, near Pirna, in 1759. When a boy he secretly betook himself to Meissen to learn painting, and there entered the porcelain factory, and by 1780 had become a clever landscape painter. In 1800 he was appointed scene painter to the court theatre in Dresden, and soon afterwards travelled, by the Elector's assistance, in Italy. In 1824 he was admitted a member of the Academy of Dresden, where he died in 1826. One of his best landscapes is a 'View of the Summer Palace at Pilnitz.' As an engraver he executed views of the Saxon Switzerland in Aberli's manner.

JERICHAU, HARALD ADOLF NIKOLAJ, a Danish landscape painter, was born at Copenhagen in 1852. He was the son of the sculptor Jens Adolf Jerichau, and of the painter Elisabeth Marie Anna Jerichau-Baumann, and from his sixth year was trained for an artist. He was for some time a pupil of Bénouville, but studied mainly from nature, and by 1870 had produced his pictures, 'Ponte Molle' and a 'View from Velletri.' He travelled in Switzerland, Greece, Asia Minor, and Turkey, and lived more in Paris and Rome than in Denmark. Domestic unhappiness brought his life to an early close at Rome in 1878. Two of his best pictures are 'The Coast at Sorrento' and 'Caravan at Sardes.'

JERICHAU-BAUMANN, ELISABETH MARIE ANNA, a Danish genre painter, was the daughter of a card-maker named Baumann in Warsaw, where she was born in 1819. When sixteen years of age she became a pupil of Karl Sohn of Düsseldorf, with whom she resided three years, during which time she received much good advice from such painters as Lessing, Hildebrand, and Schadow. Her first picture, 'A young Bride on her way to Church,' attracted attention, and was the commencement of a long series of subject pictures, which were often of a religious character. In 1845 she visited Rome, and there married in 1846 the Danish sculptor, Jens Adolf Jerichau. After spending a few months in Denmark, when she painted the portrait of her husband which is in the Copenhagen Gallery, they returned to Rome, and remained there for some time. She exhibited occasionally at the Paris Salon and at the Royal Academy in London between 1859 and 1869. She died at Copenhagen in 1881. Her husband survived her until 1883. Madame Jerichau-Baumann was an accomplished painter of genre subjects and portraits. Her works are careful and animated in design, although somewhat heavy in execution. She possessed also much musical and histrionic talent, and in 1874 she published a volume of her early reminiscences under the title 'Ungdomserindringer,' and subsequently, with her son Harald, an illustrated work entitled 'Brogede Reisebilleder.' Among her works may be mentioned:

The Princess of Wales in her wedding dress. (Painted for the Princess Christian.)
 Frederick VII., King of Denmark.
 The Brothers Grimm.
 Hans Christian Andersen, the Danish poet, reading his story "The Angel" to a sick Child.
 Reading the Bible. (Painted for Napoleon III.)
 A wounded Danish Soldier nursed by his Betrothed.
 A young Girl praying for her sick Mother.
 The Danish Fisherman's Courtship.
 Danish Fisherwoman drying her Nets.
 Mother's Delight.
 Children playing with Sheep in a Field.
 Shipwrecked Sailors on the West Coast of Jutland.
 Italian Fishermen in a boat on the Mediterranean.
 Eastern Women.
 Egyptian Water-Carriers.
 Finis Poloniae.

JERNDORFF, JUST ULRIK, a Danish painter and picture restorer, was born at Copenhagen in 1806, and in 1831 came to Oldenburg to study under Professor Möller, after which in 1837 he travelled by royal assistance in Germany and Italy. He returned home in 1839, but the Grand-Duke of Oldenburg invited him into his service and ultimately made him his court painter. He died at Oldenburg in 1847. He was successful as a painter of portraits and landscapes.

JERRIGH, E., a Walloon by birth, was a painter of the latter part of the 16th century, who studied at Antwerp, and afterwards lived principally at Cologne. Johann von Aachen was apprenticed to him in 1568. He was an able artist both in portraiture and in historical subjects; one of the latter, 'The Message of the Angel Gabriel to the Virgin,' is in the Wallraf-Richartz Museum at Cologne, and bears the date 1601.

JERVAS, CHARLES, was born in Ireland about 1675, and was for a short time a pupil of Sir Godfrey Kneller. According to Horace Walpole, "Norris, frame-maker and keeper of the pictures to King William and Queen Anne, was his first patron, and permitted him to copy what he pleased in the royal collection." He is said to have taught drawing and painting to Pope, who, with more enthusiasm than felicity, wrote an 'Epistle to Mr. Jervas,' in which, speaking of the families of some ladies, he says:

"O, lasting as thy colours may they shine,
 Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line;
 New graces yearly like thy works display.
 Soft without weakness, without glaring gay!
 Led by some rule that guides, but not constrains,
 And finish'd more through happiness than pains."

Posterity has appreciated more justly the artist at whose shrine this incense is lavished, for though Jervas was in his own day at the head of the profession, he is now regarded as defective in almost every point, and in fact with pretensions unworthy of notice. A well-known anecdote of Jervas exhibits, in a very whimsical light, his conceit and vanity. Having succeeded in copying, and in his own opinion surpassing, a picture by Titian, he looked first at the one, then at the other, exclaiming with complacency, "Poor little Tit! how he would stare." He died in London in 1739. The National Portrait Gallery has paintings by him of Caroline, Queen Consort of George II., formerly in the British Museum, Catharine Hyde, Duchess of Queensberry ('Prior's Kitty, ever young'), Pope and Martha Blount, and Dean Swift.

JESI, SAMUEL, a line engraver, was born of Jewish parents at Milan in 1789, and became a pupil of Giuseppe Longhi. He died at Florence in 1853. His plates include:

The Expulsion of Hagar; after Guercino. 1821.
 The Madonna, with SS. John and Stephen; after Fra Bartolommeo.
 Leo X., with Cardinals Rossi and Giulio de' Medici; after Raphael.
 The Virgin and Child ('Madonna Tempi'); after the same.
 La Vierge à la Vigne; after Paul Delaroche.
 Giulio and Ippolito de' Medici, as Children; after Sus-termans (?).
 Geronimo Fracastoro; after G. Longhi.
 Giuseppe Longhi; after the same.
 Benvenuto Cellini; after Vasari.
 St. Thomas Aquinas.

JEUGHT, JAN JOZEF VAN DER. See VAN DER JEUGHT.

JEWETT, THOMAS ORLANDO SHELDON, a wood-engraver, was born in 1799. He was self-taught, and at the early age of sixteen he executed a number of woodcuts for a book entitled 'Wanderings of Memory,' written by his brother; these, though very rough and unfinished, showed signs of skill. Two years later he contributed illustrations to a monthly periodical called the 'Northern Star,' edited and published by his father; for this work he executed not only wood engravings, but also etchings and aquatints. From this time he devoted himself to engraving on wood, and becoming acquainted with John Henry Parker of Oxford, was employed by him to illustrate his various architectural publications: 'Memorials of Oxford,' 'Domestic Architecture of England,' 'Glossary of Architecture,' &c. In 1838 he had removed from Duffield in Derbyshire to Headington near Oxford, to be nearer his work, and he subsequently removed to London, where he died in 1869. He also illustrated Murray's 'Handbooks to the Cathedrals,' Sir G. G. Scott's 'Memorials of Westminster Abbey,' Bentham's 'British Flora,' Harvey's 'Phycologia Britannica,' and many other important works.

JEWETT, WILLIAM, an American portrait painter, was born at East Haddam, Connecticut, in 1795. He at first worked on a farm, and then was apprenticed to a coachmaker in New London. Having an eye for colours, he managed to evade his indentures, and make his way in a coasting vessel to New York, where he was employed by Waldo to grind paints, and then became his pupil for three years, and eventually a sharer of his work and profits. The year of Jewett's death is not recorded.

JOANES, VICENTE. See MACIP.

JOANNINUS, JACOBUS MARIA. See GIOVANNINI.
JOANSUINI, GIACOMO, was an engraver, and perhaps a painter, whose name is affixed to an etching of the 'Presentation in the Temple.' It is inscribed Jacobus Joansuinus pictor et incisor.

JOAQUIN, Fray. See JUNCOSA.

JODE, DE. See DE JODE.

JOHANNES, a painter and architect of the 10th century, was invited by the Emperor Otto III. to decorate the Marienkirche at Aix-la-Chapelle, and was rewarded with a bishopric in Italy. As, however, he was about entering upon this, a nobleman of the vicinity sought to force his daughter upon him in marriage, and this resulted in his having to abandon his ecclesiastical post and to return to Germany.

JOHANNOT, CHARLES, a French engraver, the elder brother of Alfred and Tony Johannot, was born of French parentage at Offenbach, in Hesse Darmstadt, in 1788. He died in Paris in 1825.

JOHANNOT, CHARLES HENRI ALFRED, a French historical painter, was born at Offenbach, in Hesse Darmstadt, in 1800. He practised in France, and died in Paris in 1837. Amongst his works are:

The Duke of Guise after the Battle of Dreux. (Château d'Eu.)

Battle of Brattelen. (Versailles Gallery.)

Funeral of the Victims of 28 July, 1835, at the Invalides. (The same.)

JOHANNOT, TONY, a French historical painter and engraver, was born at Offenbach, in Hesse Darmstadt, in 1803. He was the brother of Charles and Alfred Johannot. He practised in France, and painted conversation-pieces and scenes in the manner of Watteau, but his designs for the illustration of Cervantes, Byron, Molière, and Walter Scott obtained for him his chief reputation. He died in Paris in 1852. Amongst his pictures are:

Versailles.	Gallery.	Battle of Fontenay.
"	"	Louis VII. passing the Meander.
"	"	Battle of Rosebecque. (Painted in conjunction with his brother Alfred Johannot.)

JOHN, FRIEDRICH, a German engraver, was born at Marienburg in 1769, and in his later years practised at Vienna. He died at Marburg in 1844. Amongst his plates are:

The Holy Family; after Fra Bartolommeo.

La Vierge au Palmier; after Raphael.

St. Joseph; after Carlo Dolci.

St. John in the Wilderness; after Guido.

JOHNS, AMBROSE BOWDEN, a landscape painter, was born at Plymouth in 1776. He was originally a bookseller, but afterwards obtained considerable success as a landscape painter in Devonshire, where many of his pictures are to be found. He occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions from 1814 to 1846. He died at Plymouth in 1858. Amongst his works are:

Evening: Pirates landing Cargo and a Female Captive.

View in Boringdon Woods. (Saltram Park.)

Okehampton Castle. (Cobham Hall.)

A Boy blowing Bubbles. (Sir M. Lopes.)

JOHNSON, C., was the engraver of some portraits, among which is that of Anne of Denmark, Queen of James I.

JOHNSON, HARRY JOHN, a landscape painter in oil and water-colours, was born at Birmingham in 1826. In 1843 he came to London and studied under William Müller and David Cox, and exhibited at the Royal Academy and elsewhere from 1845 onwards. He died in 1885. There are drawings by him of 'Jedburgh Abbey' and 'Linlithgow Palace,' both dated 1846, in the South Kensington Museum.

JOHNSON, ISAAC, was an antiquarian draughtsman who resided at Woodbridge, and made many drawings of Suffolk antiquities in the first years of the 19th century.

JOHNSON, JAMES, an engraver, practised in London about the middle of the 18th century. He engraved chiefly in mezzotint after Correggio, Rubens, Le Brun, and others.

JOHNSON, JOHN, was a wood engraver, who was apprenticed to Bewick, and engraved a few of the tail-pieces in the 'British Birds.' He died young in 1797.

JOHNSON, LAWRENCE, an obscure English engraver, lived early in the 17th century. He executed some heads for the 'General History of the Turks,' published in 1603.

JOHNSON, MARTIN, was a painter and medallist of the first half of the 17th century, who painted views of the most beautiful scenery in England. He afterwards took to die engraving.

JOHNSON, ROBERT, an engraver on wood and painter in water-colours, was born at Shotley, Northumberland, in 1770. He made the designs in water-colours for several of the cuts to the 'British Birds' and 'Fables' of Bewick, to whom he was apprenticed as an engraver. On the conclusion of his apprenticeship, however, he devoted himself to water-colour drawing. He died at Kenmore, in Perthshire, in 1796, from the effects of a cold contracted while copying Jamesone's portraits at Taymouth Castle.

JOHNSON, THOMAS, a mezzotint engraver, was born at Boston in 1708, and died there in 1767. He worked in London, and there are by him several portraits, and a few other subjects, some of the latter being in line. It is, however, stated by Strutt that Faber was in the habit of affixing the name Johnson to his own inferior productions. The following are among his works:

PORTRAITS.

Louis XIV., King of France.

Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon; after G. Zoust.

Thomac, Marquis of Wharton; after Sir G. Kneller.
 William, first Earl Cowper.
 William Bullock, the comedian; Tho: Johnson fecit et ad vivum pinxit.
 Edward Ward ('Ned Ward'); T. Johnson pinx et fec.
 Thomas Britton, the musical small-coal man; *after J.
 Woolaston.*

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

Four plates of the Seasons; Johnson fec.
 The Holy Family returning from Egypt; after Rubens.
 Adam and Eve, a small plate.
 View of Canterbury Cathedral. (Engraved in line for Dugdale's 'Monasticon.')

JOHNSTON, ANDREW, who was apparently an Englishman, has left a few portraits in mezzotint, among which is that of Henry Sacheverel, D.D., after Gibson.

JOHNSTONE, WILLIAM BORTHWICK, a Scottish painter, was born in Edinburgh in 1804. He was for many years a solicitor, and although from an early age he had showed a love of art, it was not till he had reached a mature age that he really devoted himself to painting. He displayed great diversity of style and subject in his pictures, his earliest works showing a leaning to the school of Wilkie. In 1843, however, he went to Rome, where he painted several pictures in the earlier Italian style. After his return he gradually turned his attention to miniature painting, which he practised for several years, and in which method some of his best works were executed. In his later years his pictures display a likeness in manner to those of John Phillip, R.A. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1840, and an Academician in 1848. In 1858 he was appointed curator of the National Gallery of Scotland, in which building is one of his best works, 'The Death of Rizzio.' He died in Edinburgh in 1868—two of his pictures, 'Female Industry' and 'Waterfall in Glen Nevis,' having been exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in the same year. Johnstone was also a writer and critic on art matters, and his critical and biographical 'Catalogue of the National Gallery of Scotland' showed much knowledge of art.

JOLI, ANTONIO, was born at Modena about 1700. He went when young to Rome, where he became a scholar of Giovanni Paolo Pannini, and proved an eminent painter of perspective and architectural views. He is said to have distinguished himself as a painter of theatrical decorations in England, Spain, and Germany; and was painter to Charles III., King of Naples, and his son Ferdinand IV. One of his paintings represents 'Alexander the Great decorating the Tomb of Achilles.' He also executed a great number of landscapes and marine views in the vicinity of Naples, of an oblong form, to serve as decorations over interior doors. He died in 1777.

JOLIVARD, ANDRÉ, a French landscape painter and etcher, was born at Le Mans in 1787. He first studied law in Paris, but in 1813 he joined the army; he, however, returned to his former studies after the Restoration. In 1816 he turned his attention to painting, and studied under Bertin. He died in Paris in 1851. Among his best paintings are, 'The Mountain Stream,' 'Summer Evening,' and 'Ubaldo and Dunois held by the Nymphs.' In the Bordeaux Museum is a landscape. He likewise etched seven plates of landscapes.

JOLLAIN, NICOLAS RENÉ, a French landscape and historical painter, was born in Paris in 1732, and became an Academician in 1773. The date of his death is not known. A portrait of Belley by him was engraved by L. L'Empereur, and 'The Nymph Erigone' by J. C. Müller.

JOLLAT, —, a French engraver on wood, flourished in the early part of the 16th century. He executed the cuts of ornamental borders, figures, &c., for a missal, in octavo, printed in Paris in 1490; also those for an anatomical work by Charles Etienne, which bear dates from 1530 to 1532.

JOLLIVET, PIERRE JULES, a French historical and still-life painter, was born in Paris in 1794. He was a pupil of Dejuinne and of Gros. His principal pictures are a 'Bull-Fight' and 'Louis le Gros taking the Oriflamme at St. Denis': the latter is with some others in the Versailles Galleries. He died in Paris in 1871.

JOLLY, HENRI JEAN BAPTISTE, a Flemish genre and portrait painter, was born at Antwerp in 1812. He travelled in Germany, and practised at the Hague, but died at Rotterdam in 1853. Amongst his works are:

Haarlem. Gallery. A Lace Factory of the Seventeenth Century.
 " " A Wounded Soldier.

JONASZ, JONAS, was a Dutch painter who exercised his art at Utrecht, and died at Schiedam in 1668.

JONCK HEER, J., was probably a native of Holland. He flourished from 1650 to 1660, and engraved a set of small oblong plates representing dogs and other domestic animals, etched in a free, spirited style, and harmonized with the graver, in the manner of Rembrandt. Two plates of greyhounds are said to be his best.

JONES, CHARLOTTE, a miniature painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1801 to 1823, and was miniature painter to the Princess of Wales. She died in London in 1847. Amongst her works are:

Portrait of Herself, dated 1805.
 George IV., as Prince of Wales.
 Queen Caroline, as Princess of Wales.
 Lady Melbourne.

JONES, DANIEL ADOLPHE ROBERT, a Belgian painter, was born at Brussels in 1806. He was a pupil of Verboeckhoven, and painted landscapes and animals. He died in 1874.

JONES, EMMA. See SOYER.

JONES, GEORGE, a battle, landscape, and subject painter, the son of John Jones, the engraver, was born in London in 1786. In 1801 he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he first exhibited in 1803. During the Napoleonic wars he held a commission in the militia, and served with the army of occupation in Paris. With the return of peace, however, he resumed the artistic profession, and in 1822 was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1824 an Academician. He held the office of librarian to the Academy from 1834 to 1840, and that of keeper from 1840 to 1850. He also, during the illness of Sir Martin Archer Shee, acted as president. He received various commissions from the British Institution, which awarded him in 1820 and 1822 two premiums of two hundred guineas each for pictures of the 'Battle of Waterloo.' He was one of the executors of Turner, and in 1849 published a memoir of Sir Francis Chantrey. He died in London in 1869. Amongst his works are:

The Battle of Borodino. 1829. (National Gallery.)
 The Burning Fiery Furnace. 1832. (The same.)

JONES, OWEN, born in London in 1809, though really an architect by profession, claims mention in this work as an ornamental designer. He was a pupil of Vulliamy, and studied at the Royal Academy. He travelled much on the continent of Europe and in the East, and in 1834 he visited Granada, where he was attracted by the glories of the Alhambra. Two years later he commenced his magnificent work on this subject, 'The Alhambra,' which was not completed till 1845; it contains 101 splendidly coloured plates from drawings by himself; the work, however, was a failure financially, owing to the great cost of production. In 1851 he took an active part in the decoration of the Great Exhibition of that year, and he was afterwards appointed joint-decorator for the ornamentation of the Crystal Palace, and especially designed the Egyptian, Greek, Roman, and Alhambra Courts. He died in London in 1874. Other books by him are designs for 'Mosaic and Tesselated Pavements,' 1846; 'The Polychromatic Ornament of Italy,' 1851; 'Grammar of Ornament,' 1856; and 'Examples of Chinese Ornament,' 1867. He also executed some illustrations for Lockhart's 'Spanish Ballads,' and for some other works of the same character.

JONES, THOMAS, a landscape painter, was born in London about 1730. He was at Rome during 1750-68, and he painted views in Italy and in Wales, as well as historical landscapes. The following engravings are after paintings by him:

The Traveller's Rest; engraved by J. Peak.
 The Jovial Peasants; by W. Woollett.
 The Bard; by J. R. Smith.

JONES, WILLIAM, a landscape painter, was a native of Ireland, where he practised in the latter part of the 18th century. His views of the 'Waterfall' and the 'Salmon Leap, co. Wicklow,' have been engraved.

JONG, LUDOLF DE. See DE JONG.

JONGELINX, ANTONIE, was probably a Fleming. He resided in England in 1762, in which year he engraved some plates of fishes, after Arnout van Aken.

JONGELINX, J. B., was a Flemish engraver, who worked at Antwerp early in the first half of the 18th century. He engraved some portraits, among which was that of Valerius Andreas for Foppens' 'Bibliotheca Belgica,' 1739. A sculptor of the name of Jakob Jongelinx flourished at Antwerp in the latter half of the 16th century.

JONGHE, JEAN BAPTISTE DE. See DE JONGHE.

JONXIS, JAN LODIEWYK, a Dutch painter of portraits and interiors, was born at Utrecht in 1789. He studied in Paris, where he gained the first prize in 1807, and afterwards became a professor in the Utrecht Academy. He died in 1866. Two specimens of his work are in the Haarlem Gallery.

JONXIS, PIETER HENDRIK LODIEWYK, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Utrecht in 1816. He was the son and pupil of J. L. Jonxis, and practised at Brussels, where he died in 1852. At the Haarlem Gallery is 'A Fisherman' by him.

JOPLING, JOSEPH MIDDLETON, an historical and genre painter, was born in London in 1831. He studied in no schools and under no masters, but was for some years a clerk in the War Office, and in 1861 the winner of the Queen's prize at Wimbledon. His first work, 'Mary, Queen of Scots, in prison,' was exhibited in 1848, and he became a frequent contributor of domestic subjects to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy and the Society of British Artists. He was elected an associate of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1859, but resigned in 1876. He died at Chelsea in 1884. He married, in 1874, Mrs. Louise Romer, who is well known as an exhibitor of figure subjects, landscapes, and portraits at the Royal Academy and the Dudley and Grosvenor Galleries from 1870 to the present time. Among his works may be named:

Joan of Arc at her Trial.
 The Tea-Rose.
 The Fair Florist.
 Autumn.
 Winter.
 Baiting the Line.
 Flossy.
 In the Conservatory.

JORDAENS, HANS, a Flemish historical and landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1599. He was a pupil of Marten van Cleve, and entered the Corporation of St. Luke in 1579. He married in 1582 the widow of Frans Pourbus (who died in 1581), and in 1585 established himself at Delft, where he died about 1613.

JORDAENS, HANS, the elder, was a pupil in 1572 of one Noé de Woewielle. He was admitted into the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp in 1581, and in 1585 he was giving lessons to his cousin Abraham Jordaens. He married in 1589 Catharina Sluyters. In the Dresden Gallery there is by him a 'Festive Scene.'

JORDAENS, HANS, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1581. He was probably the pupil of his father, Hans Jordaens the elder, and was admitted as a master's son into the Guild of St. Luke in 1600.

JORDAENS, HANS, the younger, a Flemish historical painter, was born at Antwerp about 1595. In 1617 he married a daughter of Siger Van Dyck. He died at Antwerp in 1643. Both at Antwerp and at Berlin are two pictures representing 'The Overthrow of Pharaoh and his Host in the Red Sea.' Other paintings of the same subject are at Hampton Court, St. Petersburg, the Hague, and elsewhere.

JORDAENS, JAKOB, was born at Antwerp in 1593. He was a pupil of Adam van Noort, an able artist, but of a character so depraved, that his conduct disgusted all his disciples, among whom was Rubens. Jordaens was the only student who continued under him for any length of time, through his desire to win the hand of his daughter Catharina, whom he eventually married. His early marriage prevented him from carrying into effect his project of visiting Italy, and he had to content himself with copying such works of the Italian masters as he could meet with in Flanders, especially those of Titian and Paolo Veronese. His growing talent soon attracted the attention of Rubens, who, with his accustomed liberality, took every opportunity of assisting him. The King of Spain had applied to Rubens for a series of cartoons to be executed in tapestry, and he engaged Jordaens to paint them from his designs. In 1638 he painted for this same monarch the fine landscape with the story of 'Vertumnus and Pomona,' which with the 'Pythagoras' of Rubens was taken away by Joseph Bonaparte on his abdication of the throne of Spain. Both of these pictures are now in England, the former being in some private collection, and the latter in the possession of the Queen. In 1641 he had so prospered as to build for himself a magnificent house in the Rue Haute at Antwerp, which he ornamented with pictures. Among his patrons were the King of Sweden and the Princess Amelia of Orange, for the latter of whom he painted his chef-d'œuvre, 'The Triumph of Prince Frederick Henry of Nassau.' About 1671 he and his younger daughter embraced the tenets of Calvin. He died of the plague at Antwerp in 1678. His only son, JAN, studied painting, and died in Denmark. Jordaens' talents were better adapted to the representation of fabulous subjects, animals, and scenes of revelry, than of sacred and historical subjects. His works are numerous, and are to be found in almost every public building in Belgium. The following are amongst his most famous pictures:

JORDAENS, JAN, surnamed POTLEPEL or POLLEPEL (pot-ladle), was a landscape, historical, and marine painter, born at Delft in 1616. He visited Italy, where he spent a long time, living in turn at Naples, Venice, and Rome. On his return to Holland he established himself at Voorburg, near the Hague, where he died in 1669.

JORDAN, ESTÉBAN, a Spanish painter and sculptor in the service of Philip II., was born at Valladolid in 1543, and died there in 1603. His best work was a high altar, executed for the Benedictines of Monserrate.

JORDAN, FEDOR IVANOVICH, a Russian line engraver, was born at Pavlovsk in 1800. Through the patronage of his godmother, the Empress Maria Fedorovna, he was educated at the Academy of Arts, where he received in 1824 the small gold medal for his engraving of 'Mercury lulling Argus to sleep,' and in 1829 the large gold medal for his 'Death of Abel,' after which he went to Paris, where he was a pupil of Richomme. The Revolution of July, 1830, obliged him to leave Paris, and he came to London to study under Raimbach, bringing with him a plate upon which he was engaged after the 'Holy Family' by Raphael in the Louvre. In 1835 he went to Rome, where he completed in 1850 his fine engraving of Raphael's 'Transfiguration.' He then returned home, but visited Italy a second time in 1853-55. After this he settled in St. Petersburg, where he was appointed Keeper of the Prints in the Hermitage, and in 1871 became Rector of the Academy of Arts. He died at St. Petersburg in 1883. Besides engravings after the works of Russian painters, and several portraits, the following are his principal plates:

The Holy Family; after Raphael.
The Transfiguration; after the same.
Raphael and Perugino; after the same.
A Pietà; after Cigoli.

JORDAN, SALVADOR, was the painter of the portrait of the celebrated Quevedo de Villegas, which was engraved at Madrid, by F. Gazan, in 1713.

JORDANO, LUCA. See GIORDANO.

JORGE, Maestro. See INGLES.

JORIS, AUGUSTIN, a Dutch painter, was born at Delft in 1525. He was first instructed by Jacobus Mondt, under whom he remained three years. He afterwards visited France, and resided some time in Paris. On his return to Holland he was employed in painting historical subjects at Delft, particularly a picture of the 'Infancy of the Virgin,' and he had already attained a high reputation when in 1552 he fell into a canal, and was drowned.

JOSEPH, GEORGE FRANCIS, a portrait and historical painter, was born in 1764. He entered the schools of the Royal Academy in 1784, and there obtained in 1792 the gold medal for his 'Scene from Coriolanus.' His works appeared at the Academy from 1788, and he exhibited also at the British Institution, where he obtained premiums in 1811 for his 'Return of Priam with the Dead Body of Hector,' and in 1812 for his 'Procession to Calvary.' In 1813 he was elected an Associate of the Academy. Although he occasionally painted history, his chief employment was as a portrait painter. He died at Cambridge in 1846. In the National Portrait Gallery are portraits by him of the Right Hon. Spencer Perceval and Sir Stamford Raffles.

JOSI, CHRISTIAN, was an engraver, born in Holland, who came to England when young, and studied under J. Raphael Smith. He is noted for his reproductions of Dutch drawings. He subsequently became a restorer and art-dealer. He died in London in 1828.

JOUBERT, JEAN FERDINAND, a French line engraver, born in Paris in 1810, was a pupil of Henriquel-Dupont. He resided for some time in London, engraving portraits and other works after English masters, but died at Mentone in 1884. His best known works are:

The Infant Jesus and St. John the Baptist; after Rubens. (Galerie Aguado.)
Baldassare Castiglione; after Raphael.
The Ecstasy of St. Francis; after a drawing by Murillo.
Innocence; after Greuze.

JOUE, JACQUES DE LA. See DE LA JOUE.

JOUET, MATTHEW, was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, in 1783, and was educated for the bar. He studied under Stuart at Boston in 1817, and afterwards practised his art as portrait painter in his native State, at New Orleans, Natchez, and other places in the south-west. He died at Lexington, Kentucky, in 1826.

JOULLAIN, FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, who was likewise a printseller, was born in Paris in 1697, and died there in 1779. There are several plates by him, executed in the style of Laurent Cars. The following are the principal:

The Flaying of Marsyas; after Paolo Veronese; for the Crozat Collection.
Mercury and Herse; after the same; for the same.
Ecce Homo; after Charles Coypel.
The Annunciation; after the same.
The Boar-hunt; after N. Desportes.
The Wolf-hunt; after the same.
The Rural Recreation; after N. Lancret.
Portrait of François Desportes; after a picture by himself.
Portrait of Charles Rivière Dufresnoy, dramatist; after Charles Coypel.

JOURDY, PAUL, a French historical and genre painter, was born at Dijon in 1805. He first studied in his native town, and then in Paris under Lethière and Ingres, obtaining the 'grand prix de Rome' in 1834. He died in Paris in 1856. Amongst his works are:

The Seven Sacraments. (St. Elizabeth, Paris.)
A Woman bathing.
Achilles and Scamander.
Theseus recognized by his Father. } (Dijon Museum.)
Prometheus bound.
Portrait of Mallebranche. (Versailles.)

JOUVENET, FRANÇOIS, son of Laurent Jouvenet the younger, was born at Rouen in 1664. He was a pupil of his uncle, Jean Jouvenet the younger, and was famous as a portrait painter. He was made an Academician in 1701, and died in Paris in 1749.

JOUVENET, JEAN, the elder, is supposed to have come from Italy and settled at Rouen in the middle of the 16th century. He died in 1580. The following table shows the chief members of the Jouvenet family.

JOUVENET, JEAN, a French historical and portrait painter, born at Rouen in 1644, was one of the fifteen children of Laurent Jouvenet the younger. He belonged to a family of artists of Italian descent, who had originally settled at Lyons, and finally at Rouen. Sent to Paris by his father in 1661, he made great progress in his studies, and was much influenced by Poussin, in whose style he painted his first work, 'Moses striking the Rock.' He was fortunate enough to attract the notice of the all-powerful Le Brun, who employed him for many years on his works at Versailles, and at the early age of twenty-four he obtained a commission from the goldsmiths to paint for Notre-Dame a 'mai' representing 'Christ healing the Paralytic.' In 1673 he obtained a second prize at the Academy, into which he was elected on the motion of Le Brun in 1674, being received in the following year. He held successively in the Academy the offices of Assistant Professor (1676), Professor (1681), Assistant Rector (1702), Director (1705), and Rector (1707). After the death of Le Brun and Mignard, Jouvenet held the foremost position in the French school, and consequently did not lack patronage. In 1695 he painted the ceiling of the Parliament Chamber at Rennes; in 1702 he undertook some decorative work at the Hôtel des Invalides; in 1706 he painted four large pictures, now in the Louvre, for the Church of St. Martin-des-Champs; and in 1709 he decorated part of the royal gallery in the chapel at Versailles. His latter years were fraught with much suffering from gout, and in 1713 he lost the use of his right side from a stroke of paralysis. Nothing daunted, he continued to paint with his left hand, and it was at this time that he produced the 'Magnificat' for Notre-Dame. He died in Paris in 1717.

Jouvenet was much addicted to the gigantic in his works. Out of the twelve pictures by which he is represented in the Louvre, there are seven in which the figures are life-size, and five of these are over twenty feet in length. When to the large extent of his canvases is added the low tone adopted by him in his colouring, there are considerable grounds for the application of the adjective "scenic" to his art, and even his most laudatory critics are compelled to qualify his style as "decorative." He, however, holds an important position in the history of the French school, midway between Le Brun and Mignard in the 17th century, and Watteau and Boucher in the 18th century. Jouvenet's brush was too prolific, and his works have been preserved in too many of the French public collections, to permit of a complete list of his productions. The following are amongst his chief works:

Alençon.	Bibliothèque.	Marriage of the Virgin.
Florence.	Uffizi.	St. Anne and the Virgin.
Lyons.	Museum.	Our Lord expelling the Sellers from the Temple. (A replica of the Louvre picture.)

JOVANNINUS, JACOBUS MARIA. See GIOVANNINI.

JOY, THOMAS MUGRAVE, was born at Boughton Minchelsea, in Kent, in 1812. Coming to London, he became a pupil of Samuel Drummond, A.R.A. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1833, and in 1841-43 he received a commission from the Queen to paint the portraits of the then infant Prince of Wales and Princess Royal. Among the works which he exhibited at the Academy may be mentioned, 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme,' 'A Medical Consultation,' and one of his more recent pictures, 'A Meeting at Tattersall's before the Races,' painted in 1864, containing portraits of all the most celebrated patrons of the turf then living. He was for some time the instructor of John Phillip, R.A. He died in 1866.

JOY, WILLIAM and JOHN CANTILLOE, English marine painters, were born in 1803 and 1806 respectively. They were self-taught, and practised at Great Yarmouth. William exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1824 and in 1832. They both died at Chichester in 1857.

JOYA, FERNANDO MARQUEZ. See MARQUEZ JOYA.

JOYANT, JULES ROMAIN, a French architectural and landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1803. He was a pupil of Bidault, Lethière, and of the architect Huyot, and he obtained gold medals in France and at Brussels. He died in Paris in 1854. His best pictures are considered to be the following Venetian views:

The Piazza del Marco.
The Court of the Doge's Palace.
Santa Maria della Salute.

JUAN, EL Licenciado. See DE LAS ROELAS.

JUAN OF AUSTRIA, the natural son of Philip IV. of Spain, was not only an amateur of painting, but practised it with the ardour of a professor. Eugenio de Las Cuevas was his master. The celebrated Carreño, seeing a painting by Don Juan, said without flattery, "If he had not been born a prince, he might, with his talents, have lived like one." He was born in 1629, and died in 1679.

JUANES, JUAN DE. See MACIP.

JUAREZ, LORENZO, (or SUAREZ), was a painter enumerated among the worthies of Murcia by the poet J. Polo de Medina. He flourished in the first half of the 17th century, and his best pictures were painted for convents; amongst them were the 'Martyrdom of St. Angelo,' in the Carmelite monastery, and 'St. Ramon Nonnato undergoing the operation of having his lips pierced and secured with a padlock,' in the convent of Mercy; both displaying, according to Cean Bermudez, a knowledge of the rules of composition and of nature, and of the effective arrangement of draperies. Juarez was contemporary with Orrente, B. Carducho, and Avecedo, and is stated to have painted in conjunction with the last-named artist.

JUAREZ, MANUEL, was a Spanish still-life painter who was settled at Valladolid, and died in 1671.

JUDKIN, Rev. THOMAS JAMES, an amateur landscape painter, was born in 1788. He exhibited occasionally at the Royal Academy between 1822 and 1848, a 'Gateway at Reading' having appeared in the latter year. He was for about forty years minister of St. Mary's Episcopal Chapel at Somers Town, and was the author of several works, among which 'Church and Home Psalmody,' published in 1831, has gone through several editions. He died in London in 1871.

JUDKINS, ELIZABETH, was an English mezzotint engraver, who practised in London towards the end of the 18th century. She was probably a pupil of James Watson. Amongst her plates are:

Lady Bridges; after Cotes. 1770.
Lady Scarsdale and Son; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
Harriet Powell; after the same. 1770.
Mrs. Abington; after the same. 1772.
The careful Shepherdess; after the same. 1775.

JUEL, JENS, a Danish portrait, landscape, and still-life painter, was born at Gamborg, in the island of Funen, in 1745. He studied for some time at Rome and Paris, and died at Copenhagen in 1802. Amongst his works are:

Christiania. Nat. Gall. Portrait of B. Anker.
Copenhagen. Christiansborg. } Farm at Ordrup.
" " } The Danish engraver Clemens.
" " } 1776.
" " } Portrait of Himself and Wife.
" " } 1791.
" " } Fruits in a Niche. 1791.

JUGE, G. LE. See LE JUGE.

JUGELET, JEAN MARIE AUGUSTE, a French marine painter, was born at Brest in 1805. He was a pupil of Gudin, and died at Rouen in 1874. He made extensive sea voyages, and produced numerous marine views, among which the following are noticeable:

Sunrise on the Sea. 1831.
The Roadstead of Havre.
Mist at Conquet.
Toulon Roadstead. 1840.
Christ stilling the Waters. 1845.
Fishing-Boat of Dieppe.
View of Cannes.
The Harbour of Genoa.
Fight of the Arethusia and the Belle Poule. (Versailles).

JUGONI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA. See INGONI.

JUILLERAT, JACQUES HENRI, a Swiss landscape painter, was born at Moutier-Grandval in 1777, and became a pupil of Tavannes, Holzach, Birmann, and Wuest. In 1823 he was appointed professor of drawing at the Academy of Berne, and spent from 1828 to 1855 in Italy, having gone first to Nice, on account of his health, and thence to Turin and Rome. He died at Berne in 1860. He painted landscapes in oil and water-colours, among them 'The Bridge of Locano, at Tivoli' (1844).

JUKES, FRANCIS, a painter and aquatint engraver, was born at Martley, in Worcestershire, in 1746. He engraved Walmesley's 'Views in Ireland,' Nicholson's 'Views in England,' and numerous other productions by artists of the time. Most of his landscapes and sea-pieces are washed with colour so as to resemble drawings. He died in 1812.

JULIEN, BERNARD ROMAIN, a French draughtsman, was born at Bayonne in 1802, and died there in 1871. He published in 1840 some 600 plates of copies from favourite masters, entitled 'Études aux deux Crayons.'

JULIEN, JEAN ANTOINE, called JULIEN DE PARME, was born at Cavigliano, in Switzerland, in 1736, but in 1748 he was taken to France and lived at Berry. In 1756 he went to Paris, from whence, after receiving advice from Carle van Loo and Slodtz, he travelled through Champagne and Burgundy gaining a livelihood by portrait painting. He then visited several towns in Italy, and was patronized by the Duke of Parma, whence his cognomen. In 1780 he presented himself at the Academy, but was refused. His best pictures are 'Jupiter asleep in the arms of Juno,' and 'Achilles raising Briseis.' He died in Paris in 1799.

JULIEN, SIMON, called JULIEN L'APOSTAT, a French historical painter, was born at Toulon in 1735. He successively studied under Dandré-Bardon at Marseilles, and under Carle van Loo at Paris. He gained the 'grand prix de Rome' at the Paris Academy in 1760 for his 'Sacrifice of Gideon,' which is now in the Museum at Le Mans. He then went to Rome, where he remained ten years. Returning to Paris in 1776, he was in 1783 accepted as an 'agréé' of the Academy, but upon presenting himself in 1789 to be admitted as an academicien, he was rejected. Prosper de Baudicour describes eight etchings by him. He died in Paris in 1800. Amongst his works may be named:

The Triumph of Aurelian.
Aurora and Titan.

JULIO. See ALESSANDRO and JULIO.

JULLIAR, JACQUES NICOLAS, a French landscape painter, was born in Paris in 1715. He was a pupil of François Boucher, but his works are more suggestive of those of Oudry and Hubert Robert. He was in Italy in 1750-51, and although he possessed but little merit he was received into the Academy in 1759. He died in Paris in 1790. His two best landscapes are at Stockholm; others are at Tours and Montpellier.

JULLIENNE, JEAN DE, was a French gentleman, well known for the celebrated collection of pictures he formed, most of which were engraved. He amused himself with etching a few plates after Teniers, Watteau, and other masters. He died in 1766.

JUNCKER, ISAAK, a German portrait painter and tenor singer, was the son of Justus Juncker. He was born at Frankfort in 1727, and died there in 1789.

JUNCKER, JUSTUS, a German painter and engraver, was born at Mentz between 1701 and 1703, and studied first under Hugo Schlegel at Frankfort, and afterwards under Thomas Wyck, De Heem, and Van Huysum. He worked some time in London, but in 1726 settled at Frankfort. He painted still-life, portraits, landscapes, and genre pictures, and etched a plate after T. Wyck. Among his paintings are, 'A Scholar in his Study,' in the Städel Institute at Frankfort (also at Cassel); a 'Ship with Boats on a calm Sea,' in the Stuttgart Gallery; and at Cassel 'Portrait of Himself at his Easel,' and several kitchen pieces. In the Darmstadt Gallery are three fruit pieces. He died at Frankfort in 1767.

JUNCOSA, JOAQUIN, was born at Cornudella, near Tarragona, in 1631. His father, Juan Juncosa, was an indifferent painter who had studied at Jaen. He soon learned from his father all that he could teach him, and gained so high a reputation that he was employed by the Marquess of La Guardia to execute four large pictures on classical subjects for the municipality of Cagliari in Sardinia. In 1660 he became a lay brother in the Chartreuse of Scala Dei. There he painted for the chapter room a series of Carthusian notables, and for the church a 'Nativity' and 'Coronation of the Virgin,' and other works, with such skill as to be sent by the prior to Rome to study. He returned after a time and painted several works for his own monastery, for the Hermitage of Reus, the Chartreuse of Montealegre, and other religious houses. It is said that on a new prior summoning him to take his place in the choir, he was so enraged at the constant interruptions that he threw off his robe and fled to Rome to appeal to the Pope. The Pope gave him absolution for his offence, and permitted him to live unmolested in a hermitage outside the walls of Rome, where he died in 1708. Cean Bermudez notices as one of his best works a picture of 'St. Bruno reading the rules of his Order to his first Monks,' which hung in the hospice maintained at Barcelona by the Carthusians of Scala Dei.

JUNCOSA, JOSEF, cousin of Fray Joaquin, was born at Cornudella, and instructed in painting by his uncle, Juan Juncosa. He took priest's orders, obtained the degree of doctor, and used to preach in the cathedral of Tarragona. In 1680 he assisted Fray Joaquin in painting in the Hermitage of Reus, and afterwards in various works at Scala Dei. In 1682 he was employed by the canon Diego Giron de Rebollo in painting a series of frescoes representing scenes in the life of the Virgin in the chapel of the Conception belonging to the cathedral of Tarragona. In six years the frescoes disappeared, and Juncosa was again employed to paint the same subjects on canvas. By the orders of the archbishop Josef Sanchis, he painted the martyrdom of St. Thecla for the archiepiscopal chapel, and various pictures of St. Peter Nolasco and other companions of his order for the Convent of Meroy. He died at Tarragona early in the 18th century.

JUNDT, GUSTAVE ADOLPHE, a French genre and landscape painter, was born at Strassburg in 1830. He studied under Drolling and Biennoury, and at the École des Beaux-Arts, and distinguished himself especially by his subjects of Alsatian life and his satirical drawings. He died in Paris in 1884. Among his best paintings are:

- A Village Fête. 1856.
- The Peace of St. Anne.
- The Betrothal.
- Vive la France! 1872.
- French Prisoners leaving Switzerland. 1872.
- The Christmas Tree. 1872.
- Sunday Morning. 1873.

JUNE, JOHN, an English engraver, flourished about 1760-70. He was of no great eminence, and was chiefly employed in book-plates. He however executed some subjects after Hogarth and Collet, as well as portraits of race-horses after Sartorius. There are also a few portraits by him, among which are:

- Richard Nash, master of the ceremonies at Bath.
- Fanny Murray.
- James Relly, the Antinomian preacher; after Shelly.

JUNG, THÉODORE, a French painter in water-colours, was born at Strassburg in 1803. He was a pupil of Gabriel Guérin and of Siméon Fort, and devoted himself entirely to military subjects. He died at Strassburg in 1865.

JUNGE, FRIEDRICH AUGUST, a German miniature painter, was born at Leipsic in 1781, and studied in the Academy there under Oeser. He painted miniature portraits upon ivory, also portraits in oil, and later on family scenes and genre pictures upon parchment with silver-pencil and slightly coloured: in all he executed over 5000 portraits. He died at Leipsic in 1841.

JUNGHANS, was a native of Nuremberg, who in 1472 published the 'Enndkrist,' rudely engraved upon blocks of wood.

JUNGWIRTH, FRANZ XAVER, an engraver, was born at Munich in 1720. He was a pupil of Mörl, and executed numerous fancy heads after Piacetti, together with portraits (including that of the painter Ignaz Oefe) and religious plates, among which are a hundred expressing the feelings of a repentant soul over the Miserere Psalm. He used the initials J. W. S. M. (Jung Wirth sculptit Monachi). He died at Munich in 1790.

JUNI, JUAN DE, a Fleming by birth, was a painter, sculptor, carver, and builder, who died at Valladolid in 1614. He worked chiefly in Spain and Portugal, and what he has left as a painter denotes that he was a student of the works of Michelangelo.

JUPPIN, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Flemish landscape painter, was born at Namur in 1678. He was the son of a merchant, but was naturally inclined to painting. He studied at Brussels, and afterwards worked in most of the cities of Italy, but especially Naples. He established himself at Liège, where he painted several pictures, the chief of which, 'The Eruption of Vesuvius,' was destroyed when the city was burnt. He died at Namur in 1729. JUSTE see Eymont.

JUSTER, JOSEPH, was a native of France, though he chiefly resided at Venice, where he engraved a great number of plates for books published there from 1691 to 1700. His plates are etched, and coarsely finished with the graver. In conjunction with N. Cochin, H. Thourneyser, and H. Vincent, he engraved part of the collection of prints from select pictures published at Venice, in 1691, by Catherine Patin.

JUSTUS OF GHENT. See GHENT, JOSSE OF.

JUTSUM, HENRY, a landscape painter, was born in London in 1816. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1836, and in 1839 became a pupil of James Stark. In 1843, having turned his attention to water-colour painting, he was elected a member of the New Water-Colour Society, but withdrew from it in 1847, from which time he seems to have painted almost exclusively in oil. He died in London in 1869. Among his principal works may be mentioned:

- The Foot-Bridge. (South Kensington Museum.)
- Tintern Abbey—Evening. 1843.
- Rabbit Warren. 1849.
- A Cottage Home in the Highlands of Scotland. 1853.
- The Deer Park. 1856.

JUVANIS, FRANCISCUS. See GIOVANI.

JUVARA, FILIPPO, an Italian architect, was born at Messina in 1685. He designed and etched a set of ornamental shields, published at Rome in 1722. He died at Madrid in 1735.

JUVARA, TOMMASO ALOYSIO, an Italian engraver, was born at Messina in 1809. By local assistance he was enabled to pursue his studies at Rome, and afterwards at Parma under Toschi. He returned in 1836 to Messina, and in 1846 he was appointed professor of engraving at Naples, and subsequently director of chalcography at Rome. Besides the gold medal of the Berlin Academy, he was awarded seventeen other medals by various artistic bodies. He died at Rome by his own hand in 1875. Amongst his best plates are:

St. John; after Guercino.
 St. Bartholomew; after Camuccini.
 St. Charles Borromeo; after Maninelli.
 La Madonna della Regia; after Raphael.

JUVENEL, NICOLAUS, was a painter born in the Netherlands, and who died at Nuremberg in 1597. After his apprenticeship he went to Nuremberg, and worked variously at glass painting, portraiture, miniature, and historical and architectural pieces. He was the father of Paul Juvenel, and there exists some confusion in apportioning the works of the two; the following are, however, attributed to the father:

Christ with the Pharisees and the Woman that was a Sinner. (Nuremberg Castle; perhaps the son's work.)
 The Annunciation. (Vienna Gallery.)
 Eighty-two Ideal Portraits of Nations of the World. (Michaelsberg, Bamberg.)

JUVENEL, PAUL, the son of Nicolaus Juvenel, was born at Nuremberg in 1574, and after receiving some instruction from his father, became a scholar of Adam Elsheimer at Frankfort, where he remained some time. He painted interiors of churches, and was a skilful copyist of the works of the older German and Flemish masters, particularly of Albrecht Dürer. He afterwards repaired to Vienna, and then to Pressburg, where he died in 1643. He sometimes adopted the style of F. Francken, and sometimes that of Callot or of Tintoretto. In the Nuremberg Town Hall there is a painting by him of 'The German Emperor on his Throne,' with allegorical characters surrounding, and 'Horatius Cocles' and 'Attila's Expedition against Rome' on the margins. An 'Ascension of the Virgin' by him is at Frankfort, and a 'View of Rome' in the Vienna Gallery. He had three sons and a daughter, who were likewise painters: ESTHER, who died at Pressburg after 1673; FRIEDRICH, who was born at Nuremberg in 1609, and died in 1647; JOHANN; and JOHANN PHILIPP, who died at Nuremberg in 1650.

JUWHEEL, NICOLAAS, a painter of Rotterdam, living in 1690, imitated the manner of Chevalier van der Werff.

K

KAAZ, KARL LUDWIG, a German landscape painter, was born either at Pforzheim or at Karlsruhe in 1776. He was originally apprenticed to a book-binder, but was afterwards sent by his relations to the Academy at Stuttgart, where he studied engraving under Johann Gotthard von Müller. In 1796 he went to Dresden, where he remained till 1801, when he went on his travels, visiting Paris, Rome, and Naples. On his return to Dresden in 1804, he made use of the materials gained in his travels, and produced several pictures, among which were a 'View from Dresden,' 'Morning Landscape,' 'Evening Landscape,' 'Tivoli,' &c. He died at Dresden in 1810.

KABEL, ADRIAEN VAN DER. See VAN DER CABEL.

KACHEL, LUDWIG, was a painter of Baden, who flourished in the 19th century, and died when quite young. His best-known work is 'Minne,' in the Karlsruhe Gallery.

KADLIK, FRANZ. See TKADLIK.

KÄELIN, MEINARD, a draughtsman and engraver, was a native of Einsiedeln, who painted landscapes in water-colours, and in his later years miniatures. He died in 1834.

KÄEPPLER, JOHANN, was a painter of Munich, where he studied under Donauer at the beginning of the 17th century.

KÄGER, JOHANN MATTHIAS, an historical painter, was born at Munich in 1566, and was a pupil of Pieter De Witte. He went to Rome while he was yet young, and spent a long time in studying the best masters. Soon after his return from Italy, the Elector Maximilian of Bavaria appointed him his principal painter, with a considerable pension. The distractions of the country led to his settling at Augsburg, where he was appointed burgo-master, and died in 1634. He painted in fresco, oil, and miniature. The churches and palaces at Munich contain examples of his work, among them 'The Finding of the Cross,' in the Frauenkirche. At Augsburg he painted his most celebrated work, 'The Last Judgment,' in the hall of the Senate in that city. His works are known out of his own country only by the prints engraved from them by the Sadeliers, the Kilians, and others, amounting to upwards of sixty. In the Vienna Gallery is a picture of 'Abigail and David.' Käger etched some plates from his own designs, finishing them with the graver; among them are the following:

The Adoration of the Shepherds; M. Käger inv. et sc. 1601.

The Baptism of Christ; the same inscription.

The Holy Family; after Otto van Veen. 1603.

Dives and Lazarus.

The Four Evangelists; four plates. 1600.

St. Francis surrounded by the Monks of his Order, and the Virgin and Child in the clouds; after R. Bozzolo.

KAISER, ERNST, a landscape painter, was born at Rain in Bavaria in 1803, and was first instructed by his father, a still-life painter of Neuburg on the Danube. In 1821 he commenced studying at the Munich Academy, and at first devoted himself to historical painting, but a journey in the Bavarian Highlands and the Tyrol induced him to exchange this for landscapes. By the assistance of King Ludwig he made a second tour in the Bavarian and Styrian Alps. He died at Munich in 1865. Among his works, which are marked by much poetic feeling, there are views of the Königs-See, and the Hintersee and Obersee near Berchtesgaden.

KAISER, LUDWIG FRIEDRICH, a German engraver, was born at Ulm in 1779, and after studying from 1794 to 1798 under Christian von Mechel at Basle, went in 1799 to Weimar, and entered Bertuch's employment, executing a number of plates for his 'Bilderbuch.' In 1806 he proceeded to Paris, where he engraved classical heads under Bervic's direction. In 1809 he went to Naples, and there engraved and coloured numerous views in that neighbourhood, together with scenes from popular life, in the style of Pinelli; also etching fifteen plates of landscapes after Kneipp. In 1814 he settled at Vienna, where he was appointed court painter, and died in 1819. In addition to the above works, he executed several engravings of statues, tombs, &c. for the 'Denkmäler altdeutscher Baukunst.'

KALBA, HANS VON, was a painter who, with Balthasar Müller, in 1522-4 painted and gilded the bas-reliefs in the church at Annaberg.

KALF, WILLEM, a Dutch painter of still-life, was born at Amsterdam about 1630. He was a pupil of Hendrik Pot, a painter of history, and for some time applied himself to the same pursuit, but not succeeding to his expectation, he commenced painting flowers, fruit, and still-life. He particularly excelled in painting vases, and other ornamental works in gold and silver; he was also admirable in painting brass pots and earthen pans, and other utensils of a Dutch boor's establishment. Paintings of his are to be met with in the Städel Institute at Frankfort (where is one dated 1643, from which it may be presumed that he was born earlier than 1630), the Rothau Gallery, the Louvre at Paris, the Museums of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Copenhagen, the Dresden Gallery, the Gsell collection at Vienna, and the Hermitage at St. Petersburg. His pictures are very highly wrought up. He died at Amsterdam in 1693.

KALLE, ALBERT CHRISTIAN, was a German engraver, who flourished from the year 1630 to 1670, and resided at Strassburg. He was principally employed by the booksellers, and worked with the graver in a stiff, formal style. He engraved some frontispieces and portraits, among which is a frontispiece to Chemnitz's 'Bellum Sueco-Germanicum,' dated 1648, with the portrait of Gustavus Adolphus.

KALLIAUER, ANTON, an Austrian painter, was born in 1768, and became a professor in the Academy of Arts in Vienna, where he died in 1827.

KALRAAT, ABRAHAM VAN, was born at Dordrecht in 1643. He was the son of a sculptor, who instructed him in his art for some time, but on the death of his father he applied himself to painting flowers and fruit, in which he excelled. He died in 1699.

KALRAAT, BAREND VAN, the younger brother of Abraham van Kalraat, was born at Dordrecht in 1650, and was instructed in the rudiments of design by his brother. He afterwards became a scholar of Aelbert Cuyp, and for some time followed the style of that master, painting figures and cattle on the banks of the Maes, halts of travellers, and sportsmen going to the chase. Later on he imitated the works of Herman Sachtleven, and painted cabinet pictures of views of the Rhine, with boats and figures. He died in 1721.

KALTENMOSER, CASPAR, a genre painter, was born at Horb on the Neckar, in Württemberg, in 1806. He began life as a lithographer, but in 1830 entered the Munich Academy, and then devoted himself to the painting of popular scenes from peasant life in the Black Forest, Switzerland, Bavaria, the Tyrol, &c. In 1843 he travelled in Istria, and executed a 'Tavern Scene,' which was lithographed. He died at Munich in 1867. Among his best works are the following:

Peasants' Room in the Black Forest.
The Marriage Contract. 1839. (Taxis Gallery, Ratisbon.)
Zither and Jew's-harp Player. 1840.
Public Room in a Tavern in the Tyrol. 1844.
The Bridal Pair before the Priest. 1848.
The Rejected Love Present. 1855.
Swabian Family Scene. 1866.

KAMPEN, DE STOMME VAN. See AYERCAMP.

KAMPEN, JACOB VAN, a celebrated Dutch architect, was born at Amersfoort about the end of the 16th century. He travelled in Italy when he was young, and on his return to Holland painted a few historical pictures; but he abandoned painting for architecture, in which he was much employed. His most important work was the Town-Hall of Amsterdam, now the Royal Palace. He died at Amersfoort in 1657.

KAMPER, G., supposed to have been a native of Leyden, lived in the beginning of the 18th century. He painted subjects similar to those of Van der Neer, and imitated his manner. His colouring is darker, colder, and less transparent; but his pictures have frequently been mistaken for works of Van der Neer, and sold as such.

KAMPHUYSEN. See CAMPHUYSEN.

KANDEL, DAVID, a fruit and flower painter, was a native of Strassburg, who flourished about 1551. His only master was his own genius, and he became a very fair artist.

KANZ, KARL CHRISTIAN, a German enamel painter, was born at Plauen in Saxony in 1758. He studied under Hesse and Kemly, and practised in Paris. The date of his death is not known.

KAPELLER, —, a French fruit, flower, and marine painter, was a native of Marseilles, who flourished in the 18th century. He was one of the founders of the Marseilles Academy, of which he was Professor and Director in 1771, and where some of his pictures are to be found.

KAPELLER, JOSEPH ANTON, a painter and engraver, was born at Imst in the Tyrol in 1761, and studied first under Franz A. Zeiller at Reute, and then in the Vienna Academy under Füger. He taught drawing to the Princess Jablonowska at Warsaw, and after residing some years at his birth-place and Innsbruck, he settled in Vienna. He painted portraits in miniature and oil, drew with black chalk, silver pencil, indian ink, &c., and occasionally engraved. He committed suicide from despondency in 1806. Among his works are mentioned 'The Sleeping Fawn,' and the portraits of Marshal Laudon and of Kosciuszko.

KAPPEN, FRANCIS VAN DER. See VAN DER KAPPEN.

KAPPERS, ANTON, a native of Munster, was born in 1727. He was a pupil of Terwesten, whose style he copied. He travelled through Belgium and France, and on his return painted largely for churches. He died in 1762.

KARCHER, ANTON, an engraver of Mannheim, flourished in the 18th century. There are by him a portrait of Schubert, after Lobbauer, dated 1788, and one of Ifland, after Klotz, dated 1791.

KÄRGLING, JOHANN TOBIAS, a German portrait painter, was born at Augsburg in 1780. In 1809 he settled at Pesth, where he worked in oil and in miniature until his death in 1845. His daughter, HENRIETTE KÄRGLING-PACHER, who was born at Pesth about 1835, and married the pianist Pacher, is well known in Vienna as a painter of portraits, fruit and flower pieces, and genre subjects.

KARINGER, ANTON, a landscape painter, was born at Laibach in 1829, and died in 1870. He was a pupil of Professor Steinfeld, and has left some excellent landscapes from Carinthia and the coast of the Adriatic.

KARLSTEEN, ARFVID, was born at Karlskoga in 1647. Though principally known as a medalist, he also painted in miniature. He worked in Paris under Jean Varin, and in London under John Roettier. He died at Stockholm in 1718.

KARPFF, JEAN JACQUES, was born at Colmar in 1770. He was a pupil of David, and painted portraits and historical subjects. He died in 1829.

KARTARUS, MARIUS, was probably a German, but he resided at Rome about the middle of the 16th century. There are by him some plates coarsely etched, and finished with the graver. He also copied some of the prints of Albrecht Dürer, and in 1578 published at Rome a work on perspective, entitled, 'Prospettive diverse.' His plates are dated from 1567 to 1586, and are usually marked with the cipher KX. The following are by him:

The Adoration of the Shepherds.
Christ crowned with Thorns.
Diana and Actæon; a large plate.
Christ praying in the Garden; after A. Dürer. 1567.
St. Jerome seated in a chamber; after the same.
Christ descending into Hell; roughly copied from Andrea Mantegna.
The Last Judgment; after Michelangelo. 1569.
Christ on the Cross; after the same.
Christ and the Samaritan Woman; after the same.
The Martyrdom of St. Catharine; after the same.

It is supposed that he was a printseller as well as an engraver, and that he put his name, or mark, to the works of others, which will account for the diversity of style that appears in his prints.

KARTHAUSER, MARGARETHA, was a German miniature painter, who died in a Dominican convent in 1499.

KATZENRAFAEL. See MIND.

KAUFMANN, MARIA ANNA ANGELICA CATHARINA, a painter and etcher, was born in 1741 at Coire, in the Grisons, where her father, Johann Joseph Kaufmann, was then painting. At an early age she attained great proficiency in music and languages, and showed a marked disposition for painting, in which she was instructed by her father; and so rapid was her progress, that in 1754 the family removed to Milan, where she spent her time in copying the works of the best masters. In 1757 her mother died, and the family then went to Florence, and in 1759 to Rome, where her talents excited the greatest admiration, and where she appears to have confined herself chiefly to portrait painting. In 1764 she went to Venice, from whence, in 1765, she came to England with Lady Wentworth, and was received with great distinction; and on the foundation of the Royal Academy in 1768, she was nominated one of the original thirty-six members. During her stay in England she allowed herself to be entrapped into a clandestine marriage with the valet of the Swedish Count de Horn, who imposed upon her as the Count himself. She finally got rid of him by a payment of £300. In 1781 she married Antonio Zucchi, a Venetian painter, and an Associate of the Royal Academy, and left London a few days afterwards. In 1782 her father died, and in the following year she retired with her husband to Rome. Her husband died there in 1795, and she herself in 1807. She was buried in Sant' Andrea delle Frate. The prints after her works are very numerous, amounting to several hundreds. She contributed eighty-two pictures to the Royal Academy between the years 1769 and 1797. Among her chief pictures are:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Her own Portrait.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Lady as a Sibyl.
"	"	Portrait of a Lady as a Vestal (Princess Mary of Courland).
"	"	Ariadne abandoned by Theseus.
Edinburgh.	Nat. Gall.	Portrait of Novosielski.
Frankfort.	Gallery.	Portrait of Winckelmann.

KAUFMANN, JOHANN JOSEPH, was a Swiss portrait painter, who practised in England, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1771 to 1779. His chief claim to remembrance is as the father of Angelica Kauffmann. He died at Venice in 1782.

KAULBACH, WILHELM VON, a German historical painter, was born at Arolsen in 1805. He received his first lessons from his father, who was a goldsmith, and not inexperienced in art. In 1821 he went to the Academy at Düsseldorf, where he came under the notice of Cornelius, whom in 1825 he accompanied to Munich. In 1826 he painted his first monumental work in the Odeon, 'Apollo among the Muses,' and made a great name by two frescoes in the palace garden. He also executed several wall-paintings in the palace of Duke Maximilian, consisting of scenes from the works of Wieland, Klopstock, Hermann, and Goethe. From 1834 to 1837 he was engaged on his picture of the 'Battle of the Huns,' painted for Count Raczynski. His next important work was the 'Destruction of Jerusalem,' after which, in 1839, he went to Rome. In 1847 he commenced his great work—the frescoes in the "Treppenhaus" of the New Museum at Berlin, and in the same year he was made Director of the Munich Academy. As a book illustrator he illustrated the works of Shakspeare, Schiller, and Goethe. He died at Munich in 1874. The following are among his more notable works:

Berlin.	Nat. Gallery.	Farewell of Mary, Queen of Scots (from Schiller's 'Maria Stuart').
"	"	Death of the Marquis Posa (from Schiller's 'Don Carlos').
Munich.	Neue Pinakothek.	The Destruction of Jerusalem.
"	"	Portraits of the Painters Heinlein and Monten.
"	"	Portrait of Louis I., King of Bavaria; full-length.

- Munich. Neue Pinakothek. Portrait of Louis I. (Sketch.) 1843.
 " " A Series of nineteen Sketches in oil for the Frescoes which were executed by Nilson and Barth outside the New Pinakothek; they consist of portraits of artists, sketches of artistic labours and achievements, and mythological and allegorical designs.

KAUPERZ, JOHANN VEIT, a German engraver, was born at Gratz, in Styria, in 1741. He was a pupil of J. M. Schmutzer, of Vienna, in which city he chiefly resided. He became a member of the Imperial Academy in 1771, and in 1796 of that of Florence. He died at Gratz in 1816. He engraved with the burin, and also in mezzotint, and executed several plates of portraits, and various subjects, of which the following are the principal:

PORTRAITS IN LINE.

Maria Theresa, Empress of Germany.
 Minerva holding the Portrait of the Empress.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS IN MEZZOTINT.

KAWENBERG, CHRISTIAAN. See KOUWENBERG.

KAY, JOHN, a Scotch miniature painter and caricaturist, was born near Dalkeith in 1742. He worked as a barber in Edinburgh until 1782, when he was enabled to devote himself to miniature painting. His chief claim to remembrance is, however, as a caricaturist. He produced nine hundred plates of well-known characters in Edinburgh, and a collection of them has since been published, under the title of 'Kay's Edinburgh Portraits.' He died in Edinburgh in 1830.

KAYNOOT, HANS, surnamed "the Deaf," was a Flemish landscape painter, born at Mechlin in 1520. He was a pupil of Matthys Cock, and painted in the style of De Patenir. He died in 1583.

KEAN, MICHAEL, an Irish miniature painter, was born at Dublin about the middle of the 18th century. He studied under Edward Smith, the sculptor, and also in the Dublin Academy, where he gained the gold medal in 1779. He came to London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1786 to 1790. He subsequently became a partner in the Derby China Works, and died in London in 1823.

KEARNEY, WILLIAM HENRY, an English water-colour painter of landscapes and figure subjects, was born in 1801. He was one of the original members, and subsequently a vice-president, of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours. He died in London in 1858. Amongst his works are:

The Courtship of Quentin Massys.
 The Fatal Picture.
 The Fatal Statue.
 Ruins of the Sallyport, Framlingham. (National Gallery of Ireland.)
 Love's Young Dream.

KEATE, GEORGE, a landscape painter, was born at Trowbridge in 1729. He was intended for the bar, but devoted himself to art as an amateur, and became a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists, occasionally exhibiting at the Royal Academy from 1770 to 1789. He published in 1779 'Sketches from Nature in a journey to Margate,' and there is a water-colour drawing by him in the South Kensington Museum of 'Ruins of a Bridge at Avignon.' He died in 1797.

KEATING, GEORGE, an Irish engraver, was born in Ireland in 1762. He studied under W. Dickinson, and practised in London between 1784 and 1799 in mezzotint and stipple. Amongst his plates are:

Boy reading; after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
 Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire, and Daughter; after the same. 1789.
 George Harry Grey, Earl of Stamford; after Romney.
 Henrietta, Countess of Stamford; after the same.

 Lord Nelson; after Singleton. 1798.
 Sir Edward Berry; after the same. 1799.

KECK, PETER, was a painter who died at Prague in 1730. He was court painter in that city, and executed several ecclesiastical paintings in the church of the Minorites there, and in that of St. Augustine at Wittingau in Bohemia.

KEEBLE, WILLIAM, a portrait painter, practised in London about the middle of the 18th century. He was a member of the St. Martin's Lane Academy. There is a portrait of Sir Crisp Gascoyne by him at Hatfield House.

KEENAN, J., was an English portrait and miniature painter, who exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1791 to 1815. He practised successively at Bath, Exeter, London, and Windsor, and in 1809 was appointed portrait painter to Queen Charlotte.

KEGHEL, JULIUS DE, a Belgian historical and still-life painter, was born at Ghent in 1835, and died in 1879.

KEHREN, JOSEPH, a German decorative painter, was born at Hülchrath in 1817. He went in 1834 to study in the Academy at Düsseldorf, where he was a pupil of Schadow, and at first devoted himself to painting church banners and similar work. He then assisted various artists in fresco painting: he aided Stülke in the chapel of Stolzenfels; Müller in the church of St. Apollinaris at Remagen; but above all, Rethel in his 'Life of Charles the Great' in the Council Hall at Aix-la-Chapelle, which he completed from Rethel's design, when illness compelled that artist to give up his labours. In 1874 he painted frescoes, in conjunction with Commans, in the Teachers' Seminary at Meurs. He died at Düsseldorf in 1880. The following are some of his best paintings:

St. Agnes. 1839. (Castle Chapel of Count Trips.)
 Madonna and Child. 1842. (Church of Wevelinghofen.)
 Christ at Emmaus. 1844. (Church of Glottan.)

A collection of his studies perished by fire at Düsseldorf in 1872.

KEHRER, KARL CHRISTIAN, was born at Dillenburg in 1758, and studied at Hanau under Tischbein, and at the school of design from 1773 to 1777. In 1782-5 he was at the court of the Prince of Anhalt-Bernburg, and in the two following years he studied further under Casanova at Dresden. In 1793 he became a member of the Academy of Berlin, and died at Ballenstadt in 1833. He painted portraits, landscapes, and genre pieces, also hunting scenes and pictures from contemporary events. His 'Modern German Art,' and 'The Genius of the Fine Arts in conflict with the Excise and Customs Officials,' were the subjects of much notice in his day.

KEIL, BERNHARDT, (or KEYL, or KEILHAU,) was born at Helsingborg in Denmark in 1625, and studied successively under Martin Steenwinkel at Copenhagen, and under Rembrandt at Amsterdam. From 1656 he worked in Rome, where he died in 1687. He painted some historical works for churches in Rome and other Italian cities, but was more distinguished for his representations of laughable and clownish incidents.

KEIM, BENNO, a porcelain painter, was born at Nymphenburg in 1798. He executed several hunting and battle pieces after Snyders and Hess. He died in 1826.

KEIRRINCKX, ALEXANDER, a Flemish landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1600, and so early as 1619 was a master in the Guild of St. Luke. He came to England in the reign of Charles I., for whom he painted many of the royal castles in Scotland. His landscapes in Holland are generally embellished with figures by Cornelis Poelenborch, whose initials are added in such instances to the mark of Keirrincx. His foliage is so true to nature as to render distinguishable the different kinds of trees he represented. He made use of the initials A. K. as well as of a cipher formed out of the letters A. v. V. (Alexander von Utrecht). He was made a citizen of Amsterdam in 1652, but the date of his death is not known. Landscapes by him are to be found at Augsburg, Berlin, Brunswick, Cologne, Copenhagen, Dresden, Munich, Rotterdam, and St. Petersburg.

KELDERMAN, JAN, an amateur painter of flowers, fruit, and birds, was born at Dordrecht in 1741. He was a scholar of Wouter Dam, and was assisted by several other artists of reputation. He died at Dordrecht in 1820.

KELDERMANS, HENDRIK, was a painter and innkeeper of Mechlin, who flourished in the 15th and 16th centuries. He was made master of the Guild in 1490, and Albrecht Dürer stopped at his house in 1521.

KELDERMANS, ROMBOUT, a famous Flemish painter upon glass, flourished at Louvain in the 15th century. He painted in 1469 the windows of the hôtel-de-ville at Louvain, and in 1475 a window which still exists in the church of St. Gommaire at Lierre. He was living in 1480.

KELLER, ADAM, a German painter and engraver, was born at Bamberg in 1767, and studied under Mattenheimer. In 1787 he painted some pictures for the churches in Bamberg, and afterwards fruit and still-life pieces and portraits. He died in 1791.

KELLER, GEORG, a German painter and engraver, was born at Frankfort in 1576. His plates are chiefly confined to book ornaments; they are slightly etched, and sometimes retouched with the graver. He also engraved some views of towns, and camps with soldiers skirmishing. He was a pupil of Philipp Uffenbach and Jobst Amman. He painted the altar-piece in the abbey church at Ratisbon, as well as that in a Franciscan church there, which has since been removed. He died at Nuremberg in 1640.

KELLER, HEINRICH, a German topographical draughtsman, who was born at Eglisau in 1778, and died at Zurich in 1862, is known by his travelling maps, panoramas, and views of Swiss landscapes.

KELLER, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a German painter and engraver, was born in 1737 at Nuremberg, where he studied under Preisler. He painted portraits and miniatures, and engraved some plates for a work entitled 'Plantæ rariores.' He was appointed drawing-master at the University of Erlangen, where he died in 1792.

KELLER, JOHANN HEINRICH, a Swiss painter, born at Zurich in 1692, was the son of a sculptor who had removed from Basle. He was taught painting by Andreas Holzmüller, and then worked at Munich under a certain Nicolaus Stuber. He afterwards studied for a time at the Paris Academy, and in 1726 settled at the Hague, where he died in 1775. He executed many decorative works at the last-named place, partly imitating David Teniers and partly Watteau. A 'Storm at Sea' by him is in the Gallery at Stuttgart.

KELLER, JOSEPH VON, a German engraver, was born at Linz on the Rhine in 1811. He attended a local drawing school till the age of sixteen, when he entered a large engraving establishment at Bonn, and became acquainted with both the point and the line styles. In 1835 he worked under Hübner at Düsseldorf, and in 1838 improved himself under Desnoyers and Forster in Paris. In the following year he was appointed teacher of engraving at the Düsseldorf Academy, and in 1841 went, under the commission of the Art Union of the Rhine country and Westphalia, to Rome, where he executed drawings of the 'Disputa' of Raphael, and of various other works. At a later period he was in England, and engraved the portrait of the Prince Consort. From 1846 he was a professor at the Düsseldorf Academy; he was also a member of those of Berlin, Brussels, Vienna, and St. Petersburg. He died at Düsseldorf in 1873. Among his more notable plates are:

Roland liberating the Princess Isabella; after Hübner.

1835.

Theology and Philosophy; after Hermann's and Gotzenberger's frescoes in the Aula.

The Holy Trinity; after Raphael.

The Disputa; after the same.

The Madonna di San Sisto; after the same.

The Queen of Heaven; after Deger.

The Mater Dolorosa; after the same.

Christ in the Tomb; after Ary Scheffer.

KELLERHOVEN, MORITZ, a painter and etcher, was born at Altenrath, in the Duchy of Berg, in 1758, and after applying himself in Cologne to scientific studies, changed his career, and sought instruction in art at Düsseldorf under Krahe and at Antwerp. In 1779 he went to Vienna, but in 1784 the Elector Karl Theodor appointed him his court painter, and in 1808 first professor at the Munich Academy. He died at Munich in 1830. He executed numerous conversation pieces in the Dutch style, together with very excellent portraits, of which latter he also produced some etchings. His painted portraits include the following:

The entire Royal Family of Bavaria.

Gustavus Adolphus IV. of Sweden and his Queen.

The Grand-Duke Karl.

The Archbishop Von Gebattel of Munich.

The last Abbot of Steingaden. (Neue Pinakothek, Munich.)

KELLERTHALER, JOHANN, (or KELLERDALLER,) a German engraver, was born at Dresden about the year 1530. He engraved some plates from the designs of Giovanni Maria Nosseni, an Italian architect who flourished at Dresden in 1575, including the following:

The Building of the Tower of Babel.

The Destruction of Babylon.

The Roman Empire, with the Death of Cæsar in the background.

The Pope receiving the Homage of Charlemagne.

KELLIN, NICOLAS JOSEPH, a French painter in water-colours, was born about 1788. He was a pupil of Rocqueplan and of Bonington, and he exhibited landscapes and views of old buildings at the Salon from 1833 to 1842. He died at Samer, near Boulogne, in 1858. Some of his works are in the Boulogne Museum.

KELSO. See CUNNINGHAM.

KEMP, NICOLAES, (or DE KEMP), the elder, a decorative and marine painter, was a native of Haarlem, who flourished about 1580.

KEMP, NICOLAES, (or DE KEMP), the younger, was a son of Nicolaes Kemp the elder, and was born at Haarlem. He died in 1672. At Haarlem is a sea view, but whether painted by father or son is unknown.

KENDRICK, EMMA ELEANORA, a miniature painter, the second daughter of Josephus Kendrick, a sculptor, was born about 1787. She first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1811, and was thenceforth a frequent contributor of miniatures up to 1835. She was also an exhibitor at the Water-Colour Society between 1815 and 1820, sending with her miniatures 'Cupid and Psyche,' a drawing of 'Dido expiring on the Funeral Pile,' &c. She also exhibited classic subjects at the Society of British Artists, and in 1831 she was appointed miniature painter to King William IV. She died in 1871. A work by her on 'Miniature Painting' was published in 1830.

KENKEL, JOHANN, a German painter and engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1688, and was a pupil of Isaac Fischer, Christoph Weigel, and J. Martin Schuster. He lived principally at Nuremberg, where he followed portraiture in oil, and engraving in line and in mezzotint. He died in 1722. One of his engraved portraits was that of the Duke Louis of Brunswick.

KENNEDY, WILLIAM DENHOLM, a Scottish landscape and figure painter, was born at Dumfries in 1813, and was sent to school at Edinburgh. At the age of seventeen he came to London, and three years later entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he became acquainted with Etty, and continued on very intimate terms with him up to the time of the latter's death. He obtained a gold medal in 1835 for his 'Apollo and Idas,' and in 1840 was elected a travelling student, on which occasion he went to Italy, returning after two years with a large number of sketches. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1833, and was from that time a pretty constant exhibitor. In 1841 he again visited Rome, remaining abroad for three years. After his return most of the pictures exhibited by him had Italy as their subjects. His paintings were rich in colour, and well arranged; but his later years hardly fulfilled the promise of his youth. Amongst his best pictures were, 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel,' exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1840; 'The Bandit Mother,' in 1845; 'The Italian Goatherd,' in 1847; and 'The Land of Poetry and Song,' exhibited in 1865, in the summer of which year he died suddenly from dropsy. Besides being a good artist, he was a discriminating critic of engravings and etchings, and a great lover of music.

KENSETT, JOHN FREDERICK, an American landscape painter, was born in Cheshire, Connecticut, in 1818, and after learning steel-engraving under Dagget, came in 1840 to Europe, and devoted himself to landscape painting. In 1847 he returned and settled at New York, where in 1849 he became a member of the Academy of Design, and where he died in 1872. Among his paintings are noted:

Lake George in the Autumn.
From the White Mountains.
View on the Coast at Newport.
Morning on the Shore at Massachusetts.

KENT, WILLIAM, a painter and architect, was born in Yorkshire in 1685. He learned painting from a coach-painter, and in 1704 came up to London, where he followed portraiture, and was enabled by patrons to proceed in 1710 to Rome. There he attended the school of Cavaliere Luti, and obtained the second prize at the Academy. After prolonged studies in his own country he made a second visit to Rome, and then in 1719 settled down in London, where he painted portraits and church pictures, and afterwards devoted himself to decoration, and finally, under Lord Burlington's patronage, to architecture. He was court painter and gallery inspector, and is stated to have introduced into England the style of painting which still prevails. He also engraved architectural plates, and illustrations to Pope, Spenser, and Gay. Among his works as an architect is the erection of the Horse Guards. He was well acquainted with horticulture, and exercised much influence upon the taste of his time in furniture and clothing. He died in London in 1748. In Hampton Court palace are pictures by him of the 'Interview and Marriage of Henry V. and the Princess Katharine.'

KERCKHOVE, JOZEF VAN DEN. See VAN DEN KERCKHOVE.

KERIUS, PETER, was an engraver of Amsterdam, who worked from 1590 to 1620. His principal works were:

A Procession of Monks of all orders.
View of Nuremberg.
Wedding Procession of the Duke of Guise.

KERKHOFF, D., was born at Amsterdam in 1766. He was a scholar of Pieter Barbiers. His subjects were landscapes, views of cities, and waterfalls. His countrymen speak highly of his productions, and think him deserving to be placed in the first rank. He died in 1821.

KERN, ANTON, (or KÖRNE), was born at Tetschen in Bohemia in 1710, and was apprenticed for seven years to Giovanni Battista Pittoni at Venice. After his return he was assisted by the King of Saxony to travel to Rome, where he remained till 1741, when his painting of 'The Massacre of the Innocents' induced his royal patron to appoint him his court painter. This picture is now in the Dresden Gallery. He was afterwards engaged upon a painting of the bridal car for a double royal marriage, when he died prematurely at Dresden in 1747. Most of his works were taken from sacred or profane history, but two of a different character are cited, 'The Four Seasons' and 'The pretty Flower Girl.' He also produced a few drawings in black and red chalk and in indian ink.

KERRICH, Rev. THOMAS, an amateur artist, was born in 1747. He was educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge, and resided at the University, although he was not its librarian, as stated by Redgrave, and he made chalk portraits of its members. In 1776 he was awarded a gold medal by the Antwerp Academy. He died at Cambridge in 1828.

KERRICX, KATRINA KLARA, daughter of the sculptor Willem Kerrixx, was born at Antwerp in 1684, and after thirty-six years of illness died in 1762. She painted copies of some large compositions, and afterwards devoted herself to water-colours.

KERRICX, WILLEM IGNATIUS, a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1682. He studied sculpture under his father, Willem Kerricx the sculptor, and in 1702 painting under Godfried Maas the younger. In 1703 he was received into the Guild of St. Luke, of which he was dean in 1718 and 1723. He also practised as a sculptor and architect. He died at Antwerp in 1745. There are by him:

Antwerp. Gallery. St. Luke writing his Gospel.
 " " The Passover in Egypt.
 " " The Adoration of the Lamb.

KERSEBOOM, FRIEDRICH, a German historical and portrait painter, was born at Sulingen in 1632. He studied at Amsterdam, and then worked in Le Brun's studio in Paris. He afterwards spent several years at Rome, and subsequently practised as a portrait painter in London, where he died in 1690. There are the following portraits by him belonging to the Royal Society, London:

Robert Boyle.
 Francis Aston.
 John Evelyn.

KERSTEN, JOHANN DANIEL, a German painter, was born at Hamburg in 1758. He studied at the Academy of Copenhagen, and gained his reputation as a draughtsman and decorative painter. He died about 1810.

KERSTING, FRIEDRICH GEORG, was born at Güstrow in Mecklenburg in 1783, and studied first at the Academy of Copenhagen, and afterwards at Dresden. He entered the army as a volunteer under Lützow in 1813, and after quitting the service executed a large number of historical paintings at Warsaw. He was subsequently appointed superintendent of painting in the porcelain manufactory at Meissen, where he died in 1847. A splendid dinner service, decorated with various battle scenes in which the duke had borne a part, was produced from his designs for presentation to the Duke of Wellington by King Frederick Augustus.

KERVER, JAKOB, the son of Thielmann Kerver, was a German engraver on wood, who worked at Frankfort and Paris from 1537 to 1567. To him are attributed a set of woodcuts of grotesque figures, standard-bearers, &c., in the old German taste, published at Frankfort in 1540, and the heads and small historical subjects for a folio volume, entitled 'Catalogus Annorum,' published at Berne the same year; also the cuts for Colonna's 'Dream of Polyphilus,' after designs ascribed to Mantegna, a 'Last Supper' after Dürer, 'The Death of Lucretia,' a 'Book of Crests of the Holy Roman Empire,' &c. He usually marked his cuts with the cipher  or , to which he sometimes added a knife, with a snail upon the top of it.

KERVER, THIELMANN, a German printer and bookseller, flourished in Paris at the end of the 15th and in the early part of the 16th century. There are many devotional books, missals, hours, &c., with woodcuts to the borders, printed at that period, bearing his name on the title. Zani mentions him as a designer and engraver. He died between 1522 and 1531.

KESSEL, FERDINAND VAN, the eldest son and pupil of Jan van Kessel the elder, was born at Antwerp in 1648. He painted subjects similar to those of his father, chiefly landscapes and still-life. He painted for John Sobieski, king of Poland, 'The Four Quarters of the Globe' (the same subject as his father had chosen), and 'The Four Elements,' and as these were both destroyed by fire, he repeated them on a much larger scale and with greater pains, receiving as the result a liberal remuneration and the honour of knighthood. About 1688 he went to Breda, where he died in 1696. The Duke of Devonshire's collection at Chatsworth contains a very fine miniature by him, entitled 'Birds of every Kind,' and a 'Hare with Vegetables' is in the Brunswick Gallery. In the Vienna Gallery is a picture of a 'Swineherd.'

KESSEL, JAN VAN, the elder, was born at Antwerp in 1626. He was the son of Jerom van Kessel, and the pupil of Simon De Vos and of the younger Jan Brueghel. He was captain of the civic guard of his native city, where he died in 1679. He painted flowers, birds, insects, and allegorical subjects. His best work is 'The Four Quarters of the World, with their Animals and Products,' which, with a 'Bird Concert,' is in the Antwerp Gallery. He also executed three pictures for the Earl of Carlisle, representing animals, flowers, and 'An Armourer's Workshop.' Other paintings by him are at Augsburg, Copenhagen, Dresden, the Hague, Madrid, Brunswick, and Florence. In the Louvre is a picture of the 'Holy Family, surrounded with Flowers.' In the Vienna Gallery is a picture of 'Monkeys playing cards and smoking.'

KESSEL, JAN VAN, the younger, the son of Jan van Kessel the elder, was born at Antwerp in 1654. In 1680 he went to Madrid, where he painted the portrait of the queen of Charles II., Donna Maria of Orleans, and was rewarded with the appointment of court painter. He was also successful with the portrait of the second consort of the same monarch, Maria Anna of the Palatinate. He died at Madrid in 1708. His works further include:

Brunswick. Gallery. Bacchus with Bacchanals.
 Madrid. Alcazar. The Story of Psyche.
 " " Landscapes.
 " Gallery. Portrait of Philip IV.

KESSEL, JAN THOMAS VAN, the nephew of Ferdinand van Kessel, was born at Antwerp in 1677. He adopted the style of David Teniers and of Brouwer, and produced some excellent conversation pieces. In the early part of his life he went to Paris, where he had acquired some celebrity by his pictures of village festivals and merry-makings, when, on succeeding to his uncle's property, he fell into a dissipated and debauched train of life, which impaired his faculties, and ended in his dying in want at Antwerp in 1741. He at a later period attempted portrait painting, but without much success. The Lille Museum contains a 'Guard-Room' painted by him, and a picture entitled 'Smelling'; the Louvre, an ornamentation of crests, flowers, insects, &c. around Teniers's 'Soap-Bubbles'; the Vienna Gallery, two pictures of Monkeys; and the Brunswick Gallery, a 'Quack Doctor.'

KESSEL, JEROOM VAN, a Flemish portrait painter, was born at Antwerp in 1578. He became in 1594 a pupil of Cornelis Floris, soon after which he was resident at Frankfort; about 1606 he was at Augsburg, in 1609 at Strassburg, in 1615-20 at Cologne, and after this probably at Antwerp again. He was living in 1636. Among his portraits, as known by Rafael Sadeler's engravings, are:

The Archduke Leopold, Bishop of Strassburg.
 The Bishop of Salzburg and Passau.
 Leopold of Austria.

KESSEL, JOHANNES VAN, was born at Amsterdam in 1648, and is stated to have been a pupil of Ruisdael, whose style his landscapes display, as also that of Decker and of Beerestraaten. He died at Amsterdam in 1698. He executed views of Amsterdam, and was especially successful at winter scenes. The following are among his works:

Amsterdam. Museum.	Forest Scene.
Antwerp. Gallery.	Landscape with figures.
London. Northbrook Collection.	} A Landscape.
New York. Metropolitan Mus. of Art.
Rotterdam. Museum.	Canal in Haarlem.
"	View in the Neighbourhood of Haarlem.
"	View in Amsterdam.

KESSEL, THEODORUS VAN, was born in Holland about the year 1620. He engraved several plates, many of which are etched, and others assisted with the graver, in a free, spirited manner. He etched the plates for a volume of vases, and ornamental compartments, in eight parts, from the designs of Adam van Vianen, published at Utrecht. Most of the plates are marked with the initials of the designer, and his own cipher TK. There are also the following plates by him:

- Portrait of Charles V.; after Titian.
- St. Gregory in Meditation; after T. Willeborts.
- A Riposo; after Giorgione.
- Mary Magdalene at the feet of Christ; after the same.
- Christ and the Woman of Samaria; after Carracci.

- The Hunt of the Caledonian Boar; after the same.
- A Landscape, with a Man driving a Cart with Vegetables, and a Man and Woman with Oxen; after the same.
- A Landscape, the companion, called the Milk-maid; after the same.
- A set of Battles, and Attacks of Banditti; after P. Snayers. 1656.

KESSLER, FRANZ, a portrait painter, was a pupil of Geldorp, who lived at Cologne at the beginning of the 17th century. One of his portraits in the Wallraf-Richartz Museum at Cologne bears the date of 1621. Another is in the Estherhazy Gallery at Pesh.

KETEL, CORNELIS, a painter, modeller, and architect, was born at Gouda in 1548. At the age of twelve he began to learn design under his uncle, a tolerable painter, but a better scholar. At eighteen he went to Delft, where he studied a year under Antonis van Montfoort (Blocklandt). He afterwards went to France, and was employed for a short time, in conjunction with some of his countrymen, in the château of Fontainebleau. On his return to Holland he remained at Gouda, little employed, on account of the troubles which then existed in that country, and which at length obliged him to take shelter in England, where he arrived in 1573. He was first occupied in painting portraits, and was seldom engaged on historical subjects, to which his inclination chiefly led him. But at length he painted an allegorical picture of 'Wisdom vanquishing Strength,' which was presented to Sir Christopher Hatton. This incident occasioned his introduction to court; and in 1578 he painted the portraits of Queen Elizabeth, and several of the principal nobility, including Lords Arundel and Pembroke, and Sir Christopher Hatton. Ketel left England in 1581, and settled at Amsterdam, where he was employed on a large picture, representing the portraits of the officers of the trained bands, which is now in the Town Hall. In 1589 he painted another large picture of the principal members of the Confraternity of St. Sebastian; both these works were greatly admired. He also executed a number of scenes of shooting parties. There is a whimsical tradition of this artist's having discontinued the use of brushes, and painting with the ends of his fingers, and on having partially succeeded with these, having next attempted it with his toes! He died in the service of the King of Denmark in 1609.

KETERLAER, JAN, probably a Dutchman, is mentioned by Le Comte as the engraver of a print representing a Globe, with several animals, supported in the air by a figure of Death, whose head appears above, with two wings and two trumpets.

KETTERLINUS, CHRISTIAN WILHELM, an engraver, was born at Stuttgart in 1766. He attended the Karlsschule, and at first studied painting under Guibal, but after his death devoted himself to engraving, and was instructed by J. Gotthard Müller. Soon after the completion of his studies he was appointed court engraver by Duke Karl Eugen; and in 1799 he went to St. Petersburg, where he became a member of the Academy, and died in 1803. Among his plates are cited:

- Le Buveur hollandois; after Mieris.
- Holy Family; after Parmigiano.
- Ceres with a Horse; after Nahl.

KETTLE, TILLY, was born in London about the year 1740. He was the son of a coach-painter in the city, and studied at the Duke of Richmond's Gallery, and in the Academy in St. Martin's Lane. In 1765 he joined the Incorporated Society of Artists, with whom he afterwards constantly exhibited. After practising portrait painting for some time in London, he went to the East Indies, where he remained four years, and practised his art with such success as to amass a fortune. He returned to Europe in 1776, and to London apparently in the following year, when he first exhibited at the Academy. He was again an exhibitor in 1781 and 1783, on the former of which occasions he produced 'The Mogul of Hindostan reviewing the East India Company's Troops.' About this date his good fortune deserted him, and he became bankrupt, and had to quit London. After a brief stay in Dublin he set out to return to the East Indies, but died on the way at Aleppo in 1786. There are portraits by him of Warren Hastings in the National Portrait Gallery, of Admiral Kempenfeldt at Greenwich Hospital, and of Sir William Blackstone at Oxford.

KETTNER, FERDINAND, a miniature painter, was born in 1779, and died at Vienna in 1834. He painted portraits upon ivory, and one of his best is that of the painter Steiger (1802).

KEULEN, THOMAS VAN, was a Dutch historical painter, who was a pupil of Franz Floris, and flourished about 1580.

KEUNE, HENDRIK, a Dutch painter, born at Haarlem in 1738, painted views of cities in the style of Berck-Heijde. He died in 1788.

KEY, ADRIAAN, the elder, was a Flemish painter of the 16th century, who seems to have come to Antwerp to have his sons educated in art. In 1549 is found the name of Cornelis Key, and in 1592 Michel Key, both of them sons of the painter.

KEY, ADRIAAN, the younger, was a Flemish painter, probably of Antwerp, who was born about 1544. He was the son of Thomas Key, and the nephew of Willem Key, under whom he studied. In 1568 he became a master in the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp, and was living in 1589. Altarpieces and portraits by him are to be seen in the galleries of that city and of Berlin. In that of Antwerp there is also an exceedingly well painted picture in the style of Antonis Moor, which represents 'The Last Supper,' together with portraits of the family of Gilles de Smidt.

KEY, WILLEM, the son of Adriaan Key, was born at Breda about 1520, and studied under Lambert Lombard. In 1542 he was free of the Guild of St. Luke at Antwerp, and ten years later he was dean of the Corporation. It is related of Key that he, while painting the portrait of the Duke of Alva, was an unwilling listener to the conversation between that governor and the judges concerning the death of Count Egmont; and that his nerves received such a shock that he died on the day of the execution of that unhappy nobleman, the 5th of June, 1568. There is no picture extant which can be, with any certainty, assigned to Key. Several of them were destroyed by the Iconoclasts.

KEY, WOUTER, a native of Breda, flourished about the year 1542. He was a brother of Willem Key, and a pupil of Jan Cock at Antwerp in 1516, and he was received into the Guild of St. Luke in 1531.

KEYL, FRIEDRICH WILHELM, an animal painter, was born at Frankfort on the Main in 1823. He originally studied under Verboeckhoven, and in 1845 came to London to place himself under Landseer, whose favourite pupil he became. His works occasionally appeared at the Royal Academy from 1847 to 1872, and several specimens of them are in the Royal Collections. He died in London in 1871.

KEYL, MICHAEL, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1722, and studied successively under J. Daniel, J. M. Preissler, Jakob Schubler, and Martin Tyrof. In 1745 he went to Denmark, where he worked for four years; and in 1751 proceeded to Dresden, where he obtained more than one appointment. He died there in 1795. He engraved several plates from pictures in the Dresden Gallery, among which are the following:

The dead Christ; after Annibale Carracci.

The Martyrdom of St. Lawrence; after Spagnoletto.

La Caramesse and another Landscape; after Fery.

Portrait of the Astronomer Palitzsch.

KEYM, ALOIS, a German decorative painter, lived first at Schwabach, but from 1805 to 1816 was engaged, with his brother-in-law, Victor Wilhelm Peter Heideloff, as a scene-painter in Stuttgart. After his brother-in-law's death, he went to Coburg till 1828, when he settled down as clerk and book-keeper to his nephew Karl Heideloff at Nuremberg.

KEYSE, THOMAS, a still-life painter, was born in 1722. He was a member of the Free Society of Artists, with whom he occasionally exhibited, and had a considerable reputation in his day. He kept a tea-garden at Bermondsey, where he died in 1800.

KEYSER, DE. See DE KEYSER.

KHOL, ANDREAS, was a German engraver, who died in 1656 in his 32nd year. He was chiefly engaged in engraving portraits for books. Among other portraits by him are the following:

Jacob Eldel, in an oval border, with some German verses.

Bartholomäus Hiatis; a small upright plate.

KICK, CORNELIS, a Dutch flower painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1635. He was the son of a portrait painter, by whom he was instructed in design. For some time he successfully followed the same pursuit, when he was attracted by an extraordinary admiration for the pictures of flowers and fruit by Jan David De Heem. In this line he excelled; he abandoned portrait painting, and applied himself to flowers and still-life, his tulips and hyacinths being especially admirable. But between his excessive pains and his invincible indolence, he produced but a very limited number of works. The few pictures he painted are, however, very highly finished, and delicately coloured. He died at Amsterdam in 1675.

KICK, JAN, a Dutch genre painter, who worked from about 1640 to 1650 in the style of Dirk Hals and Jacob Duck, was perhaps a son of Cornelis Kick. There is in the Berlin Gallery a picture of 'Soldiers on Billet in a Stable,' dated 1648.

KIDD, JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, a Scottish landscape painter, studied under Thomson of Duddingstone. He was in 1829 one of the foundation members of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1836 he migrated to Greenwich, where he taught drawing for many years. He resigned his position of an Academician in 1858, after which date nothing further is known respecting him.

KIDD, WILLIAM, a Scottish subject painter, was in early life apprenticed to a house painter at Edinburgh. He came to London, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1817 to 1853, and also, occasionally, at the Society of British Artists. In 1849 he was elected an honorary member of the Royal Scottish Academy. His latter years were clouded by poverty, and he died in London in 1863.

KIEDERICH, PAUL JOSEPH, was born at Cologne in 1809. In 1832 he went to the Academy at Düsseldorf, and afterwards received instruction from Kuntze and De Noël in his native city. He died at Düsseldorf in 1850. His principal works are the 'Death of Lavalette, Grand Master of the Maltese Order' (1840), in the National Gallery of Berlin, 'Charles V. at the Monastery of St. Just' (1835), 'Frederick II. and his Chancellor, Peter de Vineis' (1844), and historical portraits of the Emperors Henry V. (for the Römer at Frankfort), Maximilian, and Charles V., and Dukes Phillip the Good and Charles the Bold of Burgundy, as well as many excellent portraits of his contemporaries.

KIELISINSKI, KAJETAN WINCENTY, a Polish painter and etcher, was born near Cracow in 1810, and first instructed at Warsaw. He afterwards studied in Paris, and travelled in Poland and Russia. His first works were pen-and-ink or indian ink drawings from medals, &c.; he then etched seals, costumes, and also views, popular scenes, portraits, character heads, and animals. He was further known as a good caricaturist. He died in 1849.

KIELLERUP, THEODOR JULIUS, was born at Copenhagen in 1818, and there attended the Academy. In 1841 he went to Munich, where he first painted horses and domestic animals, but afterwards northern landscapes with wild beasts. Paintings by him are in the Danish Royal Collection, as well as in that of the Munich Art Union. He died at Munich in 1850.

KIERINCKX, ALEXANDER. See KEIRINCKX.

KIERS, ELISABETH ALIDA. See HAANEN.

KIES, SIMON JANSZON, a Dutch historical and allegorical painter, flourished at Amsterdam in the 16th century. He was a pupil of Martin Heemskerk, and is chiefly known by his copies of the pictures by Frans Floris representing the 'Labours of Hercules,' which were engraved by Cornelis Cort. He died in 1620.

KIESER, EBERHARD, a German engraver, resided at Frankfort about 1610-30. He engraved part of the plates for a publication entitled, 'The-saurus Philo-Politicus,' by Daniel Meissner, consisting of views of cities and towns in Germany, Spain, Italy, and other parts of Europe (Frankfort, 1620-30); also for the 'Austrian Laurel-Crown,' containing 78 plates of Emperors and other exalted personages; and some other works. He also made copies from Dürer, and engraved some portraits; among others that of Prince John of Austria, on horseback, with a battle in the background, and those of several young persons, executed in the style of Sebastian Furck.

KIESEWETTER, WILHELM, a painter of Berlin, is known by his ethnographical sketches, published in 1854, giving the results of sixteen years' travelling in Sweden, Norway, Finland, Russia, Tartary, Central Asia, and the Caucasus. He died at Gotha in 1865.

KILIAN FAMILY.

The founder of the family was BARTHOLOMÄUS KILIAN, a native of Silesia, who was born in 1548, and died at Augsburg in 1583.

KILIAN, BARTHOLOMÄUS, the younger, an engraver, was the youngest son of Wolfgang Kilian, and was born at Augsburg in 1630. After being instructed by his father he went to Frankfort, where he became a pupil of Matthäus Merian for two years and a half. He afterwards visited Paris, where he studied further under F. de Poilly, and engraved some plates after Testelin, and Philippe de Champaigne. On his return to Germany he settled at Augsburg, where he engraved several plates of Theses, and other subjects, particularly a number of excellent portraits, which are deservedly admired. He died in that city in 1696. He worked both with the graver and the point, in a very pleasing style. The following are some of his best works:

PORTRAITS.

Bernhardus Verzascha, Medicus Basiliensis; oval.

Augustus II. Abbot of Einsiedeln. 1686.

John III., King of Poland; as large as life; after A. Bloemaert.

Maximilian Emmanuel, Electoral Prince of Bavaria.

The Emperor Joseph on horseback; one of the largest prints known; as large as life.

A set of Portraits, represented in an emblematical manner; after J. Schreyer.

Three Medallions of Archbishops of Salzburg.

Six Portraits of Preachers at Augsburg; after B. Hopfer.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

The Virgin and Child; after Kaspar Sing.

The Magdalene; after M. Gondelach. 1648.

Crucifix; after Testelin.

KILIAN, CHRISTOPH GUSTAV, probably a son of Georg Kilian, was principally known by a good mezzotint of the Empress Maria Theresa, executed about 1746.

KILIAN, GEORG, a painter and engraver, the son of Wolfgang Philipp Kilian, was born at Augsburg in 1683. He was taught painting by Isaak Fischer, and afterwards visited Berlin, Dresden, and Vienna. Later on he devoted himself to mezzotint engraving, and worked for Christoph Weigel at Nuremberg. He was also successful in pastel painting. He died in 1745. Among his best plates are:

The Buyers and Sellers driven out of the Temple; after Douvenet.

Christ washing the Disciples' Feet.

Louis XIV.; after Fiter.

Cattle; after J. H. Roos.

KILIAN, GEORG CHRISTOPH, son of Georg Kilian, was born at Augsburg in 1709, and became a pupil of his father. He spent some time in travelling through Austria and Hungary. He died at Augsburg in 1781.

KILIAN, JACOB, was a portrait painter of German origin, who in 1772 was at the Hague. From there he went to Voorburg, and later on to Schoonhoven, where he was working in 1776.

KILIAN, JEREMIAS, a son of Philipp Kilian, was born at Augsburg in 1666. He engraved several portraits, and died at Augsburg in 1730.

KILIAN, LUKAS, an engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1579, and was the elder son of Bartholomäus Kilian, the elder, a goldsmith of Silesia, and the first of the artist family of this name. Lukas, however, was instructed in painting by his step-father, Dominicus Custos, who afterwards sent him to Italy for improvement. He resided chiefly at Venice, where he engraved several plates after Tintoretto, Paolo Veronese, &c. He possessed an uncommon command of the graver, and his style resembles that of Goltzius, and Johann Heinrich Müller. He died at Augsburg in 1637. He sometimes appended an A. to his initials, implying Augustanus; sometimes A. V., for Augustae Vindelicorum. The following are esteemed his best prints:

PORTRAITS.

Lukas Kilian, æt. 55; se ipse sc. in argento. 1635; scarce.

Petrus Custos, vulgo Baltens, pictor et poeta Antwerpi-anus. 1609.

 Two plates representing statues of 'The Archangel.'

KILIAN, PAUL, a son of Wolfgang Philipp Kilian, was an engraver, born at Augsburg in 1687. He worked successively at Augsburg, Nuremberg, Vienna, and Breslau, and died at the last-named city in 1718.

KILIAN, PHILIPP, the son of Wolfgang Kilian, was born at Augsburg in 1628. He studied first under his father, and afterwards in Italy, and engraved some plates of Theses from the designs of his father, and also several portraits, including those of his brother Bartholomäus, and of the animal painter J. H. Roos. He died in 1693.

KILIAN, PHILIPP ANDREAS, the son of Georg Kilian, was born at Augsburg in 1714. He was first instructed in engraving by Andreas Friedrich, of Augsburg; but he afterwards was a pupil of Georg Martin Preissler, at Nuremberg, and further improved himself by travelling in Germany and the Netherlands. He executed several plates after the pictures in the Dresden Gallery, making use of both the point and the graver. A 'Picture Bible,' and the plates to Scheuchzer's 'Physica Sacra' were among his book-plates, and he obtained the patronage of Augustus III. He died at Augsburg in 1759. The following are some of his plates:

PORTRAITS.

Pope Clement XIII.; after G. D. Porta.
 Francis I., Emperor of Germany; after Meytens.
 Maria Theresa, Empress; the companion.
 C. Christopher, Count von Schiden, Prussian Field-Marshal; after Stranz.

 The Virgin giving plenary Indulgences to St. Francis; after C. T. Scheffler.
 St. Cosmus and St. Damian; after J. W. Baumgaertner.

KILIAN, WOLFGANG, the younger brother of Lukas Kilian, was born at Augsburg in 1581. He also was a pupil of Dominicus Custos, and afterwards studied some years at Venice, where he engraved some plates after the works of the Venetian painters. On his return to Augsburg he painted several portraits, and engraved on copper, and his style resembles that of Lukas Kilian. His best plates are his portraits. He marked his prints

WK. He died at Augsburg in 1662. The following are among his best productions:

PORTRAITS.

Wolfgang Kilian; se ipse sc.
 Ernest, Count of Mansfeld.
 Friedrich, Baron von Teuffenbach.
 Johann Gottfried, Bishop of Würzburg.
 Ferdinand III., Emperor of Germany.

 Part of the Architectural Views, and others, for the history of the Monastery of St. Udalric, at Augsburg; from the designs of Matthias Kager.

KILIAN, WOLFGANG PHILIPP, an engraver of the same family as those mentioned in the preceding articles, was born in 1654. He was chiefly employed on portraits for books. There are by him several heads for a work in folio, entitled, 'Vitæ et Effigies Procancellariorum Academiæ Altorfinæ,' published at Nuremberg in 1721; and for another work, 'Icones Consiliariorum de Illustri Republicâ Noribergensi,' published at Nuremberg in 1733. He engraved also the portrait of Christian Ernest, Margrave of Brandenburg, with some German verses. He died in 1732.

KILLIGREW, ANNE, the daughter of Dr. Henry Killigrew, master of the Savoy, and one of the prebendaries of Westminster, was born in London in 1660, and at an early age gave proofs of uncommon talents. Dryden has celebrated her genius for painting and poetry in a long ode, remarkable for the elegance of the opening stanza, and Anthony à Wood styles her "a grace for beauty and a muse for wit." She was a maid of honour to the Duchess of York, whose portrait she painted, as well as those of the Duke of York, afterwards James II., and his second wife, Mary of Modena. She also painted some historical subjects and pieces of still-life. Her poems were published after her death, with a print of her, engraved by Becket, from a portrait painted by herself, which is in the style of Sir Peter Lely. She died of small-pox, in 1685, and was buried in the Savoy chapel, where a neat monument is fixed in the wall, with a Latin inscription, setting forth her beauty and accomplishments, her virtue and piety.

KIMPFEL, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, was born at Breslau in 1750. He painted some striking portraits, and also succeeded well with historical pictures. He produced a series of works 'en grisaille' depicting the 'History of Wine' from its first innocent use to its later abuse; he also executed various caricature drawings, and painted numerous friezes in the castles around Berlin. His latest work was, 'The Elector Joachim II. of Brandenburg protesting against the sentence of death passed by Charles V. on the Elector Johann Friedrich.' He died at Berlin in 1805.

KINDERMANN, ANTON, a German painter, was born at Dresden in 1725. He was sent to Italy by King Augustus III. to pursue his studies, and remained there for sixteen years. The date of his death is unknown. He purchased several pictures in Italy for the Dresden Gallery.

KINDERMANN, DOMINIK, was born at Schluckenau in Bohemia in 1746. He studied at first in Prague, under his uncle, the sculptor Klein, and the Jesuit painter Rab, but afterwards in the Vienna Academy under Franz Balko. In 1769, by the help of a patron, he travelled to Rome for improvement, and there studied the works of Raphael and Carracci, and attended the Academy of St. Luke, where, under the tuition of Mengs, he produced an altar-piece of 'St. Pius.' He remained in Rome six years, and then visited Naples, and studied the Pompeian art treasures. He died at Schönlinde in 1817. His works included portraits, historical pictures, and altarpieces. Among them are:

The Death of Joseph. (Church of Ehrenberg, Bohemia.)
The Birth of Christ. (The same.)
The Martyrdom of SS. Simon and Jude. (Schawnik Cathedral.)
Portrait of Count von Harrach.

KINDERMANS, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Belgian landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1805, and died in 1876. Amongst his works are:

Hermitage of the Tête du Pré on the Moselle.
Landscape in Germany: setting sun.
View in the Ardennes.
The Valley of the Amblève. (Brussels Gallery.)
Fisher's House on the Semoy.

KINDLER, ALBRECHT, a German genre painter, was born in 1833 at Allensbach, near Constance. He first studied at Munich, and in 1856 entered the studio of R. Jordan at Düsseldorf, to the traditions of which school he was a faithful adherent. He died at Meran in 1876. Amongst his works are:

Wedding Procession.
Going to the Dance.
A Session of the Parish Council.

KING, CHARLES B., an American portrait painter, was born at Newport, U. S., in 1785. He went to reside at Washington, where for forty years he was engaged in painting the portraits of the most eminent men of the day. He died at Washington in 1862.

KING, DANIEL, an English engraver, flourished about the year 1650. He etched some plates in the style of Hollar, among which are several of the prints for Dugdale's 'Monasticon.' He published in 1656 'The Vale Royal of Cheshire' with plates of his own engraving; and also 'The Cathedral and Conventual Churches of England and Wales,' in which there are 50 plates drawn and engraved by himself, excepting three or four which are by Hollar.

KING, GEORGE, an obscure English engraver, lived about the year 1740. He was almost entirely confined to book-plates. Among others, the following portraits are by him:

Lady Falconberg.
Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas; affixed to her 'Memoirs of Pylades and Corinna.'
Richard Gwinnet, poet.

732

KING, GILES, an engraver, was a native of England, but removed to Dublin, and there lived for a considerable period in the middle of the 18th century. He engraved some plates of fish, from Arnout van Aken; also 'The Taking of Cape Breton,' 'Salmon Leap,' and some other views.

KING, JOHN, a portrait and historical painter, was born at Dartmouth in 1788. In 1808 he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he exhibited from 1817 to 1845. His earlier works were historical, but not meeting with success, he devoted himself to portrait painting. He died at Dartmouth in 1847.

KING, THOMAS, was an English portrait painter, who studied under Knapton, and died about 1769.

KINGSBURY, HENRY, an engraver, practised in London in the latter half of the 18th century. He also, probably, painted. Amongst his plates are:

Countess of Jarnac. 1781.
William Pitt. 1789.
Linnaeus; after Hoffmann.
James Northcote; after P. Hoare.
Beggars and Dog; after Kitchingman. 1775.

KININGER, M. VINCENZ GEORG, (KINNINGER, or KIEMINGER,) an engraver, chiefly in mezzotint, was born at Ratisbon in 1767, and practised drawing under Schmutzer and Jacobé at the Vienna Academy, till, after having obtained a prize in 1784, he in 1786 entered the school of mezzotint engraving. He died at Vienna in 1851. He executed an admired drawing of 'A Hunter of Upper Styria.' The following are among his best plates, in addition to some portraits:

Virginia.
Socrates.
Alcestis.
Coriolanus.
Death of Julius Cæsar; after Füger.
Countess Merveldt and Count Tschernitscheff; after the same.

KINSCHOT, GASPARD LOUIS FRANÇOIS VAN, a Dutch amateur painter and architect, was born at Amsterdam in 1811, and died at Maestricht in 1861. He was an officer in the Dutch service.

KINSOEN, FRANS JOSEF, was born at Bruges in 1771. He was first a pupil in the Bruges Academy, but succeeding by hard work in getting together a small sum of money, he went to Paris, where, succeeding as a portrait painter, he settled and was naturalized. In 1809 he was appointed chief painter to Jerome Bonaparte, king of Westphalia, whom in 1810 he followed, only to return to Paris after the fall of the empire. In 1817 he was appointed principal painter to the Duke of Angoulême. He died at Bruges in 1839. In the Academy of that city are the picture of 'Belisarius at the death of his wife Antonina,' and a portrait of M. Devery, prefect of Bruges. At Bordeaux is a portrait of the Duke of Angoulême.

KINT, DIRK, born at the Hague in 1676, was a portrait and historical painter. He was a pupil of D. Haaring and C. Netscher, and was dean of the Corporation and director of the Academy. He died at the Hague in 1761.

KINTS, PIETER, was a Dutch engraver on wood, who flourished from 1610 to 1635. He executed several cuts in imitation of slight sketches with a pen, from the designs of Anthonie Sallaert. Among others, there is a woodcut by him of 'The Visitation of the Virgin to St. Elizabeth.' He usually signed his prints with the initials P. K.

KIÖRBOE, KARL FREDRIK, a Swedish animal painter, was born at Christiansfeld, in Schleswig, in 1799, and studied under Henning. In 1838 he went to Berlin, but from 1840 he lived chiefly in France, where he obtained medals in 1844 and 1846, and the Legion of Honour in 1860. He was decorated with the Orders of Wasa and Olaf, and was elected a member of the Stockholm Academy in 1858. He last exhibited at the Paris Salon in 1874, and died at Dijon in 1876. Amongst his works are:

Two Tartar Dogs reposing.	} Stockholm National Gallery.
The hunted Fox.
Fox caught in a trap.
Charles XV. of Sweden.
Trotting Match.
The Inundation. (Exhibited at the Royal Academy, London, 1848.)
A reciprocal Surprise.
Pony and Spaniel. (Ravené Gallery, Berlin.)

KIP, JAN, a Dutch engraver, was born at Amsterdam about 1652, and came to England not long after the Revolution. He engraved a great number of views of the palaces and seats in this kingdom, chiefly after the designs of Leonard Knyff, for the 'Britannia Illustrata'; also the views in Strype's edition of Stowe's 'Survey,' and those in Atkyns's 'Gloucestershire.' He also engraved a large 'View of Greenwich Hospital,' and the exterior and interior of the Danish Church, built by Cibber. There is a plate of birds by him, after Barlow, and a few portraits, among which is that of Marcellus Malpighius. He died in Westminster in 1722. He left a daughter, who was a painter.

KIP, WILLIAM, is mentioned by Walpole as the engraver of some triumphal arches, dated 1603. He worked in London.

KIPRENSKY, OREST ADAMOVITCH, (or SCHWALBE,) was a Russian painter, who was born at Korporia, near Oranienbaum, in 1783. He studied in the Academy at St. Petersburg, and travelled for some years in France and Italy. His principal works are portraits, and he has been called the Russian Van Dyck. In the Hermitage are three portraits by him: his own, that of Thorvaldsen, and that of 'A young Gardener.' He died at Rome in 1836.

KIRBY, JOSHUA, a draughtsman, was born at Parham in Suffolk in 1716. In 1738 he entered the employ of a coach and house painter at Ipswich, but having made the acquaintance of Gainsborough, he attempted landscape painting. In 1748 he brought out a series of views of his own county, etched by himself, and with letterpress descriptions. He afterwards studied perspective at the St. Martin's Lane Academy, and then became instructor to the Prince of Wales (George III.) in architectural drawing, and was by him appointed clerk of the works at Kew Palace. In 1761 he published his 'Architectural Perspective.' In 1770 he was made president of the Incorporated Society of Artists, to which he had already been secretary. He also about this date exhibited views from Richmond Park and Kew, the latter of which were engraved by Woollett. He died at Kew in 1774.

KIRCHMAIR, JOSEPH, was born at Munich in 1806, and attended the Academy of that city, after which he found employment at the royal porcelain manufactory. Besides works on porcelain and glass, however, he produced some humorous hunting scenes in oil. He died at Munich in 1847.

KIRCHNER, JOHANN JAKOB, a painter and engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1796. He studied first under Koch at Vienna, from whence he went in 1814 to Munich, and then to Italy. On his return to Nuremberg he painted landscapes in oil and water-colours. He died at Nuremberg in 1837.

KIRK, THOMAS, was an English painter and engraver in the latter half of the 18th century. He studied under Cosway, and exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1785 to 1796. He painted 'Titus Andronicus' for the Shakespeare Gallery. He died in 1797. His chief exhibits were:

Venus presenting Love to Calypso.
Evening.
A Dream.

KIRKALL, EDWARD, was born at Sheffield about the year 1695. He was the son of a locksmith, and was instructed in the rudiments of drawing in his native town. In search of improvement, he visited London, and for some time was employed in engraving arms, stamps, ornaments, and cuts for books. The plates of an edition of Terence, issued in 1713, are supposed by the initials to be by him; and in 1718 he engraved those to Rowe's translation of Lucan. In 1725 he engraved the plates for the new edition of Inigo Jones's 'Stonehenge.' At this time he applied himself to designing the figure from the model. He invented a mode of producing prints in chiaroscuro, by a mixture of etching and mezzotint, with the assistance of wooden blocks. The outline is boldly etched, the dark shadows are supplied by mezzotint, and the demitint is introduced by woodcuts, producing a curious effect. This process, in the hands of an able artist, might perhaps become very interesting, but it does not appear that the talents of Kirkall were sufficient to bring it to perfection. He was much employed in engraving book-plates, and was liberal in his decorations of the portraits of the lady writers of the day. Pope, in the 'Dunciad,' notices him for it: "In flowers and pearls by bounteous Kirkall drest." There are by this artist some etchings and engravings, several prints in mezzotint, and a number in chiaroscuro; among them the following:

PRINTS IN MEZZOTINT.

The Cartoons of Raphael; in eight plates.
The Bust of the Saviour; after the same.
Apollo and Daphne; in green.
A Rustic Family, with their Flocks and Herds; after Rossano; in green.
A set of ten Sea-pieces; after W. van de Velde; printed in sea-green.
Thirty plates of Plants and Flowers; after V. n. Huysum.

SUBJECTS IN CHIAROSCURO.

Æneas carrying Anchises on his shoulders; from the cut by Ugo da Carpi, after Raphael. 1722.
The Holy Family, with St. Joseph leaning on a chair; after the same.
The Adoration of the Shepherds; after Pierino del Vaga.
St. Jerome contemplating a Crucifix.

KIRKALL, L., was an English engraver in the beginning of the 18th century. There are the following plates by him:

A Wild Boar Hunt.
A Stag Hunt.
A Bear Hunt.

KIRNER, JOHANN BAPTIST, a German genre painter and caricaturist, was born at Furtwangen, in Baden, in 1806. His father was a shoemaker, who had some acquaintance with drawing, and caused his son to practise the same art, and then apprenticed him to a house-painter at Freiburg. In 1822 he entered the drawing school of Zimmermann and Rugendas at Augsburg, where he speedily obtained a prize, and by portrait taking, together with state assistance, procured the means to go to Munich. During 1832-7 he was in Italy; in 1842 he became painter to the court of Baden; and in 1849 paid a second visit to Italy. In 1856 he was made an honorary member of the Munich Academy. He died at Furtwangen in 1866. Among his works are cited:

Illustrations to Hebel's Poems: The Governor of Schopfheim; The Carbuncle; The Smelting Furnace. The Swiss Guard. 1831.
Ave Maria.
The Improvisator.
The Civic Guard.
Harvest Home. (Carlsruhe Gallery.) 1841.
Jesuits in Flight.
The Swabian Militia.
The Fortune Teller. (Munich Gallery.)
Badenese Insurgents in Flight in the Black Forest. (The same.)
The Country Doctor.
The Railway Porter shaving himself.

KIRSCH, AUGUST CHRISTOPH, a German historical painter, was born at Dresden in 1763. He began at his sixth year to attend the Academy, where he first practised drawing under the elder Klass, and next received Casanova's instructions. The Elector of Saxony commissioned him in 1786 to supply an altar-piece for the newly-built Kreuzkirche, and for this purpose he went to Rome, where he died in 1787, at the early age of twenty-four. His best works comprise:

The Lamentation over the Body of Hector.
Holy Family. 1786.

KIRSCHNER, FRIEDRICH, a German miniature painter and engraver, was born at Baireuth in 1748. He studied under Gottlieb F. Riedl at Ludwigsburg, and then entered the porcelain manufactory. After this he repaired to Nuremberg, and practised flower and herb painting in the botanic garden at Altdorf. After a second term at the above porcelain factory, he settled at Augsburg, where he died in 1789. He painted chiefly flowers, fruit, and insects, and was clever in designing and engraving. After Riedl's death he prepared most of the zoological work published at Augsburg.

KIRSTEIN, ADOLF, or ANTON, a landscape painter, was born at Strassburg in 1814. He was a pupil of Bertin in Paris, and died at Königsfeld in 1873. His brother, MAX KIRSTEIN, a still-life painter, died at Munich in 1871.

KITCHEN, GEORGE, was an English engraver, who practised about the middle of the 18th century. He was chiefly employed upon book illustrations.

KITCHIN, THOMAS, was an English engraver, who flourished about the year 1750. He engraved the south view of Tideswell Church, in the county of Derby, as well as several book-plates and portraits, among which are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Adams, minister of the Gospel.
James Foster, D.D.
John Gill, D.D.; after Highmore.
Mustapha, a Turk, servant to George I.
Louis Maximilian Mahomet, valet de chambre to George I.

KITCHINGMAN, JOHN, an English miniature painter and engraver, was born about 1740. He studied under William Shipley, and also in the schools of the Royal Academy, where he exhibited from 1770, having previously sent some works to the Free Society of Artists. He married unhappily, and in his later years spent a dissipated life. He died in 1781.

KITTENSTEIN, CORNELIS, an indifferent Dutch engraver, was originally of Delft, but resided at Haarlem from 1624 to 1663, and was in 1631 appointed director of the Guild in that city. The following works by him are known:

Six Plates of Costumes of the 17th Century; after Dirk Hals.
The Five Senses; after the same.
Set of Plates of the History of Joseph under Potiphar.
The Triumph of the Prince of Orange.
The Whale washed ashore in Holland. 1629.
The Siege of Haarlem; after Saenredam. 1626.
Portraits of Admiral P. Hein and General Loeuq.

KLAASZEN VAN WIERINGEN, CORNELIS. See WIERINGEN.

KLAPHAUER, JOHANN GEORG, was a painter of Cologne who flourished about the middle of the 17th century, and who held the post of banneret of the Guild. He produced portraits resembling those of Gortzius Geldorp; one of them, dated 1651, is in the Wallraf-Richartz Collection.

KLASS, FRIEDRICH CHRISTIAN, a painter and engraver, was born at Dresden in 1752. He was a pupil of Casanova, and became an eminent landscape painter, and a member of the Electoral Academy. He worked in the style of Salvator Rosa, and then in that of Dietrich. He died at Dresden in 1827. He painted a landscape, 'Near the Forest of Villers Coteret,' which has been etched by Mme. Victor Chenu and also by Mallette. There are several spirited etchings by him, from his own designs, of picturesque views in Saxony, &c., as under:

A set of fourteen small Landscapes, inscribed, Erster Versuch (First Essay).
Six Views in Saxony, with figures and cattle.
Four larger Landscapes; very pleasing scenery.
Two Mountainous Landscapes. 1775.

KLASS, JOHANN KILIAN. See GLASS.

KLASS, KARL CHRISTIAN, brother of Friedrich Christian Klass, was born at Dresden in 1747. He was first instructed by Mietzsch, and then at the Academy by Hutin, but he afterwards studied several years under Casanova, whom he accompanied to Italy in 1772. Five years later he became inspector of the Cabinet of Engraving, and about 1780 a member of the Academy. He died at Dresden in 1793. One of his best paintings is 'The Death of Emilia Galeotti.' He executed many admired drawings from the classical works in the Dresden Gallery, and as an artist generally his drawing surpassed his colouring.

KLAUBER, FRANZ XAVER, the son of Joseph Sebastian Klauber, was born in 1741. He studied a long time at Rome, and engraved portraits and other pictures. The date of his death is not known.

KLAUBER, IGNAZ SEBASTIAN, a German engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1754. He was first instructed by his father, Johann Baptist Klauber, an obscure artist, but afterwards went for some years to Rome, and next, in 1781, to Paris, where he became a pupil of Jean Georges Wille, and was in 1787 made a member of the French Academy, and engraver to the king.

During the Revolution, Klauber retired to Augsburg, and then to Nuremberg, where he published his 'Principal Figures in Mythology from the Gems in the collection of Baron de Stosch,' now in the Berlin Museum; the greater part of which are engraved by himself, but mostly from drawings by Casanova. He obtained honours from Denmark and from the Elector of Trèves, and in 1796 was summoned by the Empress Catharine II. to St. Petersburg, where he was made court painter and director of the Academy. He died in that city in 1820. He worked chiefly with the graver, in a neat, finished style. He engraved several portraits, and other subjects; among which are the following:

PORTRAITS.

Gaspar Netscher; after a painting by himself.
The Wife of Frans Mieris; after Mieris.
Charles van Loo, painter; after F. Le Sueur. (His reception plate at the Academy in 1787.)
Christophe Gabriel Allegrain, sculptor; after Duplessis.
Count de Herzberg; after Schroeder. 1795.

SUBJECTS.

Salvator Mundi; after Stella.
Le petit Ecclier de Haerlem; after Poelenborch.

KLAUBER, JOSEPH SEBASTIAN, an engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1710 or 1711, and studied under Anton Birkhaert at Prague. Together with his brother, JOHANN BAPTIST KLAUBER (born at Augsburg 1712, died 1774), he engraved the 'Calendar of the Bavarian Order of St. George,' after B. A. Albrecht, as well as the portrait of Frederick the Great and some other works. They also produced original miniatures. He died in 1768.

KLEANTHES. See CLEANTHES.

KLEEMANN, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH KARL, was born at Altorf in 1735. He was a son and pupil of Nicolaus Moritz Kleemann, after whose death he attended the Nuremberg Academy under J. J. Preisler. He published 'Contributions to the History of Insects,' upon the method of Rosel, his father-in-law, and undertook the engraving and illumination of the plates belonging to Voets' 'System of Beetles.' He also painted portraits. He died in 1789.

KLEEMANN, JOHANN WOLFGANG, the youngest son of Nicolaus Moritz Kleemann, was born at Nuremberg in 1731. He spent some time at Frankfort and in Swabia, removing finally to Berne, where he died in 1782. He painted landscapes, perspectives, and portraits, and in 1776 produced a series of 'Views of the Swiss Alps and Glaciers' for the work of Wolf.

KLEEMANN, NICLAUS MORITZ, was for a long time university painter at Altorf. In 1740 he removed to Nuremberg, where he died in 1756. He had five sons, who were all painters: JOHANN WOLFGANG, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH KARL, CHRISTIAN (or CHRISTOPH) NICLAUS, JOHANN KONRAD, and JOHANN JAKOB.

KLEIBER, ANTON, was a painter of Lucerne, who flourished about 1550-80. Besides historical pictures in oil and upon glass, he executed the following in sepia, which show him to have been among the best artists of his day:

The Birth of Christ.
Adoration of the Infant by Joseph and Mary.
The Adoration of the Wise Men.

KLEIN, DANIEL, the elder, was a portrait painter of Dantzic, who died in 1744. He was a pupil of the elder Seemann. His son, DANIEL KLEIN the younger, worked in Paris, where he painted the likenesses of the Dauphin and Dauphiness, which were engraved by Wille.

KLEIN, GEORG GOTTFRIED CHRISTIAN, a German engraver, the younger brother of Johann Adam Klein, was born at Nuremberg in 1805. He was instructed in engraving by Ambrosius Gabler and Reindel. He drew several landscapes from nature, and copied several works by his brother and other masters. His earliest etchings were some copies after Du Jardin. Among other works of this young and promising artist, who died at Nuremberg in 1826, were several studies after Berchem, a view of Nuremberg, and several studies after J. A. Klein.

KLEIN, JOHANN ADAM, a genre painter, was born at Nuremberg in 1792. He was the son of a publican, who sent him to the drawing class at the prison, where he made special progress in etching. He then continued his studies in the studio of Ambrosius Gabler, and in 1811 went to Vienna, where he frequented the Academy. He etched a great deal, and drew characters from the southern countries. Almost immediately after a trip with the artist Mansfeld through Styria and the Salzkammergut, there followed the wars of 1813 and 1814, during which he executed several paintings of military costumes. After 1815 he devoted more attention to oil painting, and in the following year he returned to Vienna in the company of J. C. Erhard. In 1819 he visited Rome and Naples, and in 1821 he returned to Nuremberg. There he remained till 1839, when he went to Munich, where he died in 1875. A collection of his works was issued in 1844-48 by Zeh in Nuremberg. His principal oil paintings were:

Cruising in the Danube.
Market Scene.
Oxen working in the Campagna.
Cossack Bivouac.
Hungarian Carriers. (Berlin National Gallery.)
Wallachian heavy Waggon. (The same.)
The Dancing Bear. (The same.)
Roman Harvest Waggon. (Gotha Gallery.)
Scene on the Tiber. (Neue Pinakothek, Munich.)

KLEIN, JOHANN EVANGELIST, a painter, was born at Wiesensteig in Württemberg about 1750, and in 1765 went to the porcelain manufactory at Nymphenburg, where he was actively employed for some time. He afterwards settled at Munich, where he was engaged in oil painting. He died about 1815.

KLEINER, SALOMON, a designer and engraver, better known as an architect, was born at Augsburg in 1703, and died at Vienna in 1759. He designed the plans for the Imperial Library, and a variety of edifices in the latter city, as well as in Augsburg and Frankfort, and himself engraved views of the Belvedere and some Viennese churches.

KLEINSCHMIDT, JOHANN JACOB, a German engraver, flourished at Augsburg about the year 1700. He engraved the frontispiece and several of the plates for a folio volume, published in that city, entitled, 'Representatio Belli ob Successionem in Regno Hispanico;' also some plates of horsemen, after Georg Philipp Rugendas.

KLENGEL, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, was born at Kesselsdorf, near Dresden, in 1751. His father was a mere peasant, and he himself began life as a bookbinder's apprentice; but through the help of Von Hagedorn he was admitted to the Dresden Academy, where he became a pupil of Dietrich, in whose varied style he painted several pictures. In 1790 he went to Italy for the furtherance of his studies. He died at Dresden in 1824. His paintings consisted of mountain and woody landscapes, harvest scenes, and idyllic compositions; his last work was 'A Pastry-cook's Shop on the Eve of a Consecration Festival.' Three of his best landscapes are in the Christiania Gallery, and there are two in the Dresden Gallery, both representing 'Apollo tending the Herd of Admetus.' He has etched several plates, chiefly landscapes, which are spiritedly executed in the manner of his master. The following are by him:

- A set of twelve Views in Saxony.
- Four Landscapes. 1770.
- Two Mountainous Landscapes. 1771.
- Twelve Landscapes; after designs by Dietrich. 1773.
- A large Landscape; after Ruissdael. 1787.
- Two Views near Rome. 1791.

KLENZE, LEO VON, who, though principally an architect, was also an architectural and landscape painter, was born near Hildesheim in 1784, and died at Munich in 1864. He practised decorative painting under Bourgeois in Paris, and travelled in England, Italy, Greece, and seven times in Russia. He was the builder of the Hermitage in St. Petersburg, and executed among others the following paintings in oil and in tempera:

- View of Agrigentum.
- Zante in the Eighth Century.
- Athens under Hadrian. (Neue Pinakothek, Munich.)
- Pirano in Istria. (Thorvaldsen Museum, Copenhagen.)

KLERCK, HENDRIK DE. See DE CLERCK.

KLEVE, JOHAN TERKEL, an engraver, was born in Denmark in 1749. He was for ten years, up till 1779, an artillery officer, in the course of which term he practised drawing with crayons and red chalk, and though wholly self-taught, obtained in 1777 a gold medal. He died at Birkerød in 1797. He produced in the above manner the following portraits, &c.:

- Christian VII.; after Juel.
- Queen Juliana Maria; after Höyer.
- Madame Walter, the Actress; after the same.
- Hans Ewald; after himself.
- Apollo and the Muses; after Wiedevelt.

KLEYN, FRANZ. See CLEYN.

KLEYN, PIETER RUDOLPH, was a landscape and historical painter of the Dutch school, who was born at Hooghe-Zwaluwe in 1785. He was a pupil of the brothers Van Stry and David. His best known pictures are a view of the park of St. Cloud, and a view on the Seine in the neighbourhood of Paris. He died in 1816.

KLEYNHENS, Jz., was a Dutch flower and fruit painter, who was born at Haarlem in 1634, and died in 1701.

KLIM, HANS, a German wood-engraver, flourished about the year 1600. Some cuts, published at Wittenberg between the years 1590 and 1603, are attributed to him. They are marked with the cipher

HK., which was also used by a wood-engraver of much earlier date than this artist.

KLINGNER, JOHANN GOTTLÖB, a painter and engraver, was born at Dresden in 1756, and studied in the Academy of that city, and then under Schenau. He was successful as a fresco and decorative painter, and also in landscapes. Two landscape etchings by him are known. He died in 1815.

736

KLINGSTEDT, KARL GUSTAV, a miniature painter, was born at Riga in 1657. He was in the army till about 1690, when he devoted himself entirely to his favourite pursuit of painting. He was the inventor of painting in indian ink. Most of his productions, however, were obscene paintings upon snuff-boxes, from whence he was given the name of 'The Raphael of Snuff-boxes.' He died in Paris in 1734. Picard engraved after him a 'Venus walking upon the Sea,' and a 'Triumph of Galatea.'

KLINKOWSTRÖM, FRIEDRICH AUGUST VON, an historical painter, was born at Ludwigsburg, near Stralsund, in 1776. He was first a pupil of David in Paris, but later on, however, when he had settled at Dresden, he adopted the fanciful style of Wackenroder. He again removed to Vienna, where he died in 1835. A copy by him of Correggio's 'Notte' is in a Protestant church in Greifswald.

KLÖCKER VON EHRENSTRAHL, DAVID, was born at Hamburg in 1629. He was at first an official in the Swedish chancery, but early in life he placed himself under Georg Jakobs in Amsterdam, for the study of drawing and painting. He afterwards visited Italy, studying at Venice, and then at Rome, under Pietro da Cortona. On his return from Italy he was invited to the court of Sweden, where he painted the Royal Family, and the principal nobility, and executed many historical works, as well as portraits. He died at Stockholm in 1698. The pictures of this master are chiefly confined to Sweden; the best is considered to be 'The Coronation of Charles XI.' at Drottningholm, and there are a 'Last Judgment' and a 'Deposition from the Cross' in the Nicolaikirche at Stockholm. He also executed portraits and animal pieces, and there are a few etchings by him.

KLOEBER, AUGUST KARL FRIEDRICH VON, an historical painter, was born at Breslau in 1793. He was destined for a soldier, and entered the cadet-house at Berlin in 1805, but left in 1806, and devoted himself in his native place to architecture till 1810, when he took up painting at the Berlin Academy. In 1813 he answered the call to arms, and fought at Lützen, Bautzen, and before Paris as a chasseur; thence he went to Vienna, where he studied Correggio and Rubens for four years, with the exception of a journey to France and England. While residing in Vienna he painted portraits of Beethoven, Grillparzer, and the poetess Pichler for Baron Skobensky; his first composition was a 'Madonna, with the Infant Christ and 'St. John.' In 1821 he went to Italy, and lived seven years almost entirely at Rome. In 1828 he went to Berlin, where he became a member of the Academy, and died in 1864. The following pictures are some of his best; the first four are in the Berlin National Gallery:

- Jubal, the Inventor of the Flute. 1839.
- Horses Watering.
- Psyche awakened by Cupid. 1854
- The Training of Bacchus.
- Perseus and Andromeda.
- The Toilet of Venus.
- The Grecian Flower Girl. 1833.
- Cupid sharpening his Arrows.

KLOMP, AELBERT, who flourished from 1602 to 32, is regarded as the forerunner of Aelbert Cuyp and Paul Potter. His pictures were landscapes with figures and cattle, fountains, ruins, &c. They are to be seen at Amsterdam, Brussels, Bordeaux, Copenhagen, Dresden, Frankfurt, Rotterdam, Schwerin, Stockholm, and St. Petersburg.

KLOSS, FREDERIK THEODOR, was born at Brunswick in 1802. He went in 1819 to Berlin, where he painted portraits, landscapes, and particularly sea-pieces. In 1828 he proceeded to Copenhagen, and improved himself in marine painting under Eckersberg. Shortly afterwards he made a voyage with the cadet ship, and was appointed drawing master to the cadets. In 1834 he made a prolonged attempt at lithography; in 1843 he went by sea to Italy, and in the following year to the Faroe Isles. He died at Copenhagen in 1876. Among his paintings are:

The Battle of Lyngørshavn.
Prince Christian after the Battle of Själlandsodde.
Open Sea with Shipping.

KLOTZ, AUGUST, the eldest son of Kaspar Klotz, was born at Augsburg in 1808, and became a pupil of R. von Langer at the Munich Academy. Subsequently he was appointed conservator of the united art collections in that city, where he died in 1853. Most of his paintings were taken from Scripture, among which his 'Christ with Martha and Mary' is noteworthy. He, however, produced also genre pictures, and portraits in miniature. His younger brother, KARL KLOTZ, who was also a painter, was born in 1810, and died in Greece in 1834.

KLOTZ, JOSEPH, a German scene painter, born at Munich in 1785, was a son and pupil of Matthias Klotz. He travelled in France and North Germany, and then became court and theatrical painter at Munich, where he died in 1830. His transparent painting, 'The Burning of Moscow in 1814,' attracted much attention.

KLOTZ, KASPAR, a miniature painter, was born at Mannheim in 1775. He was a son of Matthias Klotz, and studied under him, and then under Dorner. In 1794 he became court painter to the Elector Karl Theodor, and afterwards to King Maximilian I., in whose employment he visited Paris and Vienna, and then settled in Munich. He invented an instrument by which every object, at whatever distance, could be laid down to scale with mathematical accuracy. He died about 1845.

KLOTZ, MATTHIAS, a German scene painter, was born at Strassburg in 1748, and was instructed by Haldenwanger in that city, and by Guibal and Scotti at Stuttgart. In 1775 he became court theatrical painter in Mannheim, and thence visited the most noteworthy towns in Germany and Holland. In 1778 he was invited to Munich, where he appears to have lived till his death in 1821. Here too he devoted himself in some measure to the work of providing landscape decorations for the German theatres. In 1816 he published 'Instructions in Colouring' ('Farbenlehre').

KLOTZ, SIMON, was born at Mannheim in 1777, and was a son of Matthias Klotz. He studied under his father and under Dorner, and then visited Vienna, Dresden, Berlin, and Copenhagen. He became in 1805 professor at Landshut, and afterwards travelled in France and Italy. He worked in fresco, as well as in oil and miniature. His most approved paintings are four landscapes, the 'Divisions of the Day,' 'The Mount of Olives,' and 'The Virgin with the Sleeping Child,' together with Gessner's 'Idylls.' He also produced drawings in water-colours and bistre. He died in 1825.

KLUBER, JOHANN HUGO, was an historical painter of Basle, who flourished about 1528.

KLÜPFEL, JOHANN CONRAD, an engraver who worked about 1620, was apparently a native of Germany. He engraved several small plates of the 'Cries of Rome,' copied from the prints by Villamena.

KLUYT, PIETER DIERIKSEN, a native of Delft, who was born about 1579, and was still living in 1620, was one of the best scholars of Miereveld.

KNABICH, JOHANN GEORG. See KNAPPICH.

KNAPP, JOHANN, a flower, fruit, and animal painter, was born at Vienna in 1778. He studied in the Vienna Academy under Drechsler, with whom in 1797 he entered the army as a volunteer. After the conclusion of peace he settled down at the garden at Schönbrunn, and devoted himself to natural history. He died at Schönbrunn in 1833. He published 'Flora Alpina,' and numerous other works of a similar class. In the Vienna Gallery is a fruit and flower piece by him.

KNAPPICH, JOHANN GEORG, (or KNABICH), was born at Augsburg in 1637. He was a pupil of Johann Heiss. The cathedral of his native city contains a 'Nativity' by him, and the Georgenkirche, 'The Death of Joseph.' He died in 1704.

KNAPTON, CHARLES, an engraver, was brother of George Knapton, and was born in 1700. He published in 1734-35 some aquatint imitations of drawings. He died in 1760.

KNAPTON, GEORGE, a painter and engraver, was born in London in 1698. He was a scholar of Jonathan Richardson, and was chiefly occupied in drawing portraits in crayons. In conjunction with Arthur Pond, he engraved and published a set of prints from the drawings of the most celebrated painters. The work consists of ninety-five plates, sixty-eight of which were engraved by Pond, and twenty-seven by Knapton; they are chiefly landscapes after Guercino, and are faithfully copied in a very creditable manner. He went to Italy in 1740, and published a description of the discoveries at Herculaneum. He was also concerned in the publication of the 'Heads of Illustrious Persons,' engraved by Houbaken, and other works. In 1765, Knapton was painter to the Dilettanti Society, and on the death of Slaughter, was appointed surveyor and keeper of the King's pictures. There is at Hampton Court a picture by him of 'The Widow of Frederick, Prince of Wales, with her Family.' He died at Kensington in 1778.

KNELL, WILLIAM ADOLPHUS, a marine painter, exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1835 to 1866. He died in 1875. There are some pictures by him in the Royal Collection, and in the Bridge-water Gallery is 'Evening in the Downs' by him.

KNELLER, SIR GODFREY, Bart., (or KNILLER), a portrait painter, was born at Lübeck in 1646. His father was Inspector of Mines to Count Ernst von Mansfeld, and a native of Eisleben, but was compelled by the war to come to Lübeck, where he married and had two sons, Johann Zacharias and Gottfried. The latter was destined for a military career, and with that view was sent to Leyden to study mathematics and fortification. There he displayed a strong leaning to art, which his father encouraged, and he was sent to Amsterdam, where he entered the school of Rembrandt, and afterwards studied under Ferdinand Bol. In 1672 he went to Rome, where he became a pupil of Carlo Maratti and Bernini, and began to acquire some fame as a painter of history. He afterwards went to Venice, where he was well received by the principal families, whose portraits he painted, particularly the Cardinal Bassadonna. On his return from Italy, he dwelt some time in Hamburg, but in 1674 he was induced by a Hamburg merchant of the name of Banks to try his fortune in London, where he eventually settled, enjoyed an unrivalled reputation as a portrait painter, and amassed a considerable fortune. Walpole mentions that Charles II., to save himself trouble, sat to Lely and Kneller at the same time, and that Kneller's picture was finished by the time that Lely's was dead coloured only. From this time his fame was established. Besides Charles II. he painted Louis XIV. of France, James II., William III., Peter the Great of Russia, Queen Anne, Charles VI. of Spain, and George I. For Queen Mary II. he painted the 'Beauties' at Hampton Court, and he was knighted in 1692, and created a baronet in 1715. His works in the Gallery of Admirals were done in the reign of William III., as also the portraits of the Kit-Cat Club, forty-three in number, engraved in mezzotint by J. Faber the younger in 1795, which were the last of his public works. There was hardly a person of note in his day whom he did not paint. He resided in Covent Garden for twenty-four years, but in 1705 he settled at Kneller Hall, near Twickenham, which was called in his life-time Whittou House. Kneller Hall was in 1857 converted into a school of military music. He died at Twickenham in 1723, and was buried there in the church, whilst a monument was erected to him in Westminster Abbey, with an epitaph by Pope. Besides the pictures above-mentioned there are portraits by him in the Charterhouse, College of Physicians, Devonshire House, Garrick Club, Greenwich Hospital, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and Royal Society, as well as the following:—

KNELLER, JOHANN ZACHARIAS, the elder brother of Sir Godfrey Kneller, was born at Lübeck in 1635. After travelling through Italy, he accompanied his brother to England in 1674. He painted architecture and still-life, in fresco and in oil, and copied some of Sir Godfrey's pictures in water-colours. He died in London in 1702.

KNIBBERCH, FRANÇOIS DE, was a Dutch landscape painter of the 17th century. Early left an orphan, he was placed by his guardian with a painter at Milan named Van den Zande, a native of Utrecht, by whom he was very badly treated. On his return to his own country in 1629 he was received into the corporation of St. Luke at the Hague.

KNIEP, CHRISTOPH HEINRICH, was born at Hildesheim in 1748. He received his first education in Hanover, from whence he went to Hamburg, where he executed several drawings, and then to Berlin. He then went to Rome at the expense of the Prince Bishop of Ermeland, and afterwards to Naples, where he met with Goethe, with whom he travelled through Sicily. He became a professor at the Academy of Naples, where he died in 1825.

KNIGHT, CHARLES, an engraver, practised in London towards the end of the 18th century, and was living in 1803. He engraved after Singleton, Hoppner, Wheatley, Kaufmann, &c. The following plates are by him:

Samuel; after Sir Joshua Reynolds. 1794.
Lady Hamilton as a Bacchante; after Romney. 1797.
Rev. Mr. Harrison; after Hone. 1788.
Cupid disarmed; after Mary Bannell.

KNIGHT, JOHN PRESCOTT, a portrait painter, was born at Stafford in 1803, and being intended for a mercantile career, he served for some time as clerk to a West India merchant. Owing to his master's failure he amused himself for some time in copying designs by West, in which he was so successful that his father allowed him to become a pupil of Sass and George Clint, and in 1823 a student of the Royal Academy. His first picture was sent to the Academy in 1824, and this was followed by portraits of Alfred Bunn, Miss Chester, Mrs. Terry, Sir Walter Scott, Mr. Glover, and his father Edward Knight, the comedian. The artist first appeared at the British Institution in 1828, with 'List, ye landmen all, to me!' and this was followed by 'The Whist Party,' 'Auld Robin Gray,' and 'Smugglers alarmed.' In 1836 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1844 an Academician. He was also Professor of Perspective, and from 1848 to 1873 Secretary of the Royal Academy. His best known work is the 'Waterloo Banquet,' in the possession of the Duke of Wellington. He died in London in 1881.

KNIGHT, MARY ANNE, a miniature painter, was born in 1776. She studied under Andrew Plimer, and occasionally exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1803. She died, unmarried, in 1831.

KNIGHT, WILLIAM HENRY, a subject painter, was born at Newbury, in Berkshire, in 1823. He was designed for the law, but practised painting as an amateur, and as two of his pictures were accepted by the Society of British Artists, he resolved to become a portrait painter, and in 1845 came to London to practise as such, studying meanwhile at the British Museum, and afterwards at the Royal Academy. He died in London in 1863. Among his best works are:

Boys at Play. 1846.
Blind Man's Buff. 1850.
Dividing the Apples.
Snowball Fight. 1853.
The Young Naturalist. 1857.
Card Party.
The Humming-top. 1859.
Peace versus War.
A Troublesome Neighbour. 1862.

KNIP, HENRIETTE GEERTRUIDA, born at Tilburg in 1783, distinguished herself as a painter of fruit and flowers. She was the daughter of Nicolaas Frederik Knip. She received lessons from Van Spaendonck, and painted in water-colours from compositions made by her father previous to his loss of sight. In 1822 she took lessons from the celebrated Van Dael, and produced numerous pictures in oil-colours, which were exhibited in France, Germany, Flanders, Amsterdam, and the Hague. She died at Haarlem in 1842.

KNIP, JOSEPHUS AUGUSTUS, a Dutch landscape and animal painter, born at Tilburg in 1777, was a son of Nicolaas Frederik Knip. In 1801 he went to Paris, where he painted landscapes with enveloping colours after a manner of his own. The King of Holland allowed him a pension, which enabled him to devote himself wholly to study, and to proceed to Rome and Naples. On returning home in 1813, he found the prevailing want of taste to be fatal to his prospects there, so he went again to Paris and devoted himself to animal painting. Like his father, in 1827 he became blind. He died at Berlicum, near Bois-le-Duc, in 1847. There is an 'Italian Landscape' by him in the Rotterdam Museum.

KNIP, MARTEN DERK, was born at Tilburg in 1785, and died at Vucht, near Bois-le-Duc, in 1845. He was a son of Nicolaas Frederik Knip, and painted landscapes.

KNIP, NICOLAAS FREDERIK, a landscape, fruit, and flower painter, was born at Nymwegen, in 1742. Until the age of thirty he led a wandering life, working at gentlemen's country seats wherever he could obtain employment; he then married, and settled at Tilburg, where he painted landscape, fruit, and flower pieces, of small dimensions, generally from twelve to eighteen inches. He died at Bois-le-Duc in 1809, having been blind for nearly fourteen years.

KNOBELSDORF, HANS GEORG WENCESLAUS VON, Baron, who was principally an architect, but also practised painting and etching, was born in 1697, and died in Berlin in 1753. He was a captain in the Prussian service, but devoted himself to art in 1730. His portraits and landscapes were admired.

KNODERER, HANS, (or KNOTER,) was court painter to the Emperor Maximilian I. at Augsburg, about 1508-22.

KNOLLE, JOHANN HEINRICH FRIEDRICH LUDWIG, a German line engraver, was born at Brunswick in 1807. He studied first under Anderloni at Milan from 1831 to 1833, and subsequently visited Dresden, London, and Paris. He became a professor, and the inspector of the Museum at Brunswick, where he died in 1877. Among his most important plates are the following:

The Murder of the Sons of Edward IV.; after Hildebrandt.
Othello relating his Adventures to Desdemona; after the same.
The Reading Magdalene; after Correggio.
The Madonna; after the same.
The Virgin in Glory; after Murillo.
The Tribute Money; after Titian.
St. Cecilia; after Carlo Dolce.
The Holy Night; after Maratti.
Portrait of Duke William of Brunswick; after his own design.

KNOLLER, MARTIN, one of the best German painters of the time, was born at Steinach, in the Tyrol, in 1725. His father, who was a mediocre painter, intended his son to follow his profession, and accordingly gave him all necessary instruction. In 1745, the artist Paul Troger, passing through Steinach on the way to Vienna, saw some productions by young Knoller, greatly admired them, and induced his father to let the son accompany him to Vienna, where in 1753 he obtained the great prize for historical painting with his 'Tobias restoring sight to his father.' In 1754 Knoller went to Rome, where he studied under Raphael Mengs, and in 1756 he became court painter at Milan. In 1758 he was invited to Naples by Count Firmian, the Austrian ambassador, by whom he was much patronized, and for whom he executed many important works. In 1760 he went a second time to Milan, where he became a professor in the Academy, and died in 1804. His fresco paintings are better than his productions in oil. Of the former may be mentioned works in the churches of Ettal in the Bavarian Alps, of Neresheim in Würtemberg, of Steinach, and of many small villages in the Tyrol and elsewhere. An 'Ascension of the Virgin,' in the town-hall of Munich, is worthy of praise. Of his easel pictures, a portrait of 'Joseph Rosa,' in the Vienna Gallery, is a good example. In the Munich Gallery is 'SS. Benedict and Scholastica presented to the Trinity by the Virgin'; others are 'The Apotheosis of Alberich the Great,' at Milan, and 'Moses bringing water from the Rock,' at Varese, near that city. Knoller's pictures are noticeable for vigour of design and execution, and for the representation of violent actions.

KNOOP, J. H., a Dutch painter, was born at Amsterdam in 1769, and was a pupil of Barthélemy and the younger Barbiers. He executed some views of his native city.

KNORR, GEORG WOLFGANG, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1705. His father was a turner, which trade he himself followed till the age of eighteen. He executed the engravings for a work entitled, 'Physica Sacra,' by Scheuchzer, which gave him a great taste for science. He engraved some of the portraits for Roth-Scholtz's 'Icones Bibliopolarum et Typographorum,' published in 1726-42, and in 1737 he produced a volume of 'Views of Nuremberg and its neighbourhood.' He published also several artistic and scientific works. He died at Nuremberg in 1761.

KNÜPFER, NICOLAUS, was born at Leipsic in 1603. He showed so early in life an inclination for art, that his father placed him with a painter named Emanuel Nyssen. With him he remained for two years, but made but little progress. He then went to Magdeburg, where he supported himself by making paint-brushes and engaging himself in house-painting till 1630, when he went to Utrecht, and became a pupil of Abraham Bloemaert, who thought so well of him as to receive him into his house. With such advantages he soon gained patrons, and among others he was commissioned by the King of Denmark to paint three battle-pieces, which gained him great reputation. According to Kramm he established a school at the Hague, and among his pupils was Jan Steen. He died at the Hague in 1660. The following are some of his principal pictures :

Brunswick.	Gallery.	Solomon sacrificing to strange Gods.
Cassel.	Gallery.	Seven Works of Mercy.
Copenhagen.	Gallery.	St. Paul before Festus.
		Mercury and Psyche.
Dresden.	Gallery.	Portrait of the Painter and his Wife.
Milan.	Brera.	Portrait of a Doctor.
"	"	Two Portraits of Himself.
"	"	Portrait of Giuseppe Franchi, the sculptor.
"	"	Portrait of the Abbate Giuseppe Parini.
"	"	Portrait of Anton Raphael Mengs.
"	"	The Assumption.
"	"	St. Sebastian.
Petersburg.	Gallery.	Solomon and the Queen of Sheba.

KNYF, JACOB, a Dutch painter of landscapes and sea-pieces, was a son of Wouter Knyf, and was born in 1640. He flourished at Haarlem in the 17th century, but was afterwards established at Paris, where he gave lessons to Glauber.

KNYF, WOUTER, who lived in the 17th century, was born at Wesel, of a Haarlem family. He was a painter of landscapes and views of towns, in the style of Van Goyen. He was living up to 1679. One of his views is in the Ghent Museum.

KOBEL, JACOB, a German wood engraver, who flourished about the year 1520, to whom are attributed the cuts for a work published in 1545, entitled 'Wappen des heyligen römischen Reichs,' consisting of single figures of soldiers holding banners, with the arms of all the provinces and cities of the German Empire.

KOBELL, FERDINAND, a German painter and engraver, was born at Mannheim in 1740. His father was one of the counsellors of the Elector Karl Theodor of Bavaria, and designed his son to follow the same course; but a landscape of his execution happened to meet the Elector's eye, and he consequently afforded him the means of studying, first under Peter Verschaefelt at Mannheim, and from 1768 in Paris. On his return he became court painter and professor at the Academy. In 1793 he removed to Munich, where he was appointed director of the Gallery. He died there in 1799. His landscapes are in the style of Berchem; examples are in the Augsburg, Stuttgart, and Darmstadt Galleries. His etchings are executed with taste and spirit, and are described in a 'Catalogue raisonné,' published by Baron de Stengel in 1822; among them are the following :

Four Moonlight Landscapes, with Peasants' Cottages.
A set of six small plates of the Sports of Children.
1769.

Four Landscapes, with ruins. 1770.
Four mountainous Landscapes. 1772.

KOBELL, FRANZ, a German landscape and architectural draughtsman and painter, was born at Mannheim in 1749. Having a strong predilection for painting he declined trade, and joined his brother Ferdinand, who was secretary to the electoral court of Mannheim, and there attracted the notice of the Elector Karl Theodor, who appointed him his principal painter. By the Elector's bounty he was enabled in 1776 to visit Italy, where he remained about nine years, studying the classical scenery and architecture of the country. On his return to his native place he abandoned the use of the brush, as too slow to keep pace with his ideas, and confined himself to the pen in sketching and drawing landscapes and buildings, of which it is said that he depicted about 20,000. His oil pictures are consequently rare. He died at Munich in 1822.

KOBELL, HENDRIK, (sometimes called 'junior,') a marine and landscape painter, was born at Rotterdam in 1751. His father was a merchant, and intended his son for the same pursuit; but as he was instructed in drawing, he showed his predilection by sketching the shipping in the port of his native town, and the river scenery. He was sent to England, while a youth, on commercial matters, and remained some time in London. On his return home he abandoned trade altogether, and went to Amsterdam, where, in two years, he made such progress that the Academy of that city received him as a member, and reckoned him among the best. His next excursion was to the Rhine and the Meuse, and he painted landscapes and river scenes analogous to those of Zafleiven. On his return, he settled in Rotterdam, and continued to enrich the portfolios of amateurs with his beautiful drawings, among which there are some of naval engagements. These drawings are generally executed with the pen, heightened with Indian ink, or water-colours. He did not, however, confine himself to drawing, but painted marine subjects in oil, which were highly esteemed. He died at Rotterdam in 1782.

KOBELL, JAN, an engraver, born at Rotterdam in 1756, was a younger brother of Hendrik Kobell. He was chiefly engaged in making anatomical engravings, but in 1787 he issued a series of historical portraits. He died in 1833.

KOBELL, JAN, the elder, an eminent landscape and animal painter, and engraver, the son of Hendrik Kobell, was born at Delfshaven in 1779. As his father died in 1782, and his mother shortly afterwards, young Kobell was placed in the Orphan Asylum at Rotterdam. When he grew up he was put under the tuition of W. R. van der Wall, the landscape and animal painter, who trained him to design after nature, and to make Paulus Potter his model. He made rapid progress, and a landscape with cattle, exhibited at Paris in 1812, carried off the gold medal. He continued in high popularity until the time of his death, which occurred at Amsterdam in 1814. In the Rotterdam Museum is a picture of 'Two Oxen and a Bull.' There are a few etchings by him, which, as well as his beautiful drawings, are highly esteemed.

KOBELL, JAN, the younger, was the son of Jan Kobell, an engraver, the younger brother of Hendrik Kobell, consequently cousin to Jan Kobell the elder. He was born at Rotterdam in 1800, and obtained a great reputation as a landscape and cattle painter. He died at Rotterdam in 1838.

KOBELL, WILHELM, the son of Ferdinand Kobell, was born at Mannheim in 1766, and was instructed in landscape painting and engraving by his father, and afterwards studied in Düsseldorf after the works of Wouwerman. In 1808 he became professor at the Munich Academy, and in 1809-10 visited Vienna and Paris. He began by painting landscapes and animal pieces, but afterwards took to battles. He died at Munich in 1855. His battles of Abensberg, Eckmühl, Hanau, and Landshut, were painted by direction of King Maximilian I. and the Crown Prince Ludwig. The Berlin National Gallery contains 'Cattle at Pasture' by him (1820), and the Munich Pinakothek, 'The Third Day of the Battle of Hanau'; others of his works are at Darmstadt, Frankfurt, Schleissheim, and Stuttgart. He also produced sixty aquatint engravings after Berchem, Roos, Ruisdael, and Wouwerman, and etched numerous plates after the works of the principal landscape painters of the Dutch school, in which he was uncommonly successful in representing the particular style of each master. The following is a list of some of the most interesting:

A Landscape, with Travellers, and Horses loaded; after W. Romeyn.

Two Landscapes, with Figures and Cattle; after Berchem.

Cavaliers and Horses at the door of an Inn; after Wouwerman.

A pair of Landscapes, with Cattle; after J. H. Roos.

A Landscape, with a Woman carrying a Lamb, with an Ox and some Sheep; after J. Le Ducq.

A Shepherdess, with a Cow and some Sheep; after Th. van Bergen.

A Landscape, with a Waterfall; after J. Both.

A View in Holland; after J. Wynants.

A Landscape, with a Shepherd playing on his Pipe, and several Animals; after A. van de Velde.

Going Hawking; after Karel Du Jardin.

Six Views of Munich.

Seven Roman Views.

Several plates of Horses, Riders, Dogs, &c.

KOBKE, CHRISTEN SCHJELLERUP, a painter and etcher, was born in 1810 at Copenhagen, where he learned drawing in the Academy, and afterwards painting under Lorentzen and Eckersberg. In 1838 he visited Rome, and subsequently Naples. From about 1845 he painted fresco decorations in the Thorvaldsen Museum of his birthplace, where he died in 1848. He took to etching in 1831, and produced a plate of Frederiksborg Castle, and portraits of Bissen and Holberg. His oil paintings of landscapes, portraits, and genre subjects comprised especially the following:

The Old Sailor. (Copenhagen Gallery; etched by himself.)

Sketch from the Aarhus Cathedral.

The Antique Saloon in Charlottenburg.

Frederiksborg Castle at Sunset.

Summer Morning at Østerbro.

South side of the Isle of Capri.

Morning at Capri. (Copenhagen Gallery.)

KOBOLD, GOTTLIEB, a painter and draughtsman, was born about 1760 at Cassel, where he was teacher in the Electoral Academy, and died in 1812. He painted landscapes and portraits, in particular twelve views of Wilhelmshöhe.

KOCH, FRIEDRICH, an engraver and draughtsman, was born at Buxweiler, in Alsace, about 1770. He learned the rudiments of oil and miniature painting under his father. At the beginning of the French Revolution he removed with his family to Mannheim, where he settled in trade, but continued to study the works of Rembrandt, Dietrich, and others, and to execute occasional plates. He died at Mannheim in 1832. Among his plates are:

A Lady putting on her Gloves; after Biset.

Portrait of Jan Miel; after the same.

Man with an Official Staff; after Rembrandt.

KOCH, JOSEF, a German animal and landscape painter, was born at Munich in 1819. He studied under the battle painters Adam and Voltz, also landscape under Bernhardt. His first pictures were 'A Boar Hunt,' 'Cows at pasture,' and 'Deer and Goats.' He then travelled through Belgium, and stayed some time at Antwerp, where he studied the more technical parts of art. He afterwards visited Paris and Venice, returning to Munich in 1846. Among his pictures may be mentioned, 'Animals, with the ruins of Kropsberg' (1849); 'Animals in a Wood' (1852); 'Cows at pasture' (1853). He died at Munich in 1872.

KOCH, JOSEPH ANTON, an historical and landscape painter, was born at Obergiebeln, near Elbingen in the Tyrol, in 1768. As the son of simple peasants he had often to spend his time in the care of cattle, but even then amused himself with drawing and carving. In time some of his pictures attracted the attention of Baron von Ungelder, vice-bishop at Augsburg, who adopted him. The historical painter, Jacob Mettenleiter, persuaded the bishop, in 1785, to send Koch to the Karlsschule in Stuttgart, but disliking the mean class of work at which he was kept, he in 1791 ran away, and went to Strassburg, and thence to Basle, to study Swiss scenery. He went to Rome in 1794, and there became the friend of Thorvaldsen. He thus spent two years, and in 1795 he wandered on foot through the Alps to Florence, and on to Naples, from whence he came back to Rome. The acquaintance of Carstens decided him to follow Poussin in his historical landscape painting. The years 1812-15, during which he resided in Vienna, were the most fruitful epoch of his life. He returned to Rome in 1817. Until just before his death he had to contend against the most abject poverty, but at last he received a small pension. In 1831 he wrote 'Moderne Kunstchronik, oder die Rumford'sche Suppe.' He died at Rome in 1839. The works of Koch are numerous, and belong to various departments of art, including fresco, oil, water-colour and gouache painting, pencil and pen-and-ink drawing, and etching. Besides landscapes at Copenhagen, Leipsic, Frankfurt, and Stuttgart, the following paintings by him may be noted:

The Convent of Civitella. (Berlin National Gallery.)

The Schmadribach Cascade in Switzerland. (Neue Pinakothek, Munich.)

Vintage Festival at Olevano. (The same.)

Landscape after a Storm. (The same.)

Noah's Sacrifice; in water-colours.

The Oath of the Republicans at Millesimo. 1797.

Tivoli. (Emperor of Austria.)

The Waterfall at Tivoli. (Darmstadt Gallery.)

Olevano and the Vale of the Tiber.

Exodus of the Patriarch Jacob. 1817.

Historical Landscapes, with Noah, Balaam, Hylas,

Polyphemus, Nausicaa, Diana, Apollo, Macbeth, &c.

Four Scenes from Dante in the Villa Massimi; frescoes.

Among works of a more miscellaneous character are:

Set of 36 Illustrations to Ossian (engraved by Piroli).

The Landscapes to Carstens' Argonauts (etched by himself in 24 plates).

Set of 14 Illustrations to Dante; in pen-and-ink. (Vienna Academy.)

Set of 12 Landscapes from the Environs of Rome; in pencil. (The same.)

Set of 20 Roman Views (etchings).

Five Illustrations of Dante, and two of Ariosto (etchings).

Set of 12 Historical Landscapes; in sepia. (Stuttgart Cabinet of Engravings.)

KOCK, HIERONIMUS and MATTHYS. See COCK.

KOCK, M., was a native of Holland, who flourished about the year 1695. Among other prints he engraved a large plate, representing the 'Procession of William III., which took place on the 5th of February, 1691.

KOECKER, WENZEL, (or COEBERGER,) a Flemish painter and architect, was born at Antwerp about 1557. He studied painting under Marten De Vos, and on leaving that master went to Paris, and from thence to Italy. He remained some years at Rome, where he made drawings of the finest monuments of art. He afterwards went to Naples, where he established himself, and formed an intimacy with a Flemish painter, named Franco, whose daughter he married. This union fixed him at Naples for several years, during which time he received many invitations to return to his native country, and was commissioned to paint a picture for the confraternity of St. Sebastian, representing the 'Martyrdom' of that Saint, which was placed in their chapel in Antwerp Cathedral. He soon after quitted Italy, and settled at Brussels, where he was appointed painter and principal architect to the Archduke Albert of Austria, who committed to him the work of decorating his palace of Tervueren, near to that city. He painted several altar-pieces for the churches of Brabant and Flanders; and for several years had the superintendence of the public edifices. An 'Entombment' by him is in the Brussels Gallery. Van Dyck painted a portrait of Koeberger, which is finely engraved by Lucas Vorsterman. He died at Brussels in 1635. He was also a poet, antiquary, and numismatist, and his country is indebted to him for the introduction of pawnshops.

KOECK, MICHAEL, was born at Innsbruck in 1760, and studied under Peter Denifle in that town, after which, by the assistance of Count von Enzenberg, he went to Knoller at Milan, where he remained nine years. After this he proceeded, as an imperial pensionary, to Rome, where he settled down till his death in 1825. In this city he copied the works of Raphael, and became a member of the Academy of St. Luke, and in 1814 vice-director of the papal mosaic institute. The National Museum of Innsbruck contains fourteen paintings by him, representing the 'History of Achilles,' which were prepared as designs for the mosaic table which Pope Leo XII. presented to the King of France.

KOECK, PAUWEL VAN, (sometimes called PAUWEL VAN AELST,) the natural son of Pieter Koeck, was a good painter of fruit and flowers. He practised at Middelburg in the 16th century, and copied Mabuse with success. He was assisted by Jan Mostaert in these productions. He died at Antwerp, but the date is not mentioned.

KOECK, PIETER, was born at Aalst in 1502. He was a pupil of Van Orley at Brussels. He visited Italy, and after a short stay in his native place he settled at Constantinople, where he painted scenes of Turkish life. Pieter Brueghel was his pupil. He died at Brussels in 1550.

KOEDYK, DIRK, a Dutch mezzotint engraver, who was born at Zaandam in 1681, and flourished about the year 1730, has been by some writers confounded with the painter Nicolaas Koedyk. There are by him a few prints, after Metsu and other masters, and a portrait of Michiel van Musscher, painter.

KOEDYK, NICOLAAS, a Dutch painter, flourished in the latter part of the 17th century. He studied under Pieter De Hooch, and is said to have been the last good painter of the old Dutch school. He was honoured with the favour of Peter the Great of Russia, from which it might be supposed that he was a painter of shipping: this, however, is not stated, but he is known for his portraits, genre pictures, and interiors. To him is attributed the renowned picture called 'L'Escalier tournant' ('The Winding Stair'), which was purchased in Holland to be sent to Russia, but, together with others by Gerard Dou and Paulus Potter, was lost in a dreadful storm on the passage. A 'Portrait of a Warrior' by Koedyk is in the Museum at Amsterdam, and some other pictures of his are in the collections of that city.

KOEKKOEK, BAREND CORNELIS, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Middelburg in 1803. He studied under his father, Jan Hermann Koekkoek, the marine painter, and afterwards under Schelfhout and Van Os, and in the Academy of Amsterdam. Thence he travelled in Belgium, and on the Rhine and Moselle. In 1845 he painted a number of landscapes for the King of Holland. He frequently exhibited at Paris, where he obtained medals in 1840 and 1843, and again at the International Exhibition in 1855. He published in 1841 'Souvenirs and Communications of a Landscape Painter.' He resided at one time at Beek, but in his later years at Cleve, where he founded a Drawing Academy, and died in 1862. Amongst his works are:

Landscape near Cleves.	(Antwerp Gallery.)
Landscape in Guelderland.	} (Rotterdam Museum.)
A Forest Scene.
Winter—Banks of a River.
The Gooiland Canal.
A Thicket in a Wood.
Summer and Winter.	1843.
Two Landscapes.	(Berlin National Gallery.)
Two Sea Pieces.	(South Kensington Museum.)
Winter Scene.	} (Fodor Museum, Amsterdam.)
Six Landscapes.

KOEKKOEK, JAN, son of Jan Hermann Koekkoek, was born at Middelburg in 1811. He painted the same subjects as his father, whose pupil he was, and was an artist of great promise, but died at Breda in 1831.

KOEKKOEK, JAN HERMANN, a Dutch marine painter, was born at Vere in 1778. He acquired his art from the study of nature, having been at first employed in a tapestry factory. His sea and river scenes are much admired, and procured him the membership of the Amsterdam Academy. He died at Amsterdam in 1851.

KOELMAN, JOHAN DANIEL, a Dutch cattle and landscape painter, was born at the Hague in 1831, and died there in 1857. He was the younger brother of the painters Johan Philip and Johan Hendrik Koelman.

KOENE, IZAAK, was born at Haarlem in 1650, and died there in 1713. He is mentioned by Descamps as a scholar of Jacob Ruisdael. He painted landscapes and waterfalls in the style of that master, the figures being frequently introduced by Barent Gaal.

KOERTEN, JOHANNA, an artist in various departments, was born at Amsterdam in 1650. She married Adriaan Blok, and after receiving honours from many distinguished persons, including Peter the Great, she died in 1715. She was especially esteemed as an embroideress and worker in paper; but she was also clever in drawing, in writing and designing upon goblets, and in singing.

KOETS, ROELOF, was born at Zwolle in 1655, and was instructed in the rudiments of design by his father, an obscure artist, who afterwards placed him under the tuition of Gerard Terborch, with whom he remained until he was eighteen years of age. He devoted himself almost entirely to portrait painting, in which he was much employed at the court of Henry Casimir, Count of Nassau, Stadtholder of Friesland; and afterwards by William III., whose portrait he painted, and those of the principal English nobility who attended the king at Loo. He died at Zwolle in 1725. It is said that he painted five thousand portraits with his own hand, but they seem to have almost entirely disappeared.

KOHL, ANDREAS, an obscure German engraver, resided at Nuremberg about the year 1609. Among other things, he engraved an ornamental frontispiece to a folio book of Architecture. It is executed on copper, in imitation of a woodcut, in a style resembling a drawing with a pen.

KOHL, CLEMENS, a German engraver, was born at Prague in 1754. He first studied under his brother Ludwig, and then under Franz Wolf, and from 1775 became a pupil of J. Schmutzer, at the Academy of Vienna. He taught drawing to the Empress Maria Theresa, and was appointed court engraver. He died at Vienna in 1807. There are several portraits by him, and a few historical subjects: among others, the following:

PORTRAITS.

Friedrich Wilhelm, Prince of Hohenlohe; after J. Kreutzinger.
 Serge, Prince von Gagarin; after L. Posch.
 Barbe, Princess von Gagarin; after the same.
 Charles William Ferdinand, Duke of Brunswick; after Anton Graff.
 Ferdinand, Duke of Brunswick and Luneburg; after Ziesenis.

SUBJECTS.

Jacob's Blessing; after J. Kohl. 1775.
 An Astrologer explaining the Sphere; after the same.
 A Professor instructing his Students; after the same.

KOHL, LUDWIG, a painter, designer, and engraver, was born at Prague in 1746, and learnt oil-painting in the atelier of Norbert Grund. He became a member of the Academy of Vienna in 1769, and in 1773 an honorary member of that of Parma. He studied engraving under Schmutzer, and became teacher of drawing at the Prague normal school. He died in 1821. He practised etching, and also the carving of models. His works include:

Virginius stabbing his Daughter. (Oil-painting.)
 Seven Views of Prague. (Engravings.)
 One hundred Sketches from History, Mechanics, and Architecture. (Drawings.)

KÖHLER, ALBRECHT, a Getman historical painter, was born in 1810, and died in 1861. He studied under Herbig. His best known work is, 'The Death of Adolph of Nassau.'

KÖHLER, CHRISTIAN, an historical painter, was born at Werben in 1809. He attended the Berlin Academy, where Schadow took especial notice of him. He followed the latter in 1826 to Düsseldorf, and in 1837 he had his own studio as member of the class of masters. From 1855 to 1858 he was professor at the Academy. In 1860 he went on account of his health to Montpeller, spent the summer at the Lake of Geneva, and died at Montpellier in 1861. The following paintings are by him:

Miriam's Song of Praise. (Wallraf-Richartz Museum, Cologne.)
 Semiramis punishing the Insurgents. 1852. (Berlin National Gallery.)
 The Exodus of Moses. (Engraved by Felsing.)
 Rebekah at the Well.
 Hagar and Ishmael. (Düsseldorf Gallery.)
 The Triumph of David.
 Romeo and Juliet.
 Margaret at her Spinning-wheel.
 Germany, with the Genius of Freedom.
 Goethe's Mignon.

KÖHLER, JOHANN HEINRICH ROBERT, a portrait painter and anatomical draughtsman, was born at Leipsic in 1807. He was the son of a musician, and obtained his instruction in art in the academy of his native town under Johann von Schnorr, and next in Dresden under Pochmann. In 1848 he went to New York, where he met with so little success in portrait taking that he devoted himself to the study of anatomy. His death occurred at New York in 1872.

KÖHLER, KARL, a German painter and art writer, was born at Darmstadt in 1825, and died at Almshof, near Nuremberg, in 1876.

KOK, JAN MATTHIAS, (or COK,) born at Amsterdam in 1720, was a scholar of Nicolaas Verkolje. He painted landscapes and cattle, views of châteaux, sea-pieces, and figures adorned with accessories. He died in 1770.

KOKARSKI, —, was the painter of a very characteristic portrait of Marie Antoinette, taken whilst she was a prisoner in the Conciergerie. It is now in the Arenberg Gallery, and has been lithographed by Delooze. Kokarski had already painted her portrait in 1780.

KOKEN, EDMUND, a German painter, was born at Hanover in 1814. He attended the Polytechnic School, and in 1836 went to Munich, where he remained for eight years. He painted principally landscapes, several of which are in the Royal Gallery at Hanover. He died in 1872.

KOLB, PAULUS, a Nuremberg painter, is mentioned in Neudörffer's 'Nachrichten' as being "skilful in oil-colours." He died, according to Campe, in 1650.

KOLBE, KARL WILHELM, the elder, an engraver and designer, was born at Berlin in 1757, but did not devote himself to art till 1793, when his relative Chodowiecki persuaded him to that course. He then entered the Academy of Berlin, and made such progress under Miel's tuition, that two years later he was admitted to membership. He then removed to Dessau, where he gave instruction in drawing at the high school. He took up etching about this period, following Waterloo and Gessner as models; and between 1806 and 1811 he brought out at Zurich 25 plates from the water-colour drawings of the latter. His original works were principally landscapes and idyllic compositions. He was also distinguished as a linguist. He died at Dresden in 1835.

KOLBE, KARL WILHELM, the younger, was born at Berlin in 1781. His father was an embroiderer in gold, and the son attended the Berlin Academy and studied under Chodowiecki, who was a relative of the family, from the antique, the living model, and engravings of the works of the best masters. In 1796 he won the first prize with a chalk drawing of 'Froben's Death at the Battle of Fehrbellin.' In oil-painting he formed his style after the Dutch masters. He became a member of the Berlin Academy in 1815, and in 1830 a professor, and member of the senate. In 1853 he obtained the gold medal, and died at Berlin in the course of the same year. His historical works were regarded more as theatrical illustrations than great paintings, though for what they were they were highly esteemed. He designed the cartoons of 'The Struggles and Triumphs of the German Orders' for the windows of the castle of Marienburg. The following are some of his principal paintings, the five first of which are in the Berlin National Gallery:

German Street in the Middle Ages. 1824.
Knights of German Orders visiting the Sick in Jerusalem. 1824.
Entry of German Orders into Marienburg Castle.
The Emperor Charles V. fleeing from the Saxons.
Death of Barbarossa in the Battle of Antioch.
Albrecht Achilles seizing a Banner.
Battle of Otto the Great with the Hungarians.
Doge and Dogaresse.
Last Moments of Duke Wratisslaw of Pomerania.
The Battle of Fehrbellin.
The Ascension of Christ. (Palace Chapel, Potsdam.)
Frescoes in the Marble Palace at Potsdam, depicting the principal Scenes in the 'Nibelungen-Lied.'

KÖLBL, ANTON, an amateur etcher, was born at Vienna in 1771, and died there in 1832. His landscapes and woodland scenes have been sold for large sums.

KÖLLA, HEINRICH, a painter and designer, was born at Stäfa in 1757, and instructed first by his uncle Johann Kölla and then by J. C. Füssli. In 1784 he proceeded to Rome, but three years later he was compelled by ill-health to return, and in 1789 he died. All his known original works consist of portraits, though he executed some pleasing copies. The following are by him:

J. C. Füssli.
Head of the Emperor Otto.
Heads of SS. Nilus and Augustine.
Head of St. John the Evangelist; in water-colours, after Domenichino.

KÖLLA, JOHANN, was born at Stäfa in 1740, and died in 1778. He was instructed in drawing by J. C. Füssli, and devoted himself especially to the painting of night pieces.

KOLLMANN, IGNAZ, was born in 1775 at Gratz, where he studied and became commissioner for different governors of provinces. He then went, as secretary to the Princess Seraphin Porcia, to Italy, then he acted as secretary to the magistrates at Trieste, and in 1811 was appointed Reader to the Library at Gratz. He then edited the Gratz daily newspaper. He took to painting rather as an amateur, and painted altar-pieces for the churches in Gratz. He died at Gratz in 1837.

KÖLMAN, JAN HENDRIK, a Dutch painter, was born at the Hague in 1820. He was a pupil of C. Krusemann, and painted historical and still-life subjects. He died in 1857.

KÖLN, HANS VON, was a painter and sculptor, who in 1307 settled at Chemnitz, and decorated the high altar there, as well as that at Ehrenfriedersdorf, with magnificent paintings. He appears to be identical with the sculptor who about 1250 worked at Salzwedel and Nuremberg.

KÖLN, JOHANN VON, (Master JOHN OF COLOGNE, or OF ZWOLLE,) was a German painter, engraver, and goldsmith, who about 1440 entered the house of the 'Brotherhood of Common Lot' at Agnetenberg near Zwolle. The word 'Zwott' is, however, marked frequently opposite to his monogram, and is understood to have no reference to the place of his residence. He has also been called 'The Master of the Shuttle' ('Le Maître à la Navette'), an instrument resembling that article being also a portion of his monogram, which contains the letters I. M., perhaps as dating from Meckenen, as it has been supposed that Israel van Meckenen was his master. There exists a fine drawing by him of 'The Adoration of the Kings,' and a painting after it is in the Berlin Gallery. Among others are the following prints by him, described in the 'Peintre-Graveur' of Bartsch and of Passavant:

The Adoration of the Kings.
The Last Supper.
Christ on the Mount of Olives.
Christ taken in the Garden.
Christ crucified between two Thieves.
The same subject differently treated.
The Entombment of Christ.
The Saviour standing, holding an open book in one hand, and giving benediction with the other.
The Virgin with the Infant holding a Cross.
The Virgin with the Infant, who is turning the leaves of a Book.
St. Augustine seated between Statues of SS. Jerome and Lawrence.
St. Christopher on horseback bearing the Saviour on his shoulders.
St. George encountering the Dragon.
St. Gregory celebrating Mass.
St. Anne with the Virgin, Infant, and figures of Angels.
A Youth in conversation with an aged Pilgrim.
A Skeleton in a vaulted Tomb.
A design of Gothic Architecture, resembling the upper part of an Altar, with statues and coats of arms.

KÖLN, Meister STEPHAN VON. See LOCHNER.

KÖLN, Meister WILHELM VON, the earliest celebrated painter of the Cologne school, was born at Herle, near Cologne; hence he is sometimes called Wilhelmus de Herle. He bought a house and settled in Cologne in 1358, and resided there till 1372; and his death occurred there in 1378, his name appearing at intervals in the town records. He was the instructor of Stephan Lochner. He executed wall paintings and tempera pictures on panel; one of his best works is the St. Clara altar-piece, representing scenes from the life of Christ, in the Johanniskapelle in the cathedral of Cologne. In the public galleries there are various works ascribed to him, but the following are believed to be authentic:

Cologne.	Museum.	Madonna and Child.
"	"	Christ on the Cross.
"	Town-hall.	Portraits.
London.	National Gallery.	The Sancta Veronica.

KOMIERSKI, XAVER, a Polish portrait painter, who died at Warsaw in 1867, was a member of the St. Petersburg Academy, and at one time director of the Warsaw school of art.

KONEWKA, PAUL, a German draughtsman, was born at Greifswalde in 1841. He first entered the atelier of the architect Drake and then studied painting under Menzel. He especially excelled in silhouettes. His principal works were his illustrations of 'Faust' and the 'Midsummer Night's Dream.' He died at Berlin in 1871.

KÖNIG, ANTON BALTHASAR, a Prussian engraver, was born at Berlin about the year 1676, and died there in 1773. He engraved several portraits and other subjects, among which are the following:

Frederick the Great, King of Prussia; after Weidemann.
Friedrich, Baron von Derfflinger, General of Cavalry.
Alexander Hermann, Count of Wartensleben. 1716.
Carl Gottfried Schrader, Aulic-Counsellor to the King.
The Monument of Carl Gottfried Schrader.

KÖNIG, ANTON FRIEDRICH, the elder, a painter, designer, and engraver, was born at Berlin in 1722. He was the son of Anton Balthasar König, and after following him in the last two of the above departments of art, and drawing from life in the Academy, he turned to miniature painting, in which he was instructed by O. A. Blesendorf and A. Pesne. In 1767 the King of Prussia appointed him court painter of miniature portraits. He died in 1787. Among his best works are the portrait of Frederick the Great, and those of the hereditary Stadtholder of the United Provinces and his consort.

KÖNIG, ANTON FRIEDRICH, the younger, an engraver, but more especially a medallist, was the son of Anton Friedrich König the elder, and was born at Berlin in 1756. He was a pupil of Loos, and he removed to Breslau in 1776, and appears to have remained there, but the date of his death is not mentioned. He engraved a few portraits.

KÖNIG, FRANZ NIKOLAUS, a painter and etcher on copper, was born at Berne in 1765, and studied under Freudenberger. From 1798 to 1809 he lived in the neighbourhood of Interlaken, which he has commemorated in his 'Recollections of Interlaken and Untersee.' He died in 1832. One of his best paintings is 'The Staubbach in the Valley of Lauterbrunnen.' He also produced transparent pictures and several plates in etching and aquatint.

KÖNIG, GUSTAV, called 'Luther König,' was born at Coburg in 1808. In 1824 he entered Schmidt's porcelain painting establishment, where he designed from the antique under F. Müller, and received instruction in anatomy, perspective, and the laws of light and shade. Upon a journey to South Germany he made the acquaintance of Ludwig Uhland, and this led to his painting subjects from Uhland's poems, which the Duke of Coburg purchased. In 1830-2 he was at the Nuremberg school of art, and painted portraits. In 1833 he entered the Munich Academy, and studied under Julius Schnorr. Here he painted for the Duke of Coburg seven pictures from Saxon history, and this led to his designing forty-eight Reformation pictures, and twenty-nine initial letters to Luther's 'Spiritual Songs,' for King Frederick William IV. of Prussia. He also executed a large drawing of 'Boniface preaching Christianity to the Germans.' In 1864 he brought out a child's primer called 'The Golden ABC'; and then forty-eight plates on the Psalms. He died at Erlangen in 1869. Among his oil paintings were the following: —

The Elector Johann Friedrich playing Chess. (Painted for the King of the Belgians.)
Nathan and David. 1861.
Luther and Zwingli at Marburg. 1862.
Twelve Scenes from the Life of David. (Painted for King Frederick William IV.)

KÖNIG, HERIBERT, painter and caricaturist, was born at Dresden in 1820, and pursued his studies in various places. From 1848 he worked at Munich for the 'Fliegende Blätter' and the 'Hauschronik'; after 1852 at Leipzig for the 'Gartenlaube' and the 'Illustrirte Zeitung'; and later still for the 'Kladderadatsch' at Berlin. In 1861 he published his 'Dresdener Humoresken.' He died at Niederlössnitz, near Dresden, in 1876. Queen Olga of Würtemberg has thirty-six water-colour drawings by him, entitled 'Types of the Years of War, 1866 and 1870.'

KÖNIG, JOHANN, was a painter of Augsburg about 1600, who executed for the town-hall of that city a 'Last Judgment' and 'Story of Ananias and Sapphira.' The University Library of Upsala contains an agate upon which he has painted the former of these subjects, together with 'The Passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea.' There is also an 'Entombment of Christ' by him, painted upon black marble.

KÖNIG, NICOLAUS, a German marine painter, the son of Johann König, flourished at Nuremberg about the year 1600. In the Dresden Gallery is a signed picture of 'A rough Sea.'

KONINCK, DE. See DE KONINCK.

KONINCK, SALOMON, a Dutch painter and etcher, was born at Amsterdam in 1609. He learned drawing under David Colyn, and painting under Francisco Fernando and Claas Moeyaert. In 1630 he entered the school of his native city and followed the style of Rembrandt. He chiefly excelled in portrait, genre, and historical painting. He was still working in 1663, but the date of his death is uncertain; it was not later than 1668. His principal pictures are:

Berlin.	Gallery.	Portrait of a Rabbi. (A copy of a picture by Rembrandt at Chatsworth.)
"	"	The Call of St. Matthew
"	"	Crossus showing his treasures to Solon.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	An old Philosopher.

Petersburg.	Hermitage .	The Parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard.
"	"	Head of old Man.
"	"	The Wise Man.
Rotterdam.	Gallery.	The Gold Weigher.

He executed also some good engravings in the style of Rembrandt, as:

The Portrait of an old Man, in profile.

The Pen-cutter.

KONING, CORNELIS, a Dutch engraver, was born at Haarlem about 1624. He became burgomaster of his native city, where he engraved the portraits of the celebrated men of his day, and many likenesses of the princes of Friesland after Andriessen. He died in 1671.

KONING, DE. See DE KONINCK.

KONING, JAKOB, a Dutch painter, born at Amsterdam about 1650, was a scholar of Adriaan van de Velde. He painted landscapes, with figures and cattle, in the style of his master, and also historical subjects of a small size. They are extremely rare. He went in 1680 to Denmark, and was living at Copenhagen in 1708.

KONING, WILLEM, a very indifferent engraver, and a printseller, resided at Amsterdam. He engraved a set of sixteen prints, representing the building, use, and destruction of ships.

KONINGH, LEENDERT DE. See DE KONINGH.

KONINGSVELD, J. VAN, a Dutch portrait painter of Amsterdam. He was a pupil of the Academy, and afterwards studied under Kruseman, but subsequently abandoned painting for photography. He died at the Hague in 1866.

KONITSCH, THADDÄUS, (or KUNTZE,) a painter of Cracow in the 18th century, studied under Carlo Maratti at Rome in 1754, and then became court painter of Archbishop Zaluski, for whom he executed numerous altar-pieces. In 1758 he removed to Rome, where also he painted for churches, and helped to decorate the Vatican and Castel Gandolfo with wall paintings. He was afterwards invited to Spain, where he died. It has been conjectured that he was the father of Pedro Kunz.

KOOGH, VAN DER. See VAN DER KOOGEN.

KOOGH, ADRIANUS VAN DER. See VAN DER KOOGH.

KOOI, VAN DER. See VAN DER KOOI.

KOOL, LAURENS VAN, was a Dutch portrait and historical painter, who was also a glass painter. He died at Delft in 1530.

KOOL, WILLEM GILLIS, (COOL,) a Dutch marine and landscape painter, was a native of Haarlem. In 1656 he was Dean of the Corporation. He died in 1666.

KOORNHAERT, DIRK. See CUERENHERT.

KOOTWYCK, JURIAAN, (or COOTWYCK,) a goldsmith and engraver, was born at Amsterdam in 1714, and is known to have been living as a member of the Academy there up to 1768. He engraved several plates, in imitation of the drawings of the Dutch masters, in aquatint and the crayon manner, as well as subjects from his own designs. Among others, the following are by him:

SUBJECTS AFTER VARIOUS MASTERS.

A Man in an Arm-chair; after Rembrandt.

Venus and Cupid; after Vinkles.

A Sea-piece; after Bakhuizen.

A Herdsman playing the Flute; after Berchem.

Three Landscapes, with cattle; after P. van Bloemen.

SUBJECTS SUPPOSED TO BE FROM HIS OWN DESIGNS.

A Shepherd playing on the Flute to a Shepherdess.

An old Woman sitting, holding a Paper.

A Man holding his Hat on his Knee.

Three Landscapes.

An Ox and a Cow.

An Ass with Panniers.

KOPECKY, JOHANN. See KUPECZKY.

KOPISCH, AUGUST, a German landscape painter, was born at Breslau in 1799. He was educated at the Academy of Prague after 1815, and went from thence to Vienna, but returned in 1819 to Breslau, and thereupon undertook a journey to Italy. From 1828 he lived either in Potsdam or Berlin, where he died in 1853. Kopisch is better known as a poet and author than as a painter. The Berlin National Gallery contains a picture by him of 'The Pontine Marshes by Sunset' (1848).

KÖPP, WOLFGANG, Edler von Felsenthal, a painter and mosaicist, was born at Eisenstadt in Hungary in 1738. He was first instructed by his father, Christian Köpp, a painter and architect, and then in Vienna under Meytens and Maulbertsch. In 1774 he became a member of the Academy there, in 1785 of that at Florence, and in 1787 of that at Berlin. In 1803 he received his title of nobility. He died in Vienna in 1807. He was the inventor of a style of mosaic which he called the Spartan, in which he carried out some works in St. Stephen's cathedral in Vienna.

KÖRLE, PANCRAZ, a Bavarian genre and portrait painter, was born at Munich in 1823. He commenced painting in his fifteenth year, and against his parents' wishes entered the Munich Academy. He afterwards became the pupil of the portrait painter Bernhard in Vienna, and obtained great reputation for his graphic likenesses. In 1848 he returned to his native city, and devoted his attention to genre painting, and after many difficulties at last attained success. His pictures of the costumes of the period of Louis XV. attracted notice, as did his representations of scenes from high life, and magnificent interiors with figures. He succeeded particularly with his female figures, as instanced in his 'Broken Vase,' 'The Angry Lovers,' 'The Captive,' 'The Serving Girl,' 'A Slight Mishap,' 'Cavalier and Barmaid,' &c. He died at Munich in 1875.

KÖRNE, ANTON. See KERN.

KÖSTER, CHRISTIAN, a landscape painter and restorer, was born in Rhenish Bavaria in 1786. He first studied in Munich, especially from the works of Claude Lorrain, and then from nature at Mannheim. He after this became associated with the Boissérées at Heidelberg, and it is chiefly owing to him and his brother-in-law Jakob Schlesinger that the collection of these patrons of art passed into the Munich Gallery in so admirable a condition. Köster's landscapes are much esteemed for their appreciation of nature. He died at Heidelberg in 1851.

KOSTER, SIMON DE, a Dutch painter, was born at Middelburg in 1767. He studied for some time at the Academy, and afterwards became a pupil of Thomas Gaal. He came in 1788 to London, where he died in 1831. He painted chiefly portraits and ornaments.

KOTDYCK, J., was a Dutch painter, who worked in 1650, and by whom there is a picture of a 'Bon Vivant' in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg.

KOTSCH, THEODOR, a German landscape painter, was born at Hanover in 1818, where he practised drawing from the antique. In 1839 he went to Munich, and afterwards to Carlsruhe, where he studied under Schirmer. He died at Munich in 1884. Most of his pictures are in private collections in North Germany.

KOTTERBA, KARL, an engraver, was born in Teschen in 1800, and studied under Langer in Vienna, where he died in 1859. He engraved the portraits of A. Grün, Grillparzer, Halm, Lenau, and others, as well as numerous subjects, including:

The Virgin with Jesus and John; after Raphael.

Madonna; after Palma Vecchio.

Hermann and Thuselda; after Angelica Kaufmann.

KOUDELKA, PAULINE VON. See SCHMERLING.

KOUWENBERG, CHRISTIAAN VAN, a Dutch painter, was born at Delft in 1604, and was instructed in the rudiments of the art by Jan van Nes. He afterwards went to Italy, where he studied several years. On his return to Holland, he was employed by the Prince of Orange in several considerable works in the chateau of Ryswick, and the Palace in the Wood. He afterwards settled at Cologne, where he died in 1667. He had a son, ÆGIDIUS, who worked till 1691.

KOUWENBERG, WILLEM VAN, a Dutch landscape painter, was born in 1647. He resided in Paris, where he was called "Froide Montagne," and was received into the Academy in 1676. He died in Paris in 1685.

KOUWENHOVEN, JAKOB, a painter of landscapes and cattle, was born at Rotterdam in 1777, and was a pupil of Ommeganck, at Antwerp. Many of his pictures are to be found in English collections. He died at Rotterdam in 1825.

KOVATSCHE, JOSEPH, an engraver, was born at Vienna in 1799, and died after 1843. He was first instructed by the elder Stöber, and then at the Vienna Academy. Among his best works are:

St. John; after Guercino.
St. Peter; after Raphael Mengs.
Interior of a Peasant's Cottage; after Teniers.
The Belvedere Gallery; after Perger.

KRAAY, DIRK, a Dutch historical and portrait painter, who flourished at Amsterdam, was one of the forty-seven artists who founded in 1656 "The Society" at the Hague. In 1648 he was received into the Corporation. He died in 1666.

KRABBETJE. See ASSELIJN.

KRACKER, JOHANN, a German engraver, was born at Nuremberg in 1823. He was presented with a gold medal by Queen Victoria in 1873. He died near Munich in 1879. His best plates are:

Madonna at the Well; after Meyer.
Banquet of Wallenstein's Generals; after Julius Scholz.

KRAFFT, ANNA BARBARA, the daughter and pupil of Johann N. Steiner, was born at Iglau in 1764. She married an apothecary named Krafft, and lived in Prague, Salzburg, and Bamberg, in the last of which places she died in 1825. She painted portraits, and historical and genre pieces, and was a member of the Vienna Academy. Her works include:

Altar-piece in the church of Owenecz, near Prague.
Bishop Gotthard.
Joseph II.
Leopold II.
Francis II.

KRAFFT, DAVID, a Swedish artist, born in 1655, painted the portrait of Charles XII. at the command of his sister, afterwards Queen Ulrica Eleonora; but this monarch, who objected to being portrayed, was so displeased at the accuracy of the picture that he cut out the head. It had, however, already been transferred to copper, and also etched by several engravers. He died in 1724.

KRAFFT, JOHAN AUGUST, a genre painter, also a designer and etcher, was born at Altona of poor parents in 1798. He was sick and weakly in childhood, and was apparently dying when Gall the phrenologist, who was called in to see him, predicted great things of him, and to the efforts made upon this announcement, his recovery was doubtless owing. He is stated to have received his instruction first at Hamburg, then at the Copenhagen Academy, and at Dresden under Hartmann, and afterwards at Munich, and next at Vienna. He travelled in Hungary and studied the Slav race, and in 1826 proceeded to Rome and devoted himself to observing the popular life of that city. His health, however, failed whilst there, and he died in 1829. He was very successful in depicting the ways of children, but his health prevented his undertaking any large works. The following are among his best pictures:

Representations of German Home and Popular Life.
The Laughing Choir in the 'Huntsman's Bride.'
Guests in a Coffee-house.
The Bagpiper.
The Old Beggar. (Copenhagen Gallery.)
The Roman Carnival. 1828. (Thorvaldsen Museum.)
Afterwards etched by himself.

KRAFFT, JOHANN PETER, a portrait, genre, and historical painter, was born at Hanau in 1780. He studied in the Hanau School of Design, and then went to Vienna, and in 1802 to Paris, where he studied under David. Some years later he returned to Vienna, and was in 1823 made 'corrector' of the Academy, and in 1828 director of the Belvedere. The renovation of the frescoes of Andrea Pozzo in the University Chapel in Vienna was executed under his supervision. He died at Vienna in 1856. He painted some 2000 portraits. His principal works are:

The Militiaman's Farewell. 1813. (Vienna Gallery.)
The Militiaman's Return. 1820. (The same.) Archduke Karl in the Battle of Aspern. } (Prince
The Meeting of the Allies after Leipsic. } Kinsky.)
Belisarius as a Beggar.
Ossian and Malwina. (Liechtenstein Gallery.)
Dorothea at the Fountain.
Manfred, from Byron.
Faust (in water-colours). (Emperor of Austria.)
The Emperor Francis on horseback (in water-colours).

KRAFFT, JOSEF, a portrait painter, the brother of Johann Peter Krafft, was born at Hanau in 1787. In 1801 he settled at Vienna, where he died in 1828. He painted in oils and in miniature upon ivory. Amongst his portraits are:

The Prince-Bishop of Vienna.
Sigmund, Count of Hohenwarth.
The Emperor Francis.
The Empress.

KRAFFT, PER, a painter of Stockholm, was born in 1777, and died in 1863. He produced in 1828 a series of pictures depicting the Coronation of the King in 1818, with portraits of the distinguished personages present.

KRAFT, FREDERIK CARL JULIUS, was a Danish painter, who was born at Copenhagen in 1823, and died there in 1854, by whom there is a 'Hunting Scene' in the Gallery at Copenhagen.

KRAFT, JAN LODEWYK, a Flemish engraver, was born at Brussels about 1700 or 1710. He etched several plates after Rubens and other masters, and published in 1733, 'Trésor des Fables choisies des plus excellents Mythologues,' with 150 plates. He also engraved the portraits to the 'Histoire générale de la Maison d'Autriche' (Brussels, 1744). The following are among his etchings:

Job tempted by his Wife; after Rubens.
Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter; after the same.
Christ and Nicodemus; after the same.
Jupiter and Danaë after a drawing by Rubens from Titian.
Venus and Cupid; after the same from Giorgione.
St. Martin; after Van Dyck.
The Village Goatherd; after Teniers.

KRAFT, TYMAN ARENDTSZ, an historical painter of Wormer, who flourished in the 17th century. He was eight years at Rome in the service of the Pope, but on returning to his own country, he settled at the Hague, where he died. In 1631 he was received into the Corporation of St. Luke.

KRAHE, JOHANN LAMBERT, a German painter and engraver, was born at Düsseldorf in 1712. He visited Italy in the suite of Count Plettenberg, but on the sudden death of his patron in that country he was glad to earn his maintenance by painting ecclesiastical pictures for a Jesuit. By studying Raphael, the Carracci, and others in his leisure hours, he contrived to make substantial progress, and acquired so much reputation that he became professor in the Academy of St. Luke at Rome, and also in that at Florence. Upon the recommendation of Cardinal Valentin, the Elector Palatine appointed him in 1755 director of the Academy of Düsseldorf, which he had first to assist in founding; later on he obtained the post of director of the Düsseldorf dorf Gallery. He died in 1790. His works comprise :

The Frieze of the Electoral Library at Mannheim.
The Virgin sleeping. (Mannheim Gallery.)
Four Friezes in the Benrath Castle, Düsseldorf.
A Holy Family; in the style of Rembrandt.
The Rape of the Sabine Women.
His own Portrait.

KRAHE, PETER JOSEPH, a painter and architect, was born at Mannheim in 1758, and became in 1780 a teacher, chiefly of perspective, at the Academy of Düsseldorf. From 1785 he was principally occupied in architecture. He died in 1840.

KRAMER, FRANZ, an Austrian historical and genre painter, was born in 1797, and died at Vienna in 1834. The Imperial Gallery of Vienna has one picture by this spirited artist, viz.: 'German Chamois-hunters in the olden time.'

KRAMM, CHRISTIAAN, a Dutch painter and architect, was born at Utrecht in 1797, and commenced painting in his eighteenth year as a pupil of P. C. Wonder. He began with portraits and genre pictures, but afterwards chose historical subjects with architecture, and this led to his eventually adopting the latter as a profession. He published a 'Practical Perspective' from the French, and also in 1857-64 a work in Dutch on the 'Lives and Works of the Dutch and Flemish Painters, Sculptors, Engravers, and Architects,' which is a very valuable and trustworthy book. He died in 1875.

KRAMOLIN, JOSEPH, was born at Nimburg in Bohemia in 1730, and became in 1758 a Jesuit lay brother, and made himself known in his Order by the decoration of numerous edifices. He died at Carlsbad in 1800. His younger brother, WENZEL KRAMOLIN, practised the same art continuously at Nimburg, and died there in 1799.

KRANACH, LUCAS. See CRANACH.

KRANTZ, MARTIN NICOLAS, a French painter of landscapes and still-life subjects, was born at Nancy in 1774. He studied without a master, and settled at Epinal, where he became a professor at the college.

KRANZBERGER, JOSEPH, an historical painter, was born at Ratisbon in 1814. He went to Munich, where he attracted the attention of Cornelius. He painted an altar-piece for the cathedral at Ratisbon, and one for the chapel at the Mount of Olives, representing 'The Burial of Christ.' In 1840 he went with several others to Athens, where he painted several frescoes in the king's palace. He died in 1844.

KRATZ, BENJAMIN, a German genre painter, was born in Brunswick in 1829, and at an early age entered the Düsseldorf Academy under Christian Böttcher. He afterwards went to Berlin, but while there he lost his reason, and had to be placed in the asylum at Neustadt Eberswald, where he died in 1869. He produced a series of pictures termed 'Scenes from the Periwig Period'; but he was best known as an actor, especially in female parts.

KRATZENSTEIN-STUB, CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, a Danish painter and designer, born at Copenhagen in 1783, was the son of a Danish naval officer of the name of Stub, that of Kratzenstein being derived from his grandfather, a well-known chemist and natural philosopher of his day. He for a short time attended the painting school of Abildgaard, and after that was almost wholly self-instructed. In 1808 he went to Paris and thence to Rome, where he came under the influence of Thorvaldsen. In 1811 he returned home, and two years afterwards was received into the Academy. He died at Kallundborg in 1816, and his pencil drawings were engraved and published in the following year. His subjects were somewhat sentimental or idyllic, though he also tried portraiture. Among his best paintings were :

Hother in the Grotto of Walkyria.
Psyche awakening Cupid.
Orpheus and Eurydice.
Hecyone looking across the Sea.
The Son of Ossian and Alpin.

KRAUS, FRANZ. See KRAUSS.

KRAUS, GEORG MELCHIOR JOHANN, a German painter and engraver, was born at Frankfort in 1737. He was a pupil of J. H. Tischbein at Cassel, and afterwards went to Paris, where he became a scholar of J. B. Greuze and of Boucher. In 1768 he was admitted a member of the Vienna Academy, and afterwards of that of Berlin. In 1776 he came to the court of the Duke of Weimar, and two years later became director of the Academy at Weimar, where he died in 1806. He painted landscapes, portraits, and conversation pieces in oil and water-colours, including the portrait of Goethe, scenes from Wieland's 'Oberon,' and illustrations of Swiss cottage life. He etched several landscapes from his own designs, chiefly views in the vicinity of Weimar, which are neatly executed. The following, among others, are by him :

A set of six Landscapes, Views near Weimar.
A set of six Views of Châteaux in the Duchy of Weimar.
The Ducal Hunting Palace of Wilhelmsthal, near Eisenach.

KRAUS, JOHANN ULRICH, a designer and engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1645, and died in the same city in 1719. He was a pupil and son-in-law of Melchior Küsel, and imitated the manner of Sebastien Le Clerc, copied several of the prints of Albrecht Dürer and Lucas van Leyden, and engraved landscapes and perspective views, and many biblical subjects for the booksellers. The following are some of his plates :

The History of the Old and New Testament, in quarto
188 subjects, four in each plate.
The Life of Christ, in thirty plates, two compositions on each plate; published at Augsburg in 1705.
A set of six pleasing Views of Gardens.
A set of six Landscapes.
Thirteen Views in Nuremberg; after the designs of J. A. Graff.
A View of St. Peter's at Rome; after the same; fine.

KRAUS, JOHANNA SIBYLLA. See KÜSEL.

KRAUSE, FRANZ, the elder, a painter of Frankenstein in Silesia, who died in 1803, was one of the superior artists of the 18th century. Two of the best of his works were 'The Magdalene' and 'Potiphar's Wife.'

KRAUSE, FRANZ, the younger, nephew and pupil of the elder painter of the name, was born at Frankenstein in 1773, and further instructed by Füger and Maurer at Vienna. He settled at Breslau, but the date of his death is not known. He has left historical pictures and portraits in oil, also copies from Raphael.

KRAUSE, FRANZ, a German landscape painter, was born in 1823, and died at Munich in 1878. His large Italian landscapes are very effective. Two of his most admired works are :

Castle at Ostia. 1869.
On the Isle of Friendship in Potsdam. 1873.

KRAUSE, FRANZ. See also KRAUSS.

KRAUSE, WILHELM AUGUST LEOPOLD CHRISTIAN, a German marine painter, was born at Dessau in 1803. He was without means, but Desmariées, the director in Dessau, allowed him to attend the drawing lessons, and Karl Wilhelm Kolbe (called 'Eichenkolbe') offered to continue his education at his own expense. He went to Dresden in 1821, and in 1824 to Berlin, where he obtained work from Gropius, and maintained himself by his voice, which procured for him an engagement at the Theatre. In 1827 he obtained Ahlborn's place, and in 1828 he attempted his first marine picture, without ever having seen the sea. In 1830 and 1831 he visited Rügen and Norway, and later on the Mediterranean, through the assistance of the King and Von Altenstein, his minister. He became a member of the Academy in 1832, and it was he who founded the Berlin Marine School of Art. He died at Berlin in 1864. Among his best paintings are :

View on the Pomeranian Coast. 1828. (Berlin National Gallery.)

A Storm at Sea. 1831. (The same.)

Mouth of the Seine.

View of Arcona.

The Fisherman's Return.

KRAUSS, FRANZ, (or KRAUS, or KRAUSE,) was born at Söflingen, near Ulm, about 1705. He at first painted rooms for a subsistence at Augsburg, but by the help of a patron he went at an early period to Venice, where he studied some time under Giovanni Battista Piazzetta. On leaving that master he visited Paris, where he met with so little success, that he was under the necessity of quitting that capital, and perambulating the provinces in the south of France in search of employment, and was at length obliged to take portraits in crayons for subsistence. He passed through Langres and Dijon, and in the latter town executed his masterpiece, 'Mary Magdalene at the Table of Simon the Pharisee.' In Lyons he was engaged to paint some pictures for the church of La Sainte Croix, and a series of works for that of Notre-Dame, which occupied him for the remainder of his life. He died in 1755.

KRAUSS, SIMON ANDREAS, was born at the Hague in 1760, and was a pupil of Léonard Defrance, but formed his style from Ruissdael, and from nature. He painted landscapes with groups of figures and animals, as well as domestic scenes and candle-light effects. He died at the Hague in 1825. 'The Mill,' one of his paintings, ascribed to Ruissdael, is in the collection of Mr. J. W. Wilson.

KRAY, JOHANN MICHAEL, a German landscape painter, was born at Biberach, and flourished at the beginning of the present century in Augsburg.

KRAYER, GASPARD DE. See DE CRAEYER.

KREINS, HILAIRE ANTOINE, was a Flemish landscape painter and designer, who was born at Luxemburg in 1806, and died in 1862.

KREITMAYER, KATHARINE, a painter of the 18th century, was a nun in a monastery at Altmünster, near Aichach. She painted a great number of miniatures, one of which was sent every New Year's Day to the Pope. Her monastery still possesses many of her works.

KRELING, AUGUST VON, a German painter and sculptor, was born at Osnabrück in 1819. He at first devoted himself mainly to sculpture and modelling, but afterwards studied under Cornelius, and took exclusively to painting. In 1853 he became director of the school of art at Nuremberg, and in 1858 an honorary member of the Munich Academy. He died at Munich in 1876. He designed the cartoons for the pictures of German Emperors for the Nuremberg fortress, and a cycle of compositions in illustration of 'Faust.' His works as a painter comprise :

Nine ceiling pieces in the Theatre at Hanover.

Scenes from the History of Charlemagne. (Altona.)

The Coronation of King Louis of Bavaria. (Mari-milaneum, Munich.)

KRETSCHMER, ROBERT, an animal painter and designer, was born at Burghof, near Schweidnitz, in 1818. He studied first under Koska in Breslau, then in the Berlin Academy, and in Kolbe's studio. He was largely employed upon book illustrations, which he contributed to Brehm's 'Life of Animals,' Settegart's 'Zoology,' and many journals, including the 'Illustrierte Zeitung' of Leipsic. His water-colours, however, are so excellent, that it is to be regretted that he devoted his time to this class of work. He was a naturalist as well as an animal painter, and in 1862 he accompanied Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha to Egypt and Abyssinia. He died at Leipsic in 1872.

KRETZSCHMAR, EDUARD, a German wood-engraver, was born at Leipsic in 1806, and studied under Friedrich Unzelmann at Berlin. He died at Leipsic in 1858. In addition to his work for the Leipsic 'Illustrierte Zeitung,' from 1846, his principal cuts were the following :

Menzel's Illustrations of the History of Frederick the Great, 1539-42.

Twelve Portraits from King Frederick's Time; after A. Menzel.

Illustrations to the Tales of Musäus, the Nibelungen Lied, and Washington Irving; after Ritter and Camp-hausen.

Illustrations to Tschudi's Animal Life of the Alps; after Georgy.

Illustrations to the Four Seasons; after Rossmäslar.

Death of Gustavus Adolphus; after J. Kirchhoff.

German Forest Pond; after W. Schirmer.

KRETZSCHMAR, JOHANN KARL HEINRICH, (or KRETSCHMER,) a German historical and portrait painter, was born at Brunswick in 1769. He studied originally under Weitsch, and went in 1789 to Berlin, where he obtained the prize in 1800 for a scene taken from the battle of Fehrbellin, and thereupon travelled in France and Italy. In 1805 he returned to Berlin, where in 1806 he was elected a member of the Academy, and in 1817 professor of historical painting. He died at Berlin in 1847. The Berlin National Gallery has two paintings by him—a 'Portrait of Wach, the painter, when a boy,' and 'The Woman of Samaria.'

KREUL, JOHANN LORENZ, was born at Erlbach in Bavaria in 1765, and studied in Nuremberg under Zwinger. He died in 1840. He was most successful in portraiture, but he also executed a number of historical paintings, including a good copy of 'The Penitent Magdalene' of Correggio. His portrait of Jean Paul has been lithographed by Winterhalter.

KREUTZER, FELIX, a German landscape painter, was born in 1835, at Düsseldorf, where he studied and died in 1876. He excelled in wood and forest scenery, and moonlight effects.

KREUTZINGER, JOSEPH, a German painter and engraver, was born in 1750, probably at Vienna, where he died in 1829. He was imperial chamber painter, and painted the portraits of Maria Theresa, the Archduke Charles, the Emperor Francis I. (which he also engraved), and Ferdinand VII. of Spain. He also painted miniatures.

KREVEL, JOHANN WUNIBALD, was born at Bonn in 1776, and studied under Maurer. From 1808 he lived alternately at Bonn and Cologne, at which latter city he died in 1846. Among others he painted the portrait of the Archbishop of Cologne.

KRIEGER, CARL FRIEDRICH, was an obscure German engraver, who resided at Nuremberg, where he engraved some of the heads for a book containing the portraits of learned men, entitled 'Icones Virorum omnium ordinum.'

KRIEGER, FRIEDRICH CHRISTIAN, (or KRÜGER,) was born at Zeucha, near Forsta, in Lower Lusatia, in 1774. He was brought up to cutlery, but in 1800 he went to Dresden and became a portrait painter, working first in pastel and afterwards in oil. He changed his place of residence many times, and was at last professor of painting at Dresden, where he died in 1832.

KRIEHLER, JOSEPH, a painter, designer, and lithographer, was born at Vienna in 1800. He was a student in the Vienna Academy, where he obtained several prizes whilst quite a youth. On leaving in 1818 he went to Slavuta in Galicia with Prince Sangusko, as drawing-master, and remained there three years, after which he returned to the Academy till 1825. He devoted himself to the drawing of animals and battles, but afterwards to portraiture in pencil, lithography, water-colours, and miniature, and the truth and expressiveness of these made him a favourite in Vienna. Over 7000 are attributed to him—4000 lithographs, 2000 water-colours, 1000 in pencil and miniatures. His landscapes in oil, water-colours, and lithography were also successful. He was court painter, and professor of the Academy, but his unfortunate circumstances drove him to solitude and to a distaste for his profession. In 1871 he exhibited a selection of 300 of his productions. Among his lithographs from classical paintings were 'The Madonna in green,' after Raphael; 'St. Justina,' after Moreto; and 'St. Ursula,' after Palma Vecchio. He died at Vienna in 1877. There is a view on the Danube by him in the Vienna Gallery. His son, FRITZ KRIEHLER, who was also a successful portrait painter, was born in 1836, and died at Vienna in 1871.

KRIGAR, HEINRICH, a German genre painter, was born at Berlin in 1806. He studied at the Berlin Academy, and in 1827 entered the atelier of W. Waack, where he remained till 1836; he then went to Belgium, Holland, and France, and entered the studio of Delaroche in Paris, but his health compelled him to return in 1837 to Berlin, where he died in 1838. The Berlin National Gallery possesses his 'Georg and Lersé' (from Goethe's 'Goetz'), dated 1836; 'St. Cecilia,' 'An Astrologer,' and 'Aschenbrödel' are also among his best pictures.

KRIMMEL, JOHANN LUDWIG, was born at Ebingen in Württemberg in 1785, but removed to Philadelphia, where he became a member of the Academy of Fine Arts and president of the Society of American Artists. He was constantly in narrow circumstances, but a large painting of 'The Landing of William Penn' opened better prospects to him; these, however, he did not live to enjoy, as he was drowned while bathing at Philadelphia in 1821.

KRINS, EVERT, was born at the Hague in 1568, and studied under Karel van Mander, and afterwards at Rome. He painted historical subjects and portraits, and died in Holland in 1627.

KROCK, HEINRICH, (or KROGK,) was born at Flensburg in 1671, and was instructed first by a portrait painter at Husum, but after 1688 at Copenhagen. In 1693 he went with Count Gyldenlöwe to Italy, to which country he paid several subsequent visits, and where he studied after Maratti, Cignani, Sacchi, and Loth. He was also repeatedly in France. He died at Copenhagen in 1738. He decorated many Danish churches and other edifices and mansions, but a large number of his works have perished by fire. Among his best paintings are:

The Meeting of Jacob and Rachel. (Copenhagen Gallery.)

The Last Judgment. (Palma Chapel, Copenhagen.)

Portrait of Frederick IV.

Ulrik Christian Gyldenlöwe.

KROCKOW VON WICKERODE, OSCAR, Count, a German animal painter, was born at Thine in Pomerania in 1826. At the age of seventeen he entered the studio of Wilhelm Krause. In 1849 he went to Munich, in order to pursue his studies under Albert Zimmermann; during 1856-59 he lived in Paris; he then travelled in the Tyrol, Switzerland, Italy, and Russia, and in the last-named country he spent nine months in the forest of Bielowicz, studying the habits of the buffalo. At the close of these travels he settled in Berlin, where he died in 1871. As a passionate sportsman he loved to depict game, a talent which Zimmermann pointed out to him. A 'Boar Hunt' by him is in the Berlin National Gallery; others of his works are 'The Crag of the Lauteschthal, Tyrol,' 'Evening on the Banks of the Narewka,' 'Buffalo Hunt,' and 'A Buffalo Cow defending her Calf against Wolves.'

KRODEL, MATHIAS, a portrait painter of the 16th century, who died in 1605, was a pupil of his father, Martin Krodell, and of the elder Cranach. The Dresden Gallery contains a portrait by him, dated 1591. His father's brother, WOLFGANG KRODEL, painted from 1528 to 1561, and has left a work which is in the Darmstadt Gallery.

KROES, LEONHARD, a Dutch figure painter of the 16th century, is mentioned by Van Mander as a master of Gillis van Coninxloo.

KROGK, HEINRICH. See KROCK.

KROLIKOWSKI, JOSEPH AUGUSTE, Count, was a still-life and portrait painter, born at Przybyszewa in Posen in 1811. He settled in Belgium, where he died in 1879.

KRONENBERGH, STEVEN, was a Dutch painter of the 16th century, who resided at the Hague. He was a pupil of Frans Floris, and painted historical subjects.

KRUG, LUDWIG, (or KRÜGER,) lived at Nuremberg from 1450 to 1535. He followed the profession of a goldsmith and worker in steel and marble, but was also a painter and engraver. From the few prints which there are by him, and which are extremely rare, he appears to have imitated the style of Lucas van Leyden. He is sometimes called the 'Master of the Pitcher,' from his having usually marked his plates with an L. and a K., having between them a pitcher (which his name Krug implies).  The following prints are by him:

Woman bathing.

The Nativity. 1516.

The Adoration of the Magi. 1516.

The Virgin suckling the Infant Jesus.

An Ecce Homo, with the Instruments of the Scourging.

St. John the Evangelist writing, with the Virgin in the Clouds, and below, the Devil emptying his Inkhorn.

Two naked Women holding a Skull, with an Hour-glass upon it.
A naked Female seated, with her back towards the Spectator.

KRÜGER, ANDREAS LUDWIG, a painter and engraver, was born at Potsdam in 1743. He was a pupil of Bernhard Rode, and became a member of the Berlin Academy in 1788. He died in 1805. His works included 'Jacob blessing his Sons,' after J. Lievens, and 'Belshazzar's Feast,' after F. Bol.

KRÜGER, EPHRAIM GOTTLIEB, an engraver, was born at Dresden in 1756, and studied in the Academy there, and in the studio of Giuseppe Camerata. In 1803 he became a member of the Academy, and in 1815 a professor-extraordinary. He died at Dresden in 1834. His best works are:

Joseph presenting his Father to Pharaoh; after F. Bol.
The Bean King; after Jordaens.
Susanna; after Valentine.
Madonna and Child; after Gimignano.

KRÜGER, EUGEN, a landscape and animal painter, was born at Altona in 1832. A visit in youth to Jersey disposed him to become an artist, and he sought first a lithographer at his birthplace, but after two years left him and entered a lithographic establishment at Vienna, where he practised painting in his leisure hours. In 1852 he studied under Gurlitt, and in the following year travelled in Hungary, and then went to Düsseldorf, where he worked extensively in the production of hunting scenes. His lithographic album of 'Wild und Wald' ('Game and Forest') appeared in 1860, and procured him in 1867 the gold medal of Prussia. After visiting England and Switzerland he went in 1870 to France, and brought out a 'War Album,' with chromolithographic sketches of battle-fields and interesting incidents. In 1873 he made a journey through Vienna, Italy, Southern France, and to Hamburg, and a series of colour-printed views, entitled 'Die Malerischen Reiseziele,' published in the following year, was the result. Ill health compelled him to spend some time in Sicily, but after his return he died at Düsternbrook, near Kiel, in 1876.

KRÜGER, FERDINAND ANTON, an engraver, was born at Loschwitz, near Dresden, in 1793. He studied under his uncle, Gottlieb Krüger, and in 1814 went to Stuttgart to complete his studies under Gotthold von Müller, and he there engraved the 'Ecce Homo,' after Guido Reni. In 1820 he went to Paris and on to Rome, but returned the following year. In 1824 he repaired to Milan, where he studied under Longhi, and engraved the 'Madonna del Cardellino,' after Raphael. In 1829 he was made a professor of the Dresden Academy, and died at Loschwitz in 1857. Among his best plates may be named:

Christ bearing the Cross; after Luini.
St. Bernard and St. Catharine; after Niccolò di Foligno. 1822.
Sofronia and Olendo; after Overbeck.
Philosophy; after C. Vogel. 1825.

KRÜGER, FRANZ, called 'PFERDEKRÜGER,' a portrait and animal painter, was born at Radegast, in Anhalt-Dessau, in 1797. In early youth he practised portrait painting without instruction, and continued his studies alone in Berlin. He painted for the Emperor of Russia a 'Parade of a Prussian Regiment under Frederick William III.' (1831), containing over a hundred portraits, and in 1844 and 1850 he spent some time in St. Petersburg. He died at Berlin in 1857. The Berlin National Gallery contains the following paintings by him:

Going to the Meet.
Return from the Hunt.
In the Stable.
The Emperor Nicholas on horseback, with his Suite.
A Dead Rabbit.

KRÜGER, FRIEDRICH CHRISTIAN. See KRIEGER.
KRÜGER, JOHANNA ELISABETH. See WEIDMÜLLER.

KRÜGER, JOHANN KONRAD, a painter, engraver, and designer, was born at Stettin in 1733. He was educated under Dietrich and Hutin at Dresden, and became professor of drawing in the Academy of Berlin, where he died in 1791. He painted the portrait of Catharine II. of Russia, and engraved the plates to Schrockh's 'History of the World,' and to 'The Dramatic Art,' after Dietrich.

KRÜGER, KARL MAXIMILIAN, a landscape painter, was born at Lübbenau in 1834. He first studied in the Academy at Munich; then under A. Michels at Weimar; and subsequently travelled through Germany and North Italy. In 1870 he settled in Dresden, and devoted himself to painting landscapes from the neighbouring country—more especially in the 'Spreewald,' hence he is frequently called "Spreewald-Krüger." A view of that forest, painted by him in 1866, is in the Berlin National Gallery. He died at Gohlis, near Dresden, in 1880.

KRÜMBHOLZ, FERDINAND, was born at Hof, Moravia, and was instructed at the Vienna Academy. He went in 1830 to Rome, and studied there for two years. In 1835 he went to Paris, and in 1845, on the recommendation of the Duke of Nemours, to Portugal, where he painted the portraits of the Queen Maria da Gloria, and other members of the Royal Family. He returned home in 1848, and shortly proceeded to Brazil, where he remained till 1852. Then he was two more years in Paris, and in 1854 went to Calcutta, but losing a great part of his property during the troubles in India, he returned to Paris and pursued his art there till the close of the Franco-German War. He died at Berne in 1878.

KRUMPIGEL, KARL, a landscape painter, was born at Prague in 1805. He was brought up to trade, but left it for painting, becoming a pupil of Pipenhagen, and then studying at Munich, where he died in 1832. His best works were forest sketches with waterfalls.

KRUSEMAN, CORNELIS, was born at Amsterdam in 1797. His first teachers were Hodges, Ravelli, and Daiwaille, and he afterwards went to Paris and Rome. Upon his return he devoted himself to historical, genre, and portrait painting, and was particularly successful in his female figures. He was a member of the Academy of Amsterdam, and obtained a gold medal at the Brussels Exhibition of 1851. He died at Lisse in 1857. His principal works are:

The Preaching of John the Baptist.
The Magdalene.
The Burial of Christ. (In the possession of the King of the Netherlands.)
Belisarius.

KRUSEMAN, JAN ADAM, an historical and portrait painter, was born at Haarlem in 1804. He commenced studying in later life under his cousin Cornelis Kruseman. He devoted himself to copying from the great masters in the Amsterdam Museum, and going to Brussels enjoyed the advantages of David's acquaintance and advice. He returned to Amsterdam in 1825, and in 1831-35 was co-director of the Academy there, and one of the founders of the Society 'Artis et Amicitiae.' He painted the portraits of the Emperor Alexander I., of Kings William I. and II. of the Netherlands, and of Count Styrum. He died in 1862. In the Van der Hoop Museum at Amsterdam there is a painting by him of 'A Company of Dutch Poets.'

KRYNS, VAN DER MAES. See VAN DER KRYNS.

KÜCHLEIN, BALTHASAR, a painter, etcher, and designer, of Gmünd in Swabia, was born about 1570. His principal work consists of 239 plates etched in the style of Jost Amman, entitled, 'Representation of the Princely Procession and Tournaments at the Marriage Festivities of Duke Johann Friedrich of Würtemberg-Teck in 1609.'

KÜFFNER, ABRAHAM WOLFGANG, (or KÜFFNER,) a painter, engraver, and designer, was born at Gräfenberg or at Petzenstein in 1760. He was designed for trade, but entered Altorf University, and at length became drawing-master at the Academy. Afterwards he went to Nuremberg, and designed and engraved extensively for literary works, but took also to false coining, and was in consequence committed to prison at Rothenberg in 1807. On his liberation he returned to Nuremberg, and died at Ingolstadt in 1817. His best works comprise:

The Emperor Louis IV. and the valiant Seyfried Schweppermann.

The Storming of Oczakow.

His own Portrait.

KÜGELGEN, GERHARD and KARL FERDINAND VON, twin brothers, were born at Bacharach on the Rhine in 1772. Their father was in the service of the Elector of Cologne, who, in 1791, sent the twins to Rome to complete their studies, commenced at Coblenz under Zick. Gerhard painted history and portraiture, while Karl adopted landscape. Gerhard afterwards went to Munich, but his brother remained in Rome under the patronage of Lord Bristol. In 1795 Gerhard went to Riga, where he was joined by his brother in the following year. In 1799 the two proceeded to St. Petersburg, where Karl Ferdinand met with a handsome appointment from the Emperor Paul. After a few years they married two sisters of a noble family of Curland; but Gerhard, after a few years, removed in 1804 to Dresden. Karl Ferdinand remained at St. Petersburg as court painter under Paul and Alexander, but made two or three journeys to the Crimea and Finland for the preparation of galleries from the scenery of those parts. Gerhard had established himself and obtained a high reputation at Dresden, where in 1813 he received the appointment of professor of painting at the Academy; but his career was suddenly cut short in a most melancholy manner, for he was murdered on the road from Pillnitz to Dresden, in 1820. It was a common highway robbery by a private soldier, who had no knowledge of his victim. His works are of a very unpretending character, and in most of them an abstract religious sentiment prevails, but there are amongst them the portraits of Goethe, Schiller, Herder, Wieland, and himself. 'The Prodigal Son' is in the Dresden Gallery. Karl Ferdinand painted many landscapes, and executed numerous drawings of the scenery of Russia, both in the northern and southern provinces. It is recorded that he painted 171 pictures, and made 290 finished drawings. He died at Revel in 1832.

KÜGELGEN, WILHELM VON, a son of Gerhard von Kugelgen, was born at St. Petersburg in 1802. He was educated at Dresden and at Rome, and from 1827 to 1830 resided in Russia, where he painted a 'Crucifixion' for the Olai church at Revel. In 1834 he became court painter to Alexander, Duke of Bernburg, where he died in 1867.

KUGLER, FRANZ THEODOR, an etcher and writer on art, was born at Stettin in 1808. He studied philology together with art at Berlin and Heidelberg, and in 1830 brought out, in conjunction with the painter Reinick, a 'Sketch-book' with etchings, followed in 1833 by a 'Song-book for German Artists' with designs. In the same year he started his art journal 'The Museum,' and became professor of art history and æsthetics at the Berlin Academy. From this time he abandoned the practical department of art, and devoted himself exclusively to its literature. He died at Berlin in 1858.

KUGLER, LOUISE, afterwards WEYLER, a native of Paris, was an enamel painter, who was a pupil of Weyler, whom she subsequently married. From 1785 she painted portraits for the government, and she exhibited at the Salon from 1802 to 1812.

KUHBEIL, C. L., a German painter, etcher, and designer, was a pupil of the Academy of Berlin, and in 1805 became professor there. He then visited Rome and Florence, and on his return was made in 1811 a member of the Academy. He died in 1823. His first works were historical drawings, but later on he painted subjects of the same class from both sacred and profane history, as well as landscapes and architectural views, also glass paintings. He published:

Studies from the old Florentine Painters, in 57 plates, designed and etched by himself.

Twelve Views from Rome and its vicinity, designed and etched from nature by himself.

KÜHNEL, FRIEDRICH, was born at Lippoldiswald in 1766, and in 1781 came to Dresden, where he was instructed by Schenau and Casanova. He painted portraits and historical pictures; among the latter, one of 'Meleager and Atalanta.' The date of his death is not known.

KUHNEN, PIERRE LOUIS, was born at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1812. He settled at Brussels, where he painted landscapes and effects of light. He died in 1878.

KUIL. See VAN DER KUIL.

KULIK, KARL, a son and pupil of Johann Kulik, was born at Prague in 1670, and in 1700 was chosen as senior of the guild there. He died in 1719. He made drawings of several statues upon the bridge at Prague, and painted a 'Crucifixion' for the church of Mary in the Snow, in the Neustadt, and 'The Twelve Apostles' for that of Mary in the Cradle.

KULMBACH, HANS VON. See FUSS.

KUMMER, SIXTUS, was a portrait painter of Ulm, who flourished about 1660.

KUNIKE, ADOLF, (or KUNICKE,) a German lithographer, was born in Pomerania about 1776, and studied for a time under Senefelder. By dint of long exertions he, in 1828, brought out a lithographic reproduction of Jakob Alt's 'Views on the Danube.' He also wrote a handbook of lithography. He died at Vienna in 1838.

KUNKLER, ADRIAN, (or KÜNKLER,) a landscape and genre painter, was born at Geneva in 1826, and died there in 1866. He studied for a time at Düsseldorf. Some of his best pictures are:

Religious Assemblage in an Alpine Forest.
Grandfather rocking his Grand-daughter.
Rousseau in Thonon.
An Offer of Marriage. (South Kensington Museum.)

KUNST, CORNELIS CORNELISZEN, born at Leyden in 1493, was instructed by Cornelis Engelbrechtsen, who is called his father by some writers, and his father-in-law by others. On the taking of Leyden he removed to Bruges. He painted historical subjects, portraits, and views of cities. He died in 1544. Among his works are 'Christ bearing the Cross,' 'The Lamentation of Mary,' and a 'Deposition from the Cross.'

KUNTZ, GUSTAV ADOLPH, a German subject painter, was born at Wildenfels in 1843, and died at Rome in 1879. There are in the Dresden Gallery three pictures by him: 'A Salutation from the World,' 'A Roman Pilgrim kissing a Crucifix,' and 'Roman Pilgrim praying,' the last unfinished.

KUNTZ, KARL, a German landscape and animal painter, was born at Mannheim in 1770. He became a student of the Mannheim Academy under Ronger and Quaglio, and in 1790 he went to Switzerland and Northern Italy; later on he visited the galleries of Dresden, Cassel, Munich, and Berlin. In 1805 he was appointed court painter, and in 1829 director of the gallery at Karlsruhe, where he died in 1830. He was a follower of the style of Paulus Potter, but was at the same time a student from nature. He was most successful in representing cows and oxen. The following paintings by him may be noted, others are at Paris and St. Petersburg:

Berlin.	Nat. Gall.	Cattle at Pasture. 1824.
Munich.	Neue Pinakothek.	Two Landscapes with Cattle
"	"	Mountain Landscape, with Cattle.
"	"	Swiss Landscape, with Peasants upon Lake.

The following are among his aquatint plates:

Shepherd Family; after Roos.
Hagar; after Claude Lorrain.
The four Times of the Day.
Views of Lake Constance, Heidelberg, Mannheim, Baden-Baden, and Schaffhausen.

KUNTZ, PEDRO, a Spanish painter, but of German descent, and born at Rome, was a pupil of the Roman Academy of San Luca, and of his brother-in-law José Madrazo. He died in 1863. His 'Interior of St. Peter's' was very highly regarded in 1858.

KUNTZE, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, a painter and designer, the son of Christian Gottlieb Kuntze, was born at Bonn in 1761, and was educated at Düsseldorf. He worked extensively in miniature, and also made for Baron von Brabek a number of copies of the best paintings in his gallery. He went to Cologne in 1798, and became in 1815 drawing-master in the two gymnasia there. He died in 1832.

KUNTZE, THADDÄUS. See KONITSCH.

KUNZ, —, was a Bohemian artist of the 14th century, who painted—in conjunction with Theodorich of Prague, Nicolaus Wurmser, and Tommaso da Modena—for Charles IV. in his castle of Carlsstein. The work which is most probably by Kunz is the life of his patron, in the church of Our Lady at Carlsstein. It is noteworthy for the gracefulness of the actions of the persons portrayed, and is, together with the works of the other Bohemian masters, in every way more advanced than the painting of this period in other parts of Germany.

KUNZ, MARIANNE. See KÜRZINGER.

KUPELWIESER, LEOPOLD, was born at Piesting, in Lower Austria, in 1796, and attended in 1809 the Vienna Academy, and in 1816 the Dresden Gallery. At an early date he painted the portrait of the Emperor Francis for the Court of Appeal at Prague, and there studied Hungarian costume pictures. In 1824 and the following year he travelled in Italy, where the works of Fiesole decided him to devote himself to religious subjects. After returning to Vienna, he in 1830 became corrector, and in 1837 professor of historical painting at the Academy. He died at Vienna in 1862. He painted a few portraits and box-lids, and drew in pencil, charcoal, sepia, and water-colours. In conjunction with Führich he brought out in lithography 'Efforts of Christian Art in the Austrian Monarchy.' His historical works comprise especially:

The Birth of the Virgin. (Klosterneuburg.)
Christ on the Cross, and other frescoes. (Altlerchenfelderkirche, Vienna.)
Assumption of the Virgin. (University Church, Vienna.)
The Ascension. (Kalocza Cathedral, Hungary.)
Austria under the Protection of Religion, surrounded by symbolical Figures. (Fresco for the Reception Hall of the Governor, Vienna.)
Moses praying for Victory over the Amalekites.

KUPEZKY, JOHANN, was born at Pösing, near Pressburg, in 1667. He was the son of a weaver, who intended to bring him up to his trade, at which he worked until he was fifteen years old, when he left his father's house, and being destitute of every resource, was obliged to solicit charity at the gate of a German nobleman, who took compassion on his youth, and permitted him to take refuge in his castle, where a Swiss painter, named Klaus, was employed in ornamenting some of the apartments. The young Kupezky, in the absence of the painter, sketched some of the objects he had been painting with such exactness that his protector was led to question him as to who had instructed him in drawing, and finding he had no other assistance than his natural inclination, he engaged Klaus to take him under his tuition. He accompanied that artist to Vienna, and was soon able to assist him in his works. After studying under Klaus for three years, he went to Venice, with letters of introduction to Cavaliere Liberi. He afterwards visited Rome, where he worked under Johann Kaspar Füßly, and then was taken into the patronage of Prince Stanislaus Sobieski, who employed him for two years, and rewarded him with such liberality, that he was enabled to indulge his desire of visiting Lombardy, to study the works of Correggio, the Carracci, Titian, and Guido Reni. After a residence of twenty-two years in Italy, Kupezky returned to Germany, and on the invitation of Prince Adam von Liechtenstein settled at Vienna, where he was made painter to the Emperor Joseph I. On the death of that sovereign, he would have been continued in the same capacity by Charles VI.; but he declined the honour, being desirous of visiting the different courts of the empire. He passed some time at those of the Elector of Mentz, the Duke of Saxe-Gotha, and the Margrave of Anspach, whose portraits he successively painted. He is said by Descamps to have been invited to England by George II., when that monarch visited Hanover, but that he declined the proposal on account of his age, and the infirm state of his health. At Carlsbad he painted the likeness of Peter the Great, who wished him to enter his service, and accompany him to St. Petersburg; but the painter was too fond of liberty, and declined the honour. His patron, Joseph I., could not, however, protect him from the attacks of religious bigotry; he was accused of heresy, and to escape the Inquisition, he withdrew secretly from Vienna, and settled at Nuremberg, where he died in 1740. Examples of his works are :

Berlin.	Gallery.	St. Francis.
		The Philosopher.
Brunswick.	Gallery.	The Artist and his Wife.
"	"	Portrait of the Artist.
"	"	Peter the Great.
"	"	A Young Girl.

KURZBAUER, EDUARD, a genre painter, was born at Vienna in 1846, and worked first in the lithographic establishment of Reifenstein and Rösch in that city. During this occupation he attended the Academy in the evening, and afterwards devoted four and a half years exclusively thereto. He was not at first successful with his pictures, and had for some years to undergo privation. In 1867 he entered Piloty's school at Munich, where he died in 1879. His principal works comprise :

The Calumny. (Dresden Gallery.)
 The Story-teller. 1867.
 The Overtaken Fugitives. 1870. (Emperor of Austria.)
 The Rejected Suitor. 1871.
 The Old Granny.
 The Village Feast. 1873.
 Wine Tasting.
 Groundless Jealousy. 1874.
 The Stormy Betrothment-day. 1874.
 Canvassing.
 The Christmas Tree. 1875.
 The Female Card-player. 1875.
 The First Step. 1877.

KÜRZINGER, FRANZ, was born at Munich in 1730, and instructed first by Johann Georg Winter, and afterwards by Raphael Mengs during a three-years' stay at Rome. He then settled down in Munich as a painter of pictures for churches and monasteries. He died in 1790.

KÜRZINGER, IGNAZ, the son and pupil of Franz Kürzinger, was born at Munich in 1777. He for a time associated the drama with his art, and was theatrical director at Munich; but afterwards he devoted himself wholly to painting. The date of his death is not known. He produced altar-pieces like his father, and his works comprise also :

Twelve Scenes from the Drama of 'Agnes Bernauer.'
 Jupiter giving the Golden Apple to Mercury.

KÜRZINGER, MARIANNE, daughter and pupil of Franz Kürzinger, was born at Munich in 1770. She was further instructed by Jakob Dörner, and became so accomplished an artist that the name of 'The Bavarian Angelica Kauffmann' was given to her. She married the actor and singer Johann Kunz of Munich, and died in 1809. Her best paintings include :

A Circassian Girl brought before the Sultan.
 Circassian Girl dressed by a Woman.
 Death of the first French Grenadier, Latour d'Auvergne.
 Christ on the Mount of Olives.

KÜSEL, JOHANNA SIBYLLA, (or KÜSSEL,) the daughter of Melchior Küsel, was born at Augsburg in 1646. She was instructed by her father, and became the wife of the engraver Johann Ulrich Kraus. She engraved four landscapes, and 'Juno, Venus, and Pallas,' after Elsheimer; 'Satyrs and Peasants,' the head of a young Oriental Female, and a set of battles, from the designs of Le Clerc. She usually marked her plates with her initials. J. S. K. Her sisters, CHRISTINE and MAGDALENE KÜSEL, were also engravers.

KÜSEL, MATTHÄUS, (or KÜSSEL,) a German designer and engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1621, and died at Munich in 1682. He etched and engraved several portraits and other subjects. Among others the following are by him :

PORTRAITS.

Christophorus Bender, Prætor Reipubl. Francofurtensis.
 Carolus Sulzer, Patricius Augustanus; after Ulric Mayr.
 Johannes Michael Diherrus, Theologus; with an octagon border of sixteen medallions of Theologians; after the same.

 Andreas Winkler, Lipsiensis.
 Leonardus Weissius; after Joh. Werner.

SUBJECTS.

The Virgin and Child.
 A set of forty-two etchings of the Scenes and Decorations of the Opera 'Il Pomo d'Oro'; after Lodovico Burnacini. 1668.

KÜSEL, MELCHIOR, the younger brother of Matthäus Küsel, was born at Augsburg in 1622. After learning the elements of art in his native city, he went to Frankfort, where he became a pupil of Matthäus Merian, whose daughter he married. He returned to Augsburg in 1651, and died there in 1683. There are a great number of plates engraved by this artist, in a highly finished style, but his principal work is a set of one hundred and forty-eight etchings, of various sizes, chiefly after the designs of Wilhelm Baur, known by the name of the 'Miniatures of the Emperor,' consisting of the Life, Passion, and Miracles of Christ, sea-ports and views in Italy, &c. He engraved also several portraits and other subjects. The following are among his works :

PORTRAITS.

Sebastian Kirchmaier, of Ratisbon; after Ben. Block. 1680.
 Johannes Hozius, Augustæ Consul.
 Maximilianus Curz. Lib. Baro in Senftenau. 1658.
 Antonius Schottius. 1680.

SUBJECTS.

The Life and Passion of Christ; twenty-five plates; after Wilhelm Baur.
 A set of sixteen Landscapes and Views in Italy; after the same.
 Seventeen Marines and Sea-ports; after the same.
 Eighteen Views of Country Houses and Gardens; after the same.
 Forty different Views; after the same. 1681.
 Six plates of the five Senses, and a Title-page.

KÜSSNER, VALENTIN, was an artist of Stuttgart, who became court painter to the Prince of Nassau-Hadamar. Numerous home scenes by him are to be seen at Hadamar, where he died in 1725.

KUSTER, JOHANN KASPAR, was born at Winterthur in 1747, and after working for some time as a mechanic, betook himself to Düsseldorf and studied for an artist. He then went to Amsterdam, where he met with much success as a landscape painter; but the troubles in the Netherlands compelled him in 1784 to return home. He died in 1818. A chalk portrait by him of the painter Graff is in the 'Zofinger Künstlerbuch.' His wife, ANNA MARIA REINHARD, who was born in 1753, and died in 1826, was a painter of insects, flowers, and fruit.

KUVASSEG, JOSEPH, was born at Trieste in 1799, and after studying at Gratz, worked with his brother Karl Joseph at Vienna as a lithographer. After this he settled down in Gratz as a landscape painter in water-colours, and a writer of books of instruction in landscape drawing. He died at Trieste in 1859. He painted nineteen illustrations to Unger's 'Urwelt' ('Primæval World').

KUVASSEG, KARL JOSEPH, a landscape painter, was born at Trieste in 1802, and studied at the Gratz Academy. He followed Count Schomburg in his travels in Southern Europe and America, and then settled down in Paris, where he was naturalized. He died at Nanterre in 1877. Two of his best oil paintings are, 'Beach Sketch on the English Coast,' and 'View of the Cordilleras near St. Jago.' Among his water-colours are 'Villeneuve St. Georges' and 'The Harbour of Douardenez.'

KUYCK, JAN VAN, was born at Dordrecht in 1530. He was a painter on glass as well as in oil colours. Having given some offence to the Jesuits, they accused him of heresy, and got him imprisoned. He was kept in irons a long time, though Jan van Boudewinze endeavoured to procure his release. In gratitude for these endeavours, Kuyck painted a picture of the 'Judgment of Solomon,' in which he introduced the likeness of his benefactor as the principal figure. This gave new offence to the Jesuits, who contrived means to increase the misery of his imprisonment, and never rested till they extorted a final sentence of death, which was immediately executed. He was burned alive at Dordrecht in 1571.

KUYCK, JAN LODEWYK VAN, a Belgian animal painter, was born at Antwerp in 1821. He was originally a watchmaker, but his health compelled him to spend some time in the country, where he took to drawing for amusement, and then entered the Academy of Antwerp, where Van Bree and Wappers successively instructed him. He at first painted genre pictures, but afterwards animals, and particularly horses. He died at Antwerp in 1875. His pictures chiefly consist of interiors of barns and stables, waggons with horses, and the yards of inns.

KUYPER, JACOB, a Dutch painter and designer, was born at Amsterdam in 1761, and studied first at the school of design there under J. M. Kok, and then under J. Schmidt and J. Andriessen. He at first painted wall-papers with Arcadian landscapes, and afterwards learnt modelling. In 1801 he became joint-director of the School of Design, and member of the Netherlands Institute. He died in 1808, after having done much towards the elevation of art in Holland. Stuart's 'Roman History' and numerous other works contain engravings from his designs.

KUYTENBROUWER, MARTINUS ANTONIUS, an amateur horse and landscape painter, was born at Venloo in 1777. He was a Major-General of Artillery in the army of the Netherlands, and died in 1850.

KWIATKOWSKI, THÉOPHILE ANTOINE, a French portrait painter, was a native of Pultusk in Poland. He studied under Léon Cogniet and at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, and exhibited at the Salon from 1839 to 1870. He died in Paris in 1871.

KYSELL, EDWARD, was an English engraver, who practised in London about the middle of the 17th century. His plates are chiefly portraits.

KYTE, FRANCIS, was an English mezzotint engraver, who lived early in the 18th century. In 1725 he was placed in the pillory for passing a forged note, and in consequence he Latinized his name into 'Milvius,' by which he afterwards went. He painted a few portraits. The following are among his mezzotints:

Gay, the poet; two portraits, one after Aikman.
Dryden, Wycherley, Prior, and Pope; on one plate.
Rev. George Whitefield.
John Sturges. 1733.
